The meaning therefore is, that God would that the temple ſhould remaine vnto that time as a ſigne or marke, whereto all true worſhippers ſhould be bent. How vnworthily and how wickedly then doe they in turning it into a prophane market? But in Chriſtes time that temple was the houſe of prayer, ſo long as the lawe with the ſhadowes of the ſame was in force: but it beganne to be the houſe of prayer to all nations, when as the doctrine of the Goſpel ſounded from thence, whereby the whole worlde grewe into a conſent of fayth. And though it was ſhortly after deſtroyed, yet vnto this day appeareth the effect of this propheſie.

For

For ſith the law came out of Sion, it is neceſſary that whoſoeuer will pray rightly, ſhoulde looke to that beginning. I graunt that there is no difference of places: for the Lorde will bee called vppon euerye where: but as the faythfull, which profeſſe themſelues to worſhippe the GOD of Iſraell, are ſayde to ſpeake the language of Canaan, and alſo to come into the temple, becauſe that true religion ſprang from thence: and that ſame was the fountaine of waters, which in ſhort ſpace were wonderfully encreaſed and flowed forth in great aboundance, and they that drink of the ſame ſhall liue as Ezechiell maketh mention, chap. 47. 9. and thoſe waters going out from the temple, doe ſpread themſelues to the Eaſt & to the weſt. Though we do vſe churches at this day, for the meeting of ꝑ holy aſſẽblies, yet it is for an other cauſe: for ſince that Chriſt came, he is not propoſed vs in an outwarde and ſhadowiſh image, as hee was in tymes paſt to the fathers vnder the lawe. Furthermore, it is to be noted, that the Prophet by this woord prayer meaneth the whole worſhippe of God. For though there was at that time great aboundaunce of ceremonies, yet God in few words taught the Iewes to what end al thoſe ceremonies ſhould be referred: namely, that they might ſpiritually worſhip him, as it is more plainely ſet downe in the fiftie Pſalme. For there dooth God alſo call backe all the exerciſes of godlyneſſe to prayer.

But you haue made it. Chriſte declareth that the complainte of Ieremiah belongeth alſo to his time, wherein the Temple was no leſſe defiled. The Prophet rebuketh the hypocrites, which ſtrengthning themſelues with the temple, tooke themſelues a libertie to ſinne. For where it was the purpoſe of God, to inſtructe the Iewes by outward ſignes, as inſtructions to true godlynes, as it is a common matter for hypocrites to turne trueth into a lye (as if it were ſufficient to apply themſelues to outward ceremonies) they were content with the vaine pretence of the Temple. But the Prophet cryeth out againſt them, that GOD is not tied to the temple, or bounde to ceremonies: and therefore they boaſted in vaine of the name of the temple, which they had made a denne of theeues. For as theeues doe more boldly ſinne in their dennes, beecauſe they hope they ſhall eſcape without puniſhment: ſo the hypocrites grow to be bolde vnder a faigned pretence of godlineſſe, ſo that almoſt they are in hope to deceiue God.

Further, becauſe that the Metaphor of a denne reacheth to all corruptions, Chriſt doth very aptly apply the place of the Prophet to this preſent cauſe. Marke addeth that Chriſt forbadde that no man ſhould cary any veſſell through the temple: that is, hee would not ſuffer anye prophane thing to be ſeene there: for by the word veſſell the Hebrewes doe ſignifie all kinde of furniture for a houſe. In ſumme, Chriſt tooke away whatſoeuer hindered the reuerence and maieſtie of the temple.

14. The blinde and the halte came vnto him. Leaſt that authoritie which Chriſte hadde taken vppon him more then hee was woont, ſhoulde bee ſuſpected of raſhneſſe, hee confirmed the ſame by miracles. Therefore healed he the blinde and the halte in the Temple, that it might be manifeſtly knowne that the right & honour of the Meſsias belonged to him. For the Prophetes doe deſcribe and ſette him forth with theſe markes, whereby wee ſee agayne that which I ſpake of a litle beefore, that it is not the parte of euerye of the people to immitate this deede of Chriſte, leaſte that vnaduiſedlye that manne ſhoulde lyft vppe himſelfe into the throane of the Meſsias. This is to be noted, that the halt and the blynd, which were healed, were witneſſes of the diuine power of Chriſte, as if God from heauen ſhould ſanctifie with his voyce the ſpeach of the multitude.

15. When the chiefe Prieſtes and Scribes ſaw the miracles. Luke declareth that the Phariſes beganne to murmur now by the way. The diſciples then onely cryed, and they would haue them commaunded to ſilence. Chriſt aunſwered that they laboured in vaine: for God woulde rather make the ſtones to cry, then that hee woulde ſuffer the kingdome of hys Sonne to be ouerwhelmed. It is to be ſuppoſed that when there was no end of crying, but that the children alſo ioyned themſelues to them, the Scribes and Prieſtes waxed more angry: and then they aſſaulted Chriſte againe. And they ſeeme to nippe him very ſcornefully, while they caſte in his teeth that he ſeeketh for praiſe of children. Further, it is to be noted, whereof they toke their offence. That they were malitious, wicked, and deadly conteners of God, it appeareth by this, that they are as much vexed at the myracles, as at the happy and ioyfull cryes. But now I ſeeke after ſome ſpeciall matter, what it was that ſhould vexe them moſt. We know how fiercely they fought for their eſtate: for hottely they ſought to maintaine that tyrannye, which they hadde once vſurped. And this had bene no ſmall impairing of their kingdom, if it ſhuld be lawfull for the people to giue Chriſt the tytle of a king: yea, euen in the ſmalleſt matters they would haue the decrees holden for Oracles: ſo that it ſhuld not be lawfull for to allow or to reiect any thing, but according to theyr pleaſure. Therefore they thinke it an abſurd and peruerſe courſe for the people to giue title of Meſsias to any man, whō they ſhal not think worthy of that degree. And certeinly, it was meete, if they would haue done theyr duety, that they ſhould haue gone before the whole people, as leaders and guydes. For the Prieſtes were created to this end, that al menne might aske for the knowledge of the law of God from their lippes, and alſo that they might be the Aungelles and interpreters of the GOD of hoſtes, Mal. 1.7. But becauſe they had wickedly extinguiſhed the light of the trueth, Chriſt aunſwereth them very aptly, that they ſhal preuaile nothing in ſeeking to ſuppreſſe the doctrine of ſaluation: becauſe the ſtones ſhall rather vtter it. And in theſe wordes is contained a ſecrete graunt: for Chriſt doth not deny this to be a prepoſterous order, that the vnlearned common people and children ſhoulde firſt celebrate with their ſpeach the comming of the Meſsias: but becauſe ỹ they do malitiouſlye choake the trueth, which ſhoulde be the approued witneſſes of the ſame, it is no meruaile if God raiſe vppe others, and to their ſhame chuſe children to doe it. Heereby we reape no litle comfort: for though the wicked labour all the wayes they can deuiſe to darken & hide the kingdome of Chriſt, here we heare that they labour in vaine. They hope that when of that company, which promote the kingdome of Chriſte, they ſhal kil ſome, and reſtraine others with feare, that they ſhal obtaine theyr purpoſe. But the Lord wil deceiue them: for he wil rather giue mouthes and tongues to ſtones, rather then the kingdom of his Sonne ſhall want witneſſes.

16. Read yee neuer. The Scribes and Priests tooke occasion to quarrell at this, that Christ suffered the children to call him a king: as the wicked ones doe alwayes disdainfully despise the humility of Christes disciples. Christ reproueth this malice with the testimony of Dauid, who also maketh the very infants preachers of his glory. These are the very wordes: Out of the mouth of babes and sucklinges hast thou ordained strengthe, Psal. 8. 3. whereby Dauid declareth, that though all tongues should kepe silence, God needeth not any other Rethoricians to set foorth his power, then yong infantes, which as yet hang vppon their mothers brests. They are dumbe: but the wonderfull prouidence of G O D, whiche shineth in them, is as eloquence loudly and well speaking his praise. For he that cõsidereth with himselfe, how the fruit is engendered in the wombe of the mother, is nourished there the space of nine moneths, commeth foorth at the length into the lighte, and findeth meate prepared for it assoone as it is borne: must of necessity not only finde & feele that God is the maker of the worlde, but is wholely caried into an admiration of the same. So the Sunne and Moone, thoughe they be creatures without tounges, yet it is sayd that they haue vtterance and speache, to declare and sing the praises of God, Psal. 19. 1. Seeing then that the tounges of infants doe sound foorth the praises of God, Christ doth heereby gather, that it is no absurdity if he haue the voyce of those children which now can speake.

18. And in the morning as he returned. Betweene that solemne entrance of Christ, whereof we heard, and the day of the Passeouer, he lodged euery night at Bethanie, and on the day time hee was teachinge in the temple. And Mathewe and Marke doe report a hystory which befel at that time by the way, that Christ as he came into the Citie was an hungred, came to a figge tree: and when he founde nothing thereon but leaues, he cursed it: and the tree beinge cursed with his woorde, withered presentlye. Further, I take this for graunted, that Christ did not faine, but was truely an hungred. For wee knowe that of his owne accorde he became subiecte to our infirmities, though by nature he was free and void of them. But the difficulty standeth in this, howe hee shoulde be deceiued to seeke for frute vppon a tree that was without: especiallye when as the time of frute was not yet come: Further, why is his anger so hot against a harmlesse tree? But no absurdity can follow, if we say, that as a man he knewe not what kinde of tree it was: yet it may be that he not being ignorant of the ende, came vnto it of purpose. But hee is not caried with any heate of anger to curse it: for that were not onely an vnrighteous, but also a childish and ridiculous reuengement. But when as hunger was grieuous vnto him in respecte of the flesh, he sought to ouercome the same with a contrary affection: namely, that he might set foorth the glory of the father, as he sayeth in an other place. My meate is, that I may doe the will of my father, Ioh. 4. 34. for there also he doeth striue with wearinesse and thirste: and I doe rather incline to this opinion, that hunger was as a meanes prouoking him to woorke this myracle, and to teache his disciples. Therefore, when as he was an hungred, and had not meat ready, he fedde himselfe otherwise: namely in setting foorth the glorye of G O D. And his will was by the tree to giue a token, what ende remaineth for hypocrites, and also to declare howe vaine their boastinge is, and to no purpose,

19. Neuer frute grow on thee hence forwarde. Heereby we learne what this woord accurſing meaneth: namely, that the tree is condemned to be barren: ſo againe God bleſſeth, when by his woord he maketh frutefull. But it doth more euidently appeare by Marke, that the figge tree did not preſently wyther, or at the leaſt that the diſciples did not marke it, vntill the next day that they ſawe the leaues fallen off. Marke alſo doeth attribute that to Peter alone, which Mathewe doeth commonly referre to all the Diſciples: but when as Chriſt anſweareth in the plurall number, it is eaſie to be gathered that one asked the queſtion in the name of all the reſt.

21. And Ieſus anſweared. Chriſt extendeth the vſe of the myracle further, that hee mighte encourage his diſciples to faith and confidence. In Marke there is firſt ſette downe a generall exhortation, that they ſhould haue faith in God. Then followeth a promiſſe, that they ſhall obtaine by faith, what ſoeuer they ſhall aske of God. To haue faith with God, ſignifieth as muche as to promiſſe himſelfe certainly, and to looke for from God, what ſoeuer is needeful. But becauſe that faith, if there be any in vs, doeth preſently breake out into prayers, and peareeth into thoſe treaſures of the grace of God, which are ſhewed in the woorde, that it might enioy the ſame: therefore Chriſte addeth prayer to faith, for if hee hadde onely ſayd that we ſhould haue what ſoeuer we ſhall deſire, faith to ſome might ſeeme to be too imperious, or too ſecure. VVherefore Chriſte declareth that they do then beleeue a right, which truſting in his goodneſſe and promiſſes, doe humbly flee vnto him. This is a notable place to expreſſe the force and nature of faith: namely, that it is a certaine aſſurance reſting in the goodneſſe of God without any doubtfulneſſe. For Chriſt doeth not acknowledge any others to beleeue, but them which doe vndoubtedly account God to be mercifull to them, and doubt not but that he will giue what they doe aske. VVhereby we ſee with what a diueliſhe imagination the Papiſts are bewitched, which doe mixe faith and doubting togither: nay, they charge vs with fooliſh preſumption, if we being perſwaded of the fatherly fauour of God towardes vs, dare be ſo bolde as to preſent our ſelues before him. And Paule doth eſpecially commend this benefite of Chriſte, that by faith in him we haue boldneſſe and entrance to God with confidence, Ephe. 3. 12. Furthermore this place doth teache, that the true examination of faith, is contained in prayers. If any manne doe obiecte that theſe prayers were neuer heard, that mountaines ſhould caſt themſelues into the ſea: The anſweare is eaſie. Chriſte doeth not ſlacke the raynes to mennes prayers, that they ſhoulde deſire what they luſt, while he maketh their prayers ſubiecte to the rule of faith. For ſo is it neceſſary that the ſpirite ſhould bridle all our affections, & bryng them into obedience to the woorde of God. Chriſte requireth a certaine and aſſured confidence in prayer without doubting. And whence ſhall the minde of manne conceiue this, but out of the woorde of God? Nowe then we doe ſee that Chriſte promiſed nothinge to his diſciples, except they keepe themſelues within the boundes of the good will of God.

LVKE. 47. And he taught daily in the Temple. Marke and Luke do firſt teache, of what kinde of menne the Church conſiſteth, that is of the ſimple common people: Againe, what ennemies Chriſt hadde: namely, the Prieſts and Scribes, and all the chiefe rulers. And this is a parte of the folliſhneſſe liſhneſſe of the croſſe, that GOD paſsinge by the excellent thinges of the worlde, chuſeth that whiche is fooliſhe, weake, and deſpiſed. Then they make mention that thoſe good gouernours of the church of God ſought the meanes to deſtroy Chriſte: whereby their wickednesſe and vngodlyneſſe was detected. For thoughe it were graunted that they hadde iuſte cauſe to perſecute Chriſte, yet it was not lawfull for them after the maner of theeues to come out to kill him, or ſecreatly to ſend foorth cutters againſt him. Thirdly, they teache that their wicked conſpiracie was repreſſed: becauſe that Chriſte by the ſecreat counſell of God, was appoynted to the death of the croſſe.

23. And when hee was come into the Temple, the chiefe prieſts, and the elders of the people came vnto him, as he was teaching, and ſayde: by what authority doeſt thou theſe thinges? and who gaue thee this authority?	27. Then they came againe to Ieruſalem, and as hee walked in the Temple, there came to hym the hie Prieſts, and the Scribes, and the Elders.	1. And it came to paſſe, that on one of theſe dayes, as hee taught in the tẽple, and preached the Goſpell, the highe prieſtes and the Scribes came vpon him with the elders.
24. Then Ieſus anſweared and ſayd vnto them: I alſo will aske of you a certaine thinge, which if ye tell me, I likewiſe will tell you by what authority I doe theſe things.	28. And ſayde vnto hym: By what authority doeſt thou theſe thinges? and who gaue thee this authority, that thou ſhouldeſt do theſe things?	2. And ſpake vnto hym, ſaying: tell vs by what authority thou doeſt theſe things, or who is he that hath giuen thee this authority?
25. The baptiſme of Iohn, whence was it? from heauen, or of menne? Then they reaſoned amonge themſelues, ſaying: If we ſhall ſay from heauen, he will ſay vnto vs: Why did yee not then beleeue him.	29. Then Ieſus anſweared and ſayde vnto them, I will alſo aske of you a certaine thing, and anſweare you mee, and I will tell you by what authority I do theſe things.	3. And he anſweared, & ſaid vnto them, I alſo wil aske you one thing, tell me therefore.
26. And if wee ſaye of men, we feare the people: for all holde Iohn as a Prophet.	30. The baptiſme of Iohn, was it from heauen, or of menne? anſweare me.	4. The baptiſme of Iohn, was it from heauen, or of men?
27. Then they anſweared Ieſus, and ſayde, wee cannot tell. And he ſayd vnto them, neither tell I you by what authoritye I doe theſe things.	31. And they thoughte wyth themſelues, ſaying: If wee ſhall ſay from heauen, hee will ſaye: Why then did yee not beleeue him?	5. And they reaſoned with in themſelues, ſaying: If wee ſhall ſaye from heauen, he will ſay, why then beleeued ye him not?
	32. But if wee ſaye of menne, we feare the people: for all men counted Iohn, that he had beene a very Prophet.	6. But if wee ſhall ſaye, of men, all the people will ſtone vs: for they be perſwaded that Iohn was a Prophet.
	33. Then they anſweared and ſayde vnto Ieſus, we cannot tell. And Ieſus anſweared, and ſayde vnto them, neither will I tel you by what authoritie I doe theſe things.	7. Therefore they anſweared, that they could not tel whence it was.
		8. Then Ieſus ſaid vnto them, neither tell I you by what authority I doe theſe things.

23. By what authority doeſt thou theſe things. Becauſe their other purpoſes and open attempts did not proceede, now the Prieſts and Scribes doe ouerthwartly trie, if they may by any meanes driue him from his maner of teaching. But they quarrell not with him for his doctrine it ſelfe, whether it be true or no, for that they had often tried that in vaine: but they mooue the queſtion of his calling and of the commaundement. And this was a goodly colour: for ſith no manne might thruſt himſelfe either into the honour of the prieſthoode, or into the office of a prophet, but muſte waite for his calling from God: muche leſſe is it lawfull for any manne, to take vppon him the name of the Meſsias, except it may euidently appeare, that he is choſen thereunto of God. For he muſt be appoynted not onely by the woorde of God, but alſo by his othe, as it is wrytten in the Pſalme. 110.4. But they deale very peruerſly and wickedly, becauſe that when the diuine maieſtie of Chriſt had beene declared by many myracles, as though they were ignorant of all things, they inquire frō whence he came. For what is more abſurde when they ſawe the hande of God ſtretched foorth in healing the halte and the blinde, to doubte whether a priuate man hath raſhly taken this authority vppon him. Further, it was more then ſufficiently proued before, that Chriſt was ſent from heauen: ſo that they could do no leſſe, then to allowe of his dedes in their heart, when they acknowledged God to bee the authour of them. Therefore they reſt vppon this, that he is not a lawful miniſter of God, whom they ſhall not chuſe with their voyces, as if the whole power were in theyr handes. But though they were lawfull gouernours of the Churche, yet it were a monſtrous thing for them to liſte themſelues againſte G O D. Nowe we vnderſtand why Chriſt doeth not directly anſweare them: becauſe that wickedly and ſhameleſly, they asked him a queſtion of a matter euidently knowne.

25. The baptiſme of Iohn. Chriſte asketh the queſtion of the baptiſme of Iohn, not onely that he might ſhew that they are vnworthy of all authority, becauſe they had deſpiſed the holy Prophet of God: but alſo that he might reproue them in their owne aunſweare, impudently pretendinge ignoraunce of a matter euidently knowen: For it muſt be remembered, wherefore Iohn was ſent, what his meſſage was, what matter he ſpecially bent himſelfe vnto. He was ſent as a crier to proclaime Chriſt: he ſlacked not thoſe things he was ſet about: and he chalenged nothing to himſelfe, but that he might prepare the way to the Lorde. Further, he poynted out Chriſt with his finger, and teſtified that hee was the onely ſonne of God. Nowe then, whence would the Scribes haue the newe authority of Chriſte approoued vnto them, when as the baptiſme of Iohn hadde made a lawfull and aſſured triall of the ſame? Nowe we ſee that Chriſte vſed not any crafty ſubtelty to auoide them, but anſweared the queſtion propoſed wholely and fully: for Iohn coulde not be acknowledged for the ſeruant of God, but that Chriſt muſt be acknowledged for the lord. So he armed not frowarde men, whiche without any commaundement, but of their owne preſumption, dare take a publike office vppon them: neither doeth hee by his example teache any ſophiſticall arte for the concealing of the truth, as many ſubtile men doe falſly alleage him for their authour. I graunt that a man muſt not alwayes anſweare after one maner, eſpecially if the ennemies lay ſnares to catch vs: but their malice muſt be ſo wiſely auoided, that truth be not left vndefended. But baptiſme is not taken in this place onely for the outwarde ſigne of waſhing, but for the whole miniſterie of Iohn. For Chriſte would haue had this anſweared, whether Iohn was a true and lawfull Prophet of God, or a deceiuer. Yet this ſentence containeth a profitable doctrine, whether the baptiſme of Iohn be from God or of men: for thereby we gather, that the godly may not admit amongeſt them any doctrine or ſacrament, except it may appeare that the ſame proceeded from God, neither is it in the power of men to coyne any other at their pleaſure. Hee ſpeaketh of Iohn, whome the Lord other where doeth highly commende aboue all the Prophetes. Yet Chriſt ſayeth that his baptiſme may not be receiued, except the ſame be commaunded of God. VVhat then ſhall be ſaid of thoſe fained Sacraments, which are fondly brought in by menne of no value, without any commaundement of God? For Chriſte doeth openly declare in theſe woordes, that the whole gouernment of the Church doth depende vpon the direction of God, ſo that it is wickedneſſe for menne to bring in any thing of themſelues.

They thought amongſt themſelues. The wickedneſſe of the prieſtes is heereby ſhewed, they conſider not what is true, neither doe they aske their owne conſcience: nay, they had rather moſt vilely to tourne backwarde, then to confeſſe that whiche they knowe to be true, leaſt any poynt of their tyrannie ſhould be loſt. So all the godleſſe, though they ſeeme deſirous to learne, yet they ſhut the gate againſt the truthe, if they thinke it to be againſt their gaine. Therefore Chriſt doeth not ſende them away without an anſweare, but ſendeth them away aſhamed and confounded: and alleageth ſo much of the teſtimony of Iohn, as ſufficeth to ſhewe that he doeth it by the power of God.

Mathew 21.	Marke.	Luke.
32. But what thinke yee? A certaine man had two ſonnes, and came to the elder, and ſayde: Sonne, goe and worke to day in my vineyard.
29. But he anſweared and ſayde, I will not: yet afterward he repented himſelfe, and went.
30. Then he came to the ſecond, and ſayd likewiſe. And he anſweared and ſayde, I will ſir: yet hee went not.
31. VVhether of them twaine did the will of the father? They ſayd vnto him. The firſt. Ieſus ſayd vnto them: Verely I ſay vnto you, that the Publicanes & the harlottes ſhall goe before you into the kingdome of God.
32. For Iohn came vnto you in the way of righteouſneſſe, and ye beleeued him not: but the Publicanes and the harlots beleeued him: and yee, though ye ſaw it, were not mooued with repentance afterward, that yee might beleeue him.

This clauſe ſheweth to what end this Parable tendeth, when as Chriſt pre-preferreth them which were notorious, infamous and abhominable people before the Scribes and the priests. For he discouereth these hypocrites, that they should no more boast themselues for the ministers of God, and pretend a vaine shew of godlinesse. For though their ambition, & pride, and cruelty, and couetousnesse, were knowen to all men, yet they would be accounted otherwise. And when as lately they assaulted Christ, they fained themselues very carefull for the order of the church, as if they had beene faithful and carefull preseruers of the same. So, sith they so grosely mocke with God and men, Christ reproueth their impudencie, shewing that they were nothing lesse then suche as they boasted themselues, and were so farre from that dignity wherwith they flattered themselues, that they should sit beneath the Publicanes and harlots. For in that they professed themselues to be the chiefe maintainers of the worship of God, & zealous of the law, Christ sayeth that this is euen like, as if a sonne should only in woord promisse obedience vnto him, and yet should deceiue him. As concerning Publicanes and harlots, he excuseth not their sinnes, but compareth their dissolute life, and the disobedience of an vntoward and disobedient sonne togither, who at the first reiecteth his fathers commãdement: but he sheweth that he did muche better in this, because they doe not continue in their sinnes to the end, but they rather become meete and apt to beare the yoake which they had so disdainfully refused. Nowe we vnderstand the purpose of Christ. He doth not only reproue the Priests and Scribes, for that they doe stubbornly resist God, and doe not repent after so many admonitions: but he spoyleth them of that honour, wherof they were vnworthy: because their vngodlinesse was worse then the wantonnesse of harlots.

32. For Iohn came vnto you. Because that Iohn was a faithfull minister of God, Christ referreth what soeuer he taught to god himselfe. This speach had beene more full and plaine, God came preaching righteousnesse in the mouth of Iohn: but because that Iohn spake in the name of God, and not as a priuate man, he is aptly sette in the place of God. And this place giueth no small authority to the preaching of the woorde, while they are accounted stubborne and disobedient against him, who soeuer they are, which shall despise the godly and holy admonitions of a teacher sent by him. Some doe more subtelly expound this word righteousnesse, whome I doe permit to vse their owne sense. But in my iudgement it signifieth nothing else, then that the doctrine of Iohn was sound and right: as if he shoulde haue sayde, that there was no cause why they shoulde reiecte the same. Further, when he sayeth that the Publicanes beleeued, his meaning is, that they did not only allow of the word, but did with earnest affection embrace that which they heard, VVherby we gather that this of it selfe is not faith, if any man ſubſcribe to ſounde doctrine: but it comprehendeth a greater and a deeper matter, that the hearer renouncing himſelfe, ſhould giue his life wholely to God. VVhen he ſayeth that they were not mooued with ſuch an example, he amplifieth their obſtinate malice. For this were a token of extreeme deſperation, at the leaſt not to follow harlots and Publicanes.

Math. 21.

33. Heare an other parable, there was a certaine houſholder, whiche planted a vineyearde, and hedged it rounde about, and made a wine preſſe therin, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a ſtrange country.

34. And when the time of the fruit drewe neare, he ſent his ſeruaunts to the husbandmenne, to receiue the fruites thereof.

35. And the husbandmenne tooke his ſeruaunts, and beate one, and killed another, and ſtoned another.

36. Again, he ſent other ſeruaunts, mo then the firſt: and they did the like vnto them.

37. But laſt of al he ſent vnto them his owne ſonne, ſaynge, they will reuerence my ſonne.

38. But when the husbandmen ſaw the ſonne, they ſaide among themſelues, this is the heire: come, lette vs kill him, and lette vs take his inheritaunce.

39. So they tooke him, and caſt him out of the vineyard, and ſlew him.

40. VVhen therefore the Lorde of the vineyarde ſhall come, what will hee doe to thoſe husbandmen?

41. They ſaid vnto him, he wil cruelly deſtroy thoſe wicked men, and will let out his vineyard vnto other husbandmen, which ſhall deliuer him the frutes in their ſeaſons.

Marke 12.

1. And he beganne to ſpeake vnto them in parables, a certaine manne planted a vineyard, and compaſſed it with an hedge, and digged a pit for the winepreſſe, and builte a towre in it, and lette it out to husbandmen, and went into a ſtraunge countrey.

2. And at a time, he ſent to the husbandmen a ſeruaunt, that he might receiue of the husbandmen, of the frute of the vineyeard.

3. But they tooke him, and beat him, and ſent him away emptie.

4. And againe, he ſent vnto them an other ſeruaunt, and at him they caſt ſtones, and brake his head, and ſent him away ſhamefully handled.

5. And againe, he ſent another, and him they ſlewe, and many other, beating ſome, & killing ſome.

6. Yet had he one ſonne, his deare beloued: him alſo hee ſent the laſt vnto them, ſayinge: they will reuerence my ſonne.

7. But the husbandmen ſayd among themſelues, this is the heir: come, let vs kil him, and the inheritance ſhalbe ours.

8. So they tooke him, and killed him, and caſt him out of the vineyeard.

9. VVhat shal the Lord of the vineyeard do? he wil come & deſtroy theſe husbandmen, & giue the vineyeard to others.

10. Haue

Luke 20.

9. Then began he to ſpeake to the people this parable. A certain man planted a vineyeard, and lette it foorth to husbandmen: and went into a ſtraunge countrey for a great ſeaſon.

10. And at a time he ſent a ſeruaunt to the husbandmen, that they sheulde giue him of the frute of the vineyard, but the husbandmenne did beate him, and ſent him away emptie.

11. Againe, he ſent yet an other ſeruaunt, and they did beate him, and ſoule intreated him, and ſent him away emptie.

12. Moreouer, hee ſent the third, and him they wounded, and caſt out.

13. Then ſayd the Lord of the vineyeard, what ſhall I doe? I will ſende my beloued ſonne: it may be that they wil doe reuerence, when they ſee him.

14. But when the husbandmenne ſawe him, they reaſoned with themſelues, ſayinge: this is the heire: come, lette vs kill him, that the inheritance may be ours.

15. So they caſte him oute of the vineyearde, and killed him, what ſhall the Lorde of the vineyearde therefore doe vnto them?

16. He

42. Ieſus ſayd vnto them, read yee neuer in the ſcriptures: the ſtone which the builders refuſed, the ſame is made the heade of the corner? This was the lordes doinge, and it is merueillous in our eyes.
43. Therefore ſayd I vnto you, the kingdome of God, ſhall be taken from you, and ſhall be giuen to a nation, which ſhal bring foorth the fruites thereof.
44. And who ſoeuer ſhall fall on this ſtone, he ſhall be broken: but on whome ſoeuer it ſhal fal, it will grinde him to powder.
45. And when the chief prieſts and Phariſies had heard his parables, they perceiued that hee ſpake of them.
46. And they ſeeking to lay handes on him, feared the people, becauſe they tooke him as a prophet.

10. Haue yee not redde ſo much as this ſcripture? The ſtone which the builders did refuſe, is made the heade of the corner.
11. This was done of the Lorde, and it is merualous in our eyes.
12. Then they went about to take him, but they feared the people: for they perceiued that hee ſpake that parable againſt them: therfore they left him, and went their way.

16. He wil come and deſtroy thoſe husbãdmen, & wil giue out his vineyarde to others. But when they heard it, they ſayd, God forbid.
17. And he beheld them, and ſayd: what meaneth this then that is wrytte, the ſtone that the builders refuſed, that is made the head of the corner?
18. Who ſo euer ſhall fall vppon that ſtone, ſhalbe broken: and on whome ſoeuer it ſhall fall, it will grinde him to powder.
19. Then the hie prieſts, and the Scribes the ſame houre went about to lay handes on him: (but they feared the people) for they perceiued that he had ſpoken this parable againſt them.

33. Heare another Parable. The woordes of Luke doe ſomewhat differ frõ theſe, for he ſayeth that Chriſt ſpake to the multitude: and the ſpeach is heere directed to the Prieſts and Scribes. But this is eaſily anſweared, for though Chriſt bent his ſpeach to them, yet he diſcouered theyr ſhame before all the people. When Marke ſayeth that Chriſte began to ſpeake in parables, he omitteth that which was firſt in order: as alſo in other places of the whole, he onely toucheth a parte. The ſumme of the parable is this, it is no new thing, if the prieſts and other gouernours of the church, doe endeuour wickedly to defraude God of his right, for they haue vſed the like theeuery before againſt the Prophets, and now they are ready to ſlay the ſonne, but they ſhall not eſcape vnpuniſhed: for God wil ariſe to reuenge his own right. And this is ſpoken for two principall cauſes: firſt, that he might reprooue the prieſts of vnthankefulneſſe full of infidelitie and wickednes: then that he might take away the offence, which might be taken of his death which was ſo neare at hande. For they had preuailed ſo much by their falſe title, amongſt the falſe & ſimple people, ſo that religion amongſt the Iewes, depended of their wil and pleaſure. Therefore Chriſt prepareth the weake before, and teacheth that ſith the prieſts in times paſt haue ſlaine ſo many Prophets one vppon an other, there is no cauſe why any man ſhoulde be troubled, if the like example be alſo wrought in his owne perſon. But nowe let vs conſider euery parte of the ſame.

Hee planted a vineyarde. This ſimilitude is often founde in the ſcripture. As cõcerning this preſent place, this is Chriſtes only meaning, that when God

God placeth pastours ouer his church, he giueth not ouer his right vnto them, but dealeth in like maner, as if a housholder shoulde set out a vineyeard or a field to a husbandman, who bestowing his labour in dressing it, shoulde pay yearely frute for the same. And as he complained by Isai. 5.4. and Iere. 2.21. that the vineyeard, about the dressing whereof he had bestowed much labour and cost, brought foorth no frute: so in this place he accuseth the keepers of his vineyeard, who as strong theeues tooke al the profit to themselues. This saying of Christ, that the husbandmen receiued the vineyeard well dressed and laboured at the hand of the housholder, doeth not a little encrease their faulte, for the better they were dealt with, the more worthy they are to be abhorred for their vnthankfulnesse. Paule vseth this argument, 1. Tim. 3.15. when he would exhort the pastours diligently to doe their duety, because they were stewardes, chosen to gouerne the house of God, which is the pillar and grounde of truth. And well, for the excellenter and the more honourable their estate is, so muche the more bound are they to God, not to followe his woorke slouthfully, but diligently. So muche the more is their vnfaithfulnesse to be detested (as was sayd euen nowe) which do scornefully abuse so great liberalitye and honour which God hath vouchsafed to bestowe vppon them. But God planted a vineyeard, when he being mindfull of his free adoption, had separated againe the people deliuered out of Egypt as peculier vnto himselfe, and had testified that he woulde be their God and father, and had called them into the hope of eternall saluation. For this is the planting whereof there is mention made in Isa. 60.21. and in other places. By the winepresse and tower, are vnderstoode those meanes and helpes which were ioyned to the doctrine of the law, for the nourishmēt of the faith of the people, as the sacrifices and other ceremonies. For God as a prouident and carefull housholder, vsed all diligence for the fensing of his Church, with all the helpes that might be.

30. He set it out to husbandmen. God might of himselfe haue preserued the estate of the Church in good order without the hedge of men: but he taketh men for his ministers, and vseth their hands for helpe. So in times past he appoynted the Priests, that they should be as dressers of the vineyeard. But it is marueile why Christ should compare the Prophets to seruants which are sent at the ende of the vintage to aske for frute. For we know that they also were vine dressers, and had one charge in common with the priests committed vnto them. I answeare, it was not necessary for Christe to shewe what agreement or difference there was betweene these two orders. The priestes were created at the first for this cause, that they might throughly furnish the church with sound doctrine, but when they either of slouthfulnesse or of ignorance neglected the worke committed vnto them, the Prophetes were sent as an extraordinarye supplie, which should purge the vine of hurtfull weedes, shoulde cutte off superfluous loppe, and should supply all thinges that were wanting throughe the negligence of the Priestes: and yet further they shoulde sharpely reprooue the people, restore religion decaied, stirre vppe slouthfull mindes, and bring them backe againe to the woorshippe of God and newnesse of life. And what was this else, but to aske for frute due vnto the Lorde of his vineyeard? the which Christ doeth aptly and truely apply to the purpoſe. Neither yet was the continual regiment of the Churche eſtabliſhed in the Prophets, but the prieſtes alwayes kept it in their handes: euen as if a ſlouthfull husbandman forſaking husbandry, ſhoulde yet vnder pretence of the poſſeſſion keepe the place whereunto he was once appoynted.

35. They beate one. Marke and Luke doe ſomewhat differ in this place from Mathewe: for when as he maketh mention of many ſeruauntes, and when they were all euill and cruelly handled, there was a greater number ſent againe: they onely ſette euery manne in his ſeuerall order, as if there were not two or three ſent together, but one after another. And though they all had one generall purpoſe: namely, that the Iewes woulde attempt the like againſt the Sonne, of that which they had ſo often done againſt the Prophets: yet Mathewe doeth declare the matter it ſelfe more plainely: that is, that God by ſending many Prophets, ſtroue with the malice of the prieſts. Whereby it appeareth howe outragious their madneſſe was, whiche could not be reformed by any meanes.

37. They will reuereace my ſonne. This thought doeth not properly belong to God: For he knewe what ſhoulde come to paſſe, neither was hee deceiued with the hope of any better ſucceſſe: but it is a common thing, eſpecially in parables to attribute humane affections to him. Neither yet is this added without a cauſe, for Chriſte would ſhew as in a glaſſe, how deſperate their wickednesſe was, whereof this was too euident a teſtimonye for them with a diueliſhe madneſſe to ariſe againſt the Sonne of God, who came to bring them againe into their right minde. As they hadde done before what lay in them, to driue God out of his poſſeſſion, by the cruell ſlaughter of the Prophets: ſo this was the greateſt ſinne of all, to ſlaye the Sonne that they mighte raigne as in a houſe without an heire. For this was the cauſe why the Prieſts did rage ſo againſt Chriſte, leaſt they ſhoulde loſe their tyrannie as a pray. For it is he whome God the father would haue raigne, and to whome he hath giuen all authoritie. The Euangeliſtes doe alſo ſomewhat vary in the ende. For Mathewe ſayeth that they began to make a confeſsion againſt themſelues, wherein they condemned themſelues: Marke ſimply ſayeth that Chriſte declared what puniſhment ſhoulde light vppon ſo wicked and vngodly ſeruantes. Luke ſeemeth plainly to differ from them both: ſaying that they withſtoode and were againſt the iudgement which Chriſt had pronounced. But if we marke the meaning better, there is no diuerſity amongſt them, for it is not to be doubted, but that they would agree vnto Chriſte, that ſuche ſeruaunts hadde deſerued that plague: but when they ſawe bothe the ſinne and the iudgement laid vppon themſelues, they woulde ſhifte it off.

42. Reade you neuer in the ſcriptures? That muſt be remembred which we ſpake a little before, when the prieſtes and Scribes had the people bound vnto them, this principle was common amongeſt them, that they onely were the lawfull arbiters and iudges of the redemption to come: ſo that no man might be receiued for the Meſsias, but he whom they by their liking and conſent ſhoulde allowe of. Therefore they affirme that Chriſt had ſpoken a thing impoſsible, that they ſhould ſlay the ſonne and heyre of the Lord of the vineyeard. But Chriſt confirmeth it by the teſtimonie of the scripture: and he asketh the question very vehemently: as if he had sayd: You account it a great absurdity, that it shoulde come to passe, that the husbandmen to whome the vineyeard was lette, shoulde so wickedly conspire against the sonne of God. VVhat shathe the scripture foretolde that he shoulde be chearefully and ioyfully receiued, and that the rulers themselues should not rather be against him? The place also which he citeth, is taken out of the Psalme 118.22. from whence that happy & ioyfull cry was fetched. O Lorde saue nowe, blessed be hee that commeth in the name of the Lorde. And this was prophesied of the kingdom of the Messias, as it doeth appeare there, in that God created Dauid king, wyth this condition, that his throane should stand for euer, euen so long as the Sunne and Moone should shine in heauen, and being decaied, it should by the grace of God be restored into the former estate. Therefore whereas that Psalme containeth a description of the kingdome of Dauid, it promiseth wythall, that it shall be perpetuall, and restored againe. If this had beene spoken of a temporall kingdome, Christ shoulde haue improperly drawen it vnto himselfe. But this muste alwayes be noted, that the kingdome which God erected in the person of Dauid: was established in the true Messias vnto the ende of the worlde. For that annoynting in times past was but a shadowe of this. VVhereby it is gathered, that that which was begunne in Dauid, was a paterne and figure of Christe. Nowe let vs returne to the woordes of the Psalme. The Scribes and priestes thoughte it incredible, that Christe shoulde be reiected of the rulers of the Church. But he proueth out of the Psalme, that by the wonderful power of God he shoulde bee placed in his throane against the will of menne: and that was figured long before in Dauid, whome God tooke when he was reiected by the mighty powers of the world, that he might declare & shew, what he would woorke at the length in his Christ. And the Prophet boroweth a Metaphore of buildings. For because the Churche is the holy house of God, Christ vpon whom it is builded, is called the corner stone: that is, the stone which beareth the whole weight of the building. Thys similitude holdeth not out square on euery side, if a man should sifte out euery particuler poynt which belongeth to Christe: but it agreeth very well in this, that the saluation of the Church lieth vppon him, and he vpholdeth the estate of the same. So other Prophets also followed the same phrase and maner of speakinge, especially Isaias 28.16. and Daniel. But Isaias alludeth very neare vnto this place, who bringeth in God speaking thus. Beholde, I will lay in Syon a foundation stone, a stone tried and pretious, whereat bothe the houses of Israel shall stumble. And in the newe Testament this maner of speache is often founde. Therefore the summe is, that the kingdome of God shoulde be builded vppon a stone, which the chiefe builders themselues shoulde caste away as rubbishe and nothing woorth. And the meaning is, that the Messias who is the foundation of the saluation of the Church, shoulde not be chosen by the common voyces of menne: but when the chiefe rulers, to whome the care of the buildinge is committed, shoulde be against him, God woulde woonderfully exalte him by a secreate and vnhoped for power. But heere are two thinges for vs to beholde: for God least the endeuours of the wicked, whyche ryse vppe to hinder the buildinge of the Churche shoulde trouble vs, hee admonysheth vs before, that it shoulde so come to passe.

Then hee declareth withall, that in the erection of the kingdome of Chriſte, what ſoeuer menne ſhall labour to the contrary, his power ſhall preuaile, we muſt diligently obſerue bothe. It is wonderfull that the authour of ſaluation ſhoulde be reiected, not by ſtraungers, but by them of the houſhold: and not of the fooliſh people, but of the gouernours themſelues, who hadde the gouernance of the Church in their hands. Againſt ſuche outragious fury of menne, faith muſt be nouriſhed and ſupported, leaſt it ſhoulde faint and fall away at the ſtraungeneſſe of the matter. Nowe we vnderſtande howe profitable that forewarning was, whiche putteth the mindes of the godly out of that feare, which they mighte otherwiſe conceiue, at that ſorowfull ſighte. For there is nothinge more ſtraunge, then the members ſhoulde riſe againſt the heade, the husbandmenne againſt their Lorde, the counſellours againſt their kinge, and the chiefe builders to caſt away the foundation from the building. There is alſo more efficacie in the other clauſe, where God declareth that the wicked ſhall preuaile nothing by reiecting Chriſte, but that he ſhall haue his dignity whole and perfect: namely, that the faithfull truſting in this promiſſe, might ſafely as out of a fort, laugh at the ouerthwart pride of men in reiecting Chriſt. For when they haue done al that they may, yet Chriſt will in ſpite of them holde that place which his father hath giuen hym. Thoughe they which ſeeme to haue honour and power, ſhall forceably ſette themſelues againſt him, yet notwithſtanding he will ſtand in his eſtate, and yeelde nothing at all vnto them for all their wicked contempt. To be ſhorte, the power of God ſhall preuaile, ſo that he ſhalbe the ſtone tried and precious, which ſhall vpholde the Church, kingdome and temple of God.

Further, he is called the heade ſtone of the corner, not as that hee were onely a parte of the foundation (when as it appeareth by other places, that the Churche is firmelye builded vppon him alone) but the ſimple meaninge of the Prophet was this, that he ſhould be the chiefe ſtay of the building. Some doe very curiouſly diſcourſe of the woorde Corner, that Chriſte was placed in a corner, that he might ioyne togither two diuers walles: namely, the Gentiles and the Iewes. Yet in my iudgement Dauid hadde no farther reſpecte, then that the corner ſtone vpholdeth the chief weight of the building.

Nowe it is demaunded why the ſpirite ſhould call them Chiefe builders, which doe onely ſeeke the ruine and deſtruction of the Church of God. For Paul doeth therefore glory that he is a good maiſter builder, 1. Cor. 3. 11. becauſe he builded the Church vppon Chriſt alone. The anſweare is eaſie. Thoughe they vnfaithfully did diſcharge the charge committed vnto them, yet he graunteth them this title in reſpect of their callinge. So deceiuers haue often the name of Prophets: and they are called ſhepherds which as wolues deuoure the flocke. Neither doe they gette ſo much honour as ſhame by this title, while they roote vppe the foundation of the Churche of GOD, when they were appoynted to be chiefe in buildinge the ſame. Heereof is this profitable leſſon gathered, that notwithſtanding their lawfull calling, they may be wicked and vngodly ennemies of Chriſt, which ſhould be his miniſters.

It is euident that the Prieſthoode of the lawe was ordained of God, and that the Lorde committed the authority of gouerning the Churche to the Leuites: doe they therefore faithfully discharge their office? should it become the godly to deny Christ to obey them? Nowe let the Pope goe with his horned Bishops, and let them boast that they shoulde be beleeued in all things, because they supply the place of shepheardes. If wee shoulde graunte that they are rightly called to the gouernment of the Church: yet it is in vaine that they chalenge vnto themselues more then the titles of the prelates of the Church. But they haue not so much as the title of a callinge: for the whole order of the church was ouerthrowne, that they might lift vppe themselues into this tyranny. But graunt they doe rightly chalenge the ordinarie iurisdiction, yet if they ouerthrowe the holy house of God, they are to be accounted maister builders but only in name. This doeth not alwayes fall out, that they to whome the gouernment of the Church is committed, should reiecte Christe. For there were vnder the lawe many godly priests, and also in the kingdome of Christ, there were pastours, which laboured diligently and faithfully in building of the church: but yet because this must needes be fulfilled, it behooueth vs wisely to discerne betweene them. And the holy Ghost hath purposely forewarned vs, least any man shoulde bee deceiued by a vaine title and dignity of calling.

This was the Lordes doing. Because the common capacitie of man could not conceiue how the pastours of the Church themselues shoulde reiect the sonne of God their Prince, the Prophet calleth them backe to the secreat councell of God, which thoughe we cannot conceiue in our vnderstanding, yet may we beholde and wonder at it. Therefore we must knowe that here is cutte off all occasion of questioning, and expresly forbidden that no man should esteeme or measure the nature of the kingdome of Christ by the reason of flesh. For the simplicity of it, is wonderful, which the Prophet exhorteth vs to reuerence, for that his wil was so to abase it to the capacity of our vnderstanding. Thou wilt allowe no more of the kingdom of Christ, then seemeth probable to thee: and the holy Ghost sayth that it is a mystery worthy of great admiration, because it is hidde from the eyes of menne. Therefore, so ofte as there is mention of the beginning, restitution, state, and the whole preseruation of the Churche, let vs remember not to consult with our senses, but giue the honor to the power of God, and haue his secreat woorke in admiration. Here also is set downe a secreat opposition betweene God and men: for we are not onely commaunded to imbrace the wonderful maner of gouerninge the church, because it is the worke of God, but we are also called back from that fonde estimation of men, which often darkeneth the glory of God. As if the Prophet should haue sayd, though men excell in glorious titles, yet he doth very ouerthwartly that shall oppose thē against God, wherby the diuelish wickednesse of the Papistes is confuted, whiche doubteth not to preferre the determination of their Church before the woord of God. For whereof doeth the authority of the woorde of God depende according to their opinions, but of the pleasures of men, so that there is no more authority left vnto God, then that which he receiueth by the allowance of the Churche. But the spirite teacheth vs farre otherwyse in this place: namely, that assoone as the maiestie of God shal appeare, that all the world keepe silence.

43. Therefore say I vnto you. Christ directed his speache thus farre to the guids & gouernors, but before the people: but now he ſpeaketh likewiſe to the people themſelues, & he had good cauſe ſo to do, for that they aſſiſted and holpe the Prieſtes and Scribes to hinder the grace of GOD. The Prieſtes were the beginners of this miſchiefe: but the ſinnes of the people hadde already deſerued to haue ſo corrupt and degenerate paſtours: to be ſhorte, the whole bodye was bent with like malice to reliſte God. And this is the cauſe why Chriſt pronounced the horrible vengeance of God ſo generally againſt them all. For as the prieſtes were puft vppe with their authoritye, ſo the reſt of the people was proude of theyr pretenſed title of adoption. Nowe Chriſte declareth that God is not bounde vnto them, and that it ſhall therefore come to paſſe, that the honour which they haue made themſelues vnworthy of, ſhall be beſtowed otherwhere. And this was once ſpoken to them, but it is wrytten for all our ſakes, that if God ſhall chuſe vs for his people, that wee become not wanton with a vaine and wicked confidence of the fleſh: but lette vs againe endeuour to ſhewe our ſelues ſuche children towardes him as he requireth. For if he ſpared not the naturall braunches, what ſhal become of them that are grafted in? Rom. 11.21. The Iewes thought that the kingdom of God belonged vnto them by right of inheritance, & therefore without all care they became hardened in their ſinnes. VVe againſt nature do preſently ſuccede in their place, and therfore it is much leſſe tied vnto vs, except we be roted in true godlines. And as we ought to be afraid of this, that Chriſt ſayth, that they ſhall be depriued of the kingdome of God, which ſhall prophane the ſame: ſo the perpetuitie of the ſame which is here noted, may comfort all the godly. For Chriſte doeth declare in theſe woordes, that thoughe the wicked doe beate downe the worſhippe of God amongſt them, yet they ſhall not bring it to paſſe that the name of Chriſte ſhoulde be aboliſhed, and that true religion ſhoulde periſh: becauſe that God (in whoſe hande all the endes of the earth are) wil finde a ſeat and dwelling place for his kingdome other where. Thys moreouer is to be learned out of this place, that the Goſpel is not therefore preached, that it ſhuld lie barren and idle, but that it might fructifie.

44. VVhoſoeuer ſhall fall on this ſtone. Chriſte doeth more fully confirme the former ſentence, that he loſeth nor wāteth not any thing, by that the wicked doe reiecte him, for though their obſtinacy be hard as ſtone or yron, yet he will breake them in their owne hardneſſe, & ſo his glory ſhall the more appeare in their deſtruction. He ſawe a wonderful vntowardneſſe in the Iewes, therefore it was neceſſary that this vengeance ſhoulde in this order be ſeuerely pronounced againſt them, leaſt they ſhould peariſh in their ſecurity. This doctrine doeth partly teache vs with a tender and flexible heart, quietly to deliuer our ſelues to be tamed by Chriſte, partly alſo he confirmeth his againſt the ouerthwart and furious violences of the wicked, whome hee will at the lengthe moſte fearefully deſtroy. They are ſayde to fall vppon Chriſt, which thruſt at him to ouerthrowe him: not that they clime vppe higher then he, but becauſe theyr madneſſe doeth cary them ſo farre foorth, that they endeuour to pull Chriſt downe from on high. But he declareth that they onely preuaile in this, that in this conflicte they themſelues ſhall be broken in pieces. But whereas they ſhal lift vp thēſelues ſo proudly, he telleth them before, that they ſhall bring an other thing to paſſe: namely, that they ſhalbe ground to pieces vnder that ſtone, againſt the which they haue ſo boldly thruſt.

45. They perceiued that he ſpake of them. The Euangeliſtes do declare how little Chriſt profited among them, leaſt we ſhoulde marueile becauſe the doctrine of the Goſpell doeth not winne all menne at this day to obey it. Let vs alſo learne that it cannot otherwiſe be, but that threates ſhould make the wicked more and more madde. For as God ſealeth his woorde in our hearts, ſo hee alſo woundeth wicked conſciences with his hotte yron. VVhereby it commeth to paſſe that vngodlineſſe doeth the more burne out and ſhew it ſelf. Therfore we muſt pray vnto him to bring vs to a willing feare, leaſt the naked feare of his vengeance ſhuld more exaſperate vs. That the only feare of the people reſtraineth them, that they lay not hands vppon Chriſt, let vs know that it was becauſe God hadde brideled them. VVhereby no ſmal comfort doeth alſo come to the faithfull, when they heare that they are ſhielded by the hande of God, ſo that they eſcape as it were the iawes of death.

Math. 22.

15. Then went the Phariſies & tooke counſell howe they might tangle him in talke.

16. And they ſent vnto him their diſciples with the Herodians, ſaying: Maiſter, we knowe that thou art true, and teacheſt the way of God truely, neyther careſt for any manne: for thou conſidereſt not the perſonne of menne.

17. Tell vs therefore, how thinkeſt thou? Is it lawfull to giue tribute vnto Cæſar or not?

18. But Ieſus perceiued their wickedneſſe, and ſaid: why tempt yee me, yee hypocrites?

19. Shew me the tribute money: and they brought him a penie.

20. And he ſaid vnto them: whoſe is this image and ſuperſcription?

21. They ſayd vnto him, Cæſars. Then ſayde he vnto them: Giue therefore to Cæſar, the thinges which are Cæſars, and giue vnto God, theſe thinges whiche are Gods.

22. And when they heard it, they marueiled, and left him, and went their way.

Marke 12.

13. And they ſent vnto him certaine of the Phariſies, and of the Herodians, that they might take him in his talke.

14. And when they came, they ſayd vnto him: Maſter, we know that thou art true, and careſt for no manne: for thou conſidereſt not the perſon of menne, but teacheſt the way of God truely. Is it lawfull to giue tribute to Cæſar or not?

15. Shoulde we giue it, or ſhoulde we not giue it? But he knew their hypocriſie, and ſayd vnto them: why tempte yee me? Bring me a pennye, that I may ſee it.

16. So they brought it, and he ſayd vnto them: whoſe is this image and ſuperſcription? and they ſayd vnto hym, Cæſars.

17. Then Ieſus anſweared, & ſayd vnto them: Giue to Cæſar, the thinges that are Cæſars, and to God, theſe that are Gods: and they marueiled at him.

Luke 20.

20. And they watched him, and ſent foorth ſpies, which ſhuld faine thēſelues iuſt men, to take him in his talke, and to deliuer him vnto the power and authoritie of the gouernour.

21. And they asked him, ſaying, Maiſter: wee knowe that thou ſayeſt, and teacheſt righte, neither doeſt thou accept mans perſon, but teacheſt the way of god truely.

22. Is it lawfull for vs to giue Cæſar tribute, or no?

23. But he perceiued their craftineſſe, and ſayde vnto them: why tempt yee mee?

24. Shewe me a pennye, whoſe image & ſuperſcription hath it? They anſweared and ſayd, Cæſars.

25. Then hee ſayde vnto them: Giue then vnto Cæſar, the thinges whiche are Cæſars, and to God theſe which are Gods.

26. And they coulde not reproouue his ſayinge before the people: but they marueiled at his anſweare, and held their peace.

gouernour as a ſeditious perſon, and one that ſought after innouations. Ther was about that time a great queſtion amongſt the Iewes cõcerning tribute (as we haue ſene other wher:) for when as the Romanes had trãſlated to themſelues the tribute, which God in the law of Moſes cõmanded to be paid to himſelf, the Iewes in all places were offẽded, & thought it a hainous offence, and not to be borne, that prophane men ſhoulde pull in this maner to thẽſelues, that which of right appertained to God. Further, when as that paying of tribute appoynted by the law, was a witnes of their adoption, they thought themſelues ſpoiled of the honour due to them. Now, the porer any man was, the bolder he was in hope of his pouerty, to raiſe ſtirres and tumults. Therefore the Phariſies do deuiſe this ſubtelty to catch Chriſt in, ſo that he ſhould enſnare himſelfe, which way ſoeuer he ſhuld anſwer. If he ſhuld deny to pay it, he ſhuld be guilty of ſedition. But if he ſhuld graunt that it ſhuld be paid of right, he ſhuld be accounted as an enemye to his owne nation, and a betraier of the liberty of their countrey. But this was their ſpeciall purpoſe, to alienate the people from him. This is the catching which the Euangeliſtes doe note: for they thinke that they haue ſo laid a ſnare on euerye ſide for Chriſte, that now he could not eſcape. But becauſe they were his profeſſed enemies, & knewe that they were therefore ſuſpected, they ſuborned ſome of theyr own diſciples as Mat. reporteth. But Luke calleth them ſpies, or deceitful perſons, which ſhuld fain thẽſelues to be righteous, that is, they ſhuld pretend a ſimple & honeſt deſire to learne. For this faining to be righteous, is not generally takẽ, but is reſtrained to this preſent cauſe: for they ſhuld not haue ben admitted, but vnder pretence of a ſincere affection & deſire to learne: they ioyne the Herodians to them, who had a greater fauour to the Romane Empire, wherby they were the apter to lay an accuſation to his charge. But it is woorth the labour to note, how they being at ſharpe diſſention amongſt thẽſelues, could yet agree togither to deſtroy Chriſt, ſo great was their hatred againſt him. VVee haue ſhewed other where what maner of ſect this was. For when as Herode was but half a Iew, or a degenerate and adoulterous profeſſour of the law, whoſoeuer woulde kepe the lawe exactly in euery poynt, condemned him and his prophane kinde of worſhipping: and he had his flatterers, which would caſt a colour vppon his corrupt doctrine. So beſides other ſectes, there was alſo ſprung vp at that time a courtly religion.

16. Maſter, wee knowe. This is that righteouſneſſe which they diſſemble, while they do flatteringly crouch vnto Chriſt, as if they were deſirous to learne, and they do not only pretend to be godly, but ſeme alſo to be wel perſwaded of his doctrine. For if they had ſpoken from their heart, this had ben ſincere dealing. So by their wordes there may be a definition gathered of a true and faithful teacher, ſuch as they fain Chriſt to be. They ſay that he is true, & teacheth the way of God: that is, he that is a faithful interpreater of God, and that in truthe, that is without any corruption. The way of God is oppoſed againſt inuentions of men, and all forraine and ſtraunge doctrines: and truthe is ſette againſt ambition, couetouſneſſe, and other wicked affections, which doe vſually corrupte the pure manner of teachinge. Therefore wee muſte accounte him for a lawful teacher, whyche bryngeth not in the deuices of menne, nor departeth from the pure woorde of GOD, but deliuereth as it were by hande, that that which he hath learned from his mouth: further, with a sincere mind to doe good he applyeth the doctrine to the benefit & saluation of the people, and corrupteth it not with any corruption. As concerninge this last clause, Paule, 2. Cor. 2. 17. in saying that he hath not made merchãdise of the word of God, declareth that there are some, which are verye expert: for they will not openlye ouerthrow true doctrine, neither are they notorious for wicked doctrine: yet they wil defile and corrupt the purity of doctrine: beecause they are eyther ambitious, or couetous, or chaungeable hether and thether after the desire of the flesshe. Therefore he compareth them to vinteners or mixers, becausse they corrupt the sincere vse of the word of God. That also is worthy to be noted, whiche these hypocrites do adde withall, that Christ taught truelye, because hee regarded not the persons of menne. For there is nothing that withdraweth teachers more from faythful and pure dispensing, then the hauing of respect vnto men. For it is impossible that any manne shoulde serue God truely, which desireth to please menne, Gala. 1. 10. Menne must be regarded: but not so as that we shuld curry fauour with them by flattering them. To be short, that we may be sincere, it is necessary that we auoyde acception of persons: for it darkeneth the light, and peruerteth iust iudgment, as GOD dooth often commaunde in the lawe, Deuteronomy, 1. 16. 17. and 16. 19, and experience dooth also declare the same. Therefore Christ in Iohn, 7. 24. compareth togeather iudgement according to the appearance, and righteous iudgment, as things contrary one to the other.

15. Iesus perceiued their wickednes. They vsed their wordes so, as if they differed nothing from the sincereſt disciples. Therfore how could Christ know this, but becausse his spirit was the searcher of heartes? For mans coniecture could not smell out their subtilty, but becausse that hee was God, he pearced into their heartes, so that their flatteries and faigned holynesse was but a vaine couer for them. Therefore before he gaue any aunswere, he shewed his deitie in reuealing their secret malice. Now sith the wicked doe dayly lay the like snares for vs, and their inwarde malice lyeth hidde from vs, we must pray that Christ would giue vs the spirit of discretion, and that he would bestow that as a free gift vpon vs, which he had by nature and of his own right. Further, how necessary it is that we should haue this wisdome, it appeareth by this, that if we take not heede of the snares of the wicked, wee shall make the doctrine of God subiect to their slaunders. Also that commaundement of Christe that they should shew their money, though it seemeth at the first to bee of no moment: yet is it sufficient to breake their snares, & to ouerthrow their deuises. For therein he gaue them a plaine graunt of obedience, so that Christ needed not to commaund them any newthing: The image of Cæsar was vpon the money. Therefore the authority of the gouernment of the Romaines was commonly allowed. VVhereby it appeared that the Iewes hadde nowe of theyr owne accorde layde that lawe of payinge trybute vppon themselues: for they hadde graunted the power of the sworde vnto the Romaines. For they coulde not dispute of tribute alone: but this question dependeth of the whole gouernment of the common wealth.

21. Giue vnto Cæsar, the things which are Cæsars. Christ declareth that there is no queſtion to be made of that matter, when as the money declared the ſubiection of their nation: as if he ſhould haue ſayde, if you thinke it abſurd to pay tribute, be not ſubiect to the Romane empyre. But the money (which is a pledge of mutuall fellowſhippe and dealing betweene menne) declareth that Cæſar raigneth ouer you, and your owne ſecrete allowaunce declareth that the lyberty which you pretend, is loſt and taken away. And Chriſtes aunſwere is not ſo indifferent, but that it deliuereth the whole doctrine of the queſtion propoſed. For here is a plaine difference put betweene the ſpirituall and politike gouernment, which teacheth vs that the outward obedience hindereth vs not, but that wee may with a free conſcience ſerue GOD. For the purpoſe of Chriſte was to confute their errour, which thought that they could not be the people of God, except they were ſet free from the yoake of all humane authoritie. As Paule alſo doth diligently apply himſelfe in this matter, leaſte they ſhould thinke that they could not ſerue God alone, if they ſhoulde obey the lawes of menne, if they ſhould pay tributes, and ſhould ſubmit their neckes to beare other burdens. In ſumme hee declareth that the lawe of GOD is not broken, nor his worſhippe hindered, by the obedience of the Iewes to the outwarde polytike gouernement of the Romanes.

He ſeemeth alſo to reproue theyr hypocriſie, for that they careleſly ſuffred the worſhippe of God to be defiled manye wayes: nay, they defrauded God wickedly of his power, and pretended onely this great zeale in a matter of nothing, as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde: you are very carefull leaſt GOD ſhould loſe any of his honour, if you ſhoulde paye tribute to the Romanes. But you ſhould rather applye your ſelues to ycelde that worſhippe to God, that he requireth of you, and alſo to giue vnto men that which belongeth to them. This ſeemeth not to be a fitte diuiſion, for to ſpeake properly, when we doe our duety to menne, we do thereby yeelde obedience to God. But Chriſt framing his ſpeach to the capacitie of menne, thought it ſufficient to diſtinguiſh the ſpirituall kingdom of God, from the politike order and ſtate of this preſent life. VVherefore this difference muſt alwaies be remembred, when the Lorde wil be the onely lawgiuer for the gouernment of ſoules, the rule and order for worſhipping him muſt be fetched out of his word, and wee muſt onelye reſt in that ſincere worſhippe, which is there deſcribed: and the power of the ſworde, and the lawes and iudgementes are no hynderaunce, but that the worſhippe of GOD may remayne perfect amongſt vs. Now this doctrine reacheth farther, ſo that euery manne according to his calling may diſcharge his duetie to menne, the children to the parentes, the ſeruauntes may ſubmitte themſelues willinglye to their maiſters: other may be duetifull and obedient to others, according to the lawe of charitie, ſo that God may alwayes haue the chiefe gouernment: in reſpect of the which let whatſoeuer is due vnto men be brought vnder, or holden as in a ſecond degree, as menne ſaye. The meaning therefore is, ſith that whoſoeuer doe weaken the politike eſtate, are rebelles againſt GOD, the obedience towardes Princes and Magiſtrates muſt alwayes be ioyned with the worſhippe and feare of God: but againe, if Princes do challenge any thing to themſelues, which belongeth to God: they are to bee obeyed no further, then we may with a good conſcience.

21. They mernailed. Here also it appeareth how God turneth the wicked endeuours of his enemies to a contrary end, and he dooth not onely delude their hope and make it frustrate, but also driueth them awaye with shame.

Sometime it shall fall out that though the wicked be ouercome, yet they will not cease to murmurre: but though their frowardnesse wyll not be tamed, how many battailes soeuer they doe make againste the word of God, so many victories are in his hand, that hee may tryumph ouer them and their head Satan. But in this answere the speciall purpose of Christ was to set forth his owne glory, while he compelleth them to depart with shame.

Math. 22	Mark. 12	Luk. 20.
23. The same daye the Saduces came to hym, (which say, there is no resurrection, and asked him.	18 Then came the Saduces vnto him, (which saye there is no resurrection) and they asked him, saying,	27. Then came to him certeine of the Saduces (which deny that there is any resurrection) and they asked him,
24. Saying, maister, Moses said, if a man dye, hauinge no children, let his brother mary his wife, & raise vppe seede vnto his brother.	19. Maister, Moses wrote vnto vs, if anye mans brother die, and leaue his wife, and leaue no children, that his brother sheulde take his wife, and rayse vp seed vnto his brother.	28. Sayinge, Mayster, Moses wrote vnto vs, if anye mans brother dye, hauing a wife, and hee die without children, that his brother sheulde take his wife, and raise vppe seede vnto his brother.
25. Now there were with vs seauen brethren, and the first married a wife, and deceased: and hauing no issue, left his wife vnto his brother.	20. There were seauen brethren, and the first tooke a wife, and when hee dyed left no issue.	29 Now there were seauen brethren, and the first tooke a wife, and he died without children.
26. Likewise also the seconde, and the thirde, vnto the seauenth.	21. Then the second took her, and he died, neither did he yet leaue issue, and the third likewise.	30. And the seconde tooke the wife, and he died childlesse.
27. And last of all the woman died also.	22. So seauen hadde her, and left no issue: last of all the wife died also.	31. Then the third tooke her: and so likewise the seauen died, and left no children.
28. Therfore in the resurrection, whose wife shal she be of the seauen? for al had her.	23. In the resurrection then, when they shall ryse againe, whose wife shall she be of them? for seauen had her to wife.	32. And last of all the woman died also.
29. Then Iesus answered & said vnto them, ye are deceiued, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God.	24. Then Iesus answered and saide vnto them, are yee not therefore deceiued, because ye know not the scriptures, neither the power of God?	33. Therefore at the resurrection, whose wife of them shall shee bee? for seauen hadde her to wife.
30. For in the resurrection they neither marye wiues, nor wiues are bestowed in marriage, but are as the Angels of God in heauen.	25. For when they shal rise againe	34. Then Iesus answered and said vnto them, the children of this world marrie wiues, and are married.
31. And concerning the resurrection		35. But they which shall bee counted worthye to enioye that worlde, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marrye wiues, neither are married, rection of the dead, haue ye not read what is spoken vnto you of God, saying.
		36. For

32. I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the god of Iacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the liuing.
33. And when the people heard it, they were astonyed at his doctrine.

againe from the dead, neyther men marry, nor wiues are maried, but are as the Aungels, which are in heauen.
26. And as touchinge the dead, that they shal rise again, haue ye not read in the booke of Moses, howe in the bushe God spake vnto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob.
27 Hee is not the God of the dead, but of the lyuing: yee are therefore greatly deceiued.

36. For they can dye no more, for asmuch as they are equall vnto the Aungels, and are the sonnes of God, since they are the children of the resurrection.
37. And that the dead shal rise againe, euen Moses shewed it, beside the bushe, when hee sayd, the Lord is the GOD of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob.
38. For hee is not the God of the dead, but of them which liue: for all lyue vnto him.
39. Then certeine of the Pharises answered, and sayde, Mayster, thou haste well sayde.
40. And after that, durste they not aske him any thing at all.

Heere we see how Sathan gathereth all the wicked together, to ouerthrow the trueth of God, which men in other thinges coulde not agree amongst themselues. For though there was great dissention betweene these two sectes, yet they conspire together against Christe: so that the Pharises were not displeased that theyr doctrine was oppugned in the person of Christ. So at this day we see al the bandes of Satan, though otherwise some of them are against others yet they ryse from al places against Christ. And the Papistes do beare so great hatred against the gospell, that they doe gladly nourish Epicures, Libertines, and suche other monsters, so that they may haue their helpe to ouerthrowe the Gospell. In summe we see that they came out of diuers sortes to assault Christ: and this came so to passe, beecause that all menne generally hated the lyght of sounde doctrine. But the Saduces moue the question to Christ, so as vnder the colour of an absurditie, they might eyther drawe hym into an errour, or if hee shoulde dissente, they myght dyffame him, and bringe him into contempte amongste the rude and vnlearned multitude. And it maye bee, that they were woonte to trouble the Pharises before with the same obiection, but now they lay the same snare for Christ.

23 Which say that there is no resurrection. I haue shewed before of the beginning of the Saduces. They did not onely deny the last resurrection of the flesh, but also the immortalitye of the soule, as Luke declareth, Act. 29.8. And truely if the doctrine of the scripture be wel considered, without the hope of the resurrection the life of the soule shall seeme to bee a very dreame. For God doth not say that the soules do so liue after death, as if they should now enioy the present glory and blessednes: but he suspendeth theyr hope vnto the latter day. I graunt that the Phylosophers, which were ignoraunt of the reſurrection of the fleſh, ſpak many things of the immortall eſſence of the ſoule: but they ſpeake ſo fondlye of the eſtate of the life to come, that theyr writinges are to no purpoſe. But ſith the ſcripture ſaieth, that the ſpirituall lyfe dependeth of the hope of the reſurrection, and that the ſoules ſeparated from the bodyes haue reſpect to that, whoſoeuer denyeth the reſurrection, doth alſo deny the immortalyty of ſoules. But here is to be ſeene the horryble confuſion of the Iewiſh Church, that the chiefe maiſters of theyr relygion tooke awaye the hope of the lyfe to come: ſo that after death there ſhould be no difference betweene men and beaſtes. They did not deny a holy & righteous lyfe, neither were they ſo prophane as to account the worſhip of GOD a needeleſſe matter, (but they rather acknowledged God to be the iudge of the world, & that al things appertaining to man are gouerned by his prouidence:) but ſith they tyed aſwell the reward of the godlye, as the paynes due to the wicked, to this preſent life, though they had ſayd truely, that euery manne is now handled equally, according to his deſart: yet this was too prepoſterous, to ſhutte vp the promiſes of God into ſo narrow corners.

Now experyence doth euidently declare, that their folly was too groſſe, ſith it is euident that the rewarde which is layde vp for the good, is deferd to an other lyfe, and the puniſhmentes are not powred vppon the wicked in this world. To be ſhort, there cannot be imagined any thing more abſurde then this fantaſie, that menne created after the image of God, ſhould periſh like beaſtes. But howe vile and monſtrous a matter was this, when as ſome opinion at the leaſt of the life to come remained euery where amongſt the prophane and blynde Idolaters of the Gentiles, that this ſeede of godlynes ſhoulde be aboliſhed amongſt the Iewes the peculyar people of God. VVhat ſhould I ſay, that when they ſaw the holy Fathers, that they made haſte to the heauenlye life, and the couenaunte which God made with them is ſpirituall and eternall, muſte they not be more blinde then blockes, which coulde not ſee in ſo cleare a light? But firſt this was a iuſt rewarde for them, which had rente the Church of God into ſectes: then God in this maner reuenged the wicked contempt of his doctrine.

24. Mayſter, Moſes ſayde Sith it might haue ſufficed to haue propoſed the matter ſimply, to what end made they ſuch a preface? namelye, they doe craftily pretend Moſes name, to proue thoſe mariages laweſull, whiche were made not after the pleaſure of menne, but by the commaundement and ordinaunce of God himſelfe: alſo it is neceſſarye that God himſelfe ſhould agree with himſelfe. This therefore was their ſnare, if God will in time to come gather the faithfull into his kingdome, then will he reſtore vnto them that which he had giuen them in the worlde: therefore what ſhall become of that womanne, whom God had giuen to ſeauen men? So all the godleſſe and Heretikes doe frame their cauils, wherwith they could deforme the true doctrine of godlyneſſe, and make the ſeruauntes of Chriſt aſhamed: yea the Papiſtes endeuoring to entrappe vs as paſt all ſhame, doe openly ſcorne at God and his word. Therefore it is not without cauſe that Paule, Tit. 1. 9. would haue the doctor furniſhed with weapons, wherewith he may driue backe the enemies to the truth. As concerning this law, wherin GOD commaundeth the next kinſmen in bloud to succeede the dead in marriage, if the first should die without children, this was the reason, that the woman which was married into any family should receiue seede therof. This must not be vnderstoode of naturall brethren, but of cosines and such like: for it were incest to marry within the degrees forbidden by the law.

29. Yee are deceiued, not knowing the Scriptures. Though Christ speaketh to the Saduces, yet this reproofe doth generally belong to all deuisers of false doctrines. For sith God doth plainely shew himselfe vnto vs in the Scriptures, the ignaraunce of them is the fountaine and cause of all errours. But this is no small comfort to the godly, that they shalbe safe and out of the daunger of errour: so long as with an humble and modest desire to learne they shall seeke in the scriptures what is right and true.

Christes ioyning the power of God with his word, is to be referred to the circumstaunce of this present matter: because the resurrection far exceedeth the capacitie of mannes vnderstanding, it wil be incredible vnto vs, vntyll our mindes behold the great power of God, which is able to subdue all thinges to himselfe: as Paule teacheth, Phylippians, 3. 11. Further, it was necessary that the Sadduces should be deceiued: because they did falsly measure the glorye of the heauenly lyfe with the presente estate. Yet, in the meane season doe wee teache that they doe iudge and speake ryghtlye and wyselye of the misteries of the kyngdome of heauen, whyche doe ioyne the power of GOD togeather with the scriptures.

30. They are as the Aungelles of God. Hee meaneth not that the chyldren of God shalbe when they are rysen, in all thinges lyke vnto the angelles, but so farre as they shall be free from all infirmitie of this presente lyfe: as if he shoulde saye, that they were no more subiecte to the thinges which this transitory and corrupt life hath neede of. Luke dooth more plainely set forth the reason of the similitude, because they could not die againe: therefore they should not bring forth their fruite, as vpon earth. And he speaketh of the faythful onely, because there was no question of the reprobate. But it is demaunded why hee saith, that they shall then bee the sons of God, because they shalbe the children of the resurrection, sith the Lord doth vouchsafe this honour to his faithfull ones, though they be shutte vp in the pryson of the frayle body. And how should we bee the heires of eternall lyfe, if God shoulde not acknowledge vs nowe for children?

I aunswere, after we are grafted into the bodye of Christe by fayth, God adopteth vs for children, and the spirit is a witnesse, seale, marke & pledge of this adoption, so that in hope hereof wee may freely cry, Abba, Father, Rom. 8. 15. Gal. 4. 6. But though wee knowe that wee are the sonnes of God, yet because it doth not yet appeare what we shall be, vntill we be trasfigured, and see him in his glory, as he is, wee are not in effect accounted as sonnes. And though we be regenerate by the spirite of God, yet, because our lyfe is hidde as yet, the manifestation of the same shall make a true and perfect difference betweene vs and straungers. In this sense is our adoption deferd by Paule to the Rom. 8. 13. to the last daye.

LV. 37. And that the dead shall rise againe. After Christe had confuted that absurdity obiected against him, now he confirmeth the doctrine of the the laſt reſurrection by the teſtimonie of the Scripture. And wee muſte keepe this order, that the enemies of the trueth hauing their quarels anſwered, may vnderſtand that they ſtriue againſt the word of GOD. For vntill they be ouercome by the teſtimony of the ſcripture, they may alwaies murmurre and grudge. Chriſt citeth a place out of Moſes, beecauſe he had to doe with the Sadduces, who gaue but ſmall credit to the Prophetes, at the moſt they accounted no better of them, then we do of the booke of Eccleſiaſticus, or the hyſtory of the Machabes. Alſo ſeeing they alleadged Moſes, he had rather turne him backe againe vpon the, then to obiect any one of the Prophetes. Further, hee had not this purpoſe, to gather al the places of ſcripture that ſerued for this purpoſe: as we ſee the Apoſtles in lyke manner did not alwayes vſe all the teſtimonies that ſerued for the ſame matter. Yet Chriſt did not vnaduiſedlye make choiſe of this place before the reſt: but choſe it with great iudgement (though at the firſt ſight it ſeemeth to be hard:) becauſe the Iewes ſhould eſpecially account of that, and remember it: iith it declareth that the Lord did therefore reuenge them, becauſe they were the children of Abraham.

God ſaieth that he came thither to helpe the afflicted people: but hee addeth withall, that he acknowledged that people for his, in reſpecte of the adoption, and for the couenaunt made with Abraham. How commeth it to paſſe, that God ſhould haue regard rather of the dead, then of them which liue: but becauſe he gaue the greateſt honour to the fathers, with whome he had made his couenaunt? But how ſhould they be ſo excellent and honourable, if they were dead? This relation doth euidently ſet forth this matter alſo. For as there can be no father without childrē, nor a king without a people: ſo the Lord cannot properly be called god but of the lyuing. Chriſt doth not reaſō ſo much of the commō maner and phraſe of ſpeach, as of the promiſe which is included in theſe wordes. For the Lord dooth offer himſelfe of this condition to bee our God, that he might haue vs againe to be his people: which one thinge is ſufficient to ſtrengthen the hope of the ful and perfect bleſſednes. Hence came that ſaying of the Church ſet downe by the Prophet, Haba. 1. 12. Thou art our God of old, we ſhall not dye. Therefore when he promiſeth to ſaue all them, whoſe God he ſaieth he is: and this beeing ſpoken of Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob after their death, it followeth that there remaineth hope of life euen for the dead. If any man obiect that the ſoules maye lyue, though the bodyes riſe not againe: I aunſwered a litle beefore, that theſe two are ioyned togeather: beecauſe the ſoules beeinge not yet in their eſtate, doe aſpyre to the enheritaunce layde vppe for them.

38. For all liue vnto him. This manner of ſpeach is diuerſlye vſed in the Scriptures: but Chriſt here meaneth, that the faythfull doe lyue in heauen with God after they paſſe out of the world: as Paule to the Ro. 6. 10. ſaieth, that Chriſt after he was receiued into the heauenly glory, liueth to God: becauſe he is exempted from the infirmities and troubles of this tranſitory lyfe. But Chriſt doth purpoſely declare heere, that wee muſt not iudge of the life of the godly after the ſenſe of fleſh and bloud: beecauſe it is hydden in the ſecrete cuſtodye of God.

For

For if they be almoſt like vnto the dead, while they wãder in the world, much leſſe doth there appeare anye token of life in them after the death of the body. But God is faithful, ſo that beyond the capacity of men hee will keepe them aliue before him.

39. Then certeine of the Phariſes aunſwered. It is euident that they were all malitiouſly bent, but by the power of God was this confeſſion wreſted out of ſome of the Phariſes. Though they wiſhed that Chriſte myght haue beene ouercome, and haue beene put to ſilence with ſhame: yet becauſe they ſaw themſelues armed by his aunſwere againſt the contrarye faction, ambition cauſeth them to triumph at the victory gotten. It may be alſo that for enuy they would not haue Chriſt ouercome by the Saduces. But by Gods wonderfull prouidence it commeth to paſſe, that euen his greateſt enemies ſhould ſubſcribe to his doctrine. Their boldnes alſo was brydeled, not onely becauſe they ſaw Chriſt prepared to withſtand all their aſſaultes: but beecauſe they feared they ſhoulde haue the foyle with ſhame, as they had oft receiued before. Further, becauſe they were aſhamed, by ſilence they graunted him the victory: ſo that his credit encreaſed ſo much the more amongſt the people. And in Matthewes wordes that they wondred all at his doctrine, it is to be noted, that the doctrine of godlynes was at that time corrupted with ſo many corrupt and colde commentaries, that it might well bee accounted as a wonder, that the doctrine of the reſurrection was ſo readily and ſo aptly proued by the law.

Mat. 22.	Mark. 12	Luk. 10.
34. But when the Phariſes hadde heard that he had putte the Saduces to ſilence, they aſſembled togeather.	28. Then came one of the Scribes that had heard thẽ diſputing together, and perceiuing that he had anſwered them well, he asked him which is the firſt commandement of all?	25. Then beholde a certeine expounder of the lawe ſtoode vp, and tempted him, ſayinge, maiſter, what ſhall I doe, to enherite eternall lyfe.
35. And one of them which was an expounder of the lawe, asked him a queſtion, tempting him, and ſaying,	29. Ieſus aunſwered him, the firſt of all the commaundements is, heare Iſrael, the Lord our God is the onelye Lord.	26. And he ſayde vnto him, what is written in the lawe? how readeſt thou?
36. Maiſter, which is the great commaundement in the law?	30. Thou ſhalt therefore loue the Lord thy God with al thine heart, and with all thy ſoule, and with all thy minde, and with all thy ſtrength: this is the firſt commaundement.	27. And he aunſwered, and ſayd, thou ſhalt loue thy Lord God with al thine heart, and with all thy ſoule, and with all thy ſtrength, and with all thy thought, and thy neighbour as thy ſelfe.

And the ſecond is like: that is: thou ſhalt loue thy neighbour as thy ſelfe. There is none other commaundement*	28. Then hee ſaid vnto him, thou haſt anſwered right: this do, & thou ſhalt liue.

32. Then the Scribe saide vnto him, well maister, thou hast saide the trueth, that there is one God, and that there is none but he.
33 And to loue him with all the heart, and with all the vnderstanding, and with all the soule, and with al the strength, & to loue his neighbour as himself, is more then all burnt offrings and sacrifices.

theeues, and they robbed him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leauing him half dead.
31. And by chaunce there came down a certein priest that same way, and when hee saw him, hee passed by on the other side:
32 And likewise also a Leuit, when hee was come neere to the place, went and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.
33 Then a certeine Samaritan, as he iourneied, came neere vnto him, and when he saw him, he had compassion on him.
34. And went to him, and bound vp his woundes, and powred in oyle and wine, and putte him on his own beast, & brought him to an inne, and made promision for him.
35 And on the morowe, when he departed, hee tooke out two pence, and gaue them to the host, & said vnto him, take care of him, and whatsoeuer thou spendest more, when I come againe, I wil recompence thee.
36. Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour vnto him ꝑ fel amõg the theeues?
37. And he said, he that shewed mercy on him, thẽ said Iesus to him, goe, and doe thou likewise.

Though those thinges which Matthew in the 22. chapter, and Marke in the 12. doe reporte, haue onely something in them like to this hystory, and be not one: yet I haue chosen to set it down in this place, because that when Matthew and Marke doe say, that this was the last question, wherewith the Lord was tempted, Luke maketh no mention of that matter: And he seemeth to omit it of purpose: because that he hadde reported it other where. Yet I doe not saye that it is one and the same hystory: for Luke hath some thinges diuerse from the other two. They all agree in this, that a Scribe moued this question to tempt Christe. But hee whom Matthew and Mark do make report of, at the length departeth well affected: for he yeeldeth to Christes aunswere, and sheweth a token of a mild spirit apt to be taught. Note also that Christ likewise saith, that he is not far from the kingdome of heauen. But Luke bringeth in an obstinate man, swelled with pride, in whome there appeareth no token of repentaunce. And it may be sayde without absurditie, that this question of the true righteousnesse and obseruation of the lawe, and of the rule of good lyfe was ofte moued to Christ. But whether Luke reporteth this in an other place, or whether he pretermitted that other question (because that former history was sufficiet in respect of the doctrine) the likenesse of the doctrine seemeth to require, that I should confer the three Euangelists together.

Now it must bee considered what occasion moued this Scribe to aske this question of Christ: which was because he was an interpreter of the law, and was offended at the doctrine of the Gospel, because he thought that the authoritie of Moses was thereby diminished. But hee did it not so much of zeale to the law, as that hee tooke it disdainefully, that hys maister should lose any honour. Therefore hee demaundeth of Christe whether he would professe any thing more perfecte then the lawe. For though hee vttereth not this in wordes, yet his captious question tendeth to this, to bring Christ to be hated of the people. Further, Mathew and Marke doe not attribute this subtiltie to one man onely, but they do teach that the matter was done by agreement: and that one was chosen out of the whole company, who seemed to excell the reste in witte and learning. Luke also doth somewhat differ from Matthewe and Marke in the manner of mouing the question. For in him the Scribe demaundeth what men should doe to attaine eternall life: and in the other two, what is the greatest commaundement in the law. Yet it is to one end: for hee assaulteth Christ subtilly, so that if hee could draw any thing out of hys mouth that differed from the law, he might shake him vp as an Apostata, and an authour of wicked backsliding.

L V. 26. What is written in the law? He heareth another maner of aunswere of Christ, then he looked for. And Christe shewed no other rule of a holy & righteous life, thē that which was deliuered in the law of Moses: because that the chiefe perfection of righteousnesse is contayned vnder the perfect loue of God, and of our neighbours. Yet it muste be noted that Christ spake here of the meanes to obtaine saluation, according to the question that was moued to him. For he doth not plainely teach here as he doth otherwhere, how men shoulde come to eternall lyfe: but how they shoulde liue, that they might be accounted righteous before God. It is euident that the law teacheth men howe they shoulde frame theyr lyfe, to purchase their owne saluation before God. But that the law can do nothing but condemn, and is therfore called the doctrine of death, and is saide to encrease transgressions (Rom. 7. 13.) the fault is not in the doctrine, but in vs, because it is impossible for vs to performe that which he commaundeth. Therefore though no manne is iustified by the law: yet the law it selfe containeth the chiefe righteousnesse: for it doth not deceitfully promise saluation to them that follow the same, if any man doth fullye obserue whatsoeuer it commaundeth. Neyther should this manner of teaching seeme absurd to vs, that God should first require a righteousnes of workes, and shoulde after offer it freely without good workes: because it is necessarye for men to acknowledge theyr owne iust damnation, that they might be driuen to flye to the mercy of God. Therfore Paule dooth compare both the righteousnesses togeather (Rom. 10. 5.) that we might know that God iustificth vs freely, because cause we haue no righteousnesse of our owne. But Christ applyed himselfe in this aunswere to the Lawyer, and had respect to the manner of the question mooued. For he demaunded not whence they should seeke their saluation, but by what works it should be attained.

MAT. 38. Thou shalt loue the Lorde. Marke setteth downe a preface, and saieth that the God of Israel is the only Lord. In which words GOD would sette forth the authority of the law two wayes. For this should be both a sharpe spurre to stirre vs vp to worship God, while wee are certeinly perswaded that we worshippe the true maker of heauen & earth, for doubting dooth naturallye make vs slouthfull, and it dooth sweetely allure vs to loue him, because that hee adopteth vs of hys free grace to be his people. Therefore least the Iewes should be afrayde (as it commonly vseth to be in thinges that are doubtfull) they heare that the true and onely GOD prescribeth them this rule for them to liue by. And least that distrust should draw them backe, God commeth to them familiarly, and commendeth his free couenaunt vnto them. Yet notwithstanding it is not to be doubted, but that God would make himselfe known from all Idolles, least the Iewes should be drawne away, but should keepe themselues in the true worshyppe of him alone. But nowe if no vncerteinety canne hynder the miserable Idolaters from following their loue with a madde heate, what excuse shall the hearers of the Law haue, if they become slouthfull, when God hath reuealed himselfe vnto them? That then which followeth is a briefe summe of the lawe, which Moses also setteth downe. For when as the lawe was deuided into Tables, of the which the first commaundeth the worship of God, the seconde charitie, Moses gathered this summe well and wisely, that the Iewes might knowe what GOD required in euerye of the commaundementes. But though it is meete that GOD shoulde bee beloued farre otherwise then menne: yet it is not without cause that for worshyppe or honour God shoulde require vs to loue him: for by this meanes he declareth that no other worshyppe pleaseth him, then that which is done of a free wil. For he will yeelde himselfe to a ryght and true obedience to God, that loueth him.

Furthermore, because the wicked and corrupt affections of the flesshe do withdraw vs frō a right course, Moses declareth that our lyfe shal thē be well brought into order, when the loue of God shall possesse all our senses. Let vs therefore learne that the loue of GOD is the beginning of godlynes: for God refuseth al obedience of mē, which cōmeth of constraynte, and will be worshipped wyllingly and freely. Yet let vs learne that vnder the loue of GOD is noted the reuerence which is due vnto him. Moses addeth not the minde, but onelye maketh mention of the hearte, the soule and the strength. And though this partition into these foure partes is the fuller, yet it altereth not the sense. For when Moses would summarilye declare that God should be beloued perfectlye, and that what power soeuer is in men, should be imployed this waye, it was sufficient for him to adde strength to the soule & hart, and so to leaue no part of vs voyd or without the loue of God. Also we know that the Hebrewes do somtime note the mind by this word heart, especially where it is ioyned with this word soule. But I do not labour much to shew what the minde doth differ from the hearte aſwell in this place, as in that of Matthew, except that it ſignifieth a higher ſeate of reaſon, from whence all counſelles and thoughtes do proceede. But by this ſhort ſumme it appeareth that God in giuing the lawe and commaundementes reſpecteth not what men can doe, but what they ſhould doe. For it cannot be that the perfect loue of God ſhould reigne and rule in this infirmitie of the fleſh. For we know how all the ſenſes of our minde are bent to vanitie. Laſtly we do gather hereby that God doth not ſtay vpon the outwarde ſhew of works, but doth eſpecially ye require the inwarde affection, that good fruits may grow of a good roote.

39 The ſecond is like to this. He placeth loue and charity amongſt men in the ſecond place, beecauſe the worſhippe of GOD is firſte in order. And he ſaieth that the commaundement of louing the neighbours is like to the firſt: becauſe it dependeth of it. For ſith euerye manne is giuen to ſelfe loue, true charitie towardes our neighbours cannot be founde anye where, but where the loue of God reigneth. For the loue wherewith the children of the world doe loue one another is to bee bought and ſolde: for euery manne careth for his owne profitte. Againe, it is impoſsible that the loue of God ſhoulde reigne, but that brotherlye loue amongſte menne ſhould ſpring out of it.

Alſo, when Moſes commaundeth vs to loue our neighbours as our ſelues, hee woulde not ſet the loue of our ſelues firſt, that euerye manne might loue himſelfe firſte, and then his neighbours (as the Sorbonicall Sophiſters doe cauill, that the ruled is inferiour to his rule) but ſith wee are giuen too much to our ſelues, Moſes reprooueth this faulte, ſette our neighbours in equall degree with vs: as if hee ſhould forbid euerye man neglecting others, to haue care of himſelfe: becauſe that charitie ioyneth all into one body. And correcting ſelfe loue, which deuideth men aſunder, hee bringeth them all backe to a common ſocietie, and as it were to a mutuall embraceing one of another. VVhereby we gather that Paule doth not without cauſe call it the band of perfection, Coloſſ. 3. 14. and the fulfilling of the law, Romans, 13. 10: Becauſe that all the commaundementes of the ſecond Table ſhould be referred to it.

LV. 28. Doe this, and thou ſhalt lyue. I haue ſhewed ſomewhat beefore how this promiſe agreeth with the free iuſtification by fayth. For God doth not therefore iuſtifie vs freely by grace: becauſe the lawe doth not ſhewe and deſcribe a perfecte righteouſneſſe, but beecauſe that wee fayle in the obſeruation of the ſame: and therefore hee ſaieth, that wee cannot lyue by the ſame, beecauſe it is weake in our fleſſe. So that theſe two doe agree well togeather: the lawe teacheth howe menne ſhall bee iuſtified by workes, and that no manne ſhal be iuſtified by workes, beecauſe the want is not in the doctrine of the lawe but in men. Yet was it Chriſtes purpoſe to take awaye that obiection: becauſe he knew that the rude and vnlearned people murmured againſt him, as if that he ſhuld goe about to ouerthrowe the lawe, as it is the perpetuall rule of righteouſneſſe.

29. But he willing to iuſtifie himſelfe. This queſtion might ſeeme to ſerue nothing to the iuſtifying of man. But if we remember that which is ſaid other where, that mens hipocriſie is moſt found out in the ſecod table (for where

For preſently euen from the beginninge, Sathan endeuoured by all the meanes he coulde, to thruſt in ſome fained Chriſt, who ſhould not be the true mediatour betweene God and men. Becauſe that God had ſo often promiſed that Chriſte ſhoulde come of the ſeede or loynes of Dauid, this perſwaſion was ſo deepely ſetled in the hearts of all menne amongſt the Iewes, that they would neuer be drawen from this perſwaſion, to beleue that he ſhoulde not haue the nature of man. Therefore Sathan ſuffered them to acknowledge Chriſte to be very man, and the ſonne of Dauid, becauſe he ſhould haue tempted in vaine, to ouerthrow this article of the faith, but that which was worſe, he ſpoyled him of his Godheade, as if he ſhoulde bee ſome one of the ſonnes of Adam. And by this meanes the hope of the eternall life to come, and the ſpirituall righteouſneſſe was aboliſhed. But ſince that Chriſte came into the worlde, heritikes haue endeuoured by many engines or ſnares to ouerthrowe ſometime his manhoode, ſometime his Godheade, leaſt that hee ſhoulde haue full power to ſaue vs, or leaſt that we ſhoulde haue familiar acceſſe vnto hym. Further, ſith that the hower of death was now at hand, the Lorde himſelfe would make his Godheade knowen, that all the godly might without feare put their confidence in him. For if he were only man, it were neither lawfull to glory in him, nor to hope to be ſaued by him. Now we vnderſtand his purpoſe, that he ſhewed himſelfe to be the ſonne of God, not ſo much for his owne ſake, as that he might eſtabliſh our faith on his heauenly power. For as the infirmity of the fleſſhe, wherein he came neare to vs, maketh vs bolde to approche neare vnto him: ſo if that onely ſhoulde be before our eyes, it would rather fill vs with feare and deſperation, then make vs to be of good hope. Yet it is to be noted, that the Scribes are not reprehended, becauſe they taught that Chriſt ſhoulde be the ſonne of Dauid, but becauſe they imagined Chriſt to be meere manne, who ſhoulde come from heauen, to take vpon him the nature and perſon of a man. Neither doeth the Lord ſpeake theſe woordes expreſly of himſelfe: but he ſimply ſheweth that the Scribes were in a wicked errour, which only loked for a Redemer from the earth, and of the progenie of man. But thoughe it was an olde opinion amongſt them, yet we gather by Mathew, that they were asked before the people what they thought.

℣ 43. Howe then doeth Dauid in ſpirite. The ſaying of Chriſte that Dauid ſpake in ſpirit, is a forceable and vehement ſpeache. For he oppoſeth the propheſie of a thing to come, to the teſtimony of a thing preſent. For by this ſaying he preuenteth the cauill wherewith the Iewes doe flee away at this day. They ſay that the kingdom of Dauid was commended with this commendation, as if that God who had appoynted him to raigne, would riſe againſt the furious endeuours of his ennemies, and hee ſayeth they ſhall preuaile nothinge againſte the will of God. Leaſt the Scribes ſhould obiecte any ſuch thing, Chriſt ſayeth before, that the Pſalme was not made nor ſpoken of the perſon of Dauid, but was ſpoken by the ſpirite of propheſie, deſcribing the kingdom of Chriſt which was to come: ſo alſo it is eaſie to be prooued out of the text, that the words which are read in that place, can neither agree vnto Dauid, nor to any other earthly kings. For Dauid in that place doth bring in a king adorned with a newe prieſthoode, whereby it was neceſſary that the olde ſhadowes of the law ſhoulde be abrogated.

Nowe it is to be ſeene how he proueth that Chriſt ſhould be of greater excellency, then that he could be begotten of the ſeede of Dauid onely: Namely, becauſe that Dauid, who was the king and heade of the people, calleth him Lord. VVhereof it followeth, that in him there was ſomwhat more then a man. Yet the reaſon ſeemeth to be very weake & cold: becauſe it may be excepted, that when hee gaue this Pſalme to the people to be ſong, not hauing reſpect of his own perſō, he gaue Chriſt authority ouer others. But I doe take exception to the contrary, when as hee was one of the mēbers of the Church, there was nothing more vnlikely, then that he would depriue himſelfe of the common doctrine. Here he commandeth all the children of God to reioyce as it were with one voice, for that they ſhuld be ſafe vnder the defence of the heauenly and victorious king. If he ſhould be ſeparate from the body of the church, he coulde not be a pertaker of the ſaluation promiſed in Chriſt. If this were the ſpeach of a few, the kingdom of Chriſt ſhould not extend ſo farre as to Dauid. But nowe neither he, nor any other, can exempt himſelfe from his ſubiection, but that withall he muſt fal away from the hope of eternall ſaluation. Therfore ſith a better thing could not befall vnto Dauid, then to be comprehended within the compaſſe of the churche, he made this Pſalme aſwel for himſelf as for the reſt of the people. In ſum, by this title Chriſt is appoynted to be the chiefe and only king, that ſhould raigne ouer all the faithful. Neither may there be any exception admitted, but where the redemer is made gouernour of the churche, all men ſhould be brought to one order. VVherefore it is not to be douted but that Dauid would ſubmit himſelf to his gouernment, that he might be accounted amongſt the people of God. But now heere ariſeth an other queſtion: coulde not God haue raiſed vp ſome man whom he might haue made the redeemer, that might haue ben Dauids Lord, though he was his ſonne: For the ſubſtantiall name of God is not here ſet downe, but only Adonai, which is oftentimes giuen alſo to men. I anſwer, Chriſte taketh it for graunted, who is exempted from the number of men, & is exalted to that degre of honor, that he ſtuld be the chief head of the church, that he was not meere man, but alſo endued with the maieſty of God, for the eternall God who chalengeth this with an oth to himſelf alone, that euery knee ſhuld bow before him, Iſa. 45. 23. & 42. 8. He alſo ſweareth that he wil not giue his glory to another, Ro. 14. 11. And Paul ſayth, Phil. 2. 9. while Chriſt was made king, he hadde a name giuen him, which is aboue euery name, that before him euery knee ſhould bow. And though Paule had neuer ſpoken it, yet ſo it is, that Chriſt is therfore aboue Dauid & all other holy kings, becauſe that he is alſo aboue angels. VVhich could not befall to any man which is a creature, except the ſame were alſo G O D manifeſted in the fleſh. I graunt that he doeth not heere expreſly, and in woorde expreſſe his diuine power, but it maye eaſily bee gathered that hee is God, who is placed aboue all creatures.

44. The Lorde ſaid to my Lorde. The holy ghoſt beginneth here a triumphant ſong to al the godly, ſo that they might boldly ſtand againſt ſathan & all the wicked. and might laugh their madnes to ſcorne, for aſmuche as they goe about to throwe Chriſt out of his throne. Therefore, leaſt they ſhould be amaſed or afraid, when they ſhould ſee great ſtirres vppon the earth, they are commaunded to oppoſe the holy and inuiolable decree of God againſt all their endeuours to the contrary. Therfore the meaning is, though men become mad, yet what ſoeuer they dare attempt for the ouerthrow of the kingdom of Chriſt ſhalbe in vaine, becauſe that it ſtandeth not vpon the pleaſure of men, but is erected by god to ſtād for euer. Therfore, ſo oft as this kingdom is violently aſſaulted, let vs remēber this heauenly oracle: for certainly this promiſſe was laid vp in Chriſtes hand, that euery of the faithful might apply the ſame to their own profit. And God is neither variable nor deceittful to call backe that whiche hee hathe once ſpoken with his mouth. The ſitting alſo on the right hād, is metaphorically taken for the ſecond or next degree, which Gods vicar or deputy holdeth. VVherfore it ſignifieth aſmuch as to get great authority & power in the name of God: as we know that god committed theſe things to his only ſonne, that he might gouerne his church by his hande. So this ſpeache appoynteth not any place, but rather includeth both heauen and earth vnder the dominion of Chriſt. And God ſayth that Chriſt ſhall ſit vntil his enemies be ouerthrowne, to let vs vnderſtand that his kingdom cannot be vanquiſhed nor beaten downe, not that he ſhould be depriued of the power that is giuen him, when his ennemies are ouerthrowen: but becauſe that he ſhal ſtand ſound for euer, when al his enemies are fallen. Yet the eſtate of the kingdome which is ſeene at this day muſt be noted, leaſt we ſhould be troubled, when we ſee it aſſaulted on euery ſide.

God

1. Iesus spake to the multitude. This was a very profitable admonition, that amongst so many dissentions, and grudging contentions, amongest the troubled and confused estate of things, in the desolation of a right & lawfull gouernment, yet the authority of the woord of God shoulde remaine safe. For to this ende bent the purpose of Christe, least the people being offended with the sinnes of the Scribes, shoulde cast of all regarde and reuerence of the law. For we know how readily mennes mindes are bent to loath and despise the same. Especially, where the life of the pastours is dissolute, all men commonly fall to wantonnesse after theyr example, as if they had a graunt to doe it freely. The same also (nay somewhat woorse) falleth out in dissentions: for the greater part shaking off the yoake, powre foorth their lustes, and breake forth into extreme contempt. Furthermore, at that time the Scribes were euen enflamed wyth couetousnesse, they swelled with ambition, their extortiõs were knowne, their fearful cruelty and corruption of their liues were so great, that they seemed to haue conspired the ouerthrowe of the lawe. Moreouer, they had peruerted the right and naturall sense of the lawe, with their corrupt commentaries, so that Christe was compelled sharply to contende wyth them: because they were caried with a wonderfull madnesse to quenche the light of the truthe. Therefore, because it was to be feared least that many shoulde growe into contempt of all godlinesse, partly by reason of such corruptions, partly because of tumultuous contentions, Christ meeteth with them in good time, and sayth that it should be wickedly done, if for the corruptions of men, true religion should be beaten downe, and the law should be any thing the lesse regarded. Sith that the Scribes were moste obstinate ennemies againste the truthe, because they oppressed the Church with their tyranny, Christ was compelled to discouer their corruptions. For except that good and simple men had bene drawen out of their bondage, the gate had beene shutte vppe against the Gospel. There was also another reason: because the people thoughte that lawfull for them, which they sawe theyr rulers do, they made a law vnto themselues of their corrupt liues. But least any man should wreste those things which he should speake into a diuers sense, he vseth this speach before, what maner of men soeuer the doctours be, yet it is not meete that the woorde of God should receiue any blotte or blemishe because of their filthy liues, or that they should take the liberty to sinne of their wicked examples. And this wisedome must be diligently noted. For many while they take holde of one thing, that they might bring the vngodly and the wicked into hatred and infamie, doe with an vnaduised zeale mixe and confounde all things togither. For all discipline is despised, shame is troden downe: to be shorte, there remaineth no regard of honestie: yea; many become impudent, and doe of purpose spread abroade the sinnes of the Priestes, that they while they faigne themſelues to be great ſeruers of God, they doe openly deale vncharitably towardes their neighbours) and thereby it may be eaſily gathered that the Phariſe vſed this ſhift; that being couered vnder this falſe cloake and colour of holines, hee might not be brought foorth into the light. Therefore when hee perceiueth that the examination of his charitie would make againſt him, leaſt that he ſhuld be found a tranſgreſſour of the law hee ſeeketh ſtarting hoales in the name of a neighbour. And firſt we ſee that the Scribes had herein corrupted the law, becauſe they accounted none others for their neighbours, but they which were worthy of it. And thereof was that as a generall rule receiued amongſt them, that it was lawfull to hate their enemies. For this was one meanes that the hipocrits vſed to cleare themſelues of guiltines, to draw back as much as they could, leaſt their life ſhuld be brought to be iudged by the law.

30. Ieſus aunſwered. Chriſte might haue taught ſimply that the name of a neighbour doth generally belong to euerye manne, beecauſe that all mankinde is ioyned and knitte togeather with a certeine holy bande of fellowſhippe. And ſurely the Lord ſet downe this name in the lawe for no other cauſe, but that he might gently allure vs to loue one another. The commaundement had beene playner thus, Loue euery man as thy ſelfe: but becauſe that men are ſo blinded in their owne pride, that euery man lyketh ſo wel of himſelfe, that he ſcarſe thinketh others worthy of the lyke eſtate, but withdraweth their dueties from them, the Lorde therefore of purpoſe calleth all neighbours, that the affinity it ſelf might ioyne them together one to another. Therefore that any man may become our neighbour, it ſufficeth that hee is a man: for it is not in our power to blotte out that nature common to all. But the purpoſe of Chriſt was to drawe ſuch an aunſwere out of the Phariſee, as that hee myght thereby condemne himſelfe. For ſith that this maiſterly determination had taken place amongſt them, that no man is our neighbour, but hee which is our friend: if Chriſte had preciſely asked him the queſtion, at one word he would neuer haue graunted, that all menne are comprehended vnder this name neighbour: which he vrgeth him to confeſſe by the ſimilitude, which he bringeth forth. And the ſumme is, that the greateſt ſtraunger is our neighbour: beecauſe GOD hath ſo tyed all men togeather, that euery of them ſhoulde helpe others. Yet at the firſte hee doth properly rebuke the Iewes and Prieſtes, beecauſe that when they boaſted themſelues to bee the Sonnes of one Father, and that they were ſeparate from all other nations by a prieuledge of adoption, that they might be God his holye inheritaunce: yet they deſpyſed and had eache other in barbarous and beaſtly contempt, as if there were no neighbourhood betweene them. For it is not to be doubted but that Chriſte deſcribeth this cruell neglect of charitie, whereof they were guiltie. But, as I ſayde, this is the chiefe purpoſe, the neighbourhood which bindeth vs to doe each for other, is not tyed to friends or kinſefolkes, but to belong to al mankinde.

To proue this, Chriſt compareth the Samaritã to the prieſt & the Leuit. It is very well knowne howe the Iewes hated the Samaritanes with a mortal hatred: ſo that there was great diſcord euen amongſt them that dwelt neere together.

Now, saieth Christ, a Iewe, a citisen of Iericho, when as he iourneyed to Hierusalem, being wounded of theeues, was neglected aswell by the Leuite as by the Priest, which came by him, as hee lay halfe dead: but he was louingly prouided for by the Samaritan: and at the length hee asketh which of the three was neighbour to this Iew. This subtil Doctour could not shift away, but that he must preferre the Samaritan beefore the other two. For here may be seene, as in a glasse the felowshippe and neighbourhood of menne, which the Scribes endeuoured to wipe away with their wicked cauill. And the mercy which this enemy shewed to the Iewe, declareth by the direction and instruction of nature, that manne was made for mannes sake: whereof the mutual bond of neighbourhood amongste all menne is concluded. The Allegory whiche the patrons of free will doe coyne out of this place is so foolish, that it needeth not to be confuted. In their opinion the condition of Adam after his fall is described vnder this figure of the wounded manne. VVhereof they inferre that the power to doe well was not altogeather quenched in him: beecause it is sayde onely, that hee was halfe dead. As though that it should be Christes purpose to speake in this place of the corruption of mannes nature, and to shewe howe deadly or curable a wound Sathan gaue Adam: and as though hee sayde not plainelye, and without a figure, Iohn 5.25. All menne are dead, but they whom hee maketh aliue by his voice.

The other Allegory hath no more colour in it: which yet is so much accepted, as that it is receiued for an oracle almoste by all mennes allowaunce. They imagined this Samaritan to bee Christe, because hee is our keeper: they say that wine and oyle were powred into the wound, because that Christ healeth vs with repentance and the promise of grace. They haue forged a thyrde subtiltie, that Christe dooth not restore to health presently, but committeth vs to the Churche, as to an Inne keeper, to bee healed by litle and a litle. I graunte that euerye of these is very plausible: but the Scripture must bee more reuerenced, then to take this libertie thus to alter the sense of the same. But it is manifest to euery man, that these imaginations were deuised by curious men againste Christes minde.

MAT. 40. In these two commaundementes. Nowe I returne to Matthew, where Christe saieth, that all the lawe and the Prophetes dependeth vppon these two commaundementes: not that he would restraine the whole doctrine of the Scripture to this: but because that whatsoeuer is commaunded anye where of the rule of holye and righteous lyfe, shoulde be referred to these two heades. For Christe dooth not generallye declare what the lawe and the Prophetes doe containe: but in his speach hee saieth that nothinge elsse is requyred in the lawe and the Prophetes, but that euery manne should loue God and his neighbours: as if hee shoulde haue sayde, the summe of a godlye and vpright lyfe is contayned and included in the worshippe of GOD and loue of men: as Paule saieth, Romans, 13. 10. that loue is the fulfillinge of the lawe. VVherefore certeine ignoraunt people doe wickedly snatch at this saying of Christe: as if that wee shoulde search no further in the law and the Prophetes. For, as there is a difference betweene the promises and the commaundementes; so Christ doth not generallye declare in this place what what must be learned out of the word of God: but according to the circumstaunce of the matter he sheweth to what end all the commaundementes are directed: yet the free remission of sinnes, whereby wee are reconciled to God, the hope of calling vppon God, the marke of our enheritaunce to come, and all other partes of fayth, though they haue the highest place of the law, doe not depende vppon these two commaundementes. For it is one thing to demaunde that, which is due, and another thing to offer, that which wee want. Mark noteth the same thing in other wordes, that there is none other commaundement greater then these.

MAR. 32. Well Master, thou hast sayde the trueth. Onelye Mark maketh mention that the Scribe was humbled. And it is worthy to bee noted, that he which malitiously and deceitfully assaulted Christe, did not onely with silence giue place to the trueth, but hee subscribeth to Christe openly and freely. So we see that hee was not one of that sorte of enemies, whose obstinacie was incurable: for though they shoulde be ouercome a hundred tymes, yet they doe not cease to sette themselues against the trueth euery waye. But it is to bee gathered by this aunswere, that Christ did not precisely comprehend the rule of lyfe in two words onely: but as occasion was giuen, he enueighed against the feigned & counterfeit holynesse of the Scribes: who giuing themselues only to outward ceremonies, made no account almost of the spirituall worship of God: and there was no great reckoning of charity amongst them. And though the Scribe had some such corruptions: yet, as it commeth sometymes to passe, hee had conceiued the seede of true knowledge out of the Lawe, which laye hydde and smothered in his heart, and by reason heereof hee yeeldeth & suffereth himselfe to be reclaymed from that corrupt course. This yet seemeth not to fall out well, that the sacrifices, which are parte of the worshippe of God, and apperteine to the firste table of the law, should be lesse esteemed then charity towardes menne. The aunswer is, though the worshippe of God is farre more excellent and pretious then all the dueties of a ryghteous lyfe: yet the outwarde exercises of them are not of themselues of that value, as to ouerthrowe charitie. For wee knowe that charitie pleaseth GOD simplye and of it selfe, when as hee doth not regarde nor allowe of sacrifices but to an other ende. Note that hee speaketh heere of naked and vaine sacrifices: for Christ dooth oppose a faygned kynde of holynesse against true and sincere honestye.

The same doctrine is found also in diuerse places of the Prophets, that the hypocrites might know that the sacrifices are of no value, which are not offred in spirite and trueth: for God is not pleased with the sacrifices of beastes, where charitie is neglected.

34. Then, when Iesus sawe. It is vncerteine whether this Scrybe did profitte anye further afterwardes or no: but beecause hee sheweth himselfe apt to be taught, Christ reached his hande forth vnto him, and teacheth vs by his example to helpe them, in whome there appeareth some beeginning eyther of readinesse to be taught, or of right vnderstanding. For it seemeth that Christ said, that this Scribe was not farre from the kyngdome of heauen for two causes: namely, becaus he would yeeld to his duety, and did wisely discerne the outward profession of the worship of God, from the necessary dueties of neighbourhood. Further, Christe tolde him that hee was not farre from the kingdome of GOD, not so much to praise him, as to exhort him to goe forwarde, and in his person he encourageth vs al, that being once entred into the right way, we shuld goe the cheerefullier forward. By these wordes we are also taught, that many while they are yet in errour, doe yet with closed eyes come to the waye, and are by this meanes prepared, to runne in the race of the Lord when tyme shall serue. That which the Euangelistes doe saye that the mouthes of the aduersaries were stopt, so that they durste not tempte Christ any more, must not so be taken, as if they ceased and left of their obstinate frowardnes. For they fretted inwardly as wilde beastes vse to doe, when they are shutte vp in caues, or as fierce horses doe byte vppon the brydle. But the more they shewed themselues hard harted, and their rebellion not to be vanquished, the more notable triumph did Christ get vpon them both.

And this his victory must not a little encourage vs, neuer to bee amased in defending of the trueth, being sure of the successe. It shal come oft times to passe, that the enemies shall frowardlye lift vp themselues euen to the end: but God will bring it to passe at the length, that this madnesse shall fall vppon their own heades, and the trueth shall notwithstanding proceede with the victory.

41 VVhile the Pharises were gathered togeather, Iesus asked them.	35 And Iesus aunswered and saide, teaching in the Temple: How say the Scribes that Christe is the sonne of Dauid?	41 Then hee saide vnto them, howe saye they that Christ is Dauids sonne?
42. Saying, what thinke yee of Christ? whose Sonne is hee? They sayde vnto him Dauids.	36 For Dauid himself said by the holy Ghost, the Lorde said to my Lord, sitte at my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footestoole.	42 And Dauid himself saith in the booke of the psalmes, The Lorde saide vnto my Lord, sitte at my right hand,
43 Hee sayd vnto them, how then doth Dauid in spirite call him Lord, saying,	37 Then Dauid himselfe calleth him Lorde: by what meanes is he then his sonne? And much people heard him gladly.	43. Till I shal make thine enemies thy footestoole.
44 The Lorde saide to my Lord, sitte at my right hande, till I make thine enemies thy footestoole?		44 Seeing Dauid calleth him Lord, howe is hee then his sonne?
45 If then Dauid called him Lorde, howe is hee his sonne?
46 And none could answere him a word, neither durste anye from that daye forth aske him any moe questions.

42. VVhat thinke ye of Christ? Marke and Luke doe more plainly declare, why Christe asked this question: namelye, beecause the Scribes had this corrupt opinion amongst them, that the promised Redeemer should bee some one of the sonnes and successours of Dauid, who should not bring with him any thing more excellent then the nature of manne.

For

they might haue the better cloake for their ſinne. But Chriſt doeth inuey ſo againſt the Scribes, that firſt he deliuereth the law of God from contempt. Therefore wee muſt learne to vſe the ſame wiſedome, if we deſire that our reprehenſions ſhould do any good: yet againe it is good to note, that Chriſt was not afraid of offending any man: whereby he ſhoulde be kept from diſcouering thoſe vngodly Doctours, as they had deſerued. He onely helde this moderation, leaſt the woord of God ſhoulde grow into contempt through the wickednesſe of men. Further, to let vs vnderſtand that he ſpake of the ſinnes, and not to procure hatred to the perſonnes of men, but leaſt that infection ſhould ſpread further, Marke ſayeth expreſly, that he ſpake in his doctrine. By which words he declareth, that he wold haue the hearers profit by theſe admonitiõs, that they might take hede to themſelues. And though Luke ſemeth to reſtrain this to the diſciples, yet it is probable that he directeth this ſpeach generally to the whole multitude. The which doeth alſo more euidently appeare by Mathewe: and the matter it ſelfe required that Chriſt ſhoulde haue reſpecte to all men in generall.

2. They ſitte in Moſes ſeat. It is not without conſideration that I haue ſet that heere whiche Luke rehearſeth in another place. For beſides that it is the ſame doctrine, I doubt not but that Luke after he hadde ſaid that the Lorde had ſeuerely and hardly reproued the Scribes, he added alſo other reprehenſions, which Mathewe deferde to a proper place. For nowe we haue ſeene how the Euangeliſts haue placed diuers ſayings of Chriſt together, as occaſion required. But becauſe that Mathewe wryteth more at large, I will rather interpreat that which he wryteth. The Lorde in ſum exhorteth the faithfull, ſith the Scribes liued moſte wickedly, not to leade their life after their corrupt maners, but rather to frame it accordinge to the rule of the lawe, which they heare out of the mouthes of the Scribes. For it was neceſſary (as I touched euen nowe) that he ſhould reprehende many corruptions in them, leaſt they ſhoulde infecte the whole people. Therefore, leaſt their wickednesſe ſhould robbe away the force from the doctrine whereof they were miniſters and preachers, hee commaundeth the faithfull to attend to their wordes, but not to their deedes: As if that he ſhould haue ſayd, there is no cauſe why the euill examples of the paſtours ſhould hinder the children of God from liuinge well. Vnder the name of the Scribes are the Doctours or the interpreaters of the law noted, and it agreeth very well with the Hebrewe phraſe. And it is certaine that Luke calleth the ſame men lawyers. But the Lorde doeth eſpecially reproue thoſe Pharilies which wer of the number of the Scribes: becauſe that at that time this ſecte had the chiefe place in the gouernment of the Church, and in the interpretation of the ſcripture. For we ſheweo other where that when the Sadducees and the Eſſenes would be accoũted learned, according to the learned, the Phariſies followed an other maner of teaching deliuered vnto them from their elders, as it were from hande to hand, ſo that they would ſearche out more ſubtilly the myſticall ſenſe of the ſcripture. And thereof they had their name giuen them: for they are called Pheruſim as interpreaters. And though they had defiled the whole ſcripture with their inuentions: yet becauſe they gloried in that popular kinde, they had moſt authority in ſetting forth the worſhip of God, and the diſcipline of holy life. Therefore the ſentence muſt be reſolued thus:

the Phariſies & the reſt of the Scribes: or the Scribes amongſt whom the Pharilies haue the greateſt honor, are in their words, good maiſters of an vpright life: but in their vngodly dedes they teach you very yl: wherfore marke rather their mouthes then their hands. Now it is demanded whether we muſt obey what ſoeuer the doctors do cõmand without putting any differẽce. For it ſufficiently appeareth that the Scribes of that age had wickedly & vngodly corrupted the law with their vngodly fantaſies, & had laden the miſerable ſoules with vnrighteous lawes, & had defiled the worſhip of God with many ſuperſtitions, and Chriſt woulde haue their doctrine kept, as if that it were not lawful to reſiſt their tyranny. The anſwer is eaſie, he doeth not ſimply compare euery doctrine with their life: but this was Chriſtes purpoſe to put a difference betweene the holy law of God & their prophane works: for to ſit in Moſes chaire, is nothing els then to ſhew out of the law of God how they ſhould liue. And though I do not certainly know whẽce this maner of ſpeach is borowed, yet their cõiecture is probable which do refer it to the pulpit which Eſdras ſet vp, whẽce the law was red. Neh. 8. 4. And when the Rabbines would ſpeake of the ſcripture, they of the cõpany which were to ſpeake, aroſe in order. But it may be that the cuſtome was to read the law it ſelf out of a higher place. He therfore ſitteth in the chaire of Moſes, which commandeth not of himſelf, or of his owne iudgement, but of the authority and woord of God. Yet herewithal is noted a lawful calling: for Chriſt doeth therfore command that the Scribes ſhuld be heard, becauſe they were the publike teachers of the church. The papiſts which do giue lawes, think it inough to haue the title and the place: for to this ende doe they wreſt Chriſtes words, as if it were neceſſary for men to receiue obediently what ſoeuer the ordinary prelates of the church do cõmand. But this cauil is confuted againe & againe, in another cõmandement of Chriſtes, where he willeth to take heede of the leauen of the Phariſies. If by the authority of Chriſt it is not only lawful, but alſo behouefull to reiect what ſoeuer the Scribes do adde of their owne to the pure doctrine of the lawe: it is euident that what ſoeuer they pleaſe to cõmande, may not be receiued without choiſe & iudgement. Furthermore, if Chriſt wold haue tied their conſciences to the precepts of men, he had ſpokẽ falſly other where, ſaying that god was worſhipped in vain with the precepts of men. Heereby it appeareth, that chriſt exhorted the people that they ſhuld ſo far obey the Scribes, as they continued in the ſimple & pure interpretation of the law. For Aug. doth very wel & aptly according to the mind of Chriſt, expoũd the ſitting of the Scribes in Moſes chair, to be that they taught the lawe of God: and therfore the ſhepe ought to hear the voice of the ſhepherd by them as by men appoynted to that office. To the which words he preſently addeth, therfore God teacheth by them: but if they will teache their owne, heare them not, do not after them. In the treatiſe vpõ Ihon 46. To the which ſentence that which the ſame man ſaith in his 4. boke de doctrina Chriſtiana, anſweareth: Becauſe the good faithful men do not hear all men, but they hear God himſelf obediẽtly, therfore they are heard profitably, who alſo do profitably abſtain from thoſe things they ſhould not do. Therfore the chair not of the Scribes but of Moſes cõpelled them to teach good things yea though they did thoſe things which were not good. In their life they did their own works: but the chair which was none of theirs, ſuffred thẽ not to teach their owne doctrines.

4. For they binde burdens. He accuſeth not the Scribes,as if they ſhould tyrānically oppreſſe the ſoules with hard & vnrighteous lawes:for though they had brought in many ſuperfluous rites(as it appeareth by other places)yet Chriſt doth not touch that fault now:for he compareth true doctrine with a corrupt and diſſolute life. Alſo it is no maruel that the law of God is called a heauy burden,and hard to bee borne,and eſpecially in reſpect of our infirmity. But thogh the Scribes required nothing,but that which God had cōmanded:yet Chriſt doth here reproue their ſtrait and auſtere kind of teaching,which is cōmon with theſe proud hypocrites,ſo that they do imperiouſly require of others whatſoeuer is due to god:they are not to be entreated frō vrging others in their duelies,& they do flatteringly ſpare thēſelues,euen in thoſe things which they doe ſeuerely enioyne to others,& careleſly they giue themſelues to any thing. In which ſenſe Ezechiel reproueth them,for that they ruled with auſterity & power. For they which doe earneſtly feare God, though they endeuour to frame their diſciples to obey him ſincerely and perfectly, yet becauſe they are ſeuere,rather towards thēſelues then towards others, they are not ſo preciſe exactors:further,becauſe they know their own infirmity,they do louingly forgiue the weak. But none cā be imagined more bold or more cruel in cōmāding,then the blockiſh conteners of God:becauſe they care not for the difficulty of that,from the which they do exempt themſelues. VVherfore no man can orderly rule others,but he which firſt hath ruled himſelf. 5. All their werks they do. He had ſaid euen now that the Scribes liued far otherwiſe then they taught:but now he addeth,that if they had a ſhew of any good thing,euen that was but fained and toyiſhe:becauſe they had no other purpoſe but to pleaſe men and to glorye of thēſelues. And here he doeth ſecreately oppoſe the diſguiſed viſer of their workes which ſerue but for oſtentation againſt the ſtudy of godlineſſe and of a holy life. For a ſincere worſhipper of god wil neuer giue himſelf to theſe vainglorious boaſtings,wherwith the hypocrits are puffed vp:ſo he doth not only reprooue ambit on in the Scribes and the Phariſies: but ſith the Lord had condemned the tranſgreſsion and contempt of the law of god in their whole life,leaſt they ſhould obiect their fained holineſſe as a defence, he anſwereth it before it be obiected,that theſe things wherof they glory,are but friuolous trifles,& not to be accounted of,becauſe ther raigned nothing in them,but mere boaſting. Afterward he bringeth foorth one kind wherby ſuch ambition was eaſily knowen,for that euen in the hems of their garmēts they wold ſhew before the eies of mē that thei wer good obſeruers of the law. For to what end wer the borders of their garments broder,& their philacteries excēding the common cuſtome of the people,but to make a vaine ſhew? The Lord had commanded the Iewes to weare certaine choyſe ſentences,both in their forhead and vppon their garments:for becauſe that man woulde eaſily forget the lawe,therefore the Lord would that his people ſhould thus be put in minde therof. And therefore were they alſo commaunded to wryte ſuch ſentences vpon the poſtes of their houſes, that whether ſoeuer they turned their eyes, they might preſently haue ſome godly admonition. But what did the Scribes? They wore the commaundements of God more gorgeouſly wroughte vppon their garments,that they might differ from the reſt of the people. And in this their glorious boaſting,their filthy ambition was beyrayed.

Bus-

But hereby we do alſo learne, how wiſe men are,to adde their own vain fantaſies,to the ende they might couer their owne ſinnes vnder ſome colour and cloake of vertues:as in this,that they wreſt to ſerue their hypocriſie,thoſe exerciſes of godlineſſe which God commaunded. There was nothing more profitable then to exerciſe all the ſenſes in meditating of the lawe: neither was that commaunded of the Lord in vaine. But they were ſo farre from profiting by ſuch inſtructions, that they put a perfect righteouſnes in the decking of their garments,and deſpiſed the law in al their life. For the lawe of the Lord coulde not more reprochefully be derided,then when as in a ſtagelike habite they woulde faine to keepe the ſame,and woulde call to be the keepers of it perſons prepared to playe a comedy. That which Marke and Luke do ſpeake of the robes,doth tend to the ſame ende: for we know that the people of the Eaſt vſed long garments euery wher,which faſhion they alſo kepe at this day. But it appeareth by Zach. 13.4.that the prophets had a certain kind of cloke wherby they wer diſtinguiſhed frō the reſt of the people. And it was not without a cauſe,that the teachers ſhuld be ſo apparelled, that there might be more grauity and modeſty in their apparell,then in the common ſort. But the Scribes had wickedly turned that to ſerue their pleaſure and pomp. The which example the popiſh ſacrificers wreſted to ſerue them,whoſe robes appeare to be nothing elſe but badges and tokens of their proud tyrannie.

6. And they loue the chiefe roumes. He proueth by manifeſt ſignes,that the Scribes had no deſire of godlineſſe in them,but were altogither giuen to ambition. For none do deſire the chiefe roumes,and the chiefe ſeates,but they which had rather to be proudly extold amongſt men,then to be approued of God. But Chriſt doeth condemne this eſpecially in them, that they defired to be called maſters. For though the name Rabbi ſignified of it ſelf excellency,yet it was growen at that time into ſuch an vſe amongſt the Iewes, that they called the maſters and teachers of the lawe by that name. But Chriſt ſayeth that this honour belongeth not to any manne, but to himſelfe alone: whereof it followeth, that it can not be giuen to men without doing iniury to him. But this ſeemeth to be too harde and abſurde,ſith that Chriſt doeth not teache vs now by himſelfe,but ordaineth and ſetteth maſters ouer vs: and it were a follye to take away the name from them,to whom he giueth the office. Yea,when hee was conuerſant vpon the earth,he ordained Apoſtles which ſhould go and teach in his name. If that the queſtion be of the title,Paul certainly would not haue gloryed in that which hee vſurped by doing iniurie and ſacriledge to Chriſt,when hee called himſelfe the maiſter and doctour of the Gentiles, 1. Tim. 2. 7. But becauſe that Chriſtes purpoſe was to bring al from the leaſt to the greateſt into order, that euery one might haue his owne right,there is no cauſe why any manne ſhould ſtriue about the woorde. Therfore Chriſt regardeth not how they be called, which diſcharge the office of teaching,but he tieth them within their bondes, leaſt they ſhuld raigne ouer the faith of the brethren. For this diſtinction muſt alwayes be holden,that Chriſt onely muſt be obeyed,becauſe the voyce of the father ſpake from heauen of him onely.

Heare him. And the doctours muſt be his miniſters, ſo as he may be heard in them,and they may be maſters vnder him,becauſe that they ſupply his roume.

roume. The ſumme is, that he may haue his authority wholely to himſelfe, and that no mortall man ſhould take the leaſt part of it away from him. So he is the onely paſtour: but yet hee admitteth many paſtours vnder him, ſo that he only may be aboue all, and may gouerne the churche by them. So the cõtrary muſt be noted: for becauſe that we are brethren, no man muſt ſtriue to vſe maſterſhippe ouer others. And ſo it followeth, that ſuch maſterſhip as doth not violate brotherly felowſhip amõgſt the godly, is not condemned. To be ſhort, heere is nothing els commaunded, but that all men ſhould depend of Chriſtes mouth only. Paul reaſoneth almoſt after the ſame maner, when hee ſayeth that we are forbidden to iudge raſhly one of an other, becauſe we are all brethren, and we all ſhall appeare before the iudgement ſeat of Chriſt. Rom. 14. 10.

9. And call no man your father. He chalengeth the honour of a father to God alone, almoſt in the ſame ſenſe, in which he ſayd euen nowe that he was the onely maiſter. For men tooke not this name to themſelues, but it was graunted them by God. VVherefore it is not only lawfull to call them our fathers vppon earth, but it is a wicked thing to depriue them of that honour. Neither is that diſtinction whiche ſome doe make, to any purpoſe, that menne which doe begette children, are fathers accordinge to the fleſh: but that God onely is the father of the ſpirites. I graunte that God is ſo diſtinguiſhed ſometime from men (as to the Hebrewes 12. 9.) but ſith Paule doeth often call himſelfe a ſpirituall father, 1. Corrinthians 4. 15. and to the Philippians 2. 22. it muſt be ſeene howe that agreeth with the woordes of Chriſte. Therefore this is the true meaninge, the honour of a father is giuen wrongfully to men, if the glory of God be thereby darkened. And that doeth come to paſſe ſo oft as mortal man will be accounted a father of himſelfe without God, when as all degrees of kinred doe depende of God alone through Chriſt, and they doe ſo agree amongeſt themſelues, that God is properly the onely father of all menne. So the former ſentence of the maiſterſhippe of Chriſte is againe rehearſed the ſeconde time, that we might know this to be the lawful order, if God alone doe rule and enioy a fatherly right and authority ouer all menne: and Chriſt woulde haue all menne ſubiecte, and become diſciples to his doctrine. As it is ſayde other where, that Chriſte is the onely head of the Churche, Epheſ. 1. 22. becauſe that it is meete that the whole body be ſubiect and obedient to him.

11. But he that is the greateſt amongeſt you. In this ſentence he declareth that he doeth not Sophiſtically quarrell about woordes, but hath rather reſpecte to the matter: leaſt any manne forgetfull of his eſtate, ſhould take vppon him more then is meete. Therefore he ſayeth that the greateſt dignity in the Churche is not to rule, but to miniſter. VVho ſoeuer keepeth himſelfe in this meaſure, robbeth neither God nor Chriſte of any thing, what title ſoeuer he haue. So againe that authority whiche derogateth from the maiſterſhippe of Chriſte, doeth pretende the title of a ſeruaunt in vaine. For what profiteth it the Pope when hee hath oppreſſed poore ſoules with tyrannous lawes, to call himſelfe the ſeruaunt of the ſeruants of God, but that he might openly riſe vppe againſt God, and opprobrioufly laugh menne to ſcorne?

But as Chriſte doeth not ſtande vppon woordes, ſo hee gaue this preciſe commaundement to his Diſciples, that they ſhould not aſpire nor deſire to clime higher, that they may equally maintaine a brotherly fellowſhip vnder the heauenly Father: and that they which do excell in honour, ſhoulde become ſeruaunts to others. Hee addeth that notable ſentence whych is expounded in an other place. He that exalteth hymſelfe, ſhall be brought lowe, &c.

Mathew 23.	Mar. 12.	Luke 11.
13. VVo therfore be vnto you Scribes & Phariſies, hypocrites, becauſe ye ſhut vp the kingdome of heauen before menne: for yee your ſelues gee not in, neither ſuffer yee them that would enter, to come in. 14. VVoe be vnto you Scribes and Phariſies, hypocrites: for yee deuoure widowes houſes, euen vnder a colour of long prayer, wherefore yee ſhall receiue the greater damnation. 15. VVoe bee vnto you Scribes and Phariſies, hypocrites: for yee compaſſe sea and lande to make one of your profeſſion: and when hee is made, yee make him two folde more the childe of hell, then you your ſelues.	40. VVhich deuoure widowes houſes, euen vnder a colour of longe prayers. Theſe ſhall receiue the greater damnation.	52 VVoe be to you interpreaters of the lawe: for yee haue taken away the key of knowledge: yee entred not in youre ſelues: and them that came in, yee forbade. Luke 20. 47. which deuour widows houſes, euen vnder a coloure of longe prayinges: theſe ſhal receiue greater damnation.

Hee inueigheth yet more ſharpely againſte them, and hee doeth it not ſo muche for their cauſe, as that he might call backe the common and ſimple people from their ſecte. For though we ſee the vengeance of God againſt the reprobate propoſed oft times in the ſcripture, that they might be the more inexcuſable: yet vnder the perſonne of them, the children of GOD doe receiue profitable admonitions, leaſt they ſhoulde intangle themſelues in the ſame ſnares of wickedneſſe, but that they ſhoulde beware of the like deſtruction. For when the Scribes hauing ouerthrowne the woorſhippe of GOD, and corrupted the doctrine of godlineſſe, woulde beare no correction, and in a deſperate madneſſe oppoſed themſelues (to the deſtruction of themſelues and the whole people) againſte the redemption profered, it was meete that they ſhoulde be made odious and deteſtable to all menne. Thoughe Chriſte did not ſo muche reſpecte what they hadde deſerued, as what was profitable for the rude and vnlearned people. For his will was, at the ende of his life, to leaue ſome ſolemne teſtimonie, that no manne might but he which wittingly and willingly woulde, be deceiued by thoſe vngodly knaues. And wee knowe what a hinderaunce the fooliſh reuerence of the falſe teachers was to the ſimple, leaſt they ſhoulde bee deliuered from errours. The Iewes were then defiled with falſe doctrine, yea they hadde drunke vppe many ſuperſtitions euen from their infancie. Sith it was a difficult and hard matter of it ſelfe to drawe them backe into the way, they were moſte hindered by a prepoſterous opinion whiche they hadde conceiued of the falſe teachers, for that they thought the falſe teachers to bee the lawfull paſtours ſtours of the Churche, the chiefe maiſters of the woorſhippe of G O D, and pillers of godlineſſe. Adde alſo, that they were ſo bewitched, that they coulde ſcarce be drawen from thence, but by a violent feare. Therfore Chriſte denounceth the horrible iudgement of God againſte them, not that hee might heale the Scribes, but that hee might driue the reſt by feare from their deceitfull practiſes. As at this day wee are enforced to thunder the ſharplyer againſte the Popiſhe clergie, not for any other cauſe, but that they which are apte to bee taught, and not altogither caſt awaye, ſhoulde giue eare to their ſaluation, and being ſmitten wyth the iudgement of G O D, ſhoulde breake thoſe deadly ſuperſtitious ſnares wherein they are holden priſonners. VVhereof it may be gathered, that their tender daintineſſe is crueltie, whiche are troubled with our earneſt vehemencie. It diſpleaſeth them that the wolues ſhoulde bee ſo ſharpely and hardly handled, whiche doe daily ſeeke to kill and to deuoure the ſheepe: and yet they ſee the miſerable ſheepe deceiued with a vain pomp, caſt themſelues willingly into the wolues iawes, except the Paſtour who deſireth that they ſhoulde be ſafe, and endeuoureth to deliuer them from deſtruction, ſhoulde driue them away wyth a loude crying voice. Therefore the purpoſe of Chriſte muſt bee remembered, that we after hys example might ſeuerely threaten thoſe wicked deceiuers, & cry out aloud againſt them: that who ſoeuer are curable might flee from them for feare of deſtruction. For thoughe the ennemies of the truthe doe not profitte thereby, yet they muſt be cited to the tribunall ſeat of God, and others muſt be warned, that the ſame curſſe is ready to fall vppon them, if they depart not ſpeedily from that wicked company.

13. You ſhutte vppe the kingdome of heauen. Chriſt pronounceth a curſſe againſt them, becauſe they peruerte their office to the generall deſtruction of all the people. For ſith the gouernment of the Churche was in theyr handes, they ſhoulde haue beene as porters of the kingdome of heauen. For where vnto belongeth religion and ſacred doctrine, but to open the heauens for vs? For we knowe that all mankinde is baniſhed from God, and ſhutte out of the inheritance of eternall ſaluation. And the doctrine of godlineſſe, is as the gate whereby we enter into life, therfore the ſcripture ſayeth Metaphorically, that the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, are giuen to the paſtours: as I haue ſhewed more at large in the ſixteenth Chapter. And this definition muſt be remembered, which is more plainly deliuered in Lukes woordes, where Chriſte vpbraideth the Lawyers, becauſe they tooke away the key of knowledge: Namelye, becauſe that they being the keepers of the lawe of God, defrauded the people of the true vnderſtanding of the ſame.

Therefore, as at this daye the keyes of the kingdome of heauen are committed to the paſtours, that they ſhoulde admitte the faithfull into eternall lyfe, and ſhould driue the vnfaithfull from all hope of the ſame: ſo in times paſt was the ſame office committed to the Prieſts and Scribes vnder the lawe.

Further, by the woorde knowledge we doe gather howe fooliſhly the Papiſtes doe make theyr fantaſticall keyes: as if it were a certaine magicall power without the woorde of G O D. For Chriſt ſayeth that none ſcanne vſe theſe keyes, but they whiche are minyſters of the woorde.

If any manne wil obiecte, that the Phariſies, though they were corrupt interpreaters of the lawe, hadde yet the keyes: I anſweare, thoughe they were committed vnto them in reſpecte of their office, yet they were ſo ouerwhelmed with malice & deceit, that there remained no vſe of them. Therefore Chriſte ſayeth that they had taken away, or ſtolne away the key of knowledge, wherewith they ſhould haue opened the gate of heauen. As at this day heauen is ſhut vp in Popery againſt the miſerable people, while the porters (at the leaſt they to whome this charge was cõmitted) doe by their tyranny hinder the opening of the ſame. So that vnleſſe we were very blocks, we would not willingly giue our hands to vngodly tyrants, who do cruelly hinder vs from entring into life.

14. For ye deuoure. Nowe he proceedeth further. For he doth not only lay open their ſinnes, which were woorthy of hatred and deteſtation, but alſo he diſcoucreth their fained and diſſembled vertues wherewith they deceiued the people. If any man wold ſay, that it was not nedeful to reprooue thoſe thinges, the example whereof were not hurtfull, it muſt be remembred, that the ſaluation of them coulde not otherwiſe be prouided for, which were intangled in the errours of the Scribes, except they ſhuld altogither depart from them. This cauſe therefore compelled Chriſte to ſpeake againſt their vaine ſhewe of holineſſe, which was the nurſſe of ſuperſtitions. Therefore he ſayeth in ſumme, that euen there where they ſeemed to doe well, they did wickedly abuſe the pretence of religion. There was ſome ſigne of rare godlines in their long prayers: for the holier a man is, the more he is giuen to the exerciſe of prayer. But Chriſte ſayeth that the Scribes and Phariſies are ſo wicked, that they coulde not vſe the chiefe part of religion without ſinne: for their cuſtome to pray was for filthy gaine ſake. For they ſolde their prayers as hired labourers doe their daies workes. VVhereof we doe alſo gather that he doeth not preciſely forbidde long prayers, as if the thing it ſelfe were ſinfull (eſpecially ſith it behoueth the paſtours of the church to be much bent to prayer:) but this corruption is cõdemned, that a thing which of it ſelf is commendable, ſhould be turned to a wicked ende. For where as gaine is gotten by ſetting prayers out to hire, the more feruent (as they ſay) and deuout they ſeeme to be, the more is the name of God prophaned. But becauſe the mindes of the people had bene wrongfully perſwaded a longe time, Chriſt doth therfore threaten them the ſharplier. For the pollution of ſo holy a thing could not be any ſmall fault. And it is no maruell that they eſpecially went about to entrap widowes: for ſith ſimple women were bent to ſuperſtition, it was alwaies a common matter for lewd men to make their gaine of them. So Paule obiecteth againſt the falſe teachers of his time, that they ledde captiue ſimple women laden wyth ſinnes, 2. Tim. 3. 6.

15. For yee compaſſe ſea and lande. The Scribes had gotten them fauour by this their zeale, for that they labored to bring ſtrangers and the vncircũciſed to the Iewiſh religion. And ſo if they had gotten any man by theyr ſwete perſwations or any other ſubtilty, they triumphed wonderfully as though the church were encreaſed. For this cauſe alſo had they much allowance of the cõmon people, for that by their induſtry & the power of God they had brought ſtrangers to the Church. But Chriſt ſayeth to the contrary, that they are ſo far from being worthy of praiſe for their labor that they rather prouoke the vengeance of God thereby more and more againſt themſelues: for they draw them which ioyne themſelues to theyr ſecte, into a greater deſtruction. For it muſt be noted how corrupt the eſtate, and howe confuſed religion was at that time: for as it was a notable woorke and a godly, to bring diſciples to God: ſo to bring the Gentiles to the Iewiſh religion (which was at that time degenerate and ſtuffed full of wicked prophanations) was nothinge elſe but to drawe them out of Scylla into Charybdis. Furthermore, by their ſacrilegious abuſing of the name of God, they prouoked the greater vengeance againſt themſelues, for that by reaſon of religion they tooke the greater libertie to ſinne. The like example may be ſeene at this day amongeſt the Monkes, for they doe buſily ſcrape togither Proſelites from all places: but ſuche as of wantons, and of men of a wicked life they do make very deuils. For ſuch is the corruption of thoſe dennes wherein they keepe their Bacchus bankets, as woulde corrupt euen the Angels of heauen. Yet euery kinde of the Monkes apparrell, is a fit couer for their ſinnes.

16. VVoe be to you blinde guides, which ſay: whoſoeuer ſweareth by the Temple, it is nothinge: but whoſoeuer ſweareth by the golde of the temple, hee offendeth.
17. Ye fooles and blinde, whither is greater, the gold or the temple that ſanctifieth the golde?
18. And whoſoeuer ſweareth by the altar, it is nothing: but whoſoeuer ſweareth by the offering that is vppon it, offendeth.
19. Yee fooles and blinde, whether is greater, the offering, or the altar which ſanctifieth the offering?
20. VVhoſoeuer therefore ſweareth by the altar, ſweareth by it, and by all things thereon.
21. And whoſoeuer ſweareth by the temple, ſweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein.
22. And hee that ſweareth by heauen, ſweareth by the throne of God, and by him that ſitteth thereon.

16. VVoe be to you blinde guides. As ambition is almoſte alwayes ioyned with hypocriſie, ſo the couetouſneſſe and extortion of the paſtours is woont to nouriſh the ſuperſtitions of the people. The world doeth willingly runne into errours: yea, it doeth as it were procure it ſelfe to be deceiued and beguiled euery way: but then doe falſe and corrupt woorſhippings take place amongeſt them, when the chiefe maiſters of religion doe confirme them. And it commeth to paſſe for the moſt parte, that the gouernours doe not only fauour thoſe errours by winking at them, but they doe rather kindle them, and ſette them the more on fire wyth their bellowes, becauſe they ſee them gainful for them. So we ſee in Poperie, that when the ſacrificers doe gape for gaine, ſuperſtition encreaſeth many wayes: for they doe yet daily deuiſe many things wherewith they might the more bewitche the ſimple multitude.

And when Sathan hath once darkened their eyes with his miſts, there is nothing ſo abſurd or monſtrous that they wil not receiue euen with gredines. Hereof it came to paſſe that the Iewes gaue more reuerẽce to the golde of the temple, and to the holy offrings, then to the temple or to the aultar. But the holines of the offrings depended vpon the temple and the aultar, and this was only a meaner addition to the ſame. And it is to be ſuppoſed that the Scribes and Prieſts were the authors of this fanſie: for it was a very fitte way for to gette them gain. But the errour was no leſſe daungerous then fooliſh, becauſe that it caried the people to groſſe imaginations. There is not any thing more eaſie then for menne to fal away from the true worſhippe of God. VVith the helpe therefore of this faile, it was an eaſie matter for ſathan to drawe them altogither awaye from God, who already were bent more then was meete to fooliſhe imaginations. This is the reaſon why Chriſt doth ſo ſharply rebuke that errour. And yet the papiſtes were not aſhamed to abuſe the holy name of God more ſhamefully then ſo. For a cruſt of vinowed bread, was more accoũted of amongeſt them, then the holy booke of both the teſtaments: or elſe to lift vp the handes to heauen. So by this meanes ther was broughte in a fleſhly worſhipping of God, which by little and little blotted out all true feare of him.

It is nothing. He doeth not meane by this word that all honour was taken away from the temple: but hee ſpeaketh by the way of compariſon. For when they extold their oblations more then was meete, the common people was drawn into ſuch a reuerence of them, that the maieſty of the temple and the aultar was not accounted of, and they made leſſe conſcience of prophaning the ſame with periuries, then to ſweare vnreuerently by the holy offerings.

18. And whoſoeuer ſweareth by the aultar. The Lord doth that heere, which was meete to be done in reprooving of errours, in this that he calleth vs backe to the fountaine, and teacheth vs by the nature of an oth, that the temple doeth farre excell their offrings. Therfore he taketh that principle, that it is not lawfull to ſweare but by the name of God, whereof it followeth, that what maner of othes ſoeuer menne ſhal deuiſe, God will haue his honour referued to himſelfe alone. VVhereof it is to be gathered againe, how and in what reſpect it is lawful to ſweare by the temple: namely, becauſe it is the ſeat and ſanctuary of God: as by heauen, becauſe the glory of God doeth ſhine there. For in ſuche outwarde tokens of his preſence, the Lorde ſuffereth himſelfe to be called to be a witneſſe and a iudge, ſo that he may reſerue his owne righte ſafe vnto himſelfe. For it were ſinfull idolatrie to imagine that heauen had a Godhead. Nowe, the more token God hath ſette of his glory in the temple, then in offerings, the more reuerence and eſtimation doth the name of the temple deſerue. Nowe therefore we doe vnderſtand in what ſenſe Chriſte ſayeth, that in ſwearing by heauen, he that dwelleth in heauen is ſworne by, for that he would direct all maner of othes to their lawfull ende and purpoſe.

Mathew 23.

23. Woe bee to you Scribes and Pharisies, hypocrites: for yee tithe Minte, and Anise, and Commin, and leaue the weightier matters of the lawe, as iudgement, and mercy, and fidelitie. These ought ye to haue done, and not to haue lefte the other.

24. Yee blinde guides, whiche straine out a gnatte, and swallowe a camel.

25. Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisies and hypocrites: for yee make cleane the vtter side of the cuppe, and of the platter: but within they are full of briberye and excesse.

26. Thou blinde Pharise, cleanse first the inside of the cuppe and platter, that the outside of them may be cleane also.

27. Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisies, hypocrites: for yee are like vnto whyted tombes, which appeare beautifull outwarde, but are within full of deade bones, and of all filthinesse.

28. So are yee also: for outward ye appeare righteous vnto menne, but within yee are full of hypocrisie and iniquitie.

Marke.

Luke 11.

42. But woe be to you Pharisies: for yee tithe the Mint and the Rewe, and all maner of herbes, and passe ouer iudgement and the loue of God: these ought yee to haue done, and not to haue left the other vndone.

A little after.

44. Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisies, hypocrites: for ye are as graues which appeare not, and the men whiche walke ouer them, perceiue not.

Christ reproueth that fault in the Scribes, which all hypocrites haue: for they are very diligent and carefull in small matters, and they neglecte the greater poyntes of the lawe. This disease raigned almoste in all ages, and in all nations, so that the greater sorte of the people thought lightly to please God with some small obseruation. And because they coulde not exempt themselues wholely from all obedience, they flee to this seconde remedy, that they might redeeme their hainous offences with satisfactions of no value. So we see the Papists at this day, when they transgresse the greatest commaundements, they are very earnest to satisfie him with colde ceremonies. Therefore Christ now reproueth such dissimulation in the Scribes, who were very diligent and scrupulous in payinge their tythes, and little regarded the chiefe poyntes of the lawe. Further, that he might the rather make their vile ostentation to be loathed, he doeth not say that they payed tithes of all thinges, but of Mint, Anise seede, and as Luke sayth, of all maner of herbs: that with a little cost they might make a shewe of a rare desire of godlinesse. Yet because that Christe putte the chiefe righteousnesse of the lawe in mercy, iudgement and faith, we must first see what he meaneth by these woordes: then why he omitted the cõmaundements of the first table, which doe properly pertaine to the worshippe of God, as if godlinesse were inferiour to charitie. Iudgement is taken for equitie or vpright dealing, whereby it commeth to passe that euery manne hath that giuen him which is his owne, and that no manne should defraud or hurt others.

But mercy extendeth further, as that euery man ſhoulde endeuour to helpe his brethren with that which hee hathe, to helpe the poore with counſell or goodes, to defend them which are vniuſtly oppreſſed, & with a good wil to employ that power he hath for their common good. Faith is nothing elſe but a ſincere ſimplicitie which attempteth nothing ſubtilly, malitiouſly, or through deceit: but ſeeketh that plaine dealing be mutually vſed amongeſt all menne, in euery thing wherein they haue to doe one with an other. And ſo charitie is accounted to be the ſumme of the lawe. I knowe that there are ſome which doe otherwiſe interpreate the woorde faith, as that by the figure Synecdoche it ſhould comprehend the whole woorſhippe of God: but Chriſte heere after his maner doeth diligently trie their holineſſe by their loue to their brethren, and therefore he toucheth not the firſt table at all.

And thoughe Luke putteth in the loue of God for faith, yet doeth it not make againſt this ſenſe: for it was the purpoſe of Chriſte, to ſhewe what the Lorde doeth eſpecially require of vs in the lawe. And it is well knowen that the lawe was deuided into two tables, that he might ſhew firſt what was due to the Lorde, and after what was due to menne. And Luke ſetteth downe both partes: as if Chriſt ſhould ſay, that the law did principally tende to this, that wee ſhoulde loue God, and be vprighte and mercifull towardes our neighbours, Mathewe was content with the one table onely, and it is no abſurdity to call the dueties of charity the chiefe poyntes of the lawe, ſith that Paule to the Romanes 13.10. calleth charitie it ſelfe the perfection of the lawe, as he ſayeth in another place that the lawe is fulfilled if we loue our neighbours. And Chriſt being demanded before of the commaundements of the lawe, onely rehearſeth theſe of the ſeconde table.

If any man wold obiect that by this meanes mē ſhuld be preferred before God, becauſe the charitie which is done to thē, is more accounted of then relygion, it is eaſily aunſwered: the ſecond Table of the lawe is not oppoſed here againſt the firſt, but he rather proueth by the obſeruation of the ſecond, whether their worſhip of God be true and from the heart. Becauſe that godlynes lyeth hidde within, and that God is not conuerſāt amongſt vs, to try our loue towards him, and needeth not our ſeruice, it is an eaſie matter for hypocrites to lye, and falſly to pretend the loue of God.

And becauſe the worke of brotherly charity may be ſeene and iudged of all men, their impudency is the better reproued by them. Chriſt therfore would not ſubtilly diſpute in this place of the ſeueral partes of righteouſnes, or of the order of them: but as the common capacity of menne could conceaue, he taught ſimply, that the law of God is then truely obſerued, when they behaue themſelues vprightly, louingly, and truely towardes each others: for ſo they doe witneſſe that they doe loue and reuerence God, and do ſhew forth a lawfull and fit teſtimony of ſincere godlynes. Not that it ſhall auaile to doe our duety towardes menne, except that God haue his due: but becauſe it dooth neceſſarily follow that he ſhould be a true worſhipper of GOD, which frameth hys lyfe after hys appoyntment. But yet the queſtion is not throughly aunſwered: for the tythes before the which Chriſte preferreth equitye and mercye, were a part of the worshippe of God, and some part of them was wont to be bestowed amongst the poore: so there was a double sacrifice in thē. I aunswere, he doth not simply compare here the tithes with almes and faith and iudgment: but the fained holynes of the Scribes with sincere and perfecte charitie. For why were they so ready and willing to paye tythes, but that they would please God with a small charge and trouble? For they were not bent to do it throughly. And therfore it might not be numbred amōgst the works of charity, because that in final matters they dissembled both with God and men.

23. These thinges you should haue done. It is an aunswere wherwith Christ preuenteth their quarrel. For they might haue ouerthwartly quarrelled at his speach, as if he should make no accounte of that, which was commaunded in the law of God. Therefore he graunteth, that what things soeuer God hath commaunded must be obserued, and not any thinge of the same omitted: but the loue of the whole law is no impediment, to hinder them from obeying the chiefe poyntes. VVhereof hee gathereth that they deale preposterously, which busie themselues in small matters, when they should rather beginne at the chiefest, for the tithes were but an addition to the law. Therefore Christ saieth, that it was not his mind to derogate from the authoritie of the least commaundementes, though he commendeth and requireth an order in the obseruation of the lawe. The whole law therefore remaineth sound, which cannot be broken in any poynt without the contempt of the Authour. for he which hath forbidden to commit whoredome, and to kill, and to steale, hath also condemned all concupiscence. VVherby we gather that al the commaundements are so knit togither, that it is not lawfull to disceuer the one from the other. VVherfore it is also wrytten: Cursed is he that doeth not all things that are wrytten. In which wordes the whole righteousnes of the law is sanctified without exception: but this regard, as we saide, taketh not away the difference betweene the commaundementes, nor the purpose of the law: whereto the true obseruers of the same doe direct their minde, least they should onely play with the outward shew.

24. Yee blinde guides. It is a prouerbe, which doth well set forth the vile scrupulositie of hypocrites in small matters. For at smal sinnes they tremble, as if they had rather die an hundred deathes, then fall into one such transgression: but in most grieuous sinnes they doe fauourably flatter themselues and others. Therefore they doe asmuch, as if a man shoulde straine at a crumme of bread, and swallow downe a whole loafe. VVee know that a gnat is a small creature, and a camell a great beast: nothing therefore is more ridiculous then to straine wine or water, least thou shouldest hurt the iawes with swallowing vp a gnat, but carelesly suppe vp a camell. But it is manifest that hypocrites doe dally with such toyes: for when they passe by iudgment, mercy & faith, and neglect the whole law, they are very austere and sharpe in matters of no great weight. And when by this meanes they would seeme to kisse Gods feete, they do disdainfully spit in his face.

25. Yee make cleane the outward side. The Lord prosecuteth the same sentence, and after this manner, as in a figure, he reproueth the Scribes, because that they did only regard this to be accounted of before men. For by the outward side of the platter, he doth metaphorically note the outward shew. As if that he should say, you haue no regard of any cleannes, but of that which is to the outward appearaunce: euen like as if any man should diligently wipe away the filth from the outward side of the cup, and should leaue the inside filthy. This is a borrowed manner of speach, as it appeareth by the seconde parte of the sentence, where the inwarde filthines is condemned, and that becausse they were inwardly full of intemperaunce and rapine. Therefore he reproueth their hypocrisie, becausse they only sought to frame their liues to the eyes of men, that they might get themselues the reporte and vaine fame of holynes. Therefore he calleth them backe to a pure and sincere desire to liue wel. Make cleane, saith he, first that which is within: for it were a ridiculous thing to feede the eyes with outward cleannes, and to drink of a cuppe foule with dregges, or filthy by other means.

27. You are like to whited tombes. Here is an other similitude, but it tendeth to the same ende. For hee compareth them to tombes, which the menne of the worlde doe ambitiously make fayre and gorgeous for themselues. Therefore as the painting and pargeting of tombes draweth mennes eyes to looke vppon them, when as they are full of dead carkases within: so Christe saieth, that hypocrites doe deceiue with the outwarde shewe, becausse they are full of fraud and wickednesse. Luke vseth other wordes, as that they deceiue mennes eies, as the graues which they do not often perceyue, which walke ouer them: yet the meaning of them both is one, for vnder the pretence of feigned holynesse there laye filthynes hydden, which they nourished in their heartes: euen as the marble tombe, beecause it maketh a fayre and pleasaunt shewe, couereth the filthines of the carkases, least it should offend them that passe that way. Vvhereby we gather that which I sayde before, that Christ puld of their paynted visor, that he might helpe the simple and vnlearned people, who the Scribes through dissimulation kept in bondage vnder them. For this admonition was profitable to the simple, that they might the speedilyer withdraw themselues out of the iawes of the wolues. Yet this doctrine containeth a generall doctrine, that the children of God should not so much desire to be seene, as to be pure.

35. That vppon you may come all the righteous bloud that was shed vppon the earth, from the bloud of Abell the righteous, vnto the bloud of Zacharias, the son of Barachias, whom yee slew betweene the temple and the altar.
36. Verely I saye vnto you, all these things shal come vpon this generation.
37 Ierusalem, Ierusalem, which killest the Prophetes, and stonest them which are sent to thee, how often would I haue gathered thy children together, as the hen gathereth her chickens vnder her wynges, and ye would not.
38 Behold your habitation shall be left vnto you desolate.
39 For I say vnto you, yee shall not see me henceforth, till that ye say, blessed is he that commeth in the name of the Lord.
50 That the bloud of all the prophets shed from the foundation of the worlde, may be required of this generation.
51 From the bloud of Abel vnto the bloud of Zacharias, whiche was slaine betweene the altar and the temple: verely I saye vnto you, it shall be required of this generation.

Luke. 13.

34 O Ierusalem, Ierusalem, which killest the Prophetes, and stonest them that are sent to thee, how often would I haue gathered thy children together, as the henne gathereth her broode vnder her wings, & ye would not.
35 Behold, your house is left vnto you desolate: and verely I tell you: yee shall not see me, vntill the time come, that yee shall saye, blessed is hee that commeth in the name of the Lord.

Luke. 11.

53 And as hee said these thinges vnto them, the Scribes and Pharises began to vrge him sore, and to prouoke him to speake of manye things:
54 Laying waite for him, and seekinge to catch some thinge of his mouth, whereby they might accuse him.

29. For you buylde the tombes. Some doe wrongfully thinke that he reproued the Scribes of superstition, because that they preposterously honoured the Prophets, which are dead, with sumptuous Sepulchres, as the Papistes nowe doe giue the honour due to God to dead Saintes, and do wickedly worshippe their images. They were not at that time so blinde nor so madde: wherefore Christ had another purpose. The Scribes also by this dissimulation gatte themselues credit amõgst the vnlearned people, and amongste all the Iewes, beecause that they reuerently esteemed the memory of the Propheres. For when they in this manner feigned to maintain their doctrin, euery man would haue thought that they had beene faithful followers, and most earneſt and zealous keepers of the worshippe of God. Therfore it was a thing very plausible, to build the monumentes of the Prophetes: for by this meanes religion was puld as it were out of darkenesse, to be honoured.

But

But they meant nothing leſſe then to reſtore the doctrine, which might ſeeme to haue ben ouerthrown by the death of the Prophets. But though they were ſtraungers and moſt cruel enemies of the doctrine of the prophetes, yet being dead they honoured them with ſepulchres, as it that they maintained one cauſe with them. And this is the manner of hypocrites, to honour the holy miniſters of God and pure teachers after theyr death, whom they could not abide in their life. And this commeth not onely of common corruption (which Horace noteth in theſe wordes, of enuie we hate vertue when it is preſent, and ſeeke for it, when it is taken away:) but becauſe the dead aſſes doe not trouble them any more with ſharpe and ſeuere rebukes, they doe willingly make a vaine ſhew of religion in worſhipping of them, at whoſe wordes and ſpeach they hadde beene almoſt mad. For this diſſimulation, to deſire to worſhippe the dumbe, is not much to be regarded. So all the Prophetes in their tyme were contumelioufly reiected, and much troubled of the Iewes, yea, and they were oft times moſt cruelly ſlaine: And the poſteritie which came after them, being nothing better then their fathers, rather reuerenced the memory of them as in a ſhadow, then imbraced their doctrine: for that they hated that as much as their teachers. For as the world, becauſe it dareth not deſpiſe God altogeather, or at the leaſt to ariſe againſt him altogether, inuenteth this ſubtill deuiſe, to worſhippe a ſhadow of GOD for God: ſo it vſeth the like mockery with the Prophetes. Whereof there is too plaine experience in Popery: for they beeing not contente with the lawfull reuerence of the Apoſtles and Martyres, doe worſhippe them as Gods: and what honours ſoeuer they doe heape vppe togeather, they do not thinke that they doe exceede meaſure: yet by their raging againſt the faithfull, they doe declare how they would worſhippe the Apoſtles and Martires, if they were aliue at this day, and ſhoulde doe their office they did in times paſt. For why are they ſo outragious againſt vs, but becauſe we deſire that the doctrine which the Apoſtles and Martyres ſealed with their bloud might be receiued and flouriſh.

Further, ſith the holye ſeruauntes of God eſteemed it more pretious then their owne life, would they ſpare theyr life, which doe ſo outragiouſly perſecute the doctrine? Therefore let them adorne the Images of Saintes with incenſe, candelles, flowers, and with all kinde of pompes at theyr pleaſure: if Peter were now aliue, they would teare him in peeces, they would ouerthrow Paule with ſtones: if Chriſt himſelf liued yet in the world, they would roaſt him with a ſmall fire. And becauſe the Lord ſaw the Scribes and ſacrificers of his time, ſeeke to be prayſed of the people, as holy worſhippers of the Prophetes, he reproueth them for deceitfull dealing, becauſe they doe not onely refuſe the Prophets, which were preſently ſent vnto them, but they doe cruelly trouble them. And therein doth their vile diſſimulation and groſſe impudency bewraye it ſelfe, while they deſire to ſeeme religious in worſhipping of the dead, and labour to ouerthrow them that are aliue.

30. If we had beene in the dayes of our fathers. Chriſt ſpake not this in vaine. For though he doe not accuſe them in the perſon of their Fathers, nor doth impute it as a faulte to them, for that they were murtherers chyldren: yet he doth by the way reproue their vaine boaſting, becauſe they vſed to glory of their kinred, who yet were the offſpring of bloudy enemies mies of GOD. The sentence therefore must bee expounded thus. The worship which you doto the Prophetes which are dead,is as you think, a sacrifice for your fathers sinnes. Therefore I doe nowe conclude this, that you doe glory in vaine of a holy kinred,when you come of vngodly and wicked parentes. Goe now and couer your wickednes with their godlynes,whose hands you confesse were defiled with innocent bloud. But you commit a farre greater offence: for the sacrilegious madnes of your fathers,which you doe condemne in the sepulchres of the dead,you doe follow in murthering them that liue. VVherefore he concludeth at the length,that in this matter they were not degenerate from their fathers: as if that he should haue sayde, your nation doth not begin nowe to rage against the Prophetes of God: for this is an olde order, this custome was vsed of the fathers: to be short,this manner of dealing is as it were planted in you. But hee doth not commaund them to doe, as they doe,as to kill the holy teachers,but he dooth figuratiuely declare that by right of enheritaunce they doe arise against the seruauntes of God, and haue lybertie giuen them to oppresse the trueth: for by this meanes they fulfill the wickednesse whiche was wanting in their fathers, and they weaue vp the webbe,which they beganne. And in these wordes hee doth not onely say that they are past hope,and such as cannot bee brought againe to their right minde: but hee admonisheth the simple,that it is no meruaile if the Prophetes of God be euill handled by murtherers children.

33. O generation of vipers. After that Christ hath shewed that the Scribs are not onely wicked enemies of godlye doctrine and faithlesse corruptours of the worshippe of God,but also deadly plagues of the Church: he making an end of his speach,inueigheth more sharpely against them, as it is necessary that hypocrits should be violētly shaken or driuen from their dainties, and drawne as it were before the tribunall seate of God, that they might be terrified: yet Christ had not onelye respect vnto thē, but his purpose was to make all the people afraide, that all might beeware of the like destruction. But how hard and intollerable these sharpe wordes were to these reuerend masters,may bee gathered by this, that their gouernment had now bene peaceably setled to them by longe custome,so that no man durst murmur against them. And without doubt many were offended at this freedome of Christ his words, they were so bitter: and he was accounted very froward and immodeste, for that hee durst speake so reproachfully of the order of the Scribes, as at this daye many dainty men cannot abide to heare any thing spoken sharply of the Popish cleargy. But because that Christ had to doe with most vile hypocrites,which were not onelye puft vp with a disdainefull contempte of God,and were drunken with a vaine confidence in them selues, but they had bewitched the common people with their vaine shewes, therefore it was necessary that he should deale the vehementlyer against them: therfore he calleth them serpentes as well in nature as in manners: then hee pronounceth a vengance against them, which they shal not escape except they repent speedily.

34. Therefore behold I send. Luke setteth it downe somewhat plainelier, VVherefore the wisdome of God also sayd, which some interpreters doe expound thus, I which am the eternall wisdome of God doe pronounce of you.

Yee

Yet I doe rather allow that God ſhoulde ſpeake this vnder the perſon of his wiſdome, after the vſuall manner of the ſcripture: ſo the ſenſe ſhould be this, God hath ſpoken of you beefore in the ſpirite of propheſie what ſhould come to paſſe. I graunt that the very wordes of this ſentence are not read in any place: but becauſe that God dooth euery where reproue the vntamed frowardneſſe of this people, Chriſte maketh as it were a briefe collection, and ſheweth more plainely in this, mouing the Lord to ſpeake againe, what the iudgment of God was, of the incurable wickedneſſe of this nation. For it might ſeeme a wonder, if the teachers hadde done nothing worthy the noting, why the Lorde would tyre them out ſpidily. For ſo men doe reaſon, God loſeth his labour, when hee ſendeth his word to the reprobate, whom he knoweth to bee obſtinate. And the hypocrites doe hope that God is merciſull and fauourable to them, becauſe they had dayly preachers of the heauenly doctrine amongſt them, as though this onely were ſufficient, that the outward worde was preached amongſt them, though they would neuer learne any thing therby. So the Iewes made great boaſt of themſelues, that they farre excelled all other nations in this their hauing of Prophetes and doctours: as if they had deſerued ſo great an honor, and that this had bene an euident ſigne of their dignitie.

Chriſt that he might beate downe this their fooliſh arrogancye, doth not onely ſay, that they are no better then other nations, beecauſe that God hath vouchſafed to ſend Prophetes and notable interpreters of hys wiſdome vnto them: but he proueth that this grace being abuſed, ſhalbe their greater rebuke, and the more to theyr deſtruction: for the purpoſe of GOD was farre otherwyſe then they imagined: namelye, that hee might make them the more inexcuſable, and that the heape of their wicked malice might be brought to the full height: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, you doe verye fondlye and fooliſhlye pretende this as an honour to you that God hath ſent you Prophetes. For God hath determined another thing in his ſecrete iudgment, that by this continuall courſe of calling of them ſo louingly, he might openly diſcouer your wicked obſtinacy: and that he might when he hath brought the ſame to paſſe, deſtroy the children and the fathers togeather. As concerning the wordes, the ſentence in Matthew wanteth ſomewhat, the ſenſe whereof muſt be ſupplied out of Lukes wordes.

He numbreth the Scribes and the wiſe men with the Prophetes, that he might amplifie and ſet forth the grace of God. VVhereby their vnthankfulneſſe dooth the more appeare: that when GOD had omitted no meanes that might ſerue for their deſtruction, yet it preuailed nothing. Luke for the Scribes and wiſe menne placeth the Apoſtles, but the ſenſe is all one. This place doth alſo teach, that God dooth not alwayes ſaue menne ſo oft as he ſendeth his word vnto them: but his will is that it ſhall be preached to the reprobate, whom he knoweth to be obſtinate, that it might be vnto them a ſauour of death vnto death. The word of GOD, is of it ſelfe and of the owne nature holſome, and calleth all menne generallye to the hope of eternall life: but becauſe that all menne are not moued inwardlye, neyther dooth GOD open the eares of all menne: to be ſhort, becauſe that all menne are not renewed by repentaunce, nor brought to obedience: whosoeuer doe refuse the worde of God, doe by their vnbeliefe turne it to their destruction and make it deadly to them. VVhen God knoweth before that it shall come so to passe, he doth purposely send his Prophets vnto them, that he may cast the reprobate headlong into the greater destruction: as hee declareth more at large, Isay, 6. 10. I graunt that this agreeth not with the reason of manne, as we see the wicked contemners of God, doe take a iolly occasion to barke out, that God, as some cruell tyrant, should delight himselfe in the greater destruction of menne, whom without hope of profiting, he doth wittinglye and willingly blinde and harden more and more. But God doth by such instructions teach the faythfull modestie. Therefore let vs learne this sobrietie, fearefully to reuerence that which passeth our vnderstanding. They which doe say that the foreknowledge of God is no hinderaunce, but that the vnbeleeuers may bee saued, they doe fondly excuse God with a vaine defence.

I graunt that the reprobate doe not seeke their owne death, beecause that God foresawe that it should be so, and therefore their destruction cannot be ascribed to his foreknowledge: but I say that the righteousnesse of God is not thus rightly defended, for it may be presently obiected, that it is in the power of GOD that they doe not repent, beecause that the gyfte of fayth and repentaunce is in his hand. This maye also be obiected, what the meaning of this should be, that GOD of sette and deliberate purpose appoynteth the light of his word to blinde men: why is he not contented simply with the destruction of them that are appointed to eternall death, but would haue them perish twise or thrise? There is no other aunswere to be made, but to giue this glory to the iudgementes of God, that we may cry with Paule, that it is a profounde and vnsearchable depth, Romanes, 11. 33. But it is demaunded howe GOD should say, that the prophesies were giuen to the Iewes for their destruction, when as his adoption did alwaies flourish effectually in that nation. I answere, when as onely a smal remnaunt embraced the worde by faith to saluation, he speaketh here of the greater nũber or of the whole bodye: as where Iesaias, 8. 61. foretelleth the generall destruction of that nation, hee is commaunded to seale vppe the lawe of God amongst the disciples. Therefore we must knowe, that as ofte as the Scripture iudgeth the Iewes to eternall death, the remnauntes are alwayes excepted, in whom the Lorde preserueth some seede, beecause of his owne free election.

31. That vppon you may come all the righteous bloud. Hee dooth not onelye take from them that which they wrongfully toke to themselues, but hee teacheth that the Prophetes were giuen them altogeather to an other end, that no age might be free from the sinne of rebelling against God. For the Pronowne you doth generallye comprehende the whole nation from their beginning. If any man would obiect that it agreeth not with the iudgement of God, that the children should be punished for the offences of the fathers: the answere is ready, sith they ioined with them togeather in that vngodly conspiracy, it must not seeme absurd, if God generally punishing all men, should cast the punishment due to the fathers into the bosome of the children.

Thes-

Therefore the account of perpetual contempte is iuſtlye exacted and required of the whole nation, and the puniſhment is laid vppon them at once, though ſome of them liued at one age, and others in another. For as God by the long continuance of his patience, ſtroue continually with the malice of the whole people, ſo the whole people is woorthily founde guilty of ſtubbornneſſe, which would not be amended, but continued euen to the laſt of it, and as all thoſe ages ſtewe their Prophets, as if they had agreed vpon the ſame, ſo it was meete that they ſhould be called to a generall iudgement, and that all thoſe ſlaughters which were done with one conſent, ſhould be reuenged vppon them all.

From the bloude of Abel. Thoughe Abel was not ſlaine by the Iewes, yet Chriſt imputeth his death vnto them, becauſe there was a certaine kinred of vngodlineſſe betweene them and Caine: otherwiſe that which he ſaieth coulde not agree, that the righteous bloude euen from the beginning of the worlde was ſhed by this generation. Caine therefore is accounted as the heade and the prince and author of the Iewiſh people, for ſince they began to kill the Prophets, they ſucceeded in his roume, whoſe ſteps they followed. Further, hee nameth Zachariah, not as if that he were the laſt martyr (for the Iewes made not an ende then of murthering the Prophets: but their boldneſſe and rage rather encreaſed therby, and their poſterities which followed them, made themſelues drūken with the blud which their fathers had only taſted:) neither yet for that his death were more famous and knowne, though the holye ſcripture reporteth the ſame: but there is an other reaſon, which is worthye to be noted, but the interpreters ſaw it not. VVhereby it came to paſſe, that they not onelye ſtaggared themſelues, but alſo entangled their readers with a troubleſome queſtion. For ſo Chriſt might ſeeme to haue bene forgetfull in making mention of this one ſlaughter, which had beene done of olde, and paſſeth an innumerable ſort of murthers, which were committed afterwarde vnder Manaſſe. Neyther did the Iewes ceaſe to perſecute good men at the time when they were lead into captiuity, yea, when they were now afflicted, we know how cruelly they raged againſt Ieremiah, 32.2. But the Lorde of ſet purpoſe did not vpbraide them for theſe late murthers, but rather choſe this which had beene done ſo long before (which was a beginning and fountaine of a wicked libertie, ſo that afterwarde they brake out into an vnbrideled crueltie) becauſe that it was moſt apt for his purpoſe. For this was the chiefe end of his purpoſe, as I ſhewed euen now, to proue that nation (ſith it ceaſed not from wickednes) guiltie of all thoſe murthers, which had bene committed long before. Therfore he doth not onelye pronounce vengeaunce againſte them for this preſent crueltie: but hee ſaieth that they ſhall yeelde a reckoninge for the bloud of Zachariah, as if their handes were yet wette with his bloud. Neyther is their opinion probable, which doe referre this to Zacharyah, who exhorted the people which were brought backe from the captiuitie of Babylon to buyld the Temple, whoſe Propheſies doe yet remaine. For though the tytle of the Booke declareth that hee was the Sonne of Barachias, yet we read not in any place that he was ſlaine. Further, that expoſition is wreſted, that he was ſlaine in the meane time betweene the building of the Altar and the Temple. But the ſcripture maketh mention of an other Zachariah the ſon Ieiada, which agreeth beſt with this place:

For,when after the death of his father true relygion decayed by the vngodly falling away of the king and the people,hee being moued by the ſpirite of God,reproued ſharpely their publike idolatrie : and therefore he was ſlayne in the court of the Temple. And it is no abſurditie to ſaye that his Father Ioiada hadde the name of Barachiah giuen him for honours ſake: for ſith in all his lyfe he was a defender of the true worſhip, hee might worthily be accounted the bleſſed of GOD. But whether Ioiada had two names,or whether there was a faulte in the word(as Hierome imagineth)the matter is not to be doubted of,but that Chriſt noteth that ſacrilegious ſtoning of Zachariah , whiche is recorded in the ſecond booke of the Chronicles,the 24.cha. verſe 22. The circumſtance of the place augmenteth the haynouſneſſe of the faulte: for that they regarded not the holyneſſe of the place. Further,the Temple is taken here for the court or porch,as in other places . The Altar of burnt offringes was neere to this place, that the Prieſte might offer the ſacrifices in the ſighte of the people . Therefore it appeareth that theyr madneſſe was too outragious,which the ſight of the Altar and Temple coulde not appeaſe , but that the Iewes woulde defile the holye place with horrible murther.

37. Ieruſalem,Ieruſalem. Chriſt declareth more euidently how iuſte a cauſe he had to be angry,that Ieruſalem,(which GOD had choſen for a ſactuary & a heauenly dwelling place)had not onely ſhewed it ſelfe vnworthy of ſo great honor, but was as a den of theeues and had acuſtomed nowe a long time to ſhedde the bloud of the Prophetes . Chriſte therefore with great affection cryeth out at ſo great a wonder, beecauſe that the holye citie of GOD was ſalne to that madneſſe , that it ſhoulde ſo lately endeuour to blotte out the wholſome doctrine of GOD with the bloud of the Prophetes. And therefore he rehearſed the name, beecauſe that ſo wonderfull and incredible wickedneſſe was worthy of no ſmall deteſtation.

And Chriſt dooth not reproue them for one murther or two, but hee ſaieth that the citie was growne into ſuch a cuſtome , that it ceaſed not to ſlaye the Prophetes,how many ſoeuer were ſent vnto them. For the Participle is putte in the place of an Epithite, as if Chriſte ſhoulde haue ſayde, thou which oughteſt to haue beene a faythful keeper of the word of GOD, the miſtreſſe of heauenly wiſdome, the light of the world,the fountaine of true doctrine,the ſeate of the worſhippe of GOD, an example of fayth and obedience,art become a murtherer of the Prophets : ſo that nowe thou haſte gotten a certeine habyt in ſucking theyr bloud. Therefore it dooth heereby appeare , that they which hadde ſo filthilye prophaned the ſanctuarie of GOD, were worthye of all kinde of reproaches.

It was Chriſtes purpoſe alſo,to meete with the offence which was at hande : leaſt the faythfull when they ſhoulde ſee him ſlayne at Ieruſalem without a cauſe,ſhoulde be troubled at the ſtraungeneſſe of ſuche a ſight . For they were nowe admoniſhed with theſe wordes, that it was no meruaile,if that citie which had beene accuſtomed to ſlaye or ſtone the Prophetes,ſhoulde cruellye ſlaye their Redeemer.But heereby it appeareth howe much it is conuenient to attribute to places. God had giuen ſuch notable ornamentes to no citie in the world,nor ſo honourablye exalted anye as this: yet wee ſee how vnthankfull it became. Now let the Pope compare the ſeate of hys theeuerye with that holye Citie: what ſhall hee finde worthye of the like honour? his hyred flatterers doe boaſt to vs, that fayth flouriſhed there in times paſt. If we ſhoulde graunt that to be true, if it appeare at this daye to be alienated & falne away from Chriſt through infidelytie, and that it is full of innumerable ſacrilegies, howe fondly doe they glorye that the honour of the ſupremacye is tyed vnto it? And lette vs rather learne by this example worthye to bee remembred, that the higher anye place is ſette by the great benefittes of GOD, and thereby exempted from other places aboutes, if it degenerate, it ſhall not onelye bee ſpoyled of thoſe ornamentes, but it ſhall bee ſo much more odious and execrable, beecauſe it hath filthily polluted the glory of God, by defiling the bewtie of his graces.

Howe ofte woulde I. It is rather a woorde of diſdaine then of compaſsion. Hee pittyeth as yet the citie it ſelfe, ouer the which hee had wepte a litle beefore, but hee dealte more hardlye and ſharpelye towardes the Scribes the auctHours of ſaluation, as they had deſerued. Neither dooth he ſpare the reſt, for that they were all faulty, allowers and companions of the ſame ſinne: but hee prouing all alike guiltie, inueigheth ſpecyallye againſt theyr leaders and guydes, which were the cauſe of all thoſe euilles.

Now the vehemencye of the ſpeach muſte bee noted. If the grace of GOD hadde beene ſimplye denied to Ieruſalem, theyr vnthankfulneſſe might ſo much the leſſe haue bin excuſed: but ſith God tried by louingneſſe and gentleneſſe to allure the Iewes vnto him, and preuayled nothing by ſo great gentleneſſe, the offence of their proud contempt was ſo much the greater. Heere is alſo to bee added theyr vntamed frowardneſſe: for GOD went not about to gather them once or twiſe, but continually tyme after tyme hee ſent vnto them diuerſe Prophetes, all which almoſt were refuſed for the moſt parte. Nowe wee vnderſtande why Chriſte in the perſon of GOD compareth himſelfe to a Henne: namelye, that hee might lay ſo much the more ſhame vppon this wicked nation, which had refuſed his ſweete and more then motherly e allurementes. And certeinly this was a wonderfull and incomparable token of loue, that hee diſdayned not to humble himſelfe euen to entreate them, that hee might ſo by that meanes bringe thoſe rebelles to obeye him.

The like reproofe almoſte is ſette downe by Moſes, Deuteronomye, 32.11. that God as an Eagle embraſeth the people with ſtretched out winges. And though God dooth not ſtretch out his winges in one ſort or manner to nouriſh that people, yet Chriſte dooth peculyarlye applye this manner of ſpeach, to this one thing: namely, that God ſent his Prophetes, to gather them which wandred and went e aſtray into the boſom of God. VVhereby hee declareth that the worde of God is neuer opened vnto vs, but that hee with a motherlye kindneſſe openeth his lappe vnto them: and not ſatiſfied therewith, hee woulde humble himſelfe to the ſimple affection of a Henne in nouriſhing her chickens. VVhereof it followeth that our crueltie is more then monſtrous, if wee will not ſuffer our ſelues to be gathered togeather by him. Certeinelye, if of the one parte wee could remember the fearefull maieſtie of G O D, and of the other our owne vile and baſe eſtate, we ſhuld be compeld for ſhame to ſtand amaſed at ſo great and wonderfull goodneſſe. For what meaneth this, that God ſhould humble himſelfe to farre for our ſakes: when hee taketh vppon him the perſon of a mother, hee humbleth himſelfe farre beneath his glory: how much further then, when hee becommeth like vnto a Henne, and vouchſafeth to account vs as his chickens? Further, if this was worthily obiected to the olde people, which lyued vnder the lawe, it dooth much more pertaine to vs. For though that was alwayes true, which I cited euen nowe out of Moſes, and alſo that thoſe complaintes are true, which are read in Iſaiah, 65. 2. that GOD hath daily ſpread out his armes in vaine to embrace a ſtiffe and rebellious people, that by ryſing early and taking daily care hee could preuaile nothing amongſt them: yet at this day hee calleth vs more familyarly and louingly vnto hym by his Sonne. VVherefore there remaineth a horrible vengeaunce for vs, ſo offt as he propoſeth the doctrine of the Goſpel, if that wee doe not willinglye hide our ſelues vnder his winges, with the which hee is ready to take and to couer vs. Yet Chriſt teacheth that al they ſhall reſt in ſafetie, which in obedience of faith doe gather themſelues to God: for vnder his wings they haue a fort, which cannot be ouerthrowne.

The other part alſo of the reproofe muſt be noted, that God was not preſently ſo moued with the peruerſe frowardnes of the olde people, as that it ſhoulde cauſe him to caſt awaye his fatherly loue and motherlye care, when as he ceaſed not continuallye to ſende Prophetes after Prophetes. As at this day, though hee hath too much experience of the wickedneſſe of the worlde, yet he continueth the courſe of his fauor. There is yet a further thing to be noted in theſe words: namely, that the Iewes fell from him, aſſoone as the Lorde hadde gathered them. Heereby we note by their falling away ſo ofte, that they reſted quietlye ſcarſe the ſpace of a moment vnder the winges of GOD, ſuch wildenes is ſeene at this daye in the worlde, and hath beene alſo in all ages: therefore it is neceſſarye that GOD ſhoulde call vnto him them that wander and goe aſtray.

But this is the moſt deſperate concluſion of wickedneſſe, when menne doe ſtubbornelye refuſe the goodneſſe of G O D, and refuſe to come vnder his winges. That alſo, which I ſayde beefore, that Chriſt ſpake in the perſonne of G OD, I interprete that this ſpeach dooth properly belonge to his eternall Godhead. For hee dooth not declare heere what hee beganne to doe, ſith hee was manifeſted in the fleſhe, but hee ſheweth howe carefull hee hath beene for the ſaluation of this people euen from the beginning. And wee knowe that the Church was ſo gouerned of G O D, that Chriſte gouerned it, as hee was the eternall wiſdome of God. In the which ſenſe Paule ſaieth not that G O D the Father, but that Chriſte hymſelfe was tempted in the deſarte, 1. Corin. 10. 9. This place is wreſted by cauillers for the proofe of free wyll, and to ouerthrowe the ſecrete predeſtination of G O D: but it is eaſily anſwered. They ſaye, the Lorde woulde gather all menne: therefore it is free for all menne to come, and their will dooth not depend of Gods election.

I aunſwere that the will of GOD, whereof there is mention made heere, is to be conſidered of the effecte. For when as by his woorde hee calleth all menne generallye to bee ſaued, and this is the ende of preaching, that all ſhould repoſe themſelues in his keepinge and fayth, it is righrlye ſayde, that hee woulde gather all menne vnto him. Therefore hee deſcribeth not heere the ſecrete counſell of GOD, but that wyll which is learned by the nature of the word. For he dooth not only call them by the outwarde voyce of manne, whome hee would gather effectually, but he draweth them inwardly by his ſpirit. If anye man ſhould obiecte that it were abſurd to imagine God to haue two willes: I aunſwere, we doe not beleeue otherwiſe, but that the will of GOD ſhould be one and ſimple: but becauſe that our mindes cannot reache the profounde depth of the ſecrete election, but according to the ſimplicitie of our capacitie the will of God is propoſed to vs two wayes. And I marualle at the frowarde heades of ſome, that are nothing offended at that humane affection, which is founde ſo oft in the Scripture, and will not admytte it in this place onelye. But beecauſe that I haue handled thys argument at large in another place, leaſt I ſhoulde be longer in a needleſſe matter, I onelye ſaye in a woorde, that aſſoone as the doctrine, whiche is the enſigne of vnitie, is broughte amongſte the people, GOD woulde gather all menne: whoſoeuer doe not come are inexcuſable.

37. And you would not. This may be referred aſwell to the whole nation, as to the Scribes: yet I do rather expound it of them, by whom that gathering togeather was moſte hindred. For Chriſt enueighed againſt them in the whole courſe of his ſpeach: and nowe when hee ſpake to Ieruſalem in the ſinguler number, it preſentlye appeareth that hee altered not the number without a cauſe. But there is a vehement oppoſition betweene the will of GOD and their vnwyllingneſſe: for it expreſſeth the deuilliſhe fury of men, which ſet themſelues to ſtriue againſt God.

38. Beholde your habitation shall be left. Hee foretelleth the deſtruction of the Temple, and the ouerthrow of the whole common wealth. For though they were defiled with vngodlines, wickedneſſe, and all manner of infamy: yet they were ſo blinded with a corrupte hope in outwarde worſhippe, and of the Temple, ſo that they thought God bounde vnto them. And they had this buckler alwayes readye: what? will God departe from this place, which he onely choſe vnto himſelfe alone in al the earth? If that he dwelleth amongſt vs, hee muſt of neceſsity reſtore vs at the length. To be ſhort, they held the Temple as a Forte vnuanquiſhable, as if they ſate in Gods lappe. But Chriſt proueth that they glorye of the preſence of God in vain, whom they had driuen from them by their ſinnes, and by calling it their houſe he ſheweth plainly that it is the houſe of God no more.

The temple of God was builded of this condition, that it might ceaſe to be the ſeate & place of God, at the comming of Chriſt: yet it ſhuld haue ſtoode as a notable monument of the perpetuall grace of God, if the ſin of the people had not prouoked the deſtruction of the ſame. This therefore was the horrible vengeaunce of God, that he not onely forſooke & would altogether ouerthrowe that place, which he had ſo royally and ſo-bewtifully adorned, but left it ſo as a note of extreame ignominye and ſhame to the end of the world. Now let the Romanes goe, and let them proceede in extolling their tower of Babilon in ſpite of God, when they ſee the temple of God built by the allowaunce and commaundement of God, ouerthrowne for the ſinnes of the people.

30. For I ſay vnto you. He confirmeth that which hee had ſpoken beefore, that the vengeaunce of God was neere at hand: and the only means to eſcape that deſtruction ſhould be taken from them. For that was the acceptable time, that was the day of ſaluation, ſo long as he whiche was come to bee their Redeemer was the witneſſe and preacher of the redemption which he brought. But at his departure the light of lyfe vaniſhed away, euen as if it were at the ſetting of the ſunne. VVherefore it was neceſſary that this miſerable deſtruction ſhould followe, which hee ſpeaketh of. Now it is demaunded what time is noted by this phraſe, vntill yee ſhall ſay. Some tye this to the laſt daye of iudgement: other ſome thinke that it is a propheſie of that whiche was fulfilled ſhortlye after. VVhen as ſome of the Iewes ſhould in humility worſhippe Chriſte. But I like neither of theſe interpretations, and certeinely I meruaile that learned men ſhould make ſuch a doubt at ſo light a matter, when they do ſo doubtfully demaund, how the vnfaythful ſhould ſay of Chriſt, Bleſſed is he which commeth, &c. For he dooth not declare what they ſhould become, but what hee himſelfe would doe. For that Abuerbe Vntyll extendeth no further, then to the time which goeth before. Ioſeph laye not with his wife vntill ſhe brought forth Chriſt. The Scripture doth not meane by theſe wordes, that they afterward came together as manne and wife after the byrth: but onely declareth that Marye was a virginne vntouched of manne, before the byrth of her Sonne. Therefore in my iudgemente this is the naturall ſenſe of this preſent place. Hetherto I haue behaued my ſelfe humbly and louingly amongſt you, and haue diſcharged the office of a teacher.

Now the courſe of my calling being finiſhed, I will departe, and you ſhall not enioy me hereafter: but the redeemer and miniſter of ſaluation whō you do now deſpiſe, you ſhall find & try to be a iudge. So this place agreeth with that of Zachary, 12. 10. They ſhall ſee him, whome they haue pearced through. But Chriſt alſo ſeemeth to reproue after this ſort their vaine hypocriſie, that as menne earneſtlye deſiring their promiſed ſaluation, did ſing dayly out of the Pſalme, Bleſſed is hee which commeth in the name of the Lorde: and yet they had the Redeemer in deriſion, when he was offered them. Further, he ſaieth, that he will not come at them, vntill that at the ſight of his maieſtye horryble to bee ſeene, they ſhall cry out as menne afrayde, but too late, truelye this is the Sonne of God. And this threatning doth belong to all the contemners of the goſpell: eſpecially them which doe wrongfully pretende his name: and yet refuſe his doctrine: for they ſhall knowe at the length that they cannot eſcape his handes, whom they laugh nowe to ſcorne with theyr faygned diſſimulation. For the Papiſtes ſing the ſame ſong at this day, and yet they make no account of Chriſt, vntill he aſcend to his trybunall ſeate, armed with reuenge. VVee are alſo admoniſhed ſo longe as Chriſt appeareth vnto vs in the name of the Father, as a meſſenger and mediator of ſaluation, to honour him not onely with the lyppes, but ſincrelye to deſire that hee maye bring vs and all the worlde in obedience to him.

LV. 53. And as he ſayde theſe thinges vnto them. I ſayde euen nowe that Luke putte not theſe former ſentenſes in their proper place: for when he reporteth that Chriſte reproued the Scribes at a certeine dynner, hee addeth alſo withal, his laſt words, wherewith their offences a litle beefore his death were layde open. So alſo Luke ſetteth downe the next reproofe in the thirtene chapter, where hee rehearſeth another hyſtory.

If any manne had rather follow their opinion, which doe thinke that Chriſt rehearſed the ſame wordes oft times, I doe not greatly ſtande againſt them. Now after that Luke hadde rehearſed the curſſes ſpoken of a litle before, at the length hee concludeth, that all the Scrybes hated Chriſte the more, ſo that they ceaſed not to ſeeke to deceiue him by laying ſnares for to entrappe and catch him. The which muſt rather be referred to that ſpeach had at the table, then to his laſt ſermon. But I haue not much regarded to be curious about the time, which the Euangeliſt neglected.

Math.	Mark. 12.	Luke. 21.
	41. And as Ieſus ſate ouer againſt the treaſury, he beheld howe the people caſte money into the treaſurie, and many riche menne caſte in much.	1. And as he beheld, hee ſawe the rich men, which caſt theyr gifts into the treaſury.
	42. And there came a certeine poore widow, and shee threwe in two mites, which made a quadrin.	2. And he ſawe alſo a certeine poore widow, which caſt in thither two mites.
	43. Then hee called vnto him his diſciples, and ſayde vnto them, verely I ſay vnto you, that this poore widow hath caſt more in, then al they, which haue caſt into the treaſury.	3. And he ſaid, of a trueth I ſay vnto you, that this poore widow hath caſt in more then they all.
	44. For they all did caſte in of theyr ſuperfluitie: but shee of her pouertie did caſt in al that she had, euen al her liuing.	4. For they all haue of theyr ſuperfluitie caſt into the effrings of God: but shee of her pennurye hath caſt in all the lyuing that she had.

43. Verely I ſay vnto you. This aunſwere of Chriſte containeth verye profitable doctrine, whatſoeuer men do offer to God is not valued after the outward price, but according to the affection of the heart: yea, hys godlyneſſe is more worth, who according to his ability offereth that litle he hath, to God, then he which offereth a hundred fold more of hys aboundaunce. This doctrine is profitable two wayes. For the Lord encourageth the poore, which want ability to doe well, that they ſhoulde not be afrayde cheerefully to teſtifie their good will with that litle they haue: for if they conſecrate themſelues, their offring, though it be in ſhew but vile and vaine, ſhalbe aſmuch eſteemed as if they offred all Cœſus treaſures.

Agayns

Agayne, they which haue aboundaunce, and doe giue many giftes are admonished, that it is not sufficient for them to excell the common and poore people in giueing: for it is lesse to be accoũted of before God for a rich man to giue a meane summe, then for a poore man for to bestowe a litle, being that which he hath. Further, this widow was very godlye: for she had rather be without meate her selfe, then that shee woulde appeare empty before the Lord. And the Lord commendeth this simplicity for that she forgetting her selfe, declared that she and all that she had belonged to God. As also the chief Sacrifice, which is required of vs, is to deny our selues. And though it is to be supposed that the holye offringes were not rightly bestowed at that tyme, nor to lawfull vse: yet because that the manner of worshippe appoynted by the lawe was yet in force, Christe doth not reiect them. And certeinely the corruption of menne could not bring it to passe, but that the holy worshippers of God would according to his commaundement offer for the sacrifices and other godly vses.

Matth. 24.

1. And Iesus wente out, & departed from the temple, and his disciples came to him, to shew him the building of the Temple.

2. And Iesus said vnto them, see ye not all these thinges? verely I saye vnto you, there shall not be here lefte a stone vpon a stone, that shall not bee caste downe.

3. And as hee sate vppon the mounte of Olyues, his Disciples came vnto him aparte, sayinge, tell vs when these thinges shall bee, and what signe shalbe of thy comming, and of the end of the world.

4. And Iesus aunswered and saide vnto them: take heede, that no man deceiue you.

5. For manye shall come in my name, sayinge, I am Christe, and shall deceiue many.

Mark. 13.

1. And as hee went out of the Temple, one of his disciples said vnto him: maister, see what stones & what buildinges are here.

2. Then Iesus answered & said vnto him, seest thou these great buildings? there shall not be left one stone vppon a stone, that shal not be thrown downe.

3. And as hee sate on the mount of Olyues ouer against the temple, Peter and Iames, and Iohn and Andrew asked him secretely:

4. Tell vs when shal these thinges be? and what shal be the signe, when al these things shalbe fulfilled?

5. And Iesus awnswered them, and began to saye, take heede least anye man deceiue you.

6. For manye shall come in my name, sayinge, I am Christe, and shal deceiue manye.

7. Fur-

Luk. 21.

5. Now as some spake of the Temple, howe it was garnished with goodlye stones, and with consecrate thinges, hee said,

6. Are these the things that yee looke vpon? the dayes will come, wherein a stone shal not be left vpon a stone, that shal not be throwne downe.

7. Then they asked him, saing, maister, but when shall these things be? and what signe shal ther be, when these things shal come to passe?

8. And hee said, take heede, that yee bee not deceiued: for manye wyl come in my name, saying, I am Christe, and the time draweth neere: followe yee not them therefore.

9. And when yee heare of warres, and seditions, bee not afrayde: for these thinges muste first come, but the end followeth not by and by.

10. Then

6. And yee shall heare of warres, and rumours of warres: see that yee be not troubled: for all these things must come to passe, but the ende is not yet.
7 For nation shall rise against nation, and realme against realme, and there shall be pestilence and famine, and earthquakes in diuerse places,
8 All these are but the beginning of sorowes.
7. Furthermore, when yee shall heare of warres and rumours of warres, bee yee not troubled: for such things must needes be: but the ende shall not be yet.
8 For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdome against kingdome, and there shalbe earthquakes in diuerse quarters, and there shall bee famine and troubles: these are the beginnings of sorowes.
10. Then saide hee vnto them, nation shall rise against nation, and kingdome against kingdome.
11. And great earthquakes shall bee in diuerse places, and hunger, and pestilence and fearful things: and great signes shall there be from heauen.

1. And Iesus went out and departed. The Disciples perceiued that Christ gaue this as his last farewell to the Temple. Therefore it was meete that he should erect a new Temple more bewtifull then this, and a more florishing estate of a kingdome, as the Prophetes had foretolde. For they had nothing to doe with that Temple, wherein all thinges were so out of order and against them. But yet the Disciples thought it incredible, that the Temple so strongly built and so gorgeous, should giue place to Christ.

And this must be noted diligently: for sith the outward bewtie of the Temple was such as was to be wondred at, their eyes were so set vppon the present glory of the same, that they could scarsly hope that the kingdome of Christ might spring vp. They doe not expreslye confesse their doubt, but they doe shewe the same secretely, when as they doe obiect to Christ the great heape and hugenes of the stones, which should be ouerthrowne, yea and brought to nothing, if that he would reigne. Also such admiration at the estate of Popery, withholdeth many simple men at this day: for they see them furnished with great abundance of wealth and mightie power, they are presentlye so amased, that the base and simple shew of the Church seemeth vile and contemptible vnto them. Many also think that we are deceiued, whē we go about the ouerthrow of that kingdome, euen as if it were as harde a matter as to pull the sunne out of heauen. And it is no meauaile, if Christes disciples were amased at that notable sight. For how much that building cost Herod, may be gathered by this, that he had tenne thousand workmen labouring about the same continually for the space of eight yeares. And they doe not wonder at the stones without a cause: for they were verye goodly and fayre, Iosephus writeth that they were fifteene cubytes longe, twelue hygh, and eight broade. And nowe it was so much reuerenced in forraine countreies, that no manne durst scarsely suspect that it could at any time be ouerthrowne.

2. Verelye I saye vnto you, one stone shall not bee left vppon an other. Because the greatnesse and wealth of the Temple (being sette as a vaile before their eyes) hyndred them from beleeuing that the kingdome of Christe was at hand: therefore he affirmeth by an othe, that what soeuer thinges doe hinder them, should shortly perish. So the foretelling of the destruction of the temple, made a way ready for the rude and weake people. And thoughe it was profitable that the temple should be ouerthrowen, least it should keepe the Iewes in this ceremonial kinde of worship, who of themselues were giuen too muche to earthly elements: yet this was a speciall reason, that God by that horrible example woulde bee reuenged vpon that nation for the refusing of his sonne, and contempt of the grace he offered them. VVherefore it was meete that the disciples should by this forewarninge bee drawen away from the societie of that rebellious people. So at this day what soeuer the scripture foretelleth of the punishments of the wicked should driue vs from those sinnes whiche prouoke the wrath of God. Also, what soeuer it teacheth of the transitory & vaine fashion of the world, it should correcte the vanitie of oure minde, which followeth too greedily after pompe, pleasure, and delites. And especially that which he foretelleth of the fearful destruction of Antichrist and his secte, should remoone away all those lets, which doe hinder vs in the right course of faith.

3. And as he sate vpon the mount. Marke nameth foure, Peter, Iames, Iohn and Andrew. He and Luke doe not set downe so much as Mathew. For they say that they enquired only of the time of the destructiō of the temple, (and because it was a thing harde to be beleeued) what signe GOD would giue from heauen, that the same should come to passe. But Mathewe reporteth that they aske the question of the time, of the comming of Christ, and of the ende of the worlde. But it may be noted howe they had thought euen from their childehoode, that the temple should stand for euer, and their mindes were so wholely bent vpon the same, that they thought the temple could not fall while the world stoode. Therefore assoone as Christ sayd that the temple should be destroyed, they presently thought with themselues of the ende of the world. And (as errour begetteth errour) because they were perswaded, that presently at the beginning of the kingdome of Christe, they shoulde bee happy euery way, they presently speede to the triumph before the battell. Therefore they ioyne the comming of Christ, and the ende of the worlde togither, with the destruction of the temple, as things which coulde not be seperate: and by the ende of the worlde they vnderstande the restoring of all thinges, when nothing should be wanting of the perfecte felicitye of the godlye. Therefore we see now howe they leape to diuers questions at once, because they were entangled in these fantasies, that the temple coulde not fall, but that it should shake the whole worlde: that the shadowes of the law and the world should ende togither: that the glory of the kingdome of Christe shoulde presently appeare which should make the children of God perfectly happie: that the apparant renewing of the worlde was at hand, which shuld presently bring all things confused into order. And especially the hope which they had fondly conceiued before of the present kingdome of Christ, doth driue them preposterously to haste to the happy rest. As in the Act. 1.6. when they see Christ risen from the dead, they runne headlong to that felicitie which is laide vppe for vs in heauen, to the which we must aspire by hope and patience. And thoughe our estate is not like theirs, because we are not trained vppe in the shadowes of the lawe, ſo that the ſuperſtitious opinion that the kingdom of Chriſt ſhuld be earthly hath not beſotted vs, yet ther ſhall ſcarce be found one amõgſt a hundred, which is not troubled with the like diſeaſe. For when al men do by natuſe loath troubles, contentions, and all maner of afflictions, the wearineſſe of theſe things, vrgeth them without moderation & wythout hope to haſte before the time to the frute of faith. So it commeth to paſſe that no man is willing to ſowe, and all menne would mow before the time. But to returne to the diſciples, they had the good ſeede of faith in their harts, but they would not tary for the time appoynted: and they hauing corrupt fantaſies, ſeeke to thruſt the perfection of the kingdome of Chriſt togither with the beginning: and that which they ſhould ſeeke for in heauen, they ſought to enioy vppon the earth.

4. Ieſus anſweared. They had ſuch an anſweare as liked them not. For when they gaped for the triumph, as if the warre were ended, Chriſt exhorted them to long ſufferance: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, you would receiue ꝑ price at the firſt beginning of the race: but of neceſsity you muſt firſt runne foorth the race. You would haue the kingdom of God vppon the earth, but no man can attaine vnto it, except that he aſcend into heauen. But ſith this Chapiter containeth moſt notable admonitions and inſtructions for the gouernment of the courſe of our life, we ſee howe by the wonderful counſell of God it was brought to paſſe, that the Apoſtles errour tourned to our profite.

This is the ſumme, the preaching of the Goſpell is like to a ſowinge time: and therefore we muſt with patience wait for the harueſt time, and they are too to dainty and effeminate, whiche are diſcouraged in theyr mindes for the froſt, ſnowes, cloudes, or the ſharpe tempeſts of the winter. Chriſte doeth eſpecially giue his diſciples commaundement of two things, that they ſhoulde beware of falſe doctrines, and that they ſhoulde not be troubled by offences. In whiche woordes, hee declareth that hys Churche ſhall be ſubiecte to ſuche troubles, while it wandereth in the worlde. But this might ſeeme very vnlikely, becauſe that the Prophets hadde foretolde that the kingdome of Chriſt ſhould be in another ſorte. Iſaias 54.13. promiſeth that they ſhall all be then taught of God. And by Ioel it is reported, 2.28. I will poure my ſpirite vppon all fleſhe, and your ſonnes and daughters ſhall propheſie, your yong menne ſhall ſee viſions, and your olde menne ſhall dreame dreames. Ieremiah alſo promiſeth a brighter light of vnderſtanding, 31.34. They ſhall teach no more euery man his neighbour, and euery man his brother, ſaying: knowe the Lord, for they ſhall knowe me from the leaſt of them to the greateſt of them. Therefore at the riſing of the Sunne of righteouſneſſe, as it was ſpokē of before by the prophet Malachie 4.2. it is no maruel if the Iewes hoped that they were ſette free and cleare from all cloudes of errours. And hereof the woman of Samaria ſayd, Iohn 4.25. when the Meſsias ſhall come, he will teache vs all things. So nowe wee knowe howe great promiſſes doe euery where appeare of peace, righteouſneſſe, ioye, and of aboundance of all good things. Wherefore it is not to be marueiled at, if they thought that by Chriſtes comming, they ſhuld be exempted from troubles of warres, from ſpoyles, from all maner of iniury, and alſo from famine and peſtilence. But Chriſte declareth that they ſhall haue no leſſe trouble hereafter with falſe teachers, then the olde people hadde wyth falſe falſe prophets: and that there ſhall be no leſſe troubles vnder the Goſpel, then there were in times paſt vnder the lawe. Not that thoſe propheſies which I touched euen nowe, were not fulfilled: but becauſe they were not fully perfourmed preſently at the firſt day. For it is ſufficient that the faithfull haue onely a taſte giuen them nowe of thoſe good thinges, that they might nouriſh the hope they haue of the full enioying of them hereafter.

And therfore they were much deceiued, which would haue all things perfectly perfourmed at the beginning of the Goſpell, which we ſee fulfilled euery day. Furthermore, though the wickednesſe of menne, cannot altogither make of none effecte that felicity e whiche the Prophets sayde ſhould be in the kingdome of Chriſte, yet it hindereth and troubleth the ſame. The Lorde cauſeth, by ſtriuing with the malice of menne, that hys bleſsings finde way through all lettes: and certainly it were abſurde, that the thing which is eſtabliſhed vppon the free goodneſſe of God, and dependeth not vppon their pleaſure, ſhould be abolished for theyr fault. Yet that they might receiue ſome rewarde of their vnthankfulneſſe, he doeth onely diſtill his graces by a little at once, whiche otherwiſe ſhoulde bee powred downe in great aboundance Hence commeth the Labyrinth of ſo many miſchiefes, through the which all the faithfull doe wander all theyr life, though Chriſt being their captaine, and bearing the light of his Goſpell before them, they holde the ready way to ſaluation.

Hence ariſe the heape of ſo manye contentions, that they ſhall paſſe through ſharpe warres, but yet without daunger. Hence ſpring ſo many and ſo ſodaine troubles, that they are troubled with miſerable diſquietneſſe, but yet by the helpe of Chriſte they continue ſtedfaſt to the ende. Alſo, when Chriſt commandeth his diſciples to take heede of deceits, we are to vnderſtand that they ſhal not want meanes to auoyd them, ſo that they be carefull themſelues. VVherefore let vs be ſure, if any of vs doe diligently apply himſelfe to watche in his place and calling, what ſubtelties ſoeuer ſathan ſhall deuiſe, we ſhalbe free from them.

5. For many ſhall come. Hee doeth not yet ſpeake generally of corrupt & falſ doctrines, but toucheth one kinde, which was as a beginning of al errors, wyth the whych Sathan endeuoured ſundry wayes to ouerthrow the pure doctrine of the Goſpell. For ſhortlye after the reſurrection of Chriſte, there aroſe deceiuers, and euery one of them profeſſed hy mſelfe to be Chriſte. And becauſe the true redeemer was not onely taken from among them, but put to the ſhamefull death of the croſſe, and the mindes of all men were mooued and kindled to hope and to deſire theyr redemption, they hadde a meanes ready at hand to deceiue them. And it is not to be doubted but that God gaue the Iewes ouer to be deceyued by ſuche guiles, for that they had ſo wickedly reiected his ſonne. And though thoſe madde toyes were quickely brought to nothing, yet it was the will of God that the Iewes ſhuld haue ſuch tumults amongſt them: firſt, that they might make themſelues infamous and odious, then that the hope of ſaluation might be taken from them altogither: laſtly, that they being ſo often deceiued, might in a brutiſh blockiſhneſſe, runne headlong to theyr owne deſtruction. For when the worlde ſlipt from the ſonne of GOD, whoſe office it is to gather vs into an holy vnitie, it is meete that it ſhould be caried hither and thither as in tempeſtuous waues.

And

And by the ſame vengeance of God it came to paſſe, that moe were caryed away with a fonde opinion, then true faith brought to obey God. And Chriſt ſette downe this circumſtance of purpoſe, leaſt the faithfull beholding the multitude of ſuch madde people, ſhould growe fainte and weary. For we know how eaſie a matter it is to follow after the multitude, eſpecially where we are but few in number.

6. And ye ſhall heare of warres. In this place he only maketh mention of the ſtirres which fell out amongſt the Iewes: for ſhortly after hee will ſhew that the ſame ſhould creepe further. And as he firſt commaunded them to take heede leaſt any man ſhould deceiue them, ſo now he commaundeth them to be of good courage when they heare of the rumours of warres, and of warres themſelues. For it was daungerous, leaſt they being ouerwhelmed with euilles, ſhould fall away: eſpecially, if they had promiſed and perſwaded themſelues of a peaceable, ioyfull and quiet eſtate. He addeth that theſe things muſt come to paſſe, aſsigning no cauſe but declaring that none of theſe things ſhall fall out by fortune, but by the prouidence of God, leaſt they ſhould kick in vaine againſt the pricke. For there is nothing more effectuall to bring vs in obedience, then when wee knowe that God accordinge to his pleaſure, gouerneth euen thoſe things which ſeeme moſt confuſed. God hath iuſt cauſes and great reaſons, why he ſuffreth the world to be troubled: but becauſe it is mete that the faithfull ſhuld reſt vpon his only pleaſure, it was ſufficient for Chriſt to exhort his diſciples to beare theſe thinges with patient mindes, and to abide conſtant: becauſe it ſo pleaſed the Lord.

But the ende is not yet. He plainly declareth as I ſayd euen now, that theſe were greeuous of themſelues, yet they were but as the beginninges of greater troubles: for when this flame of warres had conſumed Iudea, it ſhould waſt further. For after that the doctrine of the Goſpel was ſpred, the like vnthankfulneſſe kindled alſo the wrath of God amongſt other nations. Hereof it cōmeth to paſſe that they which had broken the couenant and band of peace with God, ſhoulde with mutuall diſſentions rent themſelues in pieces: they which refuſed to obey the authoritye of God, were driuen to yeelde to the force of the ennemies: they whyche woulde not be reconciled to God, ſhould fall to tumults and troubles amongſt themſelues: to be ſhort, they whiche hadde exempted themſelues from the heauenly ſaluation, ſhoulde by raging one againſte another, fill the earth wyth ſlaughters. Further, becauſe he knewe how great the malice of the world woulde be, he addeth againe, that theſe are but the beginnings of ſorrowes: not that the faithfull ſhoulde ouerwhelme themſelues with ſorrowe (who haue comfort at hande alwayes in the middeſt of troubles) but that they mighte prepare themſelues with patience to abide a longer time.

Luke alſo addeth Earthquakes and ſignes from heauen. Of whiche thinges, though there remaine no certaine hyſtory, yet it is ſufficient that Chriſte ſpake of them before. They which will, may read the reſt in Ioſephus.

12. And becauſe iniquitie ſhall be encreaſed, the loue of manye ſhalbe colde.

13. But he that endureth to the ende, he ſhal be ſaued.

14. And this goſpel of the kingdome ſhall be preached throughe the whole worlde for a witneſſe vnto all nations, and then ſhall the ende come.

vppe to the councels, and to the ſynagogues: yee ſhall be beaten, and broughte before rulers and kings for my ſake, for a teſtimoniall vnto them.

10. And the goſpell muſt firſt be publiſhed among all nations.

11. But when they lead you, & deliuer you vppe, take yee no thought before, neither premeditate what you ſhall ſay: but what ſoeuer is giuen you at the ſame time, that ſpeake: for it is not yee that ſpeake, but the holy Ghoſt.

12. Yea, and the brother ſhall deliuer the brother to death, and the father the ſonne, and the children ſhal riſe againſt the parents, and ſhall cauſe them to die.

13. And yee ſhalbe hated of all men for my names ſake: but who ſoeuer ſhall endure to the ende, ſhalbe ſaued.

perſecute you, deliuering you vp to the ſynagogues, and into priſons, and bring you before kinges and rulers for my names ſake.

13. And this ſhall turne to you for a teſtimoniall.

14. Lay it vp therfore in your hearts, that you premeditate not what yee ſhall anſweare.

15. For I will giue you a mouth and wiſedome, where againſt all your aduerſaries ſhall not be able to ſpeake nor reſiſt.

16. Yea, yee ſhalbe betraied alſo of your parents, and of your brethren, and kinſmen & frends, and ſome of you ſhall they putte to death.

17. And yee ſhall be hated of all men for my names ſake.

18. Yet there ſhal not one haire of your heads pearish.

19. By youre patience poſſeſſe your ſoules.

9. Then ſhall they deliuer you vppe to be afflicted. Now Chriſt foretelleth his diſciples of an other kinde of temptation, wherewith beſides their common afflictions, their faith ſhould be tried: for they ſhoulde be hated and deteſted of all the world. This is harde and ſharpe of it ſelfe to the children of God, to be afflicted togither with the reprobate and contemners of God, to be ſubiect to the ſame puniſhmēt which they endure for their ſinnes. And this ſeemeth the more intollerable, to be ſharpely oppreſſed with ſuch grieuous miſeries, as the very wicked are free from. But as the wheate, when it is togither with the chaffe threſhed out with the flailes, is afterward broken and ground in the mill: ſo God doth not onely afflicte his children togither with the wicked, but layeth the croſſe more vppon them then vppon others, that they might ſeeme to be the moſte miſerable of all men. But Chriſte doeth properly ſpeake heere of the afflictions, which the diſciples ſhould ſuffer for the Goſpell. For thoughe that ſaying of Paule is true. Rom. 8. 29. whome God hath choſen, them hath he alſo ordained to beare the croſſe, that they might be made like to the image of his ſonne: yet he doeth not marke all his children wyth this ſpeciall marke, that they ſhould be perſecuted by the ennemies of the Goſpell. Chriſte ſpeaketh nowe of that kinde of affliction, at that time when the faithfull of neceſsitye were to beare for the teſtimonie of the Goſpel, the hatred, the reprochefull wordes and the fury of the wicked. For his will was to let his diſciples vnderſtande, that the doctrine of the Goſpell (whereof they ſhoulde be meſſengers and witneſſes) ſhoulde not be accepted or allowed of the world, euen as he had tolde them before. And he telleth them before, that they ſhal haue contention not only with a fewe ennemies, but that they ſhall be hated of all nations, whether ſo euer they ſhall come. But this was a wonder hardly to be beleeued, which might make the moſt couragious mindes to feare & quake, that the name of the ſonne of God ſhould be ſo infamous and odious that it ſhuld procure all them to be hated euery where.

Therefore Marke ſayeth: Take heede to your ſelues. By which word he noteth the ende and vſe of this admonition: namely, that they ſhould be ready to beare this, leaſt this temptation ſhuld ouerthrow them before they be aware. Marke addeth in the ſame place, that this ſhould be a teſtimoniall to kings and rulers: when the diſciples of Chriſt ſhoulde be brought before their iudgement ſeat. Luke reporteth this ſomewhat otherwyſe. This ſhall be to you for a teſtimoniall: but the meaning is one with the former. For Chriſt declareth that his Goſpell ſhall be the more ſet foorth when it ſhall be defended with the daunger of death. For if the Apoſtles ſhould haue imployed their trauaile in preaching the Goſpel, and ſhoulde not ſtand conſtantly againſt the furious dealings of the ennemies in defence of the ſame, it ſhould not haue ben ſo notably confirmed. But when they doubted not to lay their heades in daunger, and that no terrours of death coulde driue them from theyr purpoſe, it appeared by this their courage and conſtancie, howe certainly they were perſwaded of the goodneſſe of their cauſe. So this was a ſure ſeale of the Goſpell, that the Apoſtles ſtoode without feare at the iudgement ſeates of kings, and freely profeſſed the name of Chriſt there. And therfore Peter calleth himſelf a witneſſe of the paſsions of Chriſte, the ſignes and tokens whereof he bare vppon him. And Paule to the Phil. 1. 17. glorieth that he was ſette in defence of the Goſpell. The which is eſpecially woorthy to be noted, leaſt they through vile cowardlineſſe ſhould fal away from the faith vpon whome God hath thought good to beſtow ſo great honour, as that he woulde make them patrones of his truthe.

MAR. 11. Take yee no thought before. VVe haue expounded this ſentence and the next in the tenth chapter of Mathewe, for that the Lordes will was to eaſe his diſciples of that ſorowfull doubtfulneſſe, which hindereth vs from continewing in our calling, while that wee diſtruſt our ſelues as vnable to beare the burden. Not that he would haue vs altogither careleſſe (for nothing is more profitable for vs, then that we be taught humilitye by knowing our owne infirmitye, and be prouoked to prayers) but Chriſt teacheth vs to caſt our cares into the boſome of the father, that truſting in his promiſed helpe, we may goe foreward chearefully in oure courſe.

But Luke ſetteth downe the promiſſe otherwiſe, not that Chriſt wold deliuer his from death (for this is not alwayes to bee hoped for) but that he will giue them a mouth and wiſedome, wherewith they ſhould make their ennemies aſhamed. But thoughe Chriſte giueth at the ſame tyme a minde and power to ſpeake, yet I do thinke that he meant another thing by ioyning theſe two words togither: as if that Chriſt ſhuld promiſe, that he woulde gouerne their tongues, ſo that they ſhoulde anſweare wiſely and to the purpoſe.

He addeth further, that this wiſedome ſhoulde haue the victory againſt all all theyr ennemies: becauſe they coulde not reſiſt nor ſpeake agaynſte the ſame. Not that their impudencie ſhould giue place to the truthe: but becauſe the truth, againſt the which they ſette themſelues in vaine, ſhould triumph ouer their frantike boldneſſe. And I would that all men that are required to make confeſsion of their faith, woulde repoſe themſelues in thys hope: for then the power and maieſtie of the ſpirite would ſhewe it ſelfe farre otherwiſe to the ouerthrowe of ſathans miniſters. Now while we are caryed partly by our owne ſenſe, and puffed vppe with pride, we runne headlong raſhly, or goe further forwarde then is mete: and partly we are withholden and reſtrained with peeuiſh fearfulneſſe: and wofull experience ſheweth that we are deſtitute of the grace of God & help of his ſpirite. Further, when in Mathew and Marke Chriſt calleth it the ſpirite of the father, which ſpeaketh in vs, and ſayeth heere that hee himſelfe will giue vs a mouth: we do gather that it is proper and peculiar to him to directe vs by the ſpirite.

LVKE. 19. By your patience poſſeſſe your ſoules. Chriſte doth here teache his diſciples a farre other way to preſerue life, then the reaſon of manne would teache. For euery manne doeth naturally deſire to keepe his life in ſafety: and we doe all ſeeke for thoſe meanes of preſeruation which wee thinke to be beſt, and we flee from all daunger: to be ſhort, we ſeeme not to liue, except we be well garded. And Chriſt giueth vs this fortreſſe for our life, that we ſhould walke through fire, water, and ſwordes alwayes in daunger of death. And truely no manne committeth his ſpirite rightly into the hand of God, but he which is alwayes ready to die, and learneth euery day to liue. In ſumme Chriſt commaundeth vs to poſſeſſe our life both vnder the croſſe, and amongſt the continuall terrours of death.

MATH. 10. And then ſhall many be offended. Nowe he rehearſeth the temptations which ſhall come by euill examples. And this is very grieuous and harde to ouercome, when Chriſt himſelfe ſhould be a ſtone of offence to many, whereat ſome ſhoulde ſtumble, or others at the ſighte thereof ſhould goe backwarde, and others doe fall away, 1. Peter 2. 7. 8. And it ſeemeth to me that Chriſt in this woorde comprehendeth diuers kindes of troubles: becauſe they doe not onely fall away which were entred into a right courſe, but many become enemies to Chriſt: others forgetting modeſty and equity, become raginge madde, others become prophane men, and caſt of all ſenſe and feeling of godlineſſe: others do take themſelues liberty in ſuch troubles to commit ſinne.

11. Many falſe prophets ſhall ariſe. This admonition differeth frō the former, where Chriſt ſayeth before, that many ſhuld come in his name. For there he ſpake onely of the deceiuers, which ſhortly after the entrance of the goſpel, ſhuld fain thēſelues to be Chriſtes. But now he ſaith that there ſhuld falſe teachers ariſe, which ſhuld corrupt the ſoūd doctrine with errours: as Peter teacheth that the church ſhuld be in no leſſe dāger of this miſchiefe vnder the goſpel, then it was before vnder the law, 2. Pet. 2. 1. wherfore there is no cauſe, why errors & the ſubtil practiſes of ſathan, & the corruptions of godlines, ſhuld ouerthrow the minds of the godly: becauſe that no man is rightly eſtabliſhed in Chriſt, but he which hath learned to ſtād againſt ſuch aſſaults. For this is a right trial of our faith, when it ſtandeth without remooūing, againſt ſuch falſe doctrines as ſhal ariſe.

And

And he doeth not only ſay that falſe prophets ſhall come, but alſo that they ſhalbe ſo ſubtile as to deceiue, ſo as they ſhal draw ſectes after them. And heere we haue neede to take great heede: becauſe the multitude of them which follow errours, do as a violent ſtorm enforce vs to turne our courſe, if we be not throughly ſetled in God: whereof there is ſomewhat ſpoken before.

12. Becauſe that iniquitie ſhall abounde. No man ſhould be ignorant howe farre and wide this miſchiefe ſhoulde ſpreade it ſelfe: but very fewe doe marke it. For ſith the light of the Goſpell doth more plainly diſcouer the malice of men, the deſire to doe well waxeth colde, and is almoſt quenched euen in good and well minded men. For euery man thinketh with himſelfe that thoſe things are loſte, which are done for this or that man, for that experience and daily vſe declareth that all menne almoſt are vnthankefull, or faithleſſe, or wicked. Truely a great & a dangerous temptation. For what can bee more abſurde, then to allowe of that doctrine which ſeemeth to ouerthrowe the loue of godlineſſe and the force of charitie? But where the Goſpel taketh place, charitie, with the heat wherof the hearts of all men ſhould be enflamed, rather waxeth colde. But the fountaine of this miſchiefe muſt be noted, which Chriſte vttereth thus. For many doe waxe faint, becauſe that for weakeneſſe they cannot ſtand in the floud of iniquitie, which floweth euery where, Chriſt then requireth his diſciples to be thus ſtrong, as they may ſtande faſt in theſe wraſtlings. As Paule commaundeth, 2. Theſ. 3. 13. that we ſhould not be weary of behauing of our ſelues louingly and kindely. Therfore, though the loue of many being ouerwhelmed with the abundance of ſinnes, ſhoulde waxe colde. Chriſt ſayeth that this let muſt alſo be ouercome, leaſt that the faithfull for ſuch euil exãples ſhuld giue ouer as men tired. Therfore he rehearſeth that ſentence, that no man can be ſaued, but hee which ſhall ſtriue lawfully, and ſhall continue to the ende.

14. And this Goſpell of the kingdome ſhall be preached. VVhen the Lorde had preached ſuche a ſermon as had giuen no ſmall occaſion of ſorowe, thys conſolation was added in very good time, either for the raiſing vp of the mindes ouerthrowen, or for the ſtrengthening and ſtaying of them that are falling: for what ſoeuer ſathan ſhall deuiſe, and how many ſtirres ſo euer he ſhall make, yet the Goſpell ſhall goe forward, vntill it be ſpredde through the whole world. And though this was incredible, yet it behooued the Apoſtles, hauing this warrant of their maiſter, to hope well beyond hope, and with courage to goe forwarde to diſcharge their calling. Some doe obiecte the Antipodes, and other people which do dwel farre away, which as yet haue heard nothing of Chriſt, but it is eaſily anſweared. For Chriſt doeth neither note all the perticular partes of the world, neither doeth he appoynt any certaine time: but only ſayeth that the Goſpell (which all men thought, ſhoulde bee ſpeedily baniſhed out of Iudea the proper dwelling place) ſhoulde be ſpred to the fartheſt partes of the round world, before the laſt day of his cõming. He declareth alſo the end of preaching, that it may be for a teſtimoniall to all nations. For thoughe God neuer left himſelfe without witneſſe, Act. 14. 17. and gaue very ſpeciall teſtimony to the Iewes of himſelfe, yet he gaue a teſtimonye in thys more notable then all the reſt, when hee reuealed himſelfe in his Chriſte:

and the[illegible]. Paule ſayeth, 1.Tim.2.6.that he reuealed himſelfin due time,becauſe this was the time appoynted to call all the world to God. Therefore we muſt learne,that ſo ofte as the Goſpell is preached, God appeareth as it were openly,and he directeth vs by this ſolemne & lawfull courſe,that we ſhould not wander in darkneſſe we know not whether:and that they which refuſe to obey,ſhould be without excuſe.

Then ſhall the ende come. Some doe vnaptly apply this to the deſtruction of the Temple,& to the ouerthrow of the maner of worſhip appoynted by the lawe,which ſhould be vnderſtode of the ende,and the renewing of the world.For becauſe the diſciples had ioyned thoſe two togither,as if the temple could not be ouerthrowne without the deſtruction of the whole worlde, Chriſt anſweareth to the queſtion propoſed,and telleth them that there is a long and ſorrowfull time of troubles at hande, and that they ſhould not haſt to the price,before they had gone through many conflictes and troubles.Therefore this laſt clauſe muſt be vnderſtode thus:The end of the world ſhall not come before that I will exerciſe my Church with ſharpe and painfull temptations.For he oppoſeth himſelfe againſt that vaine imagination, which the Apoſtles hadde conceiued amongſt themſelues.Whereof it muſt be againe conſidered,that there is not any certaine day appoynted, as if that the laſt day ſhoulde preſently follow,the performance of thoſe things which he foretolde euen nowe. For all thoſe things whereof we haue red before, the faithfull haue taſted long agoe,but Chriſt is not yet appeared.But he had no other purpoſe,but to teache his Apoſties long ſufferance, which too haſtily ſpeeded to the heauenly glory: as if he ſhould haue ſayd,that their redemption was not ſo neare at hande as they imagined, but that there ſhoulde be many croked turnings before.

15. When therefore ſhall ſee the abhomination of deſolation ſpoken of by Daniel the prophet, ſtandinge in the holye place, (lette him that readeth, conſider it.)	*14. 23. Then if any man shall say vnto you: Loe heere is Christ, or there, beleeue it not.

24. And they shal fal on the edge of the sword, and shalbe ledde captiue into al nations, and Ierusalem shalbe troden vnder foote of the Gentiles, vntil the time of the Gentiles bee fulfilled.

Luke 17.

22. And hee sayde vnto his disciples, the dayes will come, when yee shall desire to see one of the dayes of the sonne of man, and yee shall not see it.
23. Then they shall say to you: beholde heere, or beholde there: but goe not thither, neyther follow them.
24. For as the lightening that lighteneth oute of the one part vnder heauen, so shall the sonne of man be in his day.
25. But first muste hee suffer many thinges, and bee reprooued of this generation.

15. VVhen yee therefore shall see the abhomination. Because it was a thing incredible (as I sayd euen nowe) that the temple and the citye of Ierusalem should be ouerthrowne, and that the whole cõmon wealth of the Iewes should be destroyed, and also for that it might seme absurd, that the disciples coulde not otherwise be saued but by separating themselues from that people, with whome the adoption and the couenant of eternall life was laid vp as it were in pledge: Christ cõfirmeth both the one and the other by the testimony of Daniel. As if he should haue sayde, settle your selues neither vpon the temple, nor ceremonies of the law, for god hath brought them to an end: and hath declared before, that when the redemer should come, the sacrifices should cease: neither let it trouble you to be separated from your nation, God hath also in time foretold his children of the casting away of this nation. Also such forewarning auaileth not onely to take away the occasion of offence, but also to comforte the mindes of the godly, that they knowing that GOD beholdeth them in extreeme miseries, and regardeth their saluation, might flee to that holye anker, wherby amongst most cruel stormes, they may haue a sure & safe roade. But before I goe any further, this place which Christe citeth, must be examined. First it is certaine that the Angel in the 8. chapt. doeth not directly ſpeake of the latter deſtruction, wherof Chriſt maketh mention in this place, but of a temporall ſpoyle, which the tyrante Antiochus made. But a little after, as well in the 9. as in the 12. the Angell foretelleth the ende, and as they call it the abrogation of the ceremonies of the law, which ſhould be perfourmed at the comming of Chriſt. For after that he had exhorted the faithfull, to cõtinue conſtant without yelding, and had tolde before that the comming of Chriſt ſhould put an ende to the ceremonies, and had giuen the outwarde prophaning of the temple for a ſigne to them, at the length he appoynteth in the 12. chapter a certaine time as well for the deſtruction as for the reſtoringe. From the time (ſayeth he) that the daily ſacrifice ſhall be taken awaye, and the abhomination of deſolation ſet vp, there ſhall be a thouſand two hundreth and ninety dayes. Bleſſed is he that wayteth, and commeth to the thouſand, three hundreth and fiue and thirty dayes. I know that this place is diuerſly wreſted, becauſe of the hardneſſe of it: but I thinke that thys is the ſimple meaning of it, after that the Angel had declared that the temple ſhould be once purged from the pollutions and idolles whiche Antiochus hadde brought in, he ſayeth that there ſhall a time come againe, when it ſhalbe prophaned a newe, and it ſhall looſe for euer all the holineſſe and reuerence it had wythout hope of reſtitution. And becauſe this was a grieuous and ſorrowfull meſſage, he calleth the Prophet backe againe to one yeare, and two yeres and ſixe moneths. In whiche woordes there is noted as well the long continuance, as the ende of euilles. For the compaſſe of a yere ſeemeth a long time to be in continual ſorrowes, but when that time is doubled, the ſorrowe encreaſeth muche more. Therefore the ſpirite exhorteth the faithfull to prepare themſelues to beare patiently not onely for the ſpace of a whole yeare (that is for a long time): but that they ſhould account to beare afflictions continually through many ages. Yet there is no ſmall comfort in that halfe time: for though the afflictions ſhoulde be long, yet the ſpirit declareth that they ſhall not be for euer. Firſt he ſpake thus, the calamitie of the church ſhall endure for a time, times, and halfe a time. But now he reckeneth the thre yeares and ſixe moneths by dayes, that the faithfull might bee the more ſtrengthened by that long continuance of euilles. For it is an ordinarye matter for men in afflictions to accounte the time not by yeares or moneths, but by the ſeuerall dayes: becauſe that one day with them is as a yeare. At the length he ſayth that they ſhalbe bleſſed, which ſhal endure to the ende of that time: that is, which with inuincible patience come to that goale or marke. Chriſt chuſeth only that which ſerueth for his purpoſe: namely, that the ende of the ſacrifices was at hand, and that abhomination is placed in the temple, which is a ſigne of the laſt deſtruction. And becauſe the Ieewes ſetteled themſelues too much in their preſent eſtate, ſo as they would not attend to the prophefies, whiche ſpake before of the aboliſhing of the ſame, Chriſt taking them as it were by the eare, commandeth them to read that place diligently, that they might learne that the prophets gaue euident teſtimony of that, which was ſo harde to them to be beleued: except that any man had rather take this to be ſpoke by the Euãgeliſt: but it is more probable that Chriſt cõtinued his ſpeach, wherin he exhorted hys diſciples to the more attentiuenes. Abhomination ſignifieth aſmuch as prophanation: for by this worde is ſignified that filthineſſe which defileth or ouerthroweth the pure worſhippe of God.

And it is applied to deſolation, becauſe it draweth with it the deſtruction of the temple and of the common wealth: as he hadde ſayd before in the 9. chap. that the pollutiō brought in by Antiochus, was as a ſigne that it ſhould be deſtroyed for a time: for ſo doe I interpreat the worde wing, or ſpreading abroade. And they are deceiued which thinke that the beſieging of Ieruſalem is noted by theſe woordes: neither doe Lukes words make any thing for that errour, whoſe purpoſe was not to ſpeake of that ſame, but of the other. For becauſe that citie hadde bene heretofore deliuered in the middeſt of the ruine, leaſt the faithful ſhoulde hope for the like heereafter, Chriſt ſayeth that it ſhall be deſtroyed aſſoone as the ennemies ſhall compaſſe it about: becauſe it ſhall be vtterly depriued of the helpe of God. Therefore the meaning is, that the ſucceſſe of the warre ſhall not be doubtfull: for that citie ſhall be deſtroyed, becauſe it hadde wholely giuen it ſelfe to breake the lawe of God. Therefore it is added ſomewhat after, that it ſhall be troden downe of the Gentiles: which ſaying ſignifieth the laſt deſtruction. Further, becauſe it myghte ſeeme abſurde that the Gentiles ſhould ſo haue their pleaſure of the holy citie, there is added a peculiar cōfort in reſpecte of the faithful (which Daniel omitteth, becauſe he ſpeaketh to the whole body of the people) namely, that the Gentiles had only liberty for a time, vntill that theyr iniquitie ſhould waxe ripe, and that the vengeance which was laide vppe for them, ſhould come to light.

16. Then lette them which be in Iudea. After that Chriſte hath taught by the teſtimony of the Prophet, that the legall maner of worſhippe ſhould be extinguiſhed immediately after the prophanation of the temple, hee addeth that there ſhould hang ouer all Iudea ſuche fearfull and horrible plagues, that nothing ſhoulde be more to be deſired, then to be caried far away out of that countrey. And he ſayeth withall, that they ſhould come of ſuch a ſodain, that they ſhould ſcarce haue any time to flee away moſt ſpeedily. For to this purpoſe doe theſe ſpeaches belong. Let him which is on the houſe toppe, not enter into his houſe. Let not him which is in the field, returne backe. Leaſt while they ſeeke to ſaue their goodes, they looſe themſelues. Alſo, VVoe be to them that are with childe, and giue ſucke. For they cannot be apt & ready for the flight. In like maner Pray you that your flighte be not in the winter, or on the ſabboth daye: leaſt that either religion, or the hardneſſe of the iourney, and the ſhortneſſe of the dayes ſhoulde hinder and lette them from fleeing ſpeedily. Therefore Chriſtes purpoſe was firſt to ſtirre vppe hys diſciples, and to waken them that they ſhoulde no more haue that imagination of a bleſſed eſtate and delite of an earthly kingdome: then hee encourageth them, leaſt they ſhould fall away at theſe generall plagues. This was a ſharpe warning, yet was it neceſſary in reſpect of their blockiſhneſſe and the huge greatneſſe of the euils.

21. For then ſhall be greate affliction. Luke alſo ſayeth, that it ſhall be a day of reuengement and of wrath againſt that people, that what ſoeuer thinges are wrytten, might be fulfilled. For when as the couenāt of God was then broken through the obſtinate malice of the people, it was mete that by a wonderfull chaunge, the earth it ſelfe and the aire ſhoulde bee ſhaken. And a more deadly plague coulde not haue lighted vppon the Iewes, then that the light of the heauenly doctrine beinge extinguiſhed amongſt amongſt them,they were caſt away from god.But(as neceſsity required in ſo great hardneſſe of heart) they are enforced to feele the plague of their caſting off,by hard and ſharpe whips. But this was the cauſe of ſo horrible vengeance ,that the deſperate wickednesſe of that nation was now come to the ful meaſure.For the medicine which was laid to their diſeaſes,was not only proudly diſdained,but they alſo reiected the ſame moſt reprochefully:yea,as madde men or people diſtraught,they raged cruelly againſt the Phiſition himſelfe.But ſith the Lord reuenged ſo ſeuerely vpon them that obſtinate contempt of the goſpell togither wyth their raging madneſſe, let their plague be alwayes before our eyes : and let vs learne thereby, that there is nothing more intollerable to G O D, then the diſdainful contempt of his grace. And though the ſame reward remaineth for the like contemners of the Goſpel,yet God woulde haue a more notable example remain of the Iewes then of any others,that the glory of the comming of Chriſt might be the more renoumed amongſt the poſterities. For the hainouſneſſe of the offence cannot be expreſſed by any wordes,that they ſhould put to death the ſonne of God, the authour of life which was giuen vnto them from heauen. So when they had committed that moſt abhominable ſacriledge,they ceaſed not by diuers and ſundry other crimes to pull vppon themſelues all the cauſes of their vtter deſtruction. Therefore Chriſt ſayeth that the lyke affliction ſhall not be in the world after that:for as that one reiection of Chriſte, accompanyed with ſo many circumſtances of wicked rebellion and vnthankefulneſſe,was more to be deteſted then all the ſinnes of all ages : ſo alſo it was meete that it ſhoulde be more ſharpely reuenged then all the reſt.

22. And except thoſe dayes ſhoulde be ſhortned. He amplifieth the greatneſſe of thoſe calamities,and yet hee addeth a comfort wyth it: Namely,that the name of the Iewes might be extinguiſhed, if the Lorde had not regarde of his electe, and holpe not ſomewhat for their ſake. And thys place agreeth with that of Iſaiah 1.9.Except the Lorde had reſerued to vs a ſmall remnant,we ſhould haue bene as Sodome, and like vnto Gomorrha: for that vengeance of God which befell at the captiuity of Babylon, ſhoulde be fulfilled againe at the comming of Chriſte, as Paule witneſſeth in the ninthe chapter to the Romanes,& the nine and twenty verſe: yea,the more iniquitie hadde then ſpread it ſelfe,the greater reuenge ſhoulde then light vppon them.Therefore Chriſte ſayeth, except God putte an ende to thoſe euilles,the Iewes ſhall vtterly peariſh,ſo that not one of them ſhall remaine:but God maketh account of his gratious couenaunt, ſo that hee will ſpare his electe,according to that other ſaying of Iſaiah,10.22. If my people Iſrael bee as the ſande of the ſea, the remnant of them ſhall only be ſaued.

And this is a notable teſtimony of the iudgement of God, when hee ſo afflicteth the viſible Churche,that it may ſeeme to be vtterly deſtroyed: and yet that he might reſerue ſome ſeede,he doeth wonderfully deliuer his electe thoughe they be but fewe in number from deſtruction, that they might beyonde all hope eſcape the gulfe of death. So are the hypocrites terrified, that they ſhoulde not vnder the title and fourme of the Church nouriſh a vaine hope,and imagine that they ſhould goe vnpuniſhed. Becauſe the Lorde when hee deliuereth them to deſtruction, will finde a meanes to preſerue and deliuer his Churche, and it bringeth great comfort to the godly, that God will neuer ſo lette louſe the bridle of hys wrath, but that he will prouide for their ſaluation. So in puniſhing of the Iewes hys wrath burnt in moſt horrible maner: and yet beyonde the hope of menne he ſo gouerned himſelfe, leaſt any of hys electe ſhould periſh. And this was in deede a woonderfull myracle, that when ſaluation ſhoulde come of the Iewes, God of a fewe droppes of a fountaine dried vppe, made floudes to water the whole worlde. For (as they hadde procured the hatred of all the Gentiles againſt them) it wanted but little, but that in one day there ſhould haue beene a ſigne giuen, to ſlaye them euerye where. And it is not to be doubted, but that when many deſired ſo to haue murthered them, Titus was reſtrained by God, from arming by his allowance his ſouldiours, and others greedie enough to execute ſuch a purpoſe. Therefore that Romane Emperour ſtayed then that laſt deſtruction of that whole nation, and this ſhortning was for the preſeruation of ſome ſeede. This muſt yet bee noted, that he reſtrained the violence of his wrath for the electe ſake. For why would he haue ſo fewe remaine of ſo great a multitude? and what cauſe hadde he to preferre theſe aboue the reſt? Namely, for that his grace reſted vppon that people which he hadde adopted: and leaſt his couenant ſhould be made of none effecte, ſome were choſen and appoynted by his eternall counſell to ſaluation. Therefore Paule Romanes 11.5. aſſigneth his election of grace for the cauſe why of ſo greate a people there was onely a remnant ſaued. Then lette the merites of menne giue place when we are called to the meere good will and pleaſure of God, that the difference betweene theſe and them, ſhoulde not bee in anye other poynte, but that it is meete they ſhould be ſaued which are choſen. And Marke, that he might ſette forth the matter more plainly and expreſly, addeth one woorde more, ſpeaking thus. For the electe ſake which hee hathe choſen, hee will ſhorten thoſe dayes. The participle myghte haue ſufficed, but that hee woulde expreſly declare, that God was not mooued by any other cauſes why hee ſhoulde rather fauour theſe then thoſe: but becauſe he pleaſed to chuſe and to eſtabliſh in them whome hee would ſaue, the ſecreate purpoſe of his grace. Yet it is demaunded howe God for hys electe ſake moderated theſe calamities, and did not altogither deſtroy the Iewes, when as many reprobate & deſperate leud people were preſerued. The anſweare is eaſie, part of that nation was deliuered, that ſo he might bring forth his electe which were mixed amongeſt them, as ſeede ſeparate from the chaffe. Though both the reprobate and the elect were partakers of this tẽporall preſeruation, yet becauſe it profited not thoſe, it is aptly aſcribed to theſe: for that the wonderful prouidence of GOD directed it for their preſeruation.

23. Then if any ſhall ſay vnto you He rehearſeth againe that whych hee had ſpoken of deceiuers, and not without a cauſe. For there was more daunger lyke to come by thys temptation, leaſt miſerable men afflicted and troubled, being deceiued by a falſe title, ſhoulde in ſteade of Chriſte ſeeke after ſpirites, and for the helpe of God take holde of the ſleightes of the deuil. For when the Iewes were ſo hardly oppreſſed for contemning theyr redemption and were to be wythdrawne from theyr infide-

litie by ſuche violent remedies, Sathan ſubtilly propoſed newe thynges for them to truſt in, whiche might draw them the further from GOD. And certainly there is nothing more daungerous, then when we want counſell in aduerſities, vnder the pretence of the name of God to be deceiued with lies, which doe ſhutte vppe the gate of repentaunce againſt vs, and encreaſe the darkeneſſe of infidelitie, and at the length doe carye vs headlong as menne amaſed wythout hope of recouerie to madneſſe. So that in reſpecte of that great danger it was conuenient that the ſame ſhoulde be rehearſed: and eſpecially, ſith Chriſte declareth that the falſe prophets ſhall be ſo throughly furniſhed to deceiue, as with ſignes and wonders, wh̄ych ſhal amaſe the mindes of the ſimple. For ſith that God doeth teſtifie the preſence of hys power by myracles, and are therefore ſeales of true doctrine, no meruaile if the deceiuers doe gette credite thereby. And in ſuche maner of ſcorning, doeth God reuenge the vnthankefulneſſe of menne, that they might beleeue a lye, whiche refuſed the truthe, and that they ſhoulde be blinded more and more, which ſhut theyr eyes at the light offered them. And yet he trieth their conſtancye wythall, wh̄ych appeareth to be ſo muche the better, while that no ſubtelties can ouerwhelme them. Further, ſith the Lord ſayeth that the Antichriſtes, and the lying prophets ſhall be furniſhed wyth myracles, there is no cauſe why the papiſtes ſhoulde vnder thys pretence bee ſo proude, or why we ſhoulde be afraide of their glorious boaſting. They confirme theyr ſuperſtitions by myracles: for the ſonne of God foretolde, that by ſuche meanes the faith of many ſhoulde be ouerthrowne. VVherefore, wiſe menne ought not to eſteeme them ſo, as to account them ſufficient of themſelues to prooue thys or that kinde of doctrine. If they excepte that by thys meanes the myracles ſhould be ouerthrowen and brought to nothing, whereby the authoritie as well of the lawe as of the Goſpell was eſtabliſhed: I aunſweare that there was a certaine marke of the ſpirite grauen in them, wh̄ych ſhoulde putte the faithfull out of all doubte and feare of erring: for ſo ofte as God doeth ſhewe foorth hys power for the confirming of hys children, he woorketh not ſo confuſedly, but that there ſhoulde appeare a manifeſt diſtinction to ſhew it free from all deceite.

Note, that the myracles do ſo confirme the doctrine, that the doctrine alſo doeth ſo ſhyne foorth, and it ſcattereth all the cloudes, wherewyth ſathan darkeneth the mindes of the ſimple. To bee ſhort, if we deſire to auoide ſuch ſubtelties, let vs holde the ſignes and the doctrine ſo ioyned togither, as that they may not be ſeparate.

24. So that if it were poſſible, they ſhoulde deceiue the very electe. Thys was added to make menne afraide, that the faithfull might the more carefully apply and bende themſelues to beware. For where falſe prophets ſhoulde paſſe wyth ſuche vnbrideled libertie, and ſhoulde haue ſo great power giuen them to deceiue, it were an eaſie matter for them to entrappe in their guiles the ſecure and heedeleſſe people. Therefore Chriſt exhorteth and ſtirreth vppe his diſciples to watche.

Further, hee telleth them alſo that there is no cauſe why they ſhoulde bee troubled at the newneſſe of the matter, if they ſhoulde ſee manye in euery place caried into errour. But as hee commaundeth hys to bee carefull leaſt ſathan circumuent them ere they be aware: ſo againe he giueth them great occaſion for them to hope well, wherein they myght quietly repoſe themſelues, while hee promiſeth them that vnder the defence and keeping of God, they ſhould be ſafe againſt all the guiles of ſathan. Therefore, thoughe the eſtate of the godly be fraile and brittle, yet they haue a ſure pillar ſhewed them heere, whereupon they may reſt: for it is not poſsible that they ſhoulde fall away from ſaluation, whyche haue the ſonne of God for their faithfull keeper. For they haue not ſuch a ſtrong defence of themſelues, as may reſiſt the aſſaultes of Sathan, but becauſe they are Chriſtes ſheepe, whome no manne can take out of hys hande, Ioh. 10. 28. And it muſt be noted that the ſtrength and aſſuredneſſe of our ſaluation reſteth not in vs but in the ſecreat election of god. For though our ſaluation is kept by faith (as 1. Pet. 1. 5. it is ſayde) yet it behoueth vs to goe further, for wee are therefore ſafe, becauſe the father hath giuen vs to his ſonne, and the ſonne ſayeth that nothing ſhall periſh which is committed to him.

25. Beholde, I haue tolde you before. Marke ſetteth downe the meaning of the Lorde more fully. But take yee heede: beholde I haue shewed you all things before. By which woordes we are taught, that they are without all excuſe, which are ouerthrowne by thoſe offences whereof Chriſt hath ſpoken before. For ſith the will of God ſhoulde be a rule to vs, it is ſufficient for vs, that we were warned in time before, that ſo it pleaſed hym. Further, when he calleth himſelfe faithfull, and ſayeth that he will not ſuffer vs to be tempted farther then we ſhall be able to beare, 1. Cor. 10. 13. we ſhall neuer be without power to reſiſt, ſo that ſlouthfulneſſe nourysheth not our infirmitie.

26. Beholde, he is in the deſart. Luke mixeth this ſpeache with an other anſweare of Chriſt: for when the Phariſies asked him of the commynge of the kingdome of God, he ſayd that it ſhould not come with obſeruation. It followeth in the text ſet downe by Luke, that he tourned to the diſciples, and ſayd that thoſe dayes ſhould come, when they ſhoulde ſee no more one day of the ſonne of man. By which words his will was to forewarne vs to walke in the light, leaſt the darkeneſſe of the nyghte ſhould ouertake vs. For this ſhould be a ſharp ſpurre to them, to prouoke them to profite, ſo long as they enioyed the preſence of Chriſt, ſith they heard that moſt grieuous troubles were at hand. It is not known whether Chriſt gaue his diſciples twiſe warning of one thing. But I thinke it to be probable, that when mention was made of the cōming of the kingdom of God, Luke added theſe ſentences which I haue here ſet downe, though they were ſpoken at an other time, which is no rare matter with him, as we haue ſene otherwher. But becauſe this place is through ignorance diuerſly wreſted, that the readers may haue the natural vnderſtāding of the ſame, they muſt note the oppoſition betwene the ſecreat places, & the open ſpreading of the kingdom of Chriſt farre and neare, and that of a ſodain & vnloked for, as is the comming of the lightning from the Eaſt to the VVeſt. For we know that the falſe Chriſtes (which was agreeable to the groſſe and fooliſh ignorance of that nation) could haue gathered any powers into corners of the deſart, or into dennes, or into other ſecreat places, that they might with a forceable and ſtrong hands haue ſhaken off the power of the Romane Empire from them.

The

The sense therefore is, that whosoeuer gathereth his riches into a secret place, that he might by armes recouer the lybertie of that nation, dooth falsely challenge himselfe to be Christ: for hee is sent to bee the Redeemer, who should sodeinly and vnlooked for spread his grace into all the quarters of the worlde. But these two were contrarye the one to the other, to shutte vp the redemption in some corner, and to spread the same through out the whole world. By this meanes were the Disciples taught not to seeke for the Redeemer any more in the secrete places of Iudea: for he would sodenlye stretch the coastes of hys kingdome euen to the vttermost endes of the earth. And this wonderfull speede in spreadinge the Gospel in so short a time through all the partes of the worlde, was a notable testimony of the power of God. For it coulde not be brought to passe by the witte of manne, that the light of the Gospell should as the lightning assoone as it shineth, presentlye spread it selfe from the one end of the world to the other: and therefore Christ dooth not without consideration commend his heauenly glory by this circumstance. Further, by this describing of the largenes of his kingdome, his will was to shew that the destruction of Iudea, could not be any hindraunce to him, but that he would reigne.

28 VVheresoeuer a dead carkasse is. The meaning is, by what shiftes soeuer Sathan shall endeuour to drawe the children of God backe hether and thether, yet the holy band of vnitie resteth in Christ himselfe, wherewith it is meete that they should be holden, which are bound. For whence commeth this diuision or confusion, but because that manye fall awaye from Christ, who is our onely staye and strength? Therefore here is a prescribed meane how to nourishe this holy vnitie, least the fallinge into errours shoule teare the body of the Church asunder: that is, if we continue fast setled in Christ. The which must bee noted dilygentlye: for Christ doth not tye vs eyther to the supremacy of the seate of Rome, or to any other trifles: but by this knotte onelye would hee tie his Church togeather, if that all from all places would looke to him, who is the onely head, whereof it followeth that whosoeuer doe cleaue to him with a pure fayth, are out of daunger of a schisme. Now let the Romanists goe and cry out that they are Schismatikes, which doe not suffer themselues to be alienated from Christe, that their faith might bee enthralled to a theefe.

The interpretation of the Papists is too sottish, who take them, which are of that company, which professe one faith: and the Eagles to be allegorically expounded for sharpe and quicke sighted menne: when as it is euident that Christ hadde no other purpose, then to call the children of God to him, and to keepe them in him whereseoeuer they were dispersed. And he doth not heere call it simplye a bodye, but a carkasse. And Christe attributeth nothing to the Eagles, but that which agreeth to the rauens and vultures with vs, after the nature of the countrey, which we inhabite. Neither is there any firmenes in the fancy of others, who saye that the death of Christ was so odoriferous, as that it allured the electe of God. For in my iudgment, the purpose of Christ was to reason from the lesse to the greater: if there is so great wisdome in byrdes, that many of them canne come together out of places farre distant to one carkasse; it is a shame for the faithfull if they should not come togeather to the authour of lyfe, who is their onely true foode.

Matth. 24.	Mark. 13.	Luke. 21.
29. And immediatelye after the tribulations of those dayes, shall the Sunne bee darkened, and the Moone shall not giue her light, and the Starres shall fall from heauen, and the powers of heauen shalbe shaken.	24. Moreouer in those daies after that tribulation, the Sunne shal wax darke, and the Moone shal not giue her light.	25. Then there shalbe signes in the Sun, and in the moone, and in the starres, and vpon the earth: trouble among the nations with perplexitie: the sea and the waters shal roare.
30. And then shall appeare the signe of the sonne of man in heauen: and then shall all the kinreds of the earth morne, and they shal see the sonne of manne come in the cloudes of heauen with power and greate glorye.	25 And the starres of heauen shal fall, and the powers which are in heauen shal shake.	26. And mens harts shal faile them for feare, and for looking after those things, which shal come on the worlde: for the powers of heauen shall be shaken.
31. And hee shall sende his Aungelles with a greate sounde of a trumpet, and they shall gather togeather his elect, from the foure windes, and from the one ende of the heauen.	26. And then shal they see the sonne of manne comming in the cloudes, with great power & glorye.	27. And then shall they see the sonne of manne come in a cloude with power and great glory.
	27. And he shall then send his Angels, and shal gather together his elect from the foure windes, and from the vtmoste parte of heauen.	28. And when these thinges beginne to come to passe, then looke vp, & lift vp your heads: for your redemption draweth neere.

Now Christ manifesteth his kingdome more fully, whereof hee was demaunded at the firste: and promiseth that after they haue beene vexed with so many troubles, their redemption shall come at the time appointed. For in his aunswere he specially bent to this, to strengthen and to make his disciples of good comfort: least they should faint in their minds for those troublesome stirres. Therefore hee doth not simply speake of his comming, but he vseth a propheticall kinde of speaking, and as euery man was specially bent, so contrarily it was necessary for him to abide a sharper kinde of temptation. For what could seeme more absurde, then to beholde the kingdome of Christ, whereof the Prophets had so royally spoken, not onely despised, but oppressed with the crosse, couered with many reproaches, and ouerwhelmed with all kinde of affliction? Could not that maiestie haue beene sette vppon it, which mighte haue darkened the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, and shaken the whole estate of the world, and haue altered the vsuall course of nature? The Lord now aunswereth these temptations, saying, though these propheties are not presently perfourmed, yet at the length they shall be fulfilled. The meaning therefore is, that those thinges, which were spoken beefore of the wonderfull shaking of the earth and the heauen, must not be restrained to the beginning of the kingdom: for the Prophets spake of the whole course, euen to the comming to the goale.

Now

Now, when we conceaue the purpose of Christe, the wordes are easie to be vnderstoode: namely, that the heauen shal not presently be darkened, but after that the Church shall haue abyden many afflictions. Not that the glory and maiestie of his kingdome shoulde appeare at the laste comming of Christ: but because that he deferred to that time the fulfilling of those thinges, which beganne to appeare after the resurrection, and whereof God had giuen his onely, some taste, that hee might leade them the further in the way of hope and patience. After this manner Christe helde the mindes of the faithfull in suspence to the laste daye, leaste that they should thinke that the Prophetes hadde spoken in vaine of the restoring to come, because that it laye a long time ouerwhelmed vnder a thicke cloud of afflictions.

But some interpreters doe corruptly take the affliction of those dayes for the destruction of Ierusalem: when as it rather signifieth that vniuersall floud of all euilles, whereof Christe spake before. Further, hee perswadeth them by this argument to patience, because that those afflictions shal haue at the length a happy & ioyful end. As if he should haue sayd, so long as the Church shall be in the worlde it shall be a cloudy & a darke time: but assoone as those miseries shall come to an ende, a daye shall come, wherein the glorye and maiestie of the same shall appeare. But wee cannot imagine now how the Sunne shall be darkened, but the successe shall shew it. Hee meaneth not that the starres shal fall indeede, but according to the imagination of menne: and therefore Luke onelye saieth: that there shall be signes in the Sunne, and the Moone, and in the Starres.

The meaning therefore is, that the frame of the heauen shall bee so shaken, as that the Starres themselues shall be thought to fall. Luke also maketh reporte of the fearefull shaking of the Sea, so that men shall for feare and doubt become astonied. And the summe is, that the creatures both in heauen aboue, and on the earth belowe, shalbe as cryers or preachers to cite menne to appeare at that fearfull iudgment seate, in contempt whereof they shall most wickedly liue in wantonnes euen to the last day.

30. Then shall appeare the signe of the sonne of manne. Christe by this worde dooth put a more manifest difference betweene the present estate of hys kingdome, and the glory thereof, which was to come. For hee seemeth after a manner to graunt, that the maiesty of Christe cannot bee seene plainelye through the clowde of afflictions, neyther can menne feele the redemption which hee offereth them. For the confused estate of things which we doe nowe beholde, partely darkeneth our mindes, partelye ouerwhelmeth the grace of Christ, & causeth it as it were to vāquish out of our eyes, at the least that the sense of the flesh should not take hold of the saluation, which he hath obtained.

Therefore he saieth that hee will shew himselfe plainely at his last cōminge, fullye furnished with the power of heauen, wherewith as with a banner sette vppe on high, hee wyll turne the eyes of all the worlde vnto him. But beecause hee saw the greater parte of menne contemne his doctrine, and sette against his kingdome, hee saieth withall, that all people shall sorrowe and lamente; beecause that it is meete that he ſhould breake thoſe rebels in peeces, and deſtroy them which deſpiſed his power when he was abſent. And he ſpeaketh this, partely that he might by terrifying the proude and diſobediente drawe them to repentaunce: partely alſo that he might ſtrengthen the mindes of his childrē in ſo crooked dealinges of the world. For the ſecuritie of the wicked is no ſmall occaſion of offence: becauſe they ſeeme to haue God in deriſion, & yet eſcape vnpuniſhed. Farther, nothing is more daungerous then to bee caught in the bayghtes of proſperity, which they enioy, and ſo dryue vs from all reuerence of God. Therefore, leaſt the faythfull ſhould enuie at the drunken mirth of the wicked, Chriſt ſaieth, that their ioy ſhall bee turned at the length into weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. And in my iudgement he alludeth to the 12. Chap. of the Prophet Zachariah, the 11. verſe, where God declaring that there is a notable example of his iudgement at hand, ſaieth that all families ſhall lament, as a man mourneth at the buriall of his onelye Sonne. VVherefore there is no cauſe why any man ſhuld looke for the conuerſion of the world: for they ſhall feele at the length him, whom they haue pearſed through, but it ſhall be too late, and without any profit to them. Then followeth the declaration of that ſigne, that they ſhall ſee the Sonne of manne comminge in the clowdes, who then liued vppon the earth in the eſtate of a deſpiſed ſeruaunt. And by this meanes hee declareth that the glorye of his kyngdome is heauenlye and not earthlye, as the Diſciples had falſely imagined.

31. And hee ſhall ſend his Aungels. Hee deſcribeth the maner of that his power by this, that he will ſend his Aungels, who ſhall gather his electe from the vtmoſt coaſtes of the world. For the higheſt heauen doth ſignifie the fartheſt region. But Chriſt ſpeaketh hyperbolycally, to teache his elect, that though they ſhould be taken out of the earth, and caſt headlōg through the aire, yet they ſhal be gathered together again, that they may liue vnder their head in life euerlaſting, and enioy the enheritance which they haue hoped for. For the purpoſe of Chriſte was to comfort his diſciples, leaſt the great affliction of the Church ſhould diſmaye them. VVherefore ſo oft as we ſee the Church eyther moleſted by the ſubtilty of Sathan, or torne aſunder by the crueltie of the wicked, or troubled by falſe doctrines, or toſſed with ſtormes, let vs learne to looke to this gathering together. And if this ſeeme incredible to vs, let the power of the Aungels helpe vs, which Chriſt dooth therefore propoſe to lift vs vp aboue all meanes that man can yeelde. For though the Church through the malice of men is nowe vexed, and is diuerſe times driuen to flighte, and baniſhed, and being toſſed with the waues is bruiſed, and miſerably torne aſunder, and hath nothing certeine in the world, yet we muſt bee of good courage: for the Lord will gather it togeather, not by the helpe of man, but with an heauenly power, which cannot by any meanes bee hindered.

LV. 28. And when theſe thinges ſhall beginne to come to paſſe. Luke dooth more euidently ſet downe that conſolation, wherewith Chriſte maketh gladde the hearts of his diſciples. For though this ſentence hath nothing in it contrary to the words of Matthew, which we expounded euē now: yet he ſheweth more plainely to what end it is ſaid, that the Aungels ſhal come to gather the electe together. For it was neceſſary that the ioy of the godly ſhould be oppoſed againſte the ſorrow and trouble common to the world, and that the difference ſhould bee noted betweene them, and the reprobate, leaſt they ſhould bee afraide of the comming of Chriſte. VVe know that the ſcripture doth not onely ſpeake diuerſly of the laſte iudgement, but of all things which the Lord doth put dayly in practiſe, accordingly as he directeth his ſpeach either to the faithfull or to the vnbeleeuers. VVhat haue you to doe with the day of the Lord? (ſaieth the Prophet Amos, 5. 18) that is a cloudy day of darkenes, and not of light, of ſorrow, and not of ioy, of deſtruction, and not of ſaluation. Contrariwiſe, the Prophet Zachary 9.9. commaundeth the daughter of Syon to reioyce for the comming of her king. And good cauſe why: for (as Iſaias, 35.4. ſaieth) that day which bringeth wrath and vengaunce to the reprobate, is a daye of mercy and redemption to the faithfull. Chriſte therefore declareth that the light of ioy ſhal ariſe at his comming to his, ſo that as the wicked ſhalbe confounded with feare, ſo they ſhal reioice, becauſe their ſaluation is neere. Therefore Paule, 1. Cor. 1. 7. giueth them this note, that they ſhuld watch for the day and comming of the Lord. For both their crowne and their full felycitie & ioy is deferred, 2. Tim. 4. 8. Therefore it is heere called the redemption, (as to the Rom. 8. 22) becauſe that we ſhall then truely and fully enioy that deliuerance, which Chriſt hath obtained. VVherefore let our eares be ready open nowe to heare the ſound of the Aungelles trumpe, which ſhall not onely be ſounded to amaze the reprobate with the feare of death, but to call the electe to the ſecond life: that is, thoſe whom the Lord quickneth with the voice of the Goſpel, he calleth to enioye that life. For it is a ſigne of infidelytie, to be afrayde when the Sonne of GOD is neere at hande to ſaue vs.

So in like manner, when yee ſee theſe thinges come to paſſe, know that the kingdome of God is neere euen at the dores.*	30. VVhen they nowe ſhoote forth, ye now ſeeing them, knowe of your owne ſelues, that ſommer is then neere.
34. Verely I ſay vnto you, this generation ſhal not paſſe, tyll all theſe things bee done.	30. Verely, I ſay vnto you that this generation ſhall not paſſe, till all theſe things be done.	31. So likwiſe yee, when ye ſee theſe thinges come to paſſe, know ye that the kingdom of God is neere.
35. Heauen and earth ſhall paſſe away: but my word ſhal not paſſe away.	31. Heauen and earth ſhall paſſe away, but my wordes ſhall not paſſe away.	32. Verely I ſay vnto you, this age ſhall not paſſe, till all theſe thinges bee done.
36. But of that daye and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels of heauen, but my father only.	32. But of that day & houre knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heauen, neither the Sonne himſelfe, ſaue the father.	33. Heauen and earth ſhall paſſe away, but my wordes ſhall not paſſe away.

I doe

I doe not knowe whether the ſigne mentioned is as euidente a token that the comming of Chriſte is at hande in that troubleſome eſtate, as we doe certeinely know that ſommar is at hand, when the trees beginne to wax greene: but Chriſt in my iudgement meaneth ſome other thing. For whē as the trees nipt in together in winter by the force of the cold, and the hardnes being diſſolued in the ſpringe, they ſeeme to be more brittle, and doe alſo open that the young boughes may haue paſſage: ſo the force and ſtrength of the Church is nothinge hindred, or weakened by afflictions, as manne woulde iudge. For as the inwarde ſappe ſpread through the bodye of the tree, after it waxeth tender, gathereth ſtrēgth, and cauſeth that to ſpring, which was almoſte dead: ſo the Lorde reſtoreth his children fullye from that corruption of the outward manne. The ſumme is, that menne ſhould not thinke that the Church ſhould be deſtroyed by reaſon of the weake and frayle eſtate of the ſame, but they ſhould rather hope for immortall glorye, whereunto the Lorde by the croſſe and afflictions prepareth his. For that which Paule ſpeaketh of the ſeuerall members, muſte bee fulfilled in the whole bodye: for if the outwarde manne periſhe, yet the inwarde manne is renewed daylye, 2. Corinthians, 4. 16. But that whiche is more obſcurelye reported by Matthewe and Marke, Knowe you that it is neere, euen at the doores, is more plainelye expounded by Luke, that the kingdome of God is at hande. And the kingdome of GOD is not to be taken for the beginning of the ſame (as it is ofte otherwhere) but for the full perfection of the ſame, and that according to their ſenſe, whom Chriſt taught. For they did not apprehend the kingdome of G O D in the Goſpell, in peace and ioye of fayth, and in ſpirituall ryghteouſneſſe: but they ſoughte for that bleſſed reſte and glory, whiche was layde vppe vnder hope, vntyll that laſt daye.

34. This generation ſhall not paſſe. Though Chriſte ſpeaketh thus vniuerſally, yet hee doth not generally meane al the miſeries of the church: but ſimplye ſaieth, that before this one age ſhal paſſe, whatſoeuer he hath ſpoken, ſhall be approued by the ſucceſſe. For within fiftie yeares the citie was deſtroyed, the Temple ouerthrowne, and the whole kingdome was miſerably waſted. The world in her pride lifted vp her ſelfe againſt God, it was alſo extreamely bent to ouerthrow the doctrine of ſaluation, falſe teachers aroſe, whiche peruerted the ſincere Goſpell with theyr falſehoodes, relygion was wonderfullye ſhaken, and the whole companye of the godly was miſerably vexed. And though thoſe euilles continued manye ages after: yet Chriſte ſpake truelye, that the faythfull ſhoulde before the ende of that one age feele in deede & by true experience, howe true his propheſie was. For the Apoſtles ſuffered the ſame thinges, which we ſee at this daye. But it was not the purpoſe of Chriſte to promiſe his Diſciples, that their calamities ſhould ſhortly haue an end: for ſo hee ſhould haue beene contrary to himſelfe: (for hee ſayde before that the ende was not yet:) but that hee might encourage them to bear with patience, hee expreſſlye ſaide that it beelonged to this their age. Therefore the meaning is, that this propheſie is not of euilles a farre off, which the poſteritie ſhould ſee manye ages after, but of thoſe which doe nowe hange ouer them in great aboundaunce: ſo that there is no myſe-

rye, which that present age shoulde not taste of. Yet the Lorde heaping all kinde of miseries vppon one age, doth not free the posteritie from thē, but only commandeth his disciples to prepare themselues constantly to beare al things.

35. Heauen and earth shall passe. That his woordes myght bee of the more credite, hee proueth the certeintie of them by comparison: namelye, that it is more certeine and sure then the frame of the whole world. But the interpreters doe diuersely expounde this manner of speach. For some doe referre the passinge of the heauen and earth to the laste daye, when the transitory estate of them shalbe abolyshed. Others doe expounde it thus, that the whole frame of the woorlde shall perishe rather then that prophesie shoulde passe awaye, whiche wee hearde euen now.

But beecause that it is not to bee doubted, but that Christe purposed to moue the mindes of his Disciples to looke vppe aboue the woride, I thinke that hee noteth the continuall alterations, which are seene in the woorlde: as if hee shoulde haue sayde that his woordes muste not bee valued by the vncerteine and vnconstante estate of the woorlde. For we knowe that in the chaunge and alteration of the worlde howe readye our mindes are to bee carryed awaye. Therefore Christe forbiddeth his Disciples to bee carried awaye with the fashion of the worlde, but to looke aloste as it were into the glasses of Gods prouidence, which hath foretolde what thinges shall come to passe. Yet there is verye profitable doctrine to bee gathered out of this place, that our saluation, (beecause it is estáblyshed vppon the promises of Christe) dooth not ebbe and flowe with the vnconstaunt worlde, but standeth sure: so also our fayth must ascende vp aboue the heauen and earth to Christ himselfe.

36. But of that daye and howre no manne knoweth, no not the Aungels. Christe meant by this sentence to holde the mindes of the faythfull in suspēce, leaste in a vayne imagination they shoulde appoynte some certeine tyme for the last redemption. VVee knowe howe our witte dooth wander, and what a vaine desire wee haue to knowe more then beecommeth vs. Christe also sawe that his Disciples hasted to tryumph before the time. Therefore he woulde that the daye of his comming should be so hoped for and desired, that yet no manne shoulde be so bold, as to aske when he should come. Also hee woulde that his Disciples shoulde so walke in the light of fayth, that they being vncerteine of the tyme, shoulde patientlye waite for his appearaunce. Therefore we must take heede that wee bee not more curyous about the momentes and poyntes of times, then the Lorde alloweth vs. For the chiefe parte of our wisdome consisteth in this, that we do soberly keepe our selues within the limits of the Word of God.

Further, that menne should not be troubled, because they knowe not that day, Christ accompanieth the angels with them. For it were a point of too much pride and of wicked curiosity, for vs, which creepe vppon the earth to desire that more should be reuealed to vs, then is to the Angels which are in heauen.

Marke addeth The Sonne of manne also. Yea hee were thrise and foure times madde, which could not be content with this ignoraunce, whiche the sonne of God himselfe refused not for our sake. But becausse that many thought this vnmeete for Christ, they endeuoured to mollifie the hardnesse of this speach with their comment. And it may bee that they were driuen to seeke this shift by the lewdnesse of the Arrians, whoe by this place went about to proue that Christ is not true & onely god: therfore in their opinio christ knew not the last day, because hee reuealed it not vnto others. But sith it is plaine, that Christ and the Aungelles were ignoraunt of it alike, wee muste seeke for a more apte expositio of the same, and before that I will sette it down, I will briefly take away their obiections, which thinke it a reproach for the sonne of God, if it should be sayd that there were any ignoraunce in him. That which they doe obiect first, is easily aunswered. For wee knowe that the two natures in Christe were so ioyned in one person, that yet either of them hadde the propertie remaininge to it selfe: and especiallye the Godheade gaue place, and shewed not it selfe, so ofte as the humane nature wrought seuerally that, which appertained thereunto, for the performaunce of the office of the Mediatour. VVherfore there was no absurditie in that, that Christ, who knew all thinges, was yet ignoraunt of something, according to the iudgement of man: for otherwise he could not haue beene subiect to sorrow and griefe, and like vnto vs. And that which some do obiect is very absurd, that Christ could not be ignoraunt, because that it is a punishment for sinne. And first they do trifle very fondly, when they say, that the ignoraunce of the Aungelles came of sinne: but they are as foolish in that other point, that they know not that Christ did therefore take our flesh vppon him, that he might beare vpon him the punishmẽts due for our sinnes. And that Christ knew not as he was man the latter day, did no more derogate from his diuine nature, then that he was mortall. But I doubt not, but that he had regard to that office, whiche was inioyned him by the father, as before when hee saide, that it was not his office to place these or those at his right hand & his left. For as I expounded it there, he did not simply say that he had nothing to do with that, but his meaning was, that he was not sent by the Father with this commaundement, so long as he was conuersant amongste mortall menne. So also doe I vnderstand this nowe, in respecte that hee came downe to vs to be a Mediatour, vntill he had discharged that office, he hadde not that power giuen him, whiche hee tooke after that hee was ryssen agayn: for then he saith that power ouer al things was giuen vnto him.

Math. 24.	Mark. 13	Luke. 17.
37. But as the dayes of Noe were, so likewise shall the comming of the sonne of man be,	33. Take heede: watch and pray: for yee knowe not	26. And as it was in the daies of Noe, so shall it be in the daies of the sonne of man.
38 For as in the daies before the flond, they did eate & drink, marrye, and gaue in marriage, vnto the daye that Noe entred into the Arke,	when the time is	27. They eate, they dranke, they married wiues, and gaue in marriage vnto the daye that Noe entred into the Arke: and the floude came, and destroyed them al.
39. And		28. Likewise also, as it was in the dayes

39. And knew nothing til the floud came and tooke thē all away: so shal also the comming of the sonne of manne be.

40 Then two men shall bee in the fieldes, the one shal be receiued, the other shall be refused.

41. Two womenne shal be grinding at a mill: the one shal be receiued, & the other shall be refused.

42. VVake ther fore: for yee knowe not what heur your master will come.

dayes of Lot: they eate, they dranke, they bought, they solde, they planted, they buylt:

29. But in the daye that Lot went out of Sodome, it rained fire and brimstone from heauen, and destroyed them all.

30. After these examples shall it bee in the daye, when the Sonne of manne shal be reuealed.

31. At that day he that is vpon the house, and his stuffe in the house, lette him not come downe to take it out: and hee that is in the fielde likewise, let him not turne backe to that he left behind.

32. Remember Lots wife.

33. VVhosoeuer will seeke to saue his soule, shal lose it: and whosoeuer shal lose it, shall get it liue.

34. I tell you, in that night there shall be two in one bed: the one shalbe receiued, and the other shalbe left.

35. Two womenne shall be grinding together: the one shal bee taken, and the other shal be left.

36. Two shall be in the fielde: one shall be receiued, and an other shal be left.

Luke. 21.

34. Take heede to your selues, least at anye time your hearts be oppressed with surfeiting and drunkennes, and cares of this life, and least that day come on you at vnwares.

35. For as a snare shall it come on all them, that dwel on the face of the whole earth.

36. VVatch therefore and praye continuallye, that ye may be counted worthy to escape al these thinges that shal come to passe, and that ye may stand before the sonne of man.

37. As the dayes of Noe were. Though Christe did euen nowe holde the myndes of his Disciples in suspence, least they shoulde be too scrupulous in enquyring for the last day: yet least they shuld liue too carelesly in the pleasures of the world, he exhorteth thē now to watch. Therfore his will was to holde thē so vncerteine of his comming, that yet he wold haue them to watch for him dayly and euery moment. Further, that he might shake slouth from them, and moue them to watch the better, he ſaieth, that the ende ſhall come ſodenly, when the world ſhall be drowned in a beaſtly ſlouthfulneſſe: euen as in the daies of Noe all nations were ſwallowed vppe, when they looked not for it, but gorged themſelues in pleaſure and delightes. And ſhortly after the Sodomites when they wallowed in their own luſtes, and feared nothing, were conſumed with fire from heauen. Sith the world ſhal be giuen ſo to ſecuritie at the laſt day, there is no cauſe why the faythfull ſhould frame themſelues after the example of the common people. Nowe we vnderſtand the purpoſe of Chriſt, the faithfull muſt continually watch, leaſt they be ſodenly ouerthrowne: becauſe the day of the laſt iudgement ſhal come vppon them before it be thought of. Onely Luke maketh mention of Sodom, and that in the 17. chapter, where, by occaſion withoute regarde of the time, he rehearſeth this ſpeach of Chriſte. But there is no abſurditie in it, that two Euangeliſts hold themſelues ſatiſfied with one example, thogh Chriſte propoſed two, eſpeciallye ſith it is accorded in all poyntes, that all mankinde was ſodenly ſwallowed vp, when they wallowed in idlenes and pleaſure, a fewe onely excepted. And where he ſaieth that men eate, dranke, made marriages, and applyed themſelues to other worldly matters, when God deſtroyed the whole world with a flood, and Sodō with lightninges: he declareth by thoſe wordes, that they were ſo occupied in the commodities and pleaſures of this preſent life, as if that no chaunge were to be feared. And though hee doth preſently commaund his diſciples to take heede of ſurfeiting and cares of this world, yet hee doth not in this place directly condemn the intemperancie of that time: but rather their ſtubbornneſſe, whereby it came to paſſe, that they careleſly eſpying the threatninges of God, taſted of that horrible deſtruction. Therfore when they promiſe themſelues a durable eſtate, they ſtay not, but goe careleſly forwardes in their accuſtomed waies. But this was not corrupt, or to be condemned of it ſelfe, to prouide for their neceſſities, except they would oppoſe a groſſe blockiſhnes againſt the iudgemente of God, that they might runne blindly into all manner of ſinne, as if there were none in heauen to reuenge it. So Chriſt doth now declare that the laſt age of the world ſhalbe altogeather blockiſhe, ſo that it ſhall thinke vppon nothinge but this preſent life, deferring their cares for a longe time, continuing the wonted courſe of their life, as if the earth ſhuld continue in one eſtate. The ſimilitudes are moſt apt: for if we ſet before our eyes what befell then, the beholding of the courſe of the worlde alwaies in one eſtate, ſhal not deceiue vs any more, to make vs beleeue that the world ſhall ſtand for euer. For within three dayes after that euery man poſſeſſed thoſe thinges which he hadde in great quietnes, the earth was drowned with water, and fiue cities were conſumed with fire.

39. They knewe nothing til the floud came. The fountaine and cauſe of their ignoraunce was incredulitie, which had blinded their mindes: as the Apoſtle dooth againe declare to the Hebrewes. 11:7. Noe by the eies of faith ſawe the ſecrete vengeaunce of God, when it was yet a farre off, ſo that he ſpeedily reuerenced the ſame. And Chriſt doth here cōpare Noe with the reſt of the world, and Lot with the Sodomites: that the faithfull might learne to be of good comfort, leaſt they ſhould wander with others to deſtruction. And it is to be noted, that the reprobate wallowed

ſtill in their ſinnes, becauſe the Lord did not vouchſafe in time conuenient to giue this profitable admonition to any other but his ſeruants: not that the ſloud which was to come was kept altogether ſecrete from the inhabitauntes of the earth: (for Noah by making of the Arke did ſette a feareful ſight before their eies aboue a hundred yeares:) but becauſe that one man was eſpecially admoniſhed by an Oracle from heauen of the deſtruction that ſhould come vpon the whole worlde, and was comforted with the hope to be ſaued. Now though the report of the laſt iudgment is commonly ſpoken of, yet becauſe that a fewe, which are taught of God, do know that Chriſte ſhall come as a iudge in his due time, it is meete that they ſhould be ſtirred vp with this ſinguler benefit of God, and that their ſenſes ſhould be ſharpened, leaſt they ſhould ouerwhelme themſelues in that ſlouthfulnes, which floweth euerye where. For Peter doth to this end compare the ark of Noe with our baptiſm, becauſe that a ſmall company of men ſeparated from the multitude was ſaued in the water, 1. Pet. 3. 20. Wherefore our ſoules muſt be ioyned to theſe few, if we deſire to eſcape ſafe.

40. Then two men ſhalbe in the fieldes, the one ſhalbe receiued. Luke ſetteth downe ſome other ſentences before he ſpeaketh of this: the firſt whereof, as Matthew noteth, belongeth to the deſtruction of Hieruſalem, Hee that is vppon the houſe, let him not come downe into his houſe to take his ſtuffe out: But it may be that Chriſt applyed the ſame wordes to diuerſe things. There followeth in Luke an admonition, that the diſciples ſhould remember Lots wife: for that they ſhould forget thoſe thinges which are behinde them, and ſhould ſtriue to come to the end of that calling, which they haue from aboue. For therefore was Lots wife turnde into a pillar of ſalte, Gen. 19. 26. Becauſe that ſhe doubting that ſhee was come out of the citie in vaine, looked behinde her, which was a diſtruſt of the woorde of God. It is alſo probable that ſhee was drawne backe with the deſire of her neaſt, wherein ſhe had taken pleaſaunt reſt. Therefore ſith GOD would that there ſhould be ſette vppon her a leſſon to be learned for euer, the mindes muſt be ſtedfaſt and conſtant in faith, leaſt through diſtruſt they faint in the midſt of the courſe, then, they muſt be framed to perſeueraunce, that they may bydde the pleaſaunt baightes of this tranſitory lyfe farewell, may willingly and gladly haſte forwardes to heauē. Alſo the third ſentence which Luke addeth, that they ſhoulde looſe their ſoules, which would ſaue them, perſwadeth the faithful that the deſire of this earthly life ſhuld not hinder them, but that they ſhuld with courage haſten euē through the midſt of many deathes to that ſaluation, which is laid vp for them in heauē. And Chriſt doth very aptly deſcrib the frailty of this preſent life, whē he ſaith that the ſoules Zoogoneiſthai, (that is, are begotten or engendred to life,) whē they are loſt. For it is as much as if he ſhuld deny men life vpon the earth: becauſe that the renouncing of the world is the beginning of the true & perfect life. Afterwards Lu. addeth that which Mat. alſo hath, that men & women ſhal then be ſeparated, leaſt thoſe felowſhippes wherin men are mutually bound ech to other in this world, ſhuld be any hinderāce or ſtay vnto the godly. For it falleth out oft times that whil ſome do look vpon others, none of thē ſteppeth one foote forwards. Therfore þ euery man might be freed, & at liberty frō al lets, and might ſhift for himſelf with ſpeed, chriſt declareth þ of 2, þ one cōpanion ſhalbe taken and the other refuſed: not that it is neceſſary, that whoſoeuer are ioyned togeather, ſhould be ſo ſeparated (for a holy fellowſhippe in holineſſe, cauſeth an honeſt woman to ioyne with an honeſt man, and that children ſhuld follow the father:) but the purpoſe of Chriſt is onelye to cut away al lets, to exhort al to make ſpeede, leaſt that they which are now preſt forward, ſhould in vaine waite for their fellowes. Luke addeth this ſentence, VVhereſoeuer the body is, &c. it may not be reſtrained to the laſt day. But when the Diſciples asked this queſtion, VVhere Lorde? that is, how ſhal we ſtand faſt, when ſo many fall away, and remaine ſafe in ſo great ſtormes, and what places of defence ſhall we that are ioyned together hide our ſelues in. Chriſt (as it is reported by Matthew) ſaieth, that he is the banner and ſtandard of al aſſured vnitie, vnder the which al the children of God muſt be gathered.

42. VVatch therefore. The exhortation ſette downe by Luke is more playne and more ſpeciall, Take heede leaſt your heartes be oppreſſed with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſſe, and cares of this world. And certeinly he which byluing intemperately hath his ſenſes ouercome with meate and wine, can neuer lifte vp his minde to meditate vppon the heauenly life. But becauſe that there is no pleaſure of the fleſh, which dooth not make a man drunken, al they which woulde haſten to the kingdome of Chriſte muſte take dilygent heede that they ſurfeit not with the worlde. By that one word of watching in Matthew is noted that continuall diligence, which maketh vs to lift vppe our mindes to heauen, while wee liue as ſtraungers vppon earth.

In Marke the Diſciples are commaunded firſt to looke leaſt the deſtruction come vppon them vnawares or careleſſe: then they are commaunded to watch: becauſe that the mindes are made ſluggiſh and ſleepye, with diuerſe pleaſures of the fleſhe, which creepe vppon them. Afterwarde there followeth an exhortation to prayers: for it is neceſſarye to ſeeke for helpes other where, to ayde thoſe infirmities. Luke reporteth the forme of the prayer. Firſt, that GOD woulde vouchſafe to drawe vs out of ſo deepe and troubleſome a Labyrinth: then, that hee would place vs ſafe and ſure in the preſence of his ſonne: and we cannot be placed there, except we eſcape an infinite number of deathes. But becauſe it is not enough by eſcapinge manye daungers to paſſe ouer the courſe of this life, Chriſt noteth this as a principall matter, that we may ſtande before his iudgement ſeate.

Beecauſe yee knowe not the day. It is to bee noted that the vncerteintie of the time of the comming of Chriſt (which maketh the moſt part of men ſlouthfull) ſhould ſtirre vs vppe to be more dilygent in watchinge. For GOD of purpoſe woulde that it ſhoulde bee kept ſecrete from vs, that wee might neuer bee careleſſe, but watch continuallye. For what tryall ſhould there be of faith and patience, if the faithful al their life wandring idlely in their pleaſures, ſhoulde for the ſpace of three dayes beefore, prepare themſelues to meete with Chriſt.

Matth. 24.

43. Of this beſure, that if the good man of the houſe knewe at what watche the theefe would come, hee would ſurelye watch, & not ſuffer his houſe to be digged through.

44. Therfore be ye alſo ready: for in the houre that yee thinke not will the ſonne of man come.

45. VVho then is a faithfull ſeruaunt and wiſe, whom his maiſter hath made ruler ouer all his houſholde, to giue them meate in ſeaſon?

46 Bleſſed is that ſeruant, whome his maſter, when hee commeth, ſhal finde ſoo doing.

47 Verely I ſay vnto you, hee ſhal make him rular ouer all his goodes.

48 But if that euil ſeruaunt ſhall ſay in his hart, my maſter dooth deferre his comming.

49. And beginne to ſmyte his fellowes, and to eat and to drinke with the drunken:

50. that ſeruaunts maiſter will come in a day, when hee looketh not for him, and in an houre that he is not ware of.

51. And wil cut him off, & giue him his portion with hipocrites: there ſhalbe weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

Mark. 13.

34. As a manne going into a ſtrāg countrey, and leaueth his houſe, & giueth authoritie to his ſeruaunts & to euerye man his worke, and commandeth the porter to watch.

35 VVatch therfore, (for ye know not when the maſter of the houſe will come, at the euen, or at middenight, at the cocke crowing, or at the dawning)

36. Leaſte if hee come ſodenly, hee ſhoulde finde you ſleeping.

37. And thoſe things that I ſaye vnto you, I ſay vnto al men, watch.

Luke. 12.

35. Let your loynes be girde about, & your lightes burning.

36. And ye your ſelues like vnto men that waite for their maiſter, when hee wil return from the wedding, that when he commeth and knocketh, they may open to him immediately.

37. Bleſſed are thoſe ſeruauntes, whom the Lord when he commeth ſhall finde waking: verely I ſay vnto you, hee will gird himſelfe about, and make them to ſit downe at table, and will come forth and ſerue them.

38. And if he come in the ſecōd watch, or come in the third watch, & ſhal find them ſo, bleſſed are thoſe ſeruauntes.

39. Now vnderſtande this, that if the good man of the houſe had knowne at what heur the thief wold haue come, he woulde haue watched, and woulde not haue ſuffered his houſe to bee digged through.

40. Be ye alſo prepared therefore: for the Sonne of man wil come at an hour when yee thinke not.

41. Then Peter ſaid vnto him, maſter, telleſt thou this parable vnto vs, or euen to al.

42. And the Lorde ſaide, who is a faithful ſtewarde and wiſe, whome the maiſter ſhal make rular ouer his houſhold, to giue them their portion of meat in ſeaſon?

43. Bleſſed is that ſeruant, whom his maſter when he commeth, ſhal finde ſo doing.

44. Of a troeth I ſay vnto you, that he will make him rular ouer all that hee hath.

45 But if that ſeruant ſay in his hart, my maſter doth defer his comming, and ſhal beginne to ſmite the ſeruants, and maidens, and to eat and drink, & to be drunken, 46. The maiſter of that ſeruant will come in a day, when he thinketh not, and at an houre when hee is not ware of, and will cut him off, and giue him his portiō with ỹ vnbeleeuers.

47. And that ſeruant that knew his maiſters wil, and prepared not himſelf, neither did according to his will, ſhalbe beaten with many ſtripes.
48. But hee that knewe it not, and yet did committe thinges worthye of ſtripes: ſhalbe beaten with few ſtripes: for vnto whom ſoeuer muche is giuen, of him much ſhalbe required, and to whom men much commit, the more of him will they aske.
49. I am come to put fire on the earth, and what is my deſire, if it bee already kindled?
50. Notwithſtanding I muſt be baptiſed with a baptiſme, and howe am I grieued, vntill it be ended?

43 If the good man of the houſe knew. Luke doth not rehearſe this ſaying of Chriſt in the ſame place that Mathew doth. And no merualle: for in the 12. chapter hee gathering togeather the ſumme of the doctrine of many Sermons (as we haue ſhewed other where) hee ſetteth downe this parable alſo. Further, there is this general preface, that the diſciples with their loynes girded and their lightes burning in their hands, ſhuld waite for their maiſter. The which ſentence is aunſwered with that parable, which followeth a litle after in Mathew, of the wiſe Virginnes and the fooliſh. But Chriſt dooth aptly note in few woordes how the faythfull ſhould paſſe as ſtraungers through the world. For firſt hee oppoſeth the girding of the loynes againſt ſlouthfulnes, and the burning lights againſt the darkenes of ignoraunce. Firſt therefore Chriſt commandeth the diſciples to be ready and prepared to take a iourney, that they ſhoulde with ſpeede paſſe through the earth, not ſeeking for a reſting place any other where but in heauen. The warning is very profitable, for though the very prophane men can ſpeake of the ſhort and ſpeedy courſe of the life of man, yet we ſee how they reſt & tye themſelues vnto the earth. But god vouchſafeth not the honor of children to any, but to ſuch as do acknowledge themſelues to be ſtraungers vpon earth, and are not only ready at al times to go forward, but alſo do continually go forward in the way to heauen. But now becauſe they are compaſſed about with darkenes on euery ſide. ſo long as they liue in the world, he furniſheth thē with lightes as if they were to take a iourney in the night. So here is firſt commended a diligent ſpeedines to perfourme the courſe: then, a certeine direction, leaſt the faithful wandring out of the way, ſhould weary themſelues in vaine, for otherwiſe it were better to go faintly in the way, then raſhely to runne in a blinde and vnknown way. That which he ſpeaketh of the girding vp of the loynes, is a phraſe of ſpeach taken of the common maner of the eaſterne people.

LV. 36. And yee your ſelues like vnto men. Hee vſeth an other ſimilytude, which Mathew ſpeaketh not of, but is ſhorter in this matter. For he compareth himſelfe to a houſholder, who while he feaſteth merely at mar-marriages,or ſeeketh to be mery otherwhere frō home,will yet haue his ſeruauntes liue modeſtly and ſoberly at home,applying their lawful labours,and continually waiting for his returne. Therefore though the ſonne of God being taken vp into the bleſſed reſt of heauen,ſhould bee abſent from vs:yet becauſe he hath appoynted euery manne his office,it were abſurde for vs to ſleepe in idlenes. Furthermore,becauſe he promiſeth to returne,it behoueth vs to ſtand in a readines to receiue him at al times,leaſt he ſhould find vs ſleeping. For if a mortall man thinketh this due vnto him,that at what houre ſoeuer hee ſhall returne home, his ſeruauntes ſhould be ready to meete him,how much more lawfullye doth the Lord require this of his,that they ſhoulde be ſober and watch, alwayes waiting for his comming. And that hee might make them the willinger,he ſaieth that earthly maiſters are ſo delighted with this readineſſe of ſeruauntes,that they alſo will ſerue them:not that all maiſters doe vſe to doe thus, but becauſe that this dooth ſometimes fall out, that a maiſter,which is of a milde and gentle nature,dooth admitte his ſeruauntes to his owne table,as his fellowes. Yet it is demaunded, ſith that the Scripture dooth euery where call vs the children of light,Epheſians.5.8. 1.Theſſalonians 5.5. and the Lorde dooth alſo giue light vnto vs by his woorde, that wee might walke as in the mydſt of the daye,how ſhoulde the Lord compare our lyfe to night watches?But the anſwere to this obiection is eaſily made by the wordes of Peter, whoe teacheth that the worde of God ſhineth as a burning light,ſo that wee may ſee the way euen in a darke place,2.Pet.1.19.Therfore both muſt be noted,that we muſt take our iourney through the obſcure darkeneſſe of the world,and yet the light of the heauenlye doctrine going beefore vs,we are ſure from wandring out of the way,eſpecially ſith Chriſt him ſelfe doth the duety of the ſunne vnto vs.

MAT. 43. Of this bee ſure. Chriſt by an other ſimilitude doth exhort his diſciples to keepe diligēt watch.For if any mā heareth of theeues wandring abroad in the night, feare and ſuſpition will not ſuffer him to ſleepe. Therefore now ſith we are admoniſhed and expreſly tolde of this before,that Chriſt ſhall come as a theefe, we muſt alwayes watche, leaſt he finding vs ſleeping, ſhoulde ouerwhelme vs with the wicked. Our ſluggiſhnes cannot be excuſed,eſpecially ſith here is not only to be feared the breaking downe of a wall, nor the loſſe of our riches, but a deadly wound to the deſtruction of our ſoule,if we take not heede.The wordes therefore bend to this purpoſe, that Chriſtes warninge ſhoulde waken vs:for although the laſt iudgement be long deferred,yet it hangeth ouer vs continually,therefore the time not knowne,nor the neerenes of the daunger,it is abſurd that we ſhould become ſlouthfull.

45. VVho then is a faithfull ſeruaunt? Luke reporteth this place more expreſly,where Peters queſtion is ſet downe, which was the occaſion of a new parable.For when Chriſt had declared that there was no tyme for them to be ſlouthfull,in that his daungerous comming as a theefe,Peter demaunded whether this doctrine was generall,or belonged onelye to the twelue.For(as we haue ſeene in other places)the diſciples were wōt alwayes to thinke themſelues cuill dealt with, except they were exempted from the common ſorte of menne, and preferred farre aboue all others.

Nowe, when they are taught that their eſtate, is but ſmally to be deſired, and hath little pleaſure in it, as men amaſed, they looke hither and thither. But the anſweare of Chriſt tendeth to this, if it be meete that euery one of the common ſort ſhould watche, it may not be ſuffered that the Apoſtles ſhould be ſleepie. VVherefore as Chriſt had firſt generally exhorted his whole houſholde to watche for his comming: ſo nowe hee requireth that his chiefe ſeruaunts ſhould haue a ſingular care, whyche are therefore ſette aboue others, that by their example they might ſhewe others the waye of ſober attendance and ſober temperaunce. In theſe woordes he declareth that they had not an idle dignity beſtowed vppon them, that they might haue libertye to follow their pleaſures: but the greater degree of honour they were in, the greater burden was layed vppon them, and therefore hee teacheth them eſpecially to ſhewe theyr faithfulneſſe and wiſedome. VVho ſoeuer are called to honour, maye hereby learne, that they are the more bounde, not onely to labour for a faſhion: but to apply all theyr diligence and witte for the performance of their office. For when as it is ſufficient for priuate ſeruaunts to apply themſelues to their priuate woorke, it behooueth the ſtewardes to proceede further, for theyr office is to haue care of the whole houſholde. On the other ſide Chriſte vpbraideth their vnthankfulneſſe, that beinge preferred aboue others, anſweared not theyr honor. For wherfore doth the Lord preferre them before others, but that in faithfulneſſe & wiſedome they ſhoulde excell all men? All men are generally appoynted ſoberly and diligently to watche: but if the paſtours ſhuld become ſlouthfull, that ſhould be moſt vile and leaſt to be excuſed. Afterwarde, he alſo prouoketh them to be diligent for hope of rewarde.

48. But if that euill ſeruaunt ſhall ſay Chriſt in theſe wordes doeth briefly declare, whereof theſe euill ſeruaunts became ſo careleſſe: namely, while they truſting to the delaying of his comming, they doe willingly bryng the darkeneſſe vppon themſelues: they imagine that the day of reckening and account ſhall neuer come. Further, vnder pretence of the abſence of Chriſt, they perſwade themſelues that they ſhall eſcape vnpuniſhed. For it cannot be but that the looking for him, howe oft ſo euer it befal vs, ſhould ſhake off all ſluggiſhneſſe, and ſhoulde much more bridle wantonneſſe, and keepe vs from being caryed into wantonneſſe. And ſo there cannot be a more vehement and effectuall exhortation to mooue, then the ſetting foorth that ſeuere iudgement ſeat, which no manne can eſcape. VVherefore, that euery one of vs may diligently apply himſelfe to watch in the performance of his callinge, and that he may diligently and modeſtly keepe himſelfe within his bandes, lette vs thinke vppon the ſodaine comminge of that highe Lorde, in contempte whereof the reprobate do reioyce. Chriſt doeth alſo note by the way, how eaſie a matter it is for impudencie to growe, when a man hauing ſhaken off the bridle, hath caſt himſelf headlong to ſinne. For Chriſt doth not only ſay that he is a diſſolute & wicked ſeruãt, but ſuch a one as frowardly behaueth himſelfe to the troubling of the whole houſe, and wickedly abuſeth the authority cõmitted to him, exerciſing cruelty vpõ his fellow ſeruants, & wantonly waſting his maſters goods not without his reproche. For their terrour he addeth alſo a puniſhment, and that not a common one: namely, becauſe that ſuche vnbrideled wickedneſſe, deſerueth a greater puniſhment.

LV. 47. And that seruaunt. There is great weight in this circumſtaunce, which is onely added by Luke that if any man ſhall wittinglye and willingly contemne the Lorde, ſo, hee is worthy of the greater puniſhment. For the compariſon of the greater and the leſſe is made to this ende, if the ſeruaunt which ſinneth of ignoraunce eſcapeth not puniſhment, what ſhall become of that peruerſe and diſobedient ſeruaunt, who of ſette purpoſe treadeth as it were his maiſters power vnder his feete. And it muſt be remembred, that they which are ſette vp to rule & gouerne the Church, ſinne not of ignoraunce, but doe peruerſelye and wickedly defraud their Lord. Yet hereof may this generall doctrine be gathered, that it is a vaine ſhift for men, vnder the pretence of ignorance to free themſelues from guiltines. For if mortall man doth callenge this right vnto himſelfe, that he will examine his ſeruauntes according to his owne wil, leaſt any thing be diſorderly and confuſedly done: how much more authority hath the Son of God, ſo that whoſoeuer will ſerue him, ſhould carefully deſire to be inſtructed in his commaundementes? They may not vncerteinely at their own pleaſure doe what they wil, but they muſt be wholly at his appoyntment, eſpecially when as hee commaundeth vs what muſt bee done, and dooth alwayes aunſwere louingly to them that ſeeke vnto him. It is certeine that our ignoraunce is alwaies a companion of careleſſe and groſſe negligence. VVe ſee that this is but a vaine defence: that hee is not to bee blamed, who ſinned of ignoraunce: when as the heauenly iudge ſaieth the contrary: for though ſuch faults ſhall haue leſſe puniſhment, yet they ſhall not go altogether vnpuniſhed. But now if ignoraunce dooth not excuſe, how horrible a vengeaunce ſhal fal vpon them, which ſinne of ſet purpoſe, and do furiouſly run headlõg againſt their owne conſcience to prouoke God. VVherefore the more knowledge any man hath, ſo much the greater is his ſinne, excepte that obedience dooth follow his knowledge. VVhereby it appeareth what a vile and vaine excuſe they make, who refuſing at this day the cleare light of the Goſpel, doe maintaine their frowardnes with the ignoraunce of the Fathers: as if þ the ſhielde of ignorance were ſtreng enough to beare off the iudgement of God. But graunt that the faultes of ſuch offenders were ſpared, it were not equitie that the ſame pardon ſhuld be graunted to them which ſinne willingly, when as of purpoſed malice they rage againſt God.

48. To whome ſoeuer much is giuen. Chriſt teacheth by an other circumſtaunce, that they which are choſen Diſciples ſhall bee more grieuouſlye punyſhed, if that neglectinge their callinge, they ſhall wantonlye giue themſelues to all lycentiouſneſſe: for the greater any manne is, ſo much the more hee muſt thinke is committed vnto him, and of this condition, that in time to come he muſt yeelde an account. VVherfore the greater giftes any of vs hath, if as a fielde tyld with great charge, hee yeelde not aboundaunce of encreaſe vnto the Lorde, it ſhall coſt him much, eyther for his vnprofitable ſuppreſsing of that grace, or for the abuſing of it prophanely.

49. I am come to put fire on the earth. It may be eaſilye gathered by this clauſe, that this was one of Chriſtes laſt Sermons, & was not ſet down by Luke in the right time. But the meaning is, that Chriſte broughte greate trouble into the woorlde, as if that heauen and earth ſhoulde meete together. For the Goſpel is Metaphorically compared to fire, becauſe that it doeth violently alter the ſhew of things. Therefore, wheras the Apoſtles falſly imagined that the kingdome of heauen ſhould come and take them while they were ſleeping quietly, Chriſte ſetteth before them a terrible fire, wherewith the worlde muſt firſt be burnt. And becauſe that now the beginnings did but then appeare, Chriſt doth thereby encourage his diſciples, becauſe they ſhould feele the preſent power of the Goſpell. VVhen as (ſayeth he) the great ſtirres begin to waxe hotte, you muſt not be afraid, but rather of good cõfort therfore: and I reioyce to ſee this fruite of my labour. Now it behoooueth all the miniſters of the Goſpel to apply this vnto themſelues: that when the worlde is troubled, they ſhould the diligentlier apply their calling. Further it is to be noted, that with the ſame fire of the doctrine (while it generally burneth euery thing,) the chaffe and ſtubble ſhall be conſumed, and the gold and ſiluer purged.

50. I muſt be baptiſed with a baptiſme. Chriſt by theſe woordes declareth that the laſt woorke which remaineth for him to doe, is that he ſhoulde by his death conſecrate the renewing of the world, for becauſe that ſhaking whereof hee maketh mention, was fearefull, and that burninge of mankinde full of terrour, hee preſently declareth that the firſte fruites ſhould be offered vppe in his owne perſon, leaſt that it ſhuld afterwardes ſeeme grieuous to his diſciples, to beare any part of the ſame. He compareth death (as other wher) to baptiſm, becauſe that the children of God, being by the death of the fleſh ſwallowed vp for a time, they doe ſhortly after riſe againe to life, ſo that death is nothinge elſe but a paſſage through the midſt of waters. And he ſayeth that he is grieued vntill hee be thus baptiſed, that therby he may mooue euery one of vs after his example to be ready as well to beare the croſſe as to ſuffer death. Not that any man can by nature deſire death, or any alteration of the preſent eſtate: but becauſe that we ſee the celeſtiall glory and the bleſſed and immortall reſt on the further ſide of the ſhoare, for the deſire of the which things we do not onely die patiently, but we are caried alſo with greedineſſe thither, as faith and hope doe drawe vs.

Mathewe 25.	Marke.	Luke.
1. Then the kingdome of heauen ſhall bee lykened vnto tenne virgines, whiche tooke their lampes, and went to meete the bridegrome.
2. And fiue of them were wiſe, and fiue feolish.
3. The foolish tooke their lampes, but tooke none oyle with them.
4. But the wiſe tooke oyle in their veſſelles, wyth their lampes.
5. Nowe while the bridegrome taried longe, all ſlumbred and ſlept.
6. And at midnight there was a crie made: Beholde, the bridegrome commeth: goe out to meete him.
7. Then all theſe virgins aroſe, and trimmed their lampes.

8. And the foolish sayde to the wise: Giue vs of your oyle, for our lampes are out.
9. But the wise answeared, saying: VVe feare least there will not be enough for vs and you: but goe yee rather to them that sell, and buy for your selues.
10. And while they went to buy, the bridegrome came: and they that were ready, went in with him to the wedding, and the gate was shut.
11. Afterwardes came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to vs.
12. But he answeared and sayd: Verely I say vnto you, I know you not.
13. VVatch therefore: for yee knowe neither the day, nor the houre, when the sonne of man wil come.

Though this exhortation tendeth almoſt to the ſame ende that the former did, as it ſhall appeare by the concluſion, yet it is eſpecially added to confirme the faithfull in perſeuerance. The Lord knewe how weake mannes nature is: and that it cõmeth oft times to paſſe, that they do not only in long tracte of time waxe faint, but with a ſodaine loathſomneſſe they fall away. That he might cure this diſeaſe, he declareth that the diſciples are not well furniſhed, except they be able to beare a long while. VVhen as the end of this parable is vnderſtode, there is no cauſe to trauaile much in ſmal matters, which doe nothinge appertaine to Chriſtes meaning. Some do much trouble themſelues with the lampes, the veſſels and the oyle: but the ſimple and naturall ſumme is, that it is not ſufficient to vſe an earneſt diligence for a ſhort time, except there be a continuance in conſtancie without wearineſſe. And Chriſte declareth this by a moſt apt ſimilitude. Hee had exhorted his diſciples a little before, to be furniſhed with lights, that they might paſſe through obſcure and darke places: but becauſe that if oyle be nor ſupplied, the matche of the lampe doeth by little and little waxe dry, and loſeth the light, Chriſt ſayth now that the faithfull haue nede of a continuall ſupply of vertue, which may nouriſh the light which is kindled in their hearts: otherwiſe it wil come to paſſe, that theyr frowardneſſe will fall awaye in the middeſt of the courſe.

1. The kingdome of heauen shall be likened. By this title he meaneth the eſtate of the Church to come, which was gathered by the fauorable mercies of the Meſsias. And he vſeth this ſo notable a teſtimony of ſet purpoſe, leaſt the faithfull ſhoulde deceiue themſelues with a wrong deuice of a bleſſed perfection. Further, he boroweth this ſimilitude of the common vſe of life. For that was but a childiſh fantaſie of Hierome & ſuche others, which doe wreſt this to the praiſe of virginitie: when as Chriſte had no other purpoſe, then to eaſe them of the griefe of the wearineſſe which might be conceiued of the delay of his comming. Therefore hee ſayeth that he requireth nothing of vs, but that which was woont to bee performed by friends at ſolemne mariages. For it was an vſuall cuſtome that younge and delicate maidens ſhoulde for honour ſake brynge the bridegrome into the bride chamber. But the ſumme of the parable rendeth deth to this, that it is not ſufficient for vs to be once bent and ready to our calling, except we endure to the ende.

2. Fiue of them were wiſe. In the ende of the former chap. the Lord eſpecially willed the ſtewards to be wiſe: becauſe it is mete that the greater burden any man beareth, and the harder matters he dealeth in, the wiſelier he ſhuld behaue himſelf. But now he requireth that all the children of God ſhould be wiſe: leaſt, by running forwarde without aduice, they ſhuld caſt themſelues forth as a pray to ſathan. And he appoynteth this kind of wiſdom, that they ſhould take care to furniſh theſelues with neceſſary helps for the performāce of the iourney of their life. For though the time is ſhort, yet through the heat of our impatience, it ſeemeth to be too longe: alſo, oure wante is ſuche, as hathe neede of helpes euetye moment.

5. Now, while the bridegrome taried long. That ſome wreſt this ſleping into the worſt part, as if the faithfull togither with others, ſhuld giue themſelues to ſlouthfulneſſe, and apply themſelues to the vanities of the worlde, is farre from the meaning of Chriſt, and the courſe of the parable. It were more probable to vnderſtand it of death, which ceaſeth vpon the faithfull before the comming of Chriſte, for we muſt not onely wayte for ſaluation nowe, but when wee are dead and reſt in Chriſte. Yet I doe more ſimply vnderſtand it of the earthly affaires, wherein the faithfull are occupied of neceſsity, ſo long as they dwell in the fleſh. And thoughe they ſhould neuer forgette the kingdome of God, yet the wythdrawing of them by the affaires of this world, is not in vaine cōpared vnto ſlepe. For they cannot be ſo throughly bent to meete with Chriſt, but that diuers cares doe either withdrawe them, or make them ſlowe, or entangle them, whereby it commeth to paſſe, that wakinge, they are ſomewhat a ſleepe.

As concerninge the crye, I take it to bee ſpoken Metaphorically for the ſodaine comming. For we knowe that as oft as any new or vnwonted thing commeth to paſſe, menne vſe commonly to be troubled. The Lorde crieth vnto vs euery day, that he will come vnto vs ſhortly: but then the whole frame of the world ſhall ſound foorth, and hys fearefull Maieſtie ſhall ſo fill the heauen and the earth, that it ſhall not onely waken them that are a ſleepe, but ſhall bring foorth the deade out of theyr graues.

8. And the foolish sayd to the wise. Their too late repentance is heere reproued, which feele not their wants, before the gate is ſhutte againſt all remedies. For they are therfore condemned of folly, which prouide not for themſelues for a long time, becauſe that they do careleſly pleaſe thēſelues in their owne want, and they doe ſo paſſe the time wherein they ſhould make their gaine, that they contemne the helpes which are offred them. Therefore, becauſe they thinke not of getting oyle in time, Chriſt ſcorning their ouer late knowledge, declareth what puniſhments they ſhall receiue for theyr ſlouthfulneſſe: namely, that they ſhall finde themſelues empty and dry without fruite.

9. VVee feare leaſt there will not be enough for vs and you. VVee knowe that the Lorde doth therfore beſtowe his gifts diuerſly to euery man, according to his proper meaſure, that they might mutually help ech others, & beſtow that in cōmon, which is laid vp with either of them, and by this

meanes is nouriſhed in the Churche, the holy ſocietie of the members of the ſame. But Chriſte noteth heere the time when the burdens being taken away, he will call them all to his iudgement ſeat, that euery manne may receiue according as he hath behaued himſelfe in his body. Therefore he doeth rightly compare that portion of grace receiued and layde vppe with euery man, vnto prouiſion made for one manne in a iourney, which will not ſerue ſufficiently for moe. Furthermore, that whyche is preſently added, Goe yee, and buy for your ſelues, is not an admonition but an vpbraiding, in this ſenſe, you had a time to buy before, which you neglected: for then it was beſt to prouide oyle, but the want therof now cannot be recouered. The Papiſtes doe very fondly gather heereof, that the gifte of perſeuerance is gotten by our owne power or induſtrie: for in the woorde buying there is yet no price ſette downe: as it doth etuidently appeare by the Prophet Iſaiah, chap. 55. 1. VVhere the Lorde callinge vs to buy, requireth no recompence, but ſayeth that hee hathe wyne and milke in a readineſſe, which hee will giue freely. Therefore there is no other meanes of getting, then that we ſhuld receiue by faith that which is offered vs. At the length it followeth that the gate of the kingdom of heauen is ſhutte vppe againſte all ſuche as were euill prouided becauſe they fainted in the middeſt of the courſe. Neither muſt we ſeke here curiouſly, how Chriſt ſayeth that the fooliſh virgines went to buye: for it ſignifieth nothing elſe but that all ſhould be ſhut out of the kingdome of heauen, which ſhould not be ready at the very moment.

Mathewe 25.	Marke.	Luke 21.
31. And when the ſonne of man commeth in his glory, and all the holy Angels with him, then ſhall he ſit vpon the throne of his glory.		37. Now in the day time hee taughte in the temple, and at night, hee went out, and abode in the mount, that is called the mount of oliues.
32. And before him ſhalbe gathered all nations, and he ſhall ſeparate them one from an other, as a shepheard ſeparateth the sheepe from the goates.		38. And all the people came in the morning to him, to heare him in the temple.
33. And he ſhall ſet the sheepe on his right hand, and the goates on the left.
34. Then ſhall the king ſaye to them on his right hande: Come yee bleſſed of my father, inherite yee the kingdome prepared for you from the foundations of the world.
35. For I was an hungered, and yee gaue me meat: I thirſted, and yee gaue me drinke: I was a ſtranger, and yee lodged me.
36. I was naked, and yee cloathed me, I was ſicke and ye viſited mee: I was in priſon, and yee came vnto me.
37. Then ſhall the righteous anſweare him, ſaying: Lorde, when ſawe we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or a thirſt, and gaue thee drinke?
38. And when ſawe we thee a ſtranger, and lodged thee? or naked, and cloathed thee?
39. Or when ſawe wee thee ſicke or in priſon, and came came vnto thee?

40. And the king shall answear and say vnto them: Verely I say vnto you, in as muche as yee haue done it vnto one of the least of these my brethren, yee haue done it vnto me.

41. Then shall he say vnto them on the left hand: Depart from me yee cursſed, into euerlasting fire, which is prepared for the deuill and his angels.

42. For I was an hungred, and yee gaue me no meat: I thirsted, and yee gaue me no drinke.

43. I was a stranger, and ye lodged me not: I was naked, and ye cloathed me not, sicke and in prison, and yee visited me not.

44. Then shall they also answeare him, saying: Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, or a thirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sicke, or in prison, & did not minister vnto thee?

45. Then shall he answeare them, and say: Verily I say vnto you, in as muche as you did it not to one of the least of these, yee did it not to me.

46. And these shall go into euerlasting paine, and the righteous into life eternall.

Christ proſecuteth the ſame doctrine: and that which he firſt deſcribed by parables, he now expoũdeth plainly & without figures. The ſum is, that the faithful ſhould ſtir vp themſelues to the deſire of liuing holily & righteouſly, & that they ſhould with the eyes of faith looke vp to the heauẽly life, which now lieth hid, but ſhalbe at the length reuealed at the laſt cõming of Chriſt. For whẽ he ſaith that he ſhal then ſit in the throne of his glory, where he ſhal come with the angels, he oppoſeth this his laſt appearance, againſt the confuſed and diſordered troubles of the earthly warfare: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, that he did not therefore appeare, as if that he ſhuld haue ſet his kingdom preſently in an order: and therefore his diſciples haue nede of hope & patience, leaſt the long delay ſhould tire them out. Vvherby we gather that this is added again, that the diſciples being remoued frõ that error, of a preſent & ſoden felicity, ſhuld ſuſpẽd their minds vntil the ſecond cõming of Chriſt: and in the meane ſeaſon, that they ſhould not fal away nor waxe faint: therfore he ſayeth that he ſhal then at length be renouned by the name of a king. For although he beginneth his kingdõ vpon the earth, & ſitteth nowe at the right hãd of his father, that he might with great authority gouerne heauen & earth: yet, that his throne is not as yet erected in the ſight of mẽ, ſo that his diuine maieſty ſhal far more fully appear & ſhine in the laſt day thẽ now. For then ſhal the ful effect of his glory appear, which we taſt now only by faith. Therfore Chriſt ſitteth now in his throne in heauẽ, ſo far forth as it is neceſſary for him to raign for the brideling of his enemies & the defence of his church. But then he ſhal openly aſcende into his tribunall ſeat, that he may eſtabliſh a perfect order in heauẽ & earth, that he may tread his enemies vnder his fete, & that he may gather his faithfull ones into the fellowſhip of the eternal and bleſſed life: to be ſhort, he wil then ſhew forth in dede to what end his father hath giuen the kingdõ to him. He ſayth that he wil then come in his glory becauſe that while hee was uerſant vppon earth as a mortall man, he lay hidde vnder the contemptible habite of a ſeruaunt. And he calleth it his glory, which in an other place he attributeth to his father euen in the ſame ſenſe: for he ſimply meaneth the glory of God, which ſhone then onely in the father, when as it was hid in him.

1 32. And before him ſhalbe gathered all nations, and he ſhall ſeparate them. He extolleth his kingdome with great & royall titles, that the diſciples might learne to hope for an other felicity, then they had then cõceiued in their mindes. For this one thing ſufficed them, that their nation ſhould be deliuered from the miſeries wherwith it was then oppreſſed, that it myght appeare that God had not made his couenant in vaine, with Abraham and his poſterity. But Chriſt extendeth the frute of the redẽption which he bringeth further, becauſe that he ſhalbe the iudge of the whole world. Then, that he might exhort the faithful to liue godly, he ſaith that it ſhal not be common bothe to good and badde: for he will bring wyth hym the reward which is laid vp for them both. In ſumme, he ſayeth that the eſtate of his kingdome ſhall then be rightly ordred, when the rygheteous ſhall obtaine the crowne of glorye, and the wicked ſhall haue that reward paied them which they haue deſerued. Nowe, that ſeparation of the goates from the lambes which is deferred vnto that daye, declareth that the wicked are now mingled with the holy and godly men, to lyue together in one, and the ſame flock of God. And this compariſon ſemeth to be taken out of Ezechiel 34. 21. where the Lorde complaineth of the vntowardneſſe of the goates, which puſhe the leane ſheepe wyth theyr hornes, and ſpoyle the paſtures and trouble the water: and he ſaith that he will reuenge it. So that Chriſte his wordes doe tend to this, that the faithfull ſhoulde not thinke their eſtate to be too ſharpe, if nowe they be compelled to liue with goates, yea, and to abide many puſhes and troubles of them: then, that they ſhoulde take heede, leaſt the corruption of their ſinnes ſhould infecte them alſo: thirdly, that they might know that they looſe not their labour by liuing godly and righteouſly, for the difference ſhall appeare at the length.

34. Come ye bleſſed. The purpoſe of Chriſt muſt be remembred: for he willeth his diſciples to be now content with hope, and patiently, & with quiet mindes to wayte for the enioying of the celeſtiall kingdome: then he willeth them to goe earneſtly forwarde, and not to be weary of well doing. The latter parte is referred to this, that he promiſeth the enheritance of heauen to none, but to them which in good workes do go forwarde to the marke of that calling which is from aboue. But before that he will ſpeake of the rewarde of good woorkes, he ſheweth by the way that the ſpring of ſaluation ariſeth from an higher fountaine. For by calling them the bleſſed of the father, he declareth that their ſaluation proceedeth of the free fauour of God: for the bleſſed of God, and choſen, or beloued of God, is all one amongſt the Hebrewes. Further, not onely the faithfull haue vſed this phraſe of ſpeach, to expreſſe the grace of God towardes men, but they which had no taſte of true godlineſſe, helde yet this principle. Come in thou bleſſed of the Lorde, ſayde Laban to Abraham his ſeruaunt, Gen. 24. 31. We ſee that nature had taught them to vſe this title, that they might thereby yeelde the praiſe of all good things which they had receiued, to God.

Where-

VVherefore it is not to be doubted, but that Christ describing the saluation of the godly beginneth at the free loue of GOD, whereby they which by the direction of Gods spirite do aspire to righteousnesse in this life, are predestinated to life. Heereunto also appertaineth that which he sayeth a little after, that the kingdome was prepared for them from the beginning of the world, into the possession whereof they shall be sent at the last day. And though it may easily be obiected, that the rewarde was layde vppe before for their merites which shoulde come after, yet if any man will way the woordes without contention, he will graunt that it is a secreat commendation of the grace of God. For Christ also doeth not simply call the faithfull to possesse the kingdome, as if they haue gotten the same by their merites: but expresly sayeth that it shoulde be giuen as to heires. Yet there is an other end to be noted, whereunto the Lord had regarde, for though the life of the godly is nothinge else but a miserable and grieuous banishmēt, so that the earth can scarcely bear them: though they trauaile vnder a harde want, vnder reproaches and other troubles, that they may with a stronge and valiant minde ouercome these lettes, the Lord declareth that there is a kingdome prepared for them in an other place. And it is a notable exhortation to patience, when menne are certainly perswaded that they beare not in vaine. Therefore, least the pride of the wicked wherin they doe glory now, should make our minds to fainte, and least our owne miseries shoulde weaken our hope, lette vs alwayes remember that enheritance which remaineth for vs in heauen: for it dependeth not of any doubtfull case, but it was prepared for vs of God before we were borne, yea I say for euery one of the electe, because that Christ doeth heere call them the blessed of the father. But there is no absurdity in this, that it is onely sayd heere, that the kingdome was prepared from the beginning of the world, and in an other place: Before the creation of the heauen and the earth. For Christ doth not here set downe the poynt of time, when the inheritaunce of eternall life was prepared for the children of God, but only calleth vs to the cōsideration of the fatherly care of God, wherein he embraced vs before we were borne: and hee doeth thereby confirme the assurance of our hope, so that the troublesome stormes of the world cannot ouerthrow our life.

I was an hungered. If the disputation heere had beene of the cause of our saluation, the Papists had not gathered amisse, that we shoulde merite eternall life by good woorkes, but when as Christ had no other purpose but to exhort his disciples to endeuour to liue well and righteously, it is yll gathered by his woordes what the merites of workes shoulde auaile. They rest vppon the woorde causall, which is but a weake stay: for wee knowe that it doeth not alwayes note the cause, but rather the consequence, when as eternall life is promised to the righteous. But there is a plainer answeare. For we deny not but that there is a rewarde promised to good woorkes, but it is of fauour, because it dependeth of the adoption. Paule in the 2. Tim. 4. 8. reioyceth that there was a crowne of righteousnesse laied vppe for him. But whereof gathered hee thys comforte, but of this, that he was a member of Iesus Christ, who is the onely heire of the heauenly kingdome? Hee sayeth that the iust iudge will giue hym that crowne, but howe should he come by that rewarde, but because hee was adopted of free grace, and endowed with that righteousnes wherwhereof we all are voide? Therefore theſe two things muſt be conſidered, that the faithfull are called to the poſſeſsion of the kingdome of heauen, in reſpecte of good woorkes, not becauſe they ſhould deſerue it by the righteouſneſſe of workes, or becauſe that they ſhoulde be the authours of the getting of it for themſelues: but becauſe that God doeth iuſtifie them whome he hath firſt choſen. Furthermore, though that by the direction of the ſpirit they ſhuld aſpire to the loue of righteouſneſſe: yet becauſe they doe neuer ſatiſfie the lawe of God, there is no reward due to them, but that is called a rewarde whiche is giuen freely. But Chriſte doeth not recken vppe all the partes of a godly and a holy life: but doeth only note for example ſake ſome poyntes of charitye, whereby we declare that we doe worſhip God. For though the woorſhippe of God excelleth the loue of menne, and therefore faith and inuocation is more to be deſired then almes: yet Chriſte doeth not without cauſe ſette downe the teſtimonies of true rightuouſneſſe which are more apparant to be ſeene. If any man deſpiſing God, ſhould only deale wel with men, ſuch mercy ſhuld nothing auaile for the appeaſing of God, becauſe that in the meane ſeaſon he is defrauded of his owne right. Chriſte therefore doeth not ſay that the ſumme of righteouſneſſe conſiſteth in almes, but by ſignes which may be moſte eaſily ſeene, he declareth what it is to liue godly and rightuouſly: ſo that truely the faithfull doe not only profeſſe with the mouth, but by diligent exerciſes they doe ſhewe that they doe worſhip God. VVherfore thoſe fantaſticall men do very prepoſterouſly vnder pretence of this place withdrawe themſelues, both from the hearing of the word, and alſo from receiuing the holy ſupper: for vnder the ſame coloure they might alſo caſt away faith and bearing of the croſſe, and prayers, & chaſtitie. But Chriſt meant nothing leſſe, then to reſtrain to a part of the ſeconde table, the rule of holy life, which is contained in the two tables of the law. The Monkes alſo and ſuch like raſcalles haue ſottiſhly ſette downe to themſelues ſixe woorkes of mercy, becauſe that Chriſt maketh mention of no mo. As if that children might not plainly ſee, that by the figure Synecdoche, al the workes of charity are here cõmended. For to comfort the ſorrowfull, to helpe them that be vniuſtly oppreſſed: to aid the ſimple with counſel, to pull the poore wretches out of the iawes of the wolues is a woorke of mercy, as much worthy to be praiſed, as to cloath the naked, or to feede the hungry. But may a man thinke, that Chriſte commending charity vnto vs, woulde exclude thoſe dueties which appertaine to the worſhip of God: yet he telleth his diſciples, that this ſhalbe a lawful trial of a holy life, if they exerciſe theſelues in charity, according to that ſaying of the Prophet, I will haue mercy & not ſacrifice, Hoſe 6. 6. Namely, becauſe that the hypocrites being couetous, cruel, deceitfull, ſnatching to them by violence, & proud, do yet vnder a vaine pompe of ceremonies, diſſemble a kinde of holines. VVherby we do alſo gather, if we deſire to haue our life approoued before the chiefe iudge, we muſt not wander in our owne fantaſies, but rather loke what he doeth eſpecially require of vs. For who ſoeuer ſhal depart from his commaundements, althoughe they ſweate and tire out themſelues in their fained workes, they ſhal yet at the length heare this at the laſt day: who required theſe things at your hand, Iſa. 1. 12.

37. Then ſhal they anſwer. Chriſt bringeth in the righteous doubting, who

Yet are not ignorant, but that he accoũteth what soeuer is giuen to men, as bestowed vpon himselfe. But because that this is not so throughly setled in their minds as was mete, therfore he setteth forth the same by raising the persons, as it were to speake it: for wherof commeth it, that we are so slow and slacke to do wel, but because that promisse is not rightly setled in our harts, that God wil in time to come recõpence with gaine, that which we bestow vpon the poore? So then this admiration which Christ setteth downe, tendeth to this purpose, to teache vs to arise aboue the capacity of our flesh, so oft as our pore brethren do craue our aid & helpe, that the beholding of the miserable man, should not make vs slacke or slow, to do wel. 39. Verely I say vnto you. As Christ taught euen now by a figure, that we doe not yet vnderstand, how much he estemeth the dueties of charity: so now he openly declareth that he accepteth as done to him, what things so euer we bestow vpon his children, and wil recõpence them to vs. And we were too too careles, if this sentẽce could not frame our bowels to compasion, that Christ is either neglected, or worshipped in their person which nead our helpe. Therfore, so oft as we do waxe slow to help the pore, let vs loke vpon the sonne of God, to whom if any thing shoulde be denied it were most cruell sacrilege. In these wordes he also declareth, that he acknowledgeth those benefites as done to him, which were done freely without regarde of any rewarde. And truely, when he commandeth to do good to the hungry and the naked, & strangers, and prisoners, of whom there can be no hope of recõpence, it is necessary to loke to him, who of his owne accord bindeth himselfe vnto vs, and that which otherwise might seeme to be lost, he suffereth to be reckened amongst his accounts. But he doth here by name commend the faithful onely: not that he would that others shuld be altogither despised, but because that the nearer any manne approcheth vnto God, so much the dearer he must be to vs. For though there is a common band of society, yet the children of God haue a more strong and sacred knot of frendship amongst thẽselues. Therefore sith it is mete to prefer them that are of the houshold of faith before strangers, Christ doth especially name them. And though the purpose was to perswade the rich, & them which haue abundãce to supply & ease the want of the brethren: yet the pore & miserable haue no smal cõfort hereby, for that though they be reiected & despised of the world, yet they are as pretious to the son of god as his own mẽbers. And surely, by calling them brethrẽ, he vouchsafeth them a wonderful honor. 41. Depart from me ye cursed. Now he descendeth to the reprobate, who were so dronken with their transitory prosperity, that they dreamed that they should be alwaies blessed. Therfore he sayth that he wil come to be their iudge, to shake away their pleasures wherin they are now drowned: Not that he wouldo terrifie them wyth the tidings of his commynge (which seeme to haue made a couenante with death, and doe harden themselues in securitye) but that the faithfull being forewarned of their horrible destructiõ, might not enuie their present estate. For as promisses are necessary for vs to prouoke and stir vs vp to desire to liue wel: so likewise are the threatnings, to keepe vs in carefulnesse & feare. Therfore we are taught how much it is to be desired to be ioyned with the sonne of God: because that eternal destruction and the torment of fire remaineth for them, whom he reiecteth frõ him at the last day. And then he wil cõmand the wicked to depart frõ him, because that many hypocrites are now so mixed amõg the iust, as if ther were great affinity betwene Christ and them. Further, we haue sayd other where, that the word fire doth metaphorically set foorth the sharpnesse of the punishment, which our sences cannot cõprehend. VVherfore it is a vain thing subtilly to inquire either of the matter, or of the fourm of this fire, as the sophisters do. For, so likewise should there be question had of the worm, which Isai. 66. 24. ioyneth with the fire. Furthermore the same prophet in the 30. 33. doth plainly declare that it is a metaphorical kind of speach: for he compareth the spirit of God to a pair of bellowes, wherwith the fire is kindled, & he addeth also brimstone. VVherfore by these wordes we may rather imagine then know the vengeance of God which shal light vpon the wicked, which exceeding al other torments, may terrifie vs.

But heere is to bee noted the perpetuitye of the fire, as of the glorye which was promised euen now to the faithful. VVhich is prepared for the deuil. Christ opposeth the deuil against himselfe, as the head and chiefe of all the reprobate. For though all the angels which fel, are deuils, yet many places of the scripture do referre a chiefty to one, who gathereth all the wicked vnder him, as into one body to destruction: euẽ as the faithful in life, become one togither vnder Christ, and doe grow vnder him, vntil they become perfecte, and are throughly knitte to God by him. But Christ sayeth nowe, that hell is prepared for the deuil, that the wicked might be cut of hope of escaping the same, when they hear that they are appoynted to the same punishment with the deuill, who as it is well knowen, is already enthralled and chained in hell without hope of deliuerance. And though some do by the angels of the deuill vnderstãd wicked men, yet it is more probable that Christ speaketh only of the deuils. And so in these words he doeth secreatly reproue men, who being called by the Gospell to the hope of saluation, had rather perish wyth sathan, and reiecting the authour of saluation, doe willingly cast themselues into this miserable lotte. Not that they were not ordained to destruction as well as the deuill: but because that in their wickednesse the cause of their destruction doeth euidently appeare, while they refuse the grace calling them. Therefore though the reprobate were in the secreat iudgement of God ordained to death before they were borne, yet so long as life is offered them, they are not accounted heires of death, or companions of Sathan: but their destruction which was hid before, appeareth and is discouered by their incredulitie.

44. Then shall they answear. The same figure of setting them to speake in their owne persons, which was vsed before, Christ doth now againe rehearse, to let the reprobate vnderstand, that those vaine pretences wherwith they doe nowe deceiue themselues, shall auaile them nothinge at the last day. For, whence commeth this so cruell pride against the poore, but because they thinke that they shall escape vnpunished. Therefore the Lorde, that he mighte driue away such deceitfull flatteries, forewarneth them that they shall feele at the length, (but to too late) that which they nowe doe not vouchsafe to thinke vppon: namely, that they which now doe seeme to bee suche abiectes, are as pretious to Christe, as hys owne members.

Mathew 26.

1. And it came to passe, when Iesus had finished al these sayings, he said vnto his disciples,
2. Yee knowe that within 2. dayes is the Passeouer, and the Sonne of man shall be deliuered to be crucified.
3. Then assembled togither the chiefe Priests and the Scribes, and the Elders of the people into the hal of the hie priest called Caiphas,
4. And consulted how they might take Iesus by subteltie, and kill him.
5. But they sayd, not on the feast day, least any vproare be amonge the people.
6. And when Iesus was in Bethania, in the house of Simō the leper,
7. There came vnto him a woman, which hadde a boxe of very costly oyntment, & powred it on his head, as he sate at the table.
8. And when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying: what needed this waste?
9 For this oyntment might haue beene solde for muche, and beene giuen to the poore.
10. And Iesus knowing it, sayde vnto them: why trouble yee the woman? for shee hath wrought a good woorke vppon me.
11. For yee haue the poore alwayes with you, but me shall ye not haue alwaies.
12. For, in that shee powred this oyntment on my bodye, shee did it to bury me.
13. Verely I say vnto you: wherfoeuer this Gospell shalbe preached throughout al the world, there shal also this that he hath done, be spoken of, for a memoriall of her.

Marke 14.

1. And two dayes after followed the feast of the Passeouer, and of vnleauened bread: and the hie Priestes and Scribes sought howe they might take him by craft, and put him to death.
2. But they sayd: not on the feast day, least there be any tumult among the people. 3. And when he was in Bethania, in the house of Simon the Leper, as hee sate at the Table, there came a woman hauing a boxe of oyntment of Spikenard, very costly, and shee brake the boxe, and powred it on his head.
4. Therefore some disdained among themselues, and sayde: To what end is this waste of oyntment?
5. For it might haue beene sold for more then three hundreth pence, and bene giuen to the pore, and they grudged against her.
6. But Iesus sayd, let her alone: why trouble yee her? for shee hath wrought a good woorke on me.
7. For ye haue the poore with you alwayes, and when ye will, ye may do them good, but me ye shal not haue alwaies.
8. Shee hathe done that shee coulde: shee came afore hande to annoynt my body to the burying.
9. Verely I say vnto you, wherefoeuer this Gospell shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that shee hath done, shal be spoken of in remembraunce of her.

Luke 22.

1. Now the feast of vnleauened bread drew neare, which is called the Passeouer.
2. And the hie priests & Scribes, sought howe they might kil him, for they feared the people.

Christ doth now again cōfirm that, which he forewarned his disciples of so oft before: but this last forewarning doth most euidently declare howe willingly he offered himselfe to death: and it was necessary that it should be so, because that God could not be appeased, but with a sacrifice of obedience. His

His minde was alſo, thereby to meete with that offence, leaſt the diſciples ſuppoſing that he was brought to death of neceſsity or conſtrainte ſhould fall away. So this ſentence was profitable two wayes: firſt, that it might be manifeſt that the ſonne of God did willingly ſubmit himſelf to death, that hee might reconcile the worlde vnto the father (for there was no other meanes whereby either the guiltineſſe of ſinnes coulde be waſhed away, or the righteouſneſſe obtained for vs:) then, that he dyed not as one oppreſſed ſo with violēce, which he could not eſcape: but becauſe that he offred himſelfe willingly to death. Therfore he ſayth that he cōmeth purpoſely to Hieruſalem to die there. For when as he was at liberty to go backe againe, and to paſſe away that time in ſome ſafe and ſecreat place, wittingly and willingly he goeth forth amongſt them euen in the appoynted time. And thoughe the diſciples profited nothing at that time by the warning that was giuen them of the obedience which he yelded to the father, yet afterwards their faith was muche ſtrengthened by this doctrine. As alſo at this day we receiue no ſmal profit therby: for it ſetteth before vs as in a liuely glaſſe, that freewil offering and ſacrifice, whereby all the tranſgreſsions of the worlde are blotted out: and we beholde the ſonne of god gladly and boldly, going forwarde to death, and now a conquerour of death.

3. Then aſſembled together. Mat. meaneth not that they were aſſembled in the ſpace of thoſe 2. dayes: but hee ſetteth downe this hyſtory, to declare that Chriſt was not told by mā of the day appoynted for his death. For by what coniectures could this haue beene gathered, when as the ennemies themſelues had purpoſed to defer the time? The meaning therfore is, that he ſpake by the ſpirite of propheſie of his death, when as no man could ſuſpect it to be ſo nie at hād. Further, Iohn ſetteth downe the cauſe why the Scribes and prieſts had this aſſembly: namely, becauſe that daily there was more concourſe of people to Chriſt. And then by the perſwaſion of Caiphas it was decreed that he ſhould die, becauſe that he could not be ouercome any way but by death: but they ſaw no fit and conuenient time, vntill that the feaſt being paſt, the people ſhould be departed. Hereby we gather, þ though thoſe hungry dogs did gredily hunt after the death of Chriſte, yea, though they fought the ſame outragiouſly, yet they were reſtrained with a ſecreat bridle of God, ſo that nothing was done by their purpoſe or wil. As much as lieth in them, they loke for an other time, but God haſteneth the houre whether they will or no. And it behoueth vs greatly to marke this, Chriſt was not raſhly caried to death at the pleaſure of his enemies, but was brought vnto it by God: becauſe that the hope of our help is eſtabliſhed vpon the ſame, God is appeaſed with that ſacrifice, which he had ordained frō the beginning. And therefore his wil was that his ſonne ſhuld be offred, euen vpon the day of the Paſſeouer, that the olde figure might geue place to the onely ſacrifice of the eternal redemption. They which had no other purpoſe but to ouerthrowe Chriſt, thought an other time more meete: but God who hadde ordained him for a ſacrifice to purge away ſinnes, choſe a ſpeciall daye, that might ioyntly oppoſe the body to the ſhadow. VVhereby the fruit of the paſsion of Chriſt doth now more plainly appeare vnto vs.

6 VVhen Ieſus was in Bethania. That which the Euangeliſt doeth now ſet downe, befell a little before Chriſte came to Ieruſalem: but it is recorded heere in very good time, to giue vs to vnderſtand what occaſion moued the hie prieſts ſo ſodainly to make this haſt. They durſt not ſette vppon Chriſt with open violence: and it was not ſo eaſie a matter to take hym by ſubtelty. Now when Iudas offred them a meanes vnhoped & vnlooked for, the eaſineſſe to bring the matter to paſſe, made them to take an other courſe. But the obiectiō that Iohn doth ſomwhat differ in this hyſtory from Math. & Marke, which cauſed ſome interpreaters, corruptly to imagine it to be an other hyſtory, is eaſily anſweared. The name of the woman which annoynted Chriſte, which our two Euangeliſts doe conceale, is expreſſed by Iohn 12.3. but ther is no mention of the man who feaſted Chriſt, yet Mat. and Marke do expreſly ſay that he ſupped with Simon the leper. But there is no contrariety in this, that Iohn ſaith that his feete were annoynted, and ours ſay his head. VVe doe certainly know that the oyntments were not caſt down to his fete: but when ther was more aboundance ſhed then was wont, Iohn to amplify the ſame, ſayth that his feete were wet. Marke alſo reporteth that the Alablaſter boxe being broken, all the oyntment was powred vppon his head: ſo it doeth very well appeare, that it ran downe to his feete. This therefore is certaine, that they all doe report one, and the ſame hyſtory.

8. And when his diſciples ſaw it. This alſo is a common thing amongſt the Euangeliſts, to attribute that to moe which was begunne by one, if they conſented to the ſame. Iohn ſayth, that Iudas the betrayer of Chriſt, began this murmuring, Mathew and Marke doe bring in all the diſciples with him: for that none of the other euer durſt to haue grudged if the vngodly grudging of Iudas, had not been as a firebrand to ſet them on fire. But when as he began vnder ſome good colour to condemne that waſtfull expence, they were all taken eaſily with that infection. And by this example we are taught what danger commeth of malitious & poiſonfull tongues. For they which are of a good, ſimple, & modeſt nature, except they do wiſely take hede to themſelues, yet being deceiued wyth falſe reports, doe eaſily fall into wrong iudgements. If Chriſtes diſciples by keeping company with Iudas, were caried into a light and fond opiniō, what ſhal become of vs, if we do too eaſily admit talebearers, which do commonly malitiouſly quarrell at things well done? Heere may alſo be gathered an other leſſon, that we ſhould not raſhly geue ſentence of a matter not throughly knowen. The diſciples take holde of that whyche Iudas ſpake, and becauſe it hadde ſome pretence, they doe raſhly geue wrong iudgement. But it was meete for them to haue made better inquirie, whether the deede had beene worthy of reprehenſion: eſpecially ſith the maiſter was preſent, whoſe iudgement they ſhuld haue abidden. So we know, that except the word of God doth goe before, the ſentence is prepoſterouſly giuen: becauſe that none of vs (as Paul teacheth, Rom. 14.10.) liueth or dieth vnto himſelfe, for wee muſt all appeare before the iudgement ſeat of Chriſt, where he ſhall yeelde his account, 2. Cor. 5.10. And though there was great difference betweene Iudas & the others, becauſe that hee ſought wickedly and cunningly to cloake hys theft, and the other were caryed away with a meere ſimplicitie: yet we ſee howe they by their vnaduiſedneſſe were drawne from Chriſte, and ioyned to Iudas.

10. VVhy trouble yee the woman. It is maruell that Chriſt, whoſe whole life was a rule and example of temperance and frugality, ſhoulde nowe allowe immoderate charge, whiche ſeemeth to be neare ſuperfluous and needeleſſe delites. But the maner of defence which he vſeth muſt be noted: for he doth not ſay that the woman had done well, as if he woulde haue the ſame done daily: but that which ſhe had done once, hee ſayeth was acceptable to God, for that there was iuſt cauſe why it ſhuld be ſo done. Therfore, though Chriſt deſired not the vſe of oyntment, yet in reſpect of the circumſtance, this annoynting pleaſed him. VVhereby we gather that ſome particular dedes, are ſometime accepted of God, which yet may not be made an example to be followed. And it is not to bee doubted but that Mary was mooued by a ſecreat motion of the ſpirite to annoynte Chriſte, as it is certaine that ſo oft as the Saincte are called to ſome extraordinary woorke, they are driuen with an vnwonted motion, leaſt they ſhoulde attempt any thing but by the direction and gouernement of God. There was no commandement which enioyned Mary to this annoynting, neither was it needeful that there ſhould haue beene a law ſet downe for one worke: but becauſe that the heauenlye calling is the only rule of wel doing, and that God refuſeth what ſoeuer men take in hand of themſelues, Mary was gouerned by the motion of the ſpirite, with a certaine perſwaſion of faith to performe this duty to Chriſt. But this one action of the woman is not only defended by this anſweare of Chriſt, but the godly ioy of all men is hereby defended, who may be ſatiſfied that they and their workes are approued of God. It commeth oft to paſſe that godly men are not only reproued, but alſo vniuſtly condēned openly, who yet haue their conſciences bearinge them witneſſe that they haue done nothing but by the commandement of God: and in this reſpecte they are accounted proud, if they deſpiſing the peruerſe iudgements of the world, doe ſatiſfie themſelues with the onely allowance of God.

Becauſe this is a hard temptation, and it canne hardly be, but that the corrupt conſent of many muſt grieue vs, this doctrine muſt be noted, that none can at any time be throughly encouraged to doe well, excepte they depende of the onely allowance of God. Therefore Chriſte doeth heere make the difference of good and euill to his only pleaſure: for whē he ſayeth that this womannes woorke was good, whiche his diſciples hadde already condemned, he doeth by this ſpeache reprooue the raſhneſſe of menne, which iudge as they liſt. VVee therefore being armed with this defence, muſt learne to neglecte what rumours ſo euer are ſpredde abroade of vs in the worlde: ſo that we know that which men condemne to be approued of God. So Iſaias, 50.7. being oppreſſed with the ſlaunders of the wicked, calleth God to witneſſe. ſo Paule appealeth to his iudgement, 1. Corrinthians 4.4. Therefore lette vs learne to regarde the iudgementes of menne no further, then that by oure example they may be taught to obey God: and when as the worlde ſhall wyth a greate clamour riſe vppe againſte vs, lette this comforte and ſatiſfie vs, that which is accounted euill vppon earth, is pronounced good from heauen.

11. You haue the poore alwayes with you. Chriſt doth not ſimply defend the anoynting, that we ſhuld follow the ſame: but declareth that there was a cauſe wherfore it was acceptable to god. It is cōueniēt ꝑ this ſhuld be wiſe obſerued, leaſt, that togither with the papiſts, we ſhould prepoſterouſly deuiſe ſumptuous rites for the worſhipping of God: for whē they heard that Chriſt would that Mary ſhould anoynt him, they imagined that he was delited with incenſe, waxe candles, magnificall ornaments, and ſuch like pomps. For this cauſe they had al their glorious ceremonies, & they thought that they could not worſhip God aright, if they ſhould not laſh out into great charges. But chriſt doth plainly except here, that the thing which pleaſed him to be done once, ſhoulde not be accepted of him if it were done afterwards. For when he ſayth that the pore ſhuld be alwais in the world, he diſtinguiſheth betwene the daily worſhip, which ſhould be vſed amongſt the faithfull, & that extraordinary, which ceaſed at hys aſcenſion into heauen. VVould we beſtow our mony wel vpon true ſacrifices? let vs beſtow it vpō the pore. For Chriſt ſayth that he ſhal not be alwaies with vs, to be worſhipped with outward pomps. VVe know aſſuredly & by experience of faith we fele that he is preſent with vs by ſpiritual power & grace: but he is not viſibly conuerſant amongſt vs to receiue earthly honors at our hāds. So they are outragious obſtinat, which doe thruſt vpon him fantaſtical charges againſt his will, and he refuſing the ſame. Alſo, by that he ſaith the pore ſhalbe alwaies, we do hereby gather that it is not by fortune that many do want, but by the determinate coūſel of God they are left amongſt vs, for vs to exerciſe our charity vpō them. The ſum of this place is this, though the lord cōmandeth that we & all that we haue, ſhould be dedicated to him, yet he requireth not any other worſhippe to be beſtowed vppon him, but that which is ſpirituall, which requireth no outward expēces: but rather wold that thoſe things ſhould be beſtowed vppon the poore, which of ſuperſtition hadde beene fondly beſtowed vpon his worſhip. 12. Shee did it to bury mee. Chriſt by theſe wordes confirmeth that we ſaid, that the pretious oyntment was accepted not for the ſauour of it, but only in reſpect of the burial: namely, becauſe that by this ſigne he wold declare that his graue ſhoulde yelde forth a pleaſant ſauour, ſo as it ſhoulde breath life and ſaluation into all the worlde. Therefore ſohn praiſeth Mary, becauſe that ſhe had reſerued that oyntment for the day of his burial. But after that the perfecte truth of this figure appeared, & Chriſt come out of the graue, he did not only perfume one houſe but all the worlde with the comfortable quickening ſauour of his death: it were a childiſhe thing to reiterate that which had neither reaſon nor profit. 13. VVherſoeuer this goſpel shalbe preached. He foretelleth that this deede of Mary ſhoulde be honoured, for the doctrine of the goſpell ſhalbe praiſed. VVherby we gather that our workes are not valued after the opinion of men, but by the teſtimony of the woorde of God. And in this he ſayeth, that the memoriall of her ſhall be renowmed throughout the whole worlde, he doeth by this compariſon ſharply reproue his diſciples: for by the conſent of all people, yea, euen ſtraungers, and ſuch as dwell in the fartheſt partes of the world, this deede ſhall be praiſed, which theſe preſent were ſo froward to condemne. Chriſt doth alſo louingly reproue his diſciples, becauſe they thought not ſo honourably of his kingdome as was meete. But by this ſentence is the callinge of the Gentiles teſtified, whereuppon oure ſaluation is eſtabliſhed. But howe the Goſpell ſhoulde be preached throughout the worlde, we haue ſhewed before, Math. 24.

Matth. 26.

14. Then one of the twelue called Iudas Iſcariot, went vnto the chiefe prieſtes,
15. And ſaide, what will ye giue me, and I will deliuer him vnto you? and they appoynted vnto him thirty peeces of ſiluer.
16. And from that time he ſought oportunitie to betray him.
17. Now, on the firſte day of the feaſt of vnleauened bread, the Diſciples came to Ieſus, ſaying vnto him: where wilt thou that wee prepare for thee to eate the Paſſeouer?
18. And he ſaid, goe into the Citie to ſuch a manne, and ſay to him, the maiſter ſaieth, my time is at hand: I will keepe the Paſſeouer at thine houſe with my diſciples.
19. And the Diſciples did as Ieſus had giuen thē charge, and made ready the Paſſeouer.
20. So when the euen was come, he ſat down with the twelue.

Mark. 14.

10. Then Iudas Iſcariot, one of the twelue, went away vnto the high prieſtes, to betray him vnto them.
11. And when they heard it, they were glad, and promiſed that they would giue him money: therefore hee ſought how hee might conueniently betray him.
12. Now the firſt day of vnleauened bread, when they ſacrificed the Paſſeouer, his diſciples ſaide vnto him, where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou maiſt eat the Paſſeouer?
13. Then he ſent forth twe of his diſciples, and ſaide vnto them, go ye into the citie, & there ſhal a man meete you, bearinge a pitcher of water: follow him.
14. And whither ſoeuer hee goeth in, ſay yee to the goodman of the houſe: the maſter ſaith, where is the lodginge, where I ſhall eate the Paſſeouer with my diſciples?
15. And he wil ſhew you an vpper chamber, which is larg, trimmed and prepared: there make it ready for vs.
16. So his diſciples went forth and came into the citie, and found as he had ſaid vnto thē, & made ready the Paſſeouer.
17. And at euen hee came with the twelue.

Luk. 22.

3. Then entred Sathan into Iudas, who was called Iſcariot, and was of the number of the twelue.
4. And he went his way, & communed with the hie prieſts and captaines, how hee might betray him to them.
5. So they were glad, and agreed to giue him money.
6. And he conſented, & ſought oportunitie to betray him vnto them, when the people were away.
7. Then came the day of vnleuened bread, when the Paſſeouer muſt be ſacrificed.
8. And hee ſent Peter and Iohn, ſaying, go, and prepare vs the Paſſeouer, that we may eat it. 9. And they ſaide to him, where wilt thou that we prepare it?
10. Then he ſaid vnto them, behold, when ye be entred into the citie, there ſhall a manne meete you, bearing a pitcher of water: followe him into the houſe that he entreth in,
11. And ſay vnto the good man of the houſe, the mayſter ſaieth vnto thee, where is the loging, where I ſhal eate my Paſſeouer with my diſciples?
12. Then he ſhall ſhew you a great hie chamber trimmed: there make ready. 13. So they went & found as he had ſaide vnto them, & made ready the Paſſeouer. 14. And whē the houre was come, he ſat down, & the twelue apoſtles with him.

The admonition of Chriſte auailed ſo litle for the mouinge of the heart of Iudas, or for the bettering of him, that he without regard went preſently to make that lewd couenaunt with the enemies. But it is wonderfull and ſtraunge that he was ſo amaſed, that he thought hee hadde gotten by the loſſe of that oyntment a meete excuſe for ſuch an offence:

then, that being warned by Chriſtes wordes, felt not what he did. The onely mention of the buriall ſhould haue mollyfied a heart as hard as iron: when as thereby it had beene eaſilye gathered, that Chriſte woulde offer himſelfe in ſacrifice for the ſaluation of mankinde. But wee ſee in this glaſſe howe blinde wicked couetous deſires are, and howe effectually they bewitch the minde. Iudas was earneſtly bent to ſteale, hee was hardened by long vſe to commit any offence: now beecauſe he ſawe no pray comming in from other where, hee ſticketh not to deliuer to death the ſonne of God, the auᵭhour of life: & though hee had a holy admonition to withdraw him, yet he went forward with violence. VVherefore it is not without cauſe that Lu. doth expreſly ſay, that Satan entred into him, not that he was gouerned by the ſpirit of God before (for hee could not haue bin giuen ſo to robberies & ſpoiles, if he had not bin the bondſlaue of Satan:) but Luke meaneth that he was then wholly deliuered into the poſſeſsion of Satan, that as a man deſperate, he might run forwardes to his own deſtruᵭion. For though Satan driueth vs not to ſinne dayly, but raigneth in vs while he carieth vs to a greater liberty of ſinning: yet he is ſaid then to enter into the reprobate, when the feare of God being ouerthrowne, the lighte of reaſon put out, and ſhame ſhaken off, he poſſeſſeth all the ſenſes. But God doth not execute this laſt kind of vengeaunce vppon others, but ſuch as are alreadye ordeined to deſtruᵭion. VVherefore let vs learne to repent in tyme, leaſt our long remaining in hardneſſe doe eſtablyſh the kingdome of ſatan in vs: for when we are once caught in this tyranny, there is no meaſure of maddeneſſe.

It muſt eſpeciallye bee noted, that the couetouſneſſe in Iudas was the cauſe and fountaine of ſo great blyndneſſe. VVherby it appeareth that it was worthily called by Paule, 1. Tim. 6. 10. the roote of all euils. Further it is a vaine thing to demaund here, whether Satan entred ſubſtantially into Iudas. It is more meete to conſider this, howe horryble and monſtrous a thing it is, for menne created after the image of GOD, and appoynted to be temples of the holy Ghoſt, ſhoulde not onelye bee turned into filthy ſtables and ſynckes, but to become accurſed dwellinge houſes for Satan.

17. The firſt day of vnleauened bread the Diſciples came. Firſt it is demanded, why that is called the day of vnleauened bread, which goeth before the kyllinge of the Lambe. For the Law hadde not commaunded them to refraine from leauen, vntyll they eate the Lambe. But this knotte is eaſily loſed: namely, for that this note is referred to the day following, as by Mark & Luke it doth euidently appeare. Therfore when as the day of kylling and eating the Paſſeouer was at hand, it beginning at the euening, the Diſciples doe aske of Chriſt, where he would eate the Paſſeouer. But there doth a harder queſtion ariſe vpon this, that Chriſte obſerued that rite the day before the whole nation celebrated the publike Paſſeouer. For Iohn ſaieth plainly, that the daye when hee was crucified, was holden of the Iewes for the preparation not of the Sabboth, but of the Paſſeouer.

Further, they went not into the iudgment hall, leaſt they ſhoulde defile themſelues, becauſe the next day they were to eate the Paſſeouer. I know that many menne doe ſeeke for ſhiftes, but they are ſuch as auayle them not. For this cannot be ſhifted ouer by any cauilles, they kepte not their feaſt on that day whereon they crucified Chriſt (for it had not bin lawfull for them on that daye to haue doone execution vpon any man,) and then they helde the ſolemne preparation, that after the buryall of Chriſt they might eat the Paſſeouer. Now it is demaunded how it beefell that Chriſt eat his before. For in this law he wold not take vnto him ſelfe any lybertie beſides the preſcript rule of the Lawe. Some doe imagine that the Iewes deferred the Paſſeouer of purpoſe that they might deſtroy Chriſt. But this deuice is very well confuted by Bucer: yea, and it falleth away of it ſelf, it is ſo vaine. Therfore I doubt not but that Chriſt obſerued the day preſcribed by the Law, and the Iewes followed ſome cuſtom receiued now before. Firſt it is without controuerſie that Chriſt was ſlaine the day before the Sabboth: becauſe that before the ſunne was ſet, he was put with ſpeed into the next ſepulcher, becauſe that it was neceſſary to keepe holy after the euening. But now no man doubteth but when the Paſſeouer and other feaſt dayes fell vppon the day beefore the Sabboth, of an olde cuſtome they were deferred vnto the next daye: becauſe that to keepe two dayes holy together were too hard for the people.

The Iewes doe ſay that this law was giuen preſently after the people returned out of the captiuitie of Babylon, and that by an oracle frō heauen, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to haue altred any of the commaundements of God raſhlye. If that it was the manner then to ioyne two feaſt dayes together in one (as the Iewes do alſo graunt, and as it appeareth by their auncient recordes) the coniecture is probable enough, that Chriſt obſerued the Paſſeouer the day before the Sabboth, obſeruing the day appointed by the lawe. For wee knowe how diligent and carefull hee was to keepe euerye poynt of the law. For ſith his will was to be bound to the lawe, that hee might deliuer vs from the yoke of the law, he would not forgette to be ſubiect to this chiefe point. Therefore hee had rather omit the vſe of the outward ceremonie, then to tranſgreſſe the commandement which GOD hadde giuen, and ſo to bee ſcorned of the wicked. But it is certeine that the Iewes themſelues will not deny, but that it was ordained by the Rabbines, that ſo ofte as the Paſſeouer fell neere vnto the Sabboth, they ſhould onely keepe holye one day for both. So it followeth, that Chriſt did nothing againſt the law, though he keepe not their common cuſtome.

18. Goe into the citie to ſuch a man. Matthew noteth out a certeine man: the other two doe ſay that the two diſciples were ſent as to a ſtraunger: becauſe they had this token giuen them, of a manne bearing a pitcher of water. But this diuerſitie is eaſily reconciled. For Matthew omitting the miracle, noteth the manne, who was then knowne to the Diſciples. For without doubte after they came to the houſe, they founde ſome one of theyr acquaintaunce.

For Chriſt alſo of his own authority commaunded him that he ſhuld prepare a place for him and his, naming himſelf the maſter: and he preſently obeieth. But though he could haue poynted out the manne by his name, yet he had rather direct his diſciples to him by a miracle: that whē they ſhuld ſhortly after ſee him humbled, yet their faith by this inſtructiō might be ſupported. And this was no ſmal confirmation, that in ſo ſhort a ſpace before his death, he was by ſo manifeſt a tokē declared to be god:

that they might know that hee was not drawne to it of neceſsitie, but that hee yeelded to it of his owne free will. And though it may be that this profited them very litle in the very moment of their trouble, yet the remembraunce of it afterwardes was profitable. As at this daye alſo it is profitable for vs to know this for the auoyding of the offence of the croſſe, that in Chriſt at the very time of his death appeared the glorye of the Godhead togeather with the infirmity of the fleſh.

My time is at hand. Though hee celebrated the Paſſeouer rightly according to the commaundement of the law, yet he ſeemeth of purpoſe to alleage this cauſe, that he might not be accounted ouerthwart. Therefore he ſaieth that he hath cauſe to make haſte, ſo as he could not obſerue the vſual cuſtom: becauſe that he ſhuld be called to a greater ſacrifice. Yet in the meane ſeaſon, as we ſayd, hee altereth nothing in the ceremonie. But he doth thus oft reherſe this, that the time of his death is at hande, that they might know that he dooth haſte of his owne free will to obeye the decree of the father. And where hee ioyneth the ſhadowiſh ſacrifice with the true, he doth by this meanes exhort the faythful to compare with the olde figures, that which he fulfilled in deede. For this compariſon dooth not a litle ſet forth the force and effect of his death. For the Paſſeouer was not giuen to the Iewes onely to this ende, that they might remember their olde deliuerance, but that through Chriſte they ſhould hope for an other to come more to be deſired then the former. To this beelongeth that ſaying of Paul, Chriſt our Paſſeouer is offred, &c. 1. Cor. 5. 7.

13. The Diſciples did as Ieſus had giuen them charge. In this that the Diſciples doe obey of ſo ready a minde, is to bee noted their frameablenes to bee taught. For they might haue doubted, when as they ſhuld follow a man vnknowne, whether they ſhould obtaine of the houſholder that whiche their maiſter commaunded them to demaunde, ſith they knew that hee was not onely deſpiſed, but alſo hated euerye where. But they doe not doubtfullye enquire of the ſucceſſe, but they doe willingly obey the cõmãdement. And we muſt hold this rule, if we deſire to try our faith, that being ſatiſfied by the commaundement only: we may go forward whether God commaundeth, and hoping for the ſucceſſe which hee promyſeth, let vs not be too careful.

20. When the euen was come, hee ſate downe. Not to eate the Paſſeouer, which ſhould be doone ſtanding (as trauailers which make haſt hauing their ſhooes on, and the ſtaffe vppe, doe vſe to take their meate ſpeedily): but the ſolemne rite beeinge finiſhed, I interprete it that hee ſate downe that hee might ſuppe. Therefore the Euangeliſtes do ſay, the euen was come: for in the firſt euening they ſlew the Lamb, and did eat the fleſh thereof roſt.

Matth. 26.	Marke. 14.	Luke. 22.
21. And as they did eate, hee ſayde, verelye I ſaye vnto you, that one of you ſhall betray me.	18. And as they ſate at the table, and did eate, Ieſus ſaid, verelye I ſay vnto you, that one of you ſhall betray me.	15. Then hee ſaide vnto them, I haue earneſtly deſired to eat this Paſſeouer with you before I ſuffer.
22. And	19. Then	16. For

22. And they were exceeding sorrowfull, and beganne euery one of them to say vnto him,is it I,maister?
23. And he answered and said,he that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, hee shall betray me.
24. Surely the Sonne of man goeth his way as it is written of him:but wo be to that man by whom the sonne of man is betrayed:it had beene good for that man,if he had neuer bin borne.
25. Then Iudas,which betraied him answered,& said, is it I,maister?hee saide vnto him,thou hast said it.

19. Then they began to bee sorrowful, and to saye to him one by one, is it I?and another,is it I?
20. And he answered and said vnto them, it is one of the twelue that dippeth with me in the platter.
21. Truely the sonne of man goeth his way,as it is written of him:but wo be to that man by whom the sonne of man is betrayed:it hadde beene good for that man,if he had neuer beene borne.

16. For I saye vnto you hence forth I will not eate of it any more,vntill it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

And a litle after.

21 Yet behold the hande of him that betraieth me, is with me at the table.
22. And truely the sonne of man goeth as it is appoynted:but woe be to that man,by whom he is betraied.
23. Then they began to enquire among themselues, which of them it should be that should doe that.

21. Verely I say vnto you. That he might make the traiterousnes of Iudas the more to be detested, he setteth forth the vilenesse of the same by this circumstaunce, that when he satte together with him at the holy table,he deuised treaso. For if a stranger had done this, it might haue bin easilyer borne:but now this is a thing straunge and incredible, that one of them so neere him shoulde woorke this, yea and hauinge made and concluded so lewd a couenant,would thrust himself to this holy banket vnder the pretence of friendship. Therefore Luke vseth this phrase of repugnancie,yet behold the hande of him that betrayeth me. But though Luke setteth downe this saying of Christ after the celebration of his Supper,yet the order of the time cannot bee certeinely gathered thereby,which wee know was often neglected by the Euangelists. Yet I deny not but that it is probable,that Iudas was present, when Christ distributed the signes of his body and bloud.

22. They beganne euerye one of them to say. I do not thinke that the disciples trembled,as men amased do vse without cause to vex themselues: but as they abhorre the offence,so they desire to be cleared from the suspition of the same. And this is a token of reuerence, that they beeing so sharpely pinched,doe not disdainefullye aunswere their Maister, but euery one referreth himselfe to his iudgement,(as we must especially seeke for this,to be cleared of his mouth:)yet enioying a good conscience, they would freely witnesse, how far they were from so great an offece, But Christ by his aunswere dooth neither put them out of this doubte, nor poynt out the person of Iudas, but onely confirmeth that whiche I sayd euen now,that one of his familyar guestes was the traytour. And though it was hard for them to be lefte in suspence and doubtefull for a time, that they might exercise themselues to consider the heinousnesse of the offence:yet an other commodity folowed therof,when they knewe that the Propheste was fulfilled,Psal.41.9.55.14.15.He which did eat of my sweete bread,hath lifted vp the heele against me.Furthermore, by

Iudas

Iudas the Lordes will was to admoniſh his children in al ages, not to be diſmaide or diſcouraged for houſhold traytours: for that which hee had experience of who was the head of the whole Church muſt befall to vs which are the members.

24. Surely the Sonne of man goeth. Chriſt here taketh away an offẽce, which might haue grieuouſlye offended the mindes of the godlye. For what is more abſurde, then that the ſonne of God ſhould be traiterouſly betraied by a diſciple, giuen ouer to the pleaſure of the enemies, that hee maye bee brought to a reproachfull death? But Chriſt ſaith that all this coulde not be but by the will of God. And hee proueth this decree by the teſtimonie of the ſcripture, becauſe that which was appointed, hee reuealed beefore by the mouth of his Prophet. Now we vnderſtand wherto Chriſtes woordes doe tend: namely, that the diſciples knowing that whatſoeuer is done, is gouerned by the prouidence of God, ſhould not thynke that his life or death was ruled by chaunce. But the commodity of this doctrine ſtretcheth further: for the fruite of Chriſtes death is then rightlye ſanctified to vs, when as it appeareth that hee was not raſhlye caried to the croſſe by menne, but that by the eternall decree of God hee was ordeined to bee that ſacrifice for the waſhinge awaye of the ſinnes of the world. For whence had we our reconciliation, but by Chriſtes appeaſing of the father by his obedience. VVherefore let vs alwayes remember the prouidence of God, whereunto Iudas himſelfe and all the wicked ones (though it be againſt their willes, and that they ſtriue againſt the ſame) muſt of neceſsitie obey. Let this alwaies remaine ſure, that Chriſt therfore ſuffered, becauſe that God was pleaſed with ſuch a kind of pacification: yet Chriſt doth not ſay, that Iudas by this pretence was freed from fault: becauſe that he did nothing but that which God hadde appoynted. For though GOD in his vpright iudgment appointed the death of his ſonne to be the price of our redemption, yet notwithſtanding Iudas in beetraying him procured hys iuſt damnation, becauſe that he was full of trechery and couetouſneſſe.

Further, though God would haue the world redeemed, yet this was no cauſe but that Iudas was a wicked traitour. Hereby we ſee, though men can do nothing, but þ which god appointeth, yet they ar not therby freed from guiltines, becauſe they are caried headlong to ſinne by their wicked affection. For though God by a hidden bridle directeth them to an ende vnknowne to them, they minde nothing leſſe, then to obey his decrees. Theſe two things ſeeme nothing agreeable to mans reaſon, that God by his prouidence ſhuld ſo gouerne the doings of men, that nothing ſhould be done but by his wil & appointment, and yet ſhuld deſtroy the reprobate, by whō he executeth his wil. But we ſee here how chriſt reconcileth them both together, making Iudas ſubiect to the curſſe, thogh this which he wrought againſt God, was appointed by God. Not that the treaſō of Iudas ſhuld properly be called the work of God, but becauſe God turned the treaſon of Iudas to perfourme his counſell. But I knowe how many interpreters would auoyd this rocke. They do acknowledge that the ſcripture was fulfilled by this work of Iudas, becauſe god by his Prophets teſtified that which he knew before. Therfore that they might mitigate the doctrine, which ſeemed ſomwhat too ſharp, they ſet downe the foreknowledge of God in place of his decree. But the holye Ghoſt doth doth decide this controuersie farre otherwise: for it doth not only bring this as the cause of the betraing of Christ, because it was so written, but also beeause it was so appointed. For where Mat. & Mar. do alleage the scripture, Lu. bringeth vs straight to that celestial decree: euē as he teacheth in the Acts, that Christ was betraied not only by the foreknowledge of God, but of his determinate counsel. And a litle after Herod & Pylat with the rest of the wicked did those things, which wer foreordained by the hand & cōsel of god. VVherby it appeareth that they do fōdly seek a shift, which do fly to the naked and bare foreknowledge. It were good By this word we are taught how horrible a vengeance doth remain for the wicked: for whom it were better that they had neuer beene borne. But this life, though it is transitory and ful of innumerable troubles, yet is it an incomparable benefit of God. Againe, we do hereby gather also how detestable their wickednes is, which doth not only extinguish the precious gifts of God & destroy the same but bringeth it to passe, that it were better neuer to haue tasted of the the goodnes of God. Yet this clause is worthy to be noted, that it were good for that manne not to haue beene borne: For thoughe the estate of Iudas shoulde bee miserable, yet it was good for God that he created him, who appointeth the reprobate for the daye of destruction, and doth also by this meanes set forth his own glory, as Solomon teacheth. So the secrete gouernment of God is defended from al note of suspition, which rulcth the counsels and works of men, as I touched euen now.

25. Then Iudas answered. Though we oft see them which are guilty within themselues to tremble and feare, yet to their feare and blind tormēts there is a blockishnes adioyned, so as they do boldly proceede to deny any thing: so that at the length they do thus preuaile by their impudency, that they do discouer their secrete sinne. So Iudas when he was ensnared in an euill conscience could not yet hold his peace: the inward tormentor doth so vex him, vntil that with feare & doubtfulnes he ouerthroweth him. Also Christ in his answere sharply reproving his blockish boldnes, doth prouoke him to consider the offence which he desired to hide. But his mind being now possessed with a deuilish fury, could not haue any such feeling. But by this example let vs learn, that the wicked by their bad excuses do nothing els but pul a more speedy iudgment vpon themselues.

per, he took the cup, saying: this cup is the newe testament in my bloude, which is shed for you.

Sith Luke maketh mention that Christe tooke the cup twise: first it is to be demanded whether this is a repetition of one and the same thing, (as the Euangelistes doe vse sometime to speake of one thing twise) or whether Christ, after he had tasted of the cuppe once, tooke the same againe the second time. And this latter seemeth to me to bee most likelye to be true. For we know that the holy Fathers obserued a solemne manner of tasting at their sacrifices. Wherof that was saide in the Psal. 116. 13. I will take the cuppe of saluation and call vppon the name of the Lord. So I thinke that Christ dranke at that holy feast according to the auncient maner: because that otherwise it could not be rightly solēnised, and that doth Luke expresly declare before he commeth to speake of the new mistery, the maner whereof differed from the Paschal Lamb. This also was a receiued solemne vse, to giue thanks, as it is expresly said at the taking of the cup. For I doubt not but that there was praier at the beginninge of Supper, as hee neuer vsed to come to the Table without callinge vpon GOD. But nowe hee woulde doe the same agayne, leaste hee shoulde omitte the ceremonie, which as I shewed before was annexed to the holy sacrifice.

26. As they did eate. I doe not vnderstand these wordes, as if that this newe and farre more excellent banket should bee ioyned to the supper of the Passeouer, but rather that the same was first ended. As the same is more plainely declared by Luke, where he saith, after Christ had supped he gaue the cup. For it were absurd that one and the same mistery shuld be seuered into diuerse times. So I doubt not but that hee gaue the cuppe presently after he had deuided the bread. And that which Luke dooth specially speake of the cuppe, I doe also extend to the bread. Therefore as they were eating, Christ tooke bread, that he might call them to take part of a new supper. The giuing of thankes was a certeine preparation and entraunce to the consideration of the misterie. So the supper being ended, they should taste of the holy bread and wine: beecause that their securitie was first shaken off, that they might be wholly bent to so high a mistery. And reason so required that this euident testimony of the spiritual life should be thus distinguished.

Iesus tooke bread. It is vncertein whether the rite, which the Iewes hold at this day, was then also in vse. For the housholder hidde vnder his napkin a peece of bread, taken from the whole loafe, that hee might giue to euery of his family a parte of the same. But because this is a tradition of man, established vppon no commaundement of God. There is no cause why we should too curiously labour to seeke out the beeginning of the same.

And it may be that it was deuised afterwards by the subtiltie of Sathan to darken the mistery of the supper of Christe. But if this ceremo-

aye was then vſed amongſt the Iewes, Chriſte ſo followed the cuſtome then receiued, that yet he would lead the mindes of his diſciples an other way, by chaunging the vſe of the bread to an other end. And this muſte be holden without queſtion, that the figures of the law being aboliſhed, Chriſt inſtituted here a new Sacrament.

When he had giuen thankes. Matthew and Marke do vſe the word of bleſſing: but whereas Luke in ſteede thereof doth vſe the word, which ſignifieth giueing of thankes, there is no ambiguitie in the ſenſe. And when they in the cuppe doe after adde the giueing of thankes, they doe plainelye enough interprete their former ſaying. The follye of the Papiſtes is ſo much the more to be ſcorned at, whiche doe bleſſe with the ſigne of the croſſe, as if that Chriſt had vſed exorciſme. But that muſt be remembred which I ſayde euen nowe, that this giuing of thankes hadde relation to a ſpirituall myſterie. For though the faythful are commaunded to giue thankes to God, beecauſe he nouryſheth them in this tranſitory life, yet Chriſt regardeth not onely this common foode, but bent himſelf to the holy action, to giue thankes to God for the eternall ſaluation of mankinde. For if thoſe meates which goe downe into the paunch, ſhuld prouoke and ſtirre vs to praiſe the fatherlye kindenes of God, howe much more ſhould this ſpiritual feeding of our ſoules, prouoke and enflame vs to be more earneſt in this exercise of godlynes?

Take yee, eate yee. Leaſt I become here too tedious, I will onely briefly touch what manner of thing the inſtitution of the Lorde is, and what it conteineth in it, then what the vſe of it is, ſo farre as may be gathered by the Euangeliſts. And this appeareth firſt, that Chriſt inſtituted a ſupper, which the Diſciples ſhould communicate amongſt them. VVhereof it followeth that it is a deuilliſh inuention, that one manne alone ſeparating himſelfe from the reſte of the congregation doth priuatly deuoure the ſupper himſelfe. For what is more diſagreeable, then for the bread to be deuided amongſt all, and to be deuoured of one alone? Therefore though the Papiſtes ſhould bragge that they haue the ſubſtaunce of the ſupper of the Lord in their Maſſes, yet indeede it appeareth, that as manye as doe celebrate priuate Maſſes, ſo manye bulwarkes are ſette vp by the deuill for the ouerthrowing of the Supper of Chriſte. By the ſame wordes we are taught what manner of oblation was offered by Chriſt at the Supper. Hee commaundeth his Diſciples to take. Therefore it is hee onely which offereth. Therefore that imagination of the Papiſtes, that they offer Chriſt in the ſupper, proceedeth from a contrary autour. And certeinely this is a merueilous chaunge, that a mortall manne, who is commaunded to take the bodye of Chriſte, ſhoulde take vppon hym the office to offer vppe the ſame: and ſo a Prieſt made of himſelf ſhould offer vnto God his ſonne. I goe not preſently about to proue with how many ſacriliges their faigned oblation dooth abounde: it is ſufficient for me to proue that it is ſo far from being any thing like to Chriſts inſtitution, that it is rather directly contrary to the ſame.

This is my bodye. They ſaye that the breade was conſecrated by theſe woordes, to bee a figure or token of the fleſhe of Chriſte, I doe not diſallowe: ſo that this woord be rightly and truely vnderſtoode. So the bread which was ordained to nouriſh the body, Chriſte doth chuſe & ſanctifie to an other vſe, that it may beginne to be a ſpirituall meate. And this is that alteration and chaunge, whereof the auncient writers of the church do make mention. But yet it muſt be noted, that the bread is not conſecrated by whiſpering and breathing ouer it, but by the euident doctrine of fayth. And truely it is a magicall inchauntment, when the conſecration is directed to the dead element: for the bread is not made a figure of the body of Chriſt to it ſelfe, but to vs. In ſumme, the conſecration is nothing elſe, but a ſolemne teſtimony to vs, whereby the Lord appointeth an earthly and corruptible ſigne for a ſpiritual vſe, which cannot be, except that his commandement and promiſe be openly declared for the edifying of fayth. VVhereby it appeareth againe how wickedly this miſtery is prophaned by the Papiſtes by their ſecrete whiſpering and breathing.

If that Chriſt doth conſecrate the bread, when hee telleth vs that it is his body, there is no chaunge of ſubſtaunce to be imagined: but onely to be noted an alteration of the vſe. If that the worlde had not beene now a long time bewitched by the ſubtilty of the deuil, ſo that the monſtrous opinion of tranſubſtantiation being once brought in, it will admitte at this day no light of true interpretatiō of theſe words, it ſhuld be in vayn to ſtand longer in ſearching out the ſenſe. Chriſte ſaieth, the bread is his body. He ſpeaketh of the Sacrament. But it muſt of neceſsity bee confeſſed, that the Sacrament conſiſteth of a viſible ſign, wherunto the thing ſignified is conioyned, which is the trueth of the ſame. And this alſo is well knowne of olde, that the ſigne is often called by the name of the thing ſignified. VVherfore no man that is but meanely exerciſed in the ſcriptures will deny but that this ſacramentall phraſe of ſpeach muſt bee taken metonymically, that is the one for the other. I omitte the generall figures, which are read euery where in the ſcripture. I doe only ſay this, that ſo oft as the outward ſigne is ſaide to be that, which it dooth repreſent, all menne doe conſent that it is by the figure Metonymia. VVhere Baptiſme is called the lauar of regeneration, Tit. 3.5. where the rocke, which yeelded water to the fathers in the wildernеſſe, is called Chriſte, 1. Corin. 10.4. where a Doue is called the holy Ghoſt, Iohn. 1.32. No man will deny, but that the ſignes are called by the name of the things, which they ſignifie. Therefore how commeth it to paſſe, that they which regard the wordes of the Lorde, will not ſuffer that, which is common to all the Sacraments to be applyed to the Supper? But they wil haue the ſimple & the litteral ſenſe. Then why doth not the ſame rule hold in all the Sacraments? Certeinely, except they wil graunt that the rocke was ſubſtantially Chriſt, the obiection is but weak, wherewith they vrge vs. If we interpret it, that the bread is called the body, becauſe it is the figure of the body, they pretend that the whole doctrine of the ſcripture is ouerthrown. Neither haue we forged now of late this rule for this manner of ſpeache: but al men do imbrace the ſame, as deliuered by Auguſtin from the authority of the auncient fathers, that the names of ſpirituall thinges are improperly aſcribed to the ſignes: and that all the places of ſcripture ſhuld be ſo expounded, where there is mention made of the Sacramentes. Sith wee doe then hold a general rule receiued euery where, to what purpoſe doe they make ſuch outcryes, as at a ſtraunge matter not hearde of before?

But

But let thoſe maſed men cry as they lyſt, this ſhall be accepted of men that are wiſe and modeſt, that there is a ſacramentall forme of ſpeaking in theſe wordes of Chriſt. VVherof it followeth, that the bread, becauſe it is the figure of the body of Chriſt, is called the body. But there are two kindes of men, which doe ariſe againſt vs, the Papiſtes being bewitched with their Tranſubſtantion, deny that there is any bread, becauſe that there remayneth onely a ſhewe without the ſubſtaunce. But Paule refuteth their fancy, affirming the bread which we breake to be the communion of the body of Chriſt, 1. Corint. 10. 16. Then the very nature of the Sacrament abhorreth this their deuiſe: for that it cannot remain perfecte, if there ſhould not be a true and perfect outwarde ſigne. For howe ſhall we learne that our ſoules are fedde with the fleſh of Chriſt, if there were not very bread ſette before our eyes but a vaine ſhewe? Further, what wil they ſay of the other ſigne? For Chriſt ſaid not, this is my bloud, but This cuppe is. Therfore by their rule, not onelye the wine, but alſo the ſubſtaunce whereof the Cuppe was made ſhould neceſſarily be tranſubſtantiated into bloud. Now that which is ſette downe by Matthewe, I will not henceforth drinke of the fruit of the vine, dooth euidently declare, that it was wine, which he delyuered to be drunke. Therefore the follye of the Papiſtes is plainely confuted euery way. But there are others, which doe reiect the figure, and preſently as frantike men they do receiue the ſame. The bread, according to their opinions, is truely and properlye the body. For they account not of tranſubſtantiation, as a matter without all colour of reaſon. But when they are demaunded, whether the bread and wine be chriſt, they do anſwer that the bread is therfore called the body, becauſe that vnder this and with this it is receiued. And by this anſwer it is eaſie to gather, that the name of the body is vnproperlye tranſferred to the bread, which is the ſigne of it. And it is meruaile, ſith theſe menne doe ſo oft ſay, that Chriſt ſpake this in reſpect of the ſacramentall vnyon, that they doe not marke what they ſaye. For what manner of ſacramentall vnion is there of the thing ſignified and of the ſigne? Is it not becauſe the Lord by the ſecret power of his ſpirit performeth that which he promyſeth? So theſe latter maſters of the letter are no leſſe to be derided then the Papiſtes.

Hytherto I haue delyuered the ſimple expoſition of the wordes of the Lord: now it is to be added, that there is no vaine nor ydle ſigne ſet beefore vs, but that they are made indeed partakers of the body and bloud, which by faith do take hold of this promiſe. For the Lord ſhould in vain commaund his diſciples to eat the bread, affirming it to be his body, if the effect ſhould not truely aunſwere the figure. Neither is this in queſtion amongſt vs, whether that Chriſt doth truely or onelye ſignificatiuely offer himſelfe vnto vs in the Supper. For though wee do ſee nothing there but bread, yet hee dooth neither deceiue nor mocke vs, who feedeth our ſoules with his own fleſh. Therfore the true eating of the fleſh of Chriſt is not onely ſhewed in ſigne, but it is alſo deliuered in verye deede. But it is woorth the labour to obſerue heere three thinges, leaſt that whiche is ſpyrituall, ſhoulde bee myxed with the ſigne: nexte, leaſte Chriſte ſhoulde bee ſoughte vppon the earth, or in earthlye elementes: thirdlye, leaſt there ſhoulde be imagined another manner of eating, then that which by the ſecret power of the ſpirit inſpireth into vs the life of Chriſt, but we obtain him by no other meane, but by faith alone. Firſt (as I ſaid) except we will ouerthrowe all, there muſt be a diſtinction betweene the ſigne and the thing ſignified. Neyther can there be any profitte had by the Sacrament, except that according to the rudenes of our capacitye it lead vs from the beholding of the earthly element to the heauenlye miſtery. So that whoſoeuer ſhall not diſcerne the body of Chriſt from the bread, and the bloud from the wine, ſhall neuer vnderſtande what the Supper meaneth, or to what ende the faythfull ſhoulde vſe theſe ſignes. Afterward let that lawefull meane of ſeeking of Chriſte follow, let not our mindes reſt vppon the earth, but aſcend on high to the celeſtial glory, where he dwelleth. For the body of Chriſte is not ſo cloathed wyth life, which is vncorrupt, as that it ſhoulde caſt awaye the proper nature: whereof it followeth that it is finite. And now he is aſcended aboue the heauens, leaſt we ſhould holde any groſſe imagination of his beeing vppon the earth. And ſurely if this myſtery be heauenlye, there is nothinge more prepoſterous, then to draw him to the earth, who rather calleth vs vppe to him. The laſt which I ſayde is to be noted, is the kind of eatinge. For it muſt not be dreamed that his ſubſtaunce ſhould naturally deſcend into our ſoules: but we doe eate his fleſh, when we do receiue life by the ſame. For the proportion or likenes of bread with fleſhe muſt be kepte, whereby wee are taught that our ſoules are ſo fedde with the fleſhe of Chriſt, as our bodyes receiue ſtrength by bread. The fleſh of Chriſt is therefore a ſpirituall nouriſhment: and it doth therefore giue lyfe, becauſe that the holy Ghoſte dooth powre into vs the lyfe, which is in it. And though that there is a diuerſitie betweene the eating of the fleſhe of Chriſt, and to beleeue in him: yet it is euidently knowne that none can feede vppon Chriſt otherwiſe then by faith, becauſe that the very eating is an effect of faith.

29. I ſay vnto you. Mathew and Mark doe adde this ſentence to the holy Supper, after that Chriſt had giuen the ſign of his bloud in the cup. VVhereof ſome doe gather, that Luke dooth ſet downe the ſame matter here, which he rehearſed a litle after. But this knot is eaſilye loſed: becauſe that it maketh litle for the matter, when Chriſte ſhoulde ſpeake this. For the Euangeliſtes doe onelye applye themſelues in this place to ſhew that the Diſciples were admoniſhed aſwell of the approachinge of the death of their maiſter, as of the new and heauenlye lyfe. For the neerer that the houre of death was at hand, the more they were to be ſtrēgthened, leaſt they ſhuld altogether fall away. Further, when as his mind was in the holy ſupper to ſet his death before their eyes, as in a glaſſe, it is not without cauſe, that he telleth them againe, that he dooth now depart out of the world. But becauſe that it was a ſorrowfull meſſage, hee preſently addeth this comfort, that there is no cauſe whye they ſhoulde feare death, for that a better lyfe doth follow it, as if he ſhuld haue ſaide: Now I doe haſte to death, but ſo that I maye paſſe thence to the bleſſed immortalytye, neyther will I lyue alone in the kingdome of God, but I wyll haue you fellowes with mee of the ſame lyfe.

So we doe ſee how hee leadeth his Diſciples by the hand to the croſſe, and lyfteth them vppe from thence to the hope of the reſurrection. As it was meete for them to be directed to the death of Chriſt, that they might aſcend by the ſame ladder vp into heauen: ſo now ſince that Chriſt dyed and is receiued into heauen, it is meete that wee from the beeholding of the croſſe ſhould be lead into heauen, that there may bee an vnion made between death and the recouery of life. And he promiſeth that they ſhal be glorified togeather with himſelfe, as it appeareth plainelye in theſe woordes, vntill that I ſhall drinke it new with you. And that obiection whiche ſome doe make, that meate and drinke do not agree with the kingdome of God is friuolous: for Chriſt hath no other meaning, then that his diſciples ſhould preſently want his company, and that hee ſhould eate no more with them, vntill they ſhould meete togeather in heauen. Further, when as the ſociety of that life ſhoulde be deſcribed, which needeth not the helpes of meate and drinke, he ſaieth that there ſhall then be a newe kinde of drinking. By which woorde wee are taught, that hee ſpake allegorically. Therefore in Luke hee ſaieth ſimply, vntill the kingdome of God be come.

In ſumme, Chriſt commendeth vnto vs the fruit and effecte of the redemption, which he purchaſed by his death. VVhere ſome doe thinke that this was fulfilled, when as the Lord eate with his diſciples after his reſurrection, it is farre from his minde. For when as that was an eſtate betweene the courſe of the mortall life and the mark of the life celeſtial, the kingdome of God was not as then reuealed: and therfore he ſaid vnto Mary, touch me not: for I haue not yet aſcended to the father. Further, the Diſciples were not yet entred into the kingdome of God, that as partakers of the ſame glory, they might drinke that newe wine with Chriſt.

And where wee read that Chriſte dranke after his reſurrection, when yet hee hadde ſayde hee woulde not, vntyll the Diſciples were gathered into the kingdome of GOD: the ſhewe of repugnancye is eaſilye anſwered. For hee dooth not preciſelye ſpeake of meate and drinke, but of the fellowſhippe of this preſent lyfe. Alſo wee knowe that Chriſte did not drinke at that time, that hee might eyther ſtrengthen hymſelfe by thoſe meates, or to eate with hys Diſciples for companye: but onelye that by prouoinge of hys reſurrection (whereof they were as yet doubtefull) hee myght lyfte vppe theyr mindes on hygh. Therefore let vs be contented with this natural ſenſe, that the Lorde promiſed hys diſciples, when hee yet liued as a mortall man amongſt them vppon the earth, that they ſhould afterwards be companions with him of the bleſſed and immortal life.

LV. 19. VVhich is giuen for you. The other two Euangeliſtes doe omitte this clauſe, which yet is not in vayne. For therefore is the bread now becom the fleſh of Chriſt to vs, becauſe that our ſaluation was once purchaſed by the ſame. And as the fleſh crucified dooth profit none, but them which eate the ſame by fayth: ſo againe it were a colde manner of eating, and almoſt to no purpoſe, but in reſpecte of the ſacrifice once offered. Therefore whoſoeuer deſireth to bee nouriſhed by the fleſhe of Chriſte, lette him conſider the ſame offered vppon the Croſſe, that it might bee the price of our reconcilation with GOD. But that whiche Matthewe and Marke doe not ſpeake of in the bread, they doe expreſſe in the Cuppe: namelye, that the bloud ſhoulde bee ſhedde for the forgiueneſſe of ſins; and this clauſe muſt be referred to them both. Therefore that wee may bee fedde rytelye with the fleſhe of Chriſte, wee muſte beholde his offeringe vppe in ſacrifice: for it was meete that hee ſhould be once giuen in ſacrifice for vs, that he might be daily giuen vnto vs.

MAT. 27. Drinke yee all of this. Becauſe it was the purpoſe of Chriſt to tie our faith wholy vnto himſelf, that we ſhuld not ſeek for any thing without him, by theſe two tokens hee declareth that our life is ſhutte vp in him. For the nouriſhment and mayntenaunce of lyfe, this bodye needeth both meate and drinke. Chriſt, that he might teach that hee alone is altogeather ſufficient to perfourme all the partes of ſaluation, attributeth this vnto himſelfe, that hee is in ſteede both of meate and drinke. VVherein his wonderful kindenes appeareth, that he willing to prouide for our fayth, ſhould ſo ſubmitte himſelfe to the rudenes of our fleſh. So much the more deteſtable is the ſacrilegious boldneſſe of the Pope, who doubted not to breake this ſacred bande. VVee heere that the ſonne of GOD togeather by two pledges declared the fulneſſe of lyfe, which hee beſtoweth vppon his. By what lawe hath a mortall man lybertie to pull a ſunder thoſe thinges, which were ioyned togeather by God? Further, in that the Lorde dooth purpoſely commaund al men to drinke of this cuppe, whether ſhould this ſacriledge baniſh it from his Church. VVee read that he ſayde ſimply of the bread, that they ſhoulde take it. VVhye doth he by name commaund all to drinke, and Marke ſaieth expreſly, that they all dranke, but that the faythfull ſhoulde take heede of anye wicked innouation? Yet the Pope was not afrayde of this ſeuere commaundement, but that he durſte chaunge and violate the lawe eſtabliſhed by the Lorde. For hee hath forbydden all the people the vſe of the Cuppe.

And that he might proue that he had reaſon to rob them of the ſame, hee pretendeth that it is ſufficient to haue one kinde: beecauſe the one doth ſo attend vppon the other, that the bloud is ioyned with the fleſhe. As thogh it were not lawful vnder the ſame pretẽce to aboliſh the whol ſacrament, becauſe that Chriſt could likewiſe make vs partakers of him ſelf without any outward help. But theſe childiſh cauillations ar no help to his vngodlines: for there is not a greater abſurdity, thẽ that the faithful ſhould wyllingly want, or ſtould ſuffer themſelues to be depriued of thoſe helpes, which the Lorde hath giuen them: and therefore nothing canne leſſe bee borne with, then this vngodlye rentinge of thys myſterye.

28. This is my bloud. I haue ſhewed before, that when it is ſaide, that the bloud ſhould be ſhedde for forgiuenes of ſinnes, that wee are directed by theſe woordes to the ſacrifice of the death of Chriſte, without the memorye whereof the Supper is neuer celebrated rightly. Neither can the faithful ſoules be otherwiſe ſatiſfied, but ſo farre forth as they hope that God is well pleaſed with them. But vnder the name of many, he meaneth not a parte of the world only, but al mankinde. For he oppoſeth many to one, as if he ſhould haue ſaid, that he ſhould be the redeemer not of one man, but that he ſhould dye to deliuer manye from the guiltines of the curſſe. Neither is it to be doubted but that the wil of Chriſt was ſpeaking to a few, to make his doctrine cõmon vnto many. Yet it is to be noted withal, that in Luke hee ſpeaking to his diſciples by name, exhorteth all the faith-faithful to apply the ſhedding of the bloud to their vſe. Therfore when we come to the holy table, we muſt not only haue this general thought in our mind, that the world is redeemed with the bloud of Chriſt, but let euery man think with himſelf that his own ſinnes are waſhed away. Of the new teſtament. Luke and Paule vſe an other phraſe, A newe teſtamente in bloud: the ſenſe yet is one: becauſe this couenaunt is ſanctified, confirmed, and made effectual by no other meanes, then by the ſpirituall drinking of his bloud. But hereby it is eaſie to gather how fooliſhly ſuperſtitious the Papiſtes and ſuch like become, when they ſo greedily doe ſnatche at wordes. For though they ſhould burſt, this expoſition of the holy Ghoſt cannot be reiected, that the cup ſhould be called bloud, becauſe it is a teſtament in bloud. And the ſame reaſon is of the bread. VVhereof it followeth that it ſhould be called the body, becauſe it is a teſtament in the body. There is no cauſe now why they ſhould ſtriue, to haue the ſimple wordes of Chriſt beleeued, and to ſhut the eares againſt forren expoſitions, it is Chriſt himſelf that ſpeaketh, whom they ſhal not refuſe to be a fitte interpreter of his own word. But he declareth plainely that he calleth the bread his body for no other cauſe, but becauſe hee maketh an eternall couenaunt with vs, that by his ſacrifice once offered, wee myght now be feaſted and fed ſpiritually. Further, here are two thinges worthy to be noted. For by the word Teſtament or Couenaunt wee doe gather that there is a promiſe included in the holye ſupper. VVhereby their errour is confuted, which deny faith to be holpen, nouriſhed, ſtrengthened and encreaſed by the ſacraments. For there is alwaies a mutual relation betweene the couenaunt of God and the faith of men. By the epithite new his wil was to teach, that the old figures do now end, that they might giue place to the euerlaſting and eternal couenaunt. There is therefore a direct oppoſition betweene this miſtery and the ſhadowes of the lawe. VVhereby it appeareth how much our eſtate is better then that of the fathers, for that ſince the ſacrifice was offered vppon the croſſe wee doe enioy the whole and perfect trueth.

MAR. 26. VVhen they had ſung a Pſalme. Our three Euangeliſtes do omit thoſe diuine ſermons, which our Sauior made, as Io. reporteth aſwel in the houſe, as in his iourney. For as we ſaid otherwhere, their purpoſe was rather to ſet downe the hyſtory of thinges doone, then the doctrine. They doe only note this, that hee went willingly to that place, whether Iudas was to come, that we might know that he ſo diſpenſed the momẽts of that time, that willingly he might meete with him that ſhould betray him.

Matth. 26.	Marke. 14.	Luke. 22.
31. Then ſaide Ieſus vnto them, all yee ſhall bee offended by mee this night: for it is written, I will ſmite the shepheerde, and the sheepe of the flocke shall bee scattered. 32. But after I am riſen againe, I wil goe before you into Galile.	27. Then Ieſus ſaide vnto them, al yee shall be offended by me this night: for it is written: I wil ſmit the shepheard, & the sheep shalbe scattered. 28. But after that I am riſen, I wyl goe into Galile before you. 29. And Peter ſaid vnto him,	31. And the Lord ſaide, Simon, Simon: beehold, Sathan hath deſired you, to winow you as wheat. 32. But I haue praid for thee, that thy fayth fayle not: therfore when thou art conuerted, ſtrengthen thy brethren.
33. But	XX 4 although	33. And

33. But Peter aunſwered and ſaid vnto him, though that all men ſhould be offended by thee: yet will I neuer bee offended.
34. Ieſus ſaid vnto him, verely I ſay vnto thee, that this night, beefore the cocke crowe thou ſhalt deny me thriſe.
35. Peter ſaide vnto him, thoughe I ſhoulde dye with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewiſe alſo ſaid al the diſciples.

although al men ſhould be offended, yet would not I.
30. Then Ieſus ſaide vnto him, verely I ſaye vnto thee, this daye, euen in this night, before the cocke crowe twiſe, thou ſhalt deny me thriſe.
31. But he ſaid more earneſtly, if I ſhould die with thee, I wil not deny thee: likewiſe alſo ſaid they al.

33 And he ſaid vnto him, Lord I am ready to go with thee into priſon, & to death
34. But hee ſaid, I tell thee, Peter, the cocke ſhall not crowe this day, beefore thou haſt thriſe denied that thou kneweſt me.

31. All yee. That which Matthew and Marke doe extend together to al the Diſciples, Luke ſaieth that it was ſpoken to Peter alone. And though the ſpeach was common to all, yet it is probable that Chriſte ſpak vnto them in the perſon of one, who both was to be warned aboue the reſt, and alſo had neede of ſingular comfort, leaſt after his den yall of Chriſt, he ſhould be altogeather ouerwhelmed with diſpayre.

LV. 31. Behold Satan. The other two doe more briefly and ſimply reporte that the diſciples were forewarned of their fall. But the doctrine may be more plentifully gathered out of Lukes words. For Chriſt doth not only ſpeake hiſtorically of the trouble that was to come, but he expreſly declareth that they ſhould haue a conflict with Satan, and withal he promiſeth the victory. And this admonition is very profitable, as ofte as any trouble commeth vppon vs, that we ſhould ſet before our eies the ſleightes of Satan, euen as Paule to the Ephe. 6. 12. teacheth, that wee wreſtle not with fleſh and bloud, but with ſpirituall powers, &c. The meaning therfore of the wordes is this. VVhen as you ſhal ſhortly ſee me ouerwhelmed, know you that Satan is furniſhed with theſe weapons to ouerthrow you, and he taketh this as a fit occaſion for the weakening of your faith. And therfore I ſaid that this doctrine is profitable, beecauſe that it ofte befalleth through our vnaduiſednes that we are circũuented, while we neglect thoſe temptations, wherof we ſhuld be afraid, if we cõſidered thẽ to be the firy darts of ſo mighty and ſtrong an enemy. And thogh he ſpeaketh now of that moſt bitter cõtention, wherewith the diſciples were once aſſaulted almoſt to the extinguiſhing of their faith, yet this doctrine extendeth further, as that Satan goeth about dayly, ſeeking his pray. And when he is carryed with ſo outragious a deſire to deſtroye vs, it were very abſurd that we ſhould be ſlouthful and careleſſe. Therefore let vs prepare our ſelues before the extremity of the battail appeare: for we know that Sathan deſireth our deſtruction, and he doth ſubtilly and diligently ſeeke al meanes to hurt vs. And when we ſhal come to the conflict, let vs know that al temptations whence ſoeuer they come, were forged in the ſhop of that enemye.

The ſimilytude of winowing doth not properly agree in euery point: for wee haue in an other place ſeene the Goſpell compared to a fanne or a ſiue, wherewyth VVheate is cleanſed from the Chaffe: but here heere it ſignifieth ſimply to winedew, or violently to ſhake: becauſe the Apoſtles at the death of Chriſte, were hardlier ſhaken then they were woont. This therefore is to be noted, becauſe that nothing pleaſeth Sathan leſſe, then the cleanſing of the faithfull. But though he toſſeth them to an other ende, yet it is rightly ſayde: that euen as wheat in the fanne, they are ſhaken and caſt hither and thither. Yea, we ſhal ſee a little after, that it fell out ſomewhat worſe with the diſciples. And this is the meaning of the wordes of the Lorde, which are ſet downe by Mathew and Marke. All ye ſhalbe offended by me. For they doe declare that they ſhould not only be ſtricken, but almoſt ouerthrowne: becauſe that the reprochful handling of Chriſt ſhould alſo diſcourage them. For whereas it had beene their dueties to goe forward with their maiſter, euen to the croſſe, they are drawne backe with feare. So their owne infirmity is ſet before them, to the ende, that with praying and ſighing they might flee to the ſacred ſanctuary of God.

MAT. 31. For it is wrytten. VVith this propheſie he encourageth them to paſſe ouer this offece: becauſe god ceaſeth not to acknowledge them for ſhepe, which for a time are ſcattered hether & thether. For after the prophet hath ſpoken of the reſtitution of the church, leaſt the extreme calamities which were now at hand, ſhuld driue the minds of the godly into deſperation, he affirmeth, that though the gouernment being confuſed and ouertourned, there ſhould be a ſorrowfull and miſerable diſperſion, yet the grace of God ſhuld be the conquerour. And though almoſt all the interpreaters do reſtraine this place of Zacharie 13.7. to the perſon of Chriſt alone, yet I do apply it further, as if it had bene ſayde, there ſhould be no more gouernment, whereby the people ſhould be preſerued in ſafety: becauſe the ſhepheards ſhould be taken from them. For I doubt not but that the Lorde meant all that time, when after the tyrannye of Antiochus the Churche being ſpoyled of good paſtours, lay waſte. For the Lord then ſuffered the ſword to goe through with a fearful liberty, which, the ſhepheards being ouerthrowne, miſerably troubled the eſtate of the people. Yet this ſcattering hindered not the Lord, but that at the length with his outſtretched arme he would gather his owne ſhepe together. But though the Prophet doeth generally declare that the church ſhould be ſpoiled of ſhepheards, yet this doth truly and properly belong to Chriſt. For when he was the chiefe of all ſhepheards, of whome only the ſafety of the Church depended, he being dead, al hope might ſeeme to be taken away. And this temptation was extreeme, that the redemer, who was the ſpirite and life of the people ſhoulde ſodainly be caryed to death, when he had begun to gather the flocke of God togither. And ſo much the more notable was the grace of God, when as the remnant of the flocke was wonderfully recouered againe out of that confuſion and deſtruction. VVe ſee therefore that Chriſt applied thys teſtimony very aptly, leaſt this ſcattering nowe at hande, ſhould terrifie the diſciples aboue meaſure: and yet, that they knowing their owne infirmitye, ſhould repoſe themſelues vppon their paſtour. This therefore is the ſenſe, you thinke becauſe you haue not yet tried your owne weakeneſſe, that you are valiant and ſtrong enough: but ſhortly after it ſhall appeare that Zachariah foretold the truth: the ſhepheard ſhould be ſlaine, and the ſhepe ſhoulde be ſcattered: but in the meane ſeaſon let the promiſſe why che is added, recreate and comfort you, that he wil gather the diſpearſed ſhepe home to himſelfe. And this place doeth teach that no vnitie is ſafe, but that which keepeth the ſheepe togither vnder Chriſtes ſhepheards ſtaffe.

32. After that I ſhall riſe againe. He doeth more euidently expreſſe here, that whiche I touched euen nowe, that the diſciples ſtricken wyth feare, ſhoulde for a little time be as ſheepe diſpearſed and going aſtray, ſo that yet againe they ſhould be called backe to the ſhepefold. For Chriſt doth not ſimply ſay that he ſhal riſe again: but promiſeth that he will be their guide, and adopteth them to be his companions as if they hadde ſtoode ſounde: and that they may haue the more aſſurance, he doeth before appoynt the place, whether he will gather them togethet againe: as if hee ſhould haue ſayde, I will gather you that are ſcattered againe to Ieruſalem.

33. Peter anſweared. Though Peter diſſembleth not, but ſpeaketh of a ſincere affection: yet, becauſe that with a vaine confidence of hys owne ſtrength he is caried into a fonde bragge, hee is woorthily reprooued by Chriſt, and ſhortly after, is grieuouſly puniſhed for his raſhneſſe. So the ſucceſſe doth declare that Peter promiſed more then he was able to performe, becauſe that he had not made ſufficient trial of himſelfe. Heereby alſo it is better perceiued, how blockiſh a thing it is for mā to be drunke with truſt in himſelfe, in that he being againe admoniſhed by the ſonne of God of his weakeneſſe, and he addeth an othe, ſo that he yeeldeth not, neither forſaketh any thinge of his vaine opinion, but that he proceedeth with greater boldneſſe, to puffe vppe thoſe lofty and bragging motions. Yet it is demaunded, whether Peter might not hope for that which he promiſeth of himſelfe: and alſo whether he truſting in the promiſſe of Chriſt might not promiſſe this of himſelfe. I anſweare that the promiſſe which Chriſte made before to his diſciples of the ſpirite of inuincible fortitude, belonged to that time of renewinge, which followed the reſurrection. Therefore, becauſe they were not yet endued with the heauenly power, Peter truſting in himſelfe, went beyonde the boundes of faith. And he greatly offended two wayes: for hee preuentinge the time, raſhly promiſed for himſelfe, and repoſed not himſelfe in the promiſſe of the Lord. Secondly, with cloſed eyes he paſſing by his owne infirmity, doeth rather ſecurely then valiantly, promiſſe more of himſelfe, then reaſon would require. This therfore is to be noted, that euery man being mindefull of his owne infirmity, ſhould flee to the aſsiſtāce of the holy Ghoſt: then that no man ſhuld be ſo bolde to take more vpon him, then the Lorde promiſeth. And the faithfull ought ſo to come prepared to the battel, as that not doubting nor miſtrufting the ſucceſſe of the victory, they ſhuld courageouſly reſiſt feare: for fearfulneſſe and too much doubtfulneſſe, is a ſigne of diſtruſt. But on the other ſide, blockiſhneſſe muſt be auoided, which both driueth away all care, and puffeth vppe the mindes with pride, and quencheth the deſire of praying. This meane is notably ſet downe by Paule to the Phil. 2. 12. when hee commandeth vs to make an ende of our ſaluation with feare and trembling, becauſe it is God which worketh in vs both to will and to do. For of the one ſide he prouoketh them that are humbled, to ſeeke helpe other where: yet againe, leaſt this courſe ſhoulde make vs ſlouthful, hee exhorteth vs to behaue our ſelues boldly. Therefore, ſo oft as any temptation doth aſſaule vs: firſt lette vs remember our infirmity, that we being altogither ouerthrowne, may learne from other where, to ſeeke for that which is wanting in vs: then let vs remember the grace which is offered vs, which may put vs out of doubt. For they which forget their owne infirmity, wythout calling vpon God, doe imagine themſelues to be ſtrong, doe as raſhe ſouldiours, which raſhly doe runne to the warres: and when they haue breathed out their ſurfetting, they thinke vppon nothing elſe but fight. And it is maruell that the reſt of the diſciples, after that Peter was reprooued, doe yet fall into the ſame raſhneſſe: whereby it appeareth howe little acquainted they were with themſelues. By the which example we are taught not to be ſo bold to attempt any thing further then the hand of God doeth leade vs: becauſe that nothing is more tranſitorie, or will ſooner vaniſhe, then an inconſiderate zeale. The diſciples ſawe nothing to be more vile and abſurd, then to forſake their maiſter. Therfore they doe iuſtly deteſt that offence: but without aſſurance of hope of the promiſſe, and neglecting prayers, they doe flie in vaine to boaſt of that conſtancie which was none.

Mathew.	Marke.	Luke 22.
		35. And he ſayd vnto them: when I ſent you without bagge, and ſcrippe, and shoes: lacked yee any thynge? And they ſayd: Nothing.
		36. Then he ſayde to them: But nowe he that hath a bagge, let him take it, and likewiſe a ſcrippe: and hee that hath none, let him ſell his coate, & buy a ſword.
		37. For I ſay vnto you: that yet the ſame whiche is wrytten, muſt be perfourmed in mee: euen wyth the wicked was he numbred: for doubtleſſe thoſe thinges which are wrytten of me, haue an ende.
		38. And they ſayd, Lord: behold here are two ſwords. And he ſayd vnto them: It is enough.

All Chriſtes ſpeache tendeth to this purpoſe, that he had as yet ſpared his diſciples, & had not laid more trouble vpō them, then they were apt for. And he cōmendeth the eaſe of the former time, that they might the more willingly prepare thēſelues to a ſharper warfare. For to what ende hath he yet kept theſe ſimple yong nouices far out of the ſhot and reach of the dartes: but that in this caſe they ſomwhat gathering courage and ſtrength, might be prepared to the battel? It is therefore as muche as if he ſhuld haue ſaid, your eſtate hath yet been eaſie and pleaſant, for my will was, as children to nouriſh you tenderly, nowe the ful time is at hande, wherein I will exerciſe you as men. Yet the diuerſity reacheth further, which the diuerſity of the two times doth here ſet downe: for if without prouiſion when matters were ſo quiet, as they might haue prouided for themſelues, they wāted nothing when they went about their office: now much more in the tumult and heat, the care of victual being caſt aſide, it behoueth thē to haſt whether neceſsity calleth them. And though chriſt doth here eſpecially remember what he wold do with his 12. diſciples, yet withall hee declareth, that while wee are yet yonglinges and weake in faith, we ſhall haue ſo long time truce giuen vs, vntill we growe vp to be men: therefore they doe very euill, which doe vſe and apply their eaſe to delites, which do weaken the ſtrength of faith. But

But let vs not doubt but that Chriſt at this day hath regarde of vs, ſo as he will not thruſt forward younglings, and them that are vnmeete for the warre, but before he ſendeth them foorth to the conflicte, hee furniſheth them with weapons, and with power.

36. Nowe he that hath a bagge Hee doeth figuratiuely declare that great troubles and moſt ſharpe aſſaults are at hand, euen as if a captaine meaning to bring foorth his ſoldiours into the fight, ſhoulde crie an alarme. And he commandeth that all other cares being ſette aſide, they ſhoulde apply themſelues to nothinge but to the warre, no, that they ſhoulde not ſo muche as thinke of their victuall. For hee teacheth (as the maner is in extreeme dangers) that all things ſhoulde be ſolde to the bagge and the ſcrippe, that they might defende themſelues with weapons. But hee doeth not call them to the outward battaile, but onely vnder the ſimilitude of going to the warres, he declareth howe hard conflictes of temptations they ſhould endure, and how grieuous aſſaults of ſpiritual troubles they ſhoulde beare. Alſo, that they might the more willingly repoſe themſelues vppon the prouidence of God: firſt, as it is ſayde, hee biddeth them remember, that God had a care of them, ſo that when they went empty and naked, caryinge no victuall with them, yet he prouided for them. Such and ſo conuenient a helpe of God ſhould make them which haue had experience of the ſame, neuer to doubt againe, but that he will helpe in what ſo euer they ſhall neede.

37. That yet the ſame which is wrytten. The force is in this aduerbe Yet, becauſe that Chriſt declareth that he hath not done al things appertaining to his office, vntill that he be numbred with the wicked and vngodly, as one of their company. But leaſt the vileneſſe of the acte to muche amaſe them, he alleageth the propheſie of Iſaiah, out of the chap. 53. 12. which of a certainty cannot be otherwiſe expounded then of the Meſsiah. Now ſith it is ſayd there, that he ſhoulde be accounted amongſt the wicked, it became not the faithfull to be troubled at that ſight (though it was cruell) much leſſe to be alienated from Chriſt, who coulde not otherwiſe be the redeemer, but by taking the reproofe and ſhame of a wicked manne vpon him. For there is no apter a remeady for the taking away of offences, when any abſurditie doeth terrifie vs, then if wee acknowledge it to bee the pleaſure of God, and nothinge is done raſhlye, nor without good cauſe, which is done by his appoyntmēt: eſpecially where the ſame was ſpoken long before, whiche appeareth by the ſucceſſe of the ſame. Therefore, when the diſciples were to hope for ſuch a redeemer as God had promiſed in times paſt, and the Prophet Iſaiah had teſtified, that he ſhoulde beare the puniſhment vppon him, that he might deliuer vs from guiltineſſe: this ſhoulde ſuffice for the appeaſing of the horrour, that the diſciples ſhuld not make leſſe account of Chriſt.

Therefore hee addeth, that thoſe things whiche appertained to him, haue an ende: ſignifying that nothing was ſpoken in vaine by the prophets. For this phraſe vſed by the Greekes, ſignifieth to bee perfourmed, or to bee brought to effecte. Now, when the ſucceſſe doth prooue what ſoeuer the Prophets haue ſpoken, this ſhould rather auaile for the confirmation of our faith, then to make vs afraide or doubt. And though by this one argument Chriſt doeth ſtrengthen and comfort the diſciples, becauſe that all the propheſies ſhould be perfourmed: yet the counſell it ſelfe of the purpurpoſe of God, containeth in it no ſmall matter of comfort: namely, that Chriſt became ſubiecte to the damnation which we all had deſerued, & was accounted amongſt the wicked, that he might offer vs which are wicked, and ouerwhelmed with ſinnes, as righteous to the father. For heereof are we accounted pure and free from ſinnes before God, becauſe that a lambe pure and free from all ſpotte, ſupplied our place, as ſhalbe againe declared in the next chapter.

51. Lorde, beholde heere are two ſwordes. Truely, this was a vile and a beaſtly rudeneſſe, that the diſciples ſo ofte admoniſhed of bearing the croſſe, do thinke that they ſhould fight with ſwordes of yron. Further, it is vncertaine whether they ſay that they haue two ſwordes, as if they were well furniſhed againſt the ennemies: or whether they complained that they wanted weapons. This is euident that they were ſo blockiſh, that they thought not of the ſpirituall ennemie. But that the Canoniſts doe heereof gather, that their horned biſhops haue both the iuriſdiction, it is not onely a filthy allegorye, but a vile ſcoffe, wherewith they abuſe the word of God. And it was meete that the bondſlaues of Antichriſt ſhuld fall to this madneſſe, that openly with ſacrilegious contempt they ſhuld tread vnder feete the holy oracles of God.

36. Then went Ieſus with them into a place, whiche is called Gethſemane, and ſayde vnto his diſciples: Sitte yee heere while I goe and pray yonder.	32. After, they came into a place named Gethſemane: then he ſayd to his diſciples: ſitte yee heere, till I haue prayed.	39. And he came out, and went as hee was wont, to the mount of Olues: and his diſciples alſo folowed him.
37. And he tooke Peter, & the two ſonnes of Zebedeus, and began to waxe ſorrowfull, & grieuouſly troubled.	33. And he tooke with hym, Peter, and Iames, and Iohn, and hee began to be aſtayed, and in great heauineſſe.	40. And when hee came to the place, hee ſayde to them: Praye, leaſt ye fal into temptation.
38. Then ſayd Ieſus vnto them: My ſoul is very heauy, euē vnto death: tarie ye here and watche with me.	34. And ſayde vnto them: my ſoule is verye heauie, euen vnto the deathe: tarye heere and watche.	41. And he gate himſelfe from them, about a ſtones caſt, & knelad downe and prayed,
39. So he went a little further, and fell on his face, and prayed, ſayinge: O my Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſſe from mee: neuertheleſſe, not as I will, but as thou wilt.	35. So he went forwarde a little, and fel down on the ground, and prayed, that if it were poſſible, that houre mighte paſſe from him.	42. Saying: Father if thou wilt, take awaye this cup from me: neuertheles, not my wil, but thine be done.
40. After he came to the diſciples, and found them aſleepe, and ſayd to Peter: VVhat? could ye not watch with me one heur?	36. And he ſayd: Abba, Father, all things are poſſible vnto thee, take away this cuppe from me: neuertheleſſe, not that I wil, but that thou wilt, be done.	43. And there appeared an angell frō heauen, comforting him.
41. VVatch and pray that yee enter not into temptation: the ſpirite in deede is ready, but the fleſh is weake.	37. Then hee came and founde them ſleeping, and ſaid to Peter, Symon, ſleepeſt thou? couldeſt not thou watch one houre?	44. But beinge in an agonie, he praied more eatneſtly, & his ſweat was like droppes of bloud, trickeling down to the grounde.
42. Againe, he went away the ſecond	38. VVatch ye and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the	45. And second time, and prayed, saying: O my Father, if this cup cannot passe away from mee, but that I must drinke it, thy will be done.

43. And hee came and founde them a sleepe againe: for their eyes were heauie.
44. So he left them, and went away again, & praied the third time, saying the same woordes.
45. And he rose vp from prayer, and came to his disciples, and founde them sleeping for heauinesse.
46. And he said vnto them: VVhy sleepe ye? rise and praye, leaste yee enter into temptation.

the spirite in deede is ready, but the flesh is weake.
39. And againe, he went away, and prayed, and spake the same woordes.
40. And he returned & found them asleepe againe: for their eyes were heauy: neither knewe they what they shoulde answeare.

36. Then went Iesus. Luke nameth only the mount of Olives: Marke & Math. do giue a more special note of the place. But Luke setteth downe that which doth more appertain to the matter, that Christ went thither as he was wont. VVhereby we doe gather that he sought not by his departure secreate places wherein he might hide himselfe, but as it were of purpose he offred himselfe to death. Therfore Iohn sayeth, that the place was wel knowen to him that should betray him, because that Iesus was woont ofte to resort thether. And so his obedience is againe in this place described, because the father had not been appeased but by his voluntary death.

Sit ye here. Leauing the disciples a far off, he spareth their infirmitye: as if that any man seeing extreeme perill to be ready to fall vppon hym in battel, shuld leaue his wife & children in a safe place. But though he wold haue them all placed out of daunger, yet he brought 3. of them nearer him: and that was a choyse flower stronger then the rest. Yet hee tooke them not, for that he thought them able to beare the brunt, but that they might be a testimony of the common falling away of them all.

37. He began to waxe sorrowfull. VVe haue seene the Lord wrestle with the feare of death before: but because that now he buckleth hands wyth the temptation, that ioyning is called the beginning of sorrow and of heauinesse. VVherby we gather that there is no true trial of strength, but in the present action: for then the weakenesse of the flesh which before lay hid, bewrayeth it selfe, and the innermoste affections doe lay themselues open. Therfore, though God had already exercised his sonne with some tastes of things to come, yet now by the approching of death he woundeth deper, and striketh him with an vnwonted feare. Further, because it seemed a thing vnmeete for the diuine glory of Christ, that he should be so oppressed with feare and sorrowe, many interpreaters haue carefully applied themselues to seeke for shifts. But their labour was without aduice and to no purpose: for if we should be ashamed of his feare and sorrow, our redemption should vanish away and perish. For Ambrose sayd truely, I doe not onely thinke it a matter not to be excused, but I neuer haue his godlinesse and maiestie in more admiration: for he hadde done the lesse for me if he had not borne my affection. Therfore he sorrowed for me, who had no cause to sorrow for himself, & the delite of the eternal Godhead being set aside, he is stricken with the loathsomnes of my infirmitie. Therefore I do boldly name sorrowe, because I doe set forth the crosse: for hee was not incarnate in shewe, but in truthe. And therefore hee should take vppon him the griefe, that he might ouercome and not exclude the sorrowe. For they haue not the commendation of fortitude, titude, whiche do rather beare the woundes which are benummed, then the griefe of them. Thus farre Ambrose.

They which doe imagine the Sonne of God to be free from humane passions, doe not truely and in earnest, acknowledge him to be manne. Therefore, when it is sayde, that the Godheade of Christe rested, as if it were hidde for a time, that by suffering hee might fulfill the partes of a Redeemer, is so farre from containinge any absurditie in it, that the mysterie of our saluation coulde not otherwise be fulfilled. For Cyril sayd rightly: That the passion of the Crosse was not willingly suffered of Christe in some sorte, and that hee suffered the same willingly to satisfie the will of the Father, and for our saluation, thou mayest easily learne by his prayer, Father, if it be possible, lette this cuppe passe from me. For in that respecte that the woorde of God is God, and naturally the life it selfe, no manne will doubte that he feared death anye thinge at all: but being made flesshe, hee permitted the flesshe, that it shoulde suffer those thinges which pertained to the same, and therefore as verye manne hee feareth death nowe present at the doore, and sayeth, Father, if it be possible, lette this cup passe from me: but because it cannot otherwise be, let it be, not as I will, but as thou wilt.

Thou seest howe that the nature of manne euen in Christe himselfe, suffereth the things belonging to it and feareth: but by the woorde ioyned to the same, he recouereth that courage meete for God. At the lēgth he concludeth: Thou seest that in respecte of the flesshe, the deathe of Christe was not voluntarie. Yet it was voluntary, because that for it according to the will of the father, saluation and life is giuen vnto menne. And thus farre Cyrill.

Yet it must bee distinguished betweene the infirmity of the flesshe, which Christ suffered, and ours: as it doeth much differ. For in vs no affection is without sinne: because that all men doe exceede measure and a right moderation: but Christ was so troubled with sorrow and feare, that yet he murmured not against God: but remained fast to the true rule of temperance: for it is no maruel, when as he was perfect and pure from al spot, that the affections which he shewed wer pure & vnspotted, though they should be witnesses of his humane infirmitie: but from the corrupt nature of men, nothing commeth but that which is defiled and hath dregs. Therefore let this difference beholden, Christ was afraid & sorrowful without any spot of sinne: but al our affections are sinful, because they doe breake out into excesse. Nowe, that kinde of affections is to be noted, wherwith Christe was tempted. Mathew sayeth that he was sorrowfull, and grieuously (or doubtfully) troubled. Luke, that hee was in an agonie. Marke addeth, that he was afraid. But whence cōmeth this sorrow & doutfulnesse, & feare vpon him, but because that in death he conceiued somthing more sorrowful & more horrible, then the separation of the soule and the body? And certainly he died not onely, that he might goe out of the earth into heauen, but rather, that by takinge the curse vppon hym, wherto we were subiecte, he might set vs free from the same. Therefore he was not simply afraid of death, as it is a departure out of the worlde, but because the fearful tribunal seat of god was before his eies, the iudge himselfe being armed with incōprehensible vengeance: and our sinnes, the burden wherof was laide vpon him, with their huge waight pressed him downe.

VVherefore it is no meruaile, if the horrible depth of deſtruction, grieuouſly vexed him with feare and doubtfulneſſe.

38. My ſoule is very heauie. He maketh them priuie to his ſorrow, that he might mooue them to haue a like feeling with him, not that hee knewe not their weakenes, but that afterwardes he might make them the more aſhamed of their ſlouthfulneſſe. Further, this kinde of ſpeach expreſſeth a deadly wound of ſorrow: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, that he was wythout life, or halfe dead for ſorrow. So Ionas anſweareth the Lord, (chapter, 4.9.) I am angry euen to the death. Of the whiche I doe therefore giue warning: becauſe that ſome of the olde wryters ſubtilly entreating of this place, doe fondly fantaſie that the ſoule of Chriſt ſhould be ſorrowfull, not in death, but onely vnto death. And heere we muſt agayne remember the cauſe of ſo great ſorrow. For death of it ſelfe coulde not haue ſo vexed the minde of the ſonne of God, if he had not fealt that he had to doe with the iudgement of God.

39. So he went a little further. VVe haue ſeene the Lord otherwhere, that he might be ſtirred vppe to pray with more vehemencie, prayed oute of the company of men. For out of the ſight of men, we doe the better gather our ſenſes togither, that they may be the better bent to that whiche we do. It is not neceſſary ſo oft as we would pray, to flee into backe corners: (nay, it is not alwayes expedient) but where ſome great neceſsitye vrgeth, becauſe the heate of prayer doeth the more freely powre out it ſelfe in a ſolitarie place, it is profitable for vs to pray alone. If that the ſonne of God neglected not this helpe, it ſhoulde be more then a madde pride in vs, not to apply the ſame to our vſe. Adde, that where God alone is the iudge, becauſe that ambitiō is not then to be feared, the faithfull ſoule doeth more familiarly diſcouer it ſelfe, and more ſimply powreth out her prayers, ſighes, cares, feares, hopes & ioyes into the boſome of God. And God permitteth many follies to his children, when they pray alone, which in the ſight of men coulde not be wythout oſtentation. His geſture alſo, when he falleth downe vppon the grounde, doeth declare an earneſt zeale in prayer. For though the bowinge of the knee was commonly woont to be vſed in prayers as a ſigne of honoure and reuerence, yet Chriſt humbly lying vpon the ground, for the greatneſſe of his ſorrow, framed himſelfe to a miſerable behauiour.

O my father, if it be poſsible. Some doe ſtriue in vaine, to ſhewe that thys was no prayer, but onely a complaint. Yet verely, though I doe graunt, that the requeſt was abrupte, yet I doubt not, but that Chriſte prayed. Neither is that of force againſt it, that he deſireth that a thinge impoſsible ſhould be graunted him. For the prayers of the faithfull doe not alwaies flow in one courſe continually vnto the ende: they do not alwaies keepe an equall temperature, they are not alwayes framed in a diſtincte order: but rather they are intricate and doubtful, they doe either contende with themſelues, or doe ſtoppe in the midſt of the courſe: euen as a ſhippe toſſed with ſtormes, though it bendeth to the hauen, yet it cannot alwaies holde a right and equall courſe as in a calme and quiet ſea. That muſt be noted which I ſayde euen nowe, that Chriſte hadde not ſuche troubleſome affections, which mighte ſhake the pure moderation of his minde as we haue: but as muche as the ſounde and vncorrupt nature of man would beare, he was ſtricken with feare, and holden wyth doubtful-doubtfulneſſe, ſo that he was of neceſsity enforced amidſt ſuche violent ſtreames of temptations, as it were to wauer in his prayers hether and thether. This is the reaſon why he praying to auoid death, preſently reſtraineth himſelfe, ſubmitting himſelfe to the authority of the father, and correcteth and reuoketh that requeſt which hadde ſodainly eſcaped him. But it is demaunded howe he coulde deſire to haue the eternall decree of the father broken, whereof he was not ignoraunt. For thoughe the condition be added: If it be poſsible, yet this ſeemeth to be abſurde, to make the counſell of God chaungeable. For ſo it was meete for hym to holde, that it coulde not be that God ſhould reuoke his counſell. But by Marke Chriſt ſeemeth to oppoſe the power of God againſt his decree. All things (ſayeth he) are poſsible to thee. But the power of God is yll applied to this, to ouerthrow his truth by making him variable and changeable. I aunſweare, it is no abſurdity if Chriſt after the common courſe of the godly, not looking vppon the counſell of God, ſhoulde poure the deſire wherwith he was enflamed into the boſome of the father. For the faithfull in making of their prayers doe not alwaies climbe vppe to looke into the ſecreates of God, or ſit at eaſe to conſider what is poſsible to be done: but are ſometimes caried headlong with the heate of their deſires. So in Exod. 32. 32. Moſes deſireth to be blotted out of the booke of life. So Paule, Rom. 9. 3. deſired to bee accurſſed. Therefore this prayer of Chriſt was not premeditated, but the power and force of the ſorrowe, wreaſted this ſodaine ſpeache out of him, which he preſently corrected. The ſame vehemencye made him not to remember the heauenly decree for the preſent, that he coulde not in the very moment conſider that he was ſent of this condition to be the redeemer of mākinde: euen as great ſorrowe doeth often blinde the eyes, that all things cannot be remēbred at once. In ſumme, it is no abſurditye if in prayers there be not alwaies a preſent conſideration of all things, for the keeping of a diſtincte order. But in that after Marke, which Chriſt ſayeth that all things are poſsible with God, tend not to this end, as to ſet his power at controuerſie wyth his vnchangeable truth and conſtancy: but becauſe there was no hope (as it vſeth to come to paſſe in things that are without hope of recouerie) he throweth himſelfe into the power of God. By the word cup or pot, as it is ſayd other where, is noted the prouidence of God, which diſpoſeth to all men a meaſure of the croſſe and of afflictions, euen as the houſholder meaſureth out a part to euery ſeruant, & deuideth the portions amōgſt the children. Neuertheleſſe, not as I will. VVe do ſee how Chriſt reſtraineth his affection euen at the firſt, and bringeth himſelfe quickly into order. But firſt here it may be demanded, howe his wil was free from all fault, which yet agreed not with the will of God. For if the will of God be the only rule of that which is good and right, it followeth that all affections which do differ from the ſame, are corrupt. I do anſwear, though this is the true right line, to haue all our affections framed to the will of God: yet there is a certaine ſhewe of ſome ouerthwart difference, which is not faulty, nor is imputed for ſinne: as if any man ſhould deſire to ſee the eſtate of the church quiet and flouriſhing, if he ſhoulde deſire to haue the children of God freed from troubles, that all ſuperſtitions ſhould be taken away, & the rage of the wicked repreſſed that they ſhuld not hurt. Sith theſe things of themſelues are good, the faithfull may rightly deſire them, though the pleasure of God be otherwise, who wil haue his sonne to raigne amongst enemies, his children to be exercised vnder the crosse, and the victory of faith and the Gospell to be made glorious wyth the contrary assaults of sathā. VVe see how the praiers may be godly, which in shew do differ from the wil of God: because that God wold not haue vs alwaies exactly & scrupulously to search what he shall determine, but he permitteth vs to search from him that which is mete for the capacity of our vnderstanding. Yet the question is not throughly answeared: For when it was sayd euen now, that all the affectiōs of Christ were rightly ordred, how doth he now correct himselfe? for he bringeth his affection so downe into order, as if he should haue been out of order. Truely, that patient moderation wherof I spake, doeth not appeare in hys firste prayer: for, as much as in him lieth, he refuseth & denieth to execute the office of the mediator. I answear, there was no fault in it, that the terrour of death being set before him, there came withall such a darknesse, that all other thinges beinge sette aside, hee brake oute to that praier. Neither is it necessary subtilly here to dispute, whether he coulde be forgetfull of our saluation: for this one thing shoulde suffice vs, when he brake into this prayer for the auoiding of death, he thoght not of other things which might haue stopped the same. If any man will except that the first motion (which shoulde haue beene brideled before it had runne out any further) was not so tempered as it was meete it should: I answear, in the corruption of our nature there cannot be seene the heate of affections with that temperature that was in Christ: but this honour must be giuen to the sonne of God, that we iudge not him by our selues. For al the affections of the flesh do so burne in vs, that they breake out into a froward stubbernesse, or at the least they haue some dregges mixed wyth them. And so Christ was mooued both with sorrow and feare, that yet he kept himselfe within measure. Nay, as diuers partes in a song differing amongst themselues, are so farre from hauing any discord, that they do rather make an agreeable and a sweete harmonie: so in Christe there was a notable example of a due proportion betweene the wils of God & men, how without contrariety & repugnācie they do differ amongst themselues. This place doeth euidently declare that the olde heretikes which were called the Monothelites were too foolish, in that they imagined Christ to be endued with one & the same wil. Neither yet as he was God, willed he any other thing then the father. Therefore it followeth, that the affections of his humane soule were distinguished from the secreat counsel of God. But now, if it was meete that Christ should leade his wil prisoner, that he might make it subiect to the wil of god, though it was so wel ordred: how carefully must we kepe vnder the liberty e of our affectiōs, which alwais are both caried without cōsideration, & hedlong, and are filled with frowardnesse? If that the spirite of God shoulde gouerne vs, so that we would nothing but that which is agreable to reason, yet we owe this obedience to God, to beare with patience that our praiers are not alwaies graūted. For this is the modesty of faith, to graūt to god that he should determine otherwise then we desire. This rule must be especially holden, where we haue not any certaine & special promisse that we aske not any thing but vnder this condition, that God shoulde fulfil that which he hath determined: which cannot be, but by our resigning of our vowes vnto him. Now it is demanded what Chriſt profited by praier. The Apoſtle to the Heb. chap. 5. 7. ſayth that he was heard of his feare: (for ſo that place may be expoũded, and not as it is commonly red, for his reuerence,) further, that ſhuld not agree if Chriſt had ſimply feared death: for he was not deliuered from the ſame. VVherof it followeth, that for feare of a greater euil he was driuẽ to pray againſt death. For when he ſawe the wrath of God ſet againſt him, for that he ſtode at his ſeat of iudgement loaden with the ſins of all the world, it was neceſſary for him to fear at the bottomleſſe depth of death. Therfore, though he ſuſtained death, yet becauſe the ſorrowes of death were loſed (as Pet. teacheth, Act. 2. 24.) in the wraſtling he went away conquerour, the Apoſtle hath good cauſe to ſay that he was heard of his feare. Vnlearned men do heere riſe vp, and they cry out that it is a thing vnworthy, that Chriſt ſhould be afraid of being ſwallowed vp of death. But I woulde that they ſhoulde anſweare me, what feare doe they thinke it was, that wrong drops of bloud out of Chriſt: for that mortal ſweat could neuer haue come but of a fearfull & vnwonted horror. If any man at this day ſhuld ſweat forth bloud, & that in ſuch abundance that the drops ranne down to the ground, it ſhuld be an incredible wonder, if this ſhuld befall to any man for feare of death, we would ſay that he had a faint & a womanniſh hart. They therfore which deny that Chriſt praied that his father ſhuld deliuer him out of the gulf of death, they aſcribe a daintineſſe to him, yea vnmete for a common man. If any man obiect that the feare which I ſpeake of, ſhuld ſpring of infidelity, the anſwer is readie, when chriſt was ſtrickẽ with the horror of the curſe of god, he was ſo touched with the feling of the fleſh, that the faith remained ſafe & ſound: for the integrity of his nature wrought ſo, that he felt without any wounding thoſe tẽptations which do pearce vs with their ſtings. In the mean ſeaſon they do fondly imagine a victory without ſtrife, which would haue him not to fele any tẽptations. And it is not lawful to think ỹ he diſſembled any thing whẽ he cõplained of the deadly ſorrow of his ſoule: neither do the Euangeliſts lie, in ſaying that he was ſorrowful and afraide.

40. And he came to his diſciples. Though he was neither diſcharged of his fear, nor ſet free frõ his care, yet remitting that painful exerciſe of praier, he toke this ſolace betwene. For ther is not ſuch a continuance in praier required of the faithful, that they ſhuld neuer depart frõ ſpeaking to god but they do rather by the exãple of Chriſt continue their prayers, while they holding on ſo lõg as their infirmity doeth ſuffer, & ceaſe for a little time, yet then after a litle breathing they do again return to God. It had ben no ſmal cõfort in his ſorrow to haue his diſciples fellowes & cõpanions with him: but of the cõtrary it was a ſharp encreaſe of his ſorrow to be alſo forſaken of them. For though he neded not the help of any, yet becauſe that he willingly bore our infirmities, & in this agony wold eſpecially giue a token of that his hũbling wherof Paul maketh mention, Phil. 2. 7. it is no maruell if the ſluggiſhnes of them whõ he had choſen for his felowes added a great & heauy burden to his ſorow. For he doth not expoſtulate the matter with thẽ diſſemblingly, but of the very feling of the ſoul he declareth that he is grieued, for that he was forſaken. And they were iuſtly vpbraided for their ſluggiſhneſſe, becauſe that in his extreme ſorrowes, they would not abide to watch the ſpace of one houre.

41. VVatch and pray. Becauſe the diſciples were ſlouthful when their maſter was in danger, they are willed to loke to themſelues: that the feeling of their owne trouble might waken them. Therefore Chriſte declareth, that except they watche and pray, they preſently be ouerwhelmed wyth temptation: as if he ſhould haue ſaid. Sith that you are touched with no care of me, yet haue regard of your ſelues, for your matter is here in hād: ſo that if you take not hede, you ſhall preſently be ſwallowed vp of tēptation: for to enter into temptation is to fall downe vnder it. And let vs note that here is preſcribed ỹ maner how it ſhuld be withſtode, not that we ſhould determine with our ſelues to vſe our owne power & wit: but rather that we acknowledging our own infirmity, ſhuld ſeke for defēce & ſtrengths from the lord. Therfore our watching without praier ſhall auail nothing. The ſpirit is ready. Leſt he ſhuld dant his diſciples with fear, he doth gently correct their ſlouthfulnes, by giuing them ſome comfort & matter of good hope. And firſt he declareth, that though they be willing and ready to do well, yet they muſt ſtriue with the infirmity of the fleſh, and therefore it ſhalbe alwaies nedeful for them to pray. So we ſee their readines praiſed, leaſt their infirmity ſhuld cauſe them to diſpair, & yet he ſtirreth thē forward to praiers, becauſe they wer not yet ſufficiētly furniſhed with the ſtrength of the ſpirit. VVherfore this admonitiō doth properly belong to the faithful, which being regenerate by the ſpirite of God, do deſire to liue wel, but they doe as yet labour vnder the infirmity of the fleſh: for though the grace of the ſpirit doeth flouriſh in them, yet they are weake according to the fleſh. But though the diſciples onely are foretold of their owne weaknes, yet becauſe the ſame lighteth vpon all men, which Chriſt ſpeaketh of them, heere is a generall rule to be gathered, that we muſt diligētly watch in praier: becauſe that the power of the ſpirit hath not yet ſuch force in vs, but that we do often fall through the infirmity of the fleſh, except the lord by his aid do lift & hold vs vp. But there is no cauſe why we ſhuld too doutfully feare, becauſe ther is a certain remedy ſet before vs, which is to be ſought, neither far of, nor yet in vaine: for Chriſt doth promiſſe them the victory, which do apply themſelues to praier, that they may buſily ſhake off the ſlouthfulneſſe of their own fleſh. 42. He went away the ſecond time. Chriſt ſemeth by theſe words which Mat. reporteth, as it were without feare, more freely and wyth a mind more ſet at liberty, to cōmit himſelfe to his father. For he doeth no more deſire that the cup ſhuld paſſe frō him: but paſsing by that requeſt, he reſteth rather vpon this, that he may obey the coūſel of god. But this proceding is not expreſſed by Mar. nay, when he returned the ſecōd time it is ſaid that he reherſed the ſame praiers. And certainly I think, that as oft as he praid, he was driuē with fear & horror to ſeke to eſcape death. Yet it is probable that the ſecond time he was more bēt to yeld obedience to the father, and by the bearing of the firſt temptation, he was the more encouraged with the more boldnes to mete with death. Luke doth not diſtinctly report that he praid at ſeueral times: but only ſayth, that being more troubled, that he praid the lōger & the more earneſtly, as if it had ben a cōtinual courſe of praier. But we know that the Euangeliſts ſometime omitting the circumſtances, do only ſet downe the ſum. Therfore, wher he ſayth that Chriſt came in the end to the diſciples, is a ſetting of that after, which ſhuld haue ben before: as alſo in that other clauſe, wher he declareth that the angel appeared from heauen, before that he ſpake of the agony of Chriſt.

But there is no abſurditie in this, that the order is thus inuerted: for that we might knowe that the Angell was not ſent vnto hym in vaine, the neceſſitie is after ſette downe. So he doth as it were declare the cauſe by ſetting downe the ſame afterward. And though there is no ſtrength giuen, but onely by the ſpirite of God, yet that letteth not but that God may vſe his Angels as miniſters. And heereby it may be gathered howe great afflictions the Sonne of God boare, in that he was driuen to haue the helpe of God ſet before his eye, for him to ſee.

43. Hee founde them aſleepe againe: for their eyes were heaute. This ſleepineſſe came neither of ſurfetting, nor of groſſe blockiſhneſſe, nor of too muche delite of the fleſh, but rather of immoderate ſorrowe, as Luke declareth. VVhereby we doe the better perceiue, howe our fleſh is bent to ſlouth, that the daungers themſelues doe bring it into a forgetfulneſſe of God. So Sathan hath on euery ſide apte and fitte occaſion to entrappe vs. For if we feare no aduerſitie, hee maketh vs drunke with ſleepe: and in feare and ſorrowe, which ſhoulde ſtirre vs vppe to prayer, hee ouerwhelmeth our ſences, leaſt they ſhould flie vnto God, ſo menne doe flie away euery way, and are eſtraunged from God, vntill he gather them to hym. The circumſtance is alſo to be noted, that the diſciples being ſo ſharply rebuked, ſhould preſently almoſt fall to ſleepe againe. Thys is not ſpoken of all the cõpany of them, but of the three whom Chriſt had choſen as his chiefe companions. VVhat then ſhoulde become of the common ſorte, when this fell out in the chiefe of them. The rehearſall alſo of the ſame woordes was no vaine babbling (which Chriſte before condemned in hypocrites, who by a vaine babbling thinke that they ſhall obtaine that which they neuer asked ſincerely and from the heart) but Chriſte by hys example teacheth, that it is not meete that we ſhoulde be diſcouraged or weary of prayer, if that we doe not preſently obtaine our requeſtes, if the aſſault of temptation do not extinguiſh the deſire of prayer, but that we ſhoulde aske the thirde time and the fourth, that which God ſeemed to haue denyed.

45. Then came hee to his diſciples, and ſayd vnto them: Sleepe henceforth, and take your reſt: beholde, the houre is at hande, & the ſonne of manne is giuen into the hand of ſinners.	41. And hee came the thirde time, and ſeyde vnto them: Sleepe henceforth, and take your reſt, it is enough, the houre is come: Beholde, the Sonne of man is deliuered into the handes of ſinners.	47. And while he yet ſpake: beholde a companye, & he that was called Iudas one of the twelue, went before them, and came neare vnto Ieſus to kiſſe him.
46. Riſe, lette vs goe: beholde, he is at hand that betraieth me.	42. Riſe vppe, lette vs goe: Loe, he that betraieth me, is at hande.
47. And while he yet ſpake: loe, Iudas one of the twelue came, & with him a great multitude with ſwordes and ſtaues, from the hie prieſtes and Elders of the people.	43. And immediately, while he yet ſpake, came Iudas that was one of the twelue, and with him a great multitude with ſwordes and ſtaues from the hie prieſtes, and Scribes, and Elders.	48. And Ieſus ſaid vnto him: Iudas, betraieſt thou the Sonne of man with a kiſſe?
48. Nowe, hee that betrayed him, hadde giuen them a token, ſay-	44. And he that betrayed him, hadde giuen them a token, ſaying:

45. Sleepe

ing, whome ſo euer I ſhall kiſſe, that is hee, lay holde on him.
49. And foorthwith he came to Ieſus, and ſayde: God ſaue thee, maiſter, and kiſſed him.
50. Then Ieſus ſayd vnto him: Friende, wherefore arte thou come? Then came they, & layde handes on Ieſus, and tooke him.

whome ſoeuer I ſhall kiſſe, he it is: take him and lead him away ſafely.
45. And aſſoone as hee was come, hee wente ſtraight way to him, and ſayde: maiſter, maiſter, and kiſſed him.
46. Then they layed theyr handes on him, and tooke him.

45. Sleepe hence foorth, and take your reſt It is euident enough that Chriſte ſpeaketh this ironically: but it muſt be withall conſidered, to what ende that maner of ſpeache was vſed. For ſith Chriſte had preuailed nothing by admoniſhing his diſciples, he doeth not onely ſharply reproue theyr ſlouthfulneſſe: but he ſayth, though they would be ſlouthfull, that it ſhall be no longer ſafe for them. Therefore the meaning is: becauſe hetherto I haue waſted my woordes amongeſt you, I will not yet ceaſe to exhort you: but howe ſoeuer I doe ſuffer you to ſleepe, yet your ennemies will not allow it you, but they will enforce you to watch whether you will or no. Therfore it is added in Marke. It is enough: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, now it is no time to ſleepe. And in this maner the Lord doeth oftē chaſtē the ſlouthfulneſſe of men, that they which were deafe at his woordes, at length ſhould be compeld with troubles to awake. VVherefore lette vs learne with ſpeede to giue eare to the woordes of the Lorde, leaſt that which he would draw vs vnto willingly, ſhould afterward be wreaſted out of vs, by neceſsitie.

46. Riſe, let vs go. By theſe words he declareth, that after his praier he was furniſhed with new forces. He was before willing enough to die: but at the very poynt he had a hard cōbate with the infirmity of the fleſhe, that he wold willingly haue withdrawne himſelf frō death, if he might haue had the good leaue of the father. Therfore with praiers & teares he obtained a newe force from heauen: not that he wauered at any time for want of power, but becauſe that vnder the infirmitye of the fleſh, which he had willingly taken vpon him, his wil was doutfully and with troubleſome & harde endeuour to labour, that in his owne perſon he might get vs the victorye. But nowe that trouble being appeaſed, and the feare ſubdued, again that he might offer a ſacrifice of free will to the father, he doth not only ſtay from flight, but doth willingly meete with death.

47. VVhile he yet ſpake. The Euangeliſtes doe diligently declare that the Lord foreſawe whatſoeuer befel: whereby it may be certainly gathered, that he was not drawne to death by outward violence, but ſo far forth as the wicked executed the ſecreat counſel of God. Therfore, though the diſciples had ſet before their eyes a pitifull ſight full of terrour: yet there is offred with all an argument of comfort, wherwith they might cōfort themſelues, when as the action it ſelfe declared that nothing was done by fortune, & that which Chriſt foretold, might direct them to beholde the glory of his Godhead. In that there was an armed company ſent by the prieſtes, & that they had gotten by entreaty of Pilate a captaine & a band of men, it doeth appeare that they were troubled and vexed wyth a bad cōſcience, ſo that they did al things fearfully. For to what end ſhuld they they nede ſo great forces for to take Chriſt, whom they knew was not defended with any force of weapons? Therefore they made ſuch diligēt preparance, becauſe that the diuine power of Chriſt, which by many inſtructions they were forced to feele, did inwardly torment them, & filled their hearts ful of feare: but of the other ſide their wonderfull madneſſe ſhewed it ſelfe, that they doubted not with the force of weapons to riſe againſt God 48. Now he that betraied. I doubt not but this Iudas was reſtrained either with the reuerence of the Lorde, or with the ſhame of his offence, that he durſt not openly profeſſe himſelfe to be one of the enemies: yea, & that admonition which Marke ſayeth that he gaue to the ſoldiours, that they ſhould lead him away warily, was therefore giuen as I doe imagine, becauſe that he remēbred that by very many meanes Chriſt had heretofore proued his Godhed. But in the meane ſeaſon his madnes was to be wondred at, either in that his friuolous diſſimulation to hide himſelfe, when he ſhoulde come into the ſight of the ſonne of God, or that he would oppoſe the witte of men againſt his great power: but that the wicked are ſo driuen forwarde with their owne madneſſe, that they entangle themſelues in their winding and croked thoughts.

49. God ſaue thee maſter. I doubt not but that Iudas as one afraid at the peril of his maſter, in theſe wordes pretēded a pitiful affection: therfore Marke expreſſeth a patheticall repetition, Maſter, maſter. For though the maieſtie of Chriſt vrged him, yet the deuill had ſo bewitched his minde, that he hoped throughly to couer his treaſon with a kiſſe and flattering words. Therefore this ſalutation or acclamation was a pretence of pitie: and I doe iudge the ſame of the kiſſe. For thoughe it was an ancient cuſtome amongſt the Iewes to entertaine their frends with a kiſſe: yet becauſe that Iudas had a little before departed from Chriſt, he ſemeth now as one afraid at that ſodaine danger, to giue his maſter this laſt kiſſe. So in ſhewe of piety he exceedeth all the reſt, while he ſeemeth to be hardly drawen from his maiſter: in the meane ſeaſon it appeareth by Chriſtes anſweare, that he profited nothing by his deceitfull dealings.

50. Frend, wherefore art thou come? It is more expreſly ſet downe by Luke, Iudas, doſt thou betray the ſonne of man with a kiſſe. But this reproofe is the more vehement, that he doeth wickedly abuſe the good will of the maſter, and the great honor which he had beſtowed vpon him to ſo great treacherie. For it is no ironical ſpeache when Chriſt calleth him frend: but he obiecteth vnto him his ingratitude, that of a neare frende and companion he is become a traitour, as it was ſpoken of before in the Pſalme 41. & 55. 13. 14. If a ſtraunger had done this, it might haue bene borne, but nowe it was my familiar and companion, with whome I ate breade ioyfully, who went into the tēple of the Lord with me, & hath lifted vp his heele againſt me. And here we doe euidently ſee, that which I ſpake of before, with what craft ſoeuer hypocrites doe couer themſelues, and what pretences ſoeuer they will ſeeme to make, when they ſhall appeare before the Lord, their ſinnes ſhalbe diſcouered: yea the greater iudgement ſhall light vpon them, for that they being receiued into the boſome of Chriſt doe traiterouſly riſe vppe againſte him: for the name of a Frende, as wee ſaide, carieth with it a ſharpe reproofe. But vnto this miſchiefe whyche Chriſte once did beare in hys owne perſonne, we muſte knowe that the Churche ſhall be alwayes ſubiecte, that ſhee ſhall alwayes nouriſh traytours in her owne boſome.

And therefore it is ſayde a little before: The traitour came, who was one of the twelue: leaſt by ſuche examples we ſhould be troubled aboue meaſure: for by bothe the meanes the Lorde would trie our faith, while Sathan oppreſſeth vs and the Churche without by open ennemies, and within by hypocrites, he forgeth the ſecreat deſtruction of it. Yet whatſoeuer we are, that are of his diſciples, we are togither taught to woorſhippe God in ſinceritie. For the defections which we doe daily ſee, doe prouoke vs bothe to feare, and to the ſtudie of true godlineſſe, as Paule ſayeth. VVho ſoeuer calleth vppon the name of the Lord, lette him depart from iniquitie: we are all commaunded to kiſſe the Sonne of God. Therefore beware that no man doe it traiterouſly: otherwiſe it ſhall be to their great coſt, that they were preferred to ſo great honour.

Mathew 26.	Marke 14.	Luke 22.
51. And beholde, one of them which were with Ieſus, ſtretched out his hande, and drewe his ſworde, and ſtroke a ſeruaunt of the high prieſt, and ſmote of his eare. 52. Then ſayd Ieſus vnto him, put vp thy ſword into his place: for all that take the ſword, ſhal pearish with the ſworde. 53. Either thinkeſt thou, that I cannot nowe pray to my Father, & he wil giue me me then twelue legions of angels? 54. How then ſhould the ſcriptures be fulfilled, which ſay that it muſt be ſo? 55. The ſame houre ſayd Ieſus to the multitude, ye be come out as it were againſt a thiefe, with ſwordes and ſtaues to take me: I ſate daily teaching in the temple amenge you, and you tooke me not. 56. But al this was done, that the Scriptures of the Prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the diſciples forſooke him and fled.	47. And one of them that ſtoode by, drewe out a ſword, and ſmote a ſeruaunt of the hie prieſte, and cutte off his eare. 48. And Ieſus anſweared and ſayde vnto them: yee be come out, as vnto a theefe with ſwordes and ſtaues to take me. 49. I was daily with you, teachinge in the temple, and yee tooke me not: but this is done that the ſcriptures ſhould be fulfilled. 50. Then they all forſooke him and fled. 51. And there followed him a certaine yeung man, cloathed in linnen vpon his bare bodye, and the younge menne caught him. 52. But hee left his linnen cloth, and fledde from them naked.	49. Now, when they which were about him, ſaw what would followe, they ſayde vnto him: Lord, ſhall we ſmite with the ſword? 50. And one of thē ſmote a ſeruāt of the hie prieſt, and ſtroke of hys righte eare. 51. Then Ieſus anſweared them, and ſayde: Suffer them thus farre: and hee touched his eare and healed him. 52. Then Ieſus ſaid vnto the hie prieſtes and captaines of the temple, and the elders whiche were come to him: Be ye come out as vnto a thiefe with ſwordes and ſtaues? 53. VVhen I was daily with you in the Temple, ye ſtretched not forth the handes againſt mee: but this is your very houre, & the power of darkeneſſe.

51. Behold one of them. Luke ſayth that al the diſciples conſpired togither to this ende, ṕ they might fight for their maſter. VVherby it apeareth, how much much bolder and readier wee are to fight, then to ſuffer. VVherefore it behoueth vs wiſely to conſider what the Lorde ſhal command,& what he ſhall require of euery of vs, leaſt the heat of our zeale do break forth out of reaſon and meaſure. And that the diſciples are ſaid to haue asked Chriſt,they did it not of that minde,that they might obey his commaundement:but by theſe wordes they declared that they were preſt and readye to refell the force of the enemies.But Peter tarried not vntill that he ſhould be commanded and lycenſed to ſtrik,but raſhly he ſteppeth forth to vſe vnlawfull force. This ſtoutnes ſeemeth at the firſt ſight to bee praiſe worthy,that the Diſciples forgetting their own weaknes, though they were vnequally matched for reſiſtaunce,yet would pledge their bodyes for their maiſter , and doubted not to throwe themſelues into the certeine daunger of death.For they had rather to die with the Lord thē themſelues to liue and to ſee him ouerwhelmed. But beecauſe that they attempted more then the calling of God woulde ſuffer or permit,their raſhnes is iuſtly condemned. VVherefore that the Lorde may be pleaſed with our doinges,let vs learne to depende vppon his will, and let not a ny man moue a finger further then he ſhalbe commaunded by him.And therefore it dooth eſpecially behoue vs diligently to apply our ſelues to this modeſty, beecauſe that in ſteede of a righte and well ordred zeale, there dooth for the moſte parte reygne in vs a diſordered raſhnes. The Euangeliſtes doe in this place conceale Peters name:but Iohn declareth, and it dooth ſhortly after by the text appear that it was Peter, whoe is heere noted, though his name be not ſette downe. Yet it may be eaſily gathered by Luke,that he had alſo other fellowes as hot as himſelf: for he doth not only ſpeak vnto one,but he ſaieth generally vnto all, Suffer them thus farre.

52. Put vp thy ſword. Chriſt in theſe words confirmeth that cōmaundement of the lawe, wherein priuate men are forbidden the vſe of the ſword.And the appoyntment of the puniſhment,which is preſently added muſt eſpecially be noted.For the penalty was not left to be appointed at the pleaſure of men,for them thereby to reueng their own bloud. But God himſelfe by reſtraining vs ſeuerely from murders, doth declare how deare mankinde is vnto him.Firſt therefore he wil not be defēded by force and might,becauſe that God had forbidden to ſtrike in the law. And this is a generall reaſon,and preſently hee deſcendeth to a ſpeciall. But heere is moued a queſtion, whether it be neuer lawefull by violence to repell vniuſt violence.For when Peter had to doe againſt vngodly & wicked theeues,he is yet condemned,becauſe he tooke the ſword.If that in this facte an exception of a moderate defence could not auaile,Chriſt ſeemeth to tye all mens handes . But though this queſtion was handled by vs before vppon the fift chapter,yet I will now againe in few wordes rehearſe my iudgemet.Firſt it is meete to diſtinguiſh betweene the ciuill court and the court of conſcience.For if any man reſiſteth a theefe, beecauſe the lawes doe arme him againſt a common enemy of mankinde,he ſhall not bee in daunger of publike puniſhment. So, as ofr as it is oppoſed as a defence againſt vniuſt violence,the penalty which God hath cōmaunded earthly iudges to execute,ceaſeth . But the ſimple goodnes of the cauſe dooth not free the conſcience from guiltines, except there go a pure affection with it.Therefore that a man may rightly and lawfully de-defend himſelfe, it is neceſſary for him to put off the heate of anger and hatred, and deſire of reuenge, and all diſordered forces of the minde, that the defence may haue no troubleſome thing in it. Becauſe that this is very rare, and betalleth ſcarſly at any time, Chriſt hath good cauſe to call his Diſciples backe to the general rule, that they ſhould altogeather abſtaine from the ſworde. Furthermore, fanaticall men doe fondlye abuſe this teſtimonie, that they might pull the ſword from the Iudges. They ſay that it is wicked to ſtrike with the ſword: and I doe graunt the ſame to be true: for it is lawefull for no man to commit murther at his owne pleaſure, to be the authour of murther: but I deny the magiſtrates to bee accounted amongſt the common order of men: for they are the miniſters of God, by whome he executeth his owne iudgementes. Adde alſo that Chriſt by theſe his wordes doth expreſly giue this power to them. For when he ſaieth, that the murtherers ſhall be putte to death, it followeth that the ſword is put into the Iudges handes, that they may reuenge the death of them, which are vniuſtly ſlaine. It doth ſometimes fall out, that bloudy men are puniſhed by other meanes: yet this is the ordinary way, wherby the Lord would haue the cruell fiercenes of the wicked reſtrained, leaſt it ſhoulde goe vnpuniſhed. Nowe, where ſome Canoniſtes dare be ſo bold as to breake into this impudency, to teach that the ſword was not taken from Peter, but commaunded that he ſhould keepe it vp, vntill opportunity ſhould come for to draw it, heereby we doe perceiue howe groſlye and vntowardlye thoſe dogges doe abuſe the woorde of God.

℣ 53. Thinkeſt thou that I cannot. Now followeth that ſpecial reaſon, wherof I made mention a litle before. For Chriſte declareth that hee hath at hande a farre better maner of defence and more lawefull, but that the will of the father muſt be obeyed. For this is the ſumme, ſith that by the eternall counſel of GOD he was appoined for a ſacrifice, and the ſame was witneſſed by the Oracles of the ſcriptures, it muſte not be reſiſted. So the raſhneſſe of Peter is condemned by another circumſtaunce, in that he endeuoureth not onely to ouerthrow the heauenly decree, but alſo to ſtoppe vppe the way againſt the redemption of mankynd. Not only Peter doth draw his ſword vnlawfully, but the diſciples were fooliſh and madde, that they being ſo few, and not meete for the wars, ſhuld attempt to doe any thing againſt a bande of ſouldours and ſo greate a company.

Therefore the Lord that he might the more euidentlye reproue theyr folly, putteth this compariſon, if he ſhould ſeeke for defence for preſeruation of his life, he had not onely eleuen Angelles ready, but a great and inuincible armye: therefore when as he calleth not the Angels for help, much leſſe would he moue a ſtirre without conſideration, whereby no good were to be hoped for. For it ſhould no more auaile to haue the diſciples to make a ſtirre, then if a few frogges ſhoulde make a noyſe. But ſome interpreters doe ſearch here in vaine, howe Chriſte could obtayne Angelles of his father, by whoſe decree it was that hee ſhould dye. For theſe things are contrary one to the other, that he ſhould delyuer his ſon naked and vnarmed to death (beecauſe it was ſo neceſſarye and once appointed) & yet that he might be moued with praiers to ſende him ſuccours.

But Chriſtes ſpeach was conditional, that he had a much better meanes for the defence of his life, if the will of the father were not againſte it. So all the repugnancy is taken away: for Chriſt therefore abſtayned frō praying to his father, becauſe that hee was ſure of his decree to the contrary. Hereof yet is this profitable doctrine gathered, that they doe iniurye to God, which doe flye to vnlawful meanes vnder pretence of neceſſitie. If any man doth want riches and helpes that are lawful, he runneth headlong to wicked counſels and ſinfull endeuours: namely becauſe that fewe doe attend vppon the ſecrete counſell of God, which onely ſhould be ſufficient to giue vs rest. If we be in daunger, becauſe the end appeareth not vnto man, we imagine this or that, as if there were no Aungels in heauen, which the ſcripture ſo oft ſaieth was appointed to watch for our preſeruation, Heb. 1. 14. And ſo wee doe depriue our ſelues of their helpe. VVhoſoeuer are throwne headlong by their owne vnquietnes & too much doubtfulnes, that they doe put their hands to remedy their euils by meanes forbidden, it is euident that they do renounce the prouidence of God.

54. How then ſhould the ſcriptures be fulfilled. Chriſt by this ſaying declareth, that he will not attempt to auoyde death, to the which hee knewe that the father called him. Hee had no neede of the Scriptures to learne out of thē that it was appointed of God for him thē to die: but becauſe that mortall men do not vnderſtand what God hath determined wyth himſelf, vntil he ſhal reueale it by his word, Chriſt hauing reſpecte to his diſciples, hath good cauſe to alleage that teſtimony, which God had giuen of his will. VVe know what euill ſoeuer doth befall vs, to be ſent of God: but becauſe we are doubtfull of the ſucceſſe, in ſeeking the remedies which hee alloweth, we doe not ariſe againſt his power: but where his will is found, then to reſt. But though Chriſt here doth onely teach, that he ſhould paciently ſuffer death, becauſe that the ſcriptures do teſtifie that ſo it ſhould be: yet the vſe of this doctrine reacheth further, namely that the ſcripture is a fitte bridle for the taming of the ſtubbornneſſe of the fleſh. For to this ende doth God ſhewe vnto vs what his pleaſure is, that he might keepe vs in obedience to his will. Therefore Paule attributeth theſe properties to the ſcripture, that it may inſtruct vs to patiēce, and help vs in aduerſity, ſo much as there ſhalbe neede of comfort. Chriſt after Luke doth reproue his diſciples in few wordes, Suffer henceforth: but yet he doth ſharply inuey againſt their boldnes, becauſe they enterpriſed to enter into a damnable offence, though withal he putteth them in hope of forgiuenes, if their wicked heate being coaled, they ſhall proceede no further.

LV. 51. And he touched his eare. Peter by his fonde zeale had brought a great infamy vpon his maſter & his doctrine. And it is not to be doubted but that Satan by his ſubtilty attempted to burden the Goſpel with this reproach for euer, as if that Chriſte had kept cutters and tumultous companions to make innouations. I doe therefore thinke this to be the cauſe, why Chriſt healed this wound, which hee had giuen. But the enemies were horribly and wonderfully aſtonied, that were nothing moued at the ſight of ſo great a miracle. Yet it is leſſe meruaile that they ſaw not the power of Chriſt ſhewed in the perſon of another, when as they being throwne proſtrate by his word, yet ceaſſed not their rage.

This

This is the ſpirit of giddines, wherwith Sathan bewitcheth the reprobate, when as they are blinded by the Lorde. In that ſeruaunt eſpecially ye who was healed, there appeareth a notable example of vnthankefulnes. For that he was neither ouercome by the diuine power of Chriſte, that he might repent him of his hardneſſe, nor wonne by the benefit of an enemie to become a diſciple. For the Moonkes doe fondlye imagine that he was healed alſo in minde, leaſt the works of Chriſt ſhould haue beene vnperfect: as if that the goodnes of god were not dayly ſhewed euen vpon the vnworthy.

MAT. 55. As it were againſt a theefe. Chriſt in theſe wordes expoſtulateth with his enemies, which to execute their enuy vppon him, came furniſhed with great troupes. For this is the meaning, what neede was it to haue ſuch furniture of weapons againſt me, as if ſome theefe were to be taken? For I alwayes liued amongſt you vnarmed and peaceably, whē I taught in the temple, I might haue beene taken eaſilye without anye force of ſoldiours. But though hee complayneth of their malice, becauſe they doe violentlye runne vppon him, as vppon a ſeditious man: yet againe he pricketh their euill conſcience, becauſe that with their captayne the traitour, they came vppon him, but fearfully and with many ſignes of their diſtruſt.

56. But al this was done. The other two doe reporte this ſomewhat otherwiſe. For that which Matthew reporteth in his owne perſon, Marke ſeemeth to attribute to Chriſt. Luke alſo vſeth diuerſe wordes, that this ſhould be their houre, & their power of darknes: Yet the counſel of the holy ghoſt is certeine, whatſoeuer the wicked imagined, nothinge at all was doone without the allowaunce and prouidence of God. For, as it was ſaid beefore, God hath ſpoken nothing by his Prophetes, but that which he had with himſelfe determined. Here therefore wee are taught firſt, though Sathan triumph in his vnbrideled luſt with al the wicked, yet the hande of God ſhall alwayes gouerne, ſo that he will drawe them againſt their willes whether he wil. Secondly wee are taught, though the wicked doe fulfill, that which is foretold in the Scriptures, yet becauſe that God doth not vſe them as lawful miniſters, but directeth them by his ſecret power whether they would not, they ſhall not be excuſable, and when God ſhal iuſtly vſe their malice, the faulte ſhall reſt vpon themſelues. In the meane ſeaſon let vs note that Chriſt ſpake this, that he might take away the offence, which otherwiſe had not a litle troubled the weake, when they ſhould ſee him vexed ſo reproachfully. And his purpoſe was not onely to prouide for his diſciples, but alſo to beate down the pride of his enemies, leaſt they ſhould triumph as if they hadde gotten the victory. Therefore he ſaith in Luke, that it is their time: wherby he declareth that the Lord alloweth thē this liberty for a ſhort time. And the power of darknes is taken for the deuil, which word again auailed not a litle for the ouerthrowing of their glory. For howſoeuer they ſhal lift vp themſelues, yet Chriſte teacheth that they are but the deuilles ſlaues. Further, when all thinges are confuſedly mixed togeather, and the deuil by ſcattering abroad his darknes, doth ſeeme to ouerthrow the whol order of the world, let vs knowe that the prouidence of GOD dooth ſhine aboue in heauen, ſo that at the length he wyl ſet in order thoſe things, which are now diſordered: and therefore lette vs learne to lyft vp the eyes of fayth to that brightnes. In that all the Disciples are sayde to flye, heere agayne maye bee gathered, howe much readyer they were rashly to fight, then to follow the maister.

MAR. 51. A certeine young man. VVhereof it shoulde come to passe that some should dreame, that this young man should be Iohn, I knowe not, neyther is it greatly to be regarded: this dooth rather appertaine to the matter, to consider to what end Marke should reporte this hystory. And I doe thinke that hee did it to this ende, that wee mighte knowe that the wicked went forward tumultuously without shame and modestly (as the common vse is in such lewd attemptes) so that the youngmen tooke this man, to them a straunger, and suspected of no crime, so that he coulde scarse escape their handes naked. For it is probable that the youngman, of whom mention is made, being a fauourer of Christe, hearing of a tumult in the night, without his clothes, only couered with lynen, came forth, either that he might discouer their conspiracies, or at the least shew some duety of piety. That certeinly which I touched euē now is to be seene, that the wicked went forwarde with extreame violence, when as they spared not the poore youngman, who at that noise came halfe naked out of his bed.

Matth. 26.	Marke. 14.	Luke. 22.
57. And they tooke Iesus, & lead him to Caiaphas, the highe priest, where the Scribes and the Elders were assembled	53. So they lead Iesus awaye to the high priest, & to him came al the high priestes, and the Elders, and the Scribes.
58. And Peter followed him a farre off vnto the high priestes hall, and went in, and sate with the seruants to see the ende.	54. And Peter followed him a farre off, euen into the hall of the high priest, and sate with the seruants, and warmed himself at the fire.	54. Then took they him, and led him, and broughte him to the highe priestes house. and Peter followed a farre off.
59. Now the high priests and the elders, and al the whol counsell, sought false witnesse against Iesus to put him to death.	55. And the hie priests, and all the council sought for witnesse against Iesus, to put him to death, but found none.
60. But they found none, and though many false witnesses came yet founde they none, but at the last came two false witnesses,	56. For many bare false witnesse against him, but their witnesse agreed not together.
61. And said, this man saide, I can destroy the temple of god, and build it in three daies.	57. Then there arose certein, and bare false witnesse against him, saying, 58. VVe heard him saye, I wil destroy this temple made with handes, and within three dayes I wil builde another made without handes. 59. But their witnesse yet agreed not together.

Luke holdeth an other maner of course in setting downe this history, then Mat. and Mar. doe. But the diuersitie which is betweene them, wee will endeuour to reconcile in place conuenient. In the meane season it is good briefly to touch those thinges, which are worthy to be noted in Matthew and Markes wordes. First, that the offence of the crosse maye be taken away, the profitte muſt bee conſidered, which the humbling of Chriſt hath gotten for vs: for ſo it ſhall come to paſſe, that the goodnes of God, which is incomparable, and the efficacy of his grace ſhall abolish by his brightnes whatſoeuer deformity and reproachfulnes there ſhalbe in it: it was a vile thing, according to the fleſh, that the ſon of God ſhuld be taken, bound, and kept captiue: but when wee conſider that wee by his bands are ſet free from the tyranny of the deuil, and from the guiltineſſe which held vs bound beefore God, the offence is not onelye taken awaye, whereat our faith mighte ſtumble, but in ſteede thereof ſucceedeth the wonderfull great grace of GOD, whoe eſteemed ſo much of our deliueraunce, that hee deliuered his only begotten ſonne to the wicked to be bound. This alſo is a notable pledge of the ſinguler loue of Chriſt towardes vs, in that he ſpared not himſelfe, but willingly tooke the bandes vpon his owne fleſh, that hee might deliuer our ſoules from bandes which are much worſe.

57. They lead him to Caiaphas. Though the greater iuriſdiction, as they call ir, was taken away from the Iewes, yet there remained ſome remnauntes of that iudgement, which the law gaue to the hie Prieſt, Deu. 17. ſo ſome ſmall correction was left, when the mere empire was taken away. For this cauſe Chriſt was carried to the hye Prieſt to be examined; not that the laſt ſentence of iudgement ſhoulde bee giuen againſt him at that iudgement ſeate, but that he being condemned in their iudgemente, the Prieſtes might then carry him before the gouernour. Caiaphas the Prieſt, was otherwiſe called Ioſephus, who as Ioſephus the hyſtoriographer ſaieth in his 18. booke, had the hie prieſthood giuen him by Valerius Gratus the preſident of Iudea, when Simon the ſonne of Camithus was remoued from that honour. But his ſurname is onely ſet downe by the Euangeliſtes, becauſe it may be the ſame was then more commonly knowne, and more renoumed. Matthew ſaieth that the Prieſts came togeather to Caiaphas houſe, not that they were gathered together nowe before chriſt was brought thither at midnight: but becauſe the place was appointed, that the meſſage being heard, they might with ſpeede haſten thither very early in the morning: though we ſaw euen now that ſome of the Prieſtes were abroad with the ſouldiers in the night at the taking of Chriſt. But other where we haue often ſeene that the Euangeliſtes are not ſo curious as to obſerue the order of the time. Certeinely in this preſent place they had no other purpoſe, then to ſhewe that the ſonne of God was oppreſſed by a wicked faction of a whole counceil. And here is a horrible and feareful ſight ſet before our eies. For there was not at that time in any other place either a temple of God, or a lawful worſhip, or a face of a Church then at Hieruſalem: the hie Prieſte was a figure of the onely mediatour between God and men: they which were preſent with him in the council, repreſented the whol Church of God: yet they al cõſpire together to extinguiſh the only hope of ſaluation. But becauſe that Dauid had propheſied of the ſame, as it is ſet downe in the Pſa. 118. 22. That the ſtone reiected by the builders, yet neuertheleſſe ſhould become the head of the corner: alſo it was ſpoken of before by Iſaiah, cha. 8. 14. that the God of hoſtes ſhoulde be a ſtone of offence to al the people of Iſrael, wherat they ſhuld ſtumble: it was wel foreſeene by the Lord, leaſt that ſuch impiety of men ſhould trouble the ſoules of the faythfull.

59. They ſought for falſe witneſſe. The Euangeliſtes in theſe woordes doe note, that the priests did mind nothing lesse, then to inquire out the cause, that the matter beeing well tried, they might discerne what was righte. For this was their determination before to destroy Christ: now they do onely seeke the reason of destroying him. But it cannot bee that there should be any place lefte for equity, where as the cause was not knowne before. And in that they gaue not ouer when they found not that, which they hoped for, their blind obstinacye is the better discerned. Therefore in that blindnes of their rage, the innocency of the sonne of God appeared yet euidently, so that the deuils themselues might know that an innocent wente to death. Further, it is to be noted that they are called false witnesses, not which do vtter a lie coined of nothing, but they which doe quarrellingly peruert wordes well spoken, and doe wreste them to make them to be a crime: and such an example there is here expreslye set downe of the ouerthrow and new building of the Temple. Christe had saide, that when the Temple of his body should be destroyed, he would raise it againe the third day: now the false witnesses do not imagine any new deuise, but they do depraue his words, as if that he should boast of vsing some delusions in building of the Temple. But because the quarrell was light, & of no weight, it may hereby be readily gathered, how greatly the Priests & Scribes were blinded with their madnes, who yet without any colour do desire that Christ should die.

Matth. 26.

62. Then the chiefe Priest arose and said to him, answerest thou nothing? what is the matter, that these menne doe witnesse against thee?

63. But Iesus held his peace: Then the chiefe Priest answered, and said to him, I charge thee by the liuing god, that thou tel vs if thou be the Christ the sonne of God.

64. Iesus said to him, thou hast said it: neuerthelesse I say vnto you, hereafter shall yee see the sonne of man sitting at the right hande of the power of God, and come in the cloudes of the heauen.

65. Then the hie priest rente his clothes, saying, he hath blasphemed, what haue wee anye more neede of witnesses? beehold, now yee haue hearde his blasphemy. 66. What think ye? they answered and said, he is worthy to die.

67. Then spat they in his face, and buffeted him, and other smote him with their rods, saying, prophesie to vs, O christ who is he that smote thee?

Marke. 14.

60. Then the hie Priest stoode vp amongst them, and asked Iesus, saying, answerest thou nothing? what is the matter that these doe beare witnesse against thee?

61. But he held his peace, & answered nothing. Againe the hie Priest asked him, & said vnto him, art thou Christ, the sonne of the blessed?

62. And Iesus said, I am he, and yee shall see the sonne of man sit at the righte hande of the power of God, and come in the cloudes of heauen.

63. Then the hie priest rent his clothes, & said, what haue we any more neede of witnesses?

64. Ye haue heard the blasphemy: what thinke ye? And they al condemned him to bee worthy of death.

65. And some beeganne to spit at him, and to couer his face, and to beate him with fistes, and to saye vnto him, prophesie, and the sergeaunts smote him with their rods.

Luke. 22.

63. And the men that held Iesus mocked him, and strake him.

64. And when they had blindfolded him, they smote him on the face, and asked him, saying, prophesie whoe it is that smote thee.

65. And manye other thinges blasphemously spake they against him.

66. And assoone as it was day, the Elders of the people, and the hie priests, and the Scribes came togeather & led him into their counsil, 67. Saying, art thou the Christ? tel vs. And he said vnto them, if I tell you, you wil not beleeue it.

68. And if also I aske you, ye wil not answere me, nor let me go.

69. Hereafter shal the son of man sit at the right hand of the power of God.

70. Then saide they all, art thou the the son of God, & he said to them, ye say that I am. 71. Then said they, what neede we any further witnesse: for wee our selues haue heard it of his mouth.

62. Then the chiefe prieſt aroſe. It is certeine that Chriſte held his peace, when he was charged by falſe witneſſes, not only becauſe they were vnworthy to be refuted, but becauſe that he did not ſeeke nowe to be delyuered, knowing that the houre was come. Yet Caiaphas triumpheth vpon his ſilence, as if that he held his peace as one conuicted, as they are woont, which know themſelues guiltie. But it is great wickednes, that they ſhould charge Chriſt to be faulty: becauſe there be, which doe witneſſe againſt him. For this queſtion, What doe theſe men witneſſe againſt thee? is aſmuch as if he ſhould haue ſaide, how commeth it to paſſe, that theſe doe ſette againſt thee, but becauſe that relygion compelleth them? For they are not offended againſt thee without a cauſe. As if that he were ignorant that they were ſuborned by fraud: but thus do the wicked rage without al ſhame, when they haue power and force with thē. But Chriſt held his peace againe, not onely becauſe it was a vaine obiection, but becauſe that he being appointed to be a ſacrifice, had caſt off all care of defending of himſelfe.

63. I charge thee by the liuing God. The high Prieſte thought this one crime to be ſufficient to condemne Chriſt, if he would profeſſe himſelfe to bee the Chriſt. But when all men gloried that they hoped to be redeemed by Chriſte, this was firſt to be ſought, whether hee was ſo or no. They durſt not be ſo bold as to ſay that there was no Chriſt, by whoſe hande the people ſhould be deliuered. Ieſus commeth forth amongſt them with the title of Chriſt, why do they not attend to the matter it ſelfe? why do they not examine the ſignes, whereby they might haue proceeded to a right iudgment? But becauſe they had once determined to deſtroy Chriſt, they are content with this pretence of ſacriledge, that he tooke vpon him the glory of the Godhead. And yet with an oth Caiaphas doth ſo examine the matter, as if that the ſame being throughly proued, he had bene ready to giue place, & yet his whol mind is poſſeſſed with a peruerſe hatred and contempt of Chriſt: for ſo is he blinded with pride and ambition, that they take it for graunted, as if the matter were ſo plaine, that without inquiſition of the right, they had iuſte cauſe of condemnation in their hand.

It may alſo be gathered by the words of Caiaphas, that the Meſsias had this notable name amongſt the Iewes, that they would call him the Son of God. For he had not any other occaſion, then the common manner of ſpeach to ſtirre him to moue this queſtion. And truely the ſcripture declared vnto them, that he was aſwell the ſonne of God, as the Sonne of Dauid. And Caiaphas ſeemeth to vſe this Epithite, either to feare Chriſt, or to make him the more to be enuied: as if he ſhuld haue ſaide, ſee whether thou art runne: for thou canſt not ſay, that thou art Chriſt, but that thou muſt withall callenge the name of the Sonne of God, wherewith the ſcripture adorneth him. That in Marke appertayneth to the ſame purpoſe, where Bleſſed is vſed for God. For that faigned reuerence did more preſſe Chriſt, then if he had prophaned the holye name of GOD.

64. Thou haſt ſaidst. There is an other aunſwere ſet downe by Luke, wherein Chriſt reproueth the malice of the Prieſts, becauſe they do not aske the queſtion, for that they would know. You will not beleeue (ſaieth he) if I ſhould tell you. In the which words he declareth, that if he ſhould proue himſelfe to be the Chriſt a hundred waies, yet that he ſhould ſo preuaile nothing nothing amongst the obstinate. For they had not only heard, but also seene with their eies the miracles, which though Christe held his peace, should declare his heauenly and diuine power, and also should proclaime him to be the Redeemer promised in times past. Then is a confession added, which thogh it be reported by Mat. in mo words, yet the sense is all one. Therfore Iesus saith, that he is the Christ, not that he might therby escape death, but rather that he might inflame the rage of his enemies against him. And because that then in that base estate he was despised & almost brought to nothing, hee foretelleth that at the length in his tyme he wil come with kingly maiesty, that they shoulde feare him as a iudge, whom now they cannot abide to acknowledge for the Sauiour. The meaning therfore is, þ they were greatly deceiued, if by their present beholding of him, they should iudge what he were: for it beehoued him to be humbled and brought almost to nothing, before he should appeare adorned with the ensignes and magnifical glory of his kingdom. Hence also may a profitable doctrin be drawn, which reacheth further. For whēce commeth the great security, which the wicked is in? whereof becōe they so froward to rebell, but because the crucified Iesus, is not of anye great account amongst them? They are therefore to be called back to that horrible iudgement, which by theyr vnsensiblenes they shal not escape. And thogh they scoffe at that which is said of the comming of Christ, as at a fable, yet the iudge himself doth not in vaine cite thē to his iudgmēt seat, and he commaundeth them to be cited by the preaching of his Gospell, that they may be thereby made the more inexcusable. But this forewarning is for the speciall profit of the faithfull, that nowe with the eies of hope they may seek for Christ in heauen, sitting at the right hand of the father, and may patiently waite vntill he come, and withal be sure that the vngodly do not in vaine lift vp themselues against him in his absēce: for they shall be compelled to see him cōming aboue from heauen, whō now they do not onely despise, but also tread downe in their pride. The metaphor in the word right hand should be well known. for it is oftē found in the scriptures. And Christ is said to sit at the right hand of the father, because that he is appointed chief king, who shuld in his name gouerne the world, as if that he held the second seat of honour and empire from him. Christ therfore sitteth at the right hand of the father, because hee is his vicar, and this is therfore called the right hand of power, because that GOD dooth nowe by the hand of his sonne execute his power, and wil in the last day iudge the world.

65. Then the hie priest rent his clothes. Hereby we see how those miracles, wherby Christ testified his diuinity profited nothing amongst these wicked men. But it is no meruaile that the son of God in the base estate of a seruant should be despised of them, which were touched with no care of the promised saluation: for except they had altogether cast off all feeling of godlines, in their lamentable estate, it was meete for them carefully to waite for the redeemer. Now, when they refuse him offered vnto them without inquiry, do they not as it were extinguish asmuch as in them lieth, al the promises of God? And first the hie priest pronounceth Christe to bee a blasphemer, then, they doe al subscribe to it. And this renting of clothes doth plainly declare how boldly and wickedly the profaine contemners of God do pretend a false zeale. And this was a thing meete for the hie prieſt, when he heard the name of God reproachfully prophaned not only to burn with in & to be vexed, but to giue an open ſign of deteſtatiō: but refuſing the examinatiō of it, hee prepoſterouſly faigned the blaſphemy of himſelf. Yet in the meane ſeaſon the faithleſſe hipocrit by taking vpon him another perſō, doth teach the childrē of God, how much they ſhuld be grieued at blaſphemies, & by his example he cōdemneth the vile ſluggiſhnes of thē, which are no more mouedat the prophaning of religion, then if they heard ieſters to ſcof at fantaſticall trifles. 67. Then ſpat they in his face. Luke hath either inuerted the order of the hyſtory, or els the Lord ſuffred ſo great reproches twiſe: and the latter ſeemeth probable to me. Yet I do not doubt but that the officers tooke the more courage, the more inſolently to ſpit vpon Chriſt, & to ſtrike him, after they ſaw that he was appointed to death by the former iudgment of the council. But al theſe reproches tended to this ende, that he ſhoulde ſeeme to bee nothing leſſe like, then to bee the prince of the prophets, who could not keepe himſelf from blowes, when he had a veile put ouer him. But the prouidence of God turned this diſdainfull dealing to a far other end: for the face of Chriſt defiled with blowes & ſpittings, reſtoreth that image in vs, which by ſin was corrupt and blotted out.

Math. 26.

69. Peter ſate without in the hal, and a maid came to him, ſaying, thou alſo waſte with Ieſus of Galyle.

70. But he denied before them al, ſaying, I wot not what thou ſaiſt.

71. And when hee went out into the porch, an other maid ſaw him, and ſaid vnto them, that were there, this man was alſo with Ieſus of Nazareth.

72. And againe hee denyed with an oath, ſaying, I know not the man.

73. So after a while came vnto him they that ſtoode by, and ſaid vnto Peter, ſurely thou art alſo one of them: for euen thy ſpeach bewraeth thee. 74. Then began he to curſſe himſelf, and to ſweare, ſaying, I knowe not the man, and immediatelye the cocke crew.

75. Then Peter remembred the words of Ieſus, which had ſaid vnto him, before the cock crowe, thou ſhalt denye mee thriſe: ſo he went out, & wept bitterly.

Mark. 14.

66. And as Peter was beneath in the hal, there came one of the maides of the hye prieſt. 67. And when shee ſaw Peter warming himſelf, ſhe looked on him, and ſayde, thou waſt alſo with Ieſus of Nazaret.

68. But he denyed it, ſaying, I know him not, neither wot I what thou ſaieſt. Then hee went out into the porch, and the cocke crew.

69 Then a maid ſaw him againe, and beganne to ſaye to them that ſtoode by: this is one of them.

70. But he denied it, againe, & anon after they that ſtood by, ſaid againe to Peter, ſurely thou art one of them: for thou art of Galile, and thy ſpeach is like. 71. And hee beganne to curſſe, and ſwear, ſaying, I know not this man, of whom he ſpake.

72. Then the ſecond time the cock crew, & Peter remembred the word that Ieſus had ſaid vnto him, before the cock crowe twiſe, thou ſhalt denye me thriſe, and waying that with himſelf, he wept.

Luke. 22.

55. And when they had kindled a fire in the mids of the hal, and were ſet down together, Peter alſo ſat downe among them, 56. And a certeine maid beheld him as he ſate by the fire, and hauing wel looked on him, ſaid, this man was alſo with him.

57. But hee denied him, ſaying, woman, I know him not.

58. And after a litle while, another mā ſaw him, & ſaid thou art alſo of them: but Peter ſaid, man, I am not.

59. And about the ſpace of an houre after a certeine other affirmed, ſaying, verely, euen this man was with him: for he is alſo a Galilean.

60. And Peter ſaid, man, I knowe not what thou ſaiſt. And immediately while hee yet ſpake, the cocke crew.

61. Then the Lorde turned backe, & looked vpon Peter; and Peter remembred the word of the Lorde, howe he had ſaid vnto him, beefore the cocke crowe, thou ſhalt deny me thriſe.

62. And Peter went out and wept bitterly.

The fall of Peter which is here ſet down is a notable ſpectacle of our infirmity. Againe, in his repentance there is ſet beefore vs an example of the goodnes and mercy of God worthy to be remembred. And ſo the hiſtory which is reported of this one, containeth doctrine common to the whole Church, and that very profitable, partly to teach them which ſtand carefully to feare, partly to raiſe vp them that are falne with the hope of forgiuenes. And here is firſt to be noted, how vnaduiſedly Peter did, when he entred into the hie prieſtes hall. It was a point of pietie to follow his maſter: but ſith that he was warned how he ſhuld fal away, he ſhuld rather lye hid in ſome corner, leaſt that he ſhould caſt himſelfe into daunger of ſinning. So it doth betal oft tymes, that the faithfull vnder the colour of vertue do caſt themſelues into temptations. Wherefore let vs pray to the Lord, that he would keepe vs in with the brydle of his ſpirit, leaſt that we going out of our calling, ſhould preſently bee puniſhed. We muſt alſo pray vnto him ſo oft as we do enterpriſe to do any thing, that he would not ſuffer vs to fainte in the middſt of our labours, or in the beginning of our work: but that he would ſtrengthen vs frō heauen vnto the end. The feeling of our infirmity ſhuld be no cauſe to make vs ſlothful: but it ſhuld reſtrain our raſhnes, from attēpting any thing aboue our calling: and alſo to ſtir vs vp to prayers, that God, who hath giuen the gift to begin wel, wold alſo giue the grace of perſeuerēce

69. A maid came to him. Here we ſee that there is no neede of any great conflict, nor of many bands of men, or deuiſes to ouerthrow a man: for whoſoeuer is not vpholden by the hand of God, ſhall by and by fal at euery ſmal blaſt, or at the noiſe of the falling of a leafe. Certeinlye Peter had as great courage as any of vs, and euen now he had ſhewed a ſtrang token of a ſtout mind (thogh in a prepoſterous boldnes:) yet he tarrieth not vntil he ſhuld be drawn before the iudgment ſeat of the hie prieſt, or vntil the enemies by force ſhuld threten death: but feared with the voice of a daſel, he forthwith denieth his maſter. And, but late he ſeemed to him ſelf to be a ſoldiour inuincible euen to death. Therfore let vs remember that our forces are ſo far from being able to bear, that they fal away at the only ſhadow of a battel. But ſo the lord doth pay a iuſt reward for our faithleſnes, whē he vnarmeth vs, & weakeneth vs, ſo that we ſhall be afraid of nothing, after we haue caſt away his feare. For if the perfecte feare of god had flouriſhed in the hart of Peter, he had bene a fortres inuincible: but now he being naked & vnarmed feareth whē he is yet far frō daunger

70. He denied before them all. This circūſtance maketh the fault the greater, that Peter was not afraid to deny his maſter before ſo great a company of witneſſes. And the holy Ghoſt wold of purpoſe note this, that the very ſight of men might encourage vs to holde the confeſsion of fayth. For if we deny Chriſt before weakelinges, becauſe they beeing ſhaken by our example, doe wax faint, we doe aſmuch as in vs lyeth, deſtroy ſo manye ſoules: but if before the wicked contemners of God and enemyes of the Goſpel, we defraude Chriſte of the teſtimonye due vnto him, we do make his holy name to be ſcorned of all men. To be ſhort, as a bold and free confeſsion dooth ſtrengthen all the godlye, and maketh all vnbeleeuers aſhamed: ſo the falling away draweth with it a publyk ruine to faith, and a reproach to ſound doctrine in the Church. Therefore the hygher place that anye manne is in, the more diligentlye hee muſt take heede to himſelf: for he cannot fall from his eſtate, but that he ſhal do the more harme. Further, the maner of denyall, which is here ſet down, doth euidētly declare that ꝑ miſerable ſophiſters do auail nothing by their ambiguous and ſlufting anſwères, if they bee at any time called to yeeld a reckoning of their faith. Peter dooth not expreſly abiure the whole doctrine of the Goſpel: he only denieth that he knew the manne: but becauſe that he doth indirectly burye the light of redemption offered vnder the perſon of Chriſt, hee is condemned of vile and filthy treachery. He had heard the Lorde ſay but a litle beefore, that confeſsion of fayth was a ſacrifice acceptable to GOD. Therefore the denial cannot be excuſed, which defraudeth God of his lawefull worſhippe, and Chriſte of his honour. Therefore lette vs learne that the leauing of the ſimple and free confeſsion of faith, is a defrauding him of his lawful teſtimony.

71. An other maide ſaw him. By Marks words it may rather be gathered, that it was the ſame maid: he doth not certeinly expreſſe any other beſids the former: yet there is no repugnācy in it: for it is probable that that which one had ſpoken, flew abroade through all their mouthes, ſo that as the firſt ſhuld ſpeak of it to many, & ofte, ſo others withal came forth to cōfirme that iudgement and to ſpread it further. And Iohn reporteth that the queſtion was not demaunded the ſeconde time by a maide, but of a multitude of men. VVherby it appeareth that the ſpeach which came frō the damſel, was taken vp by the men which ſtood by, and they aſſaulted Peter. There is another difference betweene Mark & the other three: for he maketh mention of the crowing of the cock twiſe, but the other doe ſay that the cock then crew, when that Peter had denied the Lord thriſe. But the vnloſing of this knot is not hard, for Marke reporteth nothing contrary to the hyſtory of the others: but that that which they doe paſſe ouer in ſilence, he deliuereth more plainly: I do think when Chriſt ſaide to Peter, before the cock crow, that he meant ſuch a crowing as contained many courſes doubled in it. For the cockes do not only crow once, but they doe often iterate their crowinges: yet that is called but one cockes crowing, which is done at one watch. Therefore Mat. Luke & Iohn do ſay that Peter denied the lord thriſe before the end of the cocks crowing: Mark doth more diſtinctly ſet down one circūſtance: namely that in ſo ſhort ſpace of time Peter was drawn to deny him thriſe, & being warned by the firſt crowing, he repented not. Further, wee will not ſaye, that there is contrariety betweene prophane writers, if ſome one ſhould rehearſe thoſe matters, which are left vntouched by others. Therfore though that which is reported by Mark doth differ, yet it is not repugnāt to the others. And this is worthy to be noted, that Peter after he could not eſcape with a ſimple denial, he doubleth ꝑ offēce by putting an oth to it: alſo a litle after, whē he is more vehemently vrged, he falleth to curſing: wherby we do gather that after a ſinner doth once fall, he is then carried to worſe and worſe. So they which doo beginne at ſmall ſinnes, doe after runne headlong into moſte filthy & heynous offences, which they doe at the firſt abhorre. And this is the iuſt vengeaunce of GOD, after we are depriued of the helpe of the holy Ghoſte, to graunt Sathan liberty to vſe his tyranny ouer vs, ſo that we being wholly tied & bound vnto him, he may caſt vs hither and thither. And that dooth eſpecially ſhew out in the deniall of the fayth: for where any man for feare of the croſſe Croſſe doth turne away from the pure profeſsion of the Goſpell, if hee ſeemeth not yet to haue ſatiſfied the enemies, he runneth on further: and that which he durſt not confeſſe ſincerely, he dooth without any couerings altogether abiure. Then is this alſo to be obſerued, that Peter fell thriſe almoſt in a moment: for hereby it appeareth how ſlyppery & redy we are to fall, as oft as Satan vrgeth vs: and truely there wyll bee no meaſure of falling, except the Lord by his outſtretched hand ſhall holde vs back. After that the force of the grace of the ſpirite was quenched in Peter, as any man that came by him had asked him of Chriſt, he was ready to make a hunded, yea, a thouſand denials. Therefore though it was moſt filthy for him to fall thriſe, yet the Lord ſpared him, by reſtrayning the tongues of his enemies, leaſt they ſhoulde moue moe troubles. So alſo it is neceſſary at this day, that hee ſhould bridle Sathan, leaſte hee ſhould ouerwhelme vs with innumerable tentations. For though he ceaſeth not to beate vs with many engines, yet if the Lord, prouidinge for our infirmitie, ſhould not beate backe the force of his fury, we ſhoulde haue to ſtriue with an vnmeaſurable heape of tentations. Therefore we haue great cauſe to praiſe in this behalf the mercy of the Lord, in that he ſuffreth not our enemie to haue ſcarſe the hundred part of his pleaſure of vs.

74. Then he beganne to curſe. By this third denial the infidelity of Peter towards his maſter breaketh vp into a great heap. For not ſatiſfied with ſwearing, he leapeth ouer to curſing, wherein he yeeldeth both his body and ſoule to deſtruction. For he praieth that the curſſe of God maye lighte vppon him, if hee knewe Chriſte. And this is aſmuch, as if hee ſhould haue ſaide, let me come to an euill end, if I haue any thinge to do with the ſaluation of God. VVherein the goodnes of Chriſt is ſo much the more to be had in admiration, for curing his diſciple raiſed from ſo deadly a ruine. But this place doth teach that it is not blaſphemy againſt the ſpirit, if any man through the infirmity of the fleſh ſhould fall, thogh he ſhould deny the known trueth. Peter truely had hearde by the mouth of the Lord how deteſtable a trechery it is to deny him before men: and how horrible a vengeaunce doth remaine for them before God and his Aungelles, who for a ſlouthful feare of the croſſe do forſake the confeſſion of the faith: for he had a litle before preferred & not in vaine, death or any torment before the denial of Chriſt. Therefore now wittinglye, and being before admoniſhed, he caſteth himſelfe headlong, yet after hee obtaineth forgiuenes. VVhereof it followeth that he ſinned of infirmity and not of an incurable malice. For hee would willingly haue yeelded vnto Chriſt that duety of piety due vnto him, if the ſparkes of right affection had not beene quenched by feare.

75. And Peter remembred. At the crowing of the cock Chriſt alſo looked vpon him, as Luke witneſſeth. For he had firſt deſpiſed the crowinge of the cocke, as we haue heard out of Marke. Therefore it was meete that Chriſt ſhuld looke back vpon him, that he might come againe vnto him ſelfe. And euery one of vs do proue the ſame to be true in our ſelues: For which of vs doth not careleſly paſſe by with deafe eares, I do not ſay diuerſe and manifold ſonges of birdes (which yet do ſtirre vs to the glorifying of God:) but the very woorde of God, which doth euidently & plainly reſound vnto vs in the doctrine of the lawe and the Goſpel? And our mindes are poſſeſſed with ſuch a brutiſh blockiſhnes not onelye one day, but perpetually, vntil he ſhal vouchſafe to looke vponvs, who aloane conuerteth the harts of men. Yet it is worth the labour to note that it was no common maner of looking: (for he had looked before vpon Iudas, who yet became nothing the better therby) but in looking vpon Peter, he ioyned the ſecrete efficacy of the ſpirite with his eyes, and ſo with the beames of his grace he pearced into his heart. VVherfore let vs know as oft as any man ſhal fal, he cannot beegin to repent, except the Lorde looke vpon him. He wept bitterly. It is likely to be true that Peter went out for feare, for he durſt not weepe before witneſſes: wherin he yet againe ſhewed his infirmity. VVherby we do gather that hee deſerued not forgiuenes by ſatiſfaction, but obtained the ſame of the fatherly fauour of God. And by this example we are taught, though our repentance ſhould halt, yet to hope well, becauſe that God deſpiſeth not a weak repentance ſo that it be ſincere. In the meane while Peters ſecrete teares doe witneſſe his true repentaunce beefore God and the Aungelles: for beeinge withdrawne from the eyes of menne, he doth ſet before him GOD and the Aungelles: and ſo theſe teares doe flow out of the innermoſt affection of the heart. The which is therefore to be noted, becauſe that we doe ſee many which doe ſhed tears very plentifully, ſo long as men do looke vppon them, whoſe eies in ſecret do preſently waxe dry. Further, it is not to be doubted but that ambition and hypocriſie doe cauſe many to ſhed teares, which powre forth none, for feare of Gods iudgement. Yet it is demaunded whether true repentaunce requireth teares. I doe aunſwere, the faithful do oft with drye eies mourne vnto the Lorde, and confeſſe their faulte, that they maye obtaine forgiuenes: but in hainous offences they are too too blockiſh and ſlouthful, which are not wounded with ſorow and heauines, and are not aſhamed euen to powre forth teares. Therefore the ſcripture after it findeth men guiltye of ſinnes, exhorteth them to ſackcloth and aſhes.

Matth. 27.

1. VVhen the morning was come, all the chiefe Prieſts, and the Elders of the peple tooke counſell againſt Ieſus, to put him to death,

2. And led him away bound, and deliuered him vnto Pontius Pylate, the gouernour.

3. Then, when Iudas, which betraied him, ſawe that he was condemned, he repented himſelf, and brought againe the thirty peeces of ſiluer to the chiefe Prieſtes and Elders,

4. Saying, I haue ſinned, betrayinge innocent bloud. But they ſaid, what is that to vs? looke thou to it.

5. And when hee had caſte downe the ſiluer peeces in the Temple, he departed, and went out, and hanged himſelfe

6. And the chiefe Prieſtes tooke the ſiluer peeces, and ſaid, it is not lawfull for vs to put them into the treaſure, becauſe it is the price of bloud.

7. And they tooke counſell, and bought with them a potters field, for the burial of ſtraungers.

8. VVhere-

Marke. 15.

1. And anõ in the dawninge, the hye Prieſtes helde a councill with the Elders, and the Scribes, and the whole council, and bound Ieſus, and led him away, and deliuered him to Pylate.

Luk. 23.

1. Then the whole multitude of them aroſe, and led him vnto Pilate.

8. VVherefore that field is called the fielde of bleud vntil this day.
9. (Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Ieremias the Prophet, saying: and they tooke thirty siluer peeces, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel valued.
10. And they gaue them for the potters field, as the Lord appointed me.)

1. VVhen the morning was come. VVhen as the chiefe Priestes with hys counsell had examined Christ before aboute midnight, at the length at the rising of the sunne they do determine to bringe him before the gouernour. And therin they do obserue the forme of iudgment, least their haste should be suspected, if they should run to Pilate before the time, as in tumultes they vse to do. Yet it is probable, sith that Christ was brought from their council, that they had quickly consulted, and appointed with out any long delay what they wold do. For it was said before, that what time Christ came out from them, he should meete with Peter: namely, after the cockes crowing, and when it was now neere day. VVherfore the Euangelistes do not meane that they were remoued out of their place but they do only report that in the dawning of the day Christ was iudged by them to death, neither slacked they any e time in their bold executing of their wickednes. But that Luke saide before, that they were gathered in the morning, must not be expounded of their beeginning, but of the laste action which is added afterwards: as if he should haue said, after the daye appeared, because the Lord had confessed himself to be the son of God, they gaue their sentence of putting him to death. If they had had liberty to put to death, such was their fury, that they all would haue laid outragious hands vpon him: but because that Pilate had the authority of the iudgements of death, they are enforced to descend to his iudgment seat: they only do seeke to catch him in a snare in their former iudgment. For the stoning of Stephen fel out seditiously, as when thinges are in an vproare. But it was meete that the son of God should in solemne maner bee condemned of an earthly iudge, that he might blot out our guiltines in heauen. 3. The Iudas seeing. Mat. doth not by this aduerb note any certeine point of time: for shortly after he addeth, that Iudas because he saw the hie priests refuse the price of treason, did cast the same into the temple. But they came the next waye out of Caiaphas house into the iudgement hall, & there they staid vntil Christe was condemned. Therefore they were scarsly found that day in the Temple: but because that he spake of the tragical fury of the council, he ioyned also withal the death of Iudas (wherin their blinde obstinacy or yron hardnes dooth the better appeare.) And he saith that Iudas was touched with repentance: not that he repented, but that hee was displeased with the heinous offence, which he had committed: as god doth oftētimes open the eies of the reptobate, so that they beginne to feele their sins, and to abhorre them. For, they which do erneſtly sorow, so that they do repēt, are not said only Metamelein, but also Metanoein, and therof also Metanoia, which is a true conuersiō of man vnto god. Iudas therfore conceiued a lothsomnes & a horror, not that he might turn himself vnto God, but rather that he being ouerwhelmed with dispaire, might be an exāple of a mā wholy forsakē of the grace of God.

And Paul doth for good cauſe call that a godly and profitable ſorow, 2. Cor. 7. 10, which leadeth to repentaunce: but if any man ſhal ſtumble at the firſt entraunce into the ſame, that confuſed and miſſhapen ſorrow ſhal profit him nothing. But rather with this iuſte reuenge doth God at the length plague the wicked, which haue ſtubbornely deſpiſed his iudgment, in that he doth deliuer them to bee tormented of Sathan without hope of comfort. True repentaunce is a diſliking of ſinne, conceiued of a feare & reuerence of god, which withal bringeth forth of it a loue & deſire of righteouſnes. The vngodly are farre from this affection: for they would deſire neuer to make an end of ſinning: yea, they ſtriue as muche as lyeth in them, to delude both themſelues and God, but their conſcience tormenteth them with a blind horror againſt their wils, & they ſtriuing againſt the ſame: ſo ꝑ thogh they hate not their ſin, yet they feele the ſame with ſorrow & doubtfulnes grieuous and troubleſom vnto thē. Hereof it commeth to paſſe that their ſorow is vnprofitable to thē, becauſe they do not freely turne vnto God, neither yet ſeeke to be better, but faſt ſetled to their own wicked deſire, they pine awaye in that torment, whiche they cannot eſcape. By this meanes (as I ſaide euen now) God reuengeth their obſtinacy. For though God by chaſtiſing his elect hardly, doth whē they ſtriue againſt the ſame draw thē vnto him, yet the woūds which he giueth, he doth heale in time conuenient, ſo that they do willingly come to him, whoſe hand they know hath ſmitten them, and of whoſe wrath they are afraid. The former therfore do no leſſe flye then feare the iudgment of God without the hatred of ſin: & ſo they being wounded with an incurable blow, do periſh in the midſt of their ſorowes. If Iudas had giuē eare to the admonition of Chriſt, there had bene yet place to repentance: but becauſe that he had deſpiſed ſo louing a calling to ſaluation, he is deliuered ouer to ſerue Sathan, who ſhuld caſt him headlong into deſperation. But if the Papiſts taught truly in their ſchooles of repentance, then is there nothing wanting in Iudas, for in him may be founde theyr whol definition. For here is to be ſeene both contrition of heart, and confeſſion of moth, & ſatiſfaction of work as they ſpeak. Wherby wee doe gather that they do only ſnatch at the bark: becauſe they do omitte that, which was the chief, the conuerſion of man to God, whil the ſinner broken with ſhame and feare renounceth himſelf, that he may yeeld hymſelf to obey righteouſnes. 4. What is that to vs? Here is deſcribed the ſloth and blockiſhnes of the hye prieſts, in that they being admoniſhed by the fearful exāple of Iudas, doe not yet remēber themſelues. I graunte that as hypocrites vſe to flatter themſelues, they had a colour for themſelues in a readines, wherby they would diſtinguiſh betweene their cauſe & Iudas: For they thought themſelues not partakers of the ſin, thogh they had abuſed the trechery of the traitor. But Iudas doth not only cōfeſſe that he himſelf had ſinned, but he aduoucheth the innocency of Chriſt: whereof it followeth that they ſought the deſtruction of a righteous manne, and therfore they were guilty of a heinous murther. And it is not to be douted but that god wold mark their cōſciences with a hot yrō, which ſhuld diſcouer their hiddē poiſō. But let vs learn ſo oft as we ſee the wicked rerified, to whom we are any thing like, that they are ſo many prouocatiōs of vs to repētance, by the neglect wherof the obſtinate doe double theyr fault. It is alſo to be noted that by the ſin of man they al were not abſolwho entangled themſelues by euery way they could: and much leſſe did the authours of that wickednesſe preuaile to keepe themſelues from the ſame vengeance, by diſtinguiſhing themſelues from their officers.

5. He hanged himſelfe. Of this price doeth ſathan ſell his baites, wherewith he allureth the wicked for a time, that he tourneth them into madneſſe, that they willingly cutting themſelues from the hope of ſaluation, ſo that they ſhall not finde comforte any other where, but in deathe. The 30. pieces of ſiluer wherewith Iudas had betraied as wel his owne ſaluation, as Chriſt, he of himſelfe caſteth away, though he myght haue enioyed the ſame for any other men: and he doth not onely depriue himſelf, but with the ſacrilegious hire and price of the death of Chriſt, he alſo caſteth away his life. So though that God ſhould not ſtir his hand, yet the wicked are deceiued by their owne deſires, that hauing their deſires, they do not only depriue themſelues of thoſe vain goods, but therof they doe rather make halters for themſelues. But though they become their owne ſlaughter men, by executing vengeance vpon themſelues, they doe mitigate and diminiſh nothing of the wrath of God towardes them.

6. It is not lawful to put them. Heereby it doeth plainly appeare that the hypocrites onely by ſeeking an outward ſhew doe mocke with God. So that they prophane not their treaſury, they do imagine themſelues in all other things to be pure: neither doe they regarde that wicked couenant, whereby they had no leſſe bounde themſelues to Gods vengeance then Iudas. If that were an hainous offence to lay vp the price of bloude in the holy treaſury, why was it rather lawful to take the ſame frō thence? For they had no richeſſe but of the offerings of the Temple, neither had they taken that from any other place, which now they doe doubt of as a thing polluted, to lay vp there againe. But from whence came this pollution, but from theſelues? Further, the more the wicked do endeuour to couer their ſins, ſo much the more doth the lord apply the laying of them open. They hoped that the ſinne ſhould be buried with an honeſt cloke, if they ſhould buy a barren fielde for the buriall of ſtraungers. But the wonderful prouidence of God made the ſucceſſe of this cleane contrary, ſo that the field ſhuld be as it were an eternal memorial of that treaſon which before was hid. For they gaue not that place that name: but after that the matter was commonly knowne, by a common conſent it is called the fielde of bloude: as if that God had commaunded all mennes tounges to ſpeake of their reproache. And it was a plauſible matter to prouide for the buriall of ſtraungers, if it ſhould fal out that any ſhould die at Hieruſalem, which came thither out of farre countryes to offer ſacrifice.

And becauſe there was a portion of the Gentiles, I doe not diſallowe that which ſome old menne haue wrytten, that by this token there was hope of ſaluation giuen to the Gentiles, becauſe that they were included in the price of the bloude of Chriſte. But becauſe it is rather a ſubtile deuice then a ſure, I leaue it as I finde it. Corbana is a Chalde woorde, deduced from the Hebrewe woorde Corban, whereof there is mention made other where.

9. Then was fulfilled. I doe graunte that I doe not knowe howe Hieremias name ſhoulde creepe in, neither doe I muche laboure about it: the matter it ſelfe doeth euidently declare that the name of Hieremiah was through errour putte in for Zachariah: For there is no ſuch thing redde in Hieremiah, or any thynge that ſhould come neare it. And that other place if it be not aptly applyed, it maye ſeeme to bee badly wreaſted into another ſenſe.

But if wee holde that rule whyche the Apoſtles followed in cityng of the Scripture, it ſhall bee eaſie to bee knowen, that it doeth aptlye agree to Chriſte, whyche is there wrytten. After that the Lorde complayned howe longe hee ſupplied the office of a paſtour in gouernynge the people, that hee beſtowed hys labour in vaine, hee ſayeth that hee is compelled by wearineſſe and trauaile to leaue his labour: therefore hee breakinge his ſhepheards ſtaffe, refuſeth to be any more a ſhephearde. He ſayeth afterwarde when hee ſhoulde require his wages, that there were giuen him thirtie pieces of ſiluer. In which woordes he declareth that he was no leſſe contemptuouſly accounted of by them, then if hee hadde beene ſome baſe and vile labourer. For hee compareth the Ceremonies and vaine deuices wherewith the Iewes recompenced hys benefites to thirtie pieces of ſiluer, as vnto an vnmeete and a vile hire of a hearde or a labourer: therefore hee commaundeth that they ſhoulde bee caſte to the potter in the Temple: as if hee ſhould haue ſayde. Thys theyr goodly gifte, whiche ſhoulde bee no leſſe reproachfull for mee to take, then contumelious for them to offer, lette them rather beſtow to buy tiles or brickes wherewith they may repaire the chinkes and holes of the Temple.

Nowe, the more certainely Chriſte appeared to bee the GOD of hoaſtes, agaynſte whome the people was from the beginninge malignant and vnthankefull: when hee is reuealed in the fleſhe, it was meete that that whiche before was ſpoken figuratiuely, ſhould in deede and in viſible manner be fulfilled in his perſon. Therefore, when by their malice he was compelled to bidde them farewell, and that he ſhould withdrawe his labour from them as vnworthy, they valewed him at thirtie pieces of ſiluer. And this contempte of the Sonne of God was a great ſhewe of their extreeme wickedneſſe.

The price of him that was valued. Mathewe reporteth not the woordes of Zachariah: becauſe he doeth onely allude to the Metaphore, vnder the which the Lord there complaineth of the vnthankfulnes of the people. Yet the ſumme and meaning is al one, when as the Iewes wholly ought themſelues and all that they had vnto the Lord, it was not without reproache, that they ſent him away with a ſeruile hyre: as if that hee ſhoulde deſerue no more in gouerninge them ſo manye ages, then anye hearde man ſhould by one yeres labour. Therefore he complaineth that he is valued at ſo vile a price, when as hee ſhoulde be ineſtimable. And in the ende, where he ſayeth: Whome they of the children of Iſrael valued, is an indefinite maner of ſpeache. Iudas had made a bargain with the prieſte, who did beare the name and the perſon of all the people: ſo the Iewes ſetting him to ſale, Chriſte was ſolde as it were by the voyce of a cryer. But it was a price meete to be giuen to the potter.

10. As the Lorde appoynted mee. Mathewe by this clauſe declareth that this was done, not wythout the prouidence of God: for while they doe bende another way, they do vnwittingly fulfill that which was propheſied of olde. For howe coulde it be, that it ſhoulde come in their mindes to buy a field of a potter, if the Lorde had not bent their errour to execute his decree.

Math. 27.	Marke 15.	Luke 23.
11. And Ieſus ſtode before the gouernour, and the gouerner asked him, ſayinge: Art thou the king of the Iewes? Ieſus ſaid vnto him: Thou ſayeſt it. 12. And when he was accuſed of the chiefe prieſtes and elders, he anſwered nothing. 13. Then ſaid Pilate vnto him: hearest thou not howe many thinges they lay againſt thee? 14. But he anſwered not to one worde, in ſo much that the gouernor merueiled greatly.	2. Then Pilate asked him: art thou the king of the Iewes? And he answeared, and ſayde vnto him: Thou ſayeſt it. 3. And the hye prieſts accuſed him of many things. 4. Wherefore Pilate asked him againe, ſaying: Answeareſt thou nothing? Behold, how many thinges they witneſſe againſte thee. 5. But Ieſus answeared no more at all, ſo that Pilate marueiled.	2. And they beganne to accuſe him, ſayinge: Wee haue founde thys manne peruertinge the people, and forbiddinge to paye tribute to Ceſar, ſayinge: that he is Chriſt a king. 3. And Pilate asked him, ſaying: Arte thou the king of the Iewes? And he answeared him, and ſayde: Thou ſayeſt it. 4. Then ſayde Pilate to the hie prieſtes, and to the people, I finde no fault in this man. 5. But they were the more fierce, ſaying: Hee moueth the people, teachinge thorough out all Iudea, beginninge at Galile, euen to thys place. 6. Nowe, when Pilate hearde of Galile, hee asked whether the manne were a Galilean. 7. And when he knewe that he was of Herodes iuriſdiction, he ſent him to Herode, which was alſo at Hieruſalem in thoſe dayes. 8. And when Herode ſawe Ieſus, hee was exceedingly gladde: for he was deſirous to ſee him of a longe ſeaſon, becauſe hee hadde hearde manye things of hym, and truſted to haue ſeene ſome ſigne done by him. 9. Then queſtioned hee with him of manye things: but he anſweared him nothing. 10. The hie prieſtes alſo and Scribes ſtoode foorth and accuſed him vehemently. 11. And Herode with hys menne of warre, deſpiſed him, and mocked hym, and arrayed hym in whyte, and ſente hym agayne to Pilate, 12. And the ſame daye Pilate and Herode were made friendes togither, for before they were ennemies.

11. And Ieſus ſtoode. Thoughe this was an vncomely ſighte, and farre differing from the dignitie of the Sonne of God, that hee ſhoulde be drawne to the iudgement ſeate of a prophane manne, and as an euill doer in bandes pleade for his life: yet it muſt be remembered, that in the doctrine of the croſſe (which is to the Grecians fooliſhneſſe, and to the Iewes a ſtumbling blocke) conſiſteth our ſaluation. For the Sonne of God woulde ſtande bounde before an earthly iudge, and there abide the iudgement of death, that wee beinge freed from guiltineſſe, ſhoulde not doubt to come willingly to the celeſtiall throne of God.

Therefore,

Therfore, if we conſider what it profiteth vs, that Chriſt was iudged by Pilate, preſently the reproach of ſo vnworthy a ſubiection ſhalbe wiped away. And certainly, the condemnation of Chriſt offendeth none but either proud hypocrites, or blockiſh and groſſe contemners of God, which are not aſhamed of their owne wickednesſe. The Sonne of God therefore ſtoode guilty before a mortall man, and ſuffered to be accuſed and condemned, that we might ſtande without feare before God. The enemies endeuoured to lay an eternall infamie vpon him: but we muſt rather looke to the ende, whereto the prouidence of God directeth vs. If we could remember how fearfull the tribunall ſeat of God ſhould be, and yet that we could not be freed from thence, if Chriſt hadde not become guiltie vppon earth, it ſhould neuer yrke vs to glory in his bonds. Againe, as oft as we doe heare that Chriſt ſtoode before Pilate in heauy and ſorrowfull eſtate, let vs thereby take occaſion of comfort, that by vſing him as an interceſſour, we may come foorth chearefully and boldly into the preſence of God. To this alſo appertaineth, that whiche preſently followeth of his ſilence: Chriſt held his peace when as the prieſts vrged him on euerye ſide, for that by his ſilence hee mighte open our mouthes. For hence commeth that notable power which Paule celebrateth, Rom. 8. 15. that we may cry with full mouth Abba father: as I ſhall touch the ſame againe preſently.

Art thou the king of the Iewes? Thoughe they thoughte to ouerwhelme Chriſt with many and ſundry faultes, yet it is probable that they tooke very malitiouſly the name of a king, that therby they might procure him the more enuie with Pilate. Therefore by Luke it is ſette downe, that they found him peruerting the people, and forbidding to giue tribute to Cæſar, ſaying. And there was no offence more odious then this before Pilate, who cared for nothing more, then to keepe the eſtate of the Empire quiet. It appeareth by Iohn, that the matter was diuerſlye handled: but by the whole courſe it doth euidently appeare that this was the chief poynt of the accuſation. Euen as Sathan alſo at this day endeuoureth vnder thys pretence to bring the Goſpel into hatred and ſuſpition, as if that Chriſte by erecting his kingdom, ſhould weaken all the Empires of the worlde, and ſhould ouertourne the lawes of kings and magiſtrates. And kinges for the moſt part are ſo blinded in their pride, that they think that Chriſt cannot raigne, but with the loſſe of their power. Therfore this alwayes is a very plauſible action amongſt them, wherwith Chriſt was once vniuſtly charged. Therefore Pilate neglecting all other accuſations, doeth eſpecially reſt vppon the ſedition: for if he had found Chriſte troubling any thing in the ſtate of the common wealth, he had willingly condemned him without delay: this is the reaſon why he asketh him the queſtion of the kingdome. And though according to our three Euangeliſtes, the anſweare of Chriſt is doubtful, yet by Iohn it may be gathered that Chriſt freely confeſſed, that which was obiected: but withall he cleared himſelfe of the offence, when hee denied himſelfe to be an earthly king. But becauſe that it was not his purpoſe to vſe diligence to purge hymſelfe, as the guiltie doe vſe, the Euangeliſts doe ſette downe halfe his anſweare: as if they ſhoulde haue ſayde hee denied not but that hee was a king, yet the ouerthwart ennemies noted the quarrell, wherewyth they charged him vndeſeruedly.

12. He

12. He anſwearedd nothing. VVhy the Euangeliſts ſhould ſay that Chriſte held his peace, whoſe anſweare they reported euen nowe, this is the reaſon, becauſe that when hee was ready to make his defence, hee willingly refrained. Neyther did he giue that aunſweare before of the kingdome, becauſe that he deſired to be looſed, but onely that he might ſhew himſelfe to be the redeemer promiſed in times paſt, before whom euery knee ſhoulde bowe. Pilate wondered at that patience, that Chriſt would willingly betray his innocencie by holding of his peace, when as hee might readily haue refelled thoſe colde and vaine quarrels. The integritye of Chriſt was ſuch, that it was manifeſt to the iudge without any defence. But Pilate wiſhed that Chriſte ſhoulde not haue left his cauſe ſo vnanſweared, that thereby with leſſe enuie he might be ſette free. And thus farre was Pilate praiſe woorthy for his equitie, in that he fauouring the innocencie of Chriſt, vrged him to defende himſelfe. But leaſt that wee ſhould wonder at the ſilence of Chriſt as an abſurde thing, as he did it, it behooueth vs to marke the counſell of GOD, who woulde that hys ſonne (whome hee had ordained to be a ſacrifice for the waſhing away of our ſinnes) though he was pure of himſelfe, yet ſhould be condemned as guiltie in our perſon. Therfore Chriſt then kept ſilence, that he might nowe become our patrone, and might free vs from guiltineſſe by his interceſsion: he held his peace, that we might glorye, that we by hys grace are made righteous. And by this meanes was fulfilled that propheſie in Iſa. 53.7. that he ſhould be ledde as a ſheepe to the ſlaughter. Yet in the meane ſeaſon he witneſſed that good confeſsion, (whereof Paule maketh mention, 1. Tim. 6. 13.) not in woordes but in deede: not that he might thereby procure any thing priuately to himſelf, but that he might thereby obtaine pardon for all mankinde.

LVKE. 4. Then Pilate ſayde. Sith Chriſt ſhould beare the puniſhment for our ſinnes, it was meete that he ſhould firſt be cleared by the iudges owne mouth, that then it might appeare that he was rather condemned for others, then for his owne cauſe. But becauſe that Pilate durſte not diſmiſſe him freely, becauſe of the tumult of the people, hee willingly tooke the occaſion which was offered him, that hee might referre hym ouer to Herodes iudgement. And this was that Herode, whoſe ſurname was Antipas, to whome the Tetrarchie of Galile was left, when Iudea ſhould be made a parte of the prouince of Syria, Archelaus being ſent againe to Vienna. And though that Luke wil a little after ſhew that Herode was appeaſed by this preſet: yet his wil was not ſo much to ſeke to gette his fauour, as to haue an honeſt pretence to keepe himſelfe out of enuie, and ſo to auoide the neceſsity of condemning of Chriſt.

8. And when Herode ſawe Ieſus, he was exceedingly glad. Heereby it appeareth how drunke, or rather altogither madde, the wicked are made by theyr owne pride. For though Herode woulde not acknowledge Chriſte for the ſonne of God, yet he accouted him at the leaſt for a Prophet, wherfore he was moſt wicked to be delited with his reproches & ignominie. But as if he had bene iniuried all that time, that hee had not the ſight of Chriſte, nowe hee hauing him at his pleaſure, triumpheth as a conqueror. VVe ſee alſo howe the Prophets in whome the power of GOD doeth ſhine, are loued of wicked and prophane men. Herode had long wiſhed to ſee Chriſte: VVhy did he not alſo deſire to heare him, that hee might profite by his doctrine? Namely, because that hee had rather be a bare beholder of the diuine power, then godlily & humbly to reuerence it as he ought. And this is the wisedom of the flesh, so to seke out God in his woorkes, that it may not become subiecte to his power: so to desire to see his seruaunts, that it may auoide to heare him speakinge by them. Yea, when Herode hoped for some myracle of Christe, he hadde yet rather to lie guyltie at his feete, then to allow him to be a teacher. Vvherfore it is no maruaile if God shoulde wythdrawe his glorye from the vngodly, who would gladly haue hym to make them some sportes as if he were some iester.

11. And Herode despised him. It could not otherwise be but that Christ shoulde be despised by this proud manne, who pleased himselfe in his delites, kingly honour and richesse, for that hee hadde then no other but a contemptible estate. Yet Herodes pride is not to be excused, who shutte vppe the way against the grace of God: and it is not to be doubted but that God, that hee might te plague his former slouthfulnesse, purposely hardened his minde wyth suche a sight. For hee was vnworthy to beholde any sparke of the heauenly glory which was in Christe: because that hee hadde so long shutte his eyes at the full light wherewith all his countrey had beene lightened.

And Luke declareth that Christe was not onely despised of Herode alone, but of all his bande of menne: that we might know that it is rare for God to haue his righte honour in princes courtes. For because that almoste all courtiers are giuen to vaine pompes, their senses are ouerwhelmed with so muche vanitie, that they doe eyther carelesly despise the spirituall graces of God, or else they doe passe by them wyth closed eyes. But by this contempt of Christe there is a newe dignity purchased for vs, so that nowe we are pretious to God and to the Angels.

12. They were made friendes. In this, that Christe was a token or pledge of friendshippe made betweene the vngodly, lette vs learne howe contemptible the children of God and religion it selfe are in the worlde. It is probable that where they were bothe puffed vppe wyth ambition, that they grew into some contention for the gouernment: but what soeuer was the beginning of their dissention, neither of them would yeeld the least ioate of his right to the other in earthly affaires: yet because there was no account made of Christe, Pilate doeth willingly send hym ouer to Herode, and in like maner Herode sendeth him backe to Pilate. So at this day we see when iudges doe contende and striue for theeues and other wicked menne, the children of God are contemptuously reiected as thinges of nought. And the hatred of godlinesse doeth oft reconcile the vngodly togither, that they which before could agree in nothing, shuld conspire togither to extinguish the name of God. And when the vngodly doe on euery side deliuer the children of God to deathe, they doe not purchase mutuall friendshippe as wyth a great reward, but that which they thinke moste vile, they doe not hardly sticke at, euen as if a manne shoulde caste a cruste of bread to a dogge. But Christ by abolishing discords should conclude another peace amongst vs: namely, that we being first reconciled to God might with a godly and holy consent partly help each others to maintain righteousnes, partly that we myght striue in brotherly dueties and mutuall humanitie.

Mathewe 27.

15. Nowe at the feaſte, the gouernour was woont to deliuer vnto the people a priſonner, whom they would.

16. And they had then a notable priſonner, called Barabbas.

17. VVhen they were then gathered together, Pilate ſayd vnto them: VVhether will you that I let looſe vnto you Barabbas, or Ieſus which is called Chriſt?

18. (For he knewe well, that for enuie they had deliuered him.

19. Alſo, when hee was ſette downe vpon the iudgement ſeate, his wife ſent to him, ſaying: Haue thou nothinge to doe with that iuſte manne: for I haue ſuffered manye thinges thys daye in a dreame by reaſon of him.)

20. But the chiefe prieſtes and the Elders hadde perſwaded the people that they ſhoulde aske Barabbas, and ſhould deſtroy Ieſus.

21. Then the gouernour anſwearing, and ſayde vnto them: whether of the twaine will yee that I lette looſe vnto you? And they ſayde Barabbas.

22. Pilate ſayde vnto them: VVhat ſhall I doe then with Ieſus, whiche is called Chriſte: They all ſayd to him: Lette him bee crucified.

23. Then ſayde the gouernour: But what euill hath he done? Then they cried the more, ſayinge: Lette him be crucified.

Luke 23.

13. Then Pilate called togither the hie prieſtes, and the rulers, and the people,

14. And ſayd vnto them: Ye haue brought this manne vnto mee, as one that peruerted the people: and beholde I haue examined him before you, and haue founde no fault in this man, of thoſe thinges whereof yee accuſe him:

15. No, nor yet Herode: for I ſent you to him: and loe, nothing woorthye of death, is done to him.

16. I will therfore chaſtice him, and let him louſe.

18. Then all the multitude cried at once, ſayinge: awaye with him, and deliuer to vs Barabbas,

19. VVhich for a certaine inſurrection made in the citie, and murther, was caſt in priſon.

20. Then Pilate ſpake againe to them, willing to let Ieſus louſe.

21. But they cried, ſaying: crucifie, crucifie him.

22. And hee ſayde vnto them the thirde time: But what euil hath hee done? I finde no cauſe of deathe in him: I will therfore chaſtice him, and let him louſe.

23. But they were inſtante with loud voyces, and required that he might be crucified: and the voices of them, and of the hie prieſtes preuailed.

15 At the feaſt the gouernour was wont. Here is nowe deſcribed to vs partly the vnapvnappeaceable cruelty of the prieſts, partly alſo the furious obſtinacy of the people. For it muſt nedes be that they both were wonderful madde, who were not ſatisfied with conſpiring of the death of an innocent mã, except that alſo in deſpite of him they ſhould ſet a thiefe at libertie. Sathan ſo caſteth the vngodly headlong, that after they begin once to fall, they doe abhorre no wickednesſe be it neuer ſo deteſtable, but as menne blinded and amaſed they heape ſinnes vpon ſinnes. It is not to be doubted, but Pilate that he might make them yelde for ſhame, choſe this moſt wicked man, againſt whome Chriſt being oppoſed, might be ſette free. And the hainouſneſſe of the crime whereof Barrabas was guilty, ſhould haue cauſed the people iuſtly to haue hated him, that at the leaſt by cõpariſon, Chriſt might be ſet free. But neither the prieſtes nor the whole nation are afraide of any ſhame, but they deſire that the ſeditious perſon and murderer ſhould be giuen vnto them. In the meane while we muſt conſider the counſell of God, whereby it came to paſſe, that Chriſte, as the worſte of all men, ſhould be adiudged to the croſſe. The Iewes with a blinde furie doe rage againſt him: but becauſe that God had ordained him to be a ſacrifice for the waſhing away of the ſinnes of the world, he alſo ſuffered him to be made inferiour to a theefe and a murtherer. But to ſee the Sonne of God broughte to this poynte, no manne can rightly conſider it without great horrour, and loathing of himſelfe, and deteſtation of his owne ſinnes. But hence alſo there ſpringeth no ſmall matter of comfort: for Chriſt is therefore drowned in the depth of ignominie, that by his deiection he might procure our aſcenſion into the heauenly glory: therefore was he accounted worſe then the theefe, that he myghte gather vs into the ſocietie of the Angels of God. This frute if it be rightly eſteemed, ſhall be enough and more then enough for the aboliſhing of the offence of the croſſe. Further, in that the gouernour was wont at the peoples choyſe to ſet ſome one of the priſoners louſe on the feaſt daye, it was an example fooliſhly and wickedly brought in, to the manifeſt corruption of the woorſhip of God. For there is nothing more vnſeemely, then to ſolemniſe the holye dayes with freeing ſinnes from puniſhment. For God hathe therefore armed the magiſtrates with the ſworde, that they might ſeuerely reuenge thoſe ſinnes whiche cannot bee tollerated without the common daunger. VVhereby it appeareth that hee woulde not be woorſhipped with the violating of his lawes and puniſhmentes. But in this order doe men profite, when they do raſhly of themſelues deuiſe wayes to ſerue God (when as nothing ſhoulde be attempted but by the preſcript rule of his worde) that vnder the pretence of honour they doe oft ſerue him with reproches. VVherefore we muſt keepe this ſobrietie, not to offer any thyng to God, except that he require it. For he is ſo farre from being delited with prophane giftes, that they doe rather prouoke his wrath.

19. Alſo, when he was ſette downe. Thoughe that the meditation by day might haue beene the cauſe of that dreame, yet without doubte Pilates wife ſuffered not theſe troubles naturally (as it doeth daily befall to vs) but by the ſpeciall inſtincte of God. They haue commonly thought that the deuill ſuborned this woman, to the end that he might hinder the redemption of mankinde. The which is not likely, when as by his drift the Prieſtes and Scribes were ſo earneſt to deſtroy Chriſt. Therfore it muſt rather be taken thus, that God the father diuers wayes approoued the innocencie of Chriſte, that it might appeare that he died for the cauſe of others, euen for ours. And therefore his will was, that he ſhoulde be ſo oft cleared by Pilates mouth before hee was condemned, that a lawfull ſatisfaction for our ſinnes might appeare by his vndeſerued condemnation. But Mathew doeth eſpecially report this, leaſt any manne ſhoulde wonder at this ſo carefull an endeuour of Pilate, while he ſtriueth in the tumult of the people, for the life of a man deſpiſed. And certainly God by the troubles which his wife had in the night, ſtirred vp him to defend the innocencie of his Sonne: not that he would deliuer him from death, but onely that hee might teſtifie, that hee was humbled to beare the puniſhment due to others which he hadde not deſerued. But of dreames which are as viſions I haue ſpoken other where.

20. But the chiefe prieſts. The Euangeliſt noteth the chiefe authors of the miſchief: not that the people (which was pricked on forward by others) ſhould be excuſed by lightneſſe of credite: but that we might know that they were not of themſelues bent againſt Chriſt, but while they ſought to pleaſure the Prieſtes, they as well forgatte all equitie and modeſtie as their owne ſaluation. And heereby we are taught howe hurtfull it is to haue the vngodly in authority, who can eaſily tourne the common people, (then whome nothing is more vnconſtant) hither and thither to any offence. The purpoſe yet of the Euangeliſt muſt be noted, that the people ſo earneſtly deſired to haue Chriſt put to death, not that he was ſo odious amongeſt them, but becauſe that the greater part ambitiouſly deſiring to yeelde to their Prelates, without reſpecte of equitie, ſet their tongue as it were on ſale to the vngodly conſpiracie of a fewe.

22. What shal I dee then with Ieſus? Becauſe that Pilate ſaw them ſo blind and madde, that with their great ſhame they doubted not to delyuer ſo notable an offender from death: hee endeuoureth by an other meanes to touche them, that ſo he might bring them backe to the right way: for that the death of Chriſt ſhould bring ſhame vppon them, becauſe that it was commonly reported of Ieſu that he was a king, and the Chriſt: as if he ſhuld haue ſayd: If you haue no pitie of the man, at the leaſt haue regarde of your owne honour: for ſtraungers will commonly thinke that by the puniſhment of him all you are corrected. But the heate of theyr cruelty was not by this meanes appeaſed, but ꝑ they wold go forwards rather to bee enemies publikely to themſelues, then priuately to Chriſte. Therefore after Marke, that Pilate mighte vrge them the more hardly, hee ſayeth that they alſo called Ieſus a kinge, declaring this title to be ſo common, as if it had beene his vſuall ſurname. But all ſhame being caſt aſide, they doe boldly vrge the death, which drewe with it the ignominie of the whole nation. Iohn doeth report their anſweare which our three doe conceale: namely, that they haue no king but Cæſar. So they hadde rather be depriued of the hope of the redemption promiſed them, and to be brought into perpetual ſlauerie, then to take the redeemer offered them from God.

L V. 16. I will therefore chaſtice him, and let him looſe. If that a light offence was cõmitted not worthy of death, the Romane gouernours were wont to beat him which had ſo offended, with rods: and this kinde of puniſhmẽt was called a chaſtiſement. Therfore Pilate doth vnrighteouſly, who freeing Chriſt from al offẽce, wold yet puniſh him as if he were conuict of ſome ſmal crime. For he doth not only teſtifie that he found no fault in him worthy of death, but he ſaith that his innocency is without exception. Therfore why doth he whip him? But this is the vſe of earthly men, whom the ſpirit of God hath not confirmed in the conſtant way of righteouſnes, although they deſire to mainteine equitie, they are enforced to yeeld to ſmal iniuries. And they do not only account this as a iuſt excuſe for thẽ, that they fel not into a moſt grieuous ſin, but they doe chalenge thẽſelues to be praiſe worthy for that their clemency, becauſe they ſomwhat ſpared the innocent. But they do not conſider that righteouſneſſe which is more pretious then the life of men, is violated as wel with rods as with the axe. As concerning the ſonne of God, if he had beene in this maner diſmiſſed, he hadde borne the reproache of the rods without the worke of our ſaluation: but on the croſſe, euen as in a moſt royall chariot, he hath triumphed ouer his ennemies and ours. But I do wiſh that the world were not at this day filled with many Pilates: for we doe ſee that ſame fulfilled in the members which was begun in the head. VVith the ſame cruelty which the Iewiſh prieſts cried out that Chriſt ſhould be put to death, doth the Popiſh clergy perſecute his ſeruaunts. And many iudges doe willingly yeelde to their rage to make themſelues their butchers: but they which doe abhorre to ſhed bloude, that they may deliuer the innocent from death, they do whip Chriſt himſelfe the only righteouſneſſe of God. For what is it elſe, to compel the ſeruaunts of God for the redẽption of life to deny the goſpel, but to make the name of chriſt ſubiect to rods? In ỹ mean ſeaſon they pretẽd the violẽce of his enemies: as if that by this colour their faithleſſe fearefulneſſe were well couered: which if it could not be excuſable in Pilate, it deſerueth great deteſtation in them. But though our three Euangeliſts do omit this, yet it appeareth by Iohn, that Chriſt was beatẽ with rods, when as yet Pilate ſought to preſerue his life, that the wofull ſight might appeaſe the rage of the people. Yet Iohn addeth withall that it could not be appeaſed, vntill the authour of life was put to death.

Matthew 27.

24. VVhen Pilate ſawe that hee auailed nothing: but that more tumult was made, he toke water, and washed his handes before the multitude, ſaying: I am innocẽt of the blond of this iuſt man: looke you to it.

25. Then anſweared al the people, and ſayde: His bloude be on vs and on our children.

26. Then let he Barabbas looſe vnto them, and ſcourged Ieſus, & deliuered him to be crucified.

27. Then the ſoldiours of the gouernour tooke Ieſus into the common hal, & gathered about him the whole band.

28. And they ſtripped him, and put

Marke 15.

15. So Pilate willing to content the people, looſed them Barabbas, and deliuered Ieſus when hee had ſcourged him, that hee might be crucified.

16. Then the ſoldiours ledde him awaye into the hall, which is the common hall, and called togither the whole band,

17. And clad him with purple, & platted a croun of thornes, and put it about his head,

18. And began to ſalute him, ſayinge: Haile king of the Iewes.

19. And

Luke 23.

24. So Pilate gaue ſentence, that it ſhould be as they required.

25. And he lette looſe vnto them, him that for inſurrection and murther was caſt into priſon, whō they deſired, & deliuered Ieſus to do with him what they would.

26. And as they led him away, they caught one Symon of Cyrene, comming out of the field, & on him they laid the croſſe to beare it after Ieſus.

27. And there followed him a greate multitude of people, and of women, which wo-put vpon him a scarlet roabe.

29. And plaited a crowne of thornes, and putte it vppon hys heade, and a reede in his right hand, and bowed their knees before him, and mocked him, saying, God saue thee kinge of the Iewes.
30. And spitted vpon him, and toke a reede, and smote him on the head.
31. Thus when they had mocked him, they tooke the roabe from him, and putte on hys owne raiment on him, and ledde him away to crucifie him.
32. And at they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, named Simon: him they compelled to beare his crosse.

19. And they smote him on the head with a reede, and spat vppon him, and bowed the knees, and did him reuerence.
20. And when they had mocked him, they tooke the purple off him, & put his owne clothes on him, and ledde hym out to crucifie him.
21. And they compelled one that passed by, called Symon of Cyrene (which came out of the countrey, and was father of Alexander and Rufus) to bear his crosse.

men bewailed and lamented him. 28. But Iesus turned backe vnto them, and sayde: Daughters of Ierusalē, weepe not for me, but wepe for your selues, & for your children.
29. For behold, the daies wil come, when mē shal say: Blessed are the barren, and the wombes that neuer bare, and the pappes which neuer gaue sucke. 30. Then shal they begin to say to the mountaines: Fal on vs: and to the hilt, couer vs. 31. For if they do these things to a greene tree, what shalbe done to the drie?
32. And there were 2. others which were euill doers, ledde with him to be slaine.

24. When Pilate saw. Euen as the mariners after they haue tasted the great force of the tempest, do at the last yeeld & suffer themselues to be driue into a contrary course: so Pilate seeing himself vnable to appease the stir of the people, laying by the authority of a iudge, he followeth their mad outcries. And though he had striuen long to resist them, yet necessitye doth not excuse him: for he should rather haue suffred any thing then to haue neglected his office. And his sin is not made the lesse by the childish ceremony which he vsed, for how should he wipe away the blot of the offence with a few drops of water, which no sacrifices could wash away? And it may be that he had but smal regard to be cleared of his faults before God: but he shewed the people this token of detestation, if it might fal out, that he might draw thē to repent for their fury, as if he had said thus: Beholde you compel me to an vnrighteous murther, to the which I am brought with feare & horror. Therfore what shal become of you, & what great vengeance of God doth remaine for you, who are the chiefe authors of it? But what purpose so euer Pilate had, yet god wold by this meanes declare the innocency of his son, wherby it might the better appear that our sins are condēned in him. The chief and only iudge of the world is set before the tribunal seate of an earthly iudge: he is condēned to the crosse as a wicked mā: and also he is set in the midst betwene two theues, as if he were the captain of them. The lothsomnes of such a spectacle might at the first sight much trouble the senses of men, if this reason were not considered, that the punishment which was due to vs, was laid vpon christ, that the guiltines being now taken away, we should not dout to come foorth into the presence of the heauenly iudge. Therefore the water which nothing preuailed Pilate for the washing away of hys faults, should auaile at this day to an other vse, that it may purge our eyes from all impediments, that thereby they may in the midst of damnation clearly beholde the righteousnesse of Christ.

25. His bloude be on vs. It is not to be doubted but that the Iewes carelessly curssed thēselues, as if their cause were good before god: but an vnaduised zeale caried them headlong so farre, that they committinge a ſin vnpardonable, ſhuld alſo by a ſolemne curſſe, cut themſelues from al hope of forgiueneſſe. Hereby we do gather how carefully all vnaduiſed raſhnes muſt be taken heed of in al iudgemẽts. For wher men dare without regard of examination do this or that as they pleaſe, at the length frõ a blind headineſſe, it is neceſſary that they ſhuld fall into madneſſe. And this is the iuſt vengeance of God, wherby he plagueth their pride, which vouchſafe not to make choyſe of right or wrong. The Iewes thought that by killing Chriſt they ſhuld do God good ſeruice: but whẽce commeth this wicked errour, but of their vngodly ſtubbornnes & contempt of God himſelfe? VVherfore they are worthily throwne into this madneſſe, that they might purchaſe themſelues their vtter deſtruction. But where the queſtion is of the worſhip of God and of his holy myſteries, let vs learne to open our eyes, and reuerently and ſoberly ſeeke to know the cauſe, leaſt hypocriſie & audaciouſnes ſhuld make vs to be as amaſed men without wit. And as god neuer ſuffreth this curſſed ſpeach to come out of the mouth of the people, except their impiety had firſt ben deſperate: ſo he doeth after iuſtly reuenge the ſame by fearful and vnwonted meanes, & yet by an incredible myracle hee reſerued ſome remnantes to himſelf, leaſt that his couenant ſhould be extinguiſhed by the deſtruction of the whole nation. He had adopted to himſelfe the ſeede of Abraham, that it might be a choſen nation, a prieſtly kingdom, a holy portion and enheritance. Now that the Iewes as it were with one voyce, doe conſpire the refuſall of ſo great grace, who woulde not ſay that the whole nation ſhuld be pulled vp by the rotes out of the kingdom of God? But God in their infidelity doth make manifeſt the ſtedfaſtnes of his faith: and that he might declare that he made not his couenant in vain wyth Abraham, he exempted them whom he had frely choſen, from that general deſtruction: ſo his truth doth alwaies go far beyond al lets and ſtops of the vnbelief of man. 26. Then let he Barabbas looſe vnto them. Our three Euangeliſts do not ſet down that which Iohn recordeth, that Pilate went vppe into his iudgement ſeat, that he might thence giue his ſentence: for they doe onely declare that he was won by the deſire and the confuſed tumult of the people, to deliuer Chriſt without cauſe to death. Yet bothe is to be noted, that his aſſent ſhuld be wreſted out of him againſt his wil, and yet that he ſhuld become the iudge to condemne him, whom he pronoũceth to be innocent. For except the ſon of God had been pure from all ſin, by his death we ſhuld not haue ben clenſed. Again, if he had not ben pledge for the puniſhment which we had deſerued, we had been ſtill entangled in the guiltineſſe of our ſins. Therfore God would haue his ſonne condemned in ſolemne maner, that he might by his grace ſet vs free. But the cruelty of the puniſhment doth no leſſe auail to the ſtrengthning of our faith, then with the feare of Gods wrath to terrify vs, and with the feeling of our ſinnes to humble vs. For if we deſire to profite rightly in meditating of the death of chriſt, it is meet to begin there, that for the greatnes of the puniſhment which he ſuſtained, we ſhoulde be afrayed of our ſinnes. So it ſhal come to paſſe that we ſhal not only loath & be aſhamed of our ſelues, but as men wounded with great ſorow, with that earneſtnes which is meete we ſhuld ſeeke for help, and withal we ſhuld feare as men amaſed. For our hearts ſhould be harder then ſtones, if we ſhoulde not be thoroughly wounded with the woundes of the Sonne of God:

if we ſhould not hate and deteſt our ſinnes, for the waſhing away of the whiche, the Sonne of God ſuffered ſo great paines. But as the horrible vengeaunce of God doeth heere manifeſt it ſelfe, ſo on the other parte wee haue moſte plentifull matter for our comfort ſette before vs. For it is not to be feared that our ſinnes ſhould come any more before God to be iudged, from the which the Sonne of God hath freed vs with ſo pretious a rewarde. For he did not onely die a common maner of deathe, that he might purchaſe life for vs, but togither with the croſſe, he tooke our curſſe vppon himſelfe, leaſt any vncleanneſſe ſhoulde any more remaine in vs.

27. Then the ſouldiours of the gouernour, tooke Ieſus into the common hall, and gathered about hym the whole bande. This heaping vppe of reproofes is not ſette downe in vaine. That God ſhoulde ſette foorth his only begotten ſonne to beare all kinde of reproches, we knowe that it was not any matter of ſport or game. Therefore firſt it is meete to conſider what we haue deſerued, then the recompence which Chriſt offered, ſhould ſtirre vs vppe to hope well. Our filthineſſe deſerueth that God ſhoulde abhorre it, and that all the Angels ſhould ſpit vpon vs. But Chriſt, that he might bring vs into the preſence of his father, pure, and without ſpotte, would himſelfe be ſpitte vppon and defiled with all reproches. VVherefore that yll fauoured kinde of dealing which he once ſuffered vppon the earth, doth nowe purchaſe vs fauour in heauen, & alſo reſtoreth the image of God, which was not only defiled, but almoſt blotted out with the pollutions of ſinne. Heere alſo doeth the ineſtimable mercy of God clearly ſhewe it ſelfe, that for our cauſe he woulde thus farre caſt downe his onely begotten Sonne. By this example Chriſte prooued his marueilous loue towardes vs, in that he would refuſe no kinde of ignominie for our ſaluation. But theſe things neede rather ſecreat meditation, then to be adorned foorth with wordes. In the meane while we are taught not to meaſure the kingdome of GOD by fleſſly ſences, but by the iudgement of faith and of the ſpirite. For ſo long as our mindes ſhall be ſetled in the world, it ſhall not only ſeeme contemptible to vs, but alſo ful of ſhamefull reproches: but aſſoone as they ſhall be lift vp into heauen by faith, they ſhall not onely beholde the ſpirituall maieſtie of Chriſt, the which ſhall blotte out all the ſhame of the croſſe, but the ſpittings, whippings, buffetings and other reproches ſhall lead them to beholde hys glorye, as Paule teacheth the Phil. 2. 10. 8. that there was giuen vnto him a name and great power, that before him euery knee ſhould bowe, becauſe that he willingly humbled himſelfe to the death of the croſſe. VVherefore if the worlde doeth alſo at this day ſcorne at Chriſte, lette vs learne by the height of faith to ouercome theſe offences: neither let vs regarde what the vngodly ſhall wickedly aſcribe vnto Chriſt, but with what ornamẽts the heauenly father ſhall clothe him, with what ſcepter and wyth what crowne he ſhal adorne him, that he may be placed not only farre aboue men, but alſo farre aboue all the Angels. There is no great account to be made of that matter, where Marke putteth purple in ſteade of ſcarlet. It is not probable that Chriſte was apparelled with any coſtly garment. VVhereby we doe gather that it was not purple, but ſuch as was ſomewhat like it: euen as the Painter in his pictures doeth imitate the truthe.

32. They found a man of Cyrene. By this circumſtance there is ſet foorth the extreme cruelty aſwel of the Iewiſh nation as of the ſoldiers. It is not to be douted, but that the euill doers were wont to beare their own croſſes euen to the place of execution: but when as none but ſtrōg theeues were wont to be crucified, they were able to beare ſuch a burden: the eſtate of chriſt was far otherwiſe, ϕ the very weaknes of the body might plainly ſhewe that he was a lambe to be ſacrificed. Alſo it may be, that he being maimed with whips, & hardly oppreſſed with many iniuries, fel downe vnder the burden of the croſſe. The Euangeliſts do report that a husbād-man, & one of no account, was conſtrained by the ſoldiers to beare the croſſe: becauſe that maner of puniſhment was ſo deteſtable, that they thought they all ſhuld be defiled if they ſhuld but onely touch it. But he, who of the baſeſt ſort of the people was enforced to ſo vile & infamous an office, doth God nobilitate by his preachers: for it is not in vaine that the Euangeliſts doe not only ſette downe his name, but alſo his country & children. Neither is it to be douted but that God wold by this beginning admoniſh vs, when we are of our ſelues of no account nor eſtimation, we ſhall get dignity and fame by the croſſe of his ſonne.

L V. 27. And there followed him. Though that al the people had openly cōdemned Chriſt with one voice, yet we ſee that ſome forgate not his doctrine & his myracles: ſo in that miſerable diſsipatiō God reſerued ſome ſmal remnants vnto himſelf. And though the faith of theſe women was weake, yet it is to be ſuppoſed that the ſeed of piety was hiddē in them, which afterwards in time conuenient ſprang forth. In the meane while their weping auailed to the condēnation of the wicked & vnſpeakable cruelty of thoſe men, which with the Scribes & Prieſts had conſpired to put Chriſt to death. But Luke hadde an other purpoſe: namely, that we might know, while the people in their wickednes do confuſedly triūph, as if they had ſhaken off the bridle, that God is not as an idle beholder of that which is don, but he ſitteth in heauen as a reuēger, who wil preſently take vengeance of their vniuſt crueltye: neither is his vengeance therfore to be deſpiſed, becauſe it is deferred vnto a time conuenient, but before it appeareth, it muſt be feared.

28. Weepe not. Some thought that the women were reprooued, becauſe that fooliſhlye and of an vnaduiſed affection they powred foorth their teares in vaine. But Chriſte doeth not ſimply reproue them, as if their weping were yll and without reaſon: but hee forewarneth them, that they haue farre greater cauſe to weepe for the horrible iudgement of G O D, whiche hangeth ouer them: as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde that his death was not the end, but the beginning of ſorrowes to Hieruſalem and to all that nation: and thus he declareth that he is not ſo caſt out to the pleaſure of the vngodly, but that God hath a care of him. For by the puniſhmēt which afterward followed, it doth plainly appear that the life of Chriſt was deare to God the father, euen then when all men thought that he was vtterly forſaken & caſt off. And theſe words do declare how ſtrong & couragious Chriſt was, for he could not haue ſpoken this, but that he went conſtantly & without feare to death: but it eſpecially tendeth to this, that God yet regarded him euen in that deformed and baſe eſtate: but the wicked which now do proudly triumph as conquerors, ſhal not long enioy their mad ioy, for ſhortly after ther ſhal come a wonderful change. This doctrine is alſo profitable for vs at this day, while we acknowledge that Chriſt was no leſſe beloued to the father, becauſe that he was without his help for a time: but he ſet ſo much by our ſaluation, that he ſpared not his only begoten ſonne. And by this he hath giuen a notable example, when as he vtterly ouerthrew the holy citie, and where he had onely made choiſe of a ſanctuarie for himſelf, and deſtroied it togither with the inhabitants of the ſame. Heereof let vs learne to take occaſion to meditate of the death of Chriſt. For when as God ſo feuerely reuenged the ſame, hee woulde neuer haue ſuffered his ſon to haue ſuffred it, but to the end he might be a ſacrifice for the ſinnes of the worlde.

29. For beholde the dayes will come. He denounceth that there is at hand no common plague, but ſo terrible as hath not before beene heard of, in the which the vengeance of God ſhould openly be ſeene, as if he ſhould haue ſayd, that that nation ſhould not be conſumed by one onely kinde of deſtruction, but that it ſhuld be ouerthrowne by a manifolde heap of great euils, ſo that it ſhould be much better to be ouerwhelmed with the ruines of the mountaines, or to be ſwallowed vp in an earthquake, then to waſt away amongſt the ſeuere torments of a long deſtruction. And theſe threats fell not away in vaine: but the cruelty it ſelfe which fel out far exceded this lightning of wordes, as it appeareth by Ioſephus. Further, where theſe were ſpeaches of extreeme deſperation, to wiſh to be couered with the mountaines, and to curſſe the frute of the wombe, Chriſt doth by theſe words teach that the Iewes ſhal feele at the length, that they do not make warre with a mortall manne, but with God. So the enemies of God doe receiue a iuſt reward of their ſacrilegious fury, ſo that they ſhoulde in vaine deſire to oppoſe the earth as a buckler againſt the vengeance of God, who before durſt be ſo bold as to ſtrike at heauen it ſelfe.

31. If they doe theſe things to a greene tree. Chriſt by this ſentence doth declare that neither his death ſhallbe vnreuenged, neither that the Iewes whoſe wickednes was ful ripe, yea halfe rotten ſhould ſtand long, and by a common ſimilitude he proueth that it cannot be, but that the fire of the wrath of God ſhould preſently deuoure and burne them vp. VVe know that the vſe is firſt to caſt dry wode into the fire: if that the moiſt and the grene be burnt, much leſſe ſhall the dry be ſpared at the length. Further, the woord They doe, may be expounded indefinitely in this ſence. If the greene wood be caſt into the fire before the time, what thinke you ſhall become of the dry and of the old? Except that any man had rather to compare men with God: as if Chriſt ſhoulde haue ſayde, the wicked which are like vnto dry woode, when they haue vniuſtly deſtroyed the righteous, haue their turnes prepared for them by God: for how ſhould they which were before appoynted to deſtruction, eſcape the hād of the heauenly iudge, who for a time giueth them ſo great liberty againſt the good and innocent? But which of the two wayes ſoeuer it be taken, the ſum is, that the lamentation of the women was prepoſterous, except that withall they did wayt for, & feare the horrible iudgemēt of God, which hangeth ouer the vngodly. And as oft as the bitterneſſe of the croſſe is troubleſome to vs beyonde meaſure, it may be mitigated by thys comfort, that God who nowe ſuffereth his children to be afflicted vniuſtly, will not at the length ſuffer that the wicked ſhall go away vnpuniſhed.

And if this hope ſhoulde not vpholde vs, we ſhoulde of neceſsitye fall downe vnder the afflictions. For though it is naturall and more vſuall to make a fire of drie woode then of moiſt, yet God followeth an other order: for while he graunteth the reprobate to be at quiet reſt, he exerciſeth his with diuers troubles: and therefore their eſtate is the more myſerable, if it ſhould be eſteemed of, as it doeth preſently appeare. But this is a ready remedy, if they will patiently wayte for the whole courſe of Gods iudgement. For ſo it ſhall comfort them to ſee the wicked gayne nothing by their ſmall delay: for where God ſhall humble hys faithfull ones with his fatherly roddes, he wil riſe with a drawne ſworde agaynſt them, whoſe ſinnes he ſeemeth for a time not to obſerue.

Mathewe 27.

33. And when they came to the place called Golgotha, (that is to ſaye, the place of dead mens ſculles,)

34. They gaue him vineger to drinke, mingled with gall, and when he had taſted thereof, he woulde not drinke.

35. And when they had crucified him, they parted hys garments, and did caſt lottes, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by the Prophet: They deuided my garments amonge them, and vppon my veſture did caſt lottes.

36. And they ſate & watched him there.

37. They ſette vp alſo ouer his head his cauſe wrytten, THIS IS IESVS, THE KINGE OF THE IEVVES.

38. And there were two theues crucified with him, one on the right hand, and an ether on the left.

Marke 15.

22. And they brought him to a place named Golgotha, which is by interpretation, the place of dead mens ſcullet.

23. And they gaue him to drink wine mingled with Myrrhe: but he receiued it not.

24. And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, caſtinge lottes for them, what euery man ſhould haue.

25. And it was the third hour, when they crucified him.

26. And the title of his cauſe was wrytten aboue, THE KINGE OF THE IEVVES.

27. They crucified alſo wyth him two theeues, the one of the right hande, the other of hys left.

28. Thus the ſcripture was fulfilled whiche ſayeth: And hee was counted amonge the wicked.

Luke 23.

33. And when they were come to the place whiche is called Caluerie, there they crucified him, and the euill doers: one at the right hand, and the ether at the left.

34. Then ſayd Ieſus: Father forgiue them, for they knowe not what they doe. And they parted his raimēt and caſt lottes.

A little after.

38. And a ſuperſcription was alſo wrytten euer him in Greeke letters, and in Latin, and in Hebrewe: THIS IS THE KING OF THE IEVVES.

33. And they came to the place. Ieſus was ledde to that place, where as the euill doers were woont to be put to death, that thereby his death might be made the more reprochfull. And though that was done according to the cuſtome, yet it is mete more depely to conſider the purpoſe of God. For his wil was that his ſonne ſhoulde be caſt out of the citie, as one vnwoorthy of the companye of menne, that hee mighte receiue vs into hys heauenly kingdome with the Angels. Therefore the Apoſtle in the Epiſtle to the Hebr. 13. 12. appleth this to the old figure of the law. For as God commanded that the bodies of the beaſts ſhould be burnt without the hoaſte, whoſe bloude was brought into the ſanctuarie for a ſacrifice:

ſo he ſaith, that Chriſt went out of the gate of the Citie, that by taking vp the curſſe which preſſed vs, he might bee as one caſt away, and by this meanes he might waſhe away our ſinnes. And the more ignominye and reproch he bare before the world, the more acceptable & noble a ſpectacle he ſhewed in his death both to God & Angels. For the filthineſſe of the place was no hinderance, but that he might there erect a glorious enſigne of his victorye: neither the ſtincke of the carcaſſes which lay there, coulde ſtop the ſweete ſmell of his ſacrifice from ſauouring throughout the whole world, and pearcing vp euen into heauen.

34. They gaue him vineger. Though the Euangeliſts do not ſo curiouſly ſet downe all perticulers in their order, ſo as the verye momentes of times might certeinly be noted: yet I doe by probable reaſon conieƈture, that before the Lorde ſhould be lyft vp vpon the croſſe, according to the cuſtom, there was giuē vnto him out of a cup wine mixed with mirrhe, or what mixture ſoeuer it was, which was made, as it appeareth of gall alſo and vineger. It is throughly agreed vpon almoſt amongſt al the interpreters, that this was not that drinke, whereof Iohn maketh mention, and whereof I ſhall ſpeake a litle after. This I doe onely adde, that I do thinke that there was a cup offred to the Lord, when he ſhould be crucified: and after that the croſſe was lifted vp on high, then it was giuen vnto him in a ſponge. But when hee ſhoulde beginne to aske for drink. I am not ſo curious to ſearch, yet if we doe compare all thinges togeather, it ſeemeth by reaſon that after hee had refuſed that bitter confection, it was againe thruſt vpon him in mockery. For afterward Matthewe addeth, that the ſouldiours giuing him drinke, vpbrayded him, becauſe that he could not delyuer himſelfe from death. VVhereby we do gather that this medicine beeing offred him, they ſcorned at the weakeneſſe of Chriſt, becauſe that he had complained that he was forſaken of God. As concerning the hyſtory ſet downe by Iohn, it is ſufficient to note this one thing, that Chriſt for the cooling of his thirſt asked, that ſome cōmon drinke might be giuen him, and there was thruſt vpon him vineger mixed with mirrhe & gal to haſten his death. But he bore thoſe tormentes patientlye, ſo that for wearineſſe of the ſorrow, he ſoughte not to haue his death haſtened. For this alſo was a portion of his ſacrifice and obedience, to beare the delay of the paine euen to the vtmoſt. Further, they are deceiued in my iudgement, which doe reckon the vineger amongſt the other tormentes inflicted vppon the ſonne of God. Their conieƈture is more probable to me, which doe thinke that this kinde of drinke was good for to voyde bloud, and therefore it was woont to be giuen to euill doers, that their death might bee the more ſpeedy: therefore Mark calleth it wine myxed with mirrhe. But Chriſt (as I touched euen now) not ſo much for the offence of the bitternes refuſeth the wine or vineger, as § he might ſhew himſelfe quietly to go forward to death, according to the commaundement of the father, and that the impatiēcy of the ſorrow driue hym not headlong. Neither is that any hinderaunce, which Iohn ſayeth, that the Scripture was fulfilled. Pſalme. 69. 22. In my thirſt they gaue me vineger to drinke. For they both do very wel agree: that it was giuen then as a remedy to end the torments of ſlow death: and yet that Chriſt was hardly afflicted by al meanes: ſo that the very eaſing of it alſo might be a portion or encreaſe of the ſorow.

15. They parted his garmentes. It is certeine that the ſouldiours did this alſo of cuſtome, that they parted amongſt them the ſpoyles of a manne condemned. It may be that this one thing was extraordinary, that they caſt lots for his coate without ſeame. But thogh nothing befell to Chriſt in this matter, but that which all condemned men did ſuffer, yet this hyſtory is worthy to be much marked. For the Euangeliſtes doe ſette before vs the ſonne of God naked without his garments, that we myght know that great riches are gotten for vs by this nakednes, which ſhall adorne vs before God. Therfore God would that his ſon ſhuld be ſtripped naked, that we being cloathed with his righteouſnes, & with plenty of all good things without feare might appeare with the Angelles, whom before a vile filthynes in a torne habite kept from entraunce into heauen. Chriſte himſelfe ſuffered his garmentes to bee taken from him, as a pray, that he might enrich vs with the riches of his victory. Further, wher Mathew ſaieth, that ſo the propheſie of Dauid was fulfilled, Pſa. 22. 19. They deuided my garments amongſt them, &c. muſt ſo be vnderſtood, as that was perfourmed literally (as they ſay) and indeede in Chriſte, which Dauid metaphorically and vnder a figure complayneth of, as done to him. For Dauid by the word garments meaneth his goods & his honors: as if he ſhuld haue ſaid, that while he liued and had his ſight, he was made a pray to his enemies, who ran into his houſe, and were ſo far frō ſparing thoſe goodes which were left, that they alſo ſpoyled his wife. This cruelty he amplifieth by a metaphor, writing that his garmentes were deuided by lot. And where he was a ſhadow and an Image of Chriſte, that whiche chriſt ſhuld ſuffer he foretold by the ſpirit of propheſie. Wherfore in his perſō this alſo is notable, that the ſoldiors ſpoiled his apparel: for by this ſpoyling we do know thoſe ſignes & notes, wherwith he was ſometime adorned. And alſo the offence is taken away, which otherwiſe might in the wiſdom of the fleſh haue beene conceiued of his nakedneſſe: for hee ſuffered nothing which did not truely and properly beelong to the perſon of the Redeemer, as the holy Ghoſt before declared.

MAR. 25. And it was the third houre. This ſeemeth not to agree with the teſtimony of Iohn: for he ſaieth, that Chriſt was condemned aboute the ſixt houre. But if we conſider that which is manifeſt by other places, the day was deuided into foure partes, and that euery of the parts were called by the name of the firſt houre of the beginning of the ſame, it wyll not be hard to be anſwered. The whole meane time from the riſinge of the ſunne euen to the ſecond parte, they did call the firſt houre. The ſecond parte vnto the midſt of the daye, was with them the thirde houre. The ſixt houre beginning at the mid day, continued to three or foure of the clocke in the after noone. Therefore when the Iewes ſaw that Pilat deferred the time, and that now the mid day was at hand, Iohn ſaieth, that they cried out the more earneſtly, leaſt the whole day ſhould eſcape away. But that letteth not but that the Lord was crucified about the end of the third houre. For it is euident enough, after his tumultuous condemnation, that he was ſodenly carried away, the Iewes had ſo earneſt a deſire to put him to death. Therefore Mark meaneth not the beginning of the third houre, but the ende. And this is the more likelye to bee true, that Chriſte honge not aboue three houres vppon the Croſſe.

LV. 34. Then Ieſus ſaid. By this ſpeach Chriſt proued himſelfe to be that meeke and gentle Lambe, which ſhould be led to be ſlaine, as Iſaiah the Prophet had witneſſed, 53.7. For he doth not only leaue off reueng, but he commendeth to God the father the ſaluation of them, of whome he is moſt cruelly vexed. This had beene a great thing, to thinke nothing of reuengement: as Peter when by his example exhorteth vs to patience, ſaieth, that he gaue not rebuke for rebuke, neither reuenged his own iniuries, but was content with this alone, that hee had God for a reuenger, 1. Pet. 2. 23. But this was a farre greater and more excellent vertue, to pray to God that he would forgiue his enemies. If any man doth think that this doth not ſufficiētly agree with that ſaying of Peter, which I cited euē now, there is an aunſwere ready for it. For where Chriſt was led by a merciful affection, to entreat god to pardon his perſecutors: it is no let, but that he might commit himſelf to the iuſt iudgement of God, which he knew to be appointed for the reprobat & the obſtinate. VVhē Chriſt therefore ſaw that partely the Iewiſh people, partly the ſoldiours were madde againſt him in a blinde heate, though their ignoraunce was not to bee excuſed, yet hee taketh pitty vppon them, ſo that hee himſelfe praieth for them. Yet ſith hee knew that God would be a reuenger, hee leaueth the iudgement to him againſt the reprobate. And in this manner ſhould the faithfull temper their affections in bearing of afflictions, that they ſhoulde deſire that their perſecutors might bee ſaued: and yet that they ſhuld not doubt but that their life is vnder the defence of God: and reſting vpon this comfort, that at the length the wicked ſhal not go forward in their luſt vnpuniſhed, they ſhall not faint vnder the burdē of the croſſe.

Luke dooth now ſette before vs an example of this moderation in our guide and maiſter: for when as hee could haue curſſed his perſecutors to deſtruction, hee dooth not onely abſtaine from curſing: but alſo he prayeth for their good. And it is to be noted, if at any time the whole world ſhould riſe vp againſt vs, and endeuour by violence to ouerwhelme vs al, this is the beſt remedy to ouercome this temptation, if at any time wee doe thinke of their blindneſſe, which do oppoſe themſelues againſt God in vs. For ſo it ſhall come to paſſe, that the conſpiracy of many againſte vs left alone and forſaken, ſhall not trouble vs aboue meaſure. As againe daily vſe doth ſhew how ſtrong an engine it is to ſhake the weake with, when they ſee themſelues aſſaulted of a great multitude. Therfore if we will learne to ariſe vp to God, it ſhal be an eaſie matter for vs, as it were from an high to deſpiſe the ignoraunce of the vnfaithfull: for how ſoeuer they doe excell in forces and great bandes, yet they know not what they do.

But it is likely that Chriſt prayed not generally for all menne, but onlye for the ſimple people, who were carried by an vnadviſed zeale, and not by delyberate wickednes. For as there was no hope left of the Scribes and Prieſtes, ſo he ſhould haue praied for them in vaine. And without doubte, becauſe the heauenlye Father hearde this prayer, hereof it came to paſſe that many of the people, which had ſhed bloud, did afterwardes beleeue.

37. They

37. They ſet vp ouer his head. That which Matthewe and Marke doe touch briefly, Luke doth ſet forth more expreſly, that the title was written in three languages. Alſo Iohn doth declare it more at large. VVherfore let the readers ſee there, that which here I doe omitte for breuitye ſake. I will onely ſay, that this was not done without the prouidence of God, that the death of Chriſt ſhuld be celebrated in three languages: for though Pylate had no other purpoſe, then reproachfullye to touche the Iewiſh nation, yet God had a further regarde. For in this, as it were by propheſie he declared that the death of his ſonne ſhoulde be renoumed euery where, that all people in al places might know the king promiſed to the Iewes. But this was no lawful preaching of the Goſpel: for Pilat, whome GOD appointed to giue teſtimony to his ſonne was a manne vnworthy: but that which was to be done by the true miniſters was ſhadowed out in Pilat. To be ſhort, he may be accounted ſuch a preacher of Chriſt, as Caiaphas was a Prophet.

38. Then they crucified. This is added to the heape of extreame ſhame, that Chriſt is hanged in the midſt betweene two theeues: for they gaue him the chiefe Place, no otherwiſe then to the Prince of theeues. If hee had beene crucified alone, his cauſe might ſeeme to haue beene ſeparate from other euill doers: but now he is not onely thruſt in amongſt them, but he is lifted vppe on high, as if hee were the moſte deteſtable of all. VVherefore Marke to this purpoſe applyeth the propheſie of Ieſaiah, 53. 12. He is accounted with the wicked. For in this the Prophet dooth eſpecially make mention of Chriſt, not that he ſhould by a royal pomp deliuer his from death, but becauſe that he ſhould beare the puniſhmẽt due to their ſinnes. Therefore that he might deliuer vs from guiltineſſe, this manner of ſacrifice was neceſſary, that he might ſubmit himſelf into our place. And here is to be ſeene how horrible the weight of the wrath of God is againſt ſinnes, for the appeaſing whereof it behooued Chriſt the eternall ryghteouſnes to be thrown into the order of theeues. Here is alſo ſet forth the incomparable loue of Chriſt, who that he might gather vs to the company of the holy angels, did abide to be accounted one of the euil doers.

Matt. 27.	Mark. 15.	Luke. 23.
39. And they that paſſed by reuiled him, wagging their heades,	29. And they that went by, rayled on him, wagging their heads, and ſaiinge, Hey, thou that deſtroyeſt the temple,	35. And the people ſtood & beheld: and the rulers mocked him with thẽ, ſaying, he ſaued others: let him ſaue himſelf, if he be the Chriſt, the chooſen of God.
40. And ſaying, Thou that deſtroyſt the temple, and buildeſt it in three daies, ſaue thy ſelf: if thou be the ſonne of God, come downe from the croſſe.	& buildeſt it in three daies,	36. The ſoldiours alſo mocked him, and offred him vineger,
41. Likewiſe alſo the hie Prieſts mocking him, with the Scribes & Elders, and Phariſes ſaid,	30. Saue thy ſelfe, and come downe from the croſſe.	37. And ſaid, if thou be the king of the Iewes, ſaue thy ſelfe.
	31. Likewiſe alſo euen the hie prieſts mockinge, ſaide among themſelues with the Scribes, He ſaued other men, him ſelfe	A litle after.
		39. And one of the euill doers which were hanged, rayled on him, ſaying, if thou be the Chriſte, ſaue thy ſelf and vs.
42. He	he	40. But

42. Hee saued others, but he cannot saue himself: if he be the king of Israel, let him nowe come downe from the crosse, and wee will beeleeue him.
43. He trusteth in God, let him deliuer him now, if hee wil haue him: for he sayd, I am the sonne of God.
he cannot saue.
32. Let Christe the king of Israel now come down from the crosse, that we may see, and beleeue. They also that wer crucified with him reuiled him.
40. But the other answered, and rebuked him, saying, feareſt thou not God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?
41. We are in deede here righteously: for we receiue things worthy of that we haue done: but this man hath done nothing amisse.
42. And he said vnto Iesus, Lorde remember me, when thou commeſt into thy kingdome.
43. Then Iesus said vnto him, verely I saye vnto thee, to daye thou shalt be with me in paradise.

39. And they that passed by. These circumstances doe containe great matter: for heere is sette beefore our eyes the humblinge of the Sonne of God into the loweſtdegree, whereby it may the better appeare how much our saluation coſt him: and withall considering that by right all thoſe paines were due to vs, which he bore, we ſhould be more & more ſtirred vp to repentaunce. For in this ſpectacle God deoth openlye reueale to vs, how miſerable our eſtate ſhould haue beene, if we hadde not had a redeemer. But whatſoeuer thinges Chriſt bore vppon him, muſt be applied to the comforting of vs. And certeinly this contention was harder then all the tormentes, that all menne vexed him with checkes and tauntes, as if he were reiected and forſaken of God. And therefore Dauid, Pſal. 22. 7. 8. 9. bearing the perſon of Chriſte, in all his troubles hee doth eſpecially bewaile this. And truely there is nothing that doth more ſharply wound the mindes of the godlye, then that the wicked for the weakning of their faith doe vpbraid them as lefte deſtitute of the helpe and grace of GOD. This is that ſharpe perſecution, wherewith Paule, Gal. 4. 29. ſaith, that Iſaac was vexed by Iſmael: not that he raged againſt him with ſword & force of armes: but becauſe that he deriding the grace of GOD, attempted to ouerthrow his faith. Dauid alſo firſt, and then Chriſt, ſuffred theſe temptations, leaſt they ſhould terrifie vs at this daye by their noueltie. For the wicked ſhall neuer be wanting, who will tryumph ouer our miſeries. And this is a common deuiſe of Sathan (ſo oft as God doth not comfort vs according to our deſire, but hideth his help a litle) to obiect, that our hope is in vaine, as if that his promiſe were of no effect.

40. Thou that deſtroyeſt the Temple. They doe charge Chriſtes doctrine with vanity, becauſe that now when it is neceſſary, he doth not ſhew in deede that power, which he callenged to himſelfe. But if that a deſire to ſpeake euil, had not depriued them both of wit and iudgement, ſhortly after they might haue eaſily ſeene the trueth of that ſaying. Chriſt hadde ſayde, deſtroy you this Temple, and in three dayes I wil raiſe it vp. Now they doe make a proud triumph at the beginninges of the ruine, and they looke not for the end of the third day. Such inſolency do the wicked vſe againſt all the children of God, while vnder the pretence of the Croſſe, they doe endeuour to cut them off from the hope of the lyfe to come. VVhere is (say they) that immortal glory, which credulous menne do so foolisshly boast of? when as the most of them do lye without glory and despised, others do liue poorely, others do hardly draw their breath vnder continual troubles, others are tossed with flyings and banishmēts, others do pine away in prisons, others are burnte and brought to ashes: So the present corruption of the outward man doth blinde them, that they doe imagine the hope of the renewing of the life to come to bee vaine and ridiculous. But wee must waite for the time appointed of the promised building, neither must wee beare it grieuously, if we bee nowe crucified with Christe, that we may be afterwardes partakers of his resurrection.

If thou bee the Sonne of God. The vngodly doe require of Christe such a testimony of his power, that by prouing himselfe to be the Sonne of God, he should cease to be the sonne of God. Vppon this condition hee became man, and came into the world, that by the sacrifice of his death he might reconcile mē to God the father. Therfore þ he might be shewed to be the son of God, it was necessarye for him to hang vpon the crosse. Now these reprobates do deny the redeemer to be in the place of the son of God, except he descending frō the crosse, shuld renounce the cōmandement of the father, and reiecting the washing away of sins, should cast off the office laid vpon by God. But let vs hereby learn to strengthen our faith: because that the son of God for the work of our saluation woulde remaine fastened to the crosse, vntil that partly with most cruel tormēts of the flesh, partly with horrible anguishes of the spirite hee should suffer death it self. And least it shuld befall ro vs, to tempt God in like maner as we see these men did, let vs suffer God so oft as it shal so seeme good vnto him, to hide his power, that againe according to his owne pleasure he may execute the same conueniently. There appeareth the same wickednes in the other obiection, which presently followeth. If he be the king of Israel, let him now come down from the crosse, and we wil beleeue him. For it was not meete for thē to accept of any other king, but such a one as was described by the Prophets. But Isaiah expresly 53. and Zachariah, 9. 9. doe describe Christ to be without forme, afflicted, condemned & accursed, broken, poore & contemned, before that he shuld enter into his roial throne. Therfore the Iewes do prepostrously desire one vnlike to him, whome they would acknowledge for a king: for so they doe declare, that they haue no regard of that king, whom God had promised to giue thē. But on the contrary side (that our faith may wholly be repосed in Christ) let vs seeke for help in his crosse. For hee cannot otherwise be accounted for the lawful king of Israel, but by perfourming all the partes of a Redeemer. And hereby we doe gather howe daungerous a thing it is by wandring after our own deuises to depart frō the word of God. For because that þ Iewes imagined to haue such a king as their wit had deuised thē, they refused Christ crucified, because they thought it an absurd thing to beleeue in him: but to vs it is the best & chief reason of our beleefe, because that for our cause he willingly submitted himself to the ignominy of the crosse. 42. He saued others. This vnthankfulnes is not to be excused, that they being offended with the present abasing of Christ, do make no account of al those miracles, which he before had wrought in their sight. They do cōfesse that he hadde saued others: by what power or by what meanes? VVhy VVhy do they not at the leaſt in this behalf reuerēce the manifeſt work of God? But becauſe they do malitiouſly choake, yea, as much as lyeth in them, they do endeuour to quench the light of God, which ſhone in the miracles, they are vnworthy to iudge aright of the infirmity of the croſſe. Beecauſe Chriſte dooth not preſently deliuer himſelf from death, they do vpbraid him of weaknes. And this is too vſuall amongſt all the wicked, to meaſure the power of God by that which is preſently ſeene, that whatſoeuer he doth not, they think he cannot do: and therefore they doe charge him of weaknes, ſo oft as he doth not obey their peruerſe deſire. But lette vs note, that Chriſte when hee eaſily could, did not preſently deliuer himſelf from death, but becauſe he would not. And why doth he for a time neglect his own ſauegard, but becauſe he had more regarde of the ſaluatiō of vs all? Why wold he not deliuer himſelf, but that he might deliuer vs all? Therfore we ſee that thoſe things, which do make well to the edificatiō of our faith, the Iewes through their owne malice drew to the maintenance of their vnbeliefe. 43. He truſteth in God. Sathan hath, as I ſaid before, this moſt ſharpe dart of temptation, while hee faineth that God forgetteth vs, becauſe that he doth not helpe vs ſpeedily and in the very point of time. For when god waiteth vpon the ſaluation of his children, and doth not only help them in time conuenient, but alſo preuenteth their neceſsity (as the ſcripture doth euery wher declare) he ſeemeth not to loue thē, whom he helpeth not: And ſo by this logicke he leadeth vs into deſpaire, that we do truſt in the loue of God in vaine, where his helpe doth not appeare openly. And as he prompteth our mindes with this kind of fallacie, ſo he ſuborneth his miniſters, which ſhall argue that God hath no regard of our ſauegard, but reiecteth vs, becauſe hee defereth his help. Therfore it behoueth vs to refuſe this argument as faulty, that they are not beloued of God, whō he ſeemeth to forſake for a time. Nay, there were nothing more abſurd, then to tie his loue to euery point of time. God promiſeth that he will be our deliuerer: but if ſomtime hee ſhuld ſeeme to winke in our aduerſities, the delaye muſte be borne with patience. VVherfore it is contrary to the nature of faith, for them to vrge that aduerb now, whom God by the croſſe and troubles frameth to patience, and ſtirreth vp to praiers, and to call vpon his name: when as theſe are rather teſtimonies of his fatherlye loue, as the Apoſtle in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, 12.6. declareth. And this was eſpeciallye to be ſeene in Chriſt, though he was the beloued ſon, yet was hee not deliuered from death, vntil he had borne the puniſhmēt due to vs: for by that price were we redeemed to ſaluation.

VVherefore the Prieſts againe do deale peruerſly, when they doe conclude that he is not the Son: becauſe that he ſupplieth that roum appointed him of his father.

44. That ſame alſo the theeues caſt in his teeth. Matthew and Marke by Synecdoche doe attribute that to the theeues, which was proper onelye to one of them, as it appeareth by Luke. Neyther may this ſpeache ſeeme ſtraunge: for the two Euangeliſtes hadde no other purpoſe then to declare that Chriſte was rayled vppon on euerye ſide, ſo that euen the theeues ſpared him not nowe when hee was halfe deade. Euen as Dauid in the Pſalm, 22.7.8. beewayling his calamities, doth thereof take occaſion to amplifie the greeuouſnes of them, for that he was made the ſhame of all men, and the contempt of the people. And though they doe omitte a hiſtory worthy to bee remembred, which Luke reporteth of the other theefe: yet there is no abſurdity in that, which they doe ſay, that Chriſt was derided of all, yea euen of the very theeues. For it is not ſpoken of euery perticuler perſon but of that kind of men. Nowe therefore let vs come to Luke.

L V. 39. And one of the euil doers. By this reproach, which the Son of God ſuffered of the theefe, great honour is gotten for vs amongſt the Angels, that they ſhoulde acknowledge vs for their brethren. But in the meane while here is ſet before vs an example of furious obſtinacy in this wretched man, ſeeing that he ceaſeth not to vomit out blaſphemyes with cruelties in the midſt of his afflictions. So deſperate menne, which cannot eſcape the torments, doe vſe bie frowardnes to ſeeke reuenge. And thogh he vpbraideth Chriſt, that he could neither ſaue himſelfe nor others, yet this obiection ſtriketh at God himſelf. As the wicked, ſo oft as they obtaine not what they deſire, they would willingly pull God out of heauen. It was meete that they being tamed with afflictions, ſhould become gentle: but hereby it appeareth, how the hardnes of the euill hearte was hardened, which could be bowed by no puniſhments.

40. But the other aunſwered. There is in this miſerable man ſet before vs a rare example of the vnhoped for and incredible grace of God, partly becauſe that ſodenly at his death he is chaunged into a new man, and is drawne backe euen from the very helles to heauen: Then becauſe that he obtained in a moment forgiuenes of all his ſinnes, wherein he hadde beene drowned al his life, and ſo hee is receiued into heauen beefore the Apoſtles and the firſt fruites of the new Church. Firſte therefore in the conuerſion of this man, there dooth clearely appeare a notable token of the grace of God. For it came not of the proper inſtinct of the fleſh, that he caſt off the great cruelty and proud contempt of God, that he ſhould preſently repent, but he is brought vnder by the hande of God: as all the ſcripture teacheth that repentaunce is his woorke. And this grace is ſo much the more excellent, becauſe that it befell beyond al mens hope. For who would euer haue thought that the theefe at his laſt breath ſhoulde not onely become a godly worſhipper of God, but a ſinguler maiſter of faith and piety to the whol world: ſo that we alſo from his mouth may learne a rule of a true and lawfull confeſsion? And this he vttered as the firſt fruites of his repentaunce, that with a ſharpe reprehenſion he reproued the vngodly frowardnes of his own fellow: then he addeth this as the ſecond, humbling himſelfe with a free confeſsion of his own ſinnes, and attributing to Chriſt the prayſe due to his ryghteouſneſſe. Afterwardes he teſtifieth a wonderful faith, caſting himſelfe wholly and hys ſaluation into the defence of Chriſt, whom yet he ſaw hanging vpō the croſſe and ready to dye.

Feareſt thou not God? Though interpreters doe wreſt theſe wordes diuerſly, yet the ſimple meaning of them ſeemeth to mee to be thus, what meaneth this, that this condemnation compelleth thee not to feare God? For the theefe dorh thereof take occaſion to exaggerate the hardnes of hys fellow, becauſe that he being brought to extreame neceſsitye, dooth not ſo beginne to feare God. But that al ambiguity may be taken away, the readers are to be admoniſhed, that this arrogant and wicked rayler, who thought to haue paſſed with his ſcoffing without puniſ ment, is called backe to the iudgement ſeat of God: for though hee had beene all his life without feeling, it behoued him then to tremble, when he felt the hand of God armed againſt him, and ſhortly after he was to yelde a reckening of all his offences. Therefore it was a ſigne of a deſperate and a deuiliſh obſtinacie, when God helde him tied vp to the laſt iudgement, not then to come to a right minde: for if there had beene any droppe of pietye in the heart of the man, he ſhoulde at the leaſt be enforced to gather himſelfe to the feare of God. Nowe we vnderſtand the meaning of the woordes, that they are deſperate and without all feare of GOD, which are not amended by puniſhments. En te auto crimats, I doe interpreat not for the ſame, but to be in the preſent execution of condemnation: as if the theefe had ſayd: Sith thou art now as it were in the midſt of death, it behooued thee now to be wakened, that thou mighteſt acknowledge God thy iudge. Further, we do heereof gather a profitable doctrine, that they doe wholely ſette themſelues againſt God, who are not taught humility by corrections: for, ſhame doeth of neceſsity driue them to holde their peace, who ſoeuer are endued with any feare of God.

41. VVee are in deede heere righteouſly. Becauſe the reproofe gathered of the condemnation, mighte ſeeme to light vppon Chriſte, the theefe doteh heere make a diſtinction betweene Chriſte and the cauſe of him and hys fellowe, for the puniſhment whiche was common, was, as hee confeſſeth, iuſtlye laide vppon him and his fellowe, but not vppon CHRIST, who was not putte to deathe for anye faulte of hys owne, but for the crueltye of the ennemies. But that muſte bee remembered whiche I ſayde euen nowe, that the theefe made a notable ſhewe of repentaunce, ſuche as God requireth of euery of vs, in that he confeſſeth that he receiueth a rewarde woorthy of that which he hath done. And this eſpecially muſt be noted, that the cruelty of the puniſhment was no hinderance, but that hee ſubmitted himſelfe patiently to the fierce torments. VVherefore, if we doe truely repent for ſinnes, lette vs learne to confeſſe them willingly and without diſſimulation when neede ſhalbe, and not to flee that ignominie which we haue deſerued. For this is the onely meanes whereby we may bury our ſinnes before God and Aungels, if we ſtriue not to couer them before men with vaine colours. Further, where as amongeſt diuers cloakes whiche hypocriſie vſeth, thys is moſt common, that euery man draweth others in with him, that by their example he might excuſe himſelfe: the theefe on the contrary ſide doeth no leſſe carefully defend the innocencie of Chriſt, then ſimply and freely condemne himſelfe and his fellowe.

42. Lorde remember me. I doe not knowe whether there euer was from the beginning of the worlde an example of faith more rare and worthy to be remembred: ſo muche the more is the grace of the holye Ghoſte woorthy to be hadde in admiration, which heerein ſhewed it ſelfe ſo euidently. The theefe, who not onely had neuer beene a ſcholer in Chriſtes ſchoole, but by thruſting himſelfe into bloudy murthers, hadde endeuoured to quenche all ſenſe of righteouſneſſe, doth of a ſodaine pierce deeper, then all the Apoſtles, and the reſt of the diſciples, in teachinge of whome the Lorde himſelfe hadde beſtowed ſo muche labour: and not that onely, but Chriſte being vppon the tree of execution, he woorſhippet peth as a king: hee celebrateth his kingdome in that horrible and more then deformed baſeneſſe: he calleth him, who is about to die, the author of life. Truely, if hee had beene inſtructed in the true faith, had hearde many things before of the office of Chriſt, and hadde alſo beene confirmed in the ſame by myracles: yet that knowledge being couered with the cloude of a reproachfull death, might vaniſhe away. Nowe it was more then woonderfull, that hee beinge rude and a yongling, yea, hys minde altogither corrupted, ſhould preſently at the firſt inſtructions vpon the curſſed croſſe apprehend ſaluation and the celeſtiall glory. For wyth what markes or enſignes did he ſee Chriſt adorned, that he might lift vppe his minde to that kingdome? And certainly this was, as if hee ſhoulde clime out of the deepeſt helles aboue the heauens. But to the fleſh thys was but as a fable, and to be laughed at, to attribute to a man caſt away and condemned (whome the world could not abide) a kingdome farre more noble then all earthly Empires. Heereby we do gather how quicke the eyes of his mind were, wherwith he beheld life in death, height in ruine, glory in reproache, victorye in deſtruction, and a kingdome in ſlauerie. If that the theefe extolled by his faith Chriſte nowe hanging vppon the croſſe, and as it were ouerwhelmed with curſinge, into a heauenly throane, woe be to our ſlouthfulneſſe if we doe not reuerence him nowe ſitting at the right hand of God, if we doe not faſten the hope of life in his reſurrection, if we go not into heauen whether he is entred. Nowe, if on the other parte, wee doe conſider what ſtate he was in, when hee beſought Chriſte of his mercy, his faith ſhall growe to further admiration with a torne body now almoſt with out life, he waiteth for the laſt blow of the ſlaughter men, and yet he repoſeth himſelfe in the onely grace of Chriſt. Firſt, whence hath he this hope of forgiueneſſe, but becauſe that in the death of Chriſte (which ſeemeth deteſtable to all other) he conceiueth the ſacrifice of a good ſauour, to be effectuall to waſh away the ſinnes of the worlde? And where he with courage regardeth not his torments: nay, as it were forgetting himſelfe, is caried to a hope and deſire of a better life, it doeth farre paſſe the vnderſtandinge of man. Wherefore let vs not be aſhamed to learne both mortification of the fleſh, and patience, and excellency of faith, and conſtancy of hope, and zeale of godlineſſe of this maiſter, whome the Lord ſette ouer vs, to humble the pride of the fleſh. For the readilier that any man followeth him, the nearer he ſhall ſo come to Chriſt.

43. Verily I ſay to thee. Though Chriſt had not yet triumphed opēly ouer death, yet he ſheweth the effect & frute of the ſame, when he was moſt abaced. And by this meanes he declareth ☧ he was neuer thruſt out of ☧ power of his kingdō. For nothing doth more notably, nor more royally beſeeme a diuine king, then to reſtore life to them whiche are deade. Chriſt therefore, though he being ſtricken with the hand of God, appeared in ſhewe to be a man halfe deſperate: yet, becauſe he ceaſſed not to be the ſauiour of the world, he was alwaies endued with a heauenly power for the performance of his office. And firſt heere is to be noted hys incredible readineſſe, that without delaye hee accepteth the theefe ſo louingly, and promiſeth him that he ſhall be a partaker of the bleſſed lyfe. Wherefore it is not to be doubted, but that he is to admit wythout exception into his kingdome, all whiche doe come vnto him. Whereof it may be aſſuredly gathered, that we ſhall be ſaued, if hee be mindefull of vs. Further, it cannot be that he ſhoulde forgette them, who doe commende theyr ſaluation to him. If the theefe had ſo eaſie a paſſage into heauen, becauſe that when all things were in greateſt extremitye, he reſted vppon the grace of Chriſt: much more ſhall Chriſt the conquerour of death, at this day reache foorth his hande out of his throne to vs, that he may gather vs into the fellowſhippe of life. For it were abſurde, ſince the time that hee nailed to the croſſe the hand wryting whyche was againſt vs, and hath putte death and Sathan to flight, and in his reſurrection hath triumphed ouer the prince of the worlde, that there ſhoulde not be as eaſie and as ready a paſſage from death to life for vs, as for the theefe. Therefore, who ſoeuer being ready to die, ſhall wyth a true faith commit the cuſtodie of his ſoule to Chriſt, he ſhall not be driuen off any long time to languiſh in ſuſpence: but Chriſt will accept his deſire wyth the ſame kindeneſſe that he vſed towardes the theefe. Therefore awaye wyth that ſtincking deuice of the Sophiſters, of the retaining of the pain when the fault is remitted: for we ſee that Chriſt doeth preſently deliuer from puniſhment, him, whome he freeth from guiltineſſe. Neither is that any lette, that the theefe neuertheleſſe, beareth euen to the vttermoſt, the puniſhment whereto he was appoynted. For we muſt heere imagine no recompence, which was in ſteed of a ſatisfaction for the appealinge of the iudgement of God (as the Sophiſters do dreame) but the Lord by corporall puniſhments doeth ſimply teache his electe to deteſt and to hate ſinne. Therefore Chriſt doeth as it were ſet vpon his lappe, the theefe brought by fatherly correction to deny himſelfe, and ſendeth him not to the fire of Purgatorie. It is further to be noted, with what keyes the gate of the kingdome of heauen was opened to the theefe. For Popiſt confeſsion or ſatisfactions, were not here accoũted of: but Chriſt was entreated with repentance and faith to receiue him that came willingly to him. And heereby that is againe the better confirmed, whych I touched euen nowe, if any man ſhoulde diſdaine to walke in the ſteppes of the theefe, and to followe as he went before, he is woorthy of eternal deſtruction, becauſe that with his vngodly pride, he driueth himſelfe frõ entring into heauen. And truely, as in the perſon of the theefe, Chriſte hath giuen vnto vs all a common pledge or aſſurance of obtaininge forgiueneſſe, ſo againe he vouchſafed that wretch ſo great honour, that all men caſting off their owne glory, we ſhould not glory but in the mercy of God alone. If that euery one of vs would truely and earneſtly ſearch himſelfe, the great heape of our ſinnes woulde woorthily make vs aſhamed of our ſelues, and it woulde irke vs to take this poore man, who of meere grace obtained ſaluation, as our guide and ſtanderd bearer. Further, as the death of Chriſte brought foorth the frute of the ſame then preſently, ſo we doe heereof gather, that the ſoules when they doe depart from the bodyes doe remaine and liue: otherwiſe the promiſſe of Chriſte ſhoulde be but a ieſt, whyche he alſo confirmed wyth an oathe. Yet of the place of Paradiſe, lette vs not curiouſly and ſubtilly diſpute: Lette it ſuffice vs, that who ſoeuer are by faith grafted into the bodye of Chriſte, are partakers of his life, and ſo after death ſhall enioy a bleſſed and a ioyfull reſt, vntill the perfect glory of the heauenly life, ſhall fully be reuealed at the comming of Chriſt.

One thing yet remaineth, that he promiſeth the theefe, not to take away his preſent miſeries, nor to diminiſh any thing of his corporall puniſhment. VVhereby we are admoniſhed that the grace of GOD muſt not be eſteemed by the iudgement of the fleſh: for it doeth oft fall out that God doeth ſuffer them to bee miſerablye afflicted, whome yet hee loueth. Therefore if we be miſerably vexed in body, let vs take heed leaſt the bitterneſſe of the griefe, take away the taſt of the goodneſſe of God, but rather let this one comfort temper and mollifie all our euils, aſſone as God taketh vs into his fauour, what troubles ſo euer we doe ſuffer, they doe further vs towardes ſaluation. So it ſhal come to paſſe, that our faith ſhall not only eſcape from all miſeries with the victory, but it ſhall ſweetely be at reſt euen in the midſt of the bearing of afflictions.

45. Nowe from the ſixte houre was there darkeneſſe ouer all the land, vnte the ninthe houre.	33. Now when the ſixt houre was come darkeneſſe aroſe ouer all the lande, vntill the ninth houre.	44. And it was about the ſixt houre, & there was a darkneſſe ouer all the lande, vntill the ninthe houre.
46. And about the ninth houre Ieſus cried with a loude voyce, ſayinge: Eli, Eli, lamaſabachthanie? that is: My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken mee?	34. And at the ninth houre Ieſus cried with a loude voyce, ſayinge: Eloi, Eloi, lamaſabachthani? which is by interpretation: my God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?	45. And the Sunne was darkened, and the vaile of the Temple rent thorough the mids.

53. And came out of the graues after his reſurrection, and went into the holy Citie, and appeared vnto many.
54. VVhen	40. There	49. And

54. When the Centurion, & they that were with him watchinge Iesus, sawe the earthquake, and the thinges that were done, they feared greatlye, saying. Truely this was the sonne of God.

55. And many wemenne were there, beholding him a farre off, which had followed Iesus from Galile, ministring vnto him.

56. Among whom was Marie Magdalen, and Marye the mother of Iames and Ioses, and the mother of Zebedeus sonnes.

40. There were also women, which beheld a far off, among whom was Mary Magdalen, and Marye the mother of Iames the lesse, and of Ioses and Salome,

41. Whiche also when hee was in Galile, followed him, and ministred vnto him, and many other womenne, whiche came vp with him vnto Ierusalem.

49. And all his acquaintaunce stoode a far off, and the women that followed him from Galile, beholding these thinges

45. Now from the sixt houre. Though in the death of Christe the infirmity of the flesh for a while, couered the glory of the Godhead: yea the Sonne of God himself lay without forme vnder reproch and contempt, and (as Paul saith) he was made of no reputation: yet the heauenly father ceased not to adorne him with some marks, and when he was at the lowest cast, hee erected some tokens of the glory to come, which might strengthen the mindes of the godly against the offence of the crosse. So the maiesty of Christe was royally set forth by the darkning of the sun, earthquake, cleauing of rockes, and renting of the vaile: euen as if heauen and earth shoulde yeelde the worshippe due to their maker and framer. But first it is demaded for what purpose the sunne was eclipsed. For where the old Poets in their tragedies do faine that the light of the sun is withdrawn frō the earth, where any notable offence is committed, tēdeth to note the greatnes of the wrath of God, & this fantasie was gathered of the common sense of nature. Therefore some interpreters doe think that God sent darknes in signe of detestation: as if God by darkning the sunne, should hide his face from the moste filthy wickednes of all. Others do say, that by the darknes of the visible sunne was the death of the sunne of righteousnes declared. Others had rather to applye it to the making of that nation blind, which followed shortly after. For the Iewes reiecting Christ, after he was taken from amongst them, were depriued of the light of the heauenly doctrine, neither was there any thing left them besides the darknes of desperation. But I do rather thinke that this people, because they would not see the light, they were so blockishe, were stirred vp by darknes, to consider the wonderful counsel of God in the death of Christ. For the vnwonted alteration of the order of nature, if they had not beene altogether hardned, should haue earnestly moued their senses, to attende to that renewing of the woorld to come. In the meane while a sight full of terrour was shewed them, that they myght feare before the iudgment of God. And truely this was an incomparable testimony of the wrath of God, that spared not his onely begotten Son, neither could he otherwise be appeased, then by the price of that sacrifice. But where the Scribes and Priestes, and a great part of the people careleſly neglected, and as it were with cloſed eyes paſſed by the darkeninge of the Sunne, their woonderfull madneſſe ſhoulde make vs afraide. For they muſt of neceſsitye be more blockiſhe then the brute beaſtes, who being warned by ſuch a woonder, of the rigour of the heauenly iudgement, ceaſed not their ſcoffing. But this is the ſpirit of amaſednеſſe and giddineſſe, wherwith God maketh the reprobare drunken, after that he hath long ſtriuen with their malice. In the meane while let vs learne, that after they are bewitched with the ſleightes of Sathan, the glory of God, be it neuer ſo manifeſt, is hidden from them, at the leaſt theyr mindes are darkened, that ſeeing they ſhould not ſee. But ſith that was a general admonition, it ſtould profite vs at this day, to let vs know that the ſacrifice wherewith we are redeemed, was of no leſſe moment, then if the Sunne had fallen from heauen, or that the whole frame of the world had beene ouerthrowne: for ſo we may be brought the more to abhorre our ſinnes. Further, where ſome doe thinke that this darkening of the ſunne was ouer al the quarters of the world, I do not thinke it to be likely. For though ſome one wryter or another, haue ſo reported, yet the hyſtorie of thoſe times was more renoumed, then that ſo notable a myracle could be concealed of many others, who diligently ſearched and ſet downe things which were not ſo worthy of remembrance. Further, if that the darkeneſſe had beene generall ouer the whole, men might the more eaſily haue forgotten it, becauſe it might haue been ſuppoſed to be naturall. But the woonder was the more ſtraunge, that the ſunne ſhining other where, Iudea ſhould be ouerwhelmed wyth darkeneſſe.

46. About the ninthe houre Ieſus cried. Though there appeared more then the force of a man in the crying of Chriſt, yet it is certain that the vehemencie of griefe wreſted it out of him. And certainly this was the chiefe conflict, & ſharper then all other torméts, becauſe that in hys ſorrowes, he was not ſo comforted with the aide and fauour of his father, that he thought himſelf in ſome ſort forſaken. For he not only offered his body for the price of our recõciliation with God, but in ſoule he alſo bore the puniſhments due to vs: and ſo he rightly became a man ful of ſorrowes, as Iſai. 53. 3. ſpeaketh. And truely they are too fooliſh, which paſsing by this part of the redemption, doe onely reſt vppon the outward puniſhmẽt of the fleſh. For to the end that Chriſt might make ſatisfaction for vs, it was behoueful for him to ſtand as guilty before the iudgemẽt ſeat of God. And there is nothing more horrible then to feele God a iudge, whoſe wrath exceedeth all deaths. Therefore, when this kinde of temptation is laid vpon Chriſt, as if God being his enemy, he ſhould nowe be giuen ouer to deſtruction, he is taken with horror, wherin al mortal mẽ had been ſwallowed vp a hundred times, but he by the maruellous power of the ſpirite eſcaped with the victory. And he maketh not this complaint diſſemblingly or after the maner of a plaier, that he was forſaken of his father. And where many do pretend that he ſpake thus according to the opinion of the common people, it is but a fonde cauill: for the inwarde ſorrowe of the minde compelled him forceably and earneſtly to breake out into this cry. And it was not onely a redemption to ſcrue the eye which he wrought (as I ſayd euen now): but as he had offred himſelf a pledge for vs, his will was to beare in deede the iudgement of God in our place. But it ſeemeth to be abſurde, that this deſperate ſpeach ſhould paſſe from Chriſt. The anſwear is eaſie, though the ſence of the fleſh beheld deſtruction, yet his faith was faſt ſetled in his heart, wherein he beholde God preſent, of whoſe abſence he complaineth. VVe ſayde other where that the Godhead gaue place to the infirmity of the fleſh, ſo farre forth as was mete for our ſaluation, to the end Chriſt might fulfil all the partes of a redeemer. VVe haue alſo noted the difference betweene the ſence of nature, and the knowledge of faith, wherefore there is no cauſe to hinder it, but that Chriſt might in minde conceiue an alienation from God, ſo farre as ſence did ſee, and withall by faith he held God merciſull vnto him. The which doth euidently enough appeare by the two partes of his complaint, for before he woulde vtter the temptation, he firſt proteſteth that he fleeth to God as to his God: & ſo with the ſhield of faith, he valiantly repelled that aſſault of forſaking, which aſſaulted hym on the other ſide. To be ſhort, in this ſharpe torment his faith remained ſafe: ſo he complaining that he was forſaken, yet truſted in the helpe of God at hand. Further, that this ſpeache was woorthy eſpecially to be noted, it doth appeare by this, that the holy Ghoſt, to the end it might be imprinted in mans memory, woulde haue it reported in the Syrian tounge: for this is as much as if he ſhuld bring in Chriſt, rehearſing the ſame words, which he then vttered with his own mouth. So much the more is theyr ſlouth thereby to be condemned as vile, who make no more account of Chriſtes ſo great ſorrow & dreadful feare, then as if they paſſed lightly by a place. But who ſoeuer conſidereth that Chriſte toke vppon him the perſon of a mediatour, of this condition, that he might beare our guiltineſſe as well in ſoule as in body, will not maruaile that he had to ſtriue with the ſorrowes of death, as if hee ſhoulde be caſt off from God in hys wrath, into a labyrinth of euilles.

47. This man calleth Elias. They which do refer this to the ſoldiers, who were rude & ignorant of the Syrian tongue, and not accuſtomed to the Iewiſh religion, are in my iudgement deceiued, for they thinke that the likeneſſe of the ſpeaches deceiued them. But I doe not thinke it any way probable, that they ſlipped of ignorance, but rather that it was determined of ſette purpoſe to ſcorne at Chriſt, and quarellingly to peruert his ſpeach. For ſathan hath no apter a deuice for the hindrāce of the ſaluation of the godly, then when he driueth them from calling vppon God. Therefore ſo muche as lieth in him, hee driueth his miniſters to thys to quench our affectiō to praier. So he driue the vngodly enemies of chriſt, wickedly to turn his praier into laughter: ſeeking by that ſhift to ſpoyle him of his chief weapons. And certainly this is a very great temptation, when we ſeme to be ſo far from preuailing, that God rather ſhould lay his name open to reproches, then ſhew himſelf fauourable to our prayers. Therefore this ironicall or doggiſh barking was as much, as if they had denied Chriſt to haue any thing to do with God, that calling vpon Elias, he ſhould repoſe himſelfe in another refuge. So we ſee him vexed on euery ſide, that he being ouerwhelmed with deſperation might ceaſe from calling vpon God, which was to renounce ſaluation. But if at this day as wel the hired ſlaues of Antichriſt, as alſo the varlets which are at home with vs, doe wickedly with their quarrelles depraue thoſe things which we haue ſpoken wel, let vs not maruel that the ſame befall to vs, which befel to our head.

Yet thogh they ſhould tranſſigure God into Eliah, when they haue ſcorned vs at their pleaſure, at the length God wil heare our ſighes, and will ſhew himſelf partly a defender of his owne glory, partely one that will plague their filthy falſhood.

48. And ſtreight way one of them ran. Hereof a probable coniecture may be gathered, that when Chriſte had once refuſed drinke, it was offred to him againe to trouble him. Though withal it is likely, that at the firſt he had vineger reached vnto him in a cuppe before that he was lifted vp on high, afterward when hee now hung vpon the Croſſe, it was put to hys mouth in a ſponge.

MAR. 36. Saying, let him alone. That which Marke here deliuereth, that a ſoldiour reaching him vineger, ſaid, Let him alone: let vs ſee, &c. and Matthew attributeth this ſpeach to others, there is no repugnancye in it. For it is likly that one began the ſcorning, which being greedily accepted by others, raiſed this cry amongſt them all. So the word Let him alone, is not a word of forbidding, but of ſcorning. Therefore he which firſt ſcorned Chriſt, ſpeaking ironically to his fellowes, Let vs ſee, ſaith he, whether Elyas wil come, preſently others followed, and euery one ſange the ſame ſong to his neighbour: as it cõmonly cõmeth to paſſe in ſuch mutual agreemẽt. And it is no matter to ſtand either vpon the plural number or the ſinguler: for let him alone ſignifieth as much in the ſinguler number, as in the plurall: for the verb is put in ſteede of an interiection, as if they had ſaid, ſt, ſt.

50. Then Ieſus cried againe. Lulke, who maketh no mention of the firſte crying, doth report the wordes of the ſecond cry, which Matthewe and Marke doe paſſe ouer. And hee ſaieth that hee cried, Father, into thy handes I commend my ſpirit: wherein he declareth, that though hee had bene hardlye ſhaken with violẽt temptations, yet his faith was not ſhaken, but alwaies kept his place inuincible. For there could not haue beene a more notable triumphe ſhewed, then when Chriſte boldly bragged that GOD was a faithfull keeper of his ſoule, which all men thought to be loſt. Further, becauſe he had ſpoken to the deaffe, he went ſtraight to God, and layde down the teſtimony of his faith in his lappe. His wil was that men ſhuld heare that which he ſpake: but though hee preuailed nothing with men, he was content that God alone did witneſſe with him. And truely faith cannot be more certeinly and firmely approued, then where a godly mã, when he ſeeth himſelfe beaten on euery ſide, that he findeth no comfort in menne, deſpiſing the madnes of al the world, doth vnlade his ſorowes and cares in the boſome of God, and reſteth in the hope of his promyſes.

And though it ſeemeth that he tooke this manner of praier, which hee vſed out of the Pſal. 31. 6: yet I doubt not, but that according to the cyrcumſtance of the time, he applied the ſame to his preſent vſe, as if he had ſaid, I ſee O father my ſelf by al mens mouthes appointed to deſtruction, & my ſoule drawn after a ſort hither & thither: and in the meane while according to the fleſh I do feele no helpe in thee. Yet that ſhall not ſtop me, but that I will lay vp my ſpirit in thy handes, and will quietlye lye down in the ſecret cuſtody of thy goodnes. Yet it is to be noted that Dauid in that place which I cited euen now, praid not only for this, that his ſoule being receiued into ꝑ hand of god, might remain aliue & ſafe after death, but

but he commended his life to the Lord,that being protected by his defence,he might be in happy eſtate as well liuing as dying.He ſawe himſelfe continually aſſaulted with many deathes:therefore nothing remained,but that he ſhould cõmit himſelfe to the inuincible defence of God. Further,where he appoynteth God to be the keeper of his ſoule,he glorieth that it is ſafe frõ all danger:and withall he quietly prepareth himſelfe to meete with death,when it ſhould ſo ſeeme good to God,becauſe that euen in death, the Lord himſelfe doeth keepe the ſoules of his children. Nowe, becauſe that was firſt taken away from Chriſte, that hee ſhoulde commit to his father his ſoule to be preſerued in the tranſitorie eſtate of the earthly life,he going chearefully to die,deſireth to be ſaued out of the world.For therefore doeth God chiefly receiue our ſoules into his cuſtodie,that our hope ſhoulde clime vp aboue this ſhadowiſh life. Now,let vs remember that Chriſt commended his ſoul to his father not in his own priuate reſpect but cõprehended al the ſoules of his faithful ones as it were in one bundle, that they might be ſaued togither wyth his.Yea in this praier he begate vnto himſelfe this right of preſeruing al ſoules,ſo that the heauenly father not onely for fauour of him vouchſafeth to take them into his cuſtody,but reſigning thoſe things which belõged to himſelf to him, he cõmitted them to him to be preſerued.And therfore Stephen at his death deliuereth his ſoule into his hande, Act.7. 59.Lorde Ieſu ſayeth he,receiue my ſpirite.By whoſe example who ſoeuer will beleeue in Chriſt, ſhal not at his death breath out his ſoule into the aire,but it ſhall goe to a faithful keper,who keepeth ſafely whatſoeuer is committed vnto him of the father. The crie doth ſhew againe the vehemencie of the affection: for it is not to bee doubted but that Chriſte brake not out of the ſtraites of temptations wherein hee was holden bounde,without earneſt and ardent trauaile. Thoughe withall, by this hie and loude cryinge, his will was to declare to vs, that his ſoule ſhoulde be preſerued and ſafe from death, to the ende that we beinge furniſhed with the ſame hope, might chearefully depart out of this tranſitorie cottage of our fleſh.

51. And behelde the vaile of the Temple. VVhere Luke mixeth the renting of the vaile,with the darkening of the Sun,as if it befel before the death of Chriſt,is an inuerting of the order.For the Euangeliſtes doe not exactly obſerue the moments of times as it is often ſeene. And it was not likely that the vaile ſhould be rent,before the ſacrifice of expiation was finiſhed: becauſe Chriſte the true and eternall Prieſt aboliſhing the figures of the law,then opened to vs by his bloud the way to the heauely ſanctuarie,that we ſhould not ſtand nowe a farre off in the Courte, but come freely forth into the ſight of God. For ſo long as the worſhipping of God in ſhadowes endured,there was a vaile ſet vp in the earthly ſanctuarie,which kept thence not only the peoples feet, but alſo their eyes. But Chriſte wyping out the hande wryting which was contrary to vs, Col.2.14.tooke away all hinderance, that we enioying him for a mediatour,ſhould be all made a royall prieſthoode. Therefore the renting of the vaile,was not only the abrogation of the ceremonies,which were of force vnder the lawe,but alſo an opening of the heauens,ſo that now God doeth familiarly call the members of his ſonne vnto him. In the meane while the Iewes were admoniſhed, that the outwarde ſacrifices were ended, and that afterward there ſhould be no vſe of the old prieſthoode: although the building of the temple ſhould ſtande, God was no more to be worſhipped after the accuſtomed order: but becauſe the ſubſtaunce and truth of the ſhadowes were now fulfilled, the figures of the law are turned into the ſpirit. For though Chriſt offered a viſible ſacrifice, yet it muſt be ſpirituallye eſteemed, (as the Apoſtle teacheth in the Epiſtle to the Heb. 9. 14.) that the price and fruit of the ſame maye appeare. But the outward ſanctuary profited nothing to miſerable menne, when the vaile being broken, it was left naked: for the inwarde vaile of their infidelitie tooke from them the ſight of the light of their ſaluatiō. That which Matthewe addeth of the quaking of the earth, and of the cleauing of the rockes was done in the very ſame moment, as I by ſome probability doe gather. Alſo the earth by this meanes not onelye gaue teſtimony to the creatour of it: but is alſo cited as a witneſſe againſt the hardnes of a curſed nation. For hereby it appeared what wonderful obſtinacy this was, which neither the ſhaking of the earth, nor the cleauing of the ſtones could moue.

52. And the graues opened. This was alſo a ſpeciall wonder, whereby God declared that his ſonne entred into the priſon of death, not that he ſhould remaine priſoner there, but that hee might bringe out all, which were holden captiues. For at what time as the contemptible infirmitye of the fleſh was to be ſeene in the perſon of Chriſte, the royall and diuine power of his death pearced euen to the places belowe. This is the reaſon why he being preſently to be laid in the graue, ſhould open all other graues. Yet it is doubted whether the graues were opened beefore the reſurrection. For the reſurrection of the Saintes, whiche is added a little after, in my iudgement followed after the reſurrection of Chriſt. For it is abſurde, which ſome interpreters doe imagine that they ſhould lye alyue and breathing for the ſpace of three dayes in the graue. To me it ſeemeth probable that at Chriſtes death, the graues preſently opened: and when he aroſe, ſome of the godly receiuing breath, went forth, and were ſeene in the Citie. For Chriſte is therefore called the firſt borne of the dead, & the firſt fruits of them that roſe againe, 1. Cor. 15. 20. Col. 1. 18. For by his death he beganne a new life, and by his reſurrection hee perfourmed the ſame: not that the deade at his death ſhoulde preſentlye be reuiued, but becauſe his death was the fountain and beginning of life. This reaſon therfore doth notably agree, when the breaking open of the graues ſhould be a propheſie of a new life, the frute it ſelfe, or the effecte whereof, appeared three daies after: for Chriſte riſinge he brought out with him other companions out of the graues. Further, by this token it was declared, that he neither died nor roſe againe priuately for himſelf, but that he might breath foorth a ſauour of life vppon all the faithfull. Yet here groweth a queſtion, why God would that ſome onely ſhoulde riſe againe, when as the ſociety of the reſurrection of Chriſt equally appertained to all the faithful. I do anſwear, becauſe that the time was not yet full come, when the whole body of the Churche ſhould be gathered to their head, there was a ſhew of the new life ſet foorth in a few, which all are to hope for. For we doe know that Chriſt was on this condition receiued vp into the heauens, that the life of his members ſhoulde as yet be hidden, vntill that it ſhould be manifeſted at his cōming, Col. 3. 3. 4.

But

But that the godly mindes might the more comfortably ſtir vp thēſelues in hope,it was profitable that the reſurrection which ſhuld be common to all,ſhould be taſted of in ſome few. The other queſtion is more difficult,what afterward became of theſe Saincts: for it ſeemeth abſurd,after they were once admitted by Chriſt to be partakers of the newe life, that they ſhould againe retourne into the duſt.But as the anſwer is neither eaſie nor ready, ſo it is to no purpoſe to labour muche in a matter not neceſſary to be knowen.It is not likely that they continued long in the companie of menne: for it was behoueful that they ſhould be ſeene onely for a ſhort time,that the power of Chriſt might be made manifeſt in that glaſſe or image. But ſith the will of God was in the perſonne of them,to confirme amongeſt them whiche liue, the hope of the heauenly life,it ſhall not be abſurde, if we ſay that when they had done thys duetie,they againe reſted in their graues. Yet it is more likely that the lyfe whiche was giuen them,was not after taken from them.For if it hadde beene a mortall life, it coulde not haue beene a teſtimonye of a perfecte reſurrection. Further,though the whole world ſhoulde ariſe,and Chriſt ſhoulde no leſſe raiſe the wicked to iudgement, then the faithfull to ſaluation:yet becauſe that he properly roſe for his Churches cauſe,of right hee beſtowed ſo great honour onely vppon his Saincts,that they ſhould ariſe togither with him.

VVhere Mathewe doeth honourably call Hieruſalem a holy Citie,he doeth not giue it this title,in reſpect of the merites of the Citizens: (for we knowe that it was then filled with all filthineſſe of ſinnes, ſo that it rather was a denne of theeues) but becauſe it had beene choſen of God, that holineſſe which was eſtabliſhed by Gods adoption,could be blotted out by no corruption of men, vntill the reprobation of the ſame ſhould be made manifeſt. Or if any man would haue a ſhorter anſwear,on the behalfe of men it was prophane,on the behalfe of God it was holy,vntill the ouerthrow or pollution of the temple,which befell not long after Chriſt was crucified.

54. VVhen the Centurion. Sith Luke made mention of the lamentation of the people, not onely the Centurion with his ſouldiers acknowledged Chriſt to be the ſon of God: but the Euangeliſts do expreſly report thys of him,for the amplifying of the matter: becauſe it ſhould be a wonder, that a prophane man,not brought vp in the law,but void of true godlines,ſhuld get that iudgemēt of thoſe ſignes which he ſaw. VVhich cōpariſon auailed not a litle to condēn the blockiſhnes of the city.For it was a ſign of horrible madnes,that none of the Iewes,beſides the ſimple cōmon people wer moued by the ſhaking & trembling of the frame of the world. Though God in ſo groſſe blindnes ſuffered not the teſtimonies which he gaue of his ſon to be hidden.So not only true religiō made the pure worſhippers of god to ſee,that they might ſee the glory of chriſt ſet forth frō heauen,but the very ſence of nature cōpelled ſtrāgers, yea,and ſoldiers,to cōfeſſe that which they learned neither out of the law,nor of maſters.Becauſe Mar. ſaith þ the Centurion ſaid ſo,for that chriſt hauing cried loud,had giuen vp the ghoſt,ſome interpreters do think that he noted ſome vnwonted force,which remained ſtrong euen vnto death,and truely,ſith the body of Chriſt was almoſt without bloud,this could not be after þ maner of men,þ the ſtrēgth of his ſides & arteries ſhuld abide ſo loud a cry. Yet I do rather thinke that the Cēturion praiſed his cōſtāt perſueperſeuerance in callinge vppon the name of God. Thoughe not onely Chriſtes crying induced him, to thinke honourably of him, but becauſe he ſaw his great power to agree with the heauenly myracles, he vttered this confeſsion. But where it is ſayde that hee feared God, it muſt not be expounded ſo, as if he ſhoulde repent throughly: it was onely a ſodaine vaniſhing motion: as it doeth oft befall that vaine men, and ſuche as are giuen to the world, are mooued with the feare of God, when he ſheweth foorth his fearefull power: but becauſe there is not a roote vnder, which hath life, ſecuritie preſently groweth ouer, which quencheth that feeling. The Centurion therefore was not ſo chaunged, as that he wold yeelde himſelfe to ſerue God the reſt of his life, but he was only a publiſher of the Godhead of Chriſt for a ſhort time. And where Luke reporteth that he only ſayde. Of a ſuretie this man was iuſt, is as muche as if he ſhould haue openly declared him to be the Sonne of God, as the two other Euangeliſts doe report. For fame had ſpredde it euery where, that Chriſt was puniſhed, becauſe he bore himſelfe for the ſonne of GOD: Now, when the Centurion praiſeth him to be iuſt, and freeth him from fault, he withall confeſſeth him to be the Sonne of God: not that he diſtinctly vnderſtoode howe Chriſte was begotten of God the father, but becauſe he doubted not but that ſome diuine power was in him, and as one conuict by the former teſtimonies, he accounted him to be no cõmon perſon, but raiſed vppe by God. As concerning the multitude ſtriking their breaſtes, they pray earneſtly for the auoidance of the guiltineſſe of that hainous offence, becauſe they perceiued that there was a hainous offence committed publikely in that vniuſt and cruell ſlaughter. But becauſe they proceeded no further, their mourning auailed them nothing: except that to ſome it was a beginninge or a preparation of a better repentaunce. But becauſe heere is onely deſcribed to vs the lamentation, which God wreaſted out of them for the glorye of hys Sonne, lette vs learne by this example that it is little or nothing, if any man be afraide at the preſent power of God, vntill the aſtoniſhment being appeaſed the feare of God may reſt in a quiet heart.

55. And many women were there. This was added as I doe interpreat it, to let vs vnderſtande that when the diſciples were ſlipt away by fleeing hither and thither, yet the Lord kept ſome of their company there to be as witneſſes. And though Iohn the Apoſtle departed not from the croſſe, yet heere is no mention made of him: but onely the women are praiſed, which followed Chriſte euen vnto death, for the men fleeing fearefully away, their ſingular pietie towardes their maiſter, appeared the more euidently. For it cannot be but that they had a rare and great affection, who though they could doe him no ſeruice, yet when he was in his extreemeſt reproaches, they ceaſed not to haue him in reuerent eſtimation: yet all the men ſtodde not as we doe gather by Luke, for hee ſayeth that all his acquaintance ſtoode a farre off. But the Euangeliſtes doe eſpecially praiſe the women, and that not without cauſe, for they were woorthy to be preferred before the menne. And in my iudgement thys ſecreat compariſon doeth greatly reproue the Apoſtles. I ſpeake of the body of them: for becauſe there was one only of them remaining who taryed, of whom (as I ſayd euen now) three Euangeliſts do ſay nothing. But this was very reproachfull to the choſen witneſſes, to withdrawe themthemſelues from beholding that, whereof the ſaluation of the world depended. Therefore, when afterwardes they ſhoulde publiſh the Goſpell, the chiefe part of the hyſtorie was borrowed of the women. The which if the prouidence of God had not met with in ſo wicked a nation, they had depriued vs of the knowledge of the redemption. But though there ſeemeth not to be ſo great authority in women, yet if we doe conſider with what power of the ſpirite they were ſtrengthened againſt that temptation, there ſhall be no cauſe why our faith ſhoulde wauer, which reſteth vppon God, the true authour of the teſtimonie. In the meane while lette vs note that it came to paſſe by the wonderfull goodneſſe of God, that the Goſpell of the ſacrifice of ſatisfaction whereby God was reconciled to vs, came vnto vs. For in that cõmon falling away of them, who ſhould haue gon before others, God encouraged ſome of the meaneſt of the flock, who caſting off feare, ſhould become witneſſes to vs of that hyſtorie, without the beliefe whereof we could not be ſaued. But of thoſe women, ſomewhat ſhall preſently be ſpoken againe. For thys preſent lette it ſuffice to note this one thing by the way, they were brought from their countrey with a deſire to learne, that they might daily heare Chriſt teach: they neither ſpared labour nor richeſſe, ſo that they myght enioy the doctrine of ſaluation.

Math. 27.

57. And when the euen was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea, named Ioſeph, who had alſo himſelfe been Ieſus diſciple.

58. He went to Pilate, and asked the body of Ieſus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be deliuered.

59. So Ioſeph toke the body, & wrapped it in a cleane linnen cloth,

60. And put it in his new tombe, which he had hewen out in a rock, and rolled a great ſtone to the doore of the ſepulchre, and departed.

61. And there was Mary Magdalen, & the other Mary ſitting euer againſt ỹ dore of ỹ ſepulcre.

Marke 15.

42. And newe when night was come, becauſe it was the daye of the preparation, that is before the Sabbath,

43. Ioſeph of Arimathea, an honourable counſellour, whiche alſo looked for the kingdome of God, came and went in boldlye vnto Pilate, and asked the bodye of Ieſus.

44. And Pilate marueiled, if he were already dead, and called vnto him the Centurion, and asked of him whether he had been any while dead.

45. And when he knew the truth of the Centurion, hee gaue the bodye to Ioſeph.

46. VVho bought a linnen cloth, and tooke him downe, and wrapped him in the linnen cloth, and layed him in a tombe that was hewen out of a rocke, and rolled a ſtone to the doore of the ſepulchre:

47. And Mary Magdalene, and Mary Ioſes mother, beheld where he ſhould be laid.

Luke 23.

50. And beholde, there was a manne named Ioſeph, which was a counſellour, a good maine and a iuſt.

51. Hee did not conſent to the counſell and deede of them, which was of Arimathea, a citye of the Iewes: who alſo himſelfe wayted for the kingdome of God.

52. Hee went vnto Pilate, and asked the body of Ieſus.

53. And tooke it downe, and wrapped it in a linnen cloth, and layed it in a tombe hewen out of a rocke, wherein was neuer man yet layed.

54. And that day was the preparation, and the ſabbath drewe on.

55. And the women alſo that followed after, which came with him from Galile, beheld the ſepulchre, and howe hys bodye was layed.

56. And they returned and prepared odours and ointments, and reſted the ſabbath day according to the commaundement.

Now

Nowe followeth the buriall of Chriſt, as a mid way betweene the ignominie of the croſſe, and the glory of the reſurrection. God would alſo that his ſonne ſhoulde bee buried for another cauſe, that ſo it mighte be the better declared that he ſuffred death for vs in deede. But heere in the meane while muſt the end be eſpecially conſidered, becauſe that by thys meanes the curſſe began to be aboliſhed, which he had born for a while. Neither was his dead body caſt into a pit after the common maner, but it was honourably laid in a hewen tombe. And though the infirmitye of the fleſhe was then yet before the eyes, and that the diuine power of the ſpirit, is not euidently ſeene before the reſurrection: yet God would as it were ſhadow foorth by thys beginning, that which a little after hee was about to doe, that he might royally lift vppe his Sonne the conquerour of death aboue the heauens.

57. And when the euen was come. Vnderſtand that Ioſeph came not at the day light going downe, but before the ſunne was ſet, that he might performe this duty of charity to the maſter without the breache of the ſabbath. Therfore it was neceſſary that Chriſt ſhuld be laid in the graue before it was darke night. Alſo, from the death of Chriſt vnto the time of the obſeruatiō of the ſabbath, there remained 3. houres free. And though Iohn doth not only make mention of Ioſeph, but ioyneth alſo Nichodemus with him as a companion: yet becauſe he alone tooke the matter in hand at the firſt, and Nichodemus only followed him as the guid & author, it was ſufficient for the 3. Euangeliſts in a ſhort hyſtorye to report what was done of one of them. Now, though the affection of Ioſeph was woorthy of wonderful praiſe, yet firſt we muſt conſider the wonderfull prouidence of God, in that he choſe a noble man & one of great dignitie amongſt his people, who ſhuld begin to couer the reproche of the croſſe with the honor of burial. And truely, when as he threw himſelf into the enuie and hatred of the whole nation, yea, and into great daungers, it is not to be doubted but that he was greatly ſtrengthened by the ſecreate inſtinct of the ſpirit. For though he had been before one of Chriſtes diſciples, yet he durſt neuer profeſſe his faith freely & openly. Now, when in the death of Chriſte there was to be ſeene a ſight full of deſperation, the which might alſo breake very manly hearts, whence then of a ſodain had he ſo ſtout a courage, that amongſt ſo great terrours he fearing nothing, durſt goe further, then when matters were at quiet? Let vs therefore vnderſtand that it came of God, that the ſonne of God was buried by the hand of Ioſeph. Hether alſo muſt be referred the circumſtances which are noted heere, the godlineſſe and integrity of the life of Ioſeph: that we might learne to acknowledge the worke of God in the ſeruant of God. The Euāgeliſts do report that he was rich, that we might know that he ouercame that let of the wōderfull loftineſſe of the mind, which otherwiſe had cōpelled him to go backwards. For as rich mē are proud, ſo nothing is more difficult to them, then willingly to abide the contēpt of the common people. And wee knowe howe foule and infamous a worke it ſhuld be, to take the dead body of a man crucified at the hand of the ſlaughter man. Further, the greater eſtate he was of, the more wary and alſo fearefull he had beene (as men giuen to their richeſſe, do vſe to flee all danger) except he had been enboldned from heauen. The dignity of his calling is alſo ſet downe, that he ſhoulde be a Counſellour or Senator, Senator, that in this behalf alſo the power of God might ſhine forth: becauſe he is not one of the baſe ſort of men hired or ſet a worke, by ſtealth or ſecreatly to bury the body of Chriſte, but he was of hie degree of honor, that was ſtirred vp to performe this dutye. For the more incredible it was that he ſhould be ready to ſerue Chriſt thus religiouſly, the more euidently it appeared that the whole action was gouerned by the counſel & hand of God. But by this example we are taught that rich men are ſo farre from excuſe, if they ſhould defraud Chriſt of the honor due to him, that they ſhoulde rather be guiltye of a double offence, while they make hinderances of thoſe ſpurres wherwith they ſhuld be pricked forwards. I do graunt that this is too much vſual and common, that they ſhould withdraw theſelues out of the yoke, which ſeeme to excel others, that they may become too dainty & choiſe, or too wiſe & fearful: but we muſt take a far other courſe: except richeſſe & honors be helpes vntoys in the ſeruice of God, we doe wickedly abuſe him. The circumſtance of the time doth declare how eaſie a matter it is for god to take away corrupt and fearfull affections, which doe hinder vs from our duty. Before, when matters were in doubt, Ioſeph durſt not freely profeſſe himſelf to be Chriſtes diſciple: nowe, when the fury of the ennemies is hotteſt, and cruelty appeareth, he taketh courage, ſo that he douteth not to caſt him ſelf into open danger. Therfore we ſee how the Lord in a moment turneth the hearts into new affections, and by the ſpirite of fortitude ſtirreth vp them which before had falne. But if Ioſeph was ſo bold in a godly endeuour to honor Chriſte, when he hong dead vpon the croſſe, if at this day, after he is riſen frō the dead, we haue not the ſame zeale in our hearts at the leaſt to glorifie him, woe be to our ſluggiſhneſſe.

MAR. 43. LV. 51. VVho alſo himſelfe waited for the kingdom of God. Thys was the chief praiſe which Ioſeph had, that he waited for the kingdome of God. He is alſo praiſed for his righteouſnes, but this waiting for the kingdō of God, was the rote & beginning of righteouſnes. By the kingdō of God, vnderſtande the reſtitution promiſed in Chriſt. For the excellency of the eſtate, which the Prophets had euery where promiſed to be at the comming of Chriſt, could not ſtand, if God gathered not vnder his gouernment, men which were diſpearſed abroad. So the godlineſſe of Ioſeph is in this poynt commended, becauſe that in ſo miſerable a ſtate, hee nouriſhed the hope of the redemption which God had promiſed. Hence alſo groweth the feare of God, and a deſire to liue holily and righteouſly. For it could not be, that any man ſhould giue himſelfe to ſerue God, but he which hopeth to be deliuered by him. But let vs note, that where ſaluation in Chriſte was generally appoynted for all the Iewes, and the promiſe of the ſame was common to them all, the holy Ghoſt doth giue this teſtimonie but of very fewe, which in this place we doe heare of Ioſeph. VVhereby it appeareth that the incomparable grace of God was then buried through the malitious forgetfulneſſe almoſt of all the people. This brag ran euery where in all mens tounges, that Chriſt ſhoulde come: but the couenaunt of God was fixed but in the mindes of fewe, whych beleeued in that ſpirituall renouation. Truely, theyr blockiſhneſſe was horrible: and therefore it was no marueile if pure religion waxed out of vſe, and the hope of ſaluation extinguiſhed.

But would to God the corruption of this vnhappy age were not lyke to it. Chriſt once appeared as a redemer to the Iewes, and to the whole world, world, as it was teſtified by the propheſyings of the Prophets: hee erected the kingdome of God, by bringing things out of confuſion into a right and lawfull order, he hath appoynted vs a time of warfare, wherin he exerciſeth our patience, vntill that he ſhall come againe from heauen, to perfourme that his kingdome which he hath begun. VVhat one man doeth aſpire, yea but a little to that hope? Are not all men almoſt ſo bent to the worlde, as if there were no reſurrection promiſed? But howſoeuer the greater part forgetfull of their ende, do flitte hether and thether, let vs remember that this vertue is proper to the faithfull, to ſeeke for thoſe things which are aboue, Col. 3. 1. and eſpecially ſith the grace of God hath appeared by the Goſpell, teachinge vs to deny vngodlineſſe and worldly luſtes, and that wee ſhoulde liue ſoberly and righteouſly in this preſent worlde, looking for the bleſſed hope, and appearing of the glory of the mighty God, Tit. 2. 11. 12. 13.

59. And when he had receiued the body. The three Euangeliſts doe briefly ſette downe the burial: and therefore they doe make no mention of the ſweete oyntments, which onely Iohn doeth ſpeake of: they do only report that Ioſeph bought fine clean linnē. VVherby we do gather that he was honourably buried. And it is not to be doubted ſith that a rich man allowed his owne tombe to the Lorde, but that in all other things hee alſo perfourmed what was conuenient for the furniſhing and adorning of the ſame. And this alſo befell rather by the ſecreat prouidence of god, then by the premeditate counſell of menne, that the Lorde gate a newe tombe in which none had yet beene layed, who is the firſt begotten of the dead, and the firſt fruites of them that riſe again, Col. 1. 18. 1. Cor. 15. 20. So the Lorde by this token diſtinguiſhed his Sonne from all the company of mankinde, and he ſette foorth newneſſe of life in the ſepulcher it ſelfe.

61. And there was Mary Magdalene. Marke and Mathew doe onely report that the women behelde what ſhould be done, and noted the place where the body was layed. But Luke alſo doeth withall declare theyr purpoſe: namely, that they retourning into the Citie, might prepare odours and oyntments, that the ſeconde day after they might ſolemniſe the funerall according to their order. VVhereby we doe know that their mindes were perfumed with a better odour, which the Lorde breathed foorth at his death, that hee might lift them higher which were brought to his ſepulchre.

Mathewe 27.	Marke.	Luke.
62. Nowe, the next day that followed the preparation of the ſabbath, the hie prieſtes and Phariſies aſſembled to Pilate,
63. And ſayd: Sir, we remember that that deceiuer ſayd, while he was yet aliue: within three daies I will riſe.
64. Commaund therefore that the ſepulchre be made ſure vntill the thirde daye, leaſt his diſciples come by night, and ſteale him away, and ſay vnto the people, he is riſen from the dead: ſo the laſt errour ſhalbe woorſe then then the firſt.

65. Then Pilate ſaid vnto them: ye haue a watch, gee and make it ſure, as yee know.
66. And they went and made the ſepulchre ſure, with the watch, and ſealed the ſtone.

62. Now the next day. In this hyſtorie, the purpoſe of Mathewe was not ſo much to ſhew, with what obſtinate furye the Scribes and Prieſts perſecuted Chriſt, as to repreſent vnto vs, as it were in a glaſſe, the wonderfull prouidence of God approued in the reſurrection of hys ſonne. Subtile men exerciſed in fraudes and treachery, do conſpire amongſt themſelues, and deuiſe a meanes whereby they maye extinguiſhe the memory of the dead man. For they ſee that they haue preuailed nothynge, except they ſhould ouerwhelme the faith of the reſurrection. But truely, while they endeuor to bring that to paſſe, they doe bring the knowledge of the ſame to light, as if it were of ſet purpoſe. Certainly, the reſurrection of Chriſt had not been ſo manifeſt, or at the leaſt they might haue hadde more liberty to denye the ſame, if they had not prouided to place witneſſes at the graue. Therefore we ſee that the Lorde doeth not only deceiue ſubtile men, but alſo catching them in their owne counſels as in ſnares, he draweth and compelleth them to obey him. The enemies of Chriſt were vnworthy that his reſurrection ſhuld be made manifeſt to them: but it was meete that their impudency ſhoulde be reproued, & the pretence of ſpeaking euil taken from them, yea, and theyr conſciences conuinced, that they ſhuld not be excuſed by ignorance. In the meane while let vs note this, that God, as if he had hired them for wages, vſed theyr labour to the ſetting foorth of the glory of Chriſte: becauſe that when the ſepulchre ſhould be found empty, they ſhould haue no colour of lying left them to deny the ſame. Not ẏ they ſhuld ſtay frō their mad vngodlineſſe, but this was a full teſtimonie to all mē of a right & ſound iudgement, that Chriſt was riſen againe, whoſe body being laide in the ſepulchre was not founde there, though the ſouldiours were ſet on euery ſide to watch it.

63. We remember that that deceiuer ſayd. This thought was put into them by inſpiration from God, not onely that the Lorde might execute a iuſt reuenge vpon them for their ſinne (as he doth oft vexe with blinde torments, the mindes which are guilty within thēſelues) but eſpecially, that he might bridle their filthy tōgues. In ẏ mean while we do again behold how blockiſh the vngodly are, when ſathan hath bewitched them. They doe yet call him a deceiuer, whoſe diuine power and glorye was of late ſhewed forth by ſo many myracles. Truely, this was not to ſtriue againſt the cloud, but in deriding the darkeneſſe of the ſunne, to ſpit (if I may ſo ſay) againſt the face of God. By ſuche examples we are taught that we muſt in ſeaſon with a godly & modeſt attentiueneſſe conſider the glory of God, when it reuealeth it ſelf, leaſt that a brutiſh & horrible blindneſſe ſhould enſue our hardneſſe. And though at the firſt ſight this ſeemeth to be hard and abſurd, that the vngodly ſhuld ſo vily triumph ouer Chriſt being dead: leaſt this liberty ſhould trouble vs, it is meete alwaies to marke with wiſdome, to what purpoſe the Lord wold apply ẏ ſame. The wicked do ſeeme to themſelues, to ouerwhelm the whole doctrine of Chriſte with his myracles, by this one blaſphemye whiche they doe proudly vomitte foorth. But God doeth vſe no other meanes, then by themſelues to deliuer his ſonne from that ſiniſter note of deceit. Therefore, ſo oft as the wicked ſhall with their quarrels prepare themſelues to peruert all thinges, and ſhall giue themſelues to ſpeake euill at their pleaſure, let vs wayte with quiet and patient mindes, vntill God ſhal lay open the light out of darkeneſſe.

65. You haue a watche. Pilate doth declare in theſe wordes that he doth refer it to their owne pleaſure, that they may appoynt the ſouldiours to watch. By the which graunt they were the more tied from deuiſing of any cauilles, for though they durſt not without ſhame wrangle againſt Chriſt after his reſurrection, yet with Pilates ſignet they rather ſhut vp their owne mouth then the ſepulchre.

Mathew 28.

1. Nowe, in the ende of the ſabbath, when the firſt daye of the weeke begamne to dawne, Mary Magdalene, and the other Marye, came to ſee the ſepulchre.

2. And behelde, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord deſcẽded from heauen, and came and rolled back the ſtone frem the dore, and ſate vppon it.

3. And his countenance was like lightning, & his raiment white as ſnowe.

4. And for feare of him, the keepers were aſtonied, and became as dead men

5. But the Angell anſweared and ſayd to the women. Feare yee not: for I knowe that yee ſeke Ieſus which was crucified.

6. He is not here, for he is riſen, as he ſayde: come, ſee the place where the lord was laid.

7. And go quickly, and tell his diſciples that hee is riſen from the dead: and behelde, he goeth before you into Galile: there yee ſhall ſee him: loe, I haue t olde you.

Marke 16.

1. And when the ſabbath daye was paſt, Mary Magdalene, and Marye the mother of Iames, and Salome, bought ſweete oyntments that they might come, and embalme him.

2. Therefore early in the morninge, the firſt day of the weeke, they came to the ſepulchre, when the ſunne was yet riſing.

3. And they ſayd one to another: who ſhall roll vs awaye the ſtone from the dore of the ſepulchre.

4. And when they looked, they ſawe that the ſtone was rolled away, (for it was a very great one)

5. So they went into the ſepulchre, and ſawe a yeng man ſitting at the right ſide, clothed in a long white robe, and they were afraid.

6. But he ſaid vnto them: Be not afraid, ye ſeeke Ieſus of Nayaret, which hath beene crucified: he is riſen, he is not heere: beholde the place where they put him:

7. But goe your way and tell his diſciples, and Peter, that hee will goe before you into Galile, there ſhall you ſee him, as he ſayde vnto you.

Luke 24.

1. Now the firſt day of the weeke, early in the morning, they came vnto the ſepulchre, and brought the odors which they had prepared, and certain wome̅ with the̅.

2. And they feund the ſtone rolled awaye from the ſepulchre.

3. And went in, but founde not the body of the Lord Ieſus.

4. And it came to paſſe, that as they were amaſed therat: beholde, two men ſodainly ſtoode by them in ſhining veſtures.

5. And as they were afraide, & bowed down their faces to the earth, they ſayd to the̅: why ſeeke yee him that liueth among the dead?

6. He is not keere, but is riſen: remember howe he ſpake vnto you, when he was yet in Galile,

7. Saying, that the ſon of mā muſt be delinered into the hands of ſiniſtful men, & be crucified, and the third day riſe again.

8. And they remembred his words.

Nowe we are come to the poynte of our redemption. For from hence ſpringeth the liuely hope of our reconciliation with God, becauſe that Chriſt came from out of the lowyer partes of the earth as a conquerour of death,that he might ſhew that he hadde the power of the new life in his hande. VVherefore Paule,1.Cor.15.14.doth rightly ſay,that there is no Goſpell, and that the hope of ſaluation is fruſtrate and vayne, except we beleeue that Chriſte is riſen from the deade.For finally, ſo was righteouſneſſe purchaſed for vs,and an entrance made into heauen: to be ſhort,our adoption was ſo confirmed, when Chriſte ſtewing the power of his ſpirite by his reſurrection, prooued himſelfe to be the Sonne of God.And though he manifeſted his reſurrection in other order,then our fleſhly wiſedome would deſire:yet this meanes which pleaſed him, muſt alſo ſeeme beſt to vs. He came out of the graue no man ſeeing it, that the emptie place might be the firſt token:next,his will was that the Angels ſhould tell the women that he was aliue: ſhortly after he appeared vnto them,and at the length to the Apoſtles,and that oft times. So by little and little he led his according to their capacity to further knowledge. But that he firſt beganne with the women,and not only ſhewed himſelfe to be ſeene of them:but alſo enioyned them to preach the Goſpell to his apoſtles,that they might be as it were their ſcholemiſtreſſes. In this was the ſlouthfulnes of the Apoſtles firſt chaſtiſed,who through feare lay almoſte without life, when as the women haſted buſily to the ſepulchre,who alſo were throughly rewarded for the ſame.For though their purpoſe to annoynt Chriſt,was not without a fault,as if he ſhould haue ſtill remained deade,yet hee pardoning their infirmitye, beſtowed vppon them this ſingular honour, by reſigning to them the office of the Apoſtleſhip for a while, which was taken from men. And in thys maner he made a ſhew of that which Paule teacheth,1.Cor.1.27. namely, that he would chuſe thoſe thinges whiche are fooliſh and weake in the worlde, that he might pull downe the pride of fleſhe. And wee ſhall not be rightly prepared to learne this article of our faith, except that we laying by all pride, doe ſubmit our ſelues to be taught of the teſtimonye of women.Not that our faith ſhould be tied vp in ſo narowe ſtraights: but becauſe the Lord,that he might prooue our obedience, would haue vs become fooles, before that he would fully admit vs to the knowledge of his myſteries.As concerning the hyſtorie,Mathew only ſaith that the 2.Maries came to ſee the ſepulchre:Marke adioyning Salome the third, ſayeth that they bought ſweete oyntments,that they might annoynt the body:but by Luke it is gathered that there came not only two or three, but very many.But we knowe that this is vſual amongſt holy wryters, of a great number only to ſet downe a few. It is alſo a probable coniecture, that Mary Magdalene with her other companion (whether ſhee was ſent before,or ran before of her owne accord)came to the ſepulchre before the reſt. And the woordes of Mathewe doe ſeeme to note this, that they two came to ſee: For if they ſhoulde not haue ſeene, there appeared no meanes howe to annoynt Chriſt.

In the meane while he concealeth that office which they purpoſed in their minde to perfourme: for this one thing was his principal purpoſe, to ſpeake of the reſurrection. Yet it is demaunded howe this labour of the women,which was mixed with ſuperſtition,ſhould pleaſe God. But I doubt not,but that their will was to applie this maner of annoynting of the deade receiued of the fathers, that they might in the ſorrowe of death,ſeeke for comfort in the hope of the life to come.

I graunt that they offended, becauſe they preſently applied not theyr mindes to that which they hadde heard ſpoken before by the mouth of the maiſter: but becauſe they doe holde the generall principle of the laſt reſurrection, their defecte is pardoned, which had iuſtly defiled the whole action (as they doe ſay). So God oft times of his fatherly goodneſſe accepteth the doings of the Sainctes, which ſhould not only without forgiueneſſe not pleaſe him, but of right ſhould be reiected with ignominye and puniſhment. In this therefore appeared the wonderfull goodneſſe of Chriſte, that he being aliue, kindly and louingly mette the women, who wrongfully ſought him amongeſt the deade. If he ſuffered not them to come to his ſepulchre in vaine, it may be certainly determined, that if any man by faith ſhould now approache vnto hym, he ſhould not be deceiued, for the diſtance of the places ſhall be no lette, but that the faithfull ſhall enioy him, who by the power of his ſpirite filleth both heauen and earth.

MAR. 1. When the Sabbath day was paſt. It is the ſame in effect whych Mathew ſayeth. In the ende of the Sabbath, when the firſt day of the Sabbath began to dawne. Likewiſe in Luke. The firſt day of the Sabbaths. For ſith we do know that the Iewes beganne theyr day, aſſoone as the night beganne to waxe darke: the meaning of them all is this, that the Sabbath being ended, the women began to conſult amongſt themſelues, of going to ſee the ſepulchre, that they might come thither before day in the morning. Two of the Euangeliſts doe call that the firſt daye of the Sabbaths, whiche was the firſt in order betweene two Sabbaths. VVhere as others tranſlated it One, the ignorance of the Hebrewe tongue cauſed manye to erre. For where ahd ſignifieth ſometimes one, ſometimes the firſt, the Euangeliſts (as in many other places) following the Hebrewe phraſe, ſayd mian. But leaſt the ambiguitie ſhoulde deceiue any, I haue more plainly expounded their meaning. But in the buying of the ſweete odours, the hyſtorye of Luke differeth not a little from Markes woordes: for that they retourning into the Citie, ſhoulde prepare ſweete oyntments: then, that according to the commaundement of the law, they ſhould reſt one day before they toke their iourney. But Marke reporting two diuers things in one, and the ſame text, had leſſe regarde to note the diſtinction of the times then Luke. For that which was don before, he mixeth togither with the iourney. But in the matter it ſelfe they do very well agree, that they hauing kept the holy reſt, they departed out of the houſe while it was yet darke night, that they might come to the ſepulchre, when the day ſhould firſt begin to dawne. But that muſt be againe remembered which I touched before, that though the rite of annoynting the deade, was common to many prophane nations, yet it was lawfully vſed onely by the Iewes: to whome it had beene deliuered by the fathers, that they might exerciſe themſelues in the hope of the reſurrection: for without this reſpecte it had beene a colde and a vaine comfort to embalme a dead corpes without ſenſe: as we do know that the Egyptians very carefully applied theſelues this way without any profite. But God by this holy ſigne repreſented to the Iewes an image of life euen in death, that they might hope that they ſhould receiue newe ſtrength out of corruption and duſt. Further, as the reſurrection of Chriſte, throughe his liuelye odoure pierced through all ſepulchres, to breath life into the dead; ſo he aboliſhed thoſe outward outward ceremonies. VVherfore he needed no ſuch meanes: but it came of the rudeneſſe and ignorance of the women, who as yet did not well vnderſtand that he was free from corruption.

3. And they ſayd amongeſt themſelues. Onely Marke ſetteth downe thys doubt: but ſith the others doe report, that the ſtone was rolled away by the Angel, it is eaſily gathered that they remained perplexed and doubtfull in counſell, vntill a way was opened by the hand of God. But hereby we doe learne, that they were ſo caried away in their zeale, that they came thither without conſulting of it before. They had ſene a ſtone layd vpon the ſepulchre, to kepe men frō entring into the ſame: why thought they not of it at leiſure in the houſe, but becauſe they were ſo aſtonyed with feare and admiration, that reaſon and memory failed them? But becauſe that they were blinded with a holy zeale, God doeth not impute this fault vnto them.

MATH. 2. And behelde there was a great earthquake. The Lord reuealed the preſence of his glory by many ſignes: that hee mighte the better frame the hearts of the holy women to reuerence. For ſith it was a matter of no ſmall moment, to knowe that the Sonne of God hadde gotten victory ouer death (wherin the ſumme of our ſaluation conſiſted) it was meete for the taking away of al doubts, that the maieſtie of God ſhould openly and plainly offer it ſelfe to be ſeene of them. Mathewe therefore ſayeth that there was an earthquake. VVherein the ſenſes might diſcerne the celeſtiall power which I ſpake of. And it was meete that the women ſhould be wakened by this wonder, that they might now thinke vppon no humane or earthly thing, but lift vppe their mindes to a woorke of God, newe and vnlooked for. The brightneſſe of the Godhead ſhewed it ſelfe alſo in the apparel & fourme of the Angel, as it were by beames: that they might perceiue that he was no mortall man, who ſtoode by in the ſhape of a man. For though the brightneſſe of the light, or the whiteneſſe of ſnow, are nothing to the great glory of God, for no colour muſt be imagined if we deſire to know him rightly: yet by outwarde notes he declaring that he is neare, doeth according to the capacitie of our infirmitie, caſt vs to himſelfe: this muſt be knowen, that he onely offereth vnto vs the viſible ſignes of his preſence, that our mindes might apprehend him inuiſible: vnder corporal ſhapes there is giuen a taſte to vs of his ſpiritual eſſence, that we might ſpiritually ſeeke the ſame. Yet no doubt, but with the outward ſignes there was ioyned ſome inward efficacie, which might graue in the hearts of the women, a feeling of the Godhead. For though they were amazed at the firſt, yet it appeareth by the text, that by degrees they came to themſelues, ſo as they were taught to fele the hand of God preſent. But while our three Euangeliſtes doe endeuour to be ſhort, they doe paſſe ouer that which Iohn doeth ſet forth more at large in the 20. chapter, vnto the 12. verſe, whiche we knowe to be no vnuſuall matter amongeſt them. There is alſo this diuerſitie, that where Mathew and Marke doe make mention onely of one Angell, Iohn and Luke doe put two. But this ſhew alſo of repugnancie is eaſily anſwered: for we do knowe that the figure Synecdoche, is often vſed in the ſcriptures. There were therefore two Angels ſeene firſt to Mary, and after to her other fellowes.

But becauſe the one, who had the office to ſpeake, eſpecially tourned their mindes to him, it was ſufficient for Mathewe and Marke to report his meſſage. Further, where Mathewe ſayeth that the Angell ſate vppon the ſtone, he doeth in woordes ſette that before, which ſhoulde be after: or at the leaſt negleƈteth the courſe of the hyſtorie: for the Angell appeared not preſently, but when as the nouelтye and ſtraungeneſſe of the matter had holde the women in ſuſpence and doubt.

4. And for feare of him the keepers were aſtonied. The Lord terrified the kepers, as if he ſhuld ſet a hot yron in their conſciences, which might compel them to feele his diuine power againſt their will: at the leaſt the terrour auailed thus farre, that they ſhoulde not careleſſy ſcorne at thoſe things which ſhould preſently be diſpearſed abrode of his reſurrection. For though they were not aſhamed to ſet their tongues to ſale, yet they are compelled, will they, nill they, inwardly to acknowledge that which before menne they did wickedly denie. And it is not to be doubted, but where they had free liberty to ſpeake, they familiarly confeſſed amongſt their acquaintãce, that which they durſt not ſpeake openly becauſe they were hired with money. And here is to be noted the difference betwene the two kindes of feare, which Mathew doeth compare togither. The ſoldiours accuſtomed to tumultes, were terrified, and ſo ſwallowed vp of feare, that they fell downe as if they were halfe deade, but no power raiſed them, ſo fallen proſtrate. The women were likewiſe afraide, but they preſently receiued comfort, whiche reſtored their mindes almoſte failing them, that at the leaſt they beganne to haue a better hope. And certainly it is meete that the maieſtie of God ſhould ſtrike ſuche a horrour and feare as well in the godlye as in the reprobate, that all fleſhe might be ſilent in his preſence. But when the Lorde hath humbled and brought his eleƈte into obedience, hee preſently mitigateth their feare, leaſt they ſhoulde ſo lie ouerwhelmed: and not ſo onely, but wyth the ſweeteneſſe of his grace, he healeth the wound they haue receiued: but he leaueth the reprobate as without life with a feare which doth diſtraƈt them, or he ſuffereth them to pine away with many ſlowe tormentes. For concerning theſe ſoldiours, they were like to deade menne, but they lay afraide as menne diſtraƈted of their mindes without any earneſt affeƈtion, yet withall they forgate that they were afraide: not that the remembraunce of the feare ſhould be altogether blotted out: but becauſe the liuely and effeƈtuall feeling power of God, fled from them, whereunto they were compelled to giue place. But this muſt eſpecially be noted, ſith they feared like as the women, they hadde no comforte giuen them, which might take away their feare. For the Angels ſayde onely to the womenne, Feare yee not: he propoſed vnto them the reſurrection of Chriſt, as the matter of their ioy and comfort. In Luke there is added a reproofe, becauſe they ſought the liuing with the dead, as if the Angell ſhoulde ſtirre them vp, leaſt they ſhould fall further into deſperation.

7. And goe quickly, and tell his diſciples. God doth here adorne the women with an extraordinarie honour, in that he cõmaundeth them to inſtruƈt his Apoſtles in the principall poynt of our ſaluation. In Marke they are commaunded by name to beare this meſſage to Peter: not becauſe he excelled them in dignity, but becauſe his fal was ſo vile, that he had need of ſpeciall comfort, that he might knowye that Chriſt had not caſt him off, though he had filthily and wickedly fallen. Nowe, he had beene in the ſepulchre, and had ſeene the tokens of the reſurrection of Chriſte: but God denied him that honour which hee ſhortly after beſtowed vppon the women, as to heare the Angell ſay that Chriſt was riſen. And certeſſe heereby it appeareth howe blockiſhe he as yet remained, in that hee doeth fearefully runne againe into his lurking corners, as if he had ſeene nothing: when as Mary ſate weeping by the ſepulchre. VVherefore it is not to be doubted but that ſhee and her fellowes in beholding the Angell, receiued the rewarde of their patient waying. That the Aungell ſendeth the diſciples into Galile, I thinke was done for this cauſe, that Chriſt might ſhew himſelfe to many. For we knowe that he had beene long conuerſant in Galile, and his will was to giue his diſciples a larger ſpace, that they might in that iourney gather their mindes ſomewhat to them. Then the knowledge which they had of the places, holpe them, that they might the more certainly knowe the maſter. For it behooued that they ſhould be by all meanes confirmed, leaſt any thinge ſhoulde be wanting for the aſſurance of faith. Loe, I haue tolde you. By this phraſe of ſpeache the Angell confirmeth that to be true, which he ſpake. And hee would not ſpeake this of himſelfe, as if he had beene the firſt author, but he ſubſcribeth to Chriſtes promiſſe: and there in Marke he onelye bringeth them in minde of the wordes of Chriſt. Luke doeth proſecute the ſpeache further, as that the diſciples ſhoulde be admoniſhed by Chriſte, that it behoued him to be crucified, &c. yet the ſenſe is the ſame, becauſe he had foretolde his death togither with his reſurrection. It is alſo added that they then remembred the wordes of the Lord: whereby we are taught, that though they had profited badly in the doctrine of Chriſte, yet it peariſhed not, but was couered, vntill that in due ſeaſon it ſhoulde budde foorth and ſpring.

8. So they departed quickelye from the ſepulchre, with feare & great ioye, and did run to bringe his diſciples woorde.	8. And they went out quickly, and fled from the ſepulchre: for they trembled & were amaſed, neither ſaide they any thinge to any man: for they were afraide.	9. And returned from the ſepulchre, and told all theſe things vnto the elenen, and to all the remnant.
9. And as they went to tel his diſciples: beholde, Ieſus alſo mette them, ſaying: God ſaue you: and they came & beeke him by the feete, and woorshipped him.	9. And when Ieſus was riſen againe, in the morow (which was the firſte day of the weeke) hee appeared firſt to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he hadde caſt ſeuen deuils.	10. Nowe it was Mary Magdalene and Ioanna, and Marye the mother of Iames, and other women with them, whiche tolde theſe things vnto the apoſtles.
10. Then ſayde Ieſus vnto thē, be not afraid: Go, and tel my brethrē that they go into Galile, & there ſhal they ſee me.	10. And ſhee went and tolde them that had beene with him, which mourned and wept.	11. But their words ſemed vnto them as a fained thing, neyther beleeued they them.
	11. And when they heard that he was aliue, & had appeared to her, they beleeued it not.	12. Then aroſe Peter, and ran vnto the ſepulchre, & looked in, & ſaw the linnen cloathes laid by them ſelues, and departed wondering in himſelfe, at that which was come to paſſe.

8. So they departed quickly. The 3. Euāgeliſts do omit that which Iohn doth report of Mary Magdalen: namely, that ſhe hauing not yet ſeen ꝑ angels returned into the city, & weping, ſhe cōplained ꝑ the body of Chriſt was taken away. Heere is not onely mention made of the ſeconde retourne into the citie, when ſhee and her other fellowes, caried newes to the diſciples that Chriſt was riſen: which they had learned as wel by the voyce and teſtimonie of the Angel, as by ſeeing of Chriſt himſelfe. Alſo, before Chriſt ſhewed himſelfe, they nowe ranne towardes the diſciples, as they were commaunded by the Angell. In the iourney befel the ſeconde confirmation, that they might the more boldly affirme that the Lorde was riſen. Mathew ſayeth that they went with feare and great ioy. By which wordes hee meaneth that they were comforted by the voyce of the Angell, yet withall, that they were ſtricken with feare, ſo that they were toſſed in perplexitie betweene ioye and doubtfulneſſe. For ſo the heartes of the godly are ſometime poſſeſſed with contrary affections whiche are conuerſant in the ſame by courſes, vntill at the length the peace of the ſpirite doeth bring the ſame into a quiet eſtate. For if their faith had beene perfecte, it had thoroughly quieted them by putting feare to flight: nowe, the feare being mixed with ioy, doth declare that they as yet truſted not throughly to the teſtimonie of the Angell. And heere Chriſt gaue a notable teſtimony of his mercy, in that he meeteth them which are ſo doutfull and fearefull, that he might take away that doubtfulneſſe which remained. Yet Markes woordes doe not a little differ, in that they fledde for feare and amaſednesſe, ſo that for feare they ſhould be aſtonied. But it is not ſo harde to anſweare, for when their minde was to obey the Angell, yet their abilitie ſerued not, if the Lord hadde not looſed their ſilence. But there is a greater ſhewe of repugnancie in that whiche followeth. For Marke doeth not ſay that they mette Chriſt by the way, but only that he appeared early in the morning to Magdalene: Luke maketh no mention of this viſion at all. But ſith this pretermiſsion is not a thing vnuſuall to the Euangeliſtes, it muſt not ſeeme abſurde to vs. As concerning the difference betweene the woordes of Mathewe and Marke, it maye bee that Magdalene was partaker of ſo great good before the reſt: or elſe by Synecdoche Mathewe doeth extend that to all, which was proper to one. Yet it is more probable that Marke nameth her onely, becauſe that ſhee before others enioyed the ſight of Chriſt firſt, and that in a peculiar maner. But her fellowes alſo ſawe Chriſte in their order: and therefore Mathewe doeth attribute this generally to them all. And thys was a woonderful token of goodneſſe, that Chriſt reuealed his heauenly glory to a miſerable woman, which had beene poſſeſſed of ſeuen deuilles: and when he would ſette foorth the light of the newe and eternall life, he began there where there was nothing in the iudgement of manne but contempt and ſhame. But by this leſſon Chriſt declareth, when hee once ſheweth his fauour towardes vs, howe liberally hee vſeth to proſecute the courſe of the ſame: and with all hee caſteth downe all pride of the fleſhe.

9. They tooke him by the feete. This ſeemeth not to agree with the words of Iohn, where he declareth that Mary was forbidden to touche Chriſt. But it may be eaſily reconciled, becauſe the Lord ſeeing Mary too much bent to the embracing and kiſsing of his feete, ſhoulde commaunde her to departe, becauſe the ſuperſtition was to be reproued, and he was to ſhewe the ende of the reſurrection, from the which Marye was drawne partly by an earthly and groſſe affection, partly by a fond zeale. But the Lord ſuffred her to touch his feete at the firſt meeting, that there might be nothing wanting for the aſſurance of them. Therefore preſently after doeth Mathew adde, that they worſhipped the Lord: the which was a ſigne of no doubtfull knowledge.

10. Then Ieſus ſaid vnto them. VVe do gather that this was a corrupt feare, from the which Chriſt doth againe deliuer them. For though it aroſe of their wōdring at the matter, yet it was contrary to a ſetled aſſurāce. Therefore, to the end they might lift vp themſelues to Chriſt the conquerour of death, they are commaunded to be of good comfort. But we are taught by the ſame words, that we do then know rightly the reſurrection of the Lorde, if by the faith which we haue conceiued, we dare glory, that we are made partakers of the ſame life. And thus farre muſt our faith profite, leaſt feare preuaile. Further, Chriſt commanding that this ſhuld be told to his diſciples, doth by this meſſage gather his church diſpearſed togither againe, & erect the ſame now falne. For as the faith of the reſurrection doeth eſpecially giue vs life at this day, ſo it behoued that the diſciples ſhould haue that life reſtored to them, from the which they had faln. Here alſo is to be noted the incredible kindnes of Chriſt, in that he vouchſafeth to call thoſe runagates, who had moſte cowardly forſaken him by the name of brethren. And it is not to be doubted, but that by calling them ſo louingly, his will was freely to appeaſe that ſorrow, wherwith he knew that they were grieuouſly tormented. But becauſe that hee accounteth not the Apoſtles onely as his brethren, lette vs know that Chriſt commanded that this meſſage ſhould ſo be done, that it might then remaine for vs. VVherfore we muſt not coldly hearken to the hyſtorie of the reſurrection, ſith that Chriſt by the band of brotherly kinred, doth with his own mouth louingly cal vs to receiue the frute of the ſame. VVhere ſome interpreaters vnder the name of brethren, do vnderſtand Chriſtes kinſmenne, the text doeth very ſufficiently confute their errour: for Iohn doeth expreſly declare that Marie came to the diſciples: and preſently it followeth in Luke, the wemenne came to the Apoſtles. Marke alſo agreeth with them, wryting that Mary came and told theſe things to the diſciples, which wept.

MAR. 11. And when they heard. Marke onely maketh mention of the teſtimony of Mary alone. Yet I am perſwaded that the commandemēts of Chriſt were done generally by them al: and this place doth the better confirme that which I ſayd euen nowe, that there is no repugnancie betwene the Euangeliſts, while one doth particularly aſsigne that to Mary Magdalene, which according to others, was commen to all, thoughe not in like degree. But the diſciples were grown to be marueilous ſluggiſh, that they remembred not that that was fulfilled, which they hadde oft times heard of the maſter. If the women had tolde any thing which before had not been heard of, there had been good cauſe why in a matter incredible, there had beene no credite giuen to their report: but now they muſt needes be exceeding blockiſh, who doe account for a fable or a dreame, a matter ſo oft promiſed and witneſſed by the ſonne of God, when it is reported to be fulfilled by them whiche had ſeene the ſame. Further, ſith that they were depriued of a right vnderſtanding throughe their owne vnbeliefe, they doe not onely refuſe the light of the truthe, but they doe reiecte it as a fantaſie, as Luke declareth. Heereby it appeareth that they ſo yeelded to the temptation, that almoſte all the taſte of Chriſtes woordes was cleane forgotten.

L V. 12. Then aroſe Peter. I doe not thinke but that Luke hath heere inuerted the order of the hyſtory, as it is eaſie to gather by the woordes of Iohn: and in my iudgement it is not amiſſe, that the woord Running be reſolued into the preterpluperfect tence. And they which are but meanly exerciſed in the ſcripture, doe knowe that this is vſuall amongeſt the Hebrewes, to reporte afterwarde thoſe things, whiche were omitted in their place. But Luke by this circumſtance doth the more exaggerate the hardneſſe of the Apoſtles, in that they deſpiſed the womens woordes: when yet Peter had now ſeene the ſepulchre emptye, and by a manifeſt ſigne of the reſurrection was driuen into admiration.

Mathew 28.	Marke.	Luke.
11. Now, when they were gone: beholde, ſome of the watche came into the citie, and ſhewed vnto the hie prieſts, all things that were done.
12. And they gathered them togither with the Elders, and toeke counſel, and gaue large money vnto the ſouldiours.
13. Saying, ſay his diſciples came by night, and ſtele him away while we ſlept.
14. And if the gouernour heare of this, we will perſwade him, and ſaue you harmeleſſe.
15. So they tooke the money, and did as they were taughte: and this ſayinge is noiſed among the Iewes vnto this day.

11. Newe when they were gone. It is not only to be ſuppoſed, but the matter it ſelfe declareth, that the ſoldiours to whome the keeping of the ſepulchre was committed, were ſo corrupted by rewardes, that they were ready to lie at the Prieſts appoyntment. They knewe very well, that the Prieſts feared nothing more, then that it ſhould be reported that Chriſt aroſe the third day after his death: they knew that they wer ſent thether for that purpoſe, that by keeping the corpes, they might putte away that report. The men therfore being giuen to gain, yea, & ſeeking gain euery way, after they hadde loſt their labour this way, they doe deuiſe a newe meanes to gette money. But where Mathew ſayeth that ſome of the watche came, it is vncertaine whether a few ſubtile fellowes of them went alone to counſel from the reſt, or whether they were ſent in the generall name of them all. The ſeconde part by coniecture ſeemeth rather to be true: for Mathew doth afterwards ſay that the reward of periurie was giuen not to one or two, but generallye to the ſouldiours. It is certaine that whether al of them, or but a part of thē cōſpired, yet they ſought to gain by the cruel & vnappeaceable hatred of the prieſts againſt Chriſt. Further, ſith they had them guilty of the offence, they abuſed their euil conſcience, for to wreſt mony from them. For (as almoſt all wicked menne doe) the prieſts knowing their owne leudneſſe, to the ende they myght couer their ſhame, are compelled to corrupt the ſouldiours with a large reward.

reward. Alſo it doth heereby appeare, that after the reprobate haue once caſt themſelues headlong into ſinne, they are then caught in new ſinnes, and while they would defend their name before men, they doe careleſly negleſte their ſinnes againſt God. Theſe wretches doe not onely hire the ſoldiours with rewardinge them: but alſo, if the offence ſhoulde be brought into iudgement, they doe caſt their name and life in daunger. And what compelleth them beſides the loſſe of the money to come into great pearill, but becauſe their obſtinate furye ſuffereth them not to goe backe, vntill they ſhould heape ſinnes vppon ſinnes?

15. And this ſaying is noyſed. This was the greateſt woorke of Gods vengeance for the blinding of the Iewes, that the reſurrection of Chriſt was buried in the periurie of the ſoldiours, and that ſo vaine a lie ſhould be receiued. And heereby it appeareth that they which did not thynke that Chriſt was riſen, were deceiued in a voluntary errour, as the worlde doeth willingly offer it ſelfe to be deceiued with the ſleightes of Sathan. For there had beene no neede of any long ſearche, if any man woulde but haue opened his eyes. The armed ſoldiours doe ſay that the body of Chriſt was ſtolen from them by a weake, fearefull, ſmall, and vnarmed company of men. VVhat ſhewe of colour? They doe adde that this was done while they were a ſleepe. Howe then doe they imagine that it was ſtolne? If there had bin any ſuſpition of the diſciples, why folowed they not after them? VVhy made they no ſtirre? This therfore was but a childiſh ſhift, which they had not eſcaped with, without puniſhment, if the matter had come before a righteous and a ſtout gouernor. But through Pilates winking it came to paſſe, that ſo great wickednes eſcaped. As we doe ſee it doeth fal out daily, that prophane iudges haue but ſmal regarde, where truth is ouerwhelmed by deceit and malice: but rather, if they doe feare no incommodity, they do ſeeme to ioyne in leudneſſe together with the treacherous varlets. And thoughe this may ſeeme to be hard, that God ſhould ſuffer this falſe rumour to be ſpred for the extinguiſhing of the glory of his ſonne, yet to his iuſt vengeance that honour muſt be giuen which is due. For that nation was worthy that the clouds ſhould take the light from them, as we do perceiue by this, that a vayne and friuolous lie, ſhould be ſo greedily ſnatched vppe: Further, ſith that almoſt all had ſtumbled at the ſtone of offence, it was meete that their eyes ſhoulde be darkened, leaſt they ſhoulde ſee that the cuppe of giddineſſe was giuen them to drinke of: to be ſhorte, they were caſt into all kinde of madneſſe, as it was ſpoken of before in the propheſie of Iſai, the ninthe chapiter, and the tenthe verſe. God would neuer haue ſuffered them to be deceiued by ſo fond credulitie, but that he might depriue them of the hope of ſaluation, who hadde contemned the Redeemer, euen as with the ſame kinde of puniſhment hee doeth nowe chaſtice the worlde, louſing the raynes to the reprobate, that they may grow worſe. But though this lie ſhould preuaile amongſt the Iewes, yet it was no let, but that the trueth of the Goſpell ſhoulde haue free paſſage, euen to the endes of the earth, as it alwayes went as conquerour ouer all the lettes of the worlde.

Mathew

Mathew.

Mar. 16.

12. After that hee appeared vnto two of them in an other fourme, as they walked and went into the countrey.

Luke 24.

13. And behold, two of them went that same day to a towne which was from Hierusalem about three score furlongs, called Emaus:
14. And they talked togither of all these things that were done.
15. And it came to passe, as they communed together and reasoned, that Iesus himself drew neare, and went with them
16. But their eyes were holden, that they coulde not knowe him.
17. And hee sayde vnto them: VVhat maner of communications are these that yee haue one to an other, as yee walke and are sad?
18. And the one (named Cleopas) answeared and sayd vnto him: Art thou onely a straunger in Ierusalem, and hast not knewen the thinges whiche are come to passe there in these dayes.
19. And he said vnto them, what things? And they saide vnto him, Of Iesus of Nazaret, whiche was a Prophet, mighty in deede and in worde before God, & all the people. 20. And how the hie priests, & our rulers deliuered him to be condēned to death, and haue crucified him. 21. But we trusted that it had been he that should haue deliuered Israel, & as touching all these things, to day is the third day, that they were done. 22. Yea, and certain women amonge vs made vs astonied, which came early vnto the sepulchre, 23. And when they founde not his body, they came, saying: that they had also seene a vision of angels which sayde that he was aliue. 24. Therfore certain of them which were with vs, went to the sepulchre, and founde it euen so, as the women had sayd, but him they saw not. 25. Then he sayd vnto them, O fooles and slowe of heart, to beleeue al that the Prophets haue spoken. 26. Ought not Christ to haue suffred these things, and to enter into his glory? 27. And he began at Moses, and at all the Prophets, and interpreated vnto them in all the scriptures, the thinges whiche were wrytten of hym.
28. And they drewe neare vnto the towne which they went to, but he made as though he woulde haue gone further. 29. But they constrained him, saying: Abide with vs, for it is towardes nighte, and the day is farre spent. So he went in to tarye with them.
30. And it came to passe, as hee sate at the table with them, he tooke the bread, and gaue thankes, & brake it, and gaue it to them.

13. And beholde two of them. Though Marke doeth only touch this hyſtorie briefly, and Mathew and Iohn do ſay neuer a woorde of it: yet becauſe it is profitable to be knowen and woorthy to be remembred, it is not in vaine that Luke doeth ſo diligently deſcribe the ſame. But I haue already oft times declared, that the ſpirite of God hath ſo aptly directed the workes of euery of the Euangeliſts, that what could not be founde in one or two, might be hadde in the others. For diuers viſions, whereof Iohn doeth make mention, are not ſpoken of by our three. Further, before I will come to the ſeuerall circumſtances, this ſhalbe worth the labour ſummarily to be noted, that theſe two witneſſes were choſen, not that the Lordes purpoſe was by them to ſhew the Apoſtles that he was riſen, but to reproue their ſlackneſſe. Yet though they preuailed nothing at the firſt, afterward their teſtimony being furthered with other helps, it was had in due regarde amongſt them. But it is doubted who they were: but that by the name of one of them (whome Luke a little after calleth Cleopas) it maye be gathered that they were not of the eleuen. Emaus was an ancient town & of no ſmall accoũt, which the Romanes afterwardes called Nicopolis: neither was it farre diſtant from Ieruſalem, when as three ſcore furlongs doe only make ſeuen thouſand foure hundred paces. But Luke hath not ſo much regard to note the place in reſpecte of the renoume of it, as for the certainty of the hyſtorie.

14. And they talked together. This was a ſigne of godlineſſe, that they endeuoured to nouriſh by what meane they might, their faith in Chriſte, though it was but weake and ſmall. For their talke tended not to any other purpoſe, then þ they might oppoſe the reuerẽce of their maiſter as a ſhield or buckler againſt þ offẽce of þ croſſe. And though by inquiring & diſputing they bewraied their ignorance worthy to be reprehended, whẽ as they being before admoniſhed þ chriſt ſhuld riſe again, that they ſhuld be amaſed at the hearing of the ſame: yet their aptnes to be taught yeelded a way to Chriſte to take away their errour. For many of ſeite purpoſe doe mooue queſtions, becauſe they are determined frowardlye to refuſe the truthe, but they which haue a deſire, quietly to embrace the truthe, though they ſticke at ſmall obiections, and ſtay at light ſcruples, yet their godly endeuour to obey, procureth them fauour before God, ſo that as it were with ſtretched out hand, being ledde into a perfect aſſurance, ſhould ceaſe to wauer. And this is to be noted, where we doe inquire for Chriſte, if it be done with a modeſt deſire to learne, there is a way opened for the furtherance of vs: yea, we do then procure hym to be as a teacher, euẽ as prophane men with their filthy ſpeaches do driue him farre away.

16. Their eyes were holden. The Euangeliſt doeth expreſly ſet this down, leaſt any man ſhould thinke that the ſhape of Chriſtes body were altered. Therefore, though Chriſt remained like as he was, yet he was vnknowen, becauſe their eyes were holden: whereby the ſuſpition of a ghoaſt, or of a falſe imagination is taken awaye. And heereby we are taught, howe weake we are in all our ſenſes, ſo that neither the eyes nor the eares doe their office, further then that they haue power miniſtred vnto them daily from heauen. Oure members are naturallye furniſhed with their gifts: but that it might the better appear that they are graunted to vs freely, God keepeth the vſe of them in his owyne hand: that this ſame which the eares do heare, and the eyes do ſee, ſhould be layed vp amongſt his daily benefites: for if that he ſhould not continually ſtrengthen our ſenſes, their whole force would preſently fade awaye. I doe graunt that our ſenſes are not oft holden, as it then befel, that they ſhuld be ſo groſſely deceiued in a forme obiected before them: yet God, by one example, ſheweth that it is in his power to directe what ſoeuer powers he beſtoweth vppon manne, that we may knowe that nature is ſubiecte to his pleaſure. Nowe, if the corporall eyes, whoſe chiefe propertie is to ſee, are ſo ofte as it pleaſeth the Lord, ſo holden, that they cannot diſcern thoſe things which are ſet before them, our mindes ſhould be no better, though they remained in their integritie. But now in this miſerable corruption, ſince their light is taken from them, they are ſubiect to be deceiued many waies, and ſo oppreſſed with a groſſe dulneſſe, that they can doe nothing but erre, as alſo it doeth befall very oft. Therefore it commeth not of the ſharpneſſe of our witte for vs to diſcerne betwene truth and falſehoode, but of the ſpirite of wiſedome. But their chiefe dulneſſe appeareth in the beholding of heauenly thinges: for we doe not onely conceiue falſe ſhapes for thoſe things which are true, but we doe tourne the cleare light into darkeneſſe.

17. What maner of communication are theſe yee haue one to another? That which we doe ſee, was done then openly by Chriſte, we doe daily finde to be perfourmed in vs in a ſecreat maner, that of hys owne accorde hee inſinuateth himſelfe to teache vs. But that which I ſaid euen now, doeth more euidently appeare by the anſwear of Cleopas: that is, though they were doubtfull and in perplexitie about the reſurrection of Chriſte, yet they eſteemed reuerently of his doctrine, ſo as they were not bent to fall away. For they doe not tarie vntill that Chriſt by manifeſting himſelfe, ſhoulde preuent them, or that the trauailer who ſoeuer hee was, ſhoulde ſpeake honourably of him, but rather out of a ſmall and darkiſhe lighte, Cleopas doeth caſt ſuche ſparkes into the ſtraunger, as might ſomwhat lighten his minde if he had ben rude & ignorant. The name of Chriſt was at that time ſo odious and infamous in euerye place, that it was not ſafe to ſpeake honourably of Chriſte: but without regard of enuie, he nameth him the Prophet of God, and profeſſeth himſelfe to be one of his diſciples.

And though this title of a Prophet is farre inferiour to the diuine maieſtie of Chriſt, yet this ſmal commendation deſerueth praiſe, ſith Cleopas hadde no other purpoſe, then to procure diſciples to Chriſt, whiche ſhoulde ſubmitte themſelues to his Goſpell. But it is vncertaine whether Cleopas accordinge to his rudeneſſe ſpake more baſely of Chriſte then was meete: Or whether his purpoſe was to beginne at the rudiments which were beſt knowen, that hee might by degrees goe further. And certainly a little after, he doeth not ſimplie account Chriſte in the common order of Prophets, but he ſayeth that he and others ſuppoſed that he ſhould haue beene the redeemer.

19. Mighty in deede and in woorde. The ſame forme of woordes almoſt doeth Luke, Actes 7.22. vſe in the perſon of Stephen, where ſpeaking in the praiſe of Moſes, he ſayeth that he was mighty in wordes and deedes. But in this place it is doubted whether Chriſt ſhould be called Mighty in deede, in reſpecte of his myracles (as if it hadde beene ſayde that hee was enduendued with diuine vertues, which ſhould prooue that he was ſent from heauen) or whether that it ſho ulde reache further, that the meaninge ſhould be, that he excelled as well in the facultie of teaching, as in holineſſe of life, and excellent giftes. And I doe like this latter ſenſe. Neither is that addition in vaine, Before God and the people, which ſignifieth that the excellencie of Chriſte was ſo declared to menne, and knowen by euident trialles, that it was without all fained and vaine oſtentation. And heereby may be gathered a briefe definition of a true Prophet: namely, hee who to his woorde adioyneth alſo the power of woorkes, and ſhall not onely endeuour to excell amongeſt men, but to behaue himſelf ſincerely, as in the ſight of God.

21. But we truſted. It ſhall appeare by the text, that the hope which they had conceiued of Chriſt, was not taken away: though by the woordes it ſhoulde ſo ſeeme at the firſt ſight. But becauſe the hyſtorie which is ſette downe of the condemning of Chriſte might withdraw a man, who had no taſt of the goſpel, becauſe þ he was condemned by the Prelates of the Church: Cleopas oppoſeth the hope of the redemption againſt this offence. And though he doth afterwardes declare that hee himſelfe dooth fearefully and as a ſtaggering man remain in this hope, yet he doth diligently gather what helpes ſoeuer he can, for the vpholding of the ſame. For it is probable that he ſpake of the third day for no other end, but becauſe the Lord had promiſed that he would riſe againe the thirde daye. Furthermore, that which hee reporteth that the women founde not the body, and that a viſion of Angels appeared to them, and beecauſe that which the women had ſpoken of the empty graue was alſo approoued by the teſtimony of menne, is referred to this ſum, that Chriſte was ryſen. So the godly manne doubtfull betwene fayth and feare, nourysheth his fayth, and accordinge to his ſtrength, ſtryueth agaynſte feare.

25. And he ſayd vnto them This reproofe ſeemeth to be ſharper and harder then was meete in reſpect of the weake man: but who ſo ſhall conſider of all the circumſtances, ſhal eaſily perceiue that it was not without cauſe that the Lord gaue ſo ſharpe a reproofe to them, amongſt whome he had beſtowed his long labour, ſo ill and almoſt without anye fruite. For it is to be noted that this heere ſpoken is not onely to be rebrayned to theſe two: but obiected as a common faulte, which their other fellowes might preſently heare of their mouthes. Chriſt had ſo oft forwarned them of his death, he had alſo ſo oft taught of the new and ſpirituall lyfe, and had confirmed his doctrine by the oracles of the Prophetes: as if he had ſpoken to deafe men, or to blockes or ſtones, they being once ſtricken with the horrour of death, do turne themſelues hether and thether. Therfore he doth iuſtly attribute this ſtackering to fooliſhneſſe, & he maketh ſlouth the cauſe of the ſame, becauſe they were no readier to beleeue. And he doth not only vpbraide them, that when he was a moſt excellent maſter to them, they were but ſlacke and ſlow to learn: but becauſe they were not attentiue to the ſayings of the Prophets: as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde that their ſlouthfulneſſe coulde not bee excuſed, becauſe there was no fault, but onely in themſelues, ſith the doctrine of the Prophets was ſo euident and plaine of it ſelfe, and ſo well expounded to them.

As the moſt part of menne doe beare the ſame blame for theyr owne folly, becauſe they are vnapt to be taught, and obſtinate. But lette vs note that when Chriſt ſaw his diſciples to be too ſlouthfull, to the ende that he might waken them, hee beginneth at reproouing them. For ſo muſt they be dealt with, whome we haue tried to be either dull or ſlouthfull.

26. Ought not Chriſt to haue ſuffered theſe things. It is not to be doubted but that Chriſte ſpake of the office of the Meſsias, as it was deſcribed by the Prophets: leaſt the death of the croſſe ſhould be offenſiue: and in iourneying three or foure houres, hee had ſpace ſufficient fully to ſet foorth the matters. Therefore Chriſte doeth not ſay in three woordes that hee ought to ſuffer: but hee declareth at large that he was ſent to that ende, that by the ſacrifice of death he might waſh away the ſins of the world. that he might be the purging ſacrifice offered for the takinge awaye of the curſe, that he might waſh the ſinnes of others from their guiltineſſe. Luke therefore for the more vehemencie ſetteth downe this ſentence interrogatiuely, whereby it is gathered that hee ſhewed by reaſons the neceſsity of his death. The ſumme is, that the diſciples did euill to bee troubled at the death of their maiſter, (without the which he could not perfourme the partes of Chriſt: for the chiefe poynt of our redemption, was his offering vp) for by this meanes they ſhutte vp the gate againſt him, leaſt he ſhoulde come into his kingdome. The which muſt be noted diligently: for ſith Chriſt ſhoulde want his honour, if he ſhoulde not be accounted a ſacrifice for ſinnes, his onely way into his glory, is that hys humbling to be of no reputation, Phil. 2. 7. out of the which hee aroſe a redeemer. But we do ſee at this day, how amongſt vs they do ſinne nothing ſooner then in a prepoſterous order. For amongſt the multitude of them which doe royally declare Chriſt to be a king, and do extol him with diuine praiſes, ſcarce euery tenth of them doth think that we haue gotten grace by his death.

27. And he began at Moſes. This place doeth teach how Chriſte is made manifeſt vnto vs by the Goſpel: namely, while the knowledge of him is prooued plainly out of the law and the Prophets. For no man euer was a more ready and apte teacher of the Goſpell, then the Lorde hymſelfe, who as we ſee fetched the proofe of his doctrine out of the law and the Prophets. If any man will except, that he began at the rudimentes, that the diſciples by a little at once, biddinge the Prophets fare well, myghte paſſe ouer to the perfecte Goſpell, this deuice is eaſily confuted: for afterward it ſhalbe ſayd, that all the Apoſtles had their minde opened, not that they ſhoulde be wiſe without the helpe of the lawe, but that they might vnderſtand the ſcriptures. VVherefore, to the ende that Chriſte may at this day be reueiled vnto vs by the Goſpell, it is neceſſarye that Moſes and the Prophets ſhuld come forth before as forerunners. VVherof the readers are therefore to be admoniſhed, leaſt they ſhoulde giue eare to fanaticall men, which by ſuppreſſing the law and the Prophets, doe wickedly maime the Goſpell. As if that God would haue to be vnprofitable, what ſoeuer he at any time ſpake of his owne Sonne. But in what maner they are to be applied to Chriſte, whiche are euery where read of him in the lawe and the Prophets, it is not my preſent purpoſe to declare.

It is ſufficient, briefly to note, that Chriſt is not in vaine called the end of

of the lawe. For though that Moſes rather ſhadowed him foorth darkely, and a farre off, then expreſſe him plainly: yet this is without controuerſie, that if in the ſtocke of Abraham, there ſhould not be one head aboue all, vnder whome the people ſhould grow into one body, the couenant which God made with the holy fathers, ſhoulde be broken and but in vaine. Further, when as God had commaunded that the Tabernacle and the ceremonies, ſhould be framed after the heauenly patterne, it foloweth that the ſacrifices and all the rites of the temple, if they had not their truthe elſe where, ſhould be as a vaine and fruteleſſe play. And this argument doeth the Apoſtle handle in many woordes, in the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes. For holding that principle, that the viſible ceremonies of the lawe were ſhadowes of ſpirituall things, he teacheth that Chriſte is to be ſoughte in the whole prieſthoode of the lawe, in the ſacrifices and in the forme of the Sanctuarie. Bucer alſo otherwhere doeth wiſely diuine, that in that obſcuritie there was a certaine kinde of interpreatinge the Scripture in vſe amongſt the Iewes, which the fathers deliuered vnto them by hand. But I, leaſt that I ſhould follow vncertainties, am contented with that naturall and ſimple maner, which is euery where to be founde amongeſt the Prophets, who were the moſt apt interpreaters of the lawe.

Chriſte therefore is rightly collected out of the lawe, if wee conſider that the couenaunt which Chriſte made with the fathers, was made by the helpe of a Mediator: The Sanctuarie wherein God teſtified the preſence of his grace, was conſecrated with bloude: The lawe it ſelfe wyth their promiſes, was confirmed with the ſprinkeling of bloud: One prieſt was choſen oute of all the people, who ſhoulde preſent himſelfe in the name of them all, in the ſight of God, not as any mortall man, but in a holy habite: menne had there no hope of their reconciliation with God, but by offering vp of a ſacrifice. Furthermore, very notable is that propheſie of the perpetuitye of the kingdome in the tribe of Iuda. But the Prophets themſelues (as we haue declared) haue more plainly deſcribed the Mediator, yet they themſelues had their firſt knowledge from Moſes: for they had no other office enioyned them, but that they ſhoulde renew the memory of the couenant, more plainly ſhew the ſpiritual worſhip of God, eſtabliſh the hope of ſaluation in the Mediatour: and alſo, that they might the more euidently declare, the meane of the reconciliation. But becauſe it pleaſed God to defer the full reuelation vnto the comming of his Sonne, it was not a ſuperfluous interpretation.

28. And they drewe neare vnto the towne. There is no reaſon why ſome interpreaters ſhould imagine any other place then Emaus. For the iourney was not ſo long, that they ſhoulde reſt in a nearer lodging. VVe knowe that ſeuen miles (though a manne for the recreation of his minde ſhould walke but ſoftly) are gone at the moſt in foure houres. Therfore I dout not but that Chriſt went forwarde euen to Emaus. Nowe, where it is demaunded whether he coulde diſſemble, who is the eternall truthe of God: I doe anſweare that the Sonne of GOD was not bounde by thys lawe, that he ſhoulde make all his councels knowen. Yet becauſe that ſimulation is a kinde of lying, the knotte is not yet vnloſed: eſpecially, ſith that very many doe drawe this example to a libertye for lyinge. But I doe anſweare, Chriſt without lying fained as it is here ſaide in like maner as he ſhewed himſelfe to be a trauailer: for the reaſon of them both is like. Auguſtines anſweare is ſomewhat more ſubtile, lib. 2. ad Conſentium, cap. 13. Alſo in his booke of queſtions vpon the Goſpels, chap. 51. For hee woulde haue this faining accounted amongeſt the Tropes and Figures, then, amongeſt the Parables and Morall hyſtories. But this one thynge doeth ſatiſfie me, as Chriſte for a time couered the eyes of them wyth whome he ſpake, that he ſhewing himſelfe as in the perſon of a ſtraunger, they might accounte him as a common gueſt: ſo the purpoſe of going further, which for that time he pretended, was not a fainінge of an other matter, then that which in deede he was about to doe, but becauſe that he woulde not diſcouer the maner of his departure: for no manne will deny but that he was then to goe further, for he was then ſeparated from the company of men. So he deceiued not his diſciples by this faining, but held them ſomewhile in ſuſpence, vntill the ful time of his manifeſtation were come. VVherefore they doe deale too preposterouſlye, who do make him to be their patrone for lying, and by his example we haue no more colour to diſſemble in any thinge, then to imitate his diuine power in cloſing the eyes of them which ſee. VVherefore there is no ſafer a way, then to holde the preſcript rule of ſpeakinge truely and ſimplie. Not that the Lorde at any time diſobeyed his fathers lawe, but he without bindinge himſelfe to the literall prieſt performed the ſimple meaning of the lawe, and the weakeneſſe of our ſenſes doe neede an other bridle.

30. Hee tooke breade. Auguſtine and diuers others with him, thoughte that Chriſt tooke not the bread which he reached as to be an ordinarie bread to be eaten, but for an holy ſigne of his body. And this is plauſible to be ſpoken, that the Lord ſhoulde be then knowen in the ſpirituall glaſſe of the ſupper: for the diſciples looking vppon him with corporall eyes, knewe him not. But becauſe this conieƈture hath no probable token for the proofe of it, I doe rather take Lukes woordes more ſimply, that Chriſt taking bread in his hands, after his maner he gaue thankes. And it appeareth that he vſed a ſpecial order of prayer, to the which he knew that his diſciples had beene familiarly accuſtomed, that they by this note being admoniſhed, might ſtirre vp their ſenſes. In the meane ſeaſon lette vs learne by the maſters example, ſo ofte as wee doe eate breade, to giue thankes to him who is the authour of life, for that putteth a difference betweene vs and prophane men.

	13. And they went & tolde it to the remnant, but they beleeued them not.	31. Then their eyes were opened, and they knewe him: but he was taken out of their ſight.
		32. And they ſayd betweene themſelues: Did not our hearts burne within vs, while he talked with vs by the waye, and when hee opened to vs the Scriptures?
	14. Finally, he appeared vnto the eleuen as they ſate togither, and repreoued thē	33. And they roſe vp the ſame houre, and returned to Hieruſalem, and founde the eleuen gathered togither, and them that were with them,
		34. VVhich ſayde: The Lord is riſen in deede, and hath appeared to Symon.
		35. Then they tolde what things were done in the way, and how he was knowen of them in breaking of breade.

of their vnbeliefe & hardneſſe of heart, becauſe they beleeued not them whiche had ſeene him.

36. And as they ſpake theſe things, Ieſus himſelfe ſtoode in the middes of them, and ſayde vnto them: Peace be to you.

37. But they were abaſhed and afraide, ſuppoſinge that they had ſeene a ſpirite.

38. Then he ſayd vnto them: why are ye troubled? and wherefore do doubts ariſe in your hearts?

39. Beholde my handes and my feete, for it is I my ſelfe: handle mee and ſee, for a ſpirite hath not fleſhe and bones, as yee ſee me haue.

40. And when he had thus ſpoken, he ſhewed them his handes and feete.

31. And their eyes were opened. By theſe woordes we are taught that there was no Metamorphoſis in Chriſt, that he ſhoulde daſell mens eyes with varietie of ſhapes: (according as the Poets do imagine their Proteus) but the fault was rather in the eyes of them which loked, becauſe they were holdē. As ſhortly after he vaniſhed not away from before the ſame eyes, becauſe that his body was of it ſelf inuiſible, but becauſe that God withdrawing his force, their ſight was dulled. And it is no maruel, that chriſt ſhould aſſoone as he was knowen, ſodainly vaniſh away: for it was nothing needefull that he ſhould be ſeene any longer, leaſt that they (as of themſelues they were too much bent to the earth) ſhuld deſire to draw him againe to an earthly life. Therfore ſo farre as was neceſſary to teſtifie the reſurrectiō, he reuealed himſelfe to be ſeene: and by his ſodaine departure he taught, that he ſhoulde be ſoughte otherwhere then in the world: for the aſcending into heauen, was the fulfilling of the new life.

32. Did not our heart. The knowledge of Chriſt ſo wrought, that the diſciples had a liuely feeling of that ſecreat and hidden grace of the ſpirite, wherwith they wer before endued. For god ofttimes ſo worketh in his, that for a time they know not the force of the ſpirite (whereof they are not yet void) or at the leaſt ſo as they cannot diſtinctly know the ſame: but they haue only a feeling of it by a ſecreat inſtincte. So the diſciples had before conceiued a zeale but without feeling which they doe nowe remember: now ſince that Chriſt is made known vnto them, they do at the length begin to conſider that grace which they had before, wythout taſt of the ſame, & they do perceiue that they had beene very blockiſh. For they do reproue thēſelues of ſlouth, as if they ſhould ſay: How came it to paſſe that we knew him not while he talked with vs? for when he pierced into our hearts, we ſhould haue marked who it had beene. But they do not ſimply by this naked ſigne gather that he was chriſt, becauſe that his ſpeach was effectual to enflame their minds, but becauſe they do giue vnto him the honor, that while he ſpake with his mouth, their harts alſo burnt within them through the heat of the ſpirit. Paul verely reioyceth, 2. Cor. 3. 6. that the miniſtery of the ſpirite was giuen vnto him, & the ſcripture doth oft times adorn the miniſters of the word with theſe titles, that they do conuert the harts, lighten the mindes, renue men that they may become pure and holy ſacrifices: but then it doeth not declare what they ſhall doe by their owne power, but rather what the Lorde ſhall woorke by them. But both theſe are to be founde togither in one Chriſt, to vtter the outward voyce, and effectually to frame the heartes to obedience of faith. And it is not to be doubted, but þ he then wrought a ſinguler woorke in the heartes of them two, that they at the lengthe might feele a diuine heat inſpired into them by him while he ſpake. For though the woorde of God is alwayes fire, yet the firye force did then by a peculiar and vnwoonted maner ſhewe it ſelfe in Chriſtes ſpeache, which was an euident teſtimonie of his diuine power. For it is he alone which baptiſeth with the holy Ghoſt and fire, Luke 3.16. Yet lette vs remember that this is the lawful frute of the heauenly doctrine, who ſoeuer is the miniſter of the ſame, to kindle the fire of the ſpirite in the hearts, which may both boyle, and purge out, yea, and burne oute the affections of the fleſhe, and ſhall truely ſtirre vppe a feruent loue of God, and carye vppe menne wholely into heauen, as it were in the flame of the ſame.

33. And they aroſe the ſame houre. The circumſtaunce of the time, and the diſtance of the places, doe ſhewe what an earneſt deſire theſe two menne hadde to carye this meſſage to their fellowe diſciples. Sith that it was in the eueninge that they entred into their lodging, it is probable that it was darke night before they knewe that it was the Lorde: it was troubleſome to trauaile three houres when it was late in the night: yet they do preſently ariſe, and runne with ſpeede to Hieruſalem. And certainly if they hadde come but the next day, their ſlackneſſe had beene ſuſpected: but nowe, when they hadde rather to defraude themſelues of their nightly reſt, then not to make the Apoſtles pertakers of theyr ioye with ſpeede, their haſte yeelded credite to that which they tolde. Nowe, when Luke ſayeth that they aroſe the ſame houre, it is to bee ſuppoſed that they came about midnight to the diſciples. And as the ſame Luke doeth witneſſe, they were then talking amongeſt themſelues. Heereby therefore may their carefulneſſe and earneſt deſire bee knowen, in that they paſſed almoſt the night waking, and they ceaſed not to make thorowe inquirie, vntill the reſurrection of Chriſte ſhoulde by many teſtimonies be more fully knowen.

34. VVhich ſayde, the Lorde is riſen. Luke in theſe woordes ſheweth that they which brought this gladde newes to the Apoſtles, for the confirming of their mindes, were lykewiſe enformed of another viſion. And it is not to be doubted, but that this reward of mutuall confirmation, was beſtowed vppon them from God, as a recompence of their godlye diligence. Alſo it may be gathered by the circumſtance of the time: that after Peter hadde retourned from the ſepulchre, hee was woonderfull carefull, vntill that Chriſte reuealed himſelfe vnto him: and therefore, the ſame daye that hee hadde viſited the ſepulchre, hee obtained his requeſt.

Nowe, it is not to be doubted, but that the gratulation amongeſt the eleuen, was for thys, becauſe the Lorde hadde appeared to Symon. But thys ſeemeth not to agree wyth Markes woordes, who ſayeth that theſe two were not beleeued of the eleuen. For howe coulde it be, that they refuſinge theſe newe witneſſes, ſhoulde wauer in their doubtinge, which were already certaine? For, by ſaying that he was riſen in deede, they do graunt that the matter is out of controuerſie.

Firſt,

Firſt, I doe anſweare that in the general ſpeache is vſed the figure Synecdoche, becauſe that ſome of them were harder, or leſſe apt, & Thomas was more obſtinate then all the reſt. Alſo, we doe eaſily gather, that they were ſo perſwaded, as men amazed doe vſe, who haue not quietlye meditated the matter: and we knowe that ſuche doe thereby fall into diuers doubtes. How ſoeuer it was, it appeareth by Luke, that the greater part of them being in that feare, as in an exſtaſie, did not onely willingly embrace that which was ſayd: but they ſtriued againſt their owne diſtruſt. For by this clauſe in deede, they do take away from them al occaſion of doubting. And a little after we ſhall ſee that they fell agayne, and the third time through admiration to their wauerings.

36. Ieſus himſelfe ſtoode in the middeſt of them. VVhere Iohn reporteth the ſame hyſtorie at large, he differeth in ſome certaine circumſtances: and Marke noteth the ſame ſomewhat otherwiſe. But as concerning Iohn, ſith he onely gathereth thoſe things which were omitted by Luke, they two may be eaſily reconciled. And truelye, there is no diuerſitye in the ſumme of the matter, except any man woulde mooue a controuerſie about the time. For there it is ſayd that Ieſus entred in, when it was euening, but by the hyſtorie ſet down by Luke, it appeareth that it was late in the night when he appeared: namely, when the diſciples were returned from Emaus. But I doe not thinke that the time of the euening is to be preciſely vrged: but that rather which is ſayd, may aptly and commodiouſly be applied to the late time of the night, for that when the Apoſtles after the euening, when it was night, had ſhut the dores and kept themſelues ſecreatly within the houſe, the Chriſt came vnto them. Further, Iohn doeth not note the firſt beginning of the night, but ſimply noteth that the day being paſſed, and after the ſunne was ſet, yea, and about midnight, Chriſt came vnlooked for amongeſt his diſciples. Yet the queſtion ariſeth of an other matter, for Marke and Luke doe report that the eleuen were gathered togither when Chriſte appeared vnto them, but Iohn ſayeth that Thomas was then abſent. But it is no abſurditie that the number of eleuen is put for the apoſtles thẽſelues, though one was away from the company. And wee ſayde euen nowe, and the matter it ſelfe declareth, that Iohn doth more diſtinctly ſette downe the particular poyntes, becauſe that his purpoſe was to report thoſe thinges which were omitted by others. Alſo, it is out of doubt that it is one and the ſame hyſtorie which was ſette downe by the three, ſith Iohn doeth expreſly declare, that the diſciples ſawe Chriſte onely twiſe at Hieruſalem, before they went into Galile: for he ſayeth that the third time hee appeared to them at the ſea of Tyberias. And he had noted two viſions before: namely this, which befell the next morrowe after the reſurrection, and the other which followed eight dayes after, thoughe if any had rather to expounde it of the ſecond, which is in Marke, I doe not greatly ſtande againſt it. Nowe I doe retourne to Lukes woordes. He doeth not ſaye, that Chriſte by his diuine power opened for himſelfe the doores which were ſhutte, but yet by the woorde ſtandinge, he noteth ſome ſuche matter. For how could the Lord ſodainly in the night, ſtand in the midſt of them, except that he had entred in wonderfully? But the ſame fourme of ſalutation is ſette downe by both, Peace be to you: whereby the Hebrewes do ſignify, that he wiſheth vnto them glad and proſperous ſucceſſe.

37. But they were afraide. Iohn maketh no mention of this feare: but ſith that he alſo ſayth that Chriſt ſhewed his hands and ſide to the diſciples, it may be ſuppoſed that he omitted ſomewhat. Neither is it an vnwonted thing amongſt the Euangeliſts, while they ſtudy to be compēdious, to touch only ſome part. Further, we do learne by Luke that they were ſo amaſed with the ſtrangeneſſe of the ſight, that they durſt not beleeue their owne eyes. A little before they had made their accounte that the Lorde was riſen, and they aſſuredly ſpake as of a matter well knowen vnto them: now, when they doe beholde him with their eyes, their ſenſes are ſo ſhaken with admiration, that they imagined him to be a ſpirit. And though this errour was not without fault, which came of their infirmitie, yet they had not ſo forgotten themſelues, as that they ſhould be afraid of deluſions: but though they thought that they were not mocked, yet they do rather incline to this, that the image of the reſurrection was propoſed to them in a viſion by a ſpirite, then that Chriſt himſelfe ſhuld be preſent a liue, who euen now of late was dead vpon the croſſe. So they ſuſpected it not to be a deceitfull viſion, as if it had been a vaine Ghoſt: but being afraid, they only thought that they had beene ſhewed by a ſpirite, that which they ſaw in deede.

38. Why are yee troubled? By theſe woordes they are warned, that they ſhoulde caſt feare out of their mindes, that by gathering their ſenſes togither, they might iudge as of a matter whereof they had good triall: for ſo long as men are holden with perturbations, they are blind in the manifeſt light. Therefore, to the ende the diſciples may conceiue a ſure knowledge, they are commanded to conſider the matter with ſetled and quiet mindes. In the ſecond parte Chriſte reprooueth the other faulte: namely, that by wauering betweene diuers thoughts, they hindred them ſelues. And hee ſayeth that doubtes doe ariſe, ſignifying that the knowledge of the truthe is therefore choaked in them, that ſeeing they ſhoulde not ſee, becauſe they doe not ſuppreſſe the peruerſe imaginations: but rather by giuing them libertye, they giue them the preheminence. And truely we doe prooue by experience, that this is too true: euen as the cloudes if the skie be cleare in the morning, being caried vppe on high, do darken the cleare light of the Sunne: ſo while we doe permit our owne reaſons with too muche libertie to ariſe againſt the woorde of God, that which was euident to vs before, is taken out of our ſight. It is mete when there appeareth any ſhewe of abſurditie, by ſifting the reaſons on either ſide to make ſearch: and it cannot otherwiſe be, but that our mindes in doutfull matters ſhould be caried hether and thether: but the meane muſt be holden in ſobrietie, leaſt that fleſh ſhoulde lift vppe it ſelfe higher then is meete, and ſhoulde ſend foorth their thoughts farre againſt the heauen.

39. See my handes. He maketh their corporall ſenſes witneſſes, leaſt they ſhoulde thinke that he ſetteth a ſhadowe before them in ſteade of a body. And firſt, he diſtinguiſheth a corporall man from a ſpirite, as if hee ſhould ſay: Sight and feeling ſhall prooue me to be the manne in deede, which before was conuerſant with you: for I am cloathed with the ſame fleſh which was crucified, and as yet it beareth the markes. Further, ſith Chriſt ſayeth that his body is palpable, and compacte of ſounde bones, and by theſe notes, diſtinguiſheth the ſame from a ſpirite: this place is aptly and truely alleaged by our men, to the refellinge of the groſſe er-

rour of tranſubſtantiation of breade into the body, or of the locall preſence of the body, which prepoſterous menne doe imagine to be in the holy ſupper. For they would haue the body of Chriſt to be there, where there appeareth to be no ſigne of the body. But by this meanes it ſhould followe, that he hadde chaunged his owne nature, that he ſhoulde ceaſe to be that which he was, and wherby it was prooued to be the very body by Chriſte himſelfe. If they doe except againſt this, that his ſide was then pearced, and his feete boared through with the woundes of the nailes, and ſo alſo his handes, but that Chriſt is now whole and ſounde in heauen: this cauill is quickly anſweared. For the queſtion is not onely in what ſhape he appeared, but what he ſpeaketh of the true nature of his fleſh. And he doth attribute this as proper to him, that he may be felt, that he may differ from a ſpirite. Therefore alſo at this day it is neceſſary that this difference ſhoulde remaine betweene the fleſh and the ſpirit: which by Chriſtes woordes was appoynted, as it may be gathered to be for euer. And of the woundes this muſt be accounted, that by thys leſſon he teacheth all vs, that Chriſte rather roſe for vs then for himſelfe, when as he being the conquerour of death, and endewed with the bleſſed and celeſtial immortalitie, yet for their ſakes which are his, he would for a time beare the markes of the croſſe. This truely was a wonderfull fauour towards the diſciples, that he hadde rather want ſomwhat himſelfe of the perfecte glory of the reſurrection, then that they ſhoulde bee defrauded of ſuche a helpe for their faith. But it is a fooliſh and an olde wiues fantaſie to imagine, that he ſhould yet remaine ſo wounded, when he ſhall come iudge of the worlde.

MARKE. 14. Hee appeared vnto the eleuen as they ſate togither. I do thinke that the participle anakeimenois, is not heere vſed for ſittinge downe at meate, (as ſome doe tranſlate it) but for ſitting together: and this is not done without reaſon: if this yet be agreed vppon, to be the firſte viſion which is heere deſcribed: For it was no time to ſuppe about midnighte. Alſo, if the table hadde beene ready prepared, it ſhoulde not agree wyth that whyche Luke ſayeth a little after, that Chriſte demaunded whether they hadde anye meate to eate. And it is a phraſe vſed in Hebrewe, to ſitte downe for to reſt in ſome place. And the reproofe whyche followeth rather, belongeth to the firſt viſion then to the ſeconde: for (as Iohn witneſſeth) the diſciples reioyced when they hadde ſeene the Lorde the morrowe after the Paſſeouer, their vnbeliefe was then reproued. That ſeemeth to be too muche reſtrained that many do reſtraine theſe words of Marke to Thomas onely. Therefore I hadde rather to expounde it ſimplie, that Chriſte when hee firſte appeared to the Apoſtles, blamed them, becauſe they beleeued not them whiche hadde beene eye witneſſes of his reſurrection.

Thoughe the hardneſſe of heart is not condemned in this alone, that they gaue no credite to menne, but becauſe they beinge conuicted with the ſucceſſe of the matter it ſelfe, they woulde not ſo yet accepte the teſtimonie of the Lorde. Therefore ſith Peter and Marye, Cleopas and his fellowe, were not the firſt witneſſes of the reſurrection, but onely ſubſcribed to Chriſtes wordes, it followeth that the reſt of the Apoſtles did iniurie to the Lorde, becauſe they beleeued not his woordes, whiche yet were nowe prooued true by their effecte.

VVherefore their hardneſſe of heart is worthily reprooued, becauſe that a corrupt obſtinacie was added to their ſlouthfulneſſe, as if that of ſette purpoſe they ſhould deſire to ſuppreſſe that which appeared to be true, not that their purpoſe was to extinguiſh the glory of their maiſter, or to reprooue him of vanitie, but becauſe that their amaſednesſe hindered them from yeelding themſelues to be taught. To be ſhort, heere is not a wilfull peruerſeneſſe condemned (as it was ſayde before) but a blinde ſlouthfulneſſe, which ſometime hardneth men, which otherwiſe are neither wicked nor rebellious.

Mathewe.	Marke.	Luke 24.
		41. And while they yet beleeued not for ioy, and wondered, he ſayde vnto them: Haue yee heere any meate?
		42. And they gaue him a piece of broyled fiſhe, and of an honie combe.
		43. And he tooke it, and did eate before them.
		44. And he ſayd vnto them: Theſe are the words whiche I ſpake vnto you, while I was yet with you, that all muſt be fulfilled, which are wrytten of me in the lawe of Moſes, and in the Prophets, and in the Pſalmes.
		45. Then opened he their vnderſtanding, that they might vnderſtand the ſcriptures,
		46. And ſayd vnto them: Thus it is wrytten, and thus it behoued Chriſt to ſuffer, and to riſe againe from the dead the third day.
		47. And that repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes ſhould be preached in his name among all nations, beginning firſt at Hieruſalem.
		48. Nowe, ye are witneſſes of theſe things.
		49. And beholde, I will ſende the promiſſe of my father vppon you: but tary yee in the citie of Hieruſalem, vntill yee be endewed with power from on hie.

41. VVhile they yet beleeued not. This place alſo ſheweth that it was not of purpoſe that they beleeued not, as they whiche doe purpoſe in theyr minde not to beleeue: but ſith their will was earneſtly bent to beleeue, the vehemencie of their affection helde them ſo bounde, that they could not be at reſt. For certainly, the ioy whereof Luke maketh mention aroſe of no other cauſe but of faith: and yet it was a hinderance that their faith could not gette the victorie. Therefore lette vs note howe ſuſpitious we ſhould be of the vehemencie of our affections, which though it ſhould ariſe of good beginnings, yet it carieth vs as ouerthrowne out of the right way. VVe are alſo admoniſhed how diligently we ſhuld ſtriue againſt the hinderances of faith, ſith the ioy conceiued of the preſence of Chriſt, was a cauſe of the Apoſtles incredulitie. And againe we do perceiue how louingly and kindely Chriſte vſeth the infirmitie of his, who refuſeth refuſeth not to holde them vppe with a newe ſupply, which were ready to fall. And though he hauing obtained the newneſſe of the heauenly life, had no more neede of meate and drinke then the Angelles, yet hee willingly ſubmitteth himſelfe to the common order of mortall menne. All the courſe of his life had he made himſelfe ſubiecte to the neceſsitye of meat and drinke: now being exempted from the ſame, he eateth meat to this ende, that he may perſwade the diſciples of the reſurrection. So we ſee, that without regarde of himſelfe, he became wholely oures. This is a true and a godly meditation of this hyſtorie, wherein the faithfull may wade profitably, forſaking curious queſtions, as if this corruptible meat was diſgeſted, what nouriſhment ſhoulde the immortall body of Chriſte take thereby: then what became of the excrements. As if that it were not at his pleaſure, who created all things of nothing, to tourne a little meate to nothing, when it ſhould ſo ſeeme good to him. Therfore, as Chriſt taſted in deede of a fiſh and a honey combe, that he might ſhew himſelfe to be man, ſo it is not to be doubted, but that by his diuine power he conſumed that which was not needefull for nouriſhment. So I doubt not but the Angels at Abrahams table as they hadde very bodyes, they eate and dranke in deede: yet I doe not therefore graunt that they vſed meate and drinke for the infirmitie of the fleſh: but ſith that for Abrahams ſake, they were cloathed with the ſhape of man, the Lord granted this alſo to his ſeruaunt, that theſe heauenly gueſtes ſhoulde eate before his tent. Alſo, if we graunt that the bodies which they had taken for a time, after they had done their meſſage were brought to nothing, who will deny but that the ſame became of the meates?

44. Theſe are the woordes. Though by Mathew and Marke it ſhall afterwarde appeare that the ſpeach which was had in Galile, was not vnlike, yet I doe thinke it probable, that Luke doeth nowe reporte that whiche befell the morrowe after the reſurrection. For that which Iohn deliuereth of that daye that hee breathed vppon them, that hee might giue them the holy Ghoſt, doeth agree with Lukes woordes, which ſhal preſently followe, he opened their mindes, that they might vnderſtand the ſcriptures. Chriſte alſo in theſe woordes doeth ſharply reprooue their groſſe and ſlouthfull forgetfulneſſe, in that they being before admoniſhed that he ſhoulde riſe againe, that they ſhoulde be ſo aſtoniſhed, as if neuer any thing had beene ſpoken to them. For his wordes doe ſignifie as much, as if he ſhould ſay: VVhy ſtay you as at a matter ſtraunge and vnlooked for, whiche I haue yet often times ſpoken of before? VVhy doe you not rather remember my wordes? For if you haue hitherto accounted me to be true, this ſhuld haue beene well knowen to you nowe by my doctrine, before it ſhould come to paſſe. In ſumme, Chriſte doeth ſecreatly complaine, that he hauing ſpred his doctrine, his labour was ſpent in vaine amongſt his Apoſtles. Alſo, he doeth more ſharply reproue their ſlouthfulneſſe, when that he ſayeth that he deliuereth not any new thing: but only called to mind what had beene ſpoken by the law and the Prophets, which they ſhould haue knowen from their childehoode. But as they were ignorant of the whole doctrine of godlineſſe, yet there was nothing more abſurde, then not to embrace with ſpeede, that whiche they were perſwaded to proceede from God. For that was holden as a generall rule in that whole nation, that there is no religion, but that which is contained in the lawe and the Prophets. But heere is ſette downe a more full diuiſion, then in other places of the Scripture: for beſides the Lawe and the Prophetes, the Pſalmes are added in the thirde place, whiche, thoughe they may by right be numbered amongeſt the Prophetes, yet they haue ſome thyng proper and diſtincte: yet that two folde diuiſion whiche we haue ſeene other where, doeth notwithſtandinge comprehende the whole Scrypture.

45. Then hee opened their minde. Becauſe the Lorde before executinge the office of a teacher, hadde profited little or nothing amongeſt his diſciples, nowe he beginneth to teache them inwardly by his ſpirit. For the woordes are throwne in vaine into the ayre, vntill the mindes be lightened with the gifte of vnderſtanding. It is true that the woorde of God is like vnto a candle: but it giueth light in darkeneſſe, and amongſt the blinde, vntill the eyes be lightened inwardly by the Lorde, whoſe onely gifte it is to lighten the blinde, Pſalme an hundreth, and ſixe and fortye, and the eight verſe. And heereby it appeareth howe greate the corruption of our nature is, when the light of life offered in the heauenly oracles, doeth profite vs nothing. But nowe, if by vnderſtanding we do not perceiue what ſhoulde be right, howe ſhoulde our will be able to yeelde obedience? Therefore it muſt be granted that we are weake euery way, ſo that the heauenly doctrine is not otherwiſe profitable and effectuall to vs, but ſo farre as the Spirite doeth frame our mindes to vnderſtande the ſame: and our hearts to be ſubiecte to the yoake of the ſame: and therefore, that we may become fitte diſciples to him, it is neceſſary that all truſt in our owne witte being caſt away, to aske for light from heauen, and alſo leauing the foliſh opinion of free will, to deliuer our ſelues to be gouerned by God. And it is not without a cauſe that Paule in the firſt to the Corrinthians the third chapter, and the eighteene verſe, doth commaunde menne to become fooliſh, that they may be wiſe to God: for the light of the ſpirite cannot be extinguiſhed by a worſe darkneſſe, then by truſting to our owne witte. Furthermore, lette the readers obſerue, that the diſciples hadde not the eyes of the minde opened, wherewith without the helpe of God they might diſcerne myſteries: but as they are comprehēded in the Scriptures: and ſo was that fulfilled, which was ſpoken in the hundreth and nineteene Pſalme, and eighteene verſe. Lighten mine eyes, that I may conſider the maruellous woorkes of thy lawe.

For God doeth not giue ſuche a Spirite to his childrenne, as ſhoulde aboliſhe the vſe of his woorde, but rather it ſhould make the ſame frutefull. VVherefore fanaticall menne doe wickedly vnder pretence of reuelations graunt themſelues libertie to deſpice the Scripture. For that which we doe reade heere of the Apoſtles, Chriſt worketh daily in all his, for that by his ſpirit he directeth them to vnderſtand the Scripture, but not to carye them to vaine imaginations. But it is demaunded why Chriſte hadde rather looſe his labour for the ſpace of whole three yeres, then to open their eyes preſently: I doe aunſweare firſt, thoughe the fruite of the labour doeth not ſo ſpeedily appeare, yet it was not vnprofitable: for being lightened a newe they alſo felte the profite of the former mer time. For I doe take that their mindes were opened, not onely that they might afterwardes be apt to learne if any thing ſhoulde be taught them: but that they might call to memorie for their profite the doctrine hearde before in vaine.

Furthermore, that ignorance by the ſpace of three yeares, doeth teache vs a profitable leſſon, that they obtained not this knowledge a newe by any other meanes then by the heauenly light. Adde alſo that Chriſte in this ſhewed an euident token of his Godhead: becauſe that hee was not onely a miniſter of the outwarde voyce, which ſhould giue a ſounde in the eares, but by his ſecreate power he pearſed into the mindes: and ſo he declareth that it belongeth to him alone, which Paule denieth to the doctours of the Churche, 1. Corrinthians 3.7. yet it is to be noted that the Apoſtles were not ſo voyd and depriued of the light of vnderſtanding, but that they knew ſome few principles: but becauſe it was only a ſmal taſte whiche they hadde, this is accounted the beginning of true vnderſtanding, while the vaile being remooued, they doe ſee Chriſte plainely in the Lawe and the Prophets.

46. Hee ſayde vnto them, ſo it is wrytten. By this texte is their quarrel confuted, whiche doe pretende that the outwarde doctrine is but in vaine, if that we haue in vs by nature no power to vnderſtande the ſame. To what ende ſay they, ſhoulde the Lorde ſpeake to the deafe? But we ſee where the Spirite of Chriſte, which is the inwarde maiſter, perfourmeth his parte, that the labour of the miniſter which teacheth, is not loſt. For after that Chriſte endewed his with the Spirite of vnderſtandinge, they doe receiue fruite by that which he teacheth out of the Scriptures. And euen amongeſt the reprobate, thoughe the outwarde voyce vaniſheth awaye as if it were deade, yet notwythſtandinge it maketh them inexcuſable.

And as concerninge the woordes of Chriſt, they are gathered of that principle. It is neceſſary that what ſoeuer is wrytten, ſhoulde be fulfilled, becauſe that God witneſſed nothing by his prophets, but that which hee woulde certainly bring to paſſe. But by the ſame woordes wee are taughte what muſt be chiefly learned out of the law and the Prophets, for ſith Chriſte is the ende and ſoule of the lawe, without him and beſides him, what knowledge ſoeuer is obtained, is vaine and friuolous. Wherefore, as any manne ſhall deſire to profite beſt by the Scripture, lette him bee alwayes bente to thys poynte. And nowe Chriſte doeth heere firſte ſette downe his death and reſurrection, and afterwardes the fruite whiche ſhall come to vs by them bothe. For whence commeth repentaunce and forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, but becauſe oure olde manne is crucified with Chriſte, Romanes 6. and the 6. verſe, that throughe the ſame wee maye ariſe to newneſſe of life: for by the ſacrifice of his death our ſinnes are cleanſed, and our filthineſſe waſhed with bloude, but righteouſneſſe is obtained by the reſurrection.

Therefore hee teacheth that the cauſe and matter of oure ſaluation muſte be ſoughte in hys death and reſurrection: for from thence proceedeth reconciliation with God, and regeneration into a newe and ſpirituall life.

And

And therefore it is plainely expreſſed, that as well forgiueneſſe of ſinnes as repentance, cānot be preached but in his name: For neither can we hope for imputation of righteouſneſſe, neither growe to the deniall of our ſelues, and newneſſe of life, but ſo farre foorth as he is become our righteouſneſſe and ſanctification, 1. Cor. 1. 30. But becauſe we haue entreated at large in another place of this ſumme of the Goſpel, it is better that the readers ſhould thence ſeeke for any thing whiche they haue forgotten, then to be burdened with repetition.

47. Amongſt all nations, beginning firſt. Now doeth Chriſt at the lengthe declare euidently, that which hee had before concealed, that the grace of redemption which he brought, doth generally appertaine to all nations. For though the calling of the Gentiles hadde beene oft foretold by the Prophets, yet the ſame had not beene ſo reuealed, as that the Iewes ſhuld eaſily admit them into the hope of ſaluation with them. Therefore, vntill the reſurrection, Chriſt was not ſuppoſed to be the redeemer, but of that one ſpeciall people. And then was the wall firſt broken downe, that they which before were ſtraungers, and ſcattered abroade, might be gathered into the ſheepefolde of the Lorde. Yet in the meane ſeaſon, leaſt the couenaunt of God might ſeeme to bee in vaine, Chriſte placeth the Iewes in the firſt degree, commaunding that they ſhould firſt beginne at Hieruſalem: for becauſe that God had peculiarly adopted the ſtocke of Abraham, it was meete that it ſhoulde be preferred before the reſt of the worlde. This is the right of the firſt begotten, which Ieremiah aſigneth vnto them, 31. 9. Paule alſo doeth euery where obſerue this order diligently, as to the Epheſ. 2. 17. he ſayeth that Chriſt comming, he preached peace to them, whiche were neare, and then to ſtraungers and them a farre of.

48. Nowe ye are witneſſes. As yet he doeth not ſend them foorth to publiſh the Goſpel, but only declareth for what purpoſe he appoynted, that they might prepare themſelues for that time: and partly by this conſolation he mitigateth their ſorrowe, partly with this ſpurre hee correcteth their ſlouth. When as they being guiltie to themſelues of their late falling away, it was meete for them to haue ſorrowfull hearts, Chriſt here beyonde all hope, beſtoweth vppon them this incredible honour, enioyning them to publiſhe the embaſſage of eternall ſaluation to the whole worlde. By this meanes he doeth not onely reſtore them perfectly: but with the greatneſſe of this new grace, he doeth throughly aboliſh the remembrance of the offence. Yet withall as I ſayde, he pricketh them forwarde, leaſt they ſhoulde be as ſlacke and ſlouthfull to publiſh the faith, whereof they were ordained preachers.

49. Beholde I will ſend the promiſſe. Leaſt the Apoſtles ſhould be afraied of their owne weakeneſſe, hee comforteth them with the hope of newe grace which ſhould come vppon them, as if that he ſhould ſaye: Though you thinke youre ſelues vnmeete for ſo great a burden, yet there is no cauſe why you ſhoulde be diſcouraged: for I will ſupply from heauen that power which I knowe to be wanting in you. Nowe, that he might the better confirme them in this hope, he maketh mention of the holye Ghoſt which was promiſed of the father. For to the ende they myghte readily prepare themſelues to the woorke, God meeting with theyr diſtruſt, had encouraged them with his promiſſe. Now, Chriſt ſubſtituting himhimſelfe in his fathers place, taketh vppon him to perfourme that gifte, wherein he doeth againe chalenge to himſelfe a diuine power. For this is a part of that glory whiche God by othe denied to giue to an other, Iſai 41.8. to endew weake men with heauenly power. Therefore, if it belongeth to Chriſt, it followeth that he is God, who ſpake in the times paſt by the mouth of the Prophet. But though God promiſed a ſpeciall grace to the Apoſtles, and Chriſt beſtowed it: yet this muſt be generally noted, that no mortall man is of himſelfe meete for the preaching of the Goſpell, but ſo farre foorth as God cloathing them with his ſpirite, ſupplieth their nakednes and want. And certainly, as Paule doeth not exclame of the Apoſtles alone, 2. Cor. 2.16. who ſhall be founde meete for theſe things? but he declareth that there is no mortall man meete for ſo great a woorke: ſo it is neceſſary that what ſoeuer miniſters of the Goſpell God ſtirreth vppe, ſhould be endued with the heauenly ſpirite: and therefore it is promiſed to all the teachers of the Churche without exception in euery place.

But tarry ye. Leaſt they ſhulde raſhly run forth to teach before the time, Chriſt cõmandeth them to be quiet & ſilent, vntill ☽ he by his appoyntment ſending them foorth, ſhall vſe their helpe in time conuenient. And this was a profitable triall of their obedience, that they hauing the vnderſtanding of the Scripture, and endewed with the grace of the ſpirite, yet becauſe the Lord forbadde them to ſpeake, they helde their peace as dumbe men: for we do know how deſirouſly they woulde ſhewe themſelues abrode, which thinke that they could doe this with praiſe and admiration. And it may be, that by this delay, Chriſt would puniſhe their ſlouthfulneſſe, becauſe they had not preſently gone the ſame daye into Galile at his commaundement. VVhat ſoeuer the matter were, we are taught that nothing muſt be attempted, but by the calling of the Lord. VVherefore, thoughe they wanted not habilitie to teache publikely, yet let them containe themſelues as priuate men in ſilence, vntil that he ſhal leade them foorth in his hande into the Theater. Further, in that they are commaunded to ſtay at Hieruſalem, it muſt be vnderſtode, after they ſhould returne from out of Galile. For (as we ſhal a little after heare out of Mathew) though he reuealed himſelfe to be ſeene at Hieruſalem, yet he chaunged not that which he had firſt determined of Galile. Therefore the meaning of the woordes is, after he had giuen them their commaundements in the place appoynted, yet his will was that they ſhould as yet remaine ſilent for a time, vntill that he ſhould furniſh them with a newe power.

16. Then the eleuen diſciples went into Galile, into a mountain, wher Ieſus had appoynted them.	15. And he ſayd vnto them: Go yee into all the world, & preache the goſpell to euery creature.
17. And when they ſawe him, they worshipped him: but ſome doubted.	16. He that ſhall beleeue and be baptiſed, ſhalbe ſaued: but he that will not beleeue, ſhalbe damned.
18. And Ieſus came and ſpake vnto them, ſaying: All power is giuen vnto	17. And theſe tokens ſhall followe them that beleeue: In my name.

vnto me in heauen and in earth.
19. Goe therefore and teache all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father, & the Sonne, and the holy Ghost.
20. Teaching them to obserue all thinges, what so euer I haue commaunded you: and loe, I am with you alwaye vntill the ende of the worlde. Amen.

name, they shall cast out deuils, and shal speake with new tongues.
18. And shall take away serpents, and if they shall drinke any deadly thinge, it shal not hurte them, they shall lay their handes on the sicke, and they shall recouer.

16. Then the eleuen diciples. Mathewe passing ouer those things which we haue reported out of the other three, doeth onely teache where the eleuen disciples were sent on the Apostolicall office. For their purpose was not (as we haue often seene before) to prosecute all the particular partes of a hystorie: because it seemed sufficient to the holy Ghost, who directed their stile, by gathering their testimonies togither to sette downe the summe, suche as we doe see. Therefore Mathewe doeth chuse that which especially appertained to vs: namely, that Christ when he appeared to the disciples, also created them Apostles, which shoulde carye the embassage of eternall life into all the coastes of the worlde. But though there is no mention made of the Mount in any other place, yet wee doe gather that this place of Galile was noted to Mary: yet it is maruel that some hauing seene Christe twise already, shoulde as yet doubt of hym. If any manne like to referre this to the first manifestation, there shall be no absurditie therein: for the Euangelistes doe sometime vse to mixe diuers things togither. But it must not seeme absurde, if the remnants of feare shoulde driue some againe to a newe wauering: for we knowe, as oft as Christ appeared, they were afrayd and amased, vntil their mindes were setled by ofte seeing him. VVherefore, the sense in my iudgement, is, that some doubted at the first, vntill Christe approched nearer and more familiarlye vnto them: and when hee was verilye and certainelye knowen, they woorshipped: because that the brightnesse of the diuine glorye was made manifest. And it maye be that the same reason driue them sodainly to doubt, which led them afterward to woorship: for the habite of a seruaunt being laide aside, there then appeared nothinge in him but that which was celestiall.

18. And Iesus came and spake vnto them. It is not to be doubted, but that this comming tooke away all scruple. But before that Mathewe declareth that the disciples hadde the office of teachinge enioyned them, hee sayeth that Christe firste spake of his owne power, and not wythoute cause: for a small authoritie coulde not suffice heere, but it behoueth him to haue a great and a diuine Empire, who commaundeth that lyfe eternall shoulde be promised in his name, that all the worlde shoulde be brought vnder his gouernement, and that the doctrine shoulde be preached, whiche by ouerthrowinge euery highe thinge, shoulde brynge all mankinde vnder. And by this preface Christe doeth not onely stirre vp the disciples to execute their office boldly and freely, but he establisheth the faith of his Gospell to continue in all ages.

For certainly, the Apostles could neuer haue beene perswaded to take ſo harde a matter in hande, excepte they knewe that their reuenger ſate in heauen, who had all power giuen him. For wythout ſuch a fortreſſe, it had beene impoſsible to preuaile any thing. But when they doe heare, that hee whome they doe ſerue, doeth gouerne heauen and earth, they are with this one thing very throughly furniſhed to ouercome all lettes. And as concerning the hearers, if the contemptible eſtate of them which doe preache the Goſpell, doeth weaken or hinder their faith, lette them learne to lifte vppe their eyes to the authour himſelfe, by whoſe power the maieſtie of the Goſpell muſt be eſteemed, and ſo it ſhal come to paſſe, that they ſhall not be ſo bold as to deſpiſe him, ſpeaking by hys miniſters. And he doeth expreſly make himſelfe Lorde and King as well of heauen as of earth, becauſe, that by the preaching of the Goſpell he bringing menne in obedience to him, doeth erecte the throne of his kingdome vppon earth, and regenerating them which are his into a newe life, and calling them to the hope of ſaluation, hee openeth the heauens, that hee may exalt them to the bleſſed immortalitie with the Angels, who before not onely crept belowe in the worlde, but had beene drowned in the bottomleſſe pitte of death. But lette vs remember that Chriſte had alwayes his authoritie with his father, and this was giuen vnto hym in our fleſh, or (that I may ſpeake more plainely) in the perſon of the Mediator. For he gloryeth not of that eternall power which he had before the worlde was created: but of that which he receiued nowe, when hee was ordained the iudge of the worlde. And it is to be noted that thys Empire was not manifeſtly knowen vntill that hee was riſen from the dead: becauſe that then at the length being adorned with the ornamẽts of a mighty king, he ſhewed himſelfe in authoritie. Thither alſo appertaineth that ſaying of Paule to the Phillippians 2.9. Hee humbled hymſelfe, wherefore God hath exalted him, and giuen him a name aboue euery name, &c. And thoughe the ſittinge at the right hande of the father is ſette after his aſcention into heauen, as later in order: yet becauſe the reſurrection and the aſcention into heauen, are things mutually ioyned togither, Chriſte hath good cauſe to ſpeake ſo royally of his power.

19. Goe therefore. Thoughe Marke, after hee hathe declared that Chriſte appeared to the eleuen diſciples, doeth preſently ſet downe the commaundement of preachinge of the Goſpell, yet hee doeth not note it as an action preſentlye done. For we doe gather by the texte in Mathewe, that thys was not done before they went into Galile. But the ſumme is, that by preachinge the Goſpell euerye where, they ſhoulde brynge all nations into the obedience of faith: then, that they ſhould ſeale and confirme their doctrine with the ſeale of the Goſpel. In Mathew they are ſimply commaunded to teache: but Marke ſetteth downe what kinde of doctrine it ſhoulde be: namely, that they ſhould preache the Goſpell.

And ſhortly after is alſo added this reſtrainte, that they ſhould teache them to obſerue what ſoeuer thinges the Lord commaunded. Heereby we learne that the Apoſtleſhippe is not a vaine title of honour, but an office of laboure: and therefore there is nothinge more abſurde, or intollerable, then that theſe masked menne ſhould chalenge this honour, who raininge in idleneſſe, doe reiecte the office of teaching from them.

The

The Pope of Rome and his bande doe proudly boaſt of this ſucceſsion, as if that they ſuſtained the ſame perſon in common with Peter and his colleagues: but in the mean ſeaſon they haue no more care of the doctrine then baudes, or the Prieſts of Bacchus and Venus. But wyth what face I beſeche you, doe they thruſt themſelues into their place, who they heare were created to be preachers of the Goſpell? But thoughe they are not aſhamed to bewray their owne impudencie: yet with all readers of ſounde iudgement this one worde is ſtrang enough to ouerthrow their fantaſticall Hierarchie, that no man can be a ſucceſſour of the Apoſtles: but he which ſerueth Chriſte by preaching of the Goſpell: to be ſhorte, who ſoeuer doeth not performe the dueties of a teacher, doth fallly and wrongfully take the name of a teacher. For this is the Prieſthode of the New teſtament, with the ſpirituall ſworde of the woorde to kill menne for a ſacrifice to God. VVhereof it followeth that they all are degenerate and counterfait ſacrificers, whiche doe not applye the office of teaching.

Teache all nations. Heere Chriſte by taking away the difference, doeth make the Gentiles equall with the Iewes, and doeth generally admitte them both into the fellowſhippe of the couenaunt. Thither alſo appertaineth the woorde Going. For the Prophets vnder the lawe were reſtrained within the boundes of Iuda: but nowe the partition wall being ouerthrowne, the Lorde commaundeth the miniſters of the Goſpell to goe farre abroad for the ſpreading of the doctrine of ſaluation through all the coaſtes of the worlde. For thoughe the dignitye of the firſt borne (as we touched euen nowe) ſhoulde at the firſte remaine amongeſt the Iewes, yet the inheritance of life was common to the Gentiles. So was fulfilled that propheſie of Iſaiah with the like, that Chriſte is giuen to be a light to the Gentiles, that he might bee the ſaluation of God vnto the outmoſt part of the earth, Iſai 49.6. That is Markes meaning by all creatures: for after that peace was preached to them of the houſholde, the ſame meſſage commeth to them alſo whiche are a farre off, and to ſtraungers. Further, howe neceſſary it was that the Apoſtles ſhoulde be plainly admoniſhed of the callinge of the Gentiles, it doeth thereby appeare, that after they hadde receiued the commaundement to goe vnto them, they were greatly afraide, as if they ſhould defile theimſelues & the doctrine, Act. 10.28.

Baptiſing them. Chriſte commaundeth that they ſhoulde be baptized, which ſhoulde giue their name to the Goſpell, and ſhould profeſſe themſelues to be diſciples: partlye, that it might bee a witneſſe vnto them of eternall life before God, partly that it might be an outward ſigne of faith before men. For we knowe that by this ſigne God doeth witneſſe vnto vs the grace of his adoption: for he graffeth vs into the body of his ſonne that he might account vs to be of his flocke, and therefore our ſpirituall waſhing wherewith he reconcileth vs vnto himſelfe, and the new righteouſneſſe are there repreſented. But as God confirmeth his grace vnto vs by this zeale, ſo who ſoeuer doe offer themſelues to baptiſme, they do in like maner binde their faith as it were by giuinge of an obligation. Alſo, ſith the Apoſtles haue theſe dueties expreſlye committed to their charge, togither with the preachinge of the Goſpell, it followeth that there are no other lawfull miniſters of Baptiſme, but they whith doe alſo alſo miniſter doctrine. Therefore, where libertie hath beene graunted to priuate men, and alſo to women to baptiſe, becauſe it is not agreeable to the inſtitution of Chriſt, it was nothing elſe but a meere prophanation. Alſo, where the firſt place is appoynted for doctrine, there is a true differẽce ſet down betwene this myſterie and the adoulterous rites of the Gentiles, wherwith they do enter thẽſelues into their religions: for vntill God by his word ſhal giue life to the earthly elemẽt, it is made no ſacramẽt for vs. As ſuperſtition hath a prepoſterous emulation at all the works of God, ſo foliſh men do frame diuers ſacraments according to their owne pleaſure: but becauſe they want the woorde as the ſoule, they are vaine and toyiſhe ſhadowes. VVherefore let vs note that by the power of the doctrine it commeth to paſſe that the ſignes doe put on a newe nature: ſo as the outwarde waſhing of the fleſh, beginneth to be a ſpirituall pledge of regeneration by the doctrine of the Goſpell goinge before: and this is the right conſecration, in ſteade wherof Popery hath brought in vppon vs magicall exorciſmes. And therefore it is ſayde in Marke. He that ſhall beleeue and be baptiſed, by which woordes Chriſt doeth not onely exclude hypocrites from the hope of ſaluation, who beinge without faith, are onely puffed vp with the outward ſigne: but hee ioyneth baptiſme to the holy bande of doctrine, that this ſhould be nothing elſe, then an addition to that. But becauſe Chriſte commaundeth them to teache before he commaundeth to baptiſe, and willeth that onely beleeuers be receiued to baptiſme, baptiſme ſeemeth not to be rightly miniſtred, except that faith ſhould goe before. And vnder this pretence the Anabaptiſts haue ſtirred much againſt the baptiſme of infants. Yet it is not harde to be anſwered, if any manne ſhall conſider the reaſon of the commaundement. Chriſt commaundeth that the embaſſage of eternall ſaluation ſhould be caryed to all the Gentiles: hee confirmeth the ſame by adding the ſeale of baptiſme. And there is good cauſe why the beleeuing of the woorde is ſette before baptiſme, ſith the Gentiles were altogither ſtraungers from God, and had no fellowſhip with the elect people: For otherwiſe it ſhould haue beene a lying ſigne which ſhould offer forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and the gift of the ſpirite to vnbeleeuers, who as yet were not the members of Chriſt. And we knowe that they are gathered by faith, who were before diſpearſed. Nowe it is demanded vpon what condition God adopted them to be his ſonnes, which before were ſtraungers. It cannot certainly be denied, when hee once accepted them into his fauour, but that hee extendeth the ſame to their children and nephewes. At the comming of Chriſt he ſhewed himſelfe generally to be a father both to the Gentiles and to the Iewes. Therefore it is neceſſary that the promiſſe which was in times paſt made to the Iewes, ſhoulde alſo at this daye be of force amongeſt the Gentiles, I will be thy God and the God of thy ſeede after thee: Gen. 17.7. So wee ſee them, which by faith are entred into the Church of God, to be accounted for the members of Chriſte, and alſo to be called to the enheritance of ſaluation. And yet baptiſme is not by this meanes ſeparated from faith or doctrine: for though yong infants doe not as yet by reaſon of their age take holde of the grace of God by faith, yet God accepting of theyr parents, doeth alſo embrace them. I doe therfore deny it to be raſhly done to baptiſe infants, whereto the Lord doth call them, while he promiſeth them to be their God. In the name of the father. This place doeth teache the full and euident knowledge of God, the which beinge but darkely shadowed foorth vnder the lawe and the Prophets, at the lengthe sprange foorth vnder the kingdome of Christe. The olde fathers neuer durst call God their Father, if they hadde not taken this hope from Christe theyr head: neither were they altogither ignorant of the eternall wisdome of God, which was the fountaine of light and life. It was also one of their confessed principles, that God shewed forth his power in the holy ghost. But at the arising of the gospell, God was much more manifestly shewed vnder the three persons: for the father then reuealed himselfe plainly in the sonne, his liuely and expresse image: and Christ himselfe lighteninge the world by the cleare brightnesse of his spirite, made both him & himselfe to be knowen. But it is not without cause that heere is expresse mention made of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the spirite: for the force of baptisme cannot be apprehended otherwise, then by beginning at the free mercy of the Father, who reconcileth vs vnto himselfe by hys only begotten Sonne: then shall Christ himselfe appeare before vs wyth the sacrifice of his death: and at the length the holy ghost shal also come, by whome he washeth and regenerateth vs: and at the length he maketh vs partakers of all their good giftes. So we do see, that we do not rightly know God, except that our faith do distinctly conceiue three persons in one essence, and that the efficacie and frute of baptisme doth come from thence, that God the Father adopteth vs in his Sonne, and by the Spirit, we being purged from the filthinesse of our flesshe, he refourmeth vs to righteousnesse.

MAR. 16. He that shall beleeue. This promisse was added, that it might allure all mankind to faith: as againe for the terrifying of the vnbeleeuers there followeth a denounced sentence of grieuous destruction. But it is no maruel that saluation is promised to the faithful: for by beleuing in the only begotten sonne of God, they are not only accounted amongst the sonnes of God, but being endued with the righteousnes of his grace, and with the spirit of regeneration, they do possesse the summe of eternal life. Baptisme is ioyned with the faith of the Gospell, that we might know that therein is engraued the marke of our saluation, for if it auailed not to testifie the grace of God, Christ had vnproperly sayd: that they should be saued, which should beleeue, and be baptised. Though it must also be noted, that it is not so necessarily required to saluation, that all they should of necessity peariish, which should not obtaine the same. For it is not ioyned here to faith, as halfe the cause of saluation, but as a testimony. I do graunt that this necessity is laid vpon men, that they should not neglect the signe of the grace of God: but though God for their infirmitye vseth such helps, I deny his grace to be tied vnto them. In this maner we may say that it is not simply necessary, but onely in respecte of our obedience. In the second part, where Christ condemneth them which doe not beleeue, he meaneth the rebellious, who while they do refuse saluation offered, doe draw vpon themselues a more grieuous punishment, and they are not now onely ensnared in the common destruction of mankinde, but they do sustaine the fault of their owne ingratitude.

17. These tokens shall follow them which beleeue. As the Lord had by myracles confirmed the faith of his Gospell, so long as hee was conuersant in the world, so nowe he causeth the same to flourish in the time to come, least the

the diſciples ſhuld thinke ẏ the ſame were tied to his corporall preſence. For it was to great purpoſe that the diuine power of Chriſt ſhuld flouriſt amongſt the faithfull, that it might manifeſtly appeare that he was riſen from the dead, wherby his doctrine might remain & continue, and his name ſhould be immortall. Further, where he furniſheth the faithfull with this gift, it muſt not be drawn to all. For we know that the giftes were diuerſly diſpoſed, that the power of myracles ſhoulde be but in the hands of ſome. But becauſe that which was giuen to a few, was common to the whole church, and the ſignes which one wrought, auailed for the cõfirmation of all, Chriſt doth rightly name the beleuers generally. The meaning therfore is, that the faithful ſhuld be miniſters of the ſame power, he had ben wonderful before in Chriſt, that in his abſence the ſeale of the goſpel might be ẏ more ſure: as in Iohn 14. 12. he promiſeth that they ſhal doe the ſame & greater things. And for the ſetting forth of the glory & deity of Chriſt, it was ſufficient that ſome few of the beleeuers were furniſhed with this power. And though Chriſt doeth not expreſſe whether he wold that this gift ſhuld be but for a time, or remaine for euer in his church: Yet it is more probable that theſe myracles were promiſed but for a time, for the ſetting forth of the goſpel, which was newe & as yet obſcure. And it may be, that for the fault of vnthankfulnes, the world was deprined of this honor: yet I do think that this was the proper end of myracles, that the doctrine of the goſpel ſhould at the beginning wãt no approbation. And we do certainly ſee that the vſe of them ceaſed not long after, or at the leaſt the examples of them were ſo rare, that it may be gathered that they were not like common to all ages. Yet either the prepoſterous couetouſnes or ambition of them which followed after, ſo wrought leaſt they ſhuld be without myracles altogither, that they fained vain myracles for themſelues. And by this meanes there was a gate opened to ſathans falſehodes, that not only falſe ſleights ſhuld ſucceede in the place of truthe, but that vnder pretence of ſignes, the ſimple might be led away from the right faith. And certainly it was meete that curious men: who not content with a lawful allowance, but ſeking after newe myracles, ſhould be deluded by ſuch deceits. This is the reaſon, why Chriſt otherwhere foretold that the kingdom of antichriſt ſhould be ful of lying ſigns, Mat. 24. 24. & that Paul teſtifieth the ſame, 2. The. 2. 9. Wherefore, that myracles may rightly confirme our faith, let our mindes containe themſelues in that ſobriety wherof I ſpake: whereof it alſo followeth, that it is a fooliſh quarrell of theirs, which do obiect that our doctrine wanteth myracles. As if that it were not the ſame whych Chriſt hath moſt ſufficiently ſealed heeretofore. But in this argument I am the ſhorter, becauſe that I haue entreated of it already more fully in ſundry places. MAT. 20. Teaching them to obſerue. By theſe wordes (as I ſaid before) Chriſt ſending foorth his diſciples, doth declare that he doth not wholely reſigne vnto them thoſe things which appertained to him, as if that he wold leaue off to be the maſter of his church: For he diſmiſſeth the apoſtles with this exception, that they ſhoulde not thruſt foorth their owne deuiſes, but that they ſhoulde purely and faithfully diſpence from hand (as they ſay) to hand that which he commanded. And I wiſh that the Pope would ſubmit the power which he chalengeth to himſelf to this rule. For we ſhuld eaſily ſuffer him to be Peter or Pauls ſucceſſor, ſo that he would not raigne tyrannically ouer ſoules.

But ſith he reiecting the gouernment of Chriſt, defileth the church with his owne filthy trifles, it doeth heereby appeare ſufficiently, howe farre he falleth from the Apoſtolicall function. In ſumme, let vs learne that by theſe woordes they are made doctours of the Church, not which doe vtter what ſoeuer they ſhal thinke good, but which ſhall alſo themſelues depend vpon the mouth of this one maiſter, that they may procure diſciples to him, and not vnto themſelues.

Beholde I am with you. Becauſe Chriſt did lay a charge vpon the Apoſtles, which they could not diſcharge, vſing onely the power of man, he doth comfort them with the hope of his helpe from heauen. For before that he promiſeth to be preſent with them, he ſayeth firſt that he is kinge of heauen and of earth, who with his hand & power gouerneth all things. Therefore this pronowne (I) muſt be red as a word of great force: as if he had ſayd, if the Apoſtles would throughly doe their duety, they muſt not looke what they can doe themſelues, but they muſt depende vppon his inuincible power, vnder whoſe directions they do goe to warre. But the maner of his preſence, which the Lorde promiſeth to his, muſt ſpiritually be vnderſtoode: for it is not needefull that he ſhoulde deſcende from heauen to helpe vs, ſith by the grace of his ſpirite, as with a hande ſtretched out from heauen, he may helpe vs. For he, which in reſpecte of his body is a great way diſtant from vs, doeth not onely ſpreade the efficacie of his ſpirite throughe the whole worlde, but doeth alſo verely dwell in vs. Furthermore, it is to be noted, that this was not ſpoken to the Apoſtles only: for the Lorde promiſeth his helpe not to that age only, but vnto the ende of the worlde. Therefore it is as muche, as if hee ſhould haue ſayd, how weake ſoeuer the miniſters of the Goſpel be, and haue want of all thinges, he will be their chiefe captaine, that they may become conquerours ouer all the aſſaults of the world. As plaine experience teacheth at this day, that Chriſt in a ſecreat maner doeth woorke woonderfully: ſo that the Goſpell preuaileth againſt innumerable lets. So much the leſſe is the wickednes of the Popiſhe cleargye to be borne with, while they doe lay this coulour vppon their ſacrilegious tyrannye. They doe ſay that the Church cannot erre which is gouerned by Chriſt. As if that Chriſt, no otherwiſe then as ſome common ſouldiour woulde let out his labour to hire to other captaines: and not rather retaining the authority wholely to himſelfe, teſtifieth that he will be a defender of his doctrine, ſo as his miniſters in him may hope to be conquerours of the whole world.

	19. So after the Lord had ſpoken vnto them, hee was receiued into heauen, and ſate at the right hande of God.	50. Afterward, he led them forth into Bethania, and lifte vppe his handes and bleſſed them.
		51. And it came to paſſe, that as he bleſſed them, he departed from them, & was caried vp into heauen.
	20. And they went forth and preached euery where. And the Lorde wrought with them, and confirmed the woorde with ſignes that followed. Amen.	52. And they worſhipped him, and returned to Ieruſalem with great ioye,
		53. And were continually in the temple, praiſinge and lauding God. Amen

19. So

19. So after the Lorde. Becauſe that Mathewe had royally extolled the kingdome of Chriſt aboue all the worlde, he ſpeaketh no woord of his aſcenſion into heauen. Marke alſo maketh no mention of the place and of the maner: both the which are expreſſed by Luke. For he ſayeth that the diſciples were led out into Bethania, that from the mount of Oliues, (from whence the Lord had come to beare the ignominie of the croſſe) he might aſcend into his celeſtiall throne. And as he would not be ſeene generally of all menne, when he was reſtored to life: ſo he admitted not al to be witneſſes of his reſurrection into heauen, becauſe that he would that this myſterie of the faith ſhoulde rather be knowen by the preaching of the Goſpell, then to be ſeene with eyes. It followeth in Luke, that Chriſte lifting vp his handes on hie, bleſſed the Apoſtles. VVhereby he teacheth that the office of bleſsing, which vnder the lawe had beene committed to the Prieſts, doeth truely and properly belong to him. VVhen men do mutually bleſſe themſelues, that is nothing elſe then to pray for their good: But the reaſon is farre otherwiſe with God, who not onely fauoureth the requeſts, but with his only becke performeth what ſoeuer is to be wiſhed for vs. But ſith that he is the only authour of all bleſſing, yet that his grace might be the more familiar, his will was that the Prieſts in the beginning, ſhuld as mediators bleſſe in his name. So Melchiſedec, Gen. 14. 19. bleſſed Abraham: and in Numerie 6. 23. there is ſet downe a perpetuall law for this matter. To the ſame alſo appertaineth that which is red in the Pſalme 118. 26. VVe doe bleſſe you out of the houſe of the Lord. Furthermore in the 7. chapter to the Hebrewes, the 7. verſe, the Apoſtle ſayeth that it is a ſigne of excellency to bleſſe others. For the leſſe (ſayth he) is bleſſed of the greater. Now, when Chriſt (the true Melchiſedec and the eternall Prieſt) came into the light, it was meete that in him ſhoulde be fulfilled, that whiche was ſhadowed by the legall figures, as Paule alſo teacheth, Epheſ. 1. 3. that we are bleſſed by God the father in him, that we might become rich in all heauenly good things. Therefore he once bleſſed the Apoſtles openly and with a ſolemne rite, to the ende the faithfull might cary themſelues the next way to him, if they deſire to be partakers of the grace of God. In the lifting vp of handes there is an olde ceremonie deſcribed, which we knowe the Prieſts vſed in times paſt.

52. And they woorshipped him. By the woorde woorshipping. Luke doeth firſt declare that the Apoſtles were put out of doubt, becauſe that the maieſtie of Chriſt appeared then on euery ſide, ſo that nowe there coulde be no doubt of his reſurrection. Furthermore, for the ſame cauſe they began to woorſhip him with greater reuerence, then when they enioyed his company vpon the earth. For the worſhip wherof he ſpeaketh now, is not onely as to a maſter or to a Prophet, neither as to one only halfe knowen to be the Meſsias, but it was yeelded as to the king of glorye and iudge of the world. But becauſe that Luke was purpoſed to extend his hyſtorie longer, he only ſayeth briefly what the Apoſtles ſhould doe for ten dayes. But the ſumme is, that throughe the feruencie of ioye they brake out openly into the praiſes of God, and were daily in the temple. Not that they paſſed the nights and the daies there, but becauſe they frequented all the aſſemblies, and were preſent at the appoynted and ſolemne houres to yeelde thankes vnto God. Alſo, this diligence is oppoſed to the feare, which kept them before ſhut vp & hidden in the houſe.

MARKE. 19. And ſate at the right hande of God. I haue in other places declared, what this ſpeache ſhoulde meane: that is, Chriſte is lifted vppe on hye, that he may be aboue Aungels and all creatures: that the Father might gouerne the worlde by his hande: that, to be ſhorte, euery knee might bowe before him. Therefore it is as muche as if hee ſhoulde be called Gods vicare, who ſupplieth his perſonne. VVherefore it is not conuenient that ſome certaine place ſhould be imagined, when as the right hand doeth Metaphorically ſignifie the ſecond power from God. And Marke added this purpoſely: that wee might knowe that Chriſte was not receiued into the heauens, that hee might enioy a bleſſed reſt farre from vs, but that he might gouerne the world for the ſaluation of all the godly.

20. And they went forth. Marke doth briefly touch here thoſe things which Luke doth proſecute hyſtorically in the 2. boke, that the voyce of a ſmal & a baſe company of men thundred forth euen to the vttermoſt ends of the world. For the more incredible the matter was, the more certainly appeared þ myracle of the heauenly power. Al men thought that Chriſt by the death of the croſſe was either vtterly ouerthrown, or ſo ouerwhelmed, that ther ſhuld be no mention of him at any time, but reprochful & deteſtable. The apoſtles whom he had choſen to be his witneſſes, filthily forſaking him, had hidden thẽſelues in the dark: the ignorance & rudenes of them was ſo great, and alſo the contempt ſo great, that they durſt ſcarce ſpeake abrode. VVas there any hope of men vnlearned and of no accoũt, yea, & of runnagates, that by the ſoũd of their mouth they ſhuld bring ſo many diſperſed vnder the Empire of a man crucified? There is therfore great weight in theſe words, that they went forth & preached euery where, which euen now for feare durſt not ſpeake in their ſecreat corner. For ſo vnloked for a conuerſion in a moment could not be done by man. And therfore Marke addeth, The Lord wrought with them, ſignifying that this was the very worke of god. Yet this phraſe of ſpeach doth not make a partition betwene their worke or labor, and the grace of God, as if that they of themſelues could doe any thing: but he meaneth ſimply þ they were holpe of God, becauſe that according to the fleſh they ſhuld haue attẽpted that in vaine, which is yet wrought by them. I graunt that the miniſters of the word are called fellow helpers of God, 1. Cor. 3. 9. in as much as he vſeth their miniſtery: but it is to be noted that ther is no power in them, but that which he giueth them. Further, they do preuail nothing by planting & by watering, except the ſecreat working of the ſpirit do cauſe it to encreaſe. Confirmed the word. Marke here, in my iudgement, doth note a part of that, which he had generally ſet down immediatly before. For the Lord wrought with the by other meanes, leaſt the preaching of his goſpel ſhuld be in vain: but this was a notable teſtimony of his help, that he cõfirmed the ſame by myracles. And this place teacheth to what ende myracles muſte be referred, that it is not lawfull to draw them after peruerſe corruptions, for that they doe ſerue the Goſpell. VVhereof it followeth, that the holy order of God is inuerted, if they be drawne away from the word of God (whereof they are appurtenances) to the adorning of vngodly doctrines, or are drawn to colour eut corrupt worſhippings.

THE holy Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſt, according to Iohn, with the Commentary of M. Iohn Caluine:

Faithfully tranſlated out of Latine into engliſh by Chriſtopher Fetherſtone, ſtudent in Diuinitie.

TO THE RIGHT HONO-

RABLE THE LORD ROBERT DVDLEY, EARLE OF LEYCESTER, BARON OF DENBIGH, Maiſter of the Horſe to the Queenes Maieſtie, Knight of the noble order of the Garter, & one of the Queenes Maieſties moſt honorable priuie Counſel, Chanſelour of the moſt famous Vniuerſitie of Oxford, Chriſtopher Fetherſtone wiſheth encreaſe of ſpirituall giftes, long life, happy dayes, and encreaſe of honour.

IT IS AN OLDE SAYing (Right honourable) and no leſſe true then olde, that ſaleable wines neede no iuie buſh: which prouerb importeth thus much, that thinges which are of thē ſelues good and commendable haue not anye, at leaſt no great neede of commendation. If therefore I ſhouldee with fine filed phraſes, with gaye geaſon woordes, with ſtraunge examples, and notable hyſtories compound ſome long prologue and tedious Preface, in commendation of this moſt excellent work and Commentarie of that famous member, and faithfull Doctour of Gods Church, Maiſter Iohn Caluine, I might cauſe your Honour to ſuſpect the ſondneſſe thereof: I my ſelfe ſhould ſeeme to doubte of the goodneſſe thereof: and finally nally, miniſter occaſion to many to condemne me of folly. Omitting therefore that which is needleſſe, I diſcend vnto that which is needefull: to wit, to excuſe my ſelfe of arrogancie, wherof ſome may accuſe me in that I dare preſume to dedicate vnto your honour, this my tranſlation, vnto whom I am altogether vnknowen. The loade ſtone as men ſay, writers do teſtifie, and experience doth teach, hath in it ſelfe ſuch power, force and vertue, that it draweth iron vnto it, though it be farre diſtant: right ſo, vertue doth drawe men vnto it, and the reporte thereof, cauſeth men to loue thoſe whom they haue not ſeene, & to reuerence thoſe of whō they haue only heard. Which thing ſithence it is ſo, there is no cauſe why I ſhoulde either bee accuſed of arrogancie, or condemned of impudencie, for approching ſo boldly vnto your honour, and for ſuffering this my tranſlation to appear in your name. For your friendes confeſſe, and your foes cannot iuſtly denie that God hath placed in your noble breſt greate aboundance of moſt heroicall vertues. I omit to ſpeake of that rare report of your vnfeigned religion which reſoundeth euery where, and redoundeth to your prayſe. I ſhould be tedious, if I ſhould ſet downe particulerly the moſt vndoubted teſtimonies of your faithfulneſſe toward your dread Soueraigne: I ſhoulde ſeeme to flatter if I ſhould extoll that godly magnanimitie wherewith the Lord hath endued you to maintaine his truth, to defend the Realm, to ſubdue thoſe proud aſpiring papiſts. That great and earneſt care which your honour hath alwaies had, and euen now hath to ſupport the poore miniſters of the word, and goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt in Gods cauſe, & in good cauſes, hath in it ſelfe ſufficient force, to enforce not only mee, but all thankfull heartes by word and writing to bewray all thankfulneſſe & dutifulneſſe towards your good honor. As this, ſo that ſinguler liberalitie vſed at all times by your Lordſhip towards my friends, hath cauſed me in dedicating of this booke to your honour, to teſtifie ſome part of my thankfull minde in their behalfe And heere I am to craue pardon of you, whiche I hope I ſhall eaſily obtaine, for that I haue not behaued my ſelfe finely as I might, though faithfully as I ought in this my worke. And thus fearing prolixitie, I conclude, praying vnto the Lorde God of heauen and earth, that King of Kinges, and Lorde of Lordes, that he will graunt vnto your honour, and to the reſt (whom he hath placed in the like degree of dignitie) his holy ſpirite, that ſpirite of wiſdome and vnderſtanding, that you may thereby be ſo directed, that all your thoughts, woordes, and workes, may tend to the ſetting foorth of Gods glory, the maintenance of true religion, the preſeruation of the Realme. So ſhall England haue wealth, be voide of woe, enioy ſolace, be free from ſorrow, poſſeſſe plentie, not taſt of pouertie, inherite pleaſure, and not ſee paine. Whiche God graunt.

Your Honours moſt humble and obedient,

Chriſtopher Fetherſtone.

To the Reader.

Eing instantly requested (Gentle Reader) by my godlie zealous friendes to enterprice the translating of this most learned Commentarie of M. Iohn Caluine, and being perswaded thereunto by manie godlie reasons, whereof Gods glory & the profite of his Church should bee the chiefe, I coulde not, nor woulde not refuse to take that charge vpon mee, vnlesse I should haue forgotten my dutie towardes God his Churche, and my friendes: and now for asmuch (Gentle Reader) as the principall recompence of my paines shall bee that profite whiche thou shalt reape by the reading of this my translation, I beseech thee refuse not to take some paines in reading the same. I haue not stuft it full of strange wordes deriued of the Latin, which might no lesse molest thee, then if they continued Latin as they were. I haue not racked the phrases to make them runne smoothly, to please daintie eares, and so digressed from the truth and meaning of the authour: but, so much as possible I could, I haue translated worde for worde, whiche the learned by conference shall wel perceiue. Long time haue the godly desired to haue this worke published in the English tongue, & seeing they haue their desire now, my request vnto thē is, to accept of my paines herein, I dare not good Reader presume so farre vppon mine owne skill, as to say that there is no faultes committed heerein, but I am earnestly to desire thee rather courteously to amend them, then curiously to condemne me for them. And thus trusting to thy curtisie, I committe thee to the tuition of the Almightie, who so direct thee by his spirite, that by reading thou maiest profite.

Thine in the Lorde, Christopher Fetherstone.

The Preface.

¶ To the right honorable Lordes, the Syndiques and Senate of Geneua, his right reuerende Lordes, Iohn Caluine wiſheth from the Lorde, the ſpirit of wiſdome and ſtrength, and proſperous ſucceſſe of gouernement.

AS often as I call to mynde that ſaying of Chriſte, wherin he maketh ſo great accoũt of that dutie of humanitie which is beſtowed vpon the gathering together of ſtrangers, that he maketh account of it as done to him: I do therewithall remember vnto how great honour hee hath vouchſafed to promote you, who hath made your Citie a place not for one or a few to dwell in, but a common Inne for his Church to lodge in, Hoſpitalitie hath not only been cõmended amongſt the Heathen, but it hath alſo bin accounted one of the chiefeſt vertues: and therfore in whomſoeuer they wold condemne extreeme barbariſme and manner altogether vnciuill, they called them axenous, or men which were not giuen to hoſpitalitie. But farre more excellent is your praiſe, bicauſe the Lord hath appointed you in theſe troubleſome & miſerable times, to be thoſe vnto whoſe tuition the godly might cõmit thẽſelues, & vnder whoſe feathers the innocent might be ſhrouded, whom the tyrannie of Antichriſt, being no leſſe ſauage then ſacriligious, doth chaſe & driue away out of their own countries & natiue ſoyle. And this is not all, but he hath alſo dedicated an holy houſe amongeſt you vnto his owne name, where he may be worſhipped ſincerely. Whoſoeuer he be that indeuoureth either publikelie to cut off, or priuilie to take away the leaſt part of theſe two, he doth not only goe about to diſfigure your Citie beeing ſpoyled of her principal ornaments, but alſo he malicioufly enuieth the helth therof. For althogh thoſe godly good turnes which are here done vnto Chriſt & his diſpearſed members doe cauſe the wicked like dogs to bark againſt you, yet ought this one recõpence to ſuffice you ꝑ the angels frõ heauen & the childrẽ of God out of all partes of the worlde doe bleſſe you: ſo that you may freely deſpiſe their rotten railing, who make no more conſcience, neither are more aſhamed to ſpue out whatſoeuer, againſt God himſelf, thẽ againſt you: & which, going about to ſlander you, doe begin firſt to blaſpheme God. Althogh this ſelf ſame occaſion doth inflame ꝑ hatred of many againſt you, yet ought you to be no whit afraid therfore, ſo long as he wil aſſiſt you againſt their fury, who hath promiſed ꝑ he will faithfully keepe thoſe cities, wherin the doctrine of his goſpel is preached, and any reſting place is prepared for thoſe godlymẽ whõ the world cãnot away with. I omit to ſpeak of this, that you neede not to care for pacifying of this kinde of enemies, ſeeing that there is no mã who hateth you for the goſpels ſake, who wold not either haue you deſtroied or oppreſſed. But admit we graunt that the ſworn enimies of ſoũd doctrine do hate you for no other cauſe ſaue this, becauſe they ſee you defend the ſame: yet ſetting light by their practiſes & threatnings, you muſt valiantly maintain theſe two inuincible fortreſſes, ꝑ worſhip of pure religiõ, & ꝑ godly care to nouriſh the Church, which Chriſt hath cõmitted to you, that you may broude the ſame vnder your wings. As touching thoſe rai'inges wherwith the pope his meritorious brawlers doe moleſt vs, ꝑ we are fallẽ away frõ the Church, becauſe we diſſent frõ the Sea of Rome: would to God we could teſtifie with full cõfidẽce, before God & his angels, that wee are moſt far diſtãt frõ that pollutiõ, as we can acquit our ſelues of ꝑ crime which they vſe to lay to our charge. They make their boaſt of the catholike church, who haue left no part of al the doctrine of the law & the goſpel free from filthy corruptions, who haue prophaned the whole worſhip of God with the ſtink of ſuperſtition, who haue not been afraid to corrupt all god his decrees with their inuẽtions.

Yea

Yea, the multitude of errors wherwith they haue ſubuerted al religiō is ſo vniuerſal, that they are ſufficiēt to ouerwhelme & deſtroy the church an 100. times. Therfore we cā neuer extol ſo highly as it deſerueth, the infinit goodnes of God, wherby it is come to paſſe, that wee eſcaping myraculouſly out of that deadly gulf, haue the anchor of our faith firmly fixed in the ſoūd & eternal truth of god. And truly this one Cōmentarie ſhall ſufficiētly teſtifie (as I hope) that papiſtrie is nothing els but a monſter compoſed of innumerable errors of Satā, & that that church which they obiect vnto vs is more confuſed thē Babylō. In the mean ſeaſon I wil freely cōfes þ truth: that we are not far enough diſtāt from the filth of that pit, whoſe contagion doth ſpread it ſelf too far. Antichriſt doth cōplayne that we are ſlipt away from him: but we are compelled to mourne, for that too too many of his vices, wherwith he hath infected the world, do remaine amongſt vs. Vnto vs is reſtored the ſincere puritie of doctrine, perfect religion, the ſimple worſhip of God, the right order of the ſacramēts, which was deliuered by Chriſt. But the chifeſt cauſe why there is not amongſt vs ſuch reformatiō of maners & amēdment of life as there ought to be, is this, becauſe a great part being as yet mindful of that vnbrideled libertie, wherewith the Papiſtes doe freely waxe wāton againſt God, cannot accuſtome thēſelues to Chriſtes yoke. Therefore whereas our aduerſaries (to the ende they may cauſe the vnskilful vniuſtly to hate vs) do contemptuouſly crie out that we haue broken all good order & diſcipline, their falſe ſlander is refuted ſufficiently with this one thynge (though wee doe hold our peace,) in that there is nothyng, aboute whiche wee haue greater contention amongeſt our ſelues, then this: namely, our rigour, which, as ſome men thynke, is immoderate. But ſeeinge that you are able verye well to witneſſe with mee, and thoſe who are my fellowes in office, that wee are no more ſeuere or ſtraite then the neceſſitie of our office doeth require, and alſo inforce vs to bee as we doe reſt ſafely in the iudgement of your cõſcicience, ſo on the otherſide you may eaſily iudge, as though the matter were before you, how ridiculous the impudencie of our aduerſaries is on this behalfe,

Now (that I may ſpeake ſomewhat particularly of my ſelfe) although I am perſuaded that all the worlde doeth know how I haue inſtructed this church with many of my writings, yet I thoght it would be worth ỹ paines if there ſhould ſome monumẽt therof be extant, which ſhould be dedicated vnto you. For it skilleth much that that kinde of doctrine be ſet before all men, which you know, I haue taught. And although I haue endeuoured to profite you & the people which is cõmitted vnto you euen after my death, in thoſe bookes which I haue hitherto publiſhed, & it is not meete that that doctrine, whiche hath flowed out of your Citie vnto other nations far & wyde ſhoulde bring foorth fruit pentifully, & be neglected in her owne place: yet I hope that this cõmentarie which is peculiarly cõſecrated vnto your name, wil take deeper root in your memory. And that this thing may com to paſſe, I beſeech the liuing God ſo deeply to write the ſame in your harts, that it may not bee blotted out by any ſubtile ſleight of Satã. For it is in his hands to giue ſucceſſe vnto my labors who hath of late giuen mee this minde, to deſire nothing more, thẽ faithfully to care for the ſaluatiõ of you al. Furthermore, as I profes before the world, that I am far frõ that diligẽce of a good ſhepheard, which is exacted, & frõ other vertues which the greatnes & excellẽcy of mine office do require, & do cõtinually before god bewaile mine eſtate, for that I am troubled with ſo many vices whiche do hinder my courſe: ſo I dare proteſt that I wãt no faithfulnes & good will. And if in the meane while the wicked do not ceaſe to repine & ſpeak againſt me, as it is my dutie by well doing to refute their ſlanders, ſo it ſhalbe your part to ſuppreſſe the ſame by that holy authoritie wherin you excell. Farewell my right honorable Lordes, whom I ought to reuerence in Chriſt, vnto whoſe tuition I commit you. At Geneua the firſt of Ianuary, 1553. The

The Argument vpon Iohn.

IT is well knowen what this woorde Euangelium or Goſpel doth ſignifie amongſt the Grecians: and in the ſcriptures it is chiefly taken for the ioyfull and happie meſſage of that grace which is giuen vs in Chriſte: to the ende we may learne (deſpiſing the worlde & the fraile richet & pleaſures therof) to deſire this incomparable treaſure with our whole hearte, and to imbrace the ſame being offered vnto vs. That is naturally engrafted in vs all, which wee ſee the wicked doe, namely to reioyce inordinately in the vaine pleaſures of the worlde, and to bee touched either with none, or els with a very ſlender feeling of ſpirituall good thinges. Therefore to the ende that God may reforme in vs this fault, he calleth that meſſage which he commandeth to be published cõcerning Chriſt, by this name Euangelium, or Goſpel. For hee doth thereby tell vs that true and perfect ioy can be had no where els: that without all doubt wee haue in him the bleſſed life, in all pointes perfect, Certaine there bee who extende this woorde Goſpell vnto all the free promiſes of God, which are alſo diſperſed in the lawe and the prophetes. Neither is it to bee denied but that God ſo often as he doth teſtifie that hee will bee mercifull vnto men, and forgiue them their ſinnes, doth alſo offer Chriſte, whoſe propertie it is whereſoeuer hee ſhineth, to ſpreade abroade the beames of ioy. Therefore I confeſſe that the fathers and wee are partakers of one and the ſame goſpel, as touching the faith of free ſaluation: yet becauſe the ſpirite doth vſually ſpeake thus in the Scriptures, that the Goſpel was published when Chriſte came: let vs alſo retaine the ſame maner of ſpeech, and let this bee the definition of the Goſpel, which I haue ſet down, that it is, a ſolemne publiſhing or proclayming of the grace reuealed in Chriſte. In which reſpect the Goſpel is called the power of God to ſaluation to all that beleeue, becauſe God doth therein make manifeſt his righteouſneſſe. It is alſo called the embaſſage whereby he reconcileth men vnto himſelfe. Furthermore inaſmuch as Chriſte is the pledge of Gods mercie, and of his fathers loue towardes vs, therefore is he alſo the proper matter of the Goſpel. Heereby it commeth to paſſe that the hiſtories which declare that Chriſte appeared in the fleſh, dyed, and was rayſed vp againe from the death, and was at length receiued vp into the heauens, are properly called the Goſpel. For although the new Teſtament be called by this name, according to that reaſon which of late I alleadged, yet is it come to paſſe by vſe and cuſtome that that parte which doth teſtifie that Chriſt was exhibited vnto vs in the fleſh, dyed, & roſe againe from the death, is ſo called by Synecdoche. But becauſe the bare hiſtorie were not ſufficient, yea, ſhould profite nothing vnto ſaluation, the Euangeliſtes doe not ſimplie ſhewe that Chriſte was borne, that hee died, and became the conquerour of death: but they doe alſo declare, to what ende he was borne, to what ende he died, and roſe againe, and what fruite we reape thereby. Yet there is this difference amongeſt them that the other three ſet downe more at large, the life and death of Chriſte: but this Euangeliſt of ours, ſtandeth more vpon the doctrine, wherein both the effice of Chriſte and the force of his death, and reſurrection is declared. They doe not conceale that Chriſte came to the end he might bring ſaluation to the worlde, that he might make ſatisfaction for ſinnes by the ſacrifice of his death. Finally that he might in all points fulfill the function of a mediatour (like as Iohn doth alſo ſtande ſomewhat vpon the hiſtoricall narration:) but the doctrine which ſheweth vnto vs the force and fruite of Chriſt his comming, appeareth more plainly in this Euangeliſt then in the other.

And whereas it is all their drift to make Chriſte manifeſt, the former Euangeliſtes bring forth (that I may ſo ſpeake) his body, and Iohn bringeth foorth his ſoule. Wherfore I vſe commonly to call this Goſpel, the key that openeth the gate vnto the vnderſtanding of the other. For whoſoeuer ſhall perfectly vnderſtande of what power and force Chriſte is, as it is heere in plaine wordes set downe, hee shall reade with profite those thynges which are deliuered by the other concerning the manifestation of the Redeemer. It is thought that Iohn was most of all mooued to write, for this cause, and to this ende, that hee might defende the diuinitie of Christe against e the wicked blasphemies of Ebion and Cerinthus, and this doth Eusebius and Hyerome report according to the opinion of the olde writers: but whatsoeuer was the occasion that caused him to write at that time, yet it is not to bee doubted but that God did farther preuide for his Churche. Therefore hee did so indite to the Euangelistes that which they shoulde write, that hauing deuided the partes amongst them, hee might make one perfect body. Nowe it is our dutie so to linke and knit together the foure, that wee suffer our selues to bee taught as it were with one mouth of them all together. Whereas they haue placed Iohn the fourth in order, in this they had respect to the time wherein hee writ: but the contrary order is more profitable in reading: that beeing afterwarde aboute to reade in Matthewe that Christe was giuen vs of the father, we may first learne out of Iohn to what end he was reuealed.

¶ The holy Gospel of Iesus Christe according to Iohn.

1 IN the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and that woorde was God.
2 The same was in the beginning with God.
3 All thinges were made by it, and without it was made nothing which was made.
4 In it was life, and the life was the light of men.
5 And the light shineth in the darknesse, and the darke-nesse comprehended it not.

The Commentarie of Iohn Caluine.

1 IN the beginning was the worde. In this exordium hee sheweth the eternall Diuinitie of Christe, to the ende wee may knowe that hee was eternall God, who was made manifest in the flesshe. Furthermore, this is the drifte thereof, that it was requisite that mankinde shoulde bee restored by the sonne of GOD, seeing that by his power all things were created, sithence it is hee alone who doth breath life and strength into all creatures, that they may remaine in their state: and especially seeing hee hath shewed in man a most manifest token as well of his power as of his grace: so that euen after the fall of Adam hee ceased not to bee liberall and bountifull towarde his posteritie. And this doctrine is very needefull to bee knowen, for seeing that wee muste not seeke for health and life without God, howe shoulde our faith leane and rest vpon Christe, vnlesse wee were fully persuaded of that whiche Christe teacheth in this place? Therefore the Euangeliste teacheth in these woordes, that wee doe not depart from the only and eternall GOD, when as wee beleeue in Christe; Secondly, that through his benefite life life is nowe reſtored to the dead, who hauing his nature as yet perfect was the fountaine and cauſe of life. It ſeemeth to mee that this was the only reaſon that moued him to call the ſon of god, the word, becauſe hee is firſt of all the eternall wiſdome and will of God: ſecondly, the expreſſe image of his counſell. For as the ſpeech is called the marke or printe of the minde in men, ſo is this alſo not vnfitly applyed vnto God, to ſay that he maketh himſelfe knowen vnto vs by his worde. The other ſignifications of this worde Logos are not ſo fit for this purpoſe. Logos doth ſignifie amongeſt the Grecians both a definition, a reaſon, and an account, but I will not ſubtilly play the Philoſopher aboue the capacitie of my faith. And we ſee that the ſpirite of God is ſo farre from allowing ſuche ſubtiltie, that applying himſelfe vnto our weakeneſſe, in keeping ſilence hee cryeth, howe ſoberly wee ought to bee wiſe in ſuche hidden myſteries.

Furthermore as God did reueale himſelfe in creating the worlde by this word, ſo he had the ſame laid vp in himſelfe before: ſo that there is a double relation, the former vnto God, the latter vnto men. Seruetus the proudeſt knaue which Spayne euer brought foorth, feigneth that this eternall worde did then take his beginning, when he was reuealed in the creation of the worlde: As if it were not before ſuch time as the power thereof was knowen in the externall worke. The Euangeliſt teacheth a farre other thing in this place: for he doth not aſſign any beginning of time to the worde, but in that he ſaith it was from the beginning, he goeth beyond all ages. And I am not ignorant what this dog barketh, and what the Arrians did ſomtimes cauill: namely that God did in the beginning create heauen & earth, which notwithſtanding are not eternal; becauſe this word beginning doth rather reſpect the order, then betoken the eternitie. But the Euangeliſt preuenteth this ſhift, when hee ſaith that it was with God. If the worde began to bee from time, it muſt needes bee that they muſt finde ſome courſe of times in God. And truely Iohn did intende by this particle, by name to diſtinguiſh the word from all things which are created. For many thinges might come into the myndes of men, where that worde ſhould be, how he ſhould ſhew foorth his force, of what nature he was, how he could be knowen. Therfore he ſaith that we muſt not cleeue to the world, & things which are created: becauſe it was alwayes ioyned to God, before the worlde was. Nowe wheras ſome do wreſt the word beginning vnto the beginning of the heauen & the earth, doe they not make Chriſt ſubiect to the common order of the worlde, from which he is flatly exempted in this place? Wherein they doe moſt cruell iniurie not onely to the ſonne of God, but alſo to his euerlaſting father, whom they ſpoile of his wiſdome. If it be an haynous offence to imagine God without his wiſdome, we muſt confeſs that we muſt no where els ſeeke for the beginning of the word, ſaue only in the eternal wiſdome of God. Seruetus obiecteth that the word cannot bee comprehended before ſuch time as Moſes bringeth in god ſpeaking: as if he were not in god, becauſe hee was not openly known, that is, as if he were not within vntill ſuch time as he began to come out. But the Euāgeliſt cutteth off al occaſiō of ſuch mad dotings, whē he affirmeth without exceptiō that the word was with God, for he doth manifeſtly recall vs frō al momēts of time. They which gather ꝑ perpetual ſtate out of the Preterimperfectenſe of the Verb, they leane to a weake reaſo. The word (was) ſay they, doth more expreſſe the continuall courſe, then if Iohn ſhoulde haue ſaide, hath beene. But they muſt reaſon more ſtrongly in ſuch waightie matters. And that one thing which I brought, ought to ſuffice vs, that the Euãgeliſt ſendeth vs into the eternal ſecret places of god, that wee may knowe that the worde was as it were hidden there, before ſuch time as it did reueale it ſelfe in the externall framing of the world. Therfore Auguſtine ſaith very well, that this beginning which is mentioned in this place, is without all beginning. For although the father is before his wiſedome in order, yet they ſpoyle him of his glory, whoſoeuer doe imagine any moment of time wherein he was before his wiſdome. And this is the eternall generation, which lay hid in GOD long time before the creation of the worlde, (that I may ſo ſpeak) which was many yeres obſcurely ſhadowed to the fathers vnder the lawe, and was at length more fully reuealed in the fleſh. I marueile what moued the Latiniſts to traſlate Logos verbum. For they ſhould rather haue tranſlated it ſo, if ſo be it had bene, rhema. But admit they followed ſomething which ſeemed to be true, yet can they not deny but that ſermo is more conuenient. VVherby it appeareth what barbarous tyranny thoſe pelting Diuines did vſe, who did ſo moleſt Eraſmus becauſe he changed but one worde into that which was better. And the woorde was with God, wee ſaid euen nowe, that by this meanes the ſonne of God is placed aboue the worlde, and is ſet before all ages. And alſo this phraſe doth attribute vnto him a diſtinct perſon from the father, for it were very abſurde for the Euangeliſt to ſay that the worde was alwayes with God, vnleſſe it had a proper ſubſiſtence in God. Therefore this place ſerueth to refute the errour of Sabellius, becauſe it declareth that the ſonne differeth from the father. I ſaide euen nowe that wee muſt be wiſe with ſobrietie in ſo great myſteries, & ſpeake modeſtly of the ſame. Notwithſtanding the olde writers of the Churche are to bee holden excuſed, who when as they could not other wiſe defend the right and ſincere doctrine againſt the wreſting boughtes of the heretikes, they were inforced to inuent certain words, which notwithſtanding were conſonant vnto that which is deliuered els where in the Scriptures. They ſaid that there were three perſons in one and the ſimple eſſence of God. The worde perſon is taken in that ſenſe in the firſt Chapter to the Hebrues, wherunto the worde ſubſtance anſwereth as Hyllarie taketh it. They called the diuers properties which are in God, perſons, which our mindes doe beholde, like as ſaieth Gregorie Nazianzene, that hee cannot thinke vpon one, but by and by there appeare three. And the worde was God. Leaſt there ſhoulde remaine any doubt concerning the diuine Eſſence of Chriſte, in plaine words hee affirmeth that he is God. Nowe ſeeing there is one onely God, it followeth that Chriſte is of the ſame Eſſence with the father, and yet they differ in ſome point. But wee haue already ſpoken of this ſecond member. As touching the vnitie of the Eſſence, too intollerable was the wickednes of Arrius, who leaſt hee ſhoulde bee inforced to confeſſe the eternall diuinitie of Chriſte, did babble that there was a certaine feigned God. But ſeeing that we heare that the worde was God, why ſhoulde wee doubt of his eternall Eſſence any longer.

2. This was in the beginning. To the end the Euangeliſt may the more deepely imprint in our mindes that which he ſaid before, hee gathereth theſe two former members into a briefe concluſion, that the word was alwayes, and that with God, ſo that thou mayeſt vnderſtande the beginning to be aboue all time.

3. All things were made by it. After that he hath affirmed that the word is God, and hath ſet foorth his eternall Eſſence, hee now proueth his diuinitie by his workes, and this is practicall knowledge, whereunto wee ought eſpecially to accuſtome our ſelues. For the bare name of GOD which is attributed vnto Chriſte ſhalbe of ſmall force with vs, vnleſſe our faith ſhall in very deede perceiue that he is ſuch a one. And he doth fitly affirme that of the ſonne of God, which doth properly agree to his perſon. Paule ſaith ſometime ſimplie, that all things are by God: but ſo often as the ſonne is compared with the father hee is diſtinguiſhed by this marke. Wherefore this maner of ſpeeche is vſuall, that the father hath made all things by the ſonne, and that all thinges are of God by the ſame ſonne. The drift of the Euangeliſt (as I ſaid) is this, that the word of God began to worke openly, immediately after the creation of the worlde. For whereas he was before incomprehenſible in his Eſſence, his power was then knowne openly by the effect. Furthermore, ſome of the Philoſophers doe ſo make God the Creator of the worlde, that they adioyne vnto him a minde in this his worke. Ro. 11. 36.

In this they ſaide well, becauſe it is agreeable to the Scriptures, but becauſe they vaniſh away by and by in friuolous cogitations, there is no cauſe why wee ſhould greedily deſire their teſtimonies, but rather being contented with this heauenly Oracle, let vs knowe that there is muche more ſaid then our minde is able to conceiue. And without it was made nothing that was made. Although this place be read diuerſly, yet without all doubting I read it in one text on this wiſe, There was made nothing that was made, And herein doe all the Greeke copies agree, (at leaſt thoſe which are of more allowable authoritie): againe the ſenſe doth neceſſarily require that it ſhoulde be ſo. They which diſtinguiſh this member. That which was made, from the former ſentence, that they may ioyne it with the ſentence following, they bring a racked ſenſe, That which was made, in it was life, that is, it liued, or was holden in life. But they ſhall neuer bee able to ſhew that this maner of phraſe is any where attributed to the creatures. Auguſtine being after his accuſtomed maner too much addicted to Plato, is carried away vnto Ideas or formes, that God had conceiued the forme of the whole worke in his minde, before ſuche time as hee created the worlde: and ſo by this meanes the life of thoſe things which were not as yet, was in Chriſte: becauſe the creation of the worlde was ordered in him. But wee ſhall ſee anon howe farre this is from the Euangeliſts meaning.

Now I returne vnto the former member. This is no vnneceſſarie repetition as it ſeemeth at the firſt bluſh: becauſe Satan goeth about by al meanes poſſible to pull away ſomewhat from Chriſte, the Euangeliſt meant plainely to teſtifie that there is nothing of all theſe things which were made, excepted.

4. In it was life. The Euangeliſt hath taught hither to that al things were created by the worde of God: now he doth in like ſorte attribute vnto it, the preſeruation of thoſe things which were created: as if hee ſhoulde ſay that the power of that worde which appeared in the creation of the worlde, was not only ſodain, or but for a moment, and paſſed away by and by againe: but that it is euident in this, that the order of nature continueth ſure and certaine: like as hee is ſaid in the firſt to the Hebrues, verſe 3. to ſuſtaine all things with the worde and becke of his power. But this life may either be extended vnto thinges without life (which liue after their maner, though they bee without ſenſe,) or it may bee expounded of the liuing creatures only. It skilleth not muche whether you chooſe: for the ſenſe is ſimple, that the worde of God was not only the fountaine of life to all creatures, that theſe thinges myghte begin to bee, which were not as yet: but that it cōmeth to paſſe through his liuely vertue, that they continue in their eſtate.

For vnleſſe his continuall inſpiration doe refreſhe and ſtrengthen the worlde, it muſt needes come to paſſe that all thinges whiche liue and haue any being ſhall ſtraightway decay, or be brought to nothing. Finally, Iohn doth teſtifie that that commeth to paſſe through the benefite of the worde, which Paul Actes 17. 28. aſcribeth vnto God: namely, that in him we be, and moue, and liue. Therefore it is God that quickeneth vs, but yet by his eternall worde. The life was the light of men. I do of ſet purpoſe paſſe the other interpretations, whiche are not according to the Euangeliſts minde. In my iudgement he maketh mention heere of that part of life, whereby men doe excell all other liuing creatures: as if he ſhoulde ſay, that that was no common life, which was giuen vnto mē but ſuch a life as was ioyned with the light of vnderſtanding. Furthermore, hee ſeparateth man from other creatures; becauſe wee doe better perceiue the power of God in our ſelues by vnderſtanding, then behold the ſame a farre of. So Paule ſaith in the Actes, That God is not to bee ſought a farre of, becauſe hee reuealeth himſelfe within in vs. Therfore after that the Euangeliſt hath ſet before men the generall conſideration of the grace of Chriſte, to the ende hee may bryng them neerer to conſider thereupon, hee ſheweth what thinge was giuen them peculiarly: namely that they were not created like to beaſts, but being indued with a minde, they were placed in higher degree. Furthermore ſeeing that God doth not in vaine kindle his light in their mindes, it followeth that they are created to this end, that they may acknowledge him to be the authour of ſo great and ſinguler goodneſſe. And ſeeing that he hath powred from thence into vs this light, the fountaine whereof was the worde, it ought to be vnto vs in ſteed of a glaſſe, wherin we may cleerely ſee the diuine power of the worde.

5 And the light shineth in the darkneſſe. It might haue been obiected that men are called blinde in many places of the Scriptures, & that the blindnes whereof they are condemned is too well knowen, for they doe miſerably vaniſh away in all their reaſon. For whence come ſo many Labyrynthis of errours which are in the worlde, ſaue only becauſe men are carried away by their owne vnderſtanding vnto nothing els but vanitie and lying. And if ſo be it there appeare no light in men, that teſtimony of the diuinitie of Chriſte, whereof the Euangeliſt maketh mention in the verſe going before, is quite put out. For that was the third degree (as I ſaid) that in the life of men there is a certaine thing which is farre more excellent then is mouing and breathing. The Euangeliſt preuenteth this

obiection: and firſt of all doth tel vs that the light wherwith men were endued in the beginning is not to be eſteemed according to their preſent ſtate, becauſe in this corrupt & degenerate nature this light was turned into darknes: yet in the meane while he ſaith, that this light of vnderſtāding is not quite put out: becauſe there ſhine as yet certaine ſparkles of light in this darke miſt of mans minde. Now the Readers vnderſtande that this ſentence hath two members. For he ſaith that men are nowe far from that perfect nature wherwith they were indued in the beginning: for he affirmeth that their minde which ſhould haue light in euery part, being drowned in darknes doth miſerablie daſle, & that by this means the glory of Chriſt is as it were darkened in this corruption of nature. But again the Euangeliſt proueth that there are as yet certain rēnants of light remaining in the midſt of darknes, which may ſhew the diuine power of Chriſt in ſome part. Therefore the Euangeliſt doth confeſſe that the minde of man is blinded, ſo that it may rightly be iudged to be ouerwhelmed with darkneſſe. For he might vſe a more milde worde, and ſay that the light is obſcure and miſtie: but his meaning was more plainly to expreſſe how miſerable our eſtate is, after the fal of the firſt man. And whereas he affirmeth that the light ſhineth in the darkenes, that doth no whit appertaine vnto the commendation of nature being corrupted, but rather it taketh away all cloke of ignorance. And the darkenes comprehended it not. Although the ſonne of God did alwayes intuite men vnto himſelfe by this ſmall light which remaineth in vs as yet, yet the Euangeliſt ſaith that this thing had no good ſucceſſe, becauſe in ſeeing they ſaw not. For ſince the time that man was eſtranged from God, ignorance doth ſo oppreſſe & ouerwhelme his minde, that what light ſoeuer remaineth in it, it lyeth without effect being choked vp. And this thing is proued by dayly experience. For whoſoeuer they be that bee not regenerate by the ſpirite of God, ſeeing that they excell in ſome reaſon, they do manifeſtly declare, that man is not only created to breath, but to vnderſtand. But yet they come not vnto God by this leading of their reaſon, nay truly they doe not ſo much as come towarde him, ſo that all their vnderſtanding is nothing els but meere vanitie. Whereupon it followeth, that man is altogether deſtitute of ſaluation, vnleſſe God put to his helping hande againe: for when as the ſonne of God doth powre out his light into thē: yet are they ſo dull, that they cānot cōprehend frō whence that light cōmeth: but being carryed away with dotings & vaine imaginations, they become altogether fooliſh. That light which remaineth as yet in the corrupt nature, hath two principall partes. For there is ſome ſeede of religion ingendered in all men: ſecondly there is ingrauen in their conſciences a difference betweene good and euill. But I pray you what fruit ariſeth heereof, ſaue this, that religion doth degenerate into a thouſande monſters of ſuperſtitions: and the conſcience ouerthroweth all iudgement: ſo that it maketh a mixture of vice and vertue. To be briefe, naturall reaſon will neuer bring men vnto Chriſt, Nowe in that they are furniſhed with wiſedome to gouerne the life, in that they are borne vnto excellent artes and learning: all that likewiſe deeth vaniſh away without fruite. Furthermore, wee muſte note that the Euangeliſt doeth onely ſpeake of naturall giftes, and doth not as yet touch the grace of regeneration. For there are two diſtincte vertues in the ſonne of God: the former, whiche appeareth in the creation of the worlde, and order of nature: the other whereby hee renueth and reſtoreth nature when it is decayed. As hee is the eternall worde of God, the world was created by him, through his power all things retaine the life which they haue once receiued, man was adorned eſpecially with that excellēt gift of vnderſtanding: and although by his fall hee haue loſt the light of vnderſtanding, yet he ſeeth and vnderſtandeth as yet: ſo that that is not quite aboliſhed which hee hath naturally by the grace of the ſonne of God. Yet becauſe hee darkeneth that light which remaineth as yet in him with his blockiſhneſſe and frowardneſſe, it remaineth that the ſonne of God take vppon him a newe office, that is, of a Mediatour, that hee may reforme & builde vp again with the ſpirit of regeneration, man, being loſt and deſtroyed. Therefore they play the Philoſophers prepoſterouſly and out of due time: who referre this light whereof the Euangeliſt maketh mention, vnto the Goſpel and doctrine of ſaluation.

6 There was a man ſent from God whoſe name was Iohn.

7 This man came for a teſtimonie, that he might teſtifie of the light: that all men might beleeue through him.

8 He was not the light, but that he might teſtifie of the light.

9 Hee was the true light whiche lighteneth euery man whiche commeth into the worlde.

10 He was in the worlde, and the worlde was made by him, and the worlde knew him not.

11 He came into his owne, and his owne receiued him not.

12 But ſo many as receiued him, he gaue vnto them power to be made the ſonnes of God: namely vnto thoſe that beleeue in his name.

13 Who are borne not of bloodes, neither of the will of the flesh, neither of the will of man, but of God.

6 There was a man. Now the Euangeliſt beginneth to intreate how the word of God was manifeſted in the fleſh. And leaſt any man doubt that Chriſte is the eternall ſonne of God, he ſaith that hee was commended by the preaching of Iohn Baptiſt. For Chriſte did not onely ſhewe himſelfe vnto men: but hee would alſo bee made knowen by the teſtimony and doctrine of Iohn. Yea, God the father ſent this witneſſe before his Chriſte, to the ende all men might the more eaſily receiue the ſaluation offered by him. Yet this may ſeeme an abſurd thing at the firſte bluſhe, that another ſhoulde beare witneſſe with Chriſte, as if hee needed the ſame. But he affirmeth that he ſeeketh not the teſtimonie of man. The anſweare is eaſie and knowen, that he was ordeined a witneſſe for our cauſe and not for Chriſtes ſake. If any man obiect that the teſtimony of man is to weake to prooue Chriſt to be the ſonne of God: we haue heere likewiſe an anſwere in readineſſe, that Iohn Baptiſt is not cited as a priuate witneſſe, but as one who being indued with diuine authoritie doth beare the perſon rather of an angell then of man. Therefore hee is not adorned with the titles of his owne vertues, but with this one thing, that he was the Embaſſadour of God. Neither doth it any whit hinder, that the preaching of the Goſpel was committed vnto Chriſte, that hee might beare witnes of himſelfe. For the preaching of Iohn did tend to this ende, that they might take heede to the doctrine and myra-cles of Chriſte. Sent of God. Hee doth not confirme the calling of Iohn but doth only make mention thereof by the way. This is not ſufficient for the certaintie, ſeeing that many running of their owne accord, doe boaſt that they are ſent of God: but the Euangeliſt being about to ſpeak more at large afterwarde of this witneſſe, he thought it ſufficient to vtter in this one word firſt, that he came not, but at the cõmandement of god. Wee ſhall afterwarde ſee howe he doth affirme that God was the authour of his miniſtery. Nowe we muſt note (which thing I haue touched heeretofore) that that is required in all the Teachers of the church which is ſpoken of Iohn, that they be called of God: that their authoritie to teach may be grounded no other where, ſaue onely in God alone. Hee expreſſeth his name not onely to point out the man, but becauſe it was giuen him by the thing it ſelf. For without doubt God had reſpect vnto the function whereunto he aſsigned Iohn, when hee commaunded by the Angel that hee ſhould be ſo called, that all men might thereby knowe that he was a preacher of the grace of God. For although Iehocanan may be taken paſſiuely, and ſo be referred vnto the perſon, becauſe Iohn was acceptable in the ſight of God: yet notwithſtandyng I doe willingly referre it vnto the fruite whiche other men ſhoulde receyue by him.

7 Hee came for a witneſſe. He ſetteth downe briefly the end of his callyng: namely, that he myght prepare a church for Chriſt, like as whileſt he did inuite all men vnto Chriſt, hee did ſufficiently declare that hee came not for his owne cauſe. And Iohn had ſo little neede of commẽdation, that the Euangeliſt teacheth vs that he was not the light, leaſt his immoderate brightneſſe doe darken the glory of Chriſte. For ſome there were who did cleaue ſo faſt vnto him, that they did neglect Chriſt. Like as if any man being aſtonied at the beholding of the morning do not vouchſafe to turne his eyes vnto the Sunne. Furthermore, wee ſhall ſee by and by in what ſenſe the Euangeliſt doeth take this worde light. All the godly truly are light in the Lorde, becauſe being lightned by his ſpirite, they doe not only ſee for themſelues, but doe alſo direct other men by their example into the way of ſaluation. The Apoſtles are alſo properly called the light, becauſe they carry the light of the goſpel, which is able to driue away the darkneſſe of the worlde. But the Euangeliſt intreteth in this place of the only and eternall fountain of illumination, as he doth by and by more plainely declare.

9 Hee was the true light. The true light is not ſet againſt the falſe: but the meaning of the Euangeliſt was to diſtinguiſh Chriſt from all other leaſt any man ſhould think that this was common to him with the Angels or men, that hee is called the light. Furthermore, there is this difference, that whatſoeuer is light in heauen or earth, it borroweth the light which it hath of ſome other: but Chriſt is the light which ſhineth of it ſelf, and by it ſelfe: and ſecondly, which lightneth the whole world with his brightnes: ſo that there is no other beginning or cauſe of brightneſſe any where els. Therefore he calleth it the true light whereto it is proper by nature to ſhine. Which lighteneth euery man. The Euangeliſt ſtandeth chiefly vpon this point, to proue, and teach that Chriſte is the light, by ꝑ effect which euery one of vs feeleth in himſelf. He might haue diſputed more ſubtilly, that Chriſte, as the eternall light, hath brightnes

ingrafted in him ſelfe, and doth not fet the ſame from any other: but he doth rather reclaime vs vnto the experience which all of vs haue. For ſeeing that Chriſt doth make vs all partakers of his brightneſſe, wee muſt confeſſe that this honour is proper to him alone, to bee called the light. But this place is commonly expounded two wayes. For certaine do reſtraine the vniuerſall note vnto thoſe who being regenerate by the ſpirit of God, are made partakers of the liuely light. Auguſtine inducеth the ſimilitude of a ſchoolemaſter, who being but one, if he haue a ſchoole in a Citie, hee ſhall bee called the maſter of all, although many doe not come to the ſchoole. Therefore they take this ſaying comparatiuely, that all men are lightned by Chriſt, becauſe no man can boaſt that hee did get the light of life by any other meanes ſaue onely by his grace. But ſeeing the Euangeliſt putteth in all men generally who come into this worlde, the other ſenſe pleaſeth mee better, becauſe the beames are ſpread abroade from this light throughout all mankinde: as it is alſo ſaide before. For wee knowe that men haue this peculiarly aboue all other liuing creatures, that they are indued with reaſon and vnderſtanding, that they carrye ingrauen in their conſcience the difference betweene right and wrong. Therefore there is no man vnto whome there commeth not ſome feelyng of the eternall light. But becauſe there be certayne frantike and brainſicke fellowes, who wreſt this place further, hauing raſhly caught the ſame, that they may therby gather that the grace of illumination is offered vnto all men in like ſort: let vs remember that the Euangeliſt intreateth in this place onely of the common light of nature, which is farre inferiour vnto faith. For doubtleſſe no man ſhall enter into the kingdome of God with all the quickneſſe and foreſight of his minde: it is onely the ſpirite of Chriſt that openeth the gate of heauen to the elect. Secondly, let vs remember, that the light of reaſon which God gaue vnto men, was ſo darkened through ſinne, that there doe ſcarce appeare certaine ſmall ſparkles in the thicke darkneſſe, and ſo conſequently in horrible ignorance, and the deepe dungeon of errours, which are alſo by and by choked.

10 Hee was in the worlde. Hee accuſeth men of vnthankfulneſſe, becauſe they were ſo blinde, as it were of their own accord, that the cauſe of the light which they did enioy was vnknowen vnto them. And this reacheth vnto all the ages of the worlde: becauſe Chriſte did euerye where ſhewe his power before he was made manifeſt in the fleſh. Therfore thoſe dayly effects ought to haue redreſſed the ſluggiſhneſſe of mē. For what is more abſurd then to drawe water out of a running ſtream, and not to conceiue in the mynde the fountaine from which the ſtreame it ſelfe floweth? Therefore there ſhall no iuſt excuſe bee founde for this ignorance, that the worlde knewe not Chriſte before ſuche time as hee was reuealed in the fleſhe: for this chaunced through their ſlouthfulnes and wicked kinde of dulneſſe, who had him alwayes preſent by his power. The ſumme is this, that Chriſt was neuer ſo abſent from the world but that men beeing awaked with his beames, ought to haue lifted vp their eyes towarde him. Whereupon it followeth that the blame ought to be laid vpon themſelues.

11 Hee came into his owne. Heere appeareth the deſperate frowardneſſe and wickedneſſe of men, here appeareth more then wicked impi-

etie, that when as the ſonne of God did ſhewe himſelfe in the fleſhe, and that to the Iewes (whom God had ſeparated to himſelf as a peculiar people from all other nations) yet was hee not acknowledged nor receiued. They doe alſo expound this place diuerſly. For ſome there bee who thinke that the Euangeliſt doth ſpeake generally of the whole worlde. And truely there is no part of the worlde which the ſonne of God may not challenge to himſelfe by good right. The meaning therefore is this, according to them, when Chriſte came downe into the worlde, hee enchroched not vpon another man, becauſe all mankinde was his owne proper inheritance. But they thinke more truely, (in my iudgement) who referre it vnto the Iewes alone: for there is contained in it an hidde compariſon, wherby the Euangeliſt doth the more amplifie the vnthankfulneſſe of men. The ſonne of God had choſen to himſelfe a dwelling place in one nation; when hee appeared there hee was reiected. Therefore it appeareth heereby moſt plainely, howe malicious the blindeneſſe of men is. And it was very needefull that the Euangeliſt ſhould ſay thus that hee might remoue that ſtumbling block whiche the vnbeliefe of the Iewes might haue layd in the way of many at ẏ time. For ſeeing that he was reiected and deſpiſed of that nation, whervnto he was promiſed by name, who woulde haue thought that hee had beene the Redeemer of the whole worlde. Therefore wee ſee howe great paines Paule taketh in this point. But there lyeth hid great force as well in the verb as in the Nowne. Wheras hee was before the ſonne of God, the Euangeliſt ſaith, hee came thither. Therefore he doth ſignifie the newe and extraordinarie maner of his preſence, whereby the ſonne of God did reueale himſelfe, that men might behold him nigher hande. When hee ſaith into his owne, hee compareth the Iewes with other nations: becauſe they were adopted to be Gods familie by a ſinguler priuiledge. Therefore Chriſte offered himſelfe firſt to them as to his familie, and thoſe who did appertaine vnto his Empyre by a peculiar right. To the ſame ende tendeth that complaint which God maketh by Eſay: The exe knoweth his owner, and the Aſſe his maſters cribbe: but Iſrael hath not knowen mee. For Eſay. 1. 3. although he bee gouerner of all the whole earthe, yet hee maketh himſelfe the peculiare Lorde of Iſrael, whom hee had gathered together, as it were to be an holy ſheepfold.

12 But ſo manie. Leaſt this ſtoone of offence ſhoulde cauſe any to ſtumble, that the Iewes deſpiſed and refuſed Chriſte, the Euangeliſte lifteth vp the godly that beleeue in him aboue ẏ heauẽs. For he ſaith that this glory is attayned vnto by faith, to bee accounted the children of God. And in this vniuerſall particle (as many) is contained a certaine Antytheſis: for the Iewes were puffed vp with a blinde boaſting, as if they alone had had God bounde vnto them. Therefore the Euangeliſt affirmeth that the caſe was altered, becauſe the Iewes being reiected the Gentiles doe ſuccede into the emptie place. For it is as if he ſhould tranſlate the righte of adoption vnto Forrainers. This is that whiche Paul ſaith, that the deſtruction of one people, was the life of al the whole worlde: becauſe the Goſpel being as it were expelled by them, beganne to be ſpread abroade farre and wide throughout the whole worlde, ſo were they ſpoyled of their priuiledge wherein they did excell. Ro. 11. 12.

But

But their vngodlineſſe did no whit hurt Chriſt: becauſe he did erect the ſeate of his kingdome elſwhere, and hee called all people in generall vnto the hope of ſaluation, who ſeemed before to be reiected of God.

Hee gaue vnto them power. This worde exouſia doth ſignifie as I thinke in this place dignitie, and it was better ſo to tranſlate it. to refute the inuention of the Papiſtes. For they doe moſt wickedly corrupt this place: becauſe they vnderſtande, adoption to be giuen vs only vpon this condition, if it ſhall pleaſe vs to vſe this benefite. And ſo by this meanes they ſet free will out of this worde, as if one ſhoulde fet fier out of water. This hath ſome colour at the firſt bluſhe, that the Euangeliſt ſaieth not that Chriſte maketh the ſonnes of God, but that hee giueth them power to bee made. Therefore they gather out of this place, that this grace is only offered vnto vs, and that it is in our choſe to enioy, or refuſe the ſame. But the text ouerthroweth this friuolous hunting after one worde: for the Euangeliſt addeth immediatly after, that they are made the ſonnes of God not by the proper will of the fleſh, but when as they are borne of God. And if faith doe regenerate vs that we may bee the ſonnes of God, and God doe inſpire the ſame faith from heauen: it is moſt manifeſt that Chriſte doth not only offer vs the grace of adoption potentially, but euen actually, (as they ſay). And truly the Grecians doe ſometimes take exouſia for axioma: becauſe the ſenſe doth beſt agree with this place. And the circumlocution which the Euangeliſt vſeth, is of greater force to ſet foorth the excellencie of grace, then if hee had ſaide in one worde, that all thoſe that beleeue in Chriſte. are made by him the ſonnes of God. For hee ſpeaketh in this place of the vnclean and prophane, who being condēned of perpetuall ignominy, did lye in the ſhadowe of death. Therefore Chriſt ſhewed a wonderfull token of his grace, that he vouchſafed to extoll ſuche vnto this honour, that they ſhoulde begin ſodainely to be the ſonnes of God. And the Euangeliſte extolleth the greatneſſe of this benefite woorthily, as doth Paule alſo, Epheſians 2.4.

But and if the common ſignification of the word do pleaſe any man better, yet notwithſtanding the Euangeliſt doth not make power a certaine middle facultie, which may take away the full and perfect effecte, but hee meaneth rather that Chriſte gaue vnto the vncleane and vncircumciſed, that which ſeemed to bee vnpoſsible. For there was an vncredible alteration of thinges wrought at that time, when Chriſte rayſed vp to God children of ſtones. Therefore power is that ſufficiencie whereof Paule maketh mention, Col. 1.12. where hee giueth thankes to God, who hath made vs fit to be partakers of the lot of the ſaintes.

VVho beleeue in his name. Hee noteth briefly the maner howe to receiue Chriſte: namely, when wee beleeue in him. Therefore beeing ingrafted into Chriſte by faith, wee obteine the right of adoption, that wee may bee the ſonnes of God. And truely ſeeing hee is the onlie ſonne of God, this honour doth in no caſe appertaine vnto vs, ſaue only ſo farre foorth as wee are his members. Againe, that vaine ſurmiſe concerning power, is refuted out of this place. The Euangeliſt ſayth, that this power is giuen to thoſe who doe nowe alreadie beleeue, and it is certaine that they are now the children of God in deede. Therefore they doe derogate too much from faith, who ſay that a man doth obtain this thing thing only by beleeuing.to be made the childe of God,if hee will: becauſe they put a ſuſpenced power inſteede of the preſent effect. There appeareth a groſſer contrarietie in that which followeth immediatelie. The Euangeliſt ſaith nowe that they are borne of GOD who beleeue. Therefore there is not onely an habilitie to chooſe, offered, ſeeing that they doe nowe obtaine that ſelfe ſame thing about which they are occupyed. And although the Hebretians doe oftentimes take name for power. yet there is heere a relation vnto the doctrine of the Goſpel. For we doe then rightly beleeue in Chriſte when he is preached vnto vs, I ſpeake of the ordinarie meanes whereby the Lorde bringeth vs vnto faith. And this muſt be diligently noted,becauſe many men do fooliſhly forge to themſelues a confuſed faith without any vnderſtanding of doctrine. Like as amongeſt the Papiſtes there is nothing more common then this woorde (beleeue)whereas notwithſtanding there is no knowledge of Chriſte by the hearing of the Goſpel. Therfore Chriſt offereth himſelfe vnto vs by the Goſpell,but we receiue him by faith.

13 VVho are not borne of blood. Willingly doe I embrace the opinion of thoſe who thinke that the Euangeliſt toucheth heere by the way the wicked boldneſſe and confidence of the Iewes. They had alwayes in their mouth the worthineſſe of their ſtocke,as if they who diſcende of an holy progenie were naturally holy. And they might worthily haue bragged of the ſtock of Abrahã,if ſo be it they had bin the lawfull ſons of Abraham and not degenerate children: but the boaſting of faith arrogateth nothing at all to the carnall begetting: but it acknowledgeth that it hath receiued all that goodneſſe whiche it hath of the grace of God alone. Therefore Iohn ſaith that the Gentiles who beleeue in Chriſt,who were before vncleane, are borne the ſonnes of God,not of the wombe,but they are faſhioned againe by God,that they may begin to bee. He ſeemeth to haue put blooddes in the plurall number, to the ende hee might the better expreſſe the long ſucceſſion of the ſtocke. For this was a part of the Iewiſh boaſting, that they were able directly to proue that they came from the patriarkes by a continuall courſe.

The will of the fleſhe and of man, Doe ſignifie all one thing in my iudgement. For I ſee no cauſe why fleſhe ſhoulde be taken for the woman, as manie doe thinke with Auguſtine: But rather in this that the Euangeliſte repeateth one thing in diuers wordes, hee beateth in the ſame the better,and imprinteth it more deepely in mens myndes. And although he doe properly reſpect the Iewes, who dyd bragge of the fleſhe: yet may there a generall doctrine be gathered out of this place, that this is not proper to our nature,neither doth it proceede from vs,that wee are accounted the children of God: but becauſe the Lorde, of his owne wyll,that is,of his free loue begate vs. Heereupon it followeth, firſt, that faith proceedeth not from vs,but that it is a fruite of ſpirituall regeneration. For the Euangeliſt ſaith that no man can beleeue, vnleſſe hee be begotten of God,therefore faith is an heauenly gift. Secondly, that faith is not a colde and bare knowledge: ſithence none can beleeue but hee that is faſhioned againe by the ſpirite of God. Notwithſtanding it ſeemeth that the Euangeliſt dealeth diſorderly in putting regeneration before faith, ſeeing that it is rather an effect of faith, and therefore to bee ſet after hym. I anſwere, that both of them doe very well agrce becauſe we doe both conceiue the incorruptible ſeed by faith, wherby we are borne againe into a newe and diuine life: and yet notwithſtanding faith is a worke of the holy ghoſt. who dwelleth in the ſonnes of God alone. Therefore in diuers reſpectes faith is a part of our regeneration, and an entrance into the kingdome of God, that it may number vs amongeſt his children. For whereas the ſpirite doth illuminate our mindes, that doth now appertaine vnto the renuing of vs. By this meanes faith doth flowe from regeneration as from a fountaine. But becauſe we receiue Chriſt by the ſame faith, who doth ſanctifie vs by his holy ſpirite, therefore it is ſaide to be the beginning of our adoption. Although there may another more plaine & redie diſtinction be brought. For when the Lorde inſpireth faith, hee begetteth vs againe ſecretely, & by a ſecrete meanes which we knowe not. And beeing indued with faith, we lay holde vpon with a liuely feeling of the conſcience, not only the grace of adoption, but alſo the newneſſe of life, and other giftes of the holy Ghoſte. For ſeeing that faith doeth receiue Chriſte. (as it is ſaide) it bringeth vs after a ſort into the poſſeſſion of all his good giftes. So that according to our ſenſe we begin not to be the children of God vntyl ſuch time as we haue faith. And if ſobeit the inheritaunce of eternall life be the fruite of adoption, wee ſee howe the Euangeliſt aſcribeth all our ſaluation to the grace of Chriſte alone. And ſurely howe narrowly ſoeuer men doe ſift themſelues, they ſhall finde nothing meete for the children of God, but that which Chriſte hath beſtowed vpon them.

14 And the woorde was made fleſhe, and dwelt amongeſt vs: and wee ſawe the glory of it, as the glory of the only begotten of the father: full of grace and of truth.

14 And the worde was made fleſh. Nowe he teacheth after what ſort Chriſte came, whereof he made mention: namely, that hauing put on our fleſh he ſhewed himſelfe openly to the worlde. And although the Euangeliſt doth briefly touch this vnſpeakeable ſecrete and myſterie, that the ſonne of God did put on mans nature, yet is this breuitie merueilous plaine. Certaine fooliſhe fellowes doe heere delude and toye with friuolous ſluiftes, that it is ſaide, that the woorde was made fleſhe, becauſe God did ſende his ſonne into the worlde being made man, as hee had conceiued in his minde. As if that worde were a ſhadowiſh & vaine conception of the minde. But wee haue ſhewed that the true perſon in the Eſſence of God is expreſſed in this worde. Moreouer, the worde fleſhe is of greater force to expreſſe his minde, then if hee had ſaide that he was made man. His meaning was to ſhew vnto howe vile and baſe an eſtate the ſonne of God came downe from the highneſſe of his heauenly glory, and all for our ſake. When as the Scripture ſpeaketh of man contemptuouſly hee calleth him fleſhe. Therefore albeit there is ſo great difference betweene the ſpirituall glory of the woorde of God, and the rotten dregges of our fleſhe, yet notwithſtanding the ſonne of God did abaſe hymſelfe ſo muche that hee tooke vpon him this fleſh which is ſubiect to ſo great miſerie. But fleſh is not take in this place for the corrupt nature, (as Paule doth oftentimes take it) but for the mortal man: although it doth by contempt ſignifie his frayle & brittle nature. Pſalme 78.39. Hee remembred them becauſe they are fleſhe: Iſay 40.6. All fleſhe is graſſe, and in ſuche like places. Yet muſt we note herewithall that this is a kinde of ſpeeche wherein is Synechdoche, becauſe the inferiour parte comprehendeth the whole man. Therefore did Apolinaris dote, who feigned that Chriſte did take vpon him the body of man only without the ſoule: for wee may gather out of infinite teſtimonies, that hee was no leſſe indued with the ſoule then with the body. And when the ſcripture calleth men fleſhe, it doth not therefore deprive them of ſoules. Therefore the ſentence is plaine, that the word which was begotten of God before the beginning of the worlde, and whiche did alwayes abide with the father, was made man. In this poynt of faith wee muſt chiefly holde two thinges: that the two natures in Chriſt dyd ſo growe togeather into one perſon, that one and the ſame Chriſte is very God and man. And the other, that the vnitie of the perſon doth no whit let, but that the natures may remaine diſtinct, ſo that the diuinitie doth retaine whatſoeuer is proper to it, and that the humanitie hath alſo ſeueraliy whatſoeuer belongeth to it. Therefore whenſoeuer Satan did goe about by heretikes to ouerthrowe ſounde doctrine with diuers dotings: hee alwayes brought in the one of theſe errors: eyther that Chriſt was the ſonne of God and of man ſo confuſedly, that neyther his diuinitie remained in hym, neyther was he cõpaſſed about with the true nature of mã: or els that he was ſo clothed with the fleſhe, that hee was as it were double and had two natures. Thus dyd Neſtorius in times paſt plainly confeſſe both natures: but hee made one Chriſte God, and another man. On the contrarie, when Eutiches did acknowledge one Chriſt to be the ſonne of God and of man, he left hym neither of the two natures, but feigned that they were both mixed togeather. And Seruetus at this day feigneth with the Anabaptiſts, ſuch a Chriſte as is confuſedly cõpounded of a double nature, as a diuine man. In woorde hee affirmeth that hee is God: but if you receiue his vaine gloſſes, the diuinitie was turned for a time into the humaine nature, and nowe againe is the humane nature ſwallowed vp of the diuinitie. The wordes of the Euangeliſte ſerue fitly for the refuting of both theſe ſacriligies. When hee ſaith, that the worde was made fleſhe, the vnitie of the perſon is plainely gathered hence: for it is not meete that there ſhoulde bee another man now beſide him who was alwayes very God: ſeeing that it is ſaid that that God was made man. Againe, ſeeing that this woorde woorde is attributed diſtinctly vnto Chriſte as hee is man, it followeth, that Chriſte ceaſed not to bee that which he was before, whã he was made man, and that there was nothing altered in that eternall eſſence of God which put vpon it fleſhe.

Finally, the ſonne of God began to bee man in ſuche ſorte, that notwithſtandynge hee is as yet that eternall woorde whiche hath no beginnyng of time. And dwelt. They that expounde that the fleſhe was vnto Chriſte as an houſe they doe not vnderſtande the meaning of the Euangeliſt. For doubtleſſe he doth not here aſſigne vnto Chriſte a perpetuall abiding amongſt vs: but he ſaith that he was conuerſant amongeſt vs for a ſeaſon. For the word (eſcenoſen) which hee vſeth is fet from tabernacles. Therfore it doth ſignifie nothing els ſauethis, ỹ Chriſt did execute that funcțiō vpon earth which was inioyned him, or that he did not appeare one moment onely, but that he did abide amongſt men vntil ſuch time as he did finiſh the courſe of his office. But heere may a queſtion be moued whether he doth ſpeake of men in generall, or of himſelfe alone, and the other Diſciples who ſawe that with theyr eies whiche hee ſaith. I doe rather allowe this latter: for hee addeth by and by, And wee ſawe his glory. For although the glory of Chriſte might haue beene ſeene of all men, yet was it vnknowen to the greateſt parte becauſe of their blindneſſe: only a fewe ſaw this manifeſtation of his glory, whoſe eyes the holy ſpirite did open. The ſumme is, that Chriſt was ſo knowen as he was man, that he ſhewed in himſelfe ſome farre greater and more excellent thing. VVhereupon it followeth that the maieſtie of God was not extenuated, although it were compaſſed about with the fleſh it laide hid indeede vnder the humilitie of the fleſhe: yet ſo that it ſent foorth the brightneſſe thereof. (As) is not in this place a note of impropriетie, but Ephe. 5. 8 it doth rather betoken a true and ſounde approbation. As when Paule ſaith, walke as the children of light, hee will haue vs to teſtifie by our workes in deede this ſelfe ſame thing that wee are the children of light. Therefore the Euangeliſt meaneth that the glory appeared in Chriſte, whiche was meete for the ſonne of God, and was a certaine and ſure teſtimony of his diuinitie. Hee calleth him the only begotten, becauſe he is his onlye ſonne by nature: as if he did place him aboue men and angels, and dyd attribute that vnto him which doth not agree with any creature. Full of grace. This is a confirmation of the next ſentence. The maieſtie of Chriſte did appeare in other things: but the Euangeliſt did chooſe this token aboue all other that he may the rather exerciſe vs in actiue, then in the ſpeculatiue knowledge of him, whiche thing wee muſt diligently obſerue. Truely when Chriſte went vpon the waters drie foote, when he did driue away Diuels, & did declare his power by other myracles, it might haue been knowne that he was the only begotten ſonne of God: but the Euangeliſt bringeth foorth a parte of approbation wherby faith reapeth ſweete fruite: namely, becauſe Chriſt did teſtifie that he was indeed the fountaine of grace and truth which can neuer be drawen drie.

Act. 7. 55 It is alſo ſaide that Stephen was full of grace: but in another ſenſe. For the fulneſſe of grace in Chriſte, is that fountaine out of which wee muſt all draw: ſo as we ſhall hereafter declare more at large. This may be expounded by hypallage for the true grace: or expoſitiuely thus, that he was ful of grace, which is, truth or perfection. But becauſe he wil repeate the ſame maner of ſpeeche againe, I thinke that the ſenſe is all one in both places. He will afterwarde ſet this grace and truth againſt the law, therfore I interprete it ſimplie, that Chriſte was knowen to his Apoſtles to be the ſonne of God by this, becauſe hee had the fulneſſe of all thinges which doe appertaine vnto the ſpirituall kingdome of God in himſelfe. Finally, becauſe he ſhewed himſelfe in all thinges to bee a redeemer and the Meſsias indeede: which is the moſt excellent token & mark, wherby he ought to haue beene knowen from other men.

15 Iohn doth teſtifie of himſelfe and cryed, ſaying: This is hee of whome I ſaide, he whiche commyng after mee, was ſet before mee, becauſe hee was more excellent then I.

16. And

16 And wee haue all receiued of his fulneſſe, and grace for grace.

17 Becauſe the Lawe was giuen by Moſes: grace and truthe were made by Iesus Chriſte.

18 No man hath ſeene God at any time: the only begotten ſonne who is in the boſome of the father, he hath shewed him.

15 Iohn doth teſtifie. Nowe hee declareth what maner of preaching that of Iohns was. By the verb of the preſentence he denoteth the continuall act. And truely this doctrine ought alwayes to bee of force, as if the voyce of Iohn did ſounde continually in the eares of men. So he putteth in afterwarde the worde (cryed) that hee may ſignifie that the doctrine of Iohn was not obſcure, either harde to bee vnderſtoode: and that he whiſpered not the ſame in the eares of a fewe, but that he preached Chriſte openly with a loude voyce. The firſt ſentence tendeth to this ende that he was ſent for Chriſtes cauſe: and that therefore it was an abſurde thing, that hee ſhoulde floriſh, and that Chriſte ſhoulde lye vnderfoote. This is hee (ſaith he) of whom I ſaide. By which words he meaneth that this was his whole intent from the beginning, to make Chriſt knowen, and that this was the ende of his ſermons: like as hee coulde no otherwiſe execute the office of his embaſſage, thē by calling his diſciples vnto Chriſte. Hee that commeth after mee. Although he were a fewe monethes elder then Chriſt, yet he ſpeaketh not in this place of his age: but becauſe he had exerciſed the office of a Prophete ſome ſpace before Chriſte came abroade, therefore he maketh himſelfe former then Chriſt in time. Therefore Chriſte ſucceeded Iohn in reſpect of the publik manifeſtation. That which followeth is thus, word for worde, hee was made before mee, becauſe he was my firſt. But the ſenſe is this, that Chriſt was preferred before Iohn, becauſe he was more excellent. Therefore he giueth place to Chriſte, and (as the Prouerb goeth) he giueth him the light to beare. But becauſe he came after him in time, hee ſheweth that this is no let why he may not be preferred for the deſert of his dignitie. So it becommeth all men, who excell either in the giftes of GOD or degree of honour, to remaine in their degree, that they may be inferiour to Chriſte.

16 And of his fulneſſe. Nowe he beginneth to preache of the office of Chriſte, that hee conteineth in himſelfe the aboundance of all good thinges, ſo that wee muſt not fet any part of ſaluation from any other. With God truly is the well of life, of righteouſneſſe, of vertue, of wiſdome: but this Well is hydden from vs and wee cannot attaine thereunto. But plentie of all theſe things was laide open to vs in Chriſt, that wee may fet them thence. For he is readie to flowe vnto vs of his owne accorde, if we make way for him by faith. To be briefe, he ſaith plainely, that there is no good thing to be ſought without Chriſte: although this ſentence conſiſteth vpon moe members. For it ſheweth firſt that all of vs are poore and altogether voide of ſpirituall good thinges. For Chriſt aboundeth to this ende, that hee may helpe our want, that he may diminiſh our pouertie, that hee may fill the poore and hungry. Secondly, hee telleth vs that ſo ſoone as we are departed from Chriſt wee doe in vaine ſeeke euen one droppe of goodneſſe: becauſe God woulde haue all goodneſſe whatſoeuer to remaine in him alone. Therefore we ſhall finde the angels and men to bee drie, heauen to be vaine, the earth to bee barren, and finally all thinges to be nothing worth: if wee will be made partakers of the giftes of God, by any other meanes then by Chriſte. Thirdly, he telleth vs that we neede not to bee afraide of the want of any thing, if ſo be it wee drawe out of the fulneſſe of Chriſte: which is ſo perfect in all pointes, that we ſhall perceiue that he is a Well which can neuer be drawen drie. And Iohn maketh himſelfe one of the reſt, not for modeſties ſake, but that it may more plainely appeare that there is none at all excepted. Yet it is to be doubted whether hee ſpeake generally of all mankinde, or he vnderſtand thoſe onely, who were made partakers of all his good thinges after that Chriſte was reuealed in the fleſhe. Certaine it is, that all the godly men who liued vnder the lawe did drawe out of the ſame fulneſſe: but becauſe Iohn addeth by and by a difference of time, it is more like to be true that hee doth here commende and ſet foorth that plentifull aboundance of good thynges, which Chriſte brought foorth with his commyng. For wee knowe that the benefites of God were taſted more ſparingly vnder the lawe: and that ſo ſoone as Chriſt was reuealed in the fleſhe, they were powred ouzin great aboundance euen vnto the full: Not that anye of vs hath greater aboundance of the ſpirite then had Abraham: but I ſpeake of the ordinarie diſpenſation, and of the manner and meanes of diſpenſing.

Therefore to the ende that Iohn may the better inuite his Diſciples vnto Chriſte, he telleth them that the aboundance of all thoſe good thinges which they want is offered them in him. Although there ſhall be no abſurditie therein, if ſo be it we extend it farther: yea the text may be read thus verye well, that all the fathers from the beginning of the worlde did drawe all thoſe giftes which they had from Chriſte: becauſe although the lawe was giuen by Moſes, yet did they not obtaine grace thereby. Notwithſtanding I haue ſhewed before what I like beſt: namely, that Iohn doth in this place compare vs with the fathers, that by this compariſon hee may amplifie that which is giuen vs. And grace for grace. It is well knowen howe Auguſtine expoundeth this place: namely that all good things are giuen vs now & then of God, and that eternall life is not repaide to our merites as a due rewarde: but that this is a poynt of more liberalitie, that God doth ſo reward the former graces, and crowne his giftes in vs. This truely is godly and finely ſaide, but it is not very fit for this place. The ſenſe were more plaine if thou ſhouldſt take this worde (anti) comparitiuely, as if he ſhoulde ſay: that whatſoeuer graces the Lorde heapeth vpon vs, they doe in like ſort flowe from this fountaine. It may alſo bee vnderſtood as a note of the finall cauſe, that we do receiue grace nowe, that the Lorde may once accompliſhe the worke of our ſaluatiō. Notwithſtanding I do rather ſubſcribe vnto their iudgement, who ſay that wee are watered with the graces which are powred out vppon Chriſte. For that which we receiue of Chriſte, hee doth not onely giue it vs as God, but the father hath beſtowed it vpon him, that it might flowe vnto vs as through a conduit. This is the oyntmente wherewith hee was annoynted, that hee myght annoynt vs all togeather with hym, whereuppon hee is called Chriſte, wee Chriſtians.

17 Becauſe the lawe was giuen by Moſes. It is a preuention wherein hee preuenteth a contrarie obiection. For Moſes was ſo greatly eſteemed amongeſt the Iewes, that they did hardly admit any thing that was contrary to him. Therfore the Euãgeliſt teacheth, how far inferior the miniſterie of Moſes was to the power of Chriſte. And alſo this compariſon doth not a little beautifie the power of Chriſte. For ſeeing that the Iewes did make ſo great account of Moſes, that they did attribute vnto him all honour that might bee, the Euangeliſt telleth them that that was but a very ſmall thing which Moſes brought, if it be compared with the grace of Chriſte. For that was otherwiſe a great let, that they thought they had that by the lawe, whiche we doe obteine by Chriſte alone. But we muſt note the contrapoſition, when he ſetteth the lawe againſt grace and truth: for his meaning is that the lawe wanted both theſe. And (truth) in my iudgement is taken for the firme and ſound ſtabilitie of things. By this worde Grace I vnderſtande the ſpirituall fulfilling of thoſe thinges, the bare letter whereof was contained in the lawe. And theſe two voyces may be referred by Hypallage both vnto one thing. As if he had ſaide that grace wherein the truth of the lawe conſiſteth, was reuealed at length in Chriſt. But becauſe the ſame ſenſe ſhall remaine, it maketh no great matter whether thou couple them together or diſtinguiſh them. This truely is certaine, that this is the Euangeliſts meaning, that the image of ſpirituall good things was only ſhadowed in the law, and that they are perfectly fulfilled in Chriſte: whereupon it followeth, if thou ſeparate the law from Chriſte, there remaineth nothing there, but vaine figures. In which reſpect Paul ſaith, Colloſ. 2. 17. That therein are the ſhadowes, & that the body is in Chriſt. Yet notwithſtãding we muſt not imagine that there was any thing ſhewed deceitfully in the lawe: for Chriſt is the ſoule which quickneth that which ſhould otherwiſe be dead in the lawe. But he ſhooteth heere at another marke, namely of what force the law is of it ſelfe, and without Chriſt. And the Euangeliſt ſaith that there is no ſounde thing found in it, vntyll wee come vnto Chriſte. Furthermore, this truth conſiſteth in that, that we obteine grace through Chriſte, which the lawe could not giue vs. Therefore I take this worde grace generally, aſwell for the free remiſſion of ſins as for the renuing of the heartte. For ſeeing that the Euangeliſt doth in this place briefly note the difference betwene the old & new Teſtament (which is deſcribed more at large Ier. 31. 31. hee cõprehẽdeth vnder this worde whatſoeuer belongeth vnto the ſpirituall righteouſneſſe. And the partes thereof are two, that God doth reconcile himſelfe vnto vs freely, by not imputing our ſinnes, and that he doth ingraue in the heartes of men his lawe, and doth frame men inwardly by his ſpirite to obey him: wherby it appeareth that the law is falſly and vnproperly expounded, if ſobeit it retaine any in it, or keepe thẽ back from comming to Chriſte.

18 No man hath ſeene God at any time. This is moſt fitly added to confirme the next ſentence withall. For the knowledge of God is the gate whereby we enter in into the fruition of all goodneſſe. Therfore ſeeing that God doth reueale himſelfe vnto vs by Chriſte alone, it followeth heereupon that we muſt deſire & craue all thinges of Chriſte. This courſe of doctrine is diligentlye to bee noted. There is nothynge that ſeemeth to bee more common, then this that euery one of vs doth receiue thoſe thinges which God doth offer vnto vs, according to the meaſure of our faith: but there are but a fewe that thinke that we muſt bring the veſſell of faith & of the knowledge of God, wherby we may draw. This, that he ſaith, that no man hath ſeene God at any time, is not only to be vnderſtoode of the externall ſight of the bodily eyes: for hee giueth vs to vnderſtande generally, ſeeing that God dwelleth in light which none can come vnto, he cānot be knowē but only in Chriſt his liuely image.

Furthermore, they doe commonly expounde this place on this wiſe, Seeing that the bare maieſtie of God is hidden in it ſelfe, it coulde neuer be comprehended, ſaue only foraſmuch as it reuealed it ſelf in Chriſte: and that therefore God was knowen to the fathers only in Chriſte. But I doe rather thinke that the Euangeliſt doth heere holde on in the compariſon: namely, how farre better our eſtate is then the eſtate of the fathers: becauſe God who layde hid before in his ſecrete glory, hath now made himſelfe after a ſort viſible. For certainely when as Chriſte is called the expreſſe image of God, that doeth appertaine vnto the peculiar benefite of the newe Teſtament. So alſo the Euangeliſt noteth in this place a certaine newe and vnwonted thing, when he ſaith that the only begotten, who was in the boſome of his father, did declare that vnto vs, which had otherwiſe beene hydden. Therefore he ſetteth foorth the manifeſtation of God which came vnto vs by the Goſpel, whereby hee diſtinguiſheth vs from the fathers, and he putteth vs before them. Like as Paule alſo intreateth more at large in the third and fourth of the ſecond to the Corinthians. For he ſaith þ there is no veale any more as vnder the lawe: but that God is ſeene plainely in the face of Chriſte. If any man thinke it an abſurde thing that the fathers ſhould be depriued of the knowledge of God, of whom the Prophetes doe euen at this day beare the light before vs: I anſweare, that that is not ſimply or preciſelie denyed to them, which is attributed vnto vs, but that there is a compariſon made (as they ſay) betweene the leſſer and the greater: for they had only little ſparkles of the liuely light, whoſe full brightneſſe doth lighten vs at this day. If any man obiect, that God was then ſeene face to face, I ſay that that ſight is not compared with ours: but as God was then wont to ſhewe himſelfe darkly, and as it were a farre of, they to whom he appeared more plainely doe ſay that they ſaw him face to face. Therfore they haue reſpect vnto their time, in the meane while they ſawe not God, ſaue only as he was couered with many boughtes. That was a ſinguler viſion, and almoſt more excellent then all the reſt whiche Moſes obteined in the mount. Exod. 33. 23. and yet God ſaith plainely, thou wilt not be able to ſee my face, thou ſhalt only ſee my backe. By which Metaphore he ſignifieth that the full time of the full and euident reuelation was not yet come.

We muſt alſo note that the fathers did alwayes turne their eyes towarde Chriſte at ſuch time as they were deſirous to ſee God. I doe not only vnderſtand by this, that they did behold God in his eternall word, but alſo that they were bente with all their minde and all the affection of their hearte vnto the promiſed reuelation of Chriſte. In which reſpect Chriſte himſelfe ſaith in the eight chapter. Abraham ſawe my day. Furthermore, that which ſucceedeth by turne, is not contrary.

Therfore

Therefore that remaineth ſure and certaine, that God who was before inuiſible hath nowe appeared in Chriſte. When as he ſaith, that the ſonne was in the boſome of the father, it is trãſlated from men, who are ſaide to admit thoſe into their boſomes, with whom they impart all their ſecrets. The place of the counſel is the breſt: therfore he teacheth that the ſonne did knowe euen the moſt ſecrete councels of the father: that wee maye knowe that we haue as it were the breaſt of God opened in the goſpel.

19 And this is the teſtimonie of Iohn, when the Iewes ſent from Hieruſalem prieſtes and Leuites, that they might aske him, who art thou?

20 And hee confeſſed, and denied not: I ſay, hee confeſſed, I am not Chriſte.

21 Then they asked him, what then? Art thou Elias? And he ſaid, I am not. Art thou a Prophete? And he anſwered, No.

22 Therefore they ſaid vnto him, who art thou? that we may giue an anſwere to thoſe that ſent vs: what ſayeſt thou of thy ſelfe?

23 I am (ſaith hee) the voice of one crying in the wilderneſſe, prepare the way of the Lorde, as ſaid Eſaias the Prophet.

19 And this is the teſtimonie. Hitherto hath the Euangeliſt recited the ſermon which Iohn made concerning Chriſte: nowe doth hee deſcend vnto a more famous teſtimonie, which was giuen to the embaſſadours of the Prieſtes that they might carry it to Ieruſalem. Therefore he ſaith that Iohn did flatly confeſſe wherefore he was ſent of God. Firſt of all there may a queſtion be asked to what ende the Prieſtes aſked him. They doe commonly thinke that becauſe they hated Chriſte they gaue a falſe kinde of honour to Iohn: but they did not as then knowe Chriſte. Otherſome ſay that Iohn pleaſed them better, becauſe he was of the order and ſtocke of the Prieſtes. But neither is this like to bee true, for ſeeing that they did promiſe to them ſelues that through Chriſte they ſhoulde haue all proſperitie, why would they haue feigned to themſelues a falſe Chriſte of their owne accorde. Therefore I think that they were moued with ſome other reaſon. They had nowe long time wanted Prophets: Iohn came abrode ſodainly and vnlooked for: All their mindes were liſted vp with an expectation. Moreouer, all of them thought that the commyng of the Meſſias drewe neere. Leaſt that the Prieſtes ſhoulde ſeeme to waxe ſluggiſhe in their office, if they ſhoulde either neglect or diſſemble ſo great a matter, they demaunde of Iohn who he is. Therefore they did nothing craftily in the beginnyng: but rather being moued with the deſire of their redemption, they deſire to knowe whether Iohn bee Chriſte, becauſe he beginneth to change the order that was vſed in the church. And yet doe not I deny but that ambition to retaine their right, was of great force with them: but yet they meant nothing leſſe then to tranſlate the honour whiche was Chriſtes, vnto another. Neyther doe they any thing which was vnmeete for the perſon which they did beare. For ſeeing that they were gouerners of the Church of God, it ſtoode them vpon to ſee that no mã did thruſt himſelfe in raſhly, that there did ſtart vp no authour of any new ſect, that the vnitie of the faith were not broken amongſt the people, that no man did bring in any new and forraine rites, Therefore it appeareth that the fame of Iohn was publiſhed abrode, which mooued, the mindes of all men. And this was gouerned by the wonderfull prouidence of God, that this teſtimonie might be the more famous.

20. And he confeſſed. That is, he confeſſed plainely and without any doubting or feigning. The worde confeſſe is taken generally in the former place, that hee declared the matter as it was. It is repeated againe to expreſſe the forme of the confeſsion. Therfore he anſwered flatly, that he was not Chriſt.

21 Art thou Elias. Why doe they rather call him Elias then Moſes? Becauſe they did vnderſtande by the Prophete Malachie, that Elias ſhoulde be as the day ſtarre of the Meſsias when he did riſe. Yet do they aske this queſtion by reaſon of an opinion which they had falſly taken vpon them. For whereas they thought that the ſoule of man did ſtirre out of one body into another, whileſt that Malachie the Prophet ſaith, that Elias ſhoulde be ſent, they imagined that that Elias who was in the time of Achab, ſhould come. Wherefore Iohn anſwered worthily and truly, that he was not Elias, for hee ſpeaketh according to theyr meaning. But Chriſte out of the true interpretation of the Prophete affirmeth that he was Elias. Art thou a Prophete? Eraſmus doth falſly reſtraine this vnto Chriſte. For whereas the article is added it is of no force in this place: and the Embaſſadours doe ſufficiently declare afterwardes, that they meant another Prophete then Chriſte, for they gather it thus, If thou be neither Chriſte, nor Elias, nor a Prophet. Therefore wee ſee that they meant diuers perſons. Otherſome doe thinke that they asked him whether he were any one of the old Prophets: but yet I doe not like this expoſition. They doe rather hereby meane the office of Iohn, whether he were ordained a Prophete of God or no. Whileſt that he denyeth this, he lyeth not for modeſties ſake, but hee doth ſeparate himſelfe from the number of the Prophetes ſincerely and from his hearte. And yet this his anſwere is not contrary to the title whiche Chriſte giueth him. Chriſte adorneth Iohn with the title of a Prophete: yea hee addeth that hee is more then a Prophete. But by theſe wordes hee doeth nothing els but purchaſe credite and authoritie to his doctrine: and doth alſo extoll the excellencie of the office which was enioyned him. But Iohn reſpecteth another thing in this place: namely, that he had no particular commandement, as it was the ordinary cuſtome of the Prophetes: but hee was onely Chriſtes cryer. This ſhall appeare more plainely by a ſimilitude. Whoſoeuer they bee that are ſent Embaſſadours about light matters, they haue the name and authoritie of Embaſſadours, if ſoeeit they haue particular things giuen them in charge. Such were all the Prophetes, who being furniſhed with particuler Propheſies, did exerciſe the Propheticall function. If there be any matter of weight in hande, and two Embaſſadors be ſent, the one whereof doth tell that he will be heere by and by, who ſhall ſpeake of all the matter, and this latter haue the buſineſſe giuen him in charge to diſpatche: ſhall not the former Embaſſage be accounted a portion and part of the principall Embaſſage? So fared it with Iohn, vnto whom God had enioyned nothing els, but to prepare Diſciples for Chriſt. And this ſenſe is gathered out of the circumſtance of the place and the text. For we muſt marke the contrary member, which followeth by and by. I am not (ſaith hee) a Prophete, but a voyce crying in the wilder- wilderneſſe. Wherefore the difference dependeth hereupon, that a voice crying that a way may be prepared for the Lorde, is not a Prophete hauing a diuers function and ſuch as is proper to him, but a Miniſter that is vnder another (that I may ſo ſpeake) and his doctrine a preparation to heare another maſter. By this meanes although Iohn was more excellent then all the Prophetes, yet is he not a prophet.

23 The voyce of one crying in the wilderneſſe. Becauſe Iohn had taken the office of a teacher vpon him raſhly, vnleſſe hee had beene endued with a miniſterie, he ſheweth what his function is, and he proueth the ſame by the teſtimonie of Eſay. Whereupon it followeth that he did nothing but that whiche he was commaunded by God to doe. Eſay ſpeaketh not only in that place of Iohn, but promiſing the reſtoring of the church he foretelleth that it ſhall come to paſſe that theſe ioyfull voyces ſhall be hearde, commaunding to prepare a way for the Lorde. And although he meaneth the comming of God, when he ſhoulde bring back the people from the Babylonicall exile: yet the true fulfilling was the comming of Chriſte in the fleſhe. Therefore the chiefe of thoſe cryers who foretolde that the Lorde drew neere, was Iohn. Furthermore it is friuolous, craftily to play the Philoſophers concerning this woorde voyce which ſome doe. Iohn is called a voyce, becauſe the function of crying was inioyned him. Eſay as truly calleth the miſerable wayſtneſſe of the Churche a wilderneſſe, which ſeemed to denie a returne vnto the people: as if hee ſhoulde ſay that the way was ſtopped againſt the people that was in captiuitie, but the Lorde would finde a way through places where there was no way. But that viſible wilderneſſe wherein Iohn preached, was a figure and ſimilitude of the wayſt wilderneſſe, whiche tooke away hope of deliuerance, if you conſider vppon this ſimilitude, you ſhall eaſily ſee that the wordes of the Prophet are not wreſted. For God ſo framed all thinges, that he ſet the glaſſe of this propheſie before the eyes of the people that was aſtonied with the miſerie which they ſuffered.

24 Furthermore they that were ſent were of the Phariſes.

25 Therefore they asked him and ſaid vnto him, why then doeſt thou baptiſe, if thou bee not Chriſte, neither Elias, neither a Prophete?

26 Iohn anſwered them, ſaying, I baptiſe in water: but there ſtandeth one amongſt you whom yee knowe not:

27 He it is who comming after mee, was preferred before me; whoſe shewe latchet I am not worthie to vnlooſe.

28 Theſe thinges were done in Bethabara beyond Iordan.

24 Were of the Phariſes. He ſaith that they were Phariſes, who were then chiefe gouernours in the Churche: that wee may knowe that they were no contemptible perſons of the company of the Leuites, but men that were endued with authoritie. For this cauſe was it that they moued a queſtion concerning Baptiſme. The common Miniſters woulde haue beene contented with any kinde of anſwere: but theſe becauſe they coulde not picke out that which they would, doe accuſe Iohn of raſhnes becauſe he dare bring in a new cuſtome.

25 Why then doeſt thou baptiſe. When they make theſe three degrees they ſeeme to reaſon very fitly, if thou be neither Chriſte, nor Elias, nor a Prophete. For it is not for euery man to inſtitute the vſe of Baptiſme. All power ſhoulde haue beene in the hande of the Meſsias: they had conceiued this opinion of Elias who was to come, that hee ſhoulde begin to reſtore the kingdome and Churche. They doe alſo graunt to the Prophetes of God, that they may execute the function which is inioyned them. Therefore they conclude that it is vnlawfull noueltie, that Iohn doth baptiſe, ſeeing that he is not inſtituted of God to bee a publike perſon. But they are deceiued in this, that they doe not acknowlege him to be that Elias of whom Malachie maketh mention: although hee deny that he was that Elias of whom they dreamed.

Mal. 4.5.

26 I baptiſe with water. This might haue beene ſufficient to redreſſe their errour: but that admonition which is otherwiſe excellent doth no whit profite the deafe. For ſeeing he ſendeth them to Chriſt, and doth nowe ſay plainely that he is now preſent, it is heereby euident that he is not only appointed of God to bee a miniſter of Chriſte, but that hee is the true Elias who is ſent to teſtifie of the renouatiõ of the church. Furthermore, the perfect contradiction is not expreſſed in this place: becauſe the ſpirituall baptiſme of Chriſte is not plainly ſet againſt the externall baptiſme of Iohn: but that latter member of the baptiſme of the ſpirite may eaſily be vnderſtoode, and the Euangeliſt putteth them both downe a little after. And there be two pointes of this anſwere: that Iohn did nothing but that which he might lawfully doe: becauſe hee hath Chriſt to bee the authour of his baptiſme in whom conſiſteth the truth of the ſigne. Secondly, that he hath nothing but the adminiſtration of the externall ſigne, and that al the force and efficacie is in the power of Chriſte alone. So that he defendeth his baptiſme, foraſmuch as the trueth thereof dependeth vppon another: and in the meane ſeaſõ hee extolleth the dignitie of Chriſte, by taking from himſelfe the power of the ſpirite, that all men may looke vnto Chriſte alone. This is the beſt temperature where the miniſter doth ſo borowe all that authority which he hath of Chriſte, that hee doth alſo referre it vnto him, attributing all thinges vnto him alone. But it came to paſſe through too light an error, that they thought þ the baptiſme of Iohn was cõtrary to ours. For Iohn doth not here diſpute of the profite and vſe of his baptiſme: but he doth only cõpare his perſon with the perſon of Chriſt. Like as at this day if the queſtion be aſked what is our office, & what is the office of Chriſt in baptiſme: we muſt confeſſe that Chriſt alone doth perfourme that which baptiſme doth repreſent, and that we haue nothing but the bare adminiſtration of the ſigne. There is a double kinde of ſpeeche vſed in the ſcripture concerning the Sacraments. For in ſome place it teacheth that it is the lauare of regeneration, that their ſinnes are waſhed away, that we are ingrafted into the body of Chriſte, that our olde man is crucified, and that wee riſe againe vnto newnes of life. And then truely doth hee couple the power of Chriſte with the miniſterie of man: as truly the miniſter is nothing els but the hande of Chriſt. Therfore ſuche phraſes doe not ſhewe what man giueth of himſelf, but what Chriſte bringeth to paſſe by the man and the ſigne as his inſtrumentes. But becauſe wee fall eaſily into ſuperſtition, and ſecondly, becauſe men do pull to themſelues the honour which they take from God, according to their naturall pride, therefore to the ende the ſcripture may ſubdue & tame this ſacriligious pride, it doth ſometimes diſtinguiſhe the miniſters from Chriſt, as in this place: that we may know that the miniſters are or can doe nothing. Amongſt you. He toucheth their ſluggiſhneſſe by the way, becauſe they knewe not Chriſt whom they ought chiefly to reſpect And he doth alwayes beate in this diligently, that no part of his miniſterie can be knowen, vntill they come vnto the authour himſelfe. Hee ſaith that Chriſte ſtandeth in the midſt of them, that he may ſtirre them vp to know him. The ſumme is this, he endeuoureth by all meanes poſſible to bring to paſſe that that honour whiche is vntruely giuen to him, may not darken the excellencie of Chriſte. And it is likely that hee had theſe ſayings often in his mouth, when he ſaw that he was out of meaſure extolled in the peruerſe iudgements of men.

27 VVho comming after mee. Heere he ſaith two thinges, that Chriſte came after him in reſpect of time, but yet was hee far before him in the degree of dignitie: becauſe the father preferred him before all men. Hee will adde the third ſhortly after, that Chriſt was therefore preferred before all men, becauſe he excelleth all other by good right.

28 Theſe thinges were done in Bethabara. The naming of the place ſerueth not only to the credite of the hiſtorie, but alſo that wee may knowe that this anſwere was giuen in a famous aſſemblie of men. For there were many that came together vnto Iohn his baptiſme: and this was his ordinarie place wherein he baptiſed. And they thinke that it was a place to paſſe ouer Iordã: frõ whẽce they do alſo fet the name: for they do interpret it an houſe of paſſage, vnleſſe peraduenture the opinion of thoſe men doe better pleaſe you, who referre this vnto the memorable paſſage of the people when as God ſet open a way through the middeſt of the waters vnder Ioſua. Otherſom do thinke that it ought rather to be read Betharaba. The worde. Bethania was heere put in by ſome ignorantly. For wee ſhall ſee afterwarde howe nigh Bethania was vnto Hieruſalem. But the ſituation of Bethabara, which thoſe who write of the ſituation of places do deſcribe, doth very well agree with the woordes of the Euangeliſt: although I doe not muche ſtande aboute the pronounciation of the worde.

29 The next day Iohn ſawe Ieſus comming vnto him. and he ſaith, behold the lambe of God that taketh away the ſinne of the world.

30 This is hee of whom I ſaid, after me there commeth a man, who was put before me: becauſe he was more excellent then I.

31 And I knewe him not: but that he might be manifeſted vnto Iſrael, therefore came I baptiſing with water.

32 And Iohn teſtified, ſaying: I ſaw the ſpirite of God deſcending like to a Doue frõ heauen, and he remained vpon him.

33 And I knew him not: but hee that ſent mee to baptiſe with water, hee ſaide vnto me: vpon whom thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit deſcending, and remaining vpon him, this is he that baptiſeth in the holy ſpirite.

34 Therefore I ſawe, and teſtified that this is the ſonne of God.

29 The next day. It is without doubt that Iohn had ſpoken before fore of the reuelation of the Meſſias: but when Chriſt was come, hee woulde that his proclamation ſhoulde bee knowen in a ſhorte time: and the time was now at hand wherein Chriſte ſhoulde make an ende of his miniſterie: like as the morning doth quickly depart, when as the Sun is once riſen. Therfore foraſmuche as he had teſtified before to the Prieſtes that were ſent, that he was nowe preſent, and was conuerſaunt in the middeſt of the people from whom the truth and force of his baptiſme was to be fet, the next day after he ſhewed him openly. For theſe two thinges beyng ioyned together by the continuall courſe of tyme, are of greater force to moue their mindes. This is the ſame reaſon why Chriſte doth ſhew himſelfe vnto him. Beholde the lambe of God. He declareth the principall office of Chriſte briefly, but plainely: namely, that hee doth reconcile men vnto GOD, by taking away the ſinnes of the worlde. Chriſte beſtoweth other benefites vpon vs, but this is the chiefeſt, and that whereuppon the reſt doe depend, that by pacifyinge the wrath of God, he maketh vs to be accounted iuſt and pure. For al the ſtreames of good thinges doe flowe from this fountaine, that God doth receiue vs into fauour by not imputing our ſinnes. Therefore to the ende that Iohn may bring vs vnto Chriſt, he beginneth at the free pardon of ſinnes which we haue through him.

Furthermore, in this worde (lambe) he alludeth vnto the olde ſacrifices of the lawe. He had to doe with the Iewes, who being accuſtomed vnto ſacrifices, coulde no otherwiſe bee taught concerning the purgyng of ſinnes, then by ſettyng a ſacrifice before them. And whereas there were diuers kindes, there is but one onely mentioned in this place by Synecdoche, and it is likely that Iohn had reſpect vnto the Paſchal lambe. To be briefe, we muſt note, that Iohn vſed this phraſe, whiche was more fit and forcible to teache the Iewes. Like as we at this daye doe better vnderſtand through the vſe of Baptiſme, of what force the remiſſion of ſinnes is, purchaſed by the death of Chriſte, when wee heare that wee are waſhed and purged thereby from our filthineſſe. In the meane whyle ſeeyng that the Iewes did commonly thinke ſuperſtitiouſly of the ſacrifices, he correcteth that fault by the way, tellyng them to what end all theſe did ſerue. This was the worſt abuſe that was in their ſacrifices, that they did repoſe all their confidence in the ſignes. Therfore when Iohn ſetteth Chriſte before them, hee doeth teſtifie that hee is the lambe of God. VVhereby he giueth them to vnderſtand, that all the ſacrifices which the Iewes did offer were not able to make ſatisfaction for ſinnes, but that they were only figures, the truth whereof was ſhewed in Chriſte himſelfe. He putteth ſinne in the ſinguler number, for all maner of iniquitie: as if he ſhould ſay, that all maner of vnrighteouſnes which doth alienate God from men, is taken away through Chriſt. And when he ſaith the ſinne of the worlde, he extendeth this grace generally vnto all mankinde, leaſt the Iewes ſhoulde thinke that he was only ſent to bee their redeemer. But we doe gather hereby that all the worlde is bounde with the ſame giltineſſe: and becauſe all mortall men without exception are giltie of vnrighteouſneſſe before God, they haue neede of reconciliation. Therefore when Iohn ſpeaketh generally of the ſinne of the worlde, his meaning is to bring vs to ſome feeling of our owyne miſerie, and to exhort vs to ſeeke ſome remedie.

Now

Now in that the benefite is offered vnto all men, it is our duetie to imbrace the ſame: ſo that all men may be fully aſſured that there is nothing that hindereth them from finding reconciliation in Chriſt, if ſobe it they haue faith, to be their guide, to bring thē vnto him. Furthermore, he ſetteth downe the only way and meanes to take away ſinnes. VVee knowe, that from the beginning of the worlde, when as their own conſciences did accuſe them, they went about buſily to deſerue pardō. Thēce came ſo many kinds of ſacrifices, whereby they thought God was pacified, yet were they deceiued. I confeſſe truly that all corrupt rites of pacifying, came from an holy beginning: namely, becauſe God had ordeined ſacrifices to direct men vnto Chriſte. But notwithſtanding euerie man had inuented to himſelfe a way of his owne, whereby to pleaſe God: but Iohn calleth vs backe vnto Chriſte alone, and teacheth vs that God is only mercifull vnto vs through his Benefite: becauſe he alone taketh away ſinnes. VVherefore hee leaueth nothing for ſinners to doe, but only to flie vnto Chriſte, whereby he ouerthroweth all humane ſatisfactions, all ſacrifices and redemptions: ſo that they are nothing els but wicked inuentions of the Diuell, founde out by craſte. The woorde (taketh) may bee expounded two maner of wayes: either that Chriſte tooke that burden vpon him wherewith we were oppreſſed (as it is ſaid that he bare our ſinnes vpon the tree: and Iſayas ſaith that the correction of our peace was laid vpon him:) or that he doth aboliſh ſinnes. But becauſe this latter dependeth vpon the former, therefore I receiue them both willingly: namely, that Chriſte doth take away ſinnes by bearing them. Therefore although ſinne doe ſtill remaine in vs, yet as touching the iudgement of God it is none, becauſe it is aboliſhed by the grace of Chriſt, and is not imputed vnto vs. Neither doeth that diſpleaſe mee, which Chryſoſtome noteth, that by the verbe of the preſentenſe is ſignified the continuance: for the ſatisfactiō which hee once made, is alwayes of force. And he doth not only teach ſimplie þ Chriſt taketh away ſin, but he ſetteth downe alſo the maner howe: namely, becauſe he hath reconciled the father vnto vs by the benefite of his death. For this doth he meane by the woorde lambe. Let vs therfore knowe that we are then reconciled to God by the grace of Chriſte, if we runne vnto his death, and doe perſwade our ſelues, that he being faſtened vnto the croſſe, is the only propitiatorie ſacrifice, wherby all our giltines was taken away.

30 This is he of whom I ſaide. Hee briefly comprehendeth all thynges, when he affirmeth that Chriſt is he, who, as he ſaid, was to be preferred before him. For it followeth hereupon that Iohn was nothing els but a cryer ſent for his ſake: whereby it is euident againe that Chriſt is the Meſſias. Furthermore, he reckoneth vp three things in this place. For when he ſaith that the man commeth after him, he giueth vs to vnderſtand that he was before him in reſpect of time, that he might prepare a way for Chriſt, according to the teſtimonie of Malachie: Behold I ſend mine angel before my face. VVhen he ſaith that he was preferred before him, this is referred vnto the glory, wherewith God did adorne his ſonne, whē he came abrode into the world to fulfil the functiō of a redeemer. The reaſō is at lēgth added, becauſe Chriſt doth far exceed Iohn. Therfore þ honor came not by chaunce which the father gaue him, but was due to his eternall Maieſtie. But I haue touched this phraſe a little before: namely, that hee was preferred before him, becauſe he was the firſt.

31 And I knewe him not. Leaſt any man ſhoulde ſuſpect that this teſtimonie was giuen either for friendſhip or fauours ſake, he preuenteth the doubt, denying that hee had any other knowledge of Chriſte, ſaue that which he had from God. Therefore the ſumme is, that Iohn doth neither ſpeake of himſelfe, neither to winne mans fauour, but as he was inſpired by the ſpirite, and commaunded of God. I came (ſaith hee) baptiſing with water: that is, I was called and ordeined vnto this function, that I might reueale him vnto Iſrael. VVhich thing the Euangeliſte expoundeth and confirmeth afterwarde more plainely, whileſt that hee bringeth in him teſtifying, that he knoweth Chriſt by the oracle of God. Hee doth there plainely expreſſe that he was ſent for that cauſe, whiche is contained in theſe wordes, I came to baptiſe: for it is only the callyng of God which maketh the lawfull miniſters of the Church: for whatſoeuer hee be that thruſteth in himſelfe, of what learning or eloquence ſoeuer he be, he deſerueth no authoritie, becauſe he hath not God for his authour. And ſeeing that it was requiſite that Iohn ſhoulde bee ſent of God, that he might baptiſe lawfully, gather hence that it is not left vnto the will and pleaſure of man to inſtitute Sacraments: but that this right appertaineth to God alone. Like as Chriſte in another place, to the end he may proue the Baptiſme of Iohn, he demaundeth whether it be from heauen, or of men.

32 I ſawe the ſpirite deſcending like a Doue. It is an vnproper or figuratiue kinde of ſpeech, for with what eyes coulde he ſee the ſpirite? But becauſe the Doue was a certaine and vnfallible token of the preſence of the ſpirite, ſhee is called the ſpirite by Metonymia, not that ſhe is in deed the ſpirite, but that ſhee doth repreſent him ſo muche as mans capacitie dothe beare. And this tranſlation is common in the Sacraments, for why doth Chriſte call bread his body, but only becauſe the name of the thing is aptly tranſlated vnto the ſigne? eſpecially whereas the ſigne is a true and alſo effectuall pledge, whereby we may be certified that the thing it ſelfe which is ſignified, is perfourmed vnto vs. Yet mayeſt thou not thinke that the ſpirite was included vnder the Doue, who fulfilleth heauen and earth, but that he was preſent by his power: that Iohn might knowe that hee did not ſee that ſight in vaine. Like as wee knowe that the body of Chriſte is not tyed to the bread, but yet we do inioy the participation thereof.

Nowe heere may a queſtion bee moued why the ſpirite did then appeare vnder the ſhape of a doue. VVe muſt alwayes hold the proportion of the ſignes with the truth. VVhen as the ſpirite was giuen to the Act. 2. 3. Apoſtles, there appeared firie and clouen tongues, becauſe the preaching of the Goſpell ſhould be ſpread abroade throughout all tongues, and ſhoulde haue firie force. But God meant in this place openly to repreſent that mildneſſe of Chriſte, which Iſaias commendeth Smoking flaxe Iſay. 42. 1 ſhall hee not quenche, and a ſhaken reede ſhall hee not breake. For the ſpirite was then firſt ſeen to diſcend vpon him, not that he was voyd therof before, but becauſe hee was then called vnto dignitie as it were with that ſolemne rite. For we knowe that he laid hid for the ſpace of thirtie yeres like to a priuate perſon: becauſe the time of his manifeſtation was not yet come. And when hee woulde manifeſt himſelf, he began with baptiſme. For he receiued the ſpirite then, not ſo much for himſelfe, as for his. And for this cauſe, that comming downe was viſible, that wee may knowe that there remaineth in him ſtore of all thoſe giftes which wee want And this may we eaſily gather out of the wordes of Iohn Baptiſt. For in that he ſaith, vpon whom you ſee the ſpirite deſcending, and remaining vpon him, hee it is that baptiſeth with the ſpirite: it is as much as if he ſhould ſay that the ſpirite appeared to this ende in a viſible ſhape, & reſted vpon Chriſt, that hee myght water all his with his fulneſſe. I touched before briefly, what it is to baptiſe with the ſpirite : namely, to giue Baptiſme his effect, leaſte it bee vaine and voyde : which thing the ſpirite doth by his power.

33 Vpon whom thou ſhalt ſee. Here ariſeth an harde queſtion. For if Iohn knewe not Chriſte why doth he refuſe to ſuffer him to come to his baptiſme : he woulde not ſurely ſay thus to one whome hee knewe not, I ought rather to bee baptiſed of thee. Certaine doe anſwere, that he knew him ſo farre, that he reuerenced him as an excellent Prophete, he knewe not that hee was the ſonne of God. But this is a colde anſwere. For euerie man muſt obey the calling of God without reſpect of perſons. Therfore ther is no dignitie of man or excellencie, which ought to hinder vs in our office. Therefore Iohn had done iniurie to God, and his baptiſme, if hee had ſaide thus to any other ſaue onely to the ſonne of God. Therefore it muſt needs be that hee knew Chriſt firſt. Firſt wee muſt note, that we intreate in this place of that knowledge which commeth by familiaritie and continuall vſe. Although therefore hee knewe Chriſte ſo ſoone as hee ſawe him, yet doth not this ceaſe to bee true, that one of them did not knowe another, after the common cuſtome of men : becauſe the beginning of the knowledge came from God, yet neuertheleſſe this queſtion ſeemeth not to bee throughly anſwered : for he ſaith that the ſight of the ſpirite was the marke of the ſhowing? But hee had not as yet ſeene the ſpirite when hee ſpeaketh vnto him as vnto the ſonne of God. I doe willingly ſubſcribe vnto their iudgement, who thinke that this ſigne was added for confirmations ſake, and that not ſo much for Iohns ſake, as for all our ſakes. Onely, Iohn ſaw the ſpirite, but for other rather then for himſelfe. Bucer citeth that place of Moſes fitly: This ſhall bee to you a ſigne, that hauing gone three dayes iourney, yee ſhall ſacrifice vnto mee in the mount. Truly, when they went foorth they did now know that God was the guide and gouernor of their iourney: but this was (as they ſay) a confirmation fet from the latter. So that this was added as an ouerplus vnto the former reuelation, which was ſhewed vnto Iohn. Exo. 3. 12.

34 I ſawe and teſtified, He meaneth that he vttereth nothing that was doubtfull : becauſe God would haue thoſe thinges to bee well and throughly knowen vnto him, whereof he ſhoulde afterwarde bee a witneſſe vnto the worlde. And this is worthie the noting, that he did teſtifie, that Chriſte, was the ſonne of God, becauſe Chriſt ſhould be the giuer of the holy ghoſt, becauſe the honor and office to reconcile men vnto God, belongeth to none other but to him alone,

36 And when he ſaw Ieſus walking, he ſaide, beholde the lambe of God, 37 These two diſciples hearde him ſpeake, and they followed Ieſus.

38 VVhen Ieſus turned backe, and ſawe them following him, he ſaith vnto them, what ſeeke yee? They ſaide vnto him, Rhabbi (which if thou interprete, is expounded) maſter where abideſt thou?

39 Hee ſaith vnto them, Come and ſee, & they came and ſaw where he abode, and they tarried with him that day: and it was almoſt the tenth houre.

36 Beholde the lambe of God. Heere appeareth that more plainely which I ſaide before, that Iohn ſo ſoone as he perceiued that hee drewe neere vnto the ende of his courſe, he was wont to be earneſt in this point, that he might deliuer vp the light vnto Chriſte. His conſtancie likewiſe maketh his teſtimonie to be of greater credit. But in this that one day after another, he ſtandeth ſo diligently vppon the repetition of Chriſt his commendation, he declareth thereby that his courſe was now finiſhed.

Furthermore, we ſee heere how ſlender and baſe the beginning of the Church was. Iohn truly prepared diſciples for Chriſt: but Chriſte doth now at length begin to gather together the Church. Furthermore, hee hath onely two obſcure men that were of low eſtate: but this alſo ſerueth to the ſetting foorth of his glory, that hee doth ſpreade abroade his kingdome myraculouſly in a ſhort time, not being holpen with mans riches, or a mightie hand. Furthermore, wee muſt note whether he leadeth men principally: namely, that they may finde remiſſion of ſinnes in him. And like as Chriſt did of ſet purpoſe offer himſelf vnto the diſciples, that they might come vnto him: ſo doth he nowe gentlie encourage and exhort them. Neither doth he ſtay till they ſpeake firſt, but hee aſketh, VVhat ſeeke yee? This ſo faire & gentle a bidding, which was once made vnto two, doth now appertaine vnto all. VVherefore wee neede not to feare that Chriſt will withdraw himſelfe from vs, or will deny vnto vs an eaſie acceſſe, if ſo be it he ſee vs deſirous to come vnto him, & to make towards him: but that he will rather ſtretch foorth his hande to helpe vs. And how ſhall he not meet thoſe that come vnto him, who ſeeketh the wandering, and thoſe that goe aſtray, that hee may bring them into the way?

38 Rhabbi. This name was common to thoſe that were potentates and endued with any honor: but in this place the Euangeliſt noteth an other vſe of his time: namely, that by this name they did ſalute doctors & interpreters of the word of God. Although therfore they do not yet acknowledge Chriſt to be the only maſter of the church, yet being moued with the title that Iohn giueth him, they account him in ſteede of a Prophet & Doctor: which is the firſt ſtep vnto readineſſe to bee taught, VVhere abideſt thou? By this example are we taught, that wee muſt take ſuch a taſt of Chriſte out of the firſt rudiments of the church, as may inflame vs with a deſire to goe forwarde. Secondly that wee muſt not bee contented with a bare and vaniſhing ſight, but we muſt deſire to come to his houſe, that he may receiue vs as his geſts. For there are many that doe only ſmell the Goſpel a farre off, and ſo they ſuffer Chriſt to vaniſh away ſodainly, and all that to eſcape them whatſoeuer they had learned concerning Chriſt. And although they were not then made his continual diſciples, yet queſtionleſſe hee inſtructed thē more fully that night, that he might haue them wholy addicted vnto him ſhortly after.

39 And it was almoſt. That is,it was almeſt night,becauſe it was with in two houres of the ſetting of the Sunne. For they did then diuide the day into twelue houres,which were longer in Semmer and ſtorter in winter. Yet out of this circumſtance of time we gather, that theſe two diſciples deſired ſo earneſtly to heare Chriſte,and to knowe him better, that they were nothing carefull for their nights lodging. But we for the moſt part are much vnlike vnto them,who driue of without ende,from day to day: becauſe it is neuer commodious for vs to follow Chriſte.

40 Andrewe the brother of Simon Peter was one of the two that heard of Iohn,& followed him.

41 Hee founde his brother Simon firſt: and ſaid vnto him,we haue found the Meſſias, which by interpreting is called Chriſte.

42 Therefore he brought him vnto Ieſus. Ieſus beholding him ſaid,Thou art Simon the ſonne of Iona,thou ſhalt be called Cephas:which is if thou expound it,a ſtone.

40 Andrewe. The drift of the Euangeliſt vnto the end of the chapter is this,that we may know how diſciples were brought vnto chriſt by litle & litle. Here he ſpeaketh of Peter,he wil ſpeake afterward of Philip & Nathanael. In that that Andrew bringeth his brother by and by,is expreſſed þ nature of faith which choketh not the light within,but doth rather ſpread it abrode on euery ſide. Andrew hath ſcarce one ſparkle, & yet doth he lighten his brother therewith. VVoe be vnto vs therfore,if when we be lightened we doe not indeuour to make others partakers of the ſame grace. Yea we may note two thinges in Andrew, which Iſayas requireth of the children of God: namely,that euery man do take his neighbour by the hand:and then that he ſay: Come let vs goe vp into the mountaine of the Lord,& he ſhal teache vs. For Andrew reacheth out his hand:but in the meane while he doth it to this end that he may be his ſchoolefelow in the ſchoole of Chriſt. Furthermore,we muſt note God his purpoſe,that he would haue Peter who was about to be the far more excellent,to bee brought vnto the knowledge of Chriſt, by the meanes and miniſterie of Andrew. Let none of vs how excellent ſoeuer he be,refuſe to be taught of him that is our inferiour. For he ſhall bee grieuouſly puniſhed for his churliſhnes and pride,that wil not vouchſafe to come vnto Chriſte for the contempt wherewith he deſpiſeth man. Eſay.42.3

41 VVe haue found the Meſſias. The Euãgeliſt turneth this worde Meſſias into Greeke,that he might make that knowen vnto all the world,which was kept cloſe amongſt the Iewes. Furthermore this was the ordinary title of kings,like as they were annointed ſolẽly. But in the mean while they were not ignorãt,that there was one king that ſhould be annoynted of God,vnder whõ they ſhould hope for perfect & eternal felicitie: eſpecially ſeeing that they had tried the vnſtable earthly kingdome of Dauid. Furthermore,as God rayſed them vp being brought down & oppreſſed with diuers ſorrowes,vnto the waiting for the Meſſias, ſo did hee more manifeſtly declare vnto them that his cõming drew neere. For the propheſie of Daniel excelleth the reſt,& is more plain as touching the name of Chriſt,for he doth not attribute the ſame vnto kings, as doe the prophets before him,but he maketh it proper vnto the Redeemer only. Here by it came to paſſe that when as mention was made of the Meſſias,or of Chriſte,they vnderſtood none other ſaue the redeemer. The greater wõder is it that he was receiued of ſo few,who was ſo muche deſired of all men,& was in the mouth of al men.

42 Thou art Simon &c. Chriſt giueth Simon a name, not (as it falleth out commonly amongſt men) according to any euent that is paſt, or according to that that is ſeene, but becauſe hee was about to make him a ſtone: firſt hee ſaith. Thou art Simon the ſonne of Iona. He ſetteth downe the name of his father vnperfectly, which is cõmon enough when as names are tranſlated into other tongues. For it ſhall manifeſtly appeare out of the laſt chapter, that he was the ſonne of Iohanna or Iohn. And all this is aſmuch as if he ſhould ſay that he ſhalbe another maner of perſon thẽ he is now. Neither doth he make mention of his father for honors ſake: but he affirmeth that for all that he came of a baſe ſtock, and was of no eſtimation among men: yet ſhould this no whit hinder him frõ making a man of inuincible force. Therfore the Euangeliſt reciteth this as a propheſie, that Simon had a new ſirname giuen him. I meane a propheſie, not ſo much becauſe Chriſt foreſaw that Peter wold be conſtant in the faith, but becauſe he foretold what he would giue him. Therfore he ſetteth foorth with a title now, the grace wherewith he determined to indue him afterward: for this cauſe hee ſaith not, that this is his ſirname now, but he deferreth it vntill the time to come. Thou ſhalt be called Cephas, ſaith he. It is meete that all the godly bee Peters, or ſtones, that beeing founded in Chriſte, they may be made fit to build vp the temple of god: but he alone is called ſo, becauſe of his ſinguler excellencie. In the meane while the papiſts are to be laughed at, who put him in Chriſts ſteed, that he may be the foundation of the Church. As if hee & the reſt were not founded in Chriſt. But they are twice ridiculous whileſt that they make a ſtone the head. For ther is extãt in the repetitions of Gratianus, a doltiſhe canon vnder the name of Anacletus, which changing the Hebrewe name with the Greeke, & making no difference betweene Cephale & Cepha, thinketh that Peter was made by this name the head of the church. Furthermore, Cepha is rather a Chaldean then an Hebrew name: but that was the vſuall kinde of pronunciation after the captiuitie of Babylon. Therefore there is no doubtfull thing in the wordes of Chriſt. For hee promiſeth Peter that which he would neuer haue hoped for: and therein doth he ſet foorth his grace vnto al ages, that his former eſtate can no whit hurt him, ſeeing that this excellent title declareth that he was made a new man.

43 The next day Ieſus would goe foorth into Galilee, and he founde Phillip, and hee ſaid vnto him, follow me.

44 And Phillip was of Bethſaida, the citie of andrew and Peter.

45 Phillip found Nathanael, and he ſaith vnto him, we haue found Ieſus the ſonne of Ioſeph of Nazareth: of whom Moſes writ in the lawe, and the prophetes.

46 Nathanael ſaide vnto him, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Phillip ſaid vnto him, come and ſee.

43 Follow me. Foraſmuch as the minde of Phillip was inflamed with this one word, to follow Chriſt, we do thereby gather what great force there is in the word: but it doth not appeare in all alike. For god doth cal many, but without fruit, as if he did only ſtrike their eares with a vaine ſound. Therefore the externall preaching of the worde, is of it ſelfe vnfruitfull, ſaue only that it doth wound the reprobate to death, ỹ they may be made inexcuſeable before god. But whẽas ỹ ſecret working of ỹ ſpirit doth doth quicken the ſame, it muſt needs be that all the ſenſes muſt ſo be moued, that men may be redie to follow whither ſoeuer God calleth them. Therefore we muſt deſire Chriſte that hee wyll ſhewe forth the ſame power of the goſpel in vs. But Phillip followed Chriſte after a particuler maner: for he is commaunded to follow not only as euery one of vs, but as a fellowe and vnſeparable companion: yet notwithſtanding this calling is a figure of the calling of all men.

Itee was of Bethſaida. It ſeemeth that the name of this citie is put in of ſet purpoſe, to the ende the goodneſſe of God may appeare more manyfeſtly in the three Apoſtles. We knowe how ſharpely Chriſt threatned and curſed that Citie els where. Wherefore in that ſome of that wicked and curſed nation are receiued by God into fauour: it is to bee accounted, as if they had been brought out of hell. And whereas hee vouchſafeth to aduaunce thoſe vnto ſo great dignitie, whome he had deliuered out of that deepe dungeon, that hee maketh them Apoſtles, that is a moſt excellent benefite, and a benefite worthie to bee remembred.

45 Phillip founde Nathanael. Howſoeuer proude men do deſpiſe theſe young beginnings and childhoode of the Churche, yet it is our dutie to ſee and eſpie greater glory of God in them, then it the eſtate of the kingdome of Chriſte had been mightie and very gorgeous from the begynning. For we know what great aboundance did ſpring by and by from this little ſeede. Furthermore, wee ſee that there was heere in Phillip the ſame deſire to edifie, that was before in Andrew. We ſee furthermore his modeſtie, that he coueteth and goeth about no other thing ſaue only to haue ſome to learne with him of the cõmon maſter of al men.

We haue founde Ieſus. It appeareth hereby what a ſlender portion of faith was in Philip, that he cannot ſpeake foure wordes concerning Chriſte, but he intermingleth two groſſe errours. Hee maketh him the ſonne of Ioſeph, and falſly aſſigneth vnto him Nazareth for his countrie: and yet notwithſtanding becauſe he coueteth ſincerely to profite his brother and to make Chriſte knowen, God doth alowe this his diligence, and it hath alſo proſperous ſucceſſe. Wee muſt euery one of vs doe our indeuour to keepe our ſelues within our bonds. Neyther doth the Euangeliſt recite this as a thing worthie commendation in Phillip, that hee doeth twice diſgrace Chriſte: but declareth that his doctrine howſoeuer it was corrupt and intangled with errour was profitable: becauſe the ende thereof was to haue Chriſte made knowen. He calleth Ieſus the ſonne of Ioſeph, fooliſhly, he maketh him a Nazarite, vnskilfully: but in the meane ſeaſon he bringeth him vnto none other, but vnto the ſonne of God that was borne in Bethlaim: neithey doth hee forge any faile Chriſte: but he will only haue ſuch a one to be knowen, as was deſcribed by Moſes and the Prophetes. Therefore we ſee that this is the principall thing in doctrine, that they may by one meanes or other come vnto Chriſte, that heare vs. Manie when they doe diſpute ſubtilly concerning Chriſte, doe notwithſtanding ſo inwrappe and ſo darken him with their ſubtilties, that hee can neuer bee founde. In like ſorte the Papiſtes wil not ſay that Ieſus was the ſonne of Ioſeph: (for they know wel what his name is): but in the meane while they depriue him of his power. So that they ſhewe a ſhadow in ſteed of Chriſt.

VVere it not better to ſtammer groſly with Phillip, and to retaine the true Chriſte, then to bring in a feigned Chriſt by an eloquent & craftie kinde of ſpeeche? On the other ſide there be at this day many poore idiots, who being ignorant of eloquence and rhethorike, doe notwithſtanding teach Chriſte more faithfully, then all the Pope his Diuines, with their deepe ſpeculations. Therefore this place teacheth vs that we muſt not hautilie refuſe it, if the ſimple and vnlearned ſpeake anye thing of Chriſt vnfitly: ſo that they direct vs vnto Chriſt. But leaſt that we be drawne away with the falſe gloſſes of men from Chriſte, let vs alwayes haue this remedie in readineſſe, that we ſet the ſincere knowledge of him from the la we and the prophetes.

46 Out of Nazareth. At the firſt Nathanael ſtarteth backe, being offended with the countrie of Chriſte, as it was declared by Phillip. But he is firſt deceiued with the ſpeech which Phillip vttered without conſideration. For he taketh that for a certaintie, which Phillip thought fooliſhly. Thē there foloweth a prepoſterous iudgemēt proceeding frō the hatred and contempt of the place. VVe muſt mark them both diligently. This holy man had almoſt ſtopt his way before himſelfe, that hee coulde not come vnto Chriſte. VVhy ſo? Becauſe he raſhly beleeueth that which Phillip ſpake falſly concerning him. Secondly, becauſe this opinion which he had before conceiued had poſſeſt his minde, that hee hoped for no good thing out of Nazareth. Therefore vnleſſe wee take good heede to our ſelues, we ſhal not be free from the ſame danger. And truly Satan goeth about dayly to keepe vs from comming to Chriſte, with ſuch lettes. For he cauſeth many lyes to bee ſpreade abroade daily, which may either cauſe vs to hate or els ſuſpect the Goſpel, to the ende we may not be ſo bolde as to taſte the ſame. He ceaſeth not alſo to work another feate, whereby to make vs to contemne Chriſte. For wee ſee what a ſtumbling ſtone the humilitie of the croſſe is vnto many, which appeareth aſwel in Chriſte the head, as in his mēbers. But becauſe we cā ſcarſe be ſo warie, but that we ſhal be tempted with theſe ſhifts of Satan, let this at leaſt helpe vs foorthwith. Come and ſee. Nathanael ſuffered his double errour to be corrected with this ſaying of Phillip. Therfore let vs firſt ſhewe our ſelues eaſie to be taught, and obedient as dyd hee: then, let vs not refuſe to enquire, whereas Chriſte him ſelfe is readie to take from vs thoſe doubtes which trouble vs. They erre greatly which read this ſentēce affirmatiuely, for how coldly ſhould this be ſpoken? Secondly, wee know that the Citie Nazareth was not then had in any reputation: and the anſwere of Phillip doth ſufficiently declare that that was a worde of doubting and diſtruſt-

47 VVhen Ieſus ſaw Nathanael comming vnto him, he ſaith of him, behold an Iſraelite indeed in whom is no guile.

48 Nathanael ſaith vnto him, whence knoweſt thou mee? Ieſus anſwered, and ſaide vnto him, before Phillip called thee, when thou waſt vnder the Figge tree, I ſaw thee.

49 Nathanael anſwered, and ſaide vnto him, Rabbi, thou art the ſonne of God, thou art the king of Iſrael.

50 Ieſus anſwered and ſaide vnto him, becauſe I ſaide vnto thee, I ſawe thee vnder the figge tree, thou beleeueſt: thou ſhalt ſee greater thinges then theſe.

51 Then he ſaid vnto him, verily, verily I ſay vnto you, after this you ſhall ſee heauen open, and the angels of God aſcending and deſcending vpon the ſonne of man.

47 Beholde an Iſraelite indeede. In this that Chriſte prayſeth Nathanael he doth it not for his ſake: but vnder his perſon he ſetteth downe a common doctrin. For ſeeing that moſt mē do boaſt of the name of the faithfull, when as they are nothing leſſe then faithful: it is worth the labour to haue the true & good, diſtinguiſhed from the falſe, by ſome marke. VVe know how greatly the Iewes did boaſt of their father Abrahā, how boldlie they boaſted of the holineſſe of their ſtocke: in the meane while ther was ſcarſe one found amongſt an hundred, that was not altogether growne out of kinde, & far from the faith of the fathers. Therefore to the ende that Chriſt may pull the viſor from the face of the hypocrites, he defineth briefly a true Iſraelite: & doth alſo take away the offence which was about to ariſe by & by, by reaſon of the wicked ſtubbornnes of the nation. For they that would be accounted the children of Abrahā, & the holy people of God, were about to be ſhortly after the deadly enemies of the goſpel. Therefore leaſt the common impietie almoſt of all eſtates ſhould diſcourage or trouble any, he warneth & telleth them betimes, that there are few true Iſraelites, of many that pretende the name of Iſraelites. Furthermore, becauſe this is alſo the definition of chriſtianitie, we muſt not paſſe ouer this place lightly. But to the end we may briefly vnderſtand Chriſt his meaning, we muſt note that he ſetteth deceyte againſt ſincerities. Therefore he calleth them deceitfull, who are called els where in the ſcripture, double harted. Neither is only that groſſe hypocriſie touched, when they doe feigne themſelues to be good men, who are wicked in their owne conſciences: but another kinde alſo whiche is more inward, whiles that men are ſo blinded with their vices, that they doe not only lie vnto other men, but vnto themſelues alſo. Therfore the integritie of the heart toward God, & rightnes toward men doth make a Chriſtian. But Chriſt doth chiefly note that diſceite wherof mention is made. Pſal. 32. 2. Alethos ſignifieth in this place more then certainly. The Greekes haue oftentime a ſimple affirmation: but becauſe in this place we muſt vnderſtand the contraposition betwene the thing and the bare title, he is ſaid to be truely or indeede, who is indeede ſuch an one as hee is iudged to bee.

48 VVhence knoweſt thou mee? Although hee would not flatter him, yet would he be heard of him, that he might pick out a new queſtion, whervnto whileſt he anſwered, he might proue himſelfe to bee the ſonne of God. And Nathanael asketh not in vaine howe Chriſt knewe him. For the exāple of a man that is ſo ſincere that hee is void of all guile is very rare: and it is only proper to God to knowe the puritie of the heart. But it ſeemeth that the anſwere which Chriſt maketh is ſcarce fitly applyed. For he could not therefore enter into the ſecrete corners of the heart, becauſe he ſaw Nathanael vnder the figge tree: But there is another reaſon: for like as it is proper to God to knowe men that were neuer ſeen, ſo alſo to ſee thoſe that appeare not vnto the eyes. Therefore ſeeing that Nathanael dyd knowe that Chriſte ſawe him not after the manner of men, but by a mere diuine ſight: hee myght hence gather that he ſpake not according to the manner of men. It is therfore a proofe taken from thinges that be like: for it is no leſſe proper to God to ſee things that bee out of ſight, then to iudge of the puritie of the heart. Furthermore, wee muſt gather a profitable doctrin out of this place, that Chriſt doth ſee vs when we thinke not of him: and ſo it muſt needes bee that he bringeth vs backe againe when we are turned away.

49 Thou art the ſonne of God. It is no maruell that hee knoweth the ſonne of God by his diuine power. But in what reſpect doth he call him the king of Iſrael? For theſe things doe ſeeme not to hang together. But Nathanael hath reſpect vnto a farther thing: he had already hearde that he was the Meſſias: vnto this doctrine doth he adioine the confirmation that was giuen: and he holdeth alſo another principle, that the ſonne of God ſhall not come, but only to ſhew himſelfe a king vnto the people of God. Therefore he doth worthily acknowledge him to be the king of Iſrael, which was the ſonne of God. And truly our faith muſte not only ſtick in the Eſſence of Chriſt (that I may ſo ſpeake) but it muſt marke his power and office. For it ſhoulde but a little auaile to knowe who Chriſte is, vnleſſe this ſecond thing ſhoulde be added thereunto, what a one he will be toward vs, and to what ende hee was ſent of his father. Heereby it commeth to paſſe that the Papiſtes haue only a ſhadowed Chriſt: becauſe they had a care to apprehende the bare Eſſence: yet neglected they his kingdom which cõſiſteth in the power of ſauing. Furthermore, in that Nathanael ſayth, that he is the king of Iſrael, whoſe kingdome notwithſtanding, reacheth vnto the farthеſt partes of the worlde, it is a confeſſion limited according to the meaſure of his faith: for hee was not come ſo farre as to knowe that hee was appointed the king of all the worlde: or rather that the children of Abraham ſhoulde be gathered together out of all places, that all the whole worlde might be the Iſrael of God. VVe to whom the largeneſſe of the kingdome of Chriſte is reuealed, muſt leape ouer theſe ſtraites. In the meane ſeaſon let vs exerciſe our faith by the hearing of the woorde according as did Nathanael: let vs eſtabliſh the ſame by all meanes poſſible, and let it not remaine buried, but let it breake forth.

50 Ieſus anſwered. He doth not reprehend Nathanael as though hee had been too credulous: but rather approuing his faith with his voyce, hee promiſeth vnto him and the reſt greater arguments of confirmation. Moreouer, this was a ſpeciall thing, for one man, to be ſeene vnder a figtree, of Chriſt, who was abſent and far from that place: but nowe hee bringeth a proofe, which ſhould be common vnto all men: and therfore he turneth his talke as it were abruptly from one man vnto all.

51 Yee ſhall ſee (ſaith hee) heauen open, &c. In my iudgement they erre greatly who enquire curiouſly after the time and place, when and where Nathanael and the reſt ſaw heauen open. For he doth rather note a certaine continuall thing which ſhould alwaies be extant in his kingdome. I confeſſe that the Angels did ſomtimes appere vnto the Diſciples, which doe not appeare at this day. I confeſſe that there was another maner of manifeſtation of the celeſtiall glory when Chriſt aſcended into heauen, then is now manifeſt vnto vs. But if we do well weigh that which was then done, it is continually of force, for whereas the kingdome of God was ſhut againſt vs before, it was truely opened in Chriſt. Heereof was there a viſible figure ſhewed aſwell to Stephen and the three diſciples in the mount, as vnto the other diſciples in the aſcentiõ of Chriſt. But all the ſignes whereby God ſheweth himſelf to be preſent with vs, doe appertaine vnto the opening of heauen, moſt of all when hee maketh keth vs partakers of himſelfe vnto life. The other měber cõcerning the Angels followeth. They are ſaide to aſcende and deſcende, that they may be miniſters of Gods liberalitie towarde vs. Therefore in this maner of phraſe is ſet foorth the mutuall communication that is betweene God and men. And we muſt thanke Chriſte for this benefite: becauſe without him the angels are rather our vtter enemies then our familiars, & thoſe that are deſirous to helpe vs. They are ſaid to aſcend & deſcend vpon him: not that they miniſter to him alone, but becauſe in reſpect of him, and his honor they are carefull for the whole bodie of the church. And I doe not doubt but that he alludeth vnto the ladder whiche was ſhewed vnto the Patriarche Iacob in ſleep, for that is truely perfourmed in Chriſte, whiche that viſion dyd ſhadowe. Finally the ſumme of this place is, ſeeing that all men were aliants from the kingdome of God, the gate of heauen is ſet open vnto vs now, that we may be Citizens with the Saintes, and companions with the Angels: and that they who are appointed keepers of our ſaluation, doe come downe from bleſſed reſt to helpe our miſeries. Ge. 28. 12.

1 AND the third day was there a marriage in Cana of Galilee: and the mother of Ieſus was there.

2 And Ieſus and his diſciples were alſo called vnto the marriage.

3 And when the wine had failed, the mother of Ieſus ſaith vnto him, they haue no wine.

4 Ieſus ſaith vnto her, woman, what haſt thou to doe with mee? mine houre is not yet come.

5 His mother ſaith vnto the miniſters, doe that which hee ſhall ſay vnto you.

6 And there were there ſixe water pots of ſtone, ſet according to the purification of the Iewes, containing euery one about two or three firkins.

7 Ieſus ſaith vnto them, fill the water pots with water. And they filled them vp to the top.

8 And he ſaith vnto them, drawe now, and carry to the gouernour of the feaſt. And they bare.

9 And when the gouernour of the feaſt had taſted the water that was made wine, (and hee knewe not whence it was, but the miniſters knewe that had drawen the water) the gouernour of the feaſt calleth the bridegrome.

10 And he ſaith vnto him, euery man at the firſt ſetteth foorth good wine: and when they are drunken then that which is worſe: but thou haſt kept the good wine vntil nowe.

11 This beginning of myracles did Ieſus in Cana of Galilee, and he shewed his glory: and his diſciples beleeued on him.

1 There was a marriage in Cana of Galilee. Seeing that this hiſtorie containeth the firſt myracle that Ieſus did, we muſt giue greate heede vnto it euen for this cauſe, and for this one things ſake muſt we wel conſider thereupon. Although (as we ſhall ſee afterwarde) there bee other cauſes which ſet foorth the ſame vnto vs. But the manifolde commoditie ſhall more plainely appeare in proceſſe. The Euangeliſt firſt nameth the place, Cana of Galilee, not that which was ſituate towarde Sarepta, betweene Tyre and Sydon, and was called the greater (in compariſon of this other) which ſome doe place in the inheritance of the tribe of Zabulon: & other ſome doe aſſigne it vnto the tribe of Aſer. For Ierome doth teſtifie that euen in his time there ſtoode there a little towne of that name. It is to bee thought that it was necre to the Citie Nazareth, ſeeing that the mother of Ieſus came thyther to the marriage. It ſhall appeare out of the fourth Chapter, that it was but a dayes iourney from Capernaum. And alſo the nighnes of the Citie Bethſaida may be gathered thēce, in that the Euangeliſt ſaith, that after that Chriſte had been three dayes in thoſe borders, there was a marriage in Cana. It may be alſo that there was a thirde not farre from Hieruſalem, and yet without Galilee, but becauſe I am not certaine heereof, I leaue it. And the mother of Ieſus. It is to be thought that it was ſome of Ieſus his kinſfolke that was maried. For Ieſus is here made his mothers companion. VVhereas his diſciples are called alſo, it may be thence gathered how ſimplie and thriftilie hee liued, becauſe he liued together with them. But this may ſeeme an abſurd thing that a man beeing not very rich (as may appeare by the want of wine) doth inuite foure or fiue moe for Chriſtes cauſe. But amongſt the poore, bidding is more eaſie and free: becauſe they are not afraide of ſhame (as are the riche) if they doe not entertaine their geſtes ſo daintily and gorgeouſly as they ought. For poore men doe more retaine the old maner of mutuall communication. Yet this ſeemeth to be againe a very vnciuile thing, that the bridegrome ſuffereth his geſtes to want wine in the middeſt of the Supper. For it is the point of a man that is raſhe and vnprouident, not to haue ſo much wine as is ſufficient for his geſts. I anſwere, that there is nothing told in this place, which doth not oftentimes chaunce, eſpecially, wher wine is not dayly vſed Secondly, the Text doeth ſhewe that the banket was almoſt ended when the wine fayled, when as they ſhould haue been alreadie well filled, according to the cuſtome. For the gouernour of the feaſt, ſaith thus: other men doe ſet the worſer wine before thoſe that are drunke, but thou haſt kept the beſt till now. Moreouer, I doe not doubt but that all this was gouerned by the prouidence of God, that there might be a place for a myracle.

3 The mother of Ieſus ſaith. Here may a doubt ariſe, whether ſhe hope for ſomething at her ſonnes hands, or aske ſomthing, ſeeing that he had as yet wrought no myracle. And it may be alſo that looking for no ſuch thing at his handes, ſhe put him in minde to cheere vppe the geſtes that were weerie, with ſome ſuch godly exhortion, as ſhoulde alſo moderate the ſhame of the bridegrome which he might take hereby. Furthermore, I thinke that theſe were wordes of carefull pitie. For when as the holy woman ſaw that the banket might bee troubled, becauſe thoſe that were bidden, thinking that they were not honorably enough entertayned, might murmur againſt the bridegrome, ſhe deſired ſome comforte. Chryſoſtome thinketh that ſhe went about to purchaſe ſome fauour for her ſelfe & her ſonne, as women vſe commonly to doe. But this coniecture is without reaſon. But why doth chriſt ſo churliſhly giue her the repulſe? I anſwere, that although neither ambition, neither any other affection of the fleſh did driue her, yet did ſhee therein offend that ſhee did paſſe her bounds. In that ſhe is carefull & ſorie for the diſcōmoditie of another, & is deſirous to cure the ſame by ſom one meanes or other,this is a point of curteſie,& it is to bee aſcribed vnto vertue : but yet in the meane ſeaſon ſhe might haue darkened the glory of Chriſt by intruding her ſelfe. Although we muſt alſo note that Chriſt ſaid thus not ſo much for herſake, as for others:her modeſtie & godlineſſe was greater, then that it had neede of ſo ſharp a reprehenſion. Secondly,ſhe did not offend willingly & wittingly. But Chriſt doth only preuent the danger,leaſt his mothers words ſhould be otherwiſe taken then was meet,as though he wrought the myracle afterward at her appointment.

4 VVhat haſt thou to do with me woman? In the Greeke text it is woorde for word,what to thee & mee? But this manner of phraſe doth ſignifie as much amongſt the Latiniſts,as if one ſhoulde ſay,quid tibi mecum?what heſt thou to do with me? The olde interpreter deceiued many,who thought that Chriſt doth denie that he and his mother had any neede to care though the wine did faile. But we may eaſily gather out of the ſeconde member how far that was frō Chriſt his meaning. For he both taketh vpon hym this care,& he doth teſtifie that it belonged vnto him,whē he ſaith that his houre was not yet come. Therfore we muſt ioyne both theſe things together,that Chriſt knew what he had to doe:and yet that hee would do nothing in this matter at his mothers requeſt. Certainly this is a notable place. For why doth he flatly denie his mother that,which he graſted ſo often afterwards liberallie to other whatſoeuer they were. Secōdly,why doth he(being not cotented with a plain repulſe)make no more account of her thē of another womā,& doth not now vouchſafe to call her mother? By theſe words of chriſt we ſee þ mē are forbidby extolling the honor of this name mother ſuperſtitiouſly in Marie,to tranſlate thoſe things vnto her which are proper to god. Therfore Chriſt ſpeaketh vnto his mother on this wiſe,that he might deliuer vnto all ages a perpetuall & cōmō doctrine,leaſt the immoderate honour of his mother ſhould darken his diuine glory. Furthermore,it is well knowne howe neceſſarie this admonitiō was,by thoſe groſſe & ſilthy ſuperſtitiōs which followed afterward. For Marie was made the queene of heauen,the hope, the life, and health of the world. Furthermore, their mad fury went thus far, that they decked her with the things which they tooke frō Chriſte,whō they left naked. And whē wee doe cōdemne theſe execrable blaſphemies vttered againſt the ſon of God,the papiſts cal vs wicked & enuious. Yea they do wickedly & falſly report that we,like enemies, do impugne the honor of the holy virgin. As thogh ſhe had not ſo much honor as is due vnto her,vnles ſhee bee made a goddeſſe: or this were for her honour,to thruſt her into Chriſts place,being adorned wᵗh ſacrilegious titles. Therefore they do cruell iniurie to Marie whē as (that they may disfigure her with falſe praiſes)they do take frō god that which is his. My houre is not yet come. His meaning is,that he delayed hitherto not becauſe he thoughte not vpō it or cared not for it. In the meane while he ſheweth that he wil care for this matter,whē opportunitie ſhal ſerue. Therfore as he blameth his mother becauſe ſhe was too too haſtie,ſo he putteth her in hope that he wil ſhew ſom myracle. The holy virgin acknowledgeth both. For ſhe doth not trouble him any further. & when ſhe biddeth the miniſters do whatſoeuer he ſhal bid thē, ſhe ſheweth þ ſhe hoped for ſom new thing. But this doctrine reacheth farther,ſo oftē as the Lord doth make vs wait & deferreth his help,he is not therfore ſluggiſh,but doth rather moderate his works ſo,that he may do all things in due ſeaſon. They

They that wrested this place vnto the fatall appointment of times, are more ridiculous then that we neede to speake one worde in refutation of them. That is sometimes called the hour of Christe, which was appointed him of his father: and he will afterwarde call that his time which was commodious and fit for him to fulfill his fathers commandements in: but in this place he challengeth vnto himselfe free libertie to take and chooſe the time wherein hee will worke the myracle.

5 His mother saith to the ministers. Here the holy virgin sheweth a token of the true obedience which she did owe vnto her sonne, when as the matter did touche not humane offices but his diuine power. Therefore she resteth modestly vpon his answere, and also exhorteth other men in like sort, to obey his commandement. I confesse indeede that the virgin said thus according to the present circumstance, as if shee did denie that shee had any authoritie in the matter, but that Christe would do whatsoeuer pleased him: yet if you marke her drift, this sentence reacheth further. For she doth first abandon and depriue her self of the power whiche shee might seeme vniustly to haue taken to her selfe: then doth shee acknowledge that it belongeth wholy to Christe, when she commaundeth them to doe that which he shall commaunde them. Therefore we are taught generally out of this place, that if wee desire any thynge of Christ, we do no otherwise obtaine our petitions, vnlesse we do depend wholy vpon him, haue respect vnto him, and finally, doe that whiche he commandeth vs. But he sendeth vs not vnto his mother, but doth rather bid vs come vnto himselfe.

6 And there were there water pots. According to Budæus his supputation wee gather that these water pots were very bigge and did holde much. For seeing that a firkin maketh siue and twentie potles euery one of thē contained at least a sextarie according to the measure of this countrie. Therefore Christe ministred vnto them great plentie of wine: namely, more then might suffice an hundred and fiftie men to a merie banquet.

Moreouer, aswell the number of the water pottes as the manner it selfe serueth to the prouing of the truth of the myracle. If it had been only two or three pottles, many might haue suspected that they had bin set from some other place. If the turning of the water into wine had bin done in one vessell only, the certaintie of the myracle had not beene so plaine and euident. Therfore it is not in vaine that the Euangelist maketh mentiō of the number, neither doth he expresse in vaine, how much they contained. Furthermore, this arose of superstition that so manye, and so great vessels did stande there. They had the rite of washing out of the lawe of God: but (as the world is alwayes too much in externall things) the Iewes being not contented with the plainnesse that God appointeth, were alwayes toying with continuall sprinklings: and (as superstition is ambitious) it is not be doubted but that this serued also for pompe: like as we see at this day in papistrie, what thinges soeuer are said to appertaine to the worship of God, they are applied vnto vaine bragging and boasting. Therfore there was a double fault, first in that they did occupie thēselues in a feigned and superfluous ceremonie without the commandement of God: secondly, that ambition did reigne in that furniture vnder the pretence of religion.

Fur

Furthermore, the wickedneſſe of certaine knaues in time of poperie was wonderfull, who durſt firſt thruſt in waterpots of a ſmall quantitie, and ſecondly of vnequall meaſure. And euen at this day they are not aſhamed in ſo great light of the Goſpel to challenge ſuch deceite as yet: this is not to deceiue with craft, but boldly to mocke the blind. And it is euident that the world is bewitched of Satan, which doth not perceiue ſuch groſſe mockes.

7 Fill the water pots with water. This commandement might ſeeme to the miniſters ridiculous: for there was alreadie ouermuch water: but thus doth the Lord vſe to deale with vs, that his power may appeare to bee more excellent by the vnhoped for ſucceſſe: Although this circumſtance was added to ſet foorth the myracle: for ſeeing that the miniſters hauing powred in water doe draw out wine, ther could no ſuſpition sticke in their ſtomackes.

8 Beare vnto the Gouernour of the feaſt. This tendeth to the ſame ende that Chriſte would haue the gouernour of the feaſt to taſte the wine before he or any other of the geſtes did taſt it. And whereas the miniſters obey him ſo willingly in all thinges, we gather out of this that there was in him great reuerence and dignitie. The Euangeliſt calleth him the gouernour of the feaſt, who was appointed to ſet the banket and the tables in order, not that the banket was ſo daintie or gorgeous, but becauſe theſe honourable tearmes are tranſlated euen vnto the marriages of poore men from the dainties and gorgeouſneſſe of rich men. But it is a wonder that Chriſte who was a teacher of thriftineſſe, doeth giue great aboundaunce of wine, and that of the beſt. I anſwere, ſeeing that God doth giue vnto vs dayly great ſtore of wine, it commeth to paſſe through our owne folly, if his benignitie be a prouoker of ryot: yea rather this is a true tryall of our temperance, if we be ſparing and temperate in the middeſt of aboundance. Like as Paul doth boaſt that he was taught to doe both, to abound and to hunger. Pſal. 4. 12

11 This beginning of myracles. The meaning of theſe wordes is, that this was the firſt of Chriſte his myracles. For in that the Angels tolde the ſheepheards that he was borne in Bethleim, that the ſtarre appeared vnto the wiſe men, that the holy ſpirite came downe vpon him in the likeneſſe of a doue: although theſe were myracles, yet were they not properly wrought by him. But in this place the Euangeliſt ſpeaketh of the myracles which hee himſelfe wrought. For it is ridiculous and friuolous which ſome doe ſay, that this is the firſt myracle whiche Chriſte did in Cana of Galilee: as though hee had choſen that place to ſhew his power in, where (as we reade) he was neuer but twiſe. But this was rather the drift of the Euangeliſt, to note the order and courſe of time which Chriſt kept in declaring his power For he kept hymſelf at home like a priuate man, vntill he was thirtie yeere olde. So ſoone as hee was baptiſed, he began to come abroade to doe his function, and by euident teſtimonies to declare to what ende he was ſent of his father. Therefore it is no maruell if he deferred the firſt token of his diuinitie vntill that tyme. It was a great worſhip to marriage, that Chriſte did not onely vouchſafe to bee preſent at a marriage banket, but did alſo adorne the ſame with the firſt myracle that hee wrought. There are certaine olde Canons extant wherein deargie men are forbidden to goe to mariages.

The

The cauſe of the forbidding was, leaſt that by beholding the wantonnes whiche is there for the moſt part vſed, they ſhoulde ſeeme to allowe the ſame.

But it had been farre better to haue brought ſo much grauitie thither with them, that they might haue tamed that libertie which froward and diſſolute perſons do graunt to themſelues in their ſecrete corners. But let rather the example of Chriſt be vnto vs a law, and let vs thinke that thers is nothing more profitable to be done, then that which wee reade he did. Hee shewed his glory, Becauſe he ſhewed at that time a famous and glorious token, whereby it might euidently appeare that he was the ſon of God. For looke how many myracles he ſhewed vnto the worlde, ſo many ſignes were there of his diuine power, And then was the due time to ſhew his glory, come, when he would be knowen according to the commandement of his father. From whence we do alſo gather the ende of myracles. For this ſaying is as much as if it had beene ſaide, that Chriſt wrought this myracle to the end he might ſhew foorth his glory. What muſt we thinke then of the myracles which make the glory of Chriſt obſcure? His diſciples beleeued on him. If they were diſciples, it muſt needes bee that they had ſome faith. But whereas they had hitherto followed him with an vncertaine and doubting faith, they begin then at the length to addict themſelues vnto him, ſo that they did acknowe-ledge him to be that Meſsias which was preached vnto them. And this was great mercifulneſſe in Chriſt, that he accounteth thoſe his diſciples in whom there was ſo weake a faith. And truely this doctrine reacheth generally vnto vs all. For that faith which is nowe growne vp to ſome perfection, had before time her infancie: yea it is in no man ſo perfect, but that it is neceſſarie for all of vs to goe forward in beleeuing. So that thoſe who did alreadie beleeue, foraſmuch as they do dayly goe forward toward the marke, they begin to beleeue. Therefore let thoſe that haue obtained the firſt fruites of faith, alwayes ſtriue to goe forward. The fruite alſo of myracles is ſhewed in this place: namely, that they muſte be referred vnto the confirmation and increaſe of faith. Hee that wreſteth them to any other end, corrupteth and depraueth all the whole vſe therof. Like as we ſee the papiſtes make boaſt of their feigned myracles, to no other ende but to ouerwhelme faith, and to turne away mens mindes from Chriſte vnto creatures.

12 After this he went downe to Capernaum, and his mother, and his brethren, and his diſciples: and hee tarryed there not many dayes.

13 And the Iewes Eaſter drewe neere: therefore Ieſus went vppe to Hieruſalem.

14 And hee found in the temple certaine that ſolde oxen, and sheepe, and doues: & money changers alſo ſitting there.

15 And hauing made a whip of ſmall cordes, hee caſt them all out of the Temple, with the sheepe and oxen: and hee powred out the money of the money changers, & ouerthrewe the tables.

16 And he ſaid vnto them that ſolde doues, haue away theſe things hence: make not my fathers houſe an houſe of merchandize.

Pſal. 68. 10. 17 Furthermore, his diſciples remembred, that it was written, The zeale of thyne houſe hath eaten me vp.

12 Hee

12 He went downe to Capernaum. The Euangeliſt paſſeth ouer vnto a newe hiſtorie. And becauſe he purpoſed to gather together a few things worthie the remembring, which the other three did omitte, hee ſetteth downe the time when this was done, whereof he is about to ſpeake. For the reſt alſo doe make recitall of this which we reade heere, that Chriſte did: but the diuerſitie of time doth ſhewe that it was the like, and not the ſame fact. Therefore Chriſte purged the temple twiſe of that filthy and prophane occupying: firſt about the beginning of his embaſſage: and ſecondly, when hee was about to depart out of the worlde vnto his father. But to the ende wee may vnderſtand the ſumme, we muſt briefly diſcuſſe all thynges in order. In that there ſtoode oxen, and ſheepe, & doues, in the temple to ſell, in that there ſate money changers there, it wanted not an honeſt cloke. For they might boaſt that the occupying which was there kept, was not profane: but that it did rather belong vnto the holy worſhip of God, that euerie man might haue that readie whiche hee would offer vnto the Lorde. And truely it was very commodious for godly men to haue in readineſſe all manner oblations, and by this meanes not to bee troubled with running hyther and thyther. Therefore it is a maruell that Chriſte was ſo diſpleaſed with this. But wee muſt note two reaſons: for becauſe the Prieſtes did abuſe this buying and ſelling vnto gayne, and their owne couetouſneſſe, ſuch mocking of God was not to bee borne with. Secondly, how eſoeuer men doe excuſe themſelues, yet ſo ſoone as they doe a little digreſſe from the commaundement of God, they are worthie to bee reprehended, and they haue neede to be corrected. And for this cauſe chiefly did Chriſte take in hande to purge the temple, like as hee doth plainely affirme that the Temple of God is not a place of merchandize. But heere may a queſtion be asked, why hee did not rather beginne with doctrine. For this ſeemeth to be a troubleſome and prepoſterous way, to ſet hande to redreſſe faultes before ſuch time as the remedie of doctrine was applied. But, Chriſte had reſpect vnto another thing. For becauſe the time was nowe come when hee went publikely about that function whiche was inioyned hym of his father, he meant after a ſort to take poſſeſſion of the Temple, and ſhewe ſome ſigne of his diuine authoritie. And to the ende that all men might take better heed vnto his doctrine, it was needefull to awake their drouſie and ſleepie mindes with ſome newe and vnaccuſtomed fact. The Temple was now a ſanctuarie of celeſtiall doctrine and godlineſſe. Seeing that he would reſtore the puritie of doctrine, it was conuenient for him to proue that he was Lorde of the Temple.

Moreouer, hee coulde by no other meanes reſtore the ſacrifices and other exerciſes of godlineſſe vnto theyr ſpirituall ende, then by taking away the abuſe. Therefore that whiche hee then did was an entrace vnto the reformation, for which hee was ſent of his father. To be briefe, it was meete that the Iewes ſhoulde bee ſtirred vp by this example, to wayte for ſome ſtrange thing at Chriſtes handes: and it was furthermore conuenient that they ſhoulde bee admoniſhed of the corrupt and peruerſe worſhippe of GOD, leaſt they ſhoulde refuſe to bee reformed. And his brethren. It is vncertaine whye his brethren dyd accompanie him: vnleſſe peraduenture they alſo were about to goe to Hieruſalem. It is well knowne that the Hebrewe tongue doth comprehende vnder this worde brethren all maner kinſmen.

13 The Iewes Eaſter, therefore he went vp. It is in the Greeke woorde for worde, And he came But the Euangeliſt put the copulatiue coniunction in ſteede of the cauſall worde: for the meaning of the wordes is this, that hee came to this ende that he myght keepe the paſſeouer at Ieruſalem. And this his purpoſe had a double end. For ſeeing that the ſonne of God was ſubiect to the lawe for our ſakes, he would ſhew a figure of perfect obedience and ſubiection in his owne perſon, by keeping ſtraitly all the commandementes of the lawe. Secondly, becauſe he might doe more good in a multitude, hee vſed almoſt alway this opportunitie. Therefore ſo often as it is ſaide afterwarde that Chriſte came to Ieruſalem vpon the feaſt dayes, let the Readers note that hee did it to this ende, firſt that hee might together with the reſt obſerue thoſe exerciſes of godlines, which were inſtituted of God: ſecondly, that he might publyſhe his doctrine in a greater aſſembly of people.

16 Make not my fathers houſe. The other Euangeliſtes doe write that he ſpake more ſeuerely and ſharply in the ſecond caſting out: namely, that they made his fathers houſe a denne of theeues. And it was neceſſary for him thus to doe, ſeeing his former reprehenſion was fruitleſſe. Nowe he warneth them plainely that they doe not prophane the temple of God, by turning it vnto ſtrange vſes. The Temple was called the houſe of God, becauſe that God would be called vpon there, peculiarlie, becauſe he would ſhew his power there: and finally, becauſe he had appointed it for ſpirituall and holy rites. And Chriſte doth affirme that hee is the ſonne of God, that he may challenge to himſelfe the title and authoritie to purge the temple. Furthermore, becauſe Chriſte doeth in this place render a reaſon of his fact, if we will gather any fruite out of the ſame, it is meete that wee ſtande chiefly vppon this ſentence. Therefore why doth hee caſt out the buyers and ſellers out of the temple? To the ende hee may reſtore God his worſhip, which was corrupted through mans fault and folly, vnto the integritie theerof, and that he may by this meanes reſtore againe the holineſſe of the temple. VVee knowe that that temple was built to the ende it might bee a ſhadowe of thoſe thinges, the liuely ſhape wherof is extant in Chriſt. Therfore to the end it might remaine holy to God, it was to bee applied only vnto ſpirituall vſes. For this cauſe he ſaith it was not lawfull to turne it into a market place. For he fetteth a maxima from Gods inſtitution: which we muſt alwayes holde and keepe. Therefore with what ſhuftes ſoeuer Satan doeth delude vs, whatſoeuer doeth digreſſe but a little from the commandement of God, let vs knowe that it is wicked. This was a fayre colour to diſceaue withall that the worſhip of GOD was holpen and furthered, when as the faithfull had ſuch thinges readie at hande as they woulde offer: but becauſe God had ordeined his temple to other vſes, Chriſte doth not paſſe for theſe things which might haue bin obiected contrarie to the order which God had ſet down. Our churches at this day are not like to that temple. But that which is ſaid of the olde temple agreeth well and properly to the congregation or church: for it is the celeſtiall ſanctuarie of God vpon earth. VVherefore wee

Chriſt ſhould ſay, although you receiue not my doctrine, neuertheleſs it remaineth certaine and ſure: becauſe the incredulitie of men ſhall neuer bring to paſſe but that God ſhall continue true for euer. The other that they ſhall not eſcape ſcotfree, who at this day doe diſcredit the Goſpel, ſeeing that it is the holy veritie of God. VVe muſt bee armed with this ſhielde that we may goe forward in the obedience of the Goſpel, againſt the ſtubbornneſſe of men. VVe muſt holde this ground, that our faith, be grounded in God. But ſeeing that wee haue God our authour, as though we were extolled aboue the heauens, we muſt rather careleſſie treade vnderfoote, or behold a farre off, the whole worlde, then that the infidelitie of certaine ſhoulde trouble vs. VVhereas Chriſt complaineth that his teſtimonie is not receiued, we gather therby, that this was as a fatal thing for the word of god throughout al ages, that it was beleeued but of a fewe. For theſe wordes, yee receiue not. doe belong vnto the greater number, and almoſt vnto the whole body of the people. VVherfore there is no cauſe why the ſmall number of the godly and faithfull ſhoulde diſcourage vs.

12 If I haue tolde you earthly thinges. Chriſt concludeth, that it was to bee imputed to Nicodemus and ſuch like, if they doe not profite in the doctrine of the Goſpel. For he ſaith, it is of it ſelfe ſufficient and apt to inſtruct all men, ſeeing that it deſcendeth vnto the earth, that it may lift vs vp to heauen. This is too auncient a vice, that men deſire to be taught ſubtillie and wittily. Hereby it commeth to paſſe that many men doe ſo greatly delight in deepe and hidden ſpeculations. And hereby it commeth to paſſe that moſt men doe leſſe eſteeme the Goſpell, becauſe they cannot finde therein loftie ſpeech to fill their eares with all. Therefore they do not vouchſafe to occupie thẽſelues in the ſtudie of common and baſe doctrine. But this is intollerable wickednеſſe, that we doe giue leſſe honour vnto God when he ſpeaketh, for this cauſe, becauſe he doth abaſe himſelfe vnto our rudeneſſe. Therefore whereas GOD doeth ſpeak vnto vs groſly and in a common ſtile, in the ſcripture let vs know that he doth it for our ſake. VVhoſoeuer doth boaſt that he is offended with ſuch humilitie, or maketh it a cloake to couer his vnwillingneſſe to ſubmit himſelfe vnto the worde of God, he lyeth. For he that cannot aforde to embrace God when he is nigh vnto him, he will much leſſe flie vnto him aboue the cloudes. Some doe expound earthly thinges to bee the rudiments or firſt principles of the ſpirituall doctrine. For the deniall of our ſelues is a certaine firſt exerciſe of godlines. But I am rather of their minde, who referre this vnto the manner of teaching. For albeit all Chriſt his ſermõ was heauenly, yet he ſpake ſo familiarly, that his ſpeech it ſelfe might ſeeme after a ſort earthly. Furthermore, theſe woordes muſt not be reſtrained vnto the Sermon only. For in this place the vſual maner of teaching which Chriſt kept (that is common ſimplicitie or plaineſſe) and the pompe and gorgeouſneſſe whereunto ambitious men are too greedily addicted, are compared together.

13 And no man aſcendeth into heauen, but he that deſcended from heauen, the ſonne of man who is in heauen.

14 And as Moſes lifted vp the Serpent in the wilderneſſe, ſo muſt the ſonne of man be lifted vp.

15 That euerie one that beleeueth in him, may not perishe but haue euerlasting life.

16 For God so loued the worlde that he gaue his onely begotten sonne: to the end that euery one which beleeueth in him, may not perish, but haue eternall life.

17 For God sent not his sonne into the worlde to condemne the worlde: but that the worlde him the world might be saued.

18 He that beleeueth in him is not condemned: and he that beleeueth not, is condemned alreadie: because he hath not beleeued in the name of the only begotten sonne of god.

13 No man ascendeth into heauen. He exhorteth Nicodemus againe not to truſt to himſelfe and his owne wit: for he ſaith that no mortall man can pearce into the heauens by his owne induſtrie, vnleſſe he haue the ſonne of God to be his guide. For by aſcending into heauen is meant the pure knowledge of the myſteries of God, and the light of the ſpirituall knowledge. For Chriſt teacheth the ſame thing in this place, which Paule doth, when he ſaith that the naturall man doth not vnderſtande
1. Cor. 2. 14. the things of God. Therefore he driueth away all the quicknes of mans wit from diuine matters, becauſe it is farre inferiour vnto God. And we muſt diligently marke the wordes, that Chriſt alone who is heauenly, doth aſcend into heauen, and that the entrance is ſhut againſt al other. In the former member he doth humble vs, when hee excludeth all the
1. Cor. 4. 7, 8. whole world out of heauen. Paule commandeth all thoſe to be fooliſh in their owne conceite, whoſoeuer deſire to be wiſe vnto god; there is nothing that we can worſe away with. Therefore we muſt note the ſentence, that all our ſenſes do faint & quaile when we come vnto god. But after that Chriſte hath ſhut heauen againſt vs, he offereth a remedie that is readie, when he addeth, that that is giuen vnto the ſonne of man which is denied vnto all other. For he doth not aſcend into heauē for his owne ſake onely, but that he may be our guide & directer. And for this he called himſelfe the ſonne of man, that we may not doubt, but that we ſhall enter in as well as he: who tooke vpon him our fleſhe for this cauſe, that he might make vs partakers of all good thinges. Therefore ſeeing that he alone is of his fathers counſell, he imparteth vnto vs thoſe ſecrets which wold otherwiſe be vnknowē to vs. Notwithſtāding this ſeemeth to be an abſurde thing, that he ſaith, that the ſonne of man is in heauen, at ſuch time as he dwelleth vpon the earth. If you anſwere, that, that is true in reſpect of his diuinitie, the manner of ſpeech importeth an other thing: namely, that he himſelfe as he was man was in heauē. It might be ſaid that there is no mention made of place, but þ Chriſt is onely diſtinguiſhed from the reſt by this condition, becauſe he is heyre of the kingdome of God, from which all mankinde is baniſhed, but ſeeing that it is common and vſuall enough in Chriſte, by reaſon of the vnitie of perſon, to haue that which is proper to the one nature to bee tranſlated vnto the other, wee neede not to ſeeke for any further aunſwere. Therefore Chriſte who is in heauen, hath put on our fleſh, that ſtretching foorth his brotherly hand, he may carry vs vp to heauen with him.

14 And as Moſes. He doth more plainely declare to what ende hee ſaid, that it is he alone to whom heauen is opened: namely, that he may bring bring in with him all thoſe, who will now followe him as their guide. For he doth teſtifie that he is laide open and made euident vnto al men, that he may make all men partakers of his power. To be lifted vp doth ſignifie to be placed in an high place, that all men may ſee him. This commeth to paſſe by the preaching of the goſpel. For whereas ſome doe expounde it to be meant of the croſſe, it agreeth not with the text, and it is nothing to the purpoſe. Therefore the meaning of the woordes is plaine, that Chriſte ſhalbe lifted vp by the preaching of the goſpel like to a banner, that all men may beholde him as Eſay foretolde. Hee ſetteth downe a figure of this lifting vp in the braſen ſerpent, which Moſes erected, the beholding whereof did cure thoſe that were wounded with the deadly byting of Serpents. VVe know the hiſtorie which is conteined Num. 21. 9. Furthermore, it is cited in this place to this end, that Chriſt may declare that by the preaching of the goſpel, hee ſhall be ſet in the ſight of all men, that whoſoeuer ſhall beholde him with faith, may be ſaued. Eſay. 2, 2.

VVhereby wee muſt gather, that Chriſt is plainely ſet before our eyes in the goſpel, leaſt any man ſhould complaine of obſcuritie, and that this reuelation is common vnto all men, and that faith hath her ſight and beholding wherewith ſhee may ſee Chriſte as if hee were preſent: like as Paul ſaith, that he is plainly depainted out with his croſſe when hee is truely preached. And this is no vnproper, or farre fet ſimilitude. For as that was only the externall ſhape of a ſerpent, within there was no deadly or venemous thing: ſo Chriſt tooke vpon him the ſhape of ſinful fleſh being yet cleane & void of ſin, that hemight cure in vs the deadly woũd of ſin. Neither was it in vaine that the Lord in times paſt, whẽ the Iewes were wounded of ſerpents, did prouide ſuch a kinde of medicine. And this did ſerue to confirme the wordes of Chriſte. For ſeeing that he ſaw that he was contemned as an obſcure & vile perſon, he could bring in no fitter thing then the lifting vp of the ſerpent. As if he ſhoulde ſay, that it ought not to ſeeme an abiurd thing, if contrarie to the opinion of men he be extolled from lowe degree vnto higher, becauſe that was ſhadowed in the figure of the ſerpent, vnder the law. Now the queſtion is asked whether Chriſt doth compare himſelfe to the Serpent, becauſe there is ſome likelihood: or he giueth vs to vnderſtand that it was a ſacrament, as was Manna. For although Manna was bodily food, appointed vnto the preſent vſe, yet Paul doth alſo teſtifie that it was a ſpirituall myſterie. Both this place, and alſo that, that the ſerpent was kept vntill ſuche time as through the ſuperſtition of the people it was turned into an idoll, do induce me to thinke the ſame concerning the braſen ſerpent. If any man thinke otherwiſe, I doe not contend. Gal. 3. 1. 1. Cor. 10. 3

16 For ſo God. Chriſt openeth the firſt cauſe and as it were the fountaine of our ſaluation: and that leaſt any doubt ſhould remaine. For our mindes haue no quiet reſting place, vntill ſuch time as they come vnto ꝑ free loue of god. Therfore like as we cã ſeek the whole matter of our ſaluatiõ no where els ſaue only in Chriſt: ſo we muſt mark whẽce Chriſte came vnto vs, why he was offered vnto vs, to be our ſauiour. Both theſe things are plainly deliuered vnto vs in this place: namely, ꝑ faith in chriſt doth giue life vnto al mẽ: & that Chriſt brought life vnto vs, becauſe our heauẽly father wil not haue mãkind whõ he loueth, to periſh. And here

muſt marke the order diligently. For when as the originall of our ſaluation is once handeled, as there is wicked ambition ingrafted in our nature: ſo ſtraightway there creepeth into our mindes diuliſh imaginations concerning our owne merites. Therefore we feigne that GOD is mercifull vnto vs for this cauſe, becauſe hee iudged vs to bee worthie to bee regarded. But the ſcripture doth euery where extoll his meere and ſimple mercy, which may aboliſh all merites. And this is the ſole meaning of Chriſte his wordes, when hee ſetteth downe the cauſe in Gods loue. For if wee will goe any higher, the ſpirite locketh the gate by the Eph.1.5. mouth of Paule, teaching that this loue is grounded in the purpoſe of his will. And truly it is manifeſt that Chriſte ſaid thus, to the ende hee might drawe men from reſpecting themſelues, vnto the only mercie of God. And he ſaith plainely that God was not moued to deliuer vs becauſe he did marke that there was ſomething in vs that was worthie of ſo great a benefite: but he aſſigneth the glory of our deliuerance wholy vnto his loue: and that doth better appeare by the text: for he ſaith that the ſonne is giuen vnto men that they may not periſh. Vvherupon it followeth, that vntill ſuch time as Chriſt doth vouchſafe to helpe vs beeing loſt, we are all appointed vnto eternall deſtruction. And Paule alſo ſheweth this by the circumſtance of time: namely, becauſe we were lo-
Ro.5.10. ued whenas yet we were enemies through ſinne. Surely where ſin doth reigne, we ſhall finde nothing but the wrath of GOD, which bringeth with it death. Therfore it is mercy alone that reconcileth vs vnto God, that it may alſo reſtore vs to life. Yet this kinde of ſpeech ſeemeth to be contrarie to manye places of ſcripture, whiche doe laye the firſte foundation of Gods loue toward vs in Chriſte, and without him they ſhew that God doth hate vs. But we muſt remẽber that which I ſaid before, that the ſecrete loue wherewith God imbraced vs with himſelf, becauſe it floweth from his eternall purpoſe, is aboue all other cauſes: and that the grace which he wil haue ſhewed vnto vs, and whereby we are lifted vp vnto the hope of ſaluation, doth begin at the reconciliation gotten by Chriſt. For ſeeing that it muſt needes be that he hateth ſin, how ſhal we be perſuaded that he loueth vs vntill ſuche time as our ſinnes are purged, in reſpect whereof, he is worthily angrie with vs? So that the blood of Chriſt, muſt come betweene, to reconcile vs vnto God, before ſuch time as we can feele his fatherly good wil. And as wee heare in the former place, that God did giue his ſonne to die for vs, becauſe he loued vs: ſo it foloweth ſtraightway after, that Chriſt alone is he in whom we ought properly to fixe our faith He hath giuen his only begotten ſonne that whoſoeuer ſhall beleeue in him may not periſh. This I ſay is ꝑ right beholding of faith, to ſet Chriſt before it, in whom it may beholde the breaſt of God powred out into loue: this is the firme and ſounde ſhoareto leane vnto the death of Chriſt, as the only pledge. This worde only begotten, hath in it great force to ſet foorth vnto vs the vehemency of Gods loue toward vs. For becauſe men are not eaſily perſuaded ꝑ God doth loue thẽ: to the end he might take away all doubtfulnes, hee ſetteth downe in plaine words, ꝑ God did loue vs ſo dearely, that he ſpared not his only ſon for our ſake. Therfore ſeing that god hath declared his loue toward vs ſufficiẽtly, whoſoeuer is not cõtented with this teſtimonie but doth as yet doubt, he doth Chriſt no ſmall iniurie, as if ſome one of the common ſorte were deliuered vp to death.

But

But rather we muſt thus thinke with our ſelues, that looke howe great account God doth make of his ſonne, ſo precious was our ſaluation vnto him: the price whereof he would haue the death of his onely begotten ſonne himſelfe to bee. Chriſte is called by this name by good right, becauſe he is the onely ſonne by nature: who doth make vs partakers of this honour by adoption, then, when we are ingrafted into his bodie.

Hee that beleeueth in him may not perishe. This is a ſinguler commendation of faith, that it deliuereth vs from eternal deſtruction. For his meaning was plainely to expreſſe, that although we ſeeme to be borne vnto death, yet is there certaine deliuerance offered in the faith of Chriſte: ſo that death which doth otherwiſe hang ouer our heads is no whit to bee feared. And he added alſo the vniuerſall note, both that hee may inuite all men in generall vnto the participation of life, and alſo that hee may cut off all excuſe from the vnbeleeuers. To the ſame ende tendeth the worde worlde which hee vſed before. For although there ſtial nothing be founde in the worlde that is worthie of Gods fauour, yet he ſheweth that he is fauourable vnto the whole worlde, when hee calleth all men without exception vnto the faith of Chriſt, which is nothing els but the entrance into life. But yet let vs remember that life is promiſed vnto all thoſe who ſhall beleeue in Chriſte, ſo commonly, that yet faith is not common vnto all men. For Chriſte lyeth open vnto all men: yet god doth onely open the eyes of the elect, that they may ſeeke him by faith. Furthermore, herein appeareth the wonderfull effect of faith, becauſe we doe thereby receiue Chriſte as he is giuen vs of the father: namely, that he may make vs heires of eternall life being deliuered from the giltineſſe of eternall death: becauſe he hath purged our ſinnes by the ſacrifice of his death, leaſt any thing ſhould hinder God frō taking vs for his children. Therefore ſeeing that faith doth imbrace Chriſte with the efficacie of his death, & fruit of his reſurrectiō: it is no maruell if we do alſo thereby enioy the life of Chriſte: yet it doth not appeare ſufficiently as yet, why and how faith doth make vs partakers of life, whether it bee becauſe Chriſte doth regenerate vs by his ſpirite, that the righteouſneſſe of God may liue and be of force in vs, or whether it be becauſe, beeyng purged by his blood from ſinnes, we are iudged iuſt before god through free pardon. Truely it is certaine, that theſe two are alwayes ioyned together: but becauſe we intreate in this place of the certaintie of ſaluation, wee muſt eſpecially note this reaſon, that we do liue for this cauſe, becauſe God doth loue vs freely in not imputing vnto vs our ſinnes. Therefore the ſacrifice is mentioned by name, whereby togeather with ſinnes, death, and the curſe are aboliſhed. I haue alreadie declared the drift of theſe two members: namely, that wee may know that wee recouer life in Chriſte, whereof wee are depriued in our ſelues. For in this miſerable eſtate of mankinde, redemption is before ſaluation in order.

17 For he ſent not. This is the confirmation of the ſentence next going before: becauſe God ſent not his ſonne hyther vnto vs in vaine. But he came not to deſtroy. Therfore it followeth that it is the proper office of God to giue ſaluation through him vnto all thoſe that beleeue. Now there is no cauſe why any man ſhoulde doubt, or be carefull howe to eſcape death, ſeeing that we vnderſtande that this is Gods purpoſe, that Chriſte ſhoulde deliuer vs from the ſame. This worde worlde is repeated againe to the ende no man may thinke that he is excluded, if ſo bee it he holde the way of faith. To iudge is taken in this place as in manie other places for to condemne. And wheras he ſaith, he came not to cõdẽne the worlde, he ſetteth downe therein the proper ende of his comming. For what neede had Chriſte to come to deſtroy vs who were vtterly periſhed? Therefore we muſt conſider no other thing in Chriſt, but that God meant to helpe vs for his infinite goodneſſe ſake, that he might ſaue vs beeing loſt. And ſo often as our ſinnes do teſtifie againſt vs, ſo often as Satan doth pricke vs forward to deſpayre, wee muſt holde vp this buckler, that God woulde not haue vs to periſh euerlaſtingly, becauſe he hath ordeined his ſonne to bee the ſauiour of the worlde. And whereas Chriſte in another place ſaith, that he came to iudgement in that hee is called a ſtone of ſtumblyng, whereas hee is ſaide to be the fall of many, that is an accidentall thing, or (that I may ſo ſpeake) a thyng that commeth by chaunce. For they that refuſe the grace that is offered in him, are worthie to finde hym a Iudge and reuenger of ſuch wicked & filthie contempt. VVhereof there appeareth a moſt euident token in the Goſpel: for whereas it is properly the power of God vnto ſaluation vnto all that beleeue, the vnthankfulneſſe of many cauſeth it to turne to their deſtruction. Paule expreſſeth both verie well, when he boaſteth that he hath in readineſſe the vengeance, wherewith hee will puniſhe all the aduerſaries of his doctrine, after that the obedience of the godly ſhall bee fulfilled. For it is as much as if hee ſhoulde ſay, that the Goſpel is appoinred chiefly and principally vnto the faithfull to bee vnto them for ſaluation: but that afterwarde it ſhall turne to the deſtruction of the vnbeleeuers, who contemning the grace of Chriſt, had rather haue him to be the authour of death then of life.

2. Cor. 10 16.

He that beleeueth in him is not condemned. VVhereas he doth ſo often & ſo diligently inculcate this point, that all the faithfull are out of danger of death, wee may gather hence howe neceſſarie the certaintie and ſtabilitie of hope is, that the conſcience may not continually feare and be tormented. Therefore he affirmeth againe that there doth no damnation remaine when as we ſhall beleeue, which thing he will expound more at large in the firſt chapter. The preſentence is taken in this place for the future, according to the cuſtome of the Hebrewe tongue: for he will haue the faithfull to be free from the feare of damnation. The next ſentence, but hee that beleeueth not &c. Signifieth vnto vs that there is no other remedie whereby any man can eſcape death. As if hee ſhoulde ſay, that there remaineth nothing but death for thoſe, who reiect the life that is giuen thẽ in Chriſt, ſeeing that life cõſiſteth only in faith alone. He putteth in the preterperfection of the verbe emphatically, that he might the better expreſſe that all vnbeleeuers are quite vndone. And we muſt note, that Chriſt ſpeaketh peculiarly of thoſe whoſe impietie ſhall bewray it ſelfe in the manifeſt contempt of the goſpel. For although it be true, that there was neuer any other way to eſcape death, then to flie vnto Chriſte, yet becauſe Chriſt intreateth in this place of the preaching of the goſpel, which was to be ſpread abrode throughout the whole worlde, he vttereth theſe wordes againſte thoſe who doe wickedly and malitiouſly extinguiſh the light which GOD hath kindled.

19 And this is the iudgement, that light came into the worlde: and men loued darkenes more then light, for their workes were euill.

20 For euery one that doth euill hateth the light, and commeth not vnto the light, leaſt his workes ſhould bee reproued.

21 But he that doth truth, commeth to the light, that his workes may be made manifeſt, becauſe they are done in God.

19 And this is the iudgement. He preuenteth the murmurings & complainings which profane men are wont to vtter againſt the too too great rigour (as they thinke) of GOD, when as he dealeth more ſharpely with them then they woulde wiſhe, It ſeemeth to them an harde matter that all thoſe ſhould periſh which do not beleeue in Chriſt. Therfore leaſt any man ſhould atcribe his damnation vnto Chriſt, he teacheth that it is to bee imputed to euery mans owne fault. The reaſon is becauſe infidelitie is a witneſſe of an euill conſcience. VVhereby it appeareth that the wickednes of the vnbeleeuers doeth keepe them backe from comming to Chriſt. Some there be who thinke that the ſigne and token of damnation is only ſet downe in this place. But Chriſt his intent and purpoſe is to tame the wickednes of men, leaſt after their accuſtomed maner they turne their backes or chide with God, as if hee did handle them vniuſtly, whileſt that he doth puniſh their incredulitie with eternall death. Therefore he ſheweth that ſuch iudgement is iuſt, & not ſubiect to any ſuch falſe ſlaunders: not only becauſe they deale frowardly, who preferre darkneſſe before light, and doe of their owne accord flie from the light which is offered them: but becauſe that hatred of the light doth ſpring only from a giltie and wicked minde. There ſlumbreth in many a goodly ſhew of holineſſe, who notwithſtanding are enemies to the goſpel: but how ſo euer they appeare to be more holy then angels, it is queſtionleſſe that they are hypocrites: becauſe they refuſe the doctrine of Chriſt for no other cauſe, ſaue only becauſe they loue their lurking dennes, whereby their filthineſſe may be couered. Therefore ſeeing that hypocriſie alone doth make God to bee diſpleaſed with men, they are all giltie, becauſe vnleſſe being blinded with pride they did flatter themſelues in their vices, they would be ready and willing to receiue the doctrine of the Goſpel.

20 For whoſoeuer doth euill. His meaning is that they do hate the light for this cauſe, becauſe they are euill, & ſo muche as in them lyeth they deſire to couer their ſinnes: whereupon it followeth, that they do as it were ſet purpoſe nouriſh the matter of damnation, by driuing away the remedy. Therfore we are much deceiued if we think that they are carried with a godly zeale who rage againſt the goſpel, ſeeing that they do rather abhor the light, that they may more freely flatter themſelues in darkneſſe.

21 But he that doth. This ſeemeth to be ſpoken vnproperly & abſurdly vnleſſe you will confeſſe that there are ſome that be righteous, & which ſpeake the truth, before they be regenerate by the ſpirite of God. VVhich thing agreeth not with the perpetuall doctrine of the ſcripture. For wee know that faith is the roote from which the fruits of good woorkes doe ſpring. To the end that Auguſtine may reſolue this doubt, hee expounded theſe wordes doth the truth, thus: hee which acknowledgeth howe miſerable we are, and deſtitute of all power to doe well,

And indeede this is the true preparation vnto faith, whenas being inforced with the feeling of our pouertie, we flie vnto the grace of God. But all this is contrarie to Chriſte his minde: for his meaning was ſimplie to affirme, that thoſe who deale ſincerely, doe deſire nothing more then the light, that their workes may be proued and tryed, becauſe after that ſuch tryall is made, it doth better appeare that they ſpake the truth before God, and were cleane from all deceite. But ſome man will inferre falſly and ignorantly, that mens conſciences doe not accuſe them before faith commeth. For Chriſte doth not ſay that the elect doe beleeue that they may winne prayſe for their good workes: but he declareth onely what the infidels woulde doe vnleſſe theyr owyne conſciences did accuſe them. Furthermore, Chriſte vſeth this worde truth, becauſe beeing deceiued with the externall ſhew of workes, we doe not conſider what lurketh with in. Therefore he ſaith that perfect men, and thoſe who are no diſſemblers, do willingly come foorth into the ſight of God, who is onely fit to giue iudgement of our workes. For thoſe workes are ſaide in this place to be done in God, which he alloweth, and are good according to his rule. Hereby wee may learne that wee muſt not iudge of woorkes, vnleſſe we beholde them with the light of the Goſpel: becauſe our reaſon is altogether blinde.

22 After theſe thinges came Ieſus and his diſciples into the land of Iudea, and he was conuerſant there with them, and did baptiſe.

23 And Iohn was alſo baptizing in Ænon nigh vnto Salim: becauſe there was much water there. Therefore they came and were baptiſed.

24 Becauſe Iohn was not yet caſt into priſon.

25 Therefore there aroſe a queſtion betweene the diſciples of Iohn and the Iewes, concerning purging.

26 And they came vnto Iohn, and ſaid vnto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Iordan, to whome thou beareſt witneſſe, beholde he baptiſeth, and all men come vnto him.

27 Iohn anſwered and ſaide, A man cannot receiue any thing vnleſſe it bee giuen him from heauen.

28 You your ſelues are witneſſes with mee that I ſaide, I am not Chriſte, but am ſent before him.

22 After theſe thinges Ieſus came. It is likely that ſo ſoone as the feaſt day was paſt, Chriſt came into that part of Iurie which was nigh to the citie Ænon, which was placed in the tribe of Manaſſes. The Euangeliſt ſaith that there was much water there, whereof there was no ſuch ſtore in Iurie. And Coſmographers doe write that theſe two cities Ænon & Salim were not farre from the meeting of Iordan and Iabec, nigh whereunto they place Scythopolis. But out of theſe wordes we may gather that when Chriſt & Iohn did baptize, they did put al the body into the water. Although wee neede not to ſtande much about the externall ryte, ſo that it agree with the ſpirituall veritie, inſtitution and rule of the Lord. But foraſmuch as we cã coniecture, this nighnes of place did cauſe many rumors to be ſpread abroade, and much talke to be had, concerning the worſhip of God, the lawe, the eſtate of the Church, becauſe of two new baptizers which were riſen together. For whereas the Euangeliſt ſaith, that that Chriſte baptized, I referre that vnto the firſt beginning: becauſe he began then publikely to execute the function that was inioyned him of his father. And although he did this by his diſciples, yet is he named in this place as the authour of baptiſme, omitting the miniſters, who did nothing but in his name, & at his commandement. Concerning whiche thyng we will ſpeake ſomwhat in the beginning of the next Chapter.

25 Therefore there aroſe a queſtion, &c. It is not in vaine that the Euangeliſt, ſaith in this place, that there aroſe a queſtion amongſt the diſciples of Iohn. For the leſſe they were inſtructed in doctrine, the more boldly doe they offer themſelues to diſpute, as ignorance is alwayes blinde. If others had ſet vpon them, they might haue been excuſed: but in this that being vnfit to enter into the combate, they doe of their owne accorde prouoke the Iewes, they deale therin both raſhly & wickedly. The wordes import thus much, that they moued a queſtion. And beſides this that they did offend in reaſoning raſhly, farther then their skill woulde reache, about a matter which they knewe not: there was as great a fault as this, becauſe they did not ſo much intend to defende the lawefull vſe of baptiſme, as to defende their maſters cauſe, that his authoritie might remaine ſafe and ſounde. Both theſe thinges were worthie to be reprehended: becauſe they not knowing the true maner of baptiſme, doe ſet the ſacred inſtitution of God to be laughed at: and becauſe through peruerſe ambition, they take their maſters part againſt Chriſte. Therefore it appeareth that their combe was cut with one woorde, when as it was obiected, that Chriſte did alſo baptize. For being occupied about the perſon of the man, they did leſſe regard the doctrine. VVee are taught by the example of them to what ende they come, who are driuen rather with the wicked affection they beare towarde men, then with the zeale of God: and therefore are we admoniſhed that this one thing is to be reſpected, and by all meanes to be regarded, that Chriſte alone be chiefe. Concerning purging. The queſtion was about purging, becauſe the Iewes had diuers kindes of waſhinges appointed them by the lawe: and being not contented with thoſe that were appointed in the lawe, they did moreouer obſerue many diligently which they receiued from their elders. VVhereas Chriſte and Iohn doe bring in now a new rite & maner of waſhing after ſuch plentie & varietie, they count it to be an abſurd thing.

26 To whom thou bareſt witneſſe. By this argument they goe about eyther to make Chriſte inferiour to Iohn, or to make him bound to Iohn, becauſe he receiued honour of him. For they account that as a benefite, that he did adorne Chriſt with honourable titles: As though it was not his duetie thus to prayſe him: yea as if this were not his principall dignitie to be the ſonne of God his cryer. Therefore it was not meete that they ſhoulde preferre Iohn before Chriſt, becauſe he was commended by his teſtimonie. VVhereas they ſay, that all men come vnto him, theſe wordes proceed from peruers emulation, for they are afraid leaſt their maſter be forſaken of the multitude.

27 A man cannot. Some doe referre it vnto Chriſt, as if he did accuſe his diſciples of wicked boldneſſe againſt God, becauſe they goe aboute to take that from Chriſte which the father had giuen him. Therefore they will haue this to be the meaning, that it came of God, that he was preferred in ſo ſhort ſpace vnto ſo great honour, therefore in vaine doe you ſtriue to put him downe whom God hath exalted with his hande. Otherſome doe think that it is an exclamation, whereinto hee burſteth out through indignation, for that his diſciples had ſo little profited. And truly it was a thing too abſurd, to goe about to make him as one of the common ſort, and to make him inferiour vnto his miniſter, whome they had heard ſo often to be Chriſt. Therefore Iohn might well enough ſay, that it was but loſt labour to teach men, becauſe they are deafe and dull vntill ſuch time as they be renued in minde. But I am rather of their opinion, who do expound it of Iohn: namely, that hee ſeaſith that it was not in their or his owne hande to make him great, becauſe this is the meaſure of vs all, that we be ſuch as God would haue vs to be. For if the ſonne of God himſelfe did not take to him honour, what man of the common ſort dare deſire more then is giuen him of the Lord? If this cogitation were deeply rooted in the mindes of men, it ſhould be ſufficient to bridle ambition. Furthermore, ambition being once corrected and aboliſhed, the plague of contentions ſhoulde alſo be taken away. For how commeth it to paſſe, that euery man exalteth himſelfe more then is meet, ſaue only becauſe we do not depend vpon God, that we may be contented with that degree which he aſſigneth vnto vs?

28 You are my witneſſes. Iohn chideth his diſciples, becauſe they beleeued not his wordes. Hee had oftentimes tolde them that he was not Chriſt: therfore there remained nothing but that he ſhould be a ſeruant ſubiect to the ſon of God, as were ỳ reſt. And we muſt note this place: For in denying that he is Chriſte, he leaueth nothing vnto himſelf, but that, being ſubiect vnto the head, he miniſter as another in the church, & be not ſo extolled that he obſcure, the honour of the head. He ſaith that hee was ſent before to prepare a way for Chriſte, as kinges Apparitors are wont to doe.

29 Hee that hath the bride, is the bridegrome: but the friend of the bridegrome which ſtandeth and heareth him, reioyceth with ioy, becauſe of the voyce of the bridegrome: therefore thus my ioy is full.

30 Hee muſt encreaſe, but I muſt be diminiſhed.

31 He which commeth from aboue, is aboue all: he which is of the earth, is of the earth, and ſpeaketh of the earth: he which commeth from heauen, is aboue all.

32 And that which he hath ſeene and heard, this doth he teſtifie, & no man receiueth
Rom. 3. 4 his teſtimonie.

33 But he that hath receiued his teſtimonie, hath ſet to his ſeale that God is true.

34 For whom God ſent he ſpeaketh the wordes of God: for God giueth not his ſpirit by meaſure.

29 Hee that hath the bryde. By this ſimilitude, hee better confirmeth, that it is Chriſt alone that is exempted out of the common ſort of men. For as he that marryeth, doth not therefore bid his friends vnto the mariage, that he may make the bride common vnto thē, or that departing from his right hee may admit them to bee his partners in his marriage bed, but rather that the mariage being honourablie reuerēced by them, it may be made more holy: ſo Chriſt doth not call his miniſters vnto the function of teaching, that after they haue brought the Churche vnder, they may vſurpe to themſelues the gouernment, but that he may vſe their faithfull faithfull diligence to aſſociate the ſame vnto himſelfe. This is a great and excellent thing, for men to bee ſet ouer the Church,that they may preſent the perſon of the ſonne of God. Therfore they are as friends whom the ſonne of God adioyneth vnto himſelfe,that they may celebrate the marriage together. But they muſt marke the difference,that being mindeful of their degree,they doe not take to themſelues that which is proper to the bridegrome. The ſumme is this,that how much ſoeuer teachers doe excell,yet muſt not this be any hinderaunce vnto Chriſte, but that hee muſt be chiefe:he alone muſt rule in his Churche, he only muſt gouerne the ſame by his worde. This ſimilitude is oftentimes vſed in the ſcripture,when as the Lorde will ſet foorth vnto vs the holy bonde of adoption,wherewith he ioyneth vs vnto him ſelfe. And as he offereth himſelfe truly to vs to be enioyed of vs,that he may be ours: ſo by good right doth hee require at our handes the faith and mutuall loue,which the wife oweth to her huſband.

Furthermore,this marryage was fulfilled in Chriſte in all reſpects, whoſe fleſh and bones we are,as Paule teacheth. The chaſtitie which hee requyreth conſiſteth chiefly in the obeying of the Goſpel, that wee ſuffer not our ſelues by any meanes to be carried away from the pure ſimplicitie therof: as the ſame Paule doth teach 2. Cor. 11.2. Therefore we muſt be ſubiect to Chriſt alone,he muſt be our only head,wee muſt not go aſide an hayres bredth from the plaine doctrine of the Goſpel,he alone hath the principalitie of glory that he may retaine the right and place of the bridegrome. What doe the miniſters? Truly the ſonne of God calleth them that they may ſerue him and wayte vppon him in the celebration of the holy matiage. Wherefore it is their part,by all means to endeuour to preſent the bride with whom they are put in truſt,a pure virgin vnto her husband. Which thing Paule boaſteth hee doth, in the place afore cited. But they who winne the church rather to thēſelues thē to Chriſte,they doe vnfaithfully violate the wedlock,which they ſhould adorne. And the greater honour Chriſte doth vouchſafe to beſtow vpon vs,whileſt that he committeth the cuſtodie of his bride vnto vs, ſo much the more wicked is our infidelitie,vnleſſe we indeuour to reſerue his title and right wholy vnto himſelfe. Therefore this my ioy is fulfilled. His meaning is,that he hath obtained the ſumme of all his petitions, & that there remaineth nothing els for him to deſire, when he ſeeth Chriſte reigne,and that he is heard according as he deſerueth. Whoſoeuer ſhall be thus affected, that ſetting apart all reſpect of himſelfe, he extolleth Chriſt,and is contented with his honour,he ſhall gouerne the Churche faithfully and fruitfully: but whoſoeuer ſhal miſſe this marke but a little,he ſhalbe a filthie adulterer,neyther ſhall he be able to do any thing els but to corrupt the bride of Chriſte. Eph.5.29.

30 Hee muſt encreaſe. Hee goeth farther,for whereas he was before extolled vnto high dignitie by the Lorde, hee ſaith that this was but temporall: but nowe muſt they beleeue the Sunne of righteouſneſſe that is riſen. Therefore he doth not onely driue away and ſhake of the vaine ſmokes of honour, which were raſhly heaped vppon him through the errour of men: but alſo is very circumſpect that the true honour whiche the Lord had beſtowed vppon him, doe not darken the brightneſſe of Chriſte.

For

For this cauſe he ſaith, that he hath hitherto been accounted a great prophete, that he was placed in that ſo high a degree only for a time, vntyll Chriſte ſhoulde come, to whom he was to deliuer vp the light. In the meane ſeaſon he doth teſtifie, that he can ſuffer with a contented minde himſelfe to bee brought to naught, ſo that Chriſte may repleniſhe the whole worlde with his beames. And all the paſtours of the Church muſt follow this deſire of Iohn, that they ſtoupe downe with head & ſhoulders to lift vp Chriſte.

31 Hee that commeth from aboue. Hee ſheweth by another ſimilitude how much Chriſte differeth from the reſt, and howe farre he excelleth all other. For he compareth him to a king, or chiefe captaine, who ſpeaking out of an high Tribunall or iudgement ſeate, is to be hearde for the reuerence of his gouernement: and he teacheth that it is ſufficient for him, if he ſpeake out of a lowe ſettle. He ſaith that Chriſt came from aboue, not onely becauſe he is God, but becauſe there appeareth nothyng in him but that which is heauenly and full of maieſtie. In the ſeconde member the common tranſlation hath but once, that is of the earth: but the Greeke bookes doe agree together in the other reading. I ſuſpect that the repetition (which they thought was ſuperfluous) was raſed out by vnlearned men. But it is as much as if he ſhould ſay, hee which is of the earth, ſmelleth of his beginning, & according to the eſtate of his nature abideth in the earthly order. Therefore hee affirmeth that this is proper to Chriſte alone to ſpeake from on high, becauſe he came downe from heauen. But heere may a queſtion be asked, whether Iohn came not alſo from heauen, as touching his calling and function, and that therefore the Lorde was to be hearde ſpeaking by his mouth. For hee ſeemeth to doe iniurie to the heauenly doctrine which he deliuereth. I anſwere, that this is not ſpoken ſimply, but by way of compariſon. If the miniſters be conſidered apart, they ſpeake as from heauen with great authoritie, that which God commaundeth them: but ſo ſoone as they begin once to be ſet againſt Chriſte, they muſt be no body any longer. So the Apoſtle vnto the Hebrewes 12.25. comparing the law and the goſpell together, ſaith: Seeing that they eſcaped not free, who deſpiſed him that ſpake vpon earth, take heede that yee deſpiſe him not which is from heauen. Therefore Chriſte will be acknowledged in his miniſters, but ſo that hee remayne Lorde alone, and that they be contented with the degree of ſeruaunts: eſpecially when the matter commeth once to a compariſon, he will be ſo diſtinguiſhed that he may be chiefe.

32 And that which hee heard and ſaw. Iohn goeth forward in his office, For to the ende that he may make readie diſciples for Chriſte, hee commendeth his doctrine for the certaintie thereof, that he vttereth nothing but that which he receiued of his father. Seeing and hearing are ſet againſt all manner doubtfull opinion, vaine rumors, and all manner of inuentions. For he giueth them to vnderſtande that he taught nothing but that which he knewe well. But ſome man will ſay that he deſerueth ſmall credite, who hath nothing but that which he hath hearde. I aunſwere that he meaneth by this worde that Chriſte was taught of his father, ſo that he bringeth nothing, but that which is diuine, as it was reuealed vnto him by GOD. And that agreeth with all the perſon of Chriſte, foraſmuch as he was ſent into the worlde of his father to be an interpreter and Embaſſadour. Afterwarde hee reprehendeth the vnthankefulnes of the worlde, which refuſed ſo certaine and faithfull a witneſſe, ſo wickedly and haynouſly. And alſo hee remoueth a ſtumblyng blocke, which might turne away many frō the faith, & hinder the courſe of many. For (as we are wont too muche to depende vppon the iudgement of men) many do eſteeme the Goſpel according to the contempt of the world, at leaſt whē they ſee it euery where reiected: being preuented with this preiudice, they are more loth and ſlow to beleeue. Therefore ſo often as we ſee ſuch waywardnes of the worlde, yet let this admonition kepe vs in the conſtant obedience of the ſame, that it is the truth which came from God. VVhen hee ſaith, that no man receiueth it, his meaning is, that there are very few and almoſt none that are faithfull, if they be compared vnto the huge multitude of the wicked.

33 And hee that receiued his teſtimonie. Heere he exhorteth and incourageth the godly to imbrace the doctrine of the Goſpel without feare. As if he ſhoulde ſay, that there is no cauſe why they ſhould bee aſhamed of their ſmalneſſe of number, ſithence they haue God to be the authour of their faith, who alone is aboundantly ſufficient for vs like vnto all. Therefore although the whole worlde doth diſcredit the goſpel, yet this ought not to keepe backe the godly from ſubſcribing vnto GOD. They haue alſo that wherin they may quiet and pacifie thēſelues, when as they know that to beleeue the goſpell, is nothing els then to ſubſcribe vnto the Oracles of God. In the meane while we gather that this is the propertie of faith to leane vnto God, and to be eſtabliſhed in his word, For there can be no ſubſcription vnleſſe God doe ſpeake firſt. By which doctrine faith is not only diſtinguiſhed frō all mans inuentions, but alſo from an vncertaine and doubtfull opinion. For it muſt be anſwereable vnto the truth of God which is exempted from all doubting, Therefore as God cannot lye, ſo it is an abſurd thing for the faith to wauer. Being armed with this defence, we ſhall continue victorers continually, with what engins ſoeuer Satan do goe about to trouble and ſhake vs. Out of this place alſo are we taught howe acceptable a ſacrifice faith is before God. For as he maketh moſt account of his truth, ſo we cannot do him any greater worſhip, then whileſt that by our faith we profeſſe that he is true: then doe we giue him his due honour. So men cannot do him any greater iniurie then when they doe not beleeue the goſpell. For hee cannot be ſpoyled of his truth, but that all his glory and maieſtie muſt be aboliſhed. And his truth is after a ſort ſhut vp in the goſpel, and hee will haue the ſame knowen there. VVherefore the vnbeleeuers leaue nothing for God ſo much as in them lyeth: not that their impietie doth any whit impayre the credit of God, but that as much as in them lyeth, they reproue, and accuſe him of vanitie. Vnleſſe we be more then ſtony, this ſo excellent a title, wherewith faith is adorned, ought to kindle in our mindes the moſt feruent deſire of the ſame. For what great honour is this whereunto God doth vouchſafe to extol miſerable wretches, that they who are by nature nothing els but lying and vanitie, ſhould be accounted meete to approoue with their ſubſcription the holy trueth of God.

34 For whom God ſent. Hee confirmeth the ſentence next going before. For he ſheweth that we haue truly to deale with God, when as we receiue the doctrine of Chriſte: for Chriſte came from none other ſaue on ly from his heauenly father. Therefore it is God alone that ſpeaketh by him. And truly we giue leſſe honour vnto the doctrine of Chriſt, thē we ought if we doubt to acknowledge it to be diuine. Not by meaſure. This place is expounded two maner of wayes: for ſome doe extende it vnto the common diſpenſation, that God, who is the fountaine of all good thinges which can neuer be drawen drie, is not emptied when he powreth out his gifts vpon men aboundantly. They which take water out of any veſſell to diſtribute it, doe at length come vnto the bottome: but we need not to feare any ſuch thing in God: for the aboundance of his giftes ſhall neuer be ſo large, but that he can exceede the ſame whenſoeuer he will, with newe liberalitie. This expoſition ſeemeth to haue ſome colour, becauſe the ſentence is indefinite, yet do I rather follow Auguſtine, who doth interprete this to bee ſpoken of Chriſte. Neither ought this to be any let, that there is as yet no mention made of Chriſt in this member, ſeeing that the laſt member doth take away all doubtfulneſſe, where that is reſtrained vnto Chriſt, which might ſeeme to be ſpoken generally of manie. For without doubt theſe wordes are added expoſitiuely, that the father hath giuen the ſonne all things into his hand becauſe he loueth him: Therefore they are to be read in one text. And the worde of the preſentence doth ſignifie a continuall act. For although he was once endowed with the ſpirite according to the chiefeſt perfection, and yet notwithſtanding he floweth continually as out of a fountaine, farre and wide, hee is therefore not vnfitly ſaide euen now alſo to receiue of the father. But and if any man had rather expound it ſimplie, the alteration of the tence is not ſtraunge in ſuch verbes. Now the ſenſe is manifeſt, that the ſpirite was not giuen Chriſte by meaſure, as if the facultie and ſtore of that grace wherein he excelleth were limitted by ſome meaſure as Paul teacheth 1. Cor. 12. 7. and Eph. 4. 7. that the ſpirite is giuen euery man, according to the meaſure of the giuing, ſo that none aboundeth vnto the full. For ſeeing that this is the mutuall bonde of brotherly participation, that no man be ſufficient for himſelfe apart, but that one haue need of another: chriſt differeth from vs in this, that the father hath powred out vpon him the infinite aboundance of his ſpirite. And truly the ſpirit muſt remaine in him without meaſure, that we may all receiue of his fulneſſe, as it was ſaid in the firſt chap. And to this ende tendeth that which followeth immediately after, that the father hath giuen all things into his hand. For Iohn doth not onely in theſe woordes ſhew foorth the excellencie of Chriſte, but alſo the ende and vſe of that plentie wherewith he is endowed: namely, that being appointed as an arbitratour of his father, he may diſtribute vnto all men as it ſeemeth good vnto him, and is expedient for them: as Paul doth declare more at large in the 4. chap. vnto the Epheſians, which I cited of late. Therfore how much ſoeuer God doth inrich his children diuerſly, this is proper to Chriſt alone, to haue all thinges in his hand.

35 The father loueth the ſonne and hath giuen all things into his hand.

36 Hee which beleeueth in the ſonne hath eternall life: and hee that beleeueth not the ſonne, ſhall not ſee life, but the wrath of God abideth vpon him.

35 The father loueth the ſonne. But what meaneth this reaſon? Doth he hate all other men? VVe may eaſily anſwere, that he intreateth not of the common loue, wherewith God loueth men whom he hath created or other his workes, but of that ſinguler & particuler loue, which beginning at the ſonne doth flow vnto all creatures. For this loue wherewith embraſing his ſonne, he embraceth vs alſo, doth cauſe him to impart vnto vs all his good things by his hand.

36 Hee which beleeueth in the ſonne. He added this, that we may not only knowe that we muſt aske all good thinges of Chriſt, but alſo vnderſtād and know the maner how to enioy them. Furthermore, he teacheth that this enioying conſiſteth in faith: and that not without cauſe, for aſmuche as wee poſſeſſe thereby Chriſte, who bringeth with him both righteouſneſſe, and life the fruite of righteouſnes. And whereas faith in Chriſt is called the cauſe of life, wee doe thereby gather that life is contained in Chriſte alone, and that we are made partakers thereof only through the grace of Chriſte. But all men doe not agree concerning this point how the life of Chriſt cōmeth vnto vs. For ſom men do vnderſtand it thus, becauſe through beleeuing we receiue the ſpirit which doth regenerate vs vnto righteouſneſſe, we doe obtaine ſaluation by ſuch a kinde of regeneration. And although I confeſſe this to be true, that wee are renued by faith that the ſpirite of God may rule vs, yet I ſay that the free remiſſion of ſinnes is firſt and formoſt to be conſidered, whereby we are made acceptable vnto God: and alſo I ſay that all the hope of ſaluation is both grounded and doth conſiſt in this alone: becauſe righteouſneſſe can by no other meanes be imputed vnto vs before God, ſaue only whileſt that he doth not impute vnto vs our ſinnes. But he which beleeueth not. As he ſet before vs life in Chriſt, that the ſweetneſſe thereof might allure vs: So now he condemneth them vnto eternall death whoſoeuer doe not beleeue Chriſt. And by this meanes doth he amplifie the benefite of god, when he telleth vs that there is no other way to eſcape death, ſaue the deliuerance which we haue in Chriſt. For this ſentence dependeth hereupon that we are al loſt in Adā. And if it be the office of Chriſt, to ſaue that which was loſt, they do worthily abide in death, who refuſe the ſaluation which is offered in him. VVe ſaid of late that this doth properly appertaine vnto thoſe who doe reiect the Goſpel which is reuealed vnto them. For although all mankinde bee wrapped in the ſame deſtruction, yet there remaineth a heauier and double vengeance for thoſe who refuſe Chriſte their deliuerer. And doubtleſſe the intent of the Baptiſt was this, by denouncing death to the vnbeleeuers, to prick vs forwarde vnto the faith of Chriſt.

Furthermore, it is manifeſt that all that righteouſneſſe whiche the worlde doth thinke it hath without Chriſte, is condemned and brought to nought by theſe woordes. Neither is there any cauſe why any man ſhould obiect, that this is vniuſt dealing that thoſe who are otherwiſe godly and holy, ſhould periſh for this cauſe, becauſe they do not beleeue. For in vain is there any holines feigned to be in men beſides that which is giuen them of Chriſte. Hee putteth this phraſe to ſee life, in ſteede of to enioy life. And to the ende hee may the better declare that there remayneth no hope for vs, vnleſſe wee bee deliuered by Chriſte, hee ſaith that the wrath of GOD abideth vpon the vnbeleeuers.

Although that which Auguſtine doth teach, doth not much diſpleaſe me, that is, that he vſed this word (abide) that we may knowe that wee are appointed vnto death euen from our mothers wombe, becauſe wee are all borne the children of wrath. At leaſt I doe willingly admit ſuche a kinde of alluſion, ſo we holde that that is the true and plaine meaninge which I haue ſet downe, that death doth ſo lie vpon all vnbeleeuers, & doth ſo keepe them downe, that they can neuer eſcape. And truly although the wicked and reprobate be cõdẽned naturally, yet do they bring vpon themſelues another death through their infidelitie. And to this ende is there power giuen to the miniſters of the goſpel to binde. For this is the iuſt vengeance which befalleth mans ſtubbornneſſe, that they ſhoulde binde themſelues with the bondes of death, who ſhake of the wholeſome yoke of God.

Chap. 4.

1 Therefore after that the Lorde knewe that the Phariſees had heard that Ieſus did make and baptiſe more diſciples then Iohn,

2 (Although Ieſus himſelfe did not baptiſe but his diſciples)

3 He left Iudea and went againe into Galilee.

4 And he muſt needes goe through Samaria.

5 Therefore he came into a citie of Samaria, which is called Sichar, nigh to the field which Iacob gaue to his ſonne Ioſeph.

6 And there was the VVell of Iacob: and Ieſus being wearie of his iourney did ſit downe thus vpon the VVell, for as much as it was almoſt the ſixt houre.

7 There came a woman of Samaria to drawe water: Ieſus ſaith vnto her, giue mee drinke:

8 (For his diſciples were gon away into the citie to buie meate.)

9 The woman of Samaria ſaith vnto him, howe is it that thou ſeeing thou art a Iewe doeſt aske water of mee, which am a Samaritane? For the Iewes meddle not with the Samaritanes.

1 Therefore after that hee knewe. The Euangeliſt being now about to intreat of the conference, which was betwene Chriſt and the Samaritane, doth firſt of all ſet downe the cauſe of his iourney. For ſeeing that he knewe that the Phariſees were euill affected, he would not put himſelfe in danger of their furie before the time. This was the cauſe why he departed out of Iudea. So that he giueth vs to vnderſtand that Chriſt came not of ſet purpoſe into Samaria, that he might dwell there: but becauſe thoſe that went into Galilee, muſt needes go through it. For it was meet and requiſite for him that he ſhould be occupied in gathering togeather the ſheepe of Iſrael, vntil ſuch time as he ſhould open a gate for the goſpel by his reſurrection.

Therefore whereas he vouchſafed to impart his doctrine vnto the Samaritanes, it was an extraordinarie thing, and (that I may ſo ſpeake) a thing that came by chaunce. But why did he goe aſide into Galilee, as if he woulde not be knowne, which thing was moſt of all to be wyſhed? I anſwere, he knew what to doe, and hee did ſo vſe the opportunitie of time, time that he did not miſſe or let ſlip one minute. Therefore he would finiſh his courſe in order, and with ſuch moderation as became him: wher by we are alſo taught that we muſt ſo frame our mindes, that we be not terrified with any feare, but that we goe forward in our dutie, and that we be not too raſhe to pull downe danger vpon our owne heads. Furthermore, they ſhall keepe this meane as becommeth them, whoſoeuer ſhall be diligent in their vocation. For they ſhall follow the Lorde euen through the middeſt of death, and ſhall not caſt away themſelues raſhly: but ſhall walke in his wayes. Therfore let vs remember that we muſt goe no further then our vocation doth requyre. The Euangeliſt ſaith that the Phariſees were Chriſt his enemies: not that the other Scribes were his friendes: but becauſe this ſect did at that time reigne, and they did moſt of all rage vnder the pretence of a godly zeale. The queſtion is, whether they did enuie Chriſt for hauing mo diſciples or no, becauſe being more bent towarde Iohn, they did ſtudie to maintaine his dignitie and fame. The wordes carry another meaning, for whereas they were before greeued with this that Iohn ſhould gather diſciples vnto him, this did more nette their mindes, whenas they ſaw that there came more vnto Chriſte then did before vnto Iohn. And after that Iohn had profeſſed that he was nothing els but the cryer of the ſon of God, there began to be greater reſort vnto Chriſt, and he had now well finiſhed his function. So that he did reſigne vp to Chriſt by little and little the office of teaching and baptiſing.

2 Although Ieſus himſelfe did not baptize. That it called Chriſt his baptiſme, which he did by the handes of other: that wee may knowe that baptiſme is not to be eſteemed according to the perſon of the miniſter, but that the whole force thereof dependeth vpon the authour, in whoſe name, and at whoſe commandement it is beſtowed. VVhence we do gather ſinguler conſolation, whileſt that we doe know that our baptiſme is of no leſſe force to waſh and renue vs, then if the ſonne of God had giuen vs it. And doubtleſſe he did of ſet purpoſe abſtaine from the externall adminiſtration of the ſigne, whileſt that he was conuerſant in the world: that he might make it knowen vnto al ages, that baptiſme doth looſe no whit of his force, whileſt that it is miniſtred by a mortall man. To be briefe, Chriſt doth not only baptiſe vs inwardly with his ſpirite, but we muſt make like account of the ſigne it ſelfe which wee receiue at the handes of mortall man, as if Chriſte himſelfe reaching his hande out of heauen, did ſtretch the ſame out vnto vs. And if that be the baptiſme of Chriſte, which is giuen by mortall man, what manner perſon ſoeuer the miniſter be, it ſhall not ceaſe to bee Chriſtes. And this is ſufficient to refute the Anabaptiſtes, who affirme that baptiſme is corrupted by the vice of the miniſter, and for this dotings ſake do they trouble the Church. Like as Auguſtine vſed the ſame argument very fitly againſt the Donatiſts.

5 VVhich is called Sichar. Hierome in the Epitaph of Paula doth thinke that it is corruptly read thus, whereas it is rather to be read Sichem. And truly it is manifeſt that this latter is the auncient and true name. But it is likely that the word Sichar was in vſe in the Euangeliſt his time. VVe agree concerning the place, that it was a citie ſituated in the ſide of the mountaine Garizin, the inhabitants whereof were murdered traiterouſly

Ge. 34. 29. by Simeon and Leui, and which Abimelech an inhabitaunt there of and borne in the ſame, did afterwarde make leuell to the ground. But the commoditie of the place was ſo great, that the citie was built the thirde Iudg. 9. 45. time, which in Hieroms time they called Neapolis. And the Euangeliſt putteth the matter out of doubt, by adding ſo many circumſtances. For it appeareth out of Moſes, Gen. 48. 22. Ioſ. 24. 32. where that fielde was which Iacob gaue to the ſonnes of Ioſeph. And alſo all men do graunt that the mountaine Garizin was nigh vnto Sichem. VVe will declare anon that there was a temple builte there. And moreouer it is queſtionleſſe that Iacob and his familie dwelt there long time: forasmuch as he did alſo bute a poſſeſſion there, contrary to the cuſtome of the fathers, that he might dwell quietly.

6 And Ieſus being wearie of his iourney. He did not feigne that he was wearie, but he was wearie indeed. For to the end he might be the more bent to take pitie vpon vs, and to be ſory for vs, he tooke vpon him our infirmities: as the Apoſtle teacheth, Hebrewes 4. 15. Hereunto appertaineth the circumſtance of time. For it was no maruell that being wearie & thirſtie, hee reſted him ſelfe at the VVell about the mid time of the day. For ſeeing that the day from the riſing of the Sun vntil the going downe thereof was twelue houres long, the ſixt houre was noone. VVhē he ſaith that he ſate thus, hee doeth as it were expreſſe the geſture of a weary man.

7 Giue me to drinke. In that he asked water of the woman, he doth it not ſimplie for this cauſe, that he may haue ſome matter to teach her: for thirſt did enforce him to deſire to drinke. But this could not hinder him from vſing that opportunitie to teache which he had gotten: becauſe hee preferreth the womans ſaluation before his owne neceſsitie. Therefore forgetting his thirſt, as though he had had leaſure and opportunitie to talke, to the end he may inſtruct her in true godlines, he paſſeth cunningly from viſible water vnto the ſpirituall water: and he watereth her minde with the heauenly doctrine, that denied to giue him water.

9 How is it that thou, ſeeing thou art a Iewe. This is an exprobration, wher in ſhe requiteth the common contempt of her nation. It is well knowne that the Samaritanes were a raskall kind of people gathered togeather of aliants. And the Iewes did for good cauſes hate them, becauſe they had corrupted the worſhip of God and did retaine many peruerſe and corrupt rites. Yet notwithſtanding it is queſtionles, that the Iewes did for the moſt part cloake their carnall hatred, with the zeale of the lawe. For ambition and enuie was of great force with many, & that did more greeue them that the countrie which was appointed for them, was poſſeſſed by the Samaritanes, then that the worſhip of God was violated. Notwithſtanding there was iuſt cauſe of diſagreement, if ſobeit, their affections had beene rightly framed. Therefore when Chriſt ſendeth his diſciples to preach the Goſpell firſt, he forbiddeth them to turne aſide vnto the Samaritanes. Mat. 10. 5. But this woman doth that whiche is ingrafted almoſt in all men. For becauſe we are deſirous to haue ſome account made of vs, we can hardly ſuffer our ſelues to be deſpiſed. So that this is the common diſeaſe of our nature, that euerie man woulde haue his vices to pleaſe other men. But and if any man doe reproue vs and finde fault with our vices, we are by and by angrie with one as wel

as with another. Let euery man examine himſelfe and he ſhall finde this ſeede of pride in his minde, vntill ſuch time as it ſhall bee rooted out by the ſpirite of God. Therefore this woman becauſe ſhe knewe that the ſuperſtitions of her nation were condemned amongeſt the Iewes, doth deride them in the perſon of Chriſt. VVhereas it followeth by and by that the Iewes had no dealings with the Samaritanes, I thinke it was the woman that ſaid ſo. Some do think that the Euangeliſt doth put it in by way of expoſition. And truly it skilleth not much whether ſenſe you chuſe: but me thinkes it agreeth very well, that the woman doth ſcoute Chriſt after this ſort. VVhat? Is it lawfull for thee to aske drink of me, ſeeing that you account vs ſo profane? If any man had rather expound it otherwiſe, I contend not: but it may be that the Iewes did abhorre the Samaritanes more then they ſhould. For as we haue ſaid that they abuſed the falſe colour of zeale, ſo it was an eaſie matter for thē to paſſe meaſure. As it befalleth all thoſe moſt commonly who ſuffer themſelues to be led with wicked affections.

10 Ieſus anſwered and ſaid vnto her, if thou diddeſt know the gift of God, and who it is, that ſaith vnto thee, giue me drinke: thou wouldeſt haue aſked of him, and he ſhould haue giuen thee the liuely water.

11 The woman ſaith vnto him, Syr, thou haſt neither any thing to draw withall, and the VVell is deepe. From whence then haſt thou that liuely water?

12 Art thou greater then our father Iacob who gaue vs the VVell, and hee himſelfe dranke thereof, and his ſonnes and his flockes?

13 Ieſus anſwered and ſaid vnto her, Euery one which drinketh of this water ſhal thirſt againe:

14 But he that ſhall drinke of the water which I ſhall giue him, hee ſhall not bee a thirſt againe for euer: but the water which I ſhall giue him ſhalbe made in him a well of water, leaping out into eternall life.

15 The woman ſaith vnto him, Syr, giue me this water that I may not thirſt, and that I may not come hither to draw.

10 Ieſus anſwered. Chriſte hauing now taken an occaſion beginneth to preach of the grace and power of his ſpirite, and that before a ſimple woman, which was altogether vnworthie, to haue him to talke to her. Certainely, it was a wonderfull example of his goodneſſe, for what was there in this wretched woman, that of an harlot ſhe ſhould ſodainly be made a diſciple of Chriſt the ſonne of God? Although hee ſhewed the like token of mercie in vs all. All woman truly are not whores, all men are not diſtained with ſome hayneous offence: but what excellencie can any of vs bring foorth, for which he ſhould haue vouchſafed to beſtowe vpon vs his heauenly doctrine, and the honour of adeption? Neither came it to paſſe by chaunce that he talked with ſuche a perſon: for the Lorde doth ſhewe vnto vs as vnder a tipe, that he doth not chooſe them for their worthineſſe, to whom he doth impart the doctrine of ſaluation, and truely this ſeemeth to bee a wonderfull purpoſe at the firſt ſight, that he did paſſe ouer ſo many great men in Iurie, and did in the meane ſeaſon talke familiarly with this woman. But it was requiſite that in her perſon ſhould be expreſſed, how true that ſaying of the Prophet is, Iſay 65.1. I am found of thoſe that ſought me not: I haue openly appeared vnto thoſe that asked not after mee: I ſaid vnto thoſe that enquired not, behold I am here. If thou diddeſt knowe the gift of God. I doe ree de theſe two members, If thou diddeſt know the gift of God, and who it is that talketh with thee, ſo diſtinctly, that the latter is as it were an interpretation of the former. For this was a ſinguler benefite of God, to haue Chriſt preſent, who brougbt with him euerlaſting life. The ſenſe ſhalbe more plaine, if in ſteede of the copulatiue coniunction you put the expoſitiue particle: If thou diddeſt knowe the gift of God: namely, who it is that talketh with thee. And in theſe wordes wee are taught, that we doe then knowe who Chriſte is, when wee vnderſtand what the father hath giuen vs in him, and what good thinges hee himſelfe offereth vnto vs.

And this knowledge beginneth at the feeling of our owne pouertie. For a man muſt firſt, be touched with his maladies, before hee will ſeeke remedie. And therefore the Lord inuiteth not the drunken but the dry, not the full but the hungrie, that they may eate and drinke. And to what ende ſhoulde Chriſte be ſent vnto vs with the fulneſſe of the ſpirite, vnleſſe we were emptie? But as he hath profited much, who feeling his want doth nowe acknowledge what great need he hath of another mans helpe: ſo it were not enough to grone vnder miſeries, vnleſſe the hope of readie helpe were added thereunto. Becauſe by this meanes, we ſhould doe nothing els but pine away with ſorrowe, or rather (whiche thing befalleth the papiſtes) kill our ſelues with an vnprofitable & ſuperfluous wearieſomneſſe, with running hyther and thyther. But ſo ſone as wee once ſee Chriſte, we doe not wander any more in vaine, to ſeek remedie there, where there is none to be founde, but we go ſtraightway vnto him. Therefore this is the true and profitable knowledge of the grace of God, when as we knowe that the ſame is offered vnto vs in Chriſte, and that it is reached vnto vs by his hande. Chriſte doth alſo tel vs how effectuall the knowledge of his good thinges is, which doeth pricke vs forwarde to deſire them, and doth inflame our mindes. If thou diddeſt knowe, (ſaith hee) thou wouldeſt haue asked. Furthermore, the drift of the wordes is nothing obſcure: for his intent was to ſharpen the womans deſire, leaſt that ſhe ſhould lightly reiect the life which was offered her. Hee ſhould haue giuen thee liuely water. In theſe words Chriſt doth teſtifie, that if our petitions be directed vnto him they ſhall not be void. And truly, without this hope all the deſire to aske ſhoulde waxe colde. And ſeeing that Chriſte doth preuent thoſe that come vpto him, and is ready to ſatisfie them all, there remaineth no longer any place for ſluggiſhneſſe or lingering. But there is no one that woulde not thynke that this is ſpoken to vs al, vnleſſe euery mans vnbeliefe did hinder him. And although he tranſlated this word water vnto the ſpirite according to the thing that is preſent, yet this Metaphore is vſuall enough in the ſcriptures, and hath very good reaſon: for we are as drie & barren ground: there is no ioyce nor ſappe in vs, vntill ſuch time as the Lorde doth water vs with his ſpirite. The ſpirite is called els where pure water, but in another ſenſe: namely, becauſe it wipeth away and purgeth the blottes and filth whereof we are full. But in this and ſuch like places, the ſecret quickening whereby he reſtoreth vs to life, defendeth and finiſheth the ſame, is ſpoken of. Some there be who expounde it of the doctrine of the Goſpell; whereunto I confeſſe this name doth agree.

But

But I doe thinke that Chriſt doth vnder this comprehende all the whole grace of renouation. For we know he was ſent to this ende that hee might bring a newe life. Therefore in my iudgement his meaning was to ſet water againſt the want of all good thinges wherewith mankind is oppreſſed and troubled. Furthermore, he doth not onely call it liuing water of the effect, as being quickening water, but he alludeth alſo vnto the diuers ſortes of waters. Therfore it is called liuely, becauſe it floweth out of a liuing fountaine.

11 Syr, thou neither haſt any thing to draw with. As the Samaritanes were deſpiced of the Iewes, ſo they did deſpice them againe. Therefore this woman doth at the firſt ſet light by Chriſte, and ſo conſequently doeth flout him, ſhee knew well enough that Chriſte doth ſpeake figuratiuely: but ſhe requiteth him with a contrary figure, as if ſhe ſhould ſay that he promiſeth more then he is able to perfourme. Then ſecondly ſhee accuſeth him of arrogancie, becauſe he preferreth himſelfe before the holy Patriarche Iacob. Iacob, ſaith ſhe, was contented with this well both for his owne vſe and the vſe of all his familie: haſt thou better water? It doth ſufficiently appeare how corrupt this compariſon is, euen by this, becauſe ſhe ſetteth the ſeruant againſt the maſter, and a dead man againſt the liuing God, and yet how many doe at this day fall into the ſame vice? VVherfore we muſt take good heede that we doe not extoll mens perſons ſo high, that they darken the glory of God. Truly the gifts of God are reuerently to be reuerenced, whereſoeuer they appeare. Therefore it is meete that we honour men who excell in godlineſſe, & are indued with other rare giftes, but yet ſo farre foorth that God doe alwayes ſurpaſſe all, that Chriſte with his Goſpel may ſhyne and bee ſeene: for all the brightneſſe and gorgeouſneſſe of the worlde muſte yeeld vnto him.

VVee muſt alſo note that the Samaritanes did falſly boaſte, that they were the Progenie of the holy fathers. So at this day the Papiſtes, whereas they are baſtardes, and an adulterous ſeede, doe moſt proudly bragge of the fathers, and do mocke and taunt the lawfull children of God. Although the Samaritanes had come of Iacob according to the fleſh, yet becauſe they were altogether growen out of kinde, and alienated from true godlineſſe, this had beene a wrong kinde of boaſting. Now whereas they are Cuthites by their originall, or at leaſt gathered together of the profane Gentiles, yet they doe not ceaſe falſly to pretend and vſe the name of the holy patriarch: but this was to no ende. So muſt it needes befall all thoſe who doe wickedly reioyce in the light of men, they muſt be depriued of the light of God, and haue no fellowſhip with the holy fathers, whoſe title they did abuſe.

13 Euery one which drinketh of the water. How ſmall effect ſoeuer Chriſt doth ſee his doctrine take, and ſo conſequently to be mocked, yet doeth he procede more plainely to expound that which hee had ſaid. For hee ſetteth downe the vſe of both waters, that the one ſerueth the body for a time: the force of the other is perpetuall in the quickening of the ſoule. For as the body is ſubiect to corruption, ſo the helpes wherewith it is ſoſtered muſt be fraile and brittle, that which quickeneth the ſoule muſt needes bee eternall. And that is not contrarie to the woordes of Chriſte, that the faithfull are inflamed with a deſire of more plentifull grace, euen vnto the ende of their life. For he doth not meane that wee do drinke the firſt day ſo much as will ſerue vs, ſo that we haue need of no more. But his onely meaning is this, that the holy ſpirit is a fountaine, which runneth continually: ſo that they neede not to feare, that they ſhall wyther away who are renued with the ſpirituall grace. Therfore although we be a thyrſt during our whole life, yet is it certain that we haue drunken the ſpirite not for one day onely, or a ſhort time: but that flowing continually, he may neuer forſake and faile vs. So that the faithfull are a thirſt during their whole life, and that vehemently: yet in the meane while they abounde with liuely ioyſe: becauſe howe lyttle grace ſoeuer they haue receiued, the ſame doth quicken them continually, ſo that they are neuer altogether drie. VVherefore this ſufficiencie is not ſet againſt deſire, but onely againſt drineſſe, which thing is more plainly expreſſed in the words next following: It ſhall be made a fountaine of water leaping out vnto eternall life. For there is a continuall watering ſignified, which cheriſheth in them in this mortall life, heauenly eternitie. Therfore the grace of Chriſt doth not flow vnto vs for a ſhort time, but doth powre out it ſelfe euen vnto bleſſed immortalitie: becauſe it ceaſeth not to flow vntil the vncorruptible life which it doth begin, be throughly made perfect.

Giue mee this water. It is queſtionleſſe that the woman doth knowe well enough that Chriſt doth ſpeake of the ſpirituall water: but becauſe ſhe deſpiſeth him, ſhee counteth all his promiſes as good as nothing. For doctrine can haue no paſſage, ſo long as he that ſpeaketh is not of any authoritie amongeſt vs. Therefore the woman doth interrupt hym by the way, as if ſhee ſhoulde ſay, thou makeſt great bragges: but I ſee nothing: if thou canſt doe any thing let me ſee it indeede.

17 The woman anſwered, and ſaid vnto him, I haue no husband. Ieſus ſaid vnto her, Thou haſt ſaid well, I haue no husband, 18 For thou haſt had fiue husbands, and he whom thou now haſt is not thy husbande: this ſaide I thou truly.

19 The woman ſaith vnto him, Syr, I ſee that thou art a Prophet.

20 Our fathers worshipped in this mount: and yee ſay that Ieruſalem is the place where men ought to worship.

21 Ieſus ſaith vnto her, woman beleeue me, the houre commeth whenas neither in this mountaine, neither at Ieruſalem yee ſhall worship the father.

16 Call thy husband. This ſeemeth to appertaine nothing vnto the matter. Yea, ſome man may thinke, that Chriſt being diſcouraged and abaſhed with the frowardneſſe of the woman, doth turne his talke vnto ſome other matter: but it is not ſo. For when he ſaw that ſhe did floute and taunt that which he ſaide, he applyed a meete medicine vnto this maladie. For he ſtriketh the womans conſcience with the feeling of her ſinne. And againe this is an excellent token of mercy, that he draweth her almoſt againſt her will, who would not come willingly. But that which I haue already touched is chiefly to be noted, that they muſt bee wounded with the feeling of their ſin, who are too careleſſe and almoſt dull. For ſuch will make but ſmal account of the doctrine of Chriſt, vntill ſuch time as being cited to appeare before the iudgement ſeat of god they be then compelled to feare him as their iudge, whome they did deſpice. After this ſort are all thoſe to be handeled, who doubt not to gainſtand the doctrine of Chriſt with their ruffianly brabbling, that they may perceiue & know that they ſhall not eſcape ſcotfree for this. Furthermore, ſo great is the ſtubbornneſſe of ſom, that they will neuer giue eare vnto Chriſte til ſuch time as they be ſubdued by violence. Therfore ſo often as we ſee the oyle of Chriſt to be vnſauerie, it muſt be mingled with vineger that it may begin to haue ſome taſt. Yea, we haue all of vs need of this. For we are neuer earneſtly affected and moued whē Chriſt ſpeaketh, vnleſſe we be awaked with repentance. Therefore if any man will profite aright in the ſchoole of Chriſt, his hardneſſe muſt bee tylled & ſubdued with the declaration of his owne miſerie, as with a plough. For it is this knowledge onely which doth take from vs all damtines that we may not be any longer ſo bold as to mocke God. Therefore if at any time the contempt of the worde of God do come vpon vs, there can be no fitter remedie, then if euerie man doe ſturre vp himſelf to conſider vpon his ſinnes: that he may be wearie of himſelfe, and ſo being afraid with Gods iudgement, may be humbled to obey him, whome hee did before time deſpiſe.

I haue no husband. The fruite of that admonition doth not yet appeare whereby he meant to pricke forward the womans minde vnto repentance. And truly the drunken loue of our ſelues doth keepe vs ſo faſt a ſleepe, or doth rather make vs ſo dull, that the firſt prickings cannot awake vs. But Chriſt doth alſo very fitly cure this ſlowneſſe, when as hee preſſeth the ſore more ſtrongly: for he doth manifeſtly caſt in her teeth her haynous offence. Although I thinke that he doth not heere touche her whoredom only. For in that he ſaith, that ſhe had fiue husbandes, it is to be thought that that came to paſſe, becauſe being a wanton & diſobedient woman ſhe had enforced her husbands to be diuorced. Therfore I expound the words thus, whereas God had ioyned thee to lawful husbands, thou haſt made no ende of ſinning, vntill ſuch time as beeing made infamous throughmore diuorcemēts, thou didſt ſet forth thy ſelf to be a common ſtrumpet.

19 Syr. I ſee that thou art &c. Here now appeareth the fruite of the reprehenſion, for the woman doth not only modeſtly acknowledge her fault: but being prompt & readie to heare Chriſt his doctrine which ſhe had before refuſed, requireth & craueth of ſame of her own accord. therfore (as I ſaid euen now) the beginning of true aptnes to be taught is repentance, it is the opening of the gate to enter into the ſchoole of Chriſt. And the womā teacheth vs by her example. that when any teacher is offered vs, we muſt vſe this opportunitie leaſt we be vnthankful towarde God, who doth neuer ſend his prophetes vnto vs, but he doth as it were inuite vs vnto himſelfe, reaching out his hand vnto vs. And we muſt hold that which Paul teacheth, that they are ſent vnto vs of God, who excell in the faculte of teaching. Rom. 10. 15.

20 Our fathers. It is falſe which ſome do thinke that becauſe the reprehenſion was troubleſome and lothſome, ſhe ſlid craftily vnto ſom other matter. Nay ſhe rather paſſeth frō the ſpecies vnto the genus, (or frō the particuler thing vnto that which was more generall.) & beeing taught throughly concerning her ſinne, ſhee wil be inſtructed in the pure worſhip of god. And this doth ſhee both wel and orderly, in that ſhe asketh counſell of a Prophet, leaſt ſhe erre in worſhipping God. In like ſort as if ſhe did inquire of god himſelf after what ſort he wold be worſhipped. For there is nothing more peruerſe, then at our own pleaſure to feigne diuers kinds of worſhippings without the word of god. Furthermore, we know wel enough that there was a continuall ſtrife betweene the Iewes and the Samaritanes cõcerning the rule of right worſhipping. For althogh the Cuthites & other ſtrangers, who were carried into Samaria whẽ the ten tribes were exiled, being enforced with ſtripes, did take vppon them the rites of the lawe, and did profeſſe that they worſhipped the God of Iſrael (as wee reade 2. King. 10. 27.) yet was religion lame and manye wayes corrupted amongeſt them, whiche the Iewes coulde not away with. But the contention waxed more hot after the building of the temple in mount Garizin, which Manaſſes the ſonne of Iohn the chiefe Prieſte and Iaddi his brother did builde at ſuch time as Darius the laſt king of the Perſians did hold Iudea by the hand of Sanabales the gouernour.

For Manaſſes hauing married the Dukes daughter, to the ende hee might be no whit inferiour to his brother, he made himſelfe prieſt there, and did allure and drawe vnto him with rewards all the reuoltes hee coulde: As Ioſephus writeth in his eleuenth booke of Antiquitie. And that which is accounted a ſolemne thing amongeſt the forſakers of true godlineſſe, to defend themſelues with the examples of the fathers, that did the Samaritanes then, as we may gather out of the womans wordes, Our fathers, ſaith ſhee, worſhipped in this mount. Certaine it is that they were not perſuaded with cauſe to offer ſacrifice there: but after that they had erected a peruerſe kinde of worſhip there, there followed ſtubbornnes, which was readie enough to catch al clokes. I graunt in deed ſ light perſons are ſtounge and pricked ſometimes with a fooliſh zeale as with a waſpe, ſo that they do ſtraightway without iudgement take that for an example which they haue heard e holy men did. But that other vice is more common to payn t their errours with the facts of the fathers. And this may we eaſily ſee in Papiſtrie. But becauſe this place doth notably teach vs, how diſorderly theſe men deale, who ſetting apart the commandement of God, doe frame themſelues according to the example of the fathers, we muſt note how many wayes the worlde is wont to offend in this point. For it oftentimes falleth out that the greater ſort do folow thoſe as fathers who are not to be accoũted fathers. So at this day we ſee ſ when the Papiſts do with full mouth bable of the fathers, they giue no place to the Prophetes and Apoſtles: and when they haue named a fewe that are worthie of honour, they huddle vp a great companíe of men like to themſelues, or els deſcend vnto more corrupt times, wherein although ſo groſſe barbariſme had not ſo much gotten the vpper hand, yet religion and doctrine were verie much corrupted. Therefore we muſt diligently note the difference, that none be accounted fathers ſaue thoſe who we knowe well are the children of God: and ſecondly, thoſe who haue deſerued this degree of honour for the excellencie of their godlineſſe.

Moreouer, men doe oftentimes offend in that, that they eſtabliſhe a common common lawe out of the fathers factes. For the common people doth thinke that they doe not giue due honour vnto the fathers, vnleſſe they exempt them out of the number of men. So that whileſt that we do not remember that they were but men, that might erre, wee mixe vice with vertue, hand ouer head, whereupon followeth moſt wicked confuſion in the maner of liuing. For ſeeing that all mens actions are to be examined according to the rule of the law, we make the ballance ſubiect to his weightes.

Finally, whereas the imitating of the fathers, is ſo much eſteemed, the worlde doth thinke that it doth offende freely after them. The third vice is wicked emulation: namely, when as being neither endowed with the ſame ſpirit, nor furniſhed with the ſame cõmandemẽt, we take that for an example which ſome one of the fathers hath done. Like as if ſome priuate man ſhoulde with the ſworde reuenge the iniuries of his brethren, becauſe Moſes did this: if any priuate man ſhoulde puniſh whoremongers, becauſe Phinees did this. Heereuppon did riſe that fierce and cruel furie to kill their owne children (as many do thynk) becauſe the Iewes would be like to their father Abraham. As though this precept were general, Offer vp thy ſonne Iſaac: and not rather a particuler triall of one man. It is pride and too much truſt in men ſelues, which for the moſt part bringeth foorth ſuch emulation, whyleſt that men doe arrogate to thẽſelues more then they ought, & euery man is not contented with his owne meaſure. In the mean ſeaſon the fathers haue no true followers, but a great many Apes. And they alſo who ſhall throughly weigh with wiſedome the writings of the auncient fathers, will confeſſe that the greateſt part of Monkery did flow from this fountaine. Therefore vnleſſe we will erre willingly, we muſt alwaies take heede, with what ſpirite euerie man is endowed, what euery mans calling requyreth, what is meete for euery one, and what is giuen euerie man in charge, Like vnto this third vice is there an other: namely, the confuſion of times, whileſt that the poſteritie being occupied in the examples of the fathers, doe not thinke that there is another maner of working and doing preſcribed them of the Lorde. VVe may thanke this ignorance for the infinite heape of ceremonies, wherewith the Church was ouerwhelmed in time of Poperie. Immediately after the beginning of the Churchmen began to offend in this point, becauſe the fooliſh following of Iudaiſme was of greater force then it ſhould haue beene. The Iewes had their ſacrifices: leaſt the Chriſtians ſhould want ſuch pomp, they inuented a rite to offer vp Chriſte. As if the eſtate of Chriſtes church ſhould haue been euer a whit the worſe, if all ſuch ſhadowes had ceaſed, whereby the brightneſſe of Chriſt might be darkened. But madneſſe ranne further afterwarde, and raged without meaſure. Therefore leaſt we erre in this point, we muſt alwayes take heede vnto the preſent rule. In times paſt perfumes, lights, holy garments, the altare, veſſels, and ſuch like rytes did pleaſe God: namely, becauſe there is nothing more acceptable or precious in his ſight, then obedience.

Exo. 2. 12. Num. 25. 8

Gen. 22. 2.

Now after Chriſt his comming the order was chaunged. Therefore we muſt conſider what he appointeth vs to doe in the goſpel: leaſt wee doe raſhly follow that which the fathers obſerued vnder the law. For that which was then a godly keeping of holy rytes, ſhoulde at this day be wicked ſacrilege. This deceiued the Samaritanes, becauſe they did not conſider in the example of Iacob what difference there was in the time, It was lawful for the patriarks to erect altars euery where, becauſe the place was not yet ordained, which the Lorde did afterward chooſe: but after that God had giuen commandement that the temple ſhoulde be builded in the mount Syon, that former libertie ceaſed. In this reſpect Moſes ſaid, Deut. 12.8 After this yee ſhall not dee euery one that whiche ſeemeth good in his owne eyes: but onely that which I commaund you. For after that the Lorde gaue the lawe, he tyed the right worſhipping of himſelfe vnto the decrees of the lawe, whereas the cuſtome was before more free. VVith the like cloake did they couer their fact who worſhipped in Bethel. For Iacob offered a ſolemne ſacrifice there. But after that the Lord had appointed the place at Ieruſalem, it was no longer Bethel, but Bethauen.

Now we ſee what was the ſtate of the queſtion. The Samaritanes did take the example of the fathers for a rule: the Iewes were grounded in the commandement of God. Although this woman had hitherto obſerued the cuſtome of her nation, yet is ſhee not contented therewith. Vnderſtand here by worſhip not all maner of worſhip: (for it was lawfull for them to pray dayly euerie where) but that whereunto ſacrifices were annexed, that it might be a publike & ſolemne profeſſion of religion.

21 Beleeue mee woman. In the firſt part of his anſwere he doth briefly aboliſh the ceremoniall worſhip, which was inſtituted vnder the law. For ſeeing that he ſaith that the houre is at hand which hath no proper and peculiar place of worſhipping, he giueth vs to vnderſtande that that was teporal which was inſtituted by Moſes, & that now is the time whē the wall of ſeparation ſhalbe taken away. By this meanes hee extendeth the worſhip of God farther, being deliuered out of the former ſtraites, that euen the Samaritanes may be made partakers thereof. VVhen hee ſaith that the houre doth come, he putteth the preſentence inſteed of the future: notwithſtanding the meaning is, that the abrogation of the lawe is now at hand, as concerning the temple and the prieſthood & other externall rites. In calling god father, he ſeemeth by the way to ſet him againſt thoſe fathers wherof the woman had made mention, as if hee ſhould ſay, that god is a common father for all men: ſo that he may now be worſhipped euery where without any difference of places or countries.

22 You worſhip you know not what, we worſhip that which we know, becauſe ſaluation is of the Iewes.

23 But the houre commeth and now is when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhippe the father in ſpirite and truth, for the father requireth to haue ſuch to worſhip him.

24 God is a ſpirite, and they that worſhip him muſt worſhip him in ſpirite & truth.

25 The woman ſaith vnto him, I knowe that the Meſſias ſhall come who is called Chriſte, therfore when he ſhall come hee ſhall tell vs all thinges.

26 Ieſus ſaith vnto her, I am he that talke with thee.

Now he doth more at large expound that which he touched briefly concerning the abrogating of the law. Yet doth he deuide the ſum of his ſpeech into two members: in the former hee condemneth the manner of worſhipping god vſed among the Samaritanes, of ſuperſtition & error: and doeth teſtifie that the Iewes did worſhip God wel and lawfully. He addeth the cauſe of the difference, becauſe the certaintie of the worſhip which the Iewes vſed, did appeare vnto them out of the worde of God: but the Samaritanes had no certaintie from the mouth of God. Secondly, hee declareth that the rites which the Iewes kept hytherto, ſhould ſhortly haue an end.

22 You worship that which you know not. A ſentence worthie to be remembred, wherein we are taught that we muſt aſſay nothing raſhly and by chaunce in religion: becauſe vnleſſe knowledge be preſent, we doe not any longer worſhip God, but a falſe imagination or ghoſt. Therfore by this thunderbolt are throwen downe all good intents, as they cal them. For we know that men can doe nothing els but erre when their own opinion doth rule them without the word of God or his commandemẽt. For Chriſt taking vpon him his countries cauſe and perſon, doth teache that the Iewes doe much differ from the Samaritanes. VVhy ſo? Becauſe of them commeth ſaluation, ſaith he. By which wordes, he giueth her to vnderſtand that they doe exceede them in this one point, becauſe God had concluded the couenant of eternall ſaluation with them. Some do reſtraine it vnto Chriſt, who came of the Iewes. And truly ſithence that all the promiſes of God are ſure and certaine in him, there is no ſaluation ſaue only in him. But becauſe it is out of doubt that Chriſt doth preferre the Iewes for this cauſe, becauſe they doe not worſhip any vnknowen power but one God, who reuealed himſelfe vnto them, and who hath adopted them to be his people: by this word ſaluation muſt bee vnderſtood that wholeſome manifeſtation, which they had by the heauenly doctrine. But why doth he ſay, that it is of them, when as it is rather committed to them that they alone might enioy it? He alludeth in my iugdement, vnto that which was foretold by the Prophets, that there ſhould a lawe come out of Syon. For they were ſeparated for a time frõ other people vpon this conditiõ: that the pure knowledge of god might at length flowe from them vnto the whole worlde. Notwithſtanding this is the ſumme, that God is not worſhipped aright, vnleſſe he be worſhipped according to the certaintie of faith, which muſt needs proceede frõ the worde of God: wherupon it foloweth ỹ they fal away vnto idolatry, whoſoeuer they be, that depart frõ the worde of god. For Chriſte doth in plaine wordes teſtifie, that an idol or vaine fictiõ is ſet vp inſteed of God, where mẽ are ignorãt of the true god: & hee doth cõdemne all thoſe of ignorãce vnto whõ god hath not reuealed himſelf. For ſo ſoone as we are once deſtitute of the light of his word, darknes & blindnes do reigne. And we muſt note ỹ when the Iewes had broke the couenaunt of eternal life with their vnfaithfulnes, which was eſtabliſhed with their fathers, they were depriued of that treaſure, which they kept then as yet: for they were not as yet driuen out of the church of God. Nowe ſeeing that they denie the ſonne they haue nothing to doe with the father. The ſame muſt we thinke of all thoſe, who haue fled frõ the pure faith of the goſpel, vnto their own & mens inuentions. Howſoeuer they flatter themſelues in their ſtoutnes, who worſhip god according to their own mind, or mens traditiõs, yet this one voyce thũdering out of heaue, doth ouerthrow whatſoeuer diuine & holy thing they think they haue

You

You worſhip that which you knowe not. Therefore to the end our religion may be approued of God, it muſt needes leane vnto the knowe-ledge conceiued out of his worde.

23 But the houre commeth and now is. The latter member concerning the abrogation of the legall worſhip followeth. VVhen he ſaith, that the houre commeth or ſhall come, he teacheth that the order deliuered by Moſes ſhall not be perpetuall. Heb.9.10. VVhen he ſaith, that the houre is nowe, he maketh an end of the ceremonies: and ſo he telleth her that the time of reformation is fulfilled. In the meane while he alloweth the Temple, the Prieſthood and all rites annexed thereunto, as touching the vſe of the time paſt.

Furthermore, to the ende he may declare that God will neither bee worſhipped at Ieruſalem, nor in mount Garizin, he taketh vnto himſelf a deeper principle: namely, that the true worſhip of him conſiſteth in the ſpirite. For thereupon it followeth that he is rightly called vppon euery where. Yet firſt of all here may a queſtion be asked, why and in what ſenſe the worſhip of God is called ſpirituall? To the end wee may vnderſtand this, we muſt note the oppoſition betweene the ſpirite and the external figures, as betwene the ſhadowes and the truth. Therefore the worſhip of God is ſaid to conſiſt in the ſpirite, becauſe it is nothing els but the inward faith of the hearte, which bringeth forth inuocation: ſecondly, the puritie of conſcience, the deniall of our ſelues, that beeing giuen to obey God, we may be vnto him as holy ſacrifices. Heerupon ariſeth another queſtion: whether the fathers did worſhip him ſpiritually vnder the lawe or no? I anſwere, ſeeing that God is alwayes lyke to himſelfe, hee allowed no other worſhip from the beginning of the worlde, ſaue the ſpirituall worſhip, which was agreeable vnto his nature. VVhich thyng Moſes doth ſufficiently teſtifie, who doth in many places declare, that the ende of the lawe did tend to no other end, but that the people ſhold cleaue vnto God, with faith and a pure conſcience. And the prophetes doe more clearely expreſſe the ſame, when as they ſharply inueigh againſt the hypocriſie of ꝑ people: becauſe they thoughe they had ſatisfied God, after they had offered their ſacrifices, and executed that externall pompe. It is no need to inferre many teſtimonies here which are common euery where. yet are there moſt notable places before all other in the fiftie Pſalme, the ſecond of Iſayas, verſe the fiftie eight, and threeſcore and ſixt, Micheas the fift, Amos the ſeuenth. But the worſhip of God was in ſuch ſort ſpirituall vnder the law, that yet notwithſtanding being intangled in ſo many external ceremonies, it did ſeeme to ſmell of ſome carnall and earthly thing. Therefore Paule calleth the ceremonies the fleſh, and the beggerly elemẽts of the world. Gal.4.9. In like ſort the Authour to the Hebrewes ſaith, that the old ſanctuarie Heb.9.1. with his appurtenances was earthly. Therefore we may fitly ſay, that the worſhip of the law was in his ſubſtance ſpirituall: in reſpect of the forme it was after a ſort carnall and earthly. For all that way was ſhadowiſh, the truth whereof appeareth now plainely.

Nowe we ſee wherein the Iewes did agre with vs, and wherein they did diſſent from vs. God would in all ages be worſhipped with faith, prayers, thanſgiuing, pureneſſe of heart, and innocencie of life, neyther was he euer delighted in any other ſacrifices, but there were in the lawe diuers additions, ſo that the ſpirite and truth did lye hid vnder diuers ſhadowes: but now the veile of the Temple beeing rent, there is nothing obſcure or couered. VVe haue indeede at this day certaine externall exerciſes of godlineſſe, whereof our ignorance hath neede: but ſuche is their meane and ſobrietie that they doe not darken the plaine truth of Chriſt.

Finally, we haue that plainely expreſſed, which was ſhadowed vnto the fathers, And this difference was not only confounded in time of poperie, but quite ouerthrowen. For there is no leſſe thickneſſe of ſhadowes there, then there was in times paſt in time of Iudaiſme, But it cannot be denied that Chriſte doth here put a manifeſt difference betwene vs and the Iewes. Out at what ſtarting holes ſoeuer they ſeeke to eſcape, it is manifeſt that we are only vnlike to the fathers in the externall forme, becauſe that they worſhipping God ſpiritually, were tyed to ceremonies, which were aboliſhed by the cõming of Chriſt. Therfore ſo much as in them lyeth they ſpoyle the Church of Chriſte of his preſence, whoſoeuer doe burthen the ſame with an immoderate companie of ceremonies. Neither doe I paſſe for theſe vaine colours, that many of the common people haue as great neede of ſuch helpes at this day, as they had in times paſt amongeſt the Iewes. For wee muſt alwayes reſpect after what ſort the Lord would haue his Church to be gouerned, becauſe he alone knoweth beſt what is expedient for vs. And it is certayne, that nothing is more contrary to the order which God hath appoynted, then the groſſe and twice carnall pompe which reigneth in papiſtrie. The ſhadowes of the lawe indeede did couer the ſpirite, but theſe viſares doe altogether disfigure him. VVherefore wee muſt in no caſe winke at ſuch filthie and vnſeemely corruptions. Howſoeuer craftie men, or thoſe who are too fearefull to correct vices, doe obiecte that theſe are thinges indifferent, and that therefore they are indifferẽtly to be taken: truly it is not tollerable that the rule which Chriſt hath preſcribed ſhould be violated.

The true worshippers. Chriſt ſeemeth briefly by the way to touche the ſtubbornneſſe of many whiche brake foorth afterwarde. For we know how ſtoutly the Iewes did defend the ceremonies whereunto they were accuſtomed. Although this ſentence reacheth further. For ſeeing that he knew that the worlde would neuer be free from corruption, therefore he ſeparateth the true and right worſhipers from the peruers and feigned. VVith which teſtimonie being furniſhed, let vs not doubt to condemne the Papiſtes in al their inuentions, and to contemne their reproches. For what need haue we to feare, when we heare that this bare and plaine worſhip doth pleaſe God, which the papiſtes doe contemne, becauſe it is not full ſtuffed with ceremonies? And what doth the vaine pompe of the fleſhe profite them, whereby (as Chriſt doth teſtifie) the ſpirit is extinguiſhed? It appeareth plainly by that which goeth before what it is to worſhip God in ſpirite and truth: namely, taking away the ſhadowes of the olde rites, ſimply to retaine that which is ſpirituall in the worſhip of God. For the truth of Gods worſhip conſiſteth in the ſpirite: the ceremonies they were a certaine accidentall thing. And heere we muſt note againe, that truth is not compared with lying, but with the externall acceſsion of figures, ſo that the ſubſtance of the the ſpirituall worſhip is pure and plaine (as they ſay.)

24 God is a ſpirite. This is a confirmation drawen from the verie nature of God. Seeing that men are fleſh, it is no maruell if thoſe thinges pleaſe them which are aunſwerable to their nature. Hereupon it commeth to paſſe that they inuent manie things in the worſhip of God, whiche being full of vaine boaſting, haue in them no ſoundneſſe. But it is meete for them firſt of all to weigh this throughly, that they haue to do with God, who doth no more agree with the fleſh, then fire with water. This one cogitation only ought to ſuffice to bridle the wantonneſſe of our wit, when as we are occupied about the worſhipping of God: that hee is ſo vnlike vnto vs, that thoſe thinges which pleaſe vs, doe moſt of all diſpleaſe him. But admit hypocrites be ſo blinded with their pride that they are not afraide to make God ſubiect to their will or rather luſte: yet let vs know that this modeſtie hath not the loweſt roome in the worſhip of God, howſoeuer we thinke it pleaſeth according to the fleſh.

Furthermore, becauſe we cannot aſcend vnto his higneſſe, let vs remember that we muſt fet a rule out of his word, wherby we may be directed. The fathers doe oftentimes cite this place againſt the Arrians, to proue the diuinitie of the ſpirite: but it is falily wreſted thither, becauſe Chriſt doth in this place ſimply affirme that his father is of a ſpirituall nature, and that therefore he is not moued with friuolous thinges, as men are wont by reaſon of their lightnes.

25 The Meſſias ſhall come. Although religion was vncleane and mixed with many errors amongeſt the Samaritanes, yet were there certaine groundes which were taken out of the lawe, imprinted in their mindes: as was this of the Meſſias. And it is likely, that ſeeing that the woman did gather out of Chriſt his wordes that there was an vnwonted kinde of change at hande, which ſhoulde befall the Churche of GOD, ſhee did ſtraightway call to minde Chriſt, vnder whom they hoped for a perfect manifeſtation of all thinges. When ſhe ſaith, that the Meſſias ſhal come, ſhe ſeemeth to ſpeake of a time that was nigh at hand. And truly it appeareth euery where by many arguments, that the mindes of all menne did then wayte for the cõming of the Meſſias, who ſhould reſtore things which were miſerablie deſtroyed and gone to decay. This is out of doubt, that the woman preferreth Chriſt before Moſes, and all the prophetes in the office of teaching. For ſhe comprehendeth three thinges in a few wordes: Firſt, that the doctrine of the law was not altogether perfect, but that there were only rudiments deliuered there. For valeſſe there had been a farther thing ſhee would not haue ſaide that the Meſſias ſhoulde ſhewe all thinges. For there is a ſecrete oppoſition betweene hym and the prophets, becauſe it is his part and dutie to bring the ſcholers vnto the marke, who were but only entred by them and brought into the courſe. Secondly, the woman declareth that ſhee hopeth for ſuche a Chriſte, as ſhould be his fathers interpreter, a maſter and teacher of all the godly. Laſt of all, ſhe ſheweth that there is no better thing or more perfect thing to bee deſired then his doctrine: yea, that this is the vttermoſt marke of wiſedome, beyonde whiche it is not lawefull to goe.

And woulde to God that thoſe who boaſt and bragge that they are

pillers of the Churche of Chriſte, would but imitate this poore ſimple woman, that they woulde rather be contented with the plaine doctrine of Chriſte, then challenge and take to themſelues, I wote note what kinde of maſterſhip & authoritie, to bring in their own inuentions. For frō whence came the religion of the Pope & Mahomet, ſaue onely from wicked additions whereby they feigned themſelues to fill vppe the doctrine of the Goſpel? As though it were vnperfect without ſuch deuelings. But whoſoeuer ſhalbe throughly inſtructed in Chriſt his ſchoole, he ſhall not ſeeke to himſelfe any other maſters, nay he ſhall in no caſe admit any other.

26 I am hee that ſpeake with thee. VVhen hee confeſſeth to the woman, that hee is the Meſſias, without doubt he offereth himſelfe to teach her, to the ende hee may anſweare the hope which ſhee had conceiued. Therefore it ſeemeth to mee that ſhee deſired greater ſtore of doctrine to quenche her thirſt withall. And he woulde haue ſuche a teſtimonie of his grace to bee extant euen in a poore woman, to this end, that he myght declare vnto all men that hee did neuer neglect his office where there was any that was deſirous of a teacher. Therefore it is not to be doubted that hee will deceiue any man whome hee ſhall finde to bee a readie ſcholler.

But as for thoſe who doe thinke muche to ſubmitte themſelues vnto him (as wee ſee many proude and profane men) or who doe hope for more perfect wiſedome from ſome other, as the Turkes and papiſtes, they are worthie beeing driuen about by innumerable deluſions, to bee drowned in their labyrinth. And in theſe wordes, I who ſpeake, am the Meſſias, the ſonne of God, hee ſetteth foorth the worde Meſſias as a ſeale to ſeale the doctrine of his Goſpel. Becauſe wee muſt thinke that he was annoynted of the father, and that the ſpirite of God reſted vppon hym: that hee myght bring vnto vs the meſſage of ſaluation, as Iſayas doth Iſay. 61. 1. teſtifie.

27 In the meane ſeaſon came his diſciples, and they marueiled that hee talked with the woman. Yet no man ſaide, VVhat ſeeke? thou? Or what ſpeakeſt thou with her?

28 Therefore the woman left her water pot, and went into the citie, and ſaide vnto the men:

29 Come & ſee a man, who hath tolde me all things, whiche I haue done, is not this Chriſte?

30 Therefore they went out of the citie, and came vnto him.

31 In the meane while his diſciples asked him, ſaying, Maſter, eate.

32 But he ſaid vnto them, I haue meate to eate, which you know not.

33 Therefore the diſciples ſaid amongeſt themſelues, hath any man brought him any thing to eate?

34 Ieſus ſaith vnto them, my meate is, that I doe his will who ſent mee, and fulfill his worke.

27 And they marueiled. VVhereas the Euangeliſt writeth, that the diſciples marueiled, there might be two cauſes which might moue thē here vnto, either becauſe ỹ vilenes of the perſon did offend thē, or els becauſe they they thought that the Iewes were defiled, if they did talke with the Samaritanes. And although both theſe thinges did ſpring from the godly reuerence of their maſter, yet do they euill in this if they wonder at it as being an abſurd thing, that he ſhould vouchſafe to doe a poore ſimple woman ſo great honour. For why doe they not rather looke vppon themſelues? Truly they ſhould finde there no leſſe matter to wonder at, that they being ſeely men and as it were the obſcourings of the people, ſhould be extolled vnto the higheſt degree of honour. And yet where as the Euangeliſt ſaith that they durſt not aske, it is worth the marking. For we are taught by theyr example that if there bee any thing in the wordes or deedes of God, and Chriſt, which ſeemeth ſtraunge vnto vs, we muſt not immediatly giue our ſelues leaue to murmur boldly: but we muſt rather keepe ſilence with modeſtie, vntill ſuch time as that bee reuealed vnto vs from heauen, which we know not as yet. Furthermore, the ground worke of this modeſtie is the feare of God and the reuerence of Chriſt.

28 Therefore shee left her waterpot. The Euangeliſt ſetteth downe this to expreſſe the feruentneſſe of her deſire For it is a ſigne of haſt that ſhe returneth into the citie leauing her waterpot behinde her. And this is the nature of faith, that ſo ſoone as wee are made partakers of eternall life, we deſire by and by to haue more cõpanions, neither can the knowledge of God lye buried and idle in mens heartes, but that it will ſhewe it ſelfe. For that which is in the Pſalme 116. 10. muſt needes be true, I haue beleeued, therefore will I ſpeake. And we muſt ſo much the more note the earneſtneſſe and gladneſſe of the woman, becauſe only a ſmall ſparkle of faith doth kindle them. For ſhee had ſcarce taſted Chriſt as yet, whenas ſhe did prayſe him throughout the whole citie. Therfore it ſhall be a great ſhame for thoſe who haue gone reaſonable well forward in his ſchoole, to waxe ſluggiſh. But this ſeemeth rather to bee worthie of reprehenſion, that ſhe being ignorant, and not throughly and ſoundlye taught, paſſeth the bounds of her faith. I anſwere, that ſhe ſhould haue delt very raſhly if ſhe had taken vpon herſelfe the office of teaching. but now ſeeing that her only deſire is to ſtir vp her citizens to heare Chriſt ſpeake, we will not ſay, that forgetting herſelfe, ſhee went beyonde her reache, ſhe doth only play the part of a trumpet or bell, that ſhe may inuite men vnto Chriſt.

29 See a man. Becauſe ſhe ſpeaketh in this place doubtingly, ſhe may ſeeme not to haue been much moued with Chriſt his authoritie. I anſwere, becauſe ſhe was vnfit to intreat of ſo great myſteries, according to her ſmall talant, ſhe endeuoureth to bring her citizens to this point, to ſubmit themſelues to be taught of Chriſte. Furthermore, this was a good ſpurre to pricke them forwarde withall, ſeeing that they knew by a manifeſt and plaine token that he was a Prophete. For ſithence that they were not able to iudge by doctrine, this inferiour preparation was profitable and fit for them. Therefore whileſt that they heare that hee had opened hidden thinges to the woman, they gather by this that he is a Prophet of the Lorde: which beeing ſet downe they beginne to giue eare to his doctrine. Although the woman goeth farther: for ſhee biddeth them conſider, whether he bee the Meſſias or no, being contented with this one thing, if ſo be it they through her perſuaſion ſhoulde seeke that which she had alreadie found in Christ, for she knew that they should find more then she did promise. But why doth she lie, in that she saith that Christ had told her all thinges? I haue alreadie said, þ Christe did not reprehend her for her whoredom alone, but that in few words more sinnes which she had committed during her life, were layde to her charge. For the Euangelist doth not recite euery sentence, and he taught summarily that Christ did set before her, her former & present life, that he might tame her tatling tongue. In the meane while wee see that the woman being inflamed with a godly zeale, did no whit spare herselfe & her estimation, that she might set foorth Christ his name, for she doth not abstaine from the reckoning vp of her shame & reprochе.

32 I haue meate. It is a great meruell that being wearie and hungry he refuseth meate. For if any man say, that he doth this to the ende hee may instruct vs by his example to suffer pouertie, why did hee not this continually? But he aymed at another marke, then to teache that meate ought simply to be refused. For we must marke this circumstance, that when as the care of the present businesse doth so constraine him, & doth wholy possesse his minde, it is no truble to him to neglect meate. And yet he doth not professe that he was so earnestly bent to execute his fathers businesse and commandements, that he can neither eate nor drink: he doth only shew what is former or what is latter. And so by his owne example he teacheth, that the kingdome of God ought to bee preferred before all the commodities of the bodie. Indeed God doth giue vs leaue to eate and drinke, so that we be not drawen away from that whiche is the chiefest: that is, that euery man be occupied in his vocation. Some man will say that it cannot be but that meate and drinke must needes be some hinderáces, and such as draw away some time from other good studies. I graunt this is true: but because the Lorde according to his fauourablenes doth giue vs leaue to care for our flesh so much as neede requireth, he ceaseth not in the meane space to prefer the obediёce of God as he ought, who doth cherish þ body moderately & soberly. Although we must also beware that we be not so addicted vnto our houres, but þ we must be readie to defraud our selues of meate, when as God doeth appoint vs vnto some other businesse the same houre, offering vs some opportunitie. Seeing that christ had such opportunitie offered him now, he doth as it were imbrace the same in his armes, whiche might escape him. Therfore forasmuch as the busines inioyned him by his father did so constraine him, that he must needes let all other things alone, he douteth not to set light by meate. And it had been a shame that the woman should leaue her waterpot and runne to call the people, and that there should lesse feruentnes appeare in Christ. Finally, if we shall thus determine with our selues not to loose the causes of liuing for life, it shalbe no hard matter to keepe the best meane. For he that shall set before himself this end of life, to serue the Lord, from which we may not bee led away euen with the present perill of death: he shall doubtlesse make more account of this, then of meat & drink. The metaphore of meate & drinke hath so much the greater grace, because it is set in due season from the present talke.

34 My meate is. His meaning is, that he doth not only make the greatest account of this: but that there is nothing wherewith he is more delighted, or wherein he practiſeth himſelfe more willingly and earneſtly. Like as Dauid in the 119. Pſa. to the end he may cõmend the law of god, he doth not only ſay that it was precious vnto him, but more ſweet then any honnie. Therfore to the end we may follow Chriſt, we muſt not only ſerue god diligently, but muſt alſo be ſo willing to do his commandements, that the labour muſt be nothing troubleſome vnto vs. Furthermore, when Chriſt addeth, that I may fulfil his will, he doth ſufficiently declare what his fathers will is, whereunto he was ſo bent: namely, that he ſhould fulfill the function which was inioyned him. So euery man muſt haue reſpect vnto his calling, leaſt any man do ſay that þ was laid vpon him by God, which he tooke vpon him at his owne pleaſure raſhly. But we know well enough what was Chriſt his function: namely, to further the kingdome of God, to reſtore loſt ſoules vnto life, to ſpread abrode the light of the Goſpel, and finally to bring ſaluation vnto the world. The excellencie of theſe things did cauſe him being wearie and hungrie to forget both meat & drinke. Yet do we reape no ſmall comfort hereby, when as we heare that Chriſt was ſo carefull for mans ſaluation, that it was vnto him a great pleaſure to care for the ſame. And doubtles we need not to doubt but that he is like affectioned toward vs at this day.

35 Say not you there are yet foure monethes and then commeth harueſt? Behold I ſay vnto you, lift vp your eyes, and ſee the regions becauſe they are white vnto harueſt.

36 And he that reapeth receiueth a reward, and gathereth fruite vnto eternall life: that both hee that ſoweth may reioyce, and he that reapeth.

37 For herein is the ſaying true, that one ſoweth, and another reapeth.

38 I haue ſent you to reape, that which you laboured not, others haue laboured, and you haue entred into their labours.

35 Say you not. He proſecuteth the former ſentence: for becauſe hee had ſaid that he accoũted this the chiefeſt thing, to do his fathers work, he declareth now how ripe the ſame is, & that by comparing it vnto harueſt. For like as when the corne is once ripe the harueſt can ſtay no longer, becauſe otherwiſe the corne ſhould fall away: ſo the ſpirituall corne being now ripe, he doth teſtifie that he muſt in no caſe delay, becauſe delay bringeth danger. Now we ſee to what ende the ſimilitude was brought: namely, to expreſſe the cauſe of his haſt. By this worde, ſay you not, he meant to note how much more bent mens mindes be vnto earthly things then vnto heauenly. For they are ſo deſirous to haue harueſt, that they do carefully count the moneths and dayes: in the meane while it is a wonder to ſee how ſluggiſh they are in gathering the heauenly wheat. And dayly vſe doth argue that this frowardneſſe is not onely in vs naturally, but alſo that it can ſcarſe be pulled away from our heartes. For ſeeing that all men do prouide for þ earthly life aforehand, we think ful negligently vpon diuine matters. So Chriſt ſaith in another place, O ye hypocrites, you iudge according to the face of heauen, what maner day tomorrow ſhalbe, but you know not the time of my viſitation. Mat. 16. 3

36 And he which reapeth, receiueth a reward. He proueth by another argugument how diligent we ought to be in the work of the Lord: namely becauſe there is a large and a glorious reward laide vp for our labour,

For he promiseth fruit, and that no corruptible or fraile fruit. Although that which he addeth concerning fruit may bee expounded two maner of wayes: either that it may be a declaration of the hyere (and so should he vtter one & the self same thing in diuers wordes) or els that he may commend their diligence who do increase the kingdome of God: as hee will repeate chap. 15. 16. I haue chosen you that you may go, & bring fruit, & that your fruit may remaine. And truly both these things ought greatly to encourage the ministers of the word, that they do neuer faint vnder their labor, whilest that they heare that there is prepared for them in heauen a crowne of glory, & do know also that the fruite of their harueſt shal not only be precious before god, but also eternall. To this end is their mentiō made of reward euery wher in the scripture, & not to the end that the merites of workes may be esteemed thereby. For who is he who being throughly tryed, shall not rather be found worthie to be punished for sluggishnes, then rewarded for diligence? Therefore there shall nothing remaine for the best labourers, saue only to flie humbly to craue pardon. But the Lord who dealeth fatherly with vs, to the end he may amende our sluggishnes, & better incourage vs being otherwise but faint harted, vouchsafeth to repay vnto vs a free reward. Furthermore, this is so far frō ouerthrowing the righteousnes of faith, that it doth rather establishe the same. For from whence commeth it that God findeth in vs any thing that is worthie of rewarde, saue only because hee hath endowed vs with his spirite? And we know that the spirit is the earnest and pledge of our adoption. Secondly, how commeth it to passe that God doth giue so great honor vnto vnperfect & corrupt workes, saue only because after that he hath reconciled vs vnto himself freely, by not imputing the vices which cleaue vnto our workes, he accepteth them contrarie to our desert? The summe of this place is, that the labour and paines which the Apostles do take, ought not to seeme greeuous vnto the, seeing that they know that it is so profitable for themselues & fruitfull for the church of Christ. That both he that soweth. In these wordes Christe teacheth vs, that no man shall need to cōplaine for that the Apostles shall gather the fruit of other mens tillage. And we must note this amplification. For if the sobs & sighes of those men who complaine that the fruites of their labour are giuen vnto others, do no whit hinder but that a newe possessour may reape the corne sowen by another: how much more ioy full ought the reapers to be whereas there is a mutuall consent, mutuall ioy, & reioycing. And to the end we may the better vnderstande this place, wee must note the opposition that is betweene the sowing & reaping. The sowing was the doctrin of the law & the prophets: for then the seed being cast into the ground, did remaine as in greene corne: but the doctrine of the gospell, because it bringeth men vnto perfect ripenesse, is fitly compared vnto the harueſt. For the law was far frō that perfection which was at length exhibited in Christ. We do also wel know the cōparison that Paul maketh betwene childhood & manhood which tēdeth to the same end. Finally, forasmuch as ꝑ cōming of Christ brought ꝑ it present saluation, it is no maruell if the gospel, wherein the gate of the kingdome of heauen was set open, be called the harueſt of the prophetical doctrine. And yet neuertheleſſe this hyndereth no whit, but that the fathers vnder the lawe were gathered into God his barne. Gal. 4.

But this ſimilitude is to be referred vnto the manner of teaching. For as the childhoode of the Church did continue vntill the end of the law, and when as the Goſpell was once preached, the youth thereof did immediately ſucceede: ſo ſaluation began to waxe rype then, whiche the Prophetes had onely ſowen. But ſeeing that Chriſte ſpake theſe wordes in Samaria, he ſeemeth to extēd the ſowing further then vnto the law & the Prophetes. And there be ſome who expound this aſwel of the Gentiles as of the Iewes. I graunt indeede that there were alwayes certaine granes of godlines ſcattered throughout the whole world: & no doubt God did after a ſort ſow thoſe excellent ſentences which are extant in the Philoſophers and profane writers by their hand. But foraſmuche as that ſeede was corrupt from the very roote, and the corne which might thence haue ſproung, (although it was neither good nor naturall) was choked with the huge heape of errours, it were an abſurd thing to compare that ſo hurtful corruptiō vnto ſowing. Secondly, that which is here ſpoken of the agreement of ioy, cānot be applyed vnto the Philoſophers and ſuch like. Yet the doubt is not diſſolued, for Chriſt ſeemeth after a ſort to ſpeake of the Samaritanes. I anſwere, although al things were corrupted amongeſt the Samaritanes, yet was there hid amongeſt them ſome ſeede of godlineſſe. For whence commeth it that they were ſo redie to ſeeke Chriſte when as they hearde but one word of him, ſaue only becauſe they had learned out of the lawe and the Prophetes that the Redeemer ſhould come? Iudea trulie was the peculiar poſſeſſion of the Lorde, which he had tilled by the Prophetes: but becauſe there was ſom portion of ſeede brought into Samaria alſo, it is not without cauſe that Chriſt ſaith that the ſeede was waxen rype euen there alſo. If any man doe obiect that the Apoſtles were choſen and ſent to preach the Goſpel vnto all the whole worlde, we may eaſily anſwere, that Chriſt did ſpeak as time dyd require, vnleſſe it were ſo that hee commendeth in the Samaritanes the ſeede of the Propheticall doctrine, although it were filled with manye weedes, for the hope of the fruite whiche was almoſt rype.

37 For in this is the ſaying true. This was a common prouerb, whereby they did declare, that many did oftentimes reape the fruits of other mens labours. Although this was otherwiſe, becauſe he that hath taken paines doth hardly ſuffer an other man to take away the fruite, ſeeing that the Apoſtles haue the prophetes to be partners of their ioy. And yet notwithſtanding we cannot hereby gather, that the Prophetes themſelues doe knowe of thoſe thinges which are done at this day in the Church: becauſe this is Chriſt his drift, that the Prophetes taught ſo long as they lyued with this affection, that they did alreadie reioyce ouer that fruite which they themſelues coulde not gather. Not much vnlike vnto this is the compariſon which Peter vſeth in the firſt chapter of his firſt Epiſtle, ſaue only that he exhorteth all the faithfull generally: but Chriſte doth in this place ſpeake vnto his diſciples alone, and in their perſon vnto the miniſters of the woorde. And in theſe wordes he commandeth them generally to helpe one another in ſuch ſort, that there be amongſt thē no wicked emulatiō: that thoſe who are firſt ſent vnto ẏ work muſt be ſo diligēt in the preſent tillage, that they doe not diſdaine the greater bleſſing of others, who ſhall come after thē: that they who are ſent as it were to gather rype corne,do so much more ioyfully applie their businesse. For the comparison which is made here betweene the teachers of the lawe and the gospel,may also be applyed vnto euery one of these emongest themselues.

39 And many of the Samaritanes of that citie beleeued on him, because of the womans wordes,which did testifie, he hath told mee all thinges which I haue done.

40 Therefore after that the Samaritanes were come vnto him, they requested him to stay with them.And he stayed two dayes.

41 And many moe beleeued,because of his wordes.

42 And they said vnto the woman,we do not any longer beleeue because of thy words: for wee our selues haue heard,and doe knowe that this man is indeed Christe the sauiour of the worlde.

43 And after two dayes he went thence,and went into Galilee.

44 For Iesus himselfe did testifie that a Prophet hath no honour in his owne countrie.

45 And when he came into Galilee,the Galileans receiued him, who saw all things, whiche he did at Hierusalem vpon the feast day: for they also came vnto the feast.

39 They beleeued because of the womans wordes. Heere the Euangelist declareth how forcible the womans wordes were amongest her citizens. VVhereby it appeareth that they did not a little hope for,and desire the comming of the Messias. And this worde beleeued doth signifie in this place vnproperly that they were stirred vp with the womans woordes to acknowledge Christe to be a Prophet. This is as it were the beginning of faith, when as mens mindes are prepared to receiue doctrine. Such an enterance vnto faith,is in this place honourably called fayth, that we may knowe howe greatly God esteemeth the reuerence of his worde,seeing that hee vouchsafeth to giue so greate honour vnto their readinesse to bee taught, who were not as yet througly taught. And that faith doth shew it self in this,that they are desirous to go forward: for which cause they desire to haue Christe to stay with them.

41 Many moe beleeued. It appeareth by the successe that Christe did not shew himselfe to bee more easie to be intreated then became him,for wee see how fruitfull these two dayes were which hee graunted to stay with them at their request. By which example wee are taught that we must neuer loyter,so often as wee may spread abroade the kingdome of God. And if so be it we be afraid least that our facilitie be subiect to false tales, or be oftentimes vnprofitable,let vs aske of Christ the spirite of counsell to direct vs. The worde beleeued is put in in this place in another sense: because it doth not only signifie that they were prepared vnto faith,but also endowed with true faith.

42 Because of thy saying. Althoug I haue followed Erasmus his translation, because the worde speech which the olde interpreter hath,is barbarous,yet are the readers to bee admonished that the worde (lalia) hath the same signification amongest the Grecians which (loquentia) hath amongest the Latinistes. And the Samaritanes doe seeme to boast that they had now a surer stay,then that which was in the womans tongue, which is wont for the most part to bee vaine. VVee beleeue. Hee doeth better expresse what maner of faith theirs was: namely, conceiued of the very worde of God: so that they may boast that they haue the son of God to be their master, as he truly is he alone vpon whose authoritie they may safely rest. He is not now present openly, that he may speake vnto vs mouth to mouth: yet by whomsoeuer wee chaunce to heare him, our faith can leane vnto none but vnto him alone, neither cōmeth the knowledge, whereof mention is made, from any other. For the woorde that commeth from mortall mā may fill and satisfie the eares: but it shall neuer establish the minde in the quiet hope of saluation, so that he may worthily boast that he knoweth who hath heard. Therfore this is the principall thing in faith, that wee knowe that it is Christe who speaketh by his ministers: secondly, that wee giue him the honour due vnto him: that is, that we doubt not but stedfastly beleeue that he is faithfull and true, so that trusting to so sure an authour, we may safely leane vnto his doctrine. But whereas they say that Iesus is the saueour of the world, & Christ, without doubt they had that by hearing. VVherby we gather that the summe of the Gospel was deliuered more familiarly vnto them by Christ in two dayes, then it was hitherto to Ierusalem. And Christ did testifie that the saluation which he brought was cōmon to all the world to the end they might the better vnderstand that it did appertaine vnto thē also. Neither did he cal them vnto the participation of the grace of saluation as lawfull heires: but he taught that he came to admit strangers into god his family, & to bring peace vnto those that were a far of.

44 For Iesus himself did testifie. The show of contrarietie, which appeareth here at the first blush, hath brought foorth diuers expositions. That is to farre fet, which Augustine bringeth, that Christ did want honour amongest his owne, because he did more good in two dayes amongst the Samaritanes, then in a long time amongest the Galileans he gate more disciples in Samaria without myracles, then a great number of myracles did gaine in Galilee. That also of Chrysostome doethe not please mee, that by the countrie of Christe is meante Capernaum, because he was oftner there then els where. Therfore I do rather agree with Cyrillus, who saith that hee went into another parte of Galilee after he had left the Citie Nazareth. For the other three Euangelists doe name it, whenas they make mention of this testimonie of Christe. This truly may bee the meaning, that seeing that the time of his full manifestation was not yet come, he would lurk in his countrie as in a darke and obscure bie place.

Some doe also expound it, that he stayed two dayes in Samaria, because there was no cause why he should make hast into that place where contempt did stay for him. Some other do thinke that he went straightway into Samaria, and that he returned thence againe immediatly. But because Iohn maketh mention of no suche thing I dare not giue place to gessing. Therefore that is more true, when he saw that hee was despised in his countrie Nazareth, he went vnto some other place. VVherfore it followeth immediatly that he came into the citie Cana. And in this that it is added also that he was receiued of the Galileās because of his myracles, it was a signe of reuerēce, and not of contempt. A prophet in his owne countrie. I doe not doubt but that this sentence was prouerbiall, & wee know that that is taken vp for a prouerbe which cōmeth often to passe.

VVhere-

VVherefore we must not straitly require that it should alwayes be true, as though that had neede alwaies to be true which is there said. Certaine it is, that Prophets are more commended els where then in their owne countrie: and it may also somtimes come to passe, & doth indeed chance that a Prophet is no lesse reuerenced of his owne countriemen then of strangers: but the prouerb teacheth what is more common: namely, that Prophets are rather honoured els where in any place, then amongst their owne countrie men. And this prouerbe may haue a double beginning & meaning. For this is a cõmon vice, that looke whomsoeuer we see he crying in their cradles, and toying childishly, those doe wee despise during their whole life. As if they had still continued in childhood. There is also an other euill, whiche reigneth more amongest those that are of acquaintance: namely, emulation. Notwithstanding I am perswaded that ỹ prouerb did arise hereupon, because prophetes were so badly entertained in their owne nation. For good and godly men, when as they sawe so great vnthankfulnesse toward God in Iudea, so great contempt of the word, so great stubbornnes, they might worthily thus complaine, that God his prophetes are neuer lesse reuerenced any where then in their owne countrie. If wee like better of the former sense, the woorde prophete shalbe taken generally for euery teacher, as Paule calleth Epimenides the Prophet of the Cretians. They receiued him. VVee know not whether this honour did long continue or no. For there is nothing wherunto we are more benr, then to forget God his benefits. Neither doth Iohn make mention of this to any other end, saue only that we may know, ỹ Christ did worke myracles in the sight & presence of many, so that they were preached farre & wide. There is one commoditie of myracles set downe againe, that they make a way for doctrine, for they make Christe to bee reuerenced.

46 Therefore Iesus came againe into Cana of Galilee, where hee turned water into wine. And there was a certaine ruler whose sonne was sicke in Capernaum.

47 VVhen he had heard that Iesus was come out of Iudea vnto Galilee, he went vnto him, & requested him that he would go downe, & heale his son: for he was almost dead.

48 Therfore Iesus said vnto him: Except you see signes and wonders, yee will not beleeue.

49 The Ruler himselfe said vnto him, Master, goe downe before my childe die.

50 Iesus said vnto him, goe thy way, thy sonne liueth. The man beleeued the worde that Iesus had spoken, and went.

51 And as he was nowe going downe, the seruants met him, and told saying, thy sonne liueth.

52 Therefore he demaunded of them, at what houre he began to amend: and they said vnto him, yesterday at the seuenth houre the feuer left him.

53 Therefore the father knewe that it was the same houre wherein Iesus saide vnto him, thy sonne liueth. And hee beleeued and all his house.

54 This seconde myracle did Iesus againe when hee came out of Iudea into Galilee.

54 There was a certaine. This is the truer reading, although Erasmus doth thinke otherwise. I graunt that there were at that time some that were called reguli or princes, who are now called Dukes, or Barons, or Earles: but such was the estate of Galilee at that time, that none of that degree could dwell in Capernaum.

Furthermore, I ſuppoſe that it was ſome of Herods Court. For they who thinke that hee was ſent by Cæſar haue no colour. But the Euangeliſt expreſſed this by name, becauſe in ſuch a perſon the myracle was more famous.

47 VVhen hee had hearde that Ieſus, In that he craueth helpe of Chriſt this truly was ſome token of faith: but in that hee appointeth Chriſte the way and meane how to helpe, it appeareth thereby how great his ignorance was. For hee tyeth the power of Chriſte vnto his corporal preſence. He had conceiued no other thing of Chriſte, ſaue only that hee was a Prophete ſent of God, with this commaundement and power, to proue by ſhewing and working wonders, that hee was the miniſter of God. Yet Chriſt winking at this fault, although it was worthie blame, doth ſharply chide him for another cauſe, nay hee chideth all the Iewes generally, becauſe they were too deſirous to ſee wonders. But whence is it that Chriſte is nowe ſo ſharpe ſet, who was wont ſo courteouſly to entertaine others that deſired myracles? There was ſome particular reaſon which we knowe not of, which moued him to deale more ſharply with this man, then he was wont. And peraduenture hee did not ſo much reſpect him as the whole nation. Hee ſaw that his doctrine was but of ſmall authoritie, and that it was not only neglected, but alſo altogether deſpiſed: in the meane ſeaſon he ſaw that they were wholy ſet vpon myracles, & that all their ſenſes were rather filled with ſome amaſednеſſe then admiration. Therefore that wicked contempt of the word which reigned then commonly, did wreſt out of him this complaint. True it is that euen ſome of the ſaints haue ſometimes deſired to haue confirmation from myracles, leaſt the truth of the promiſes ſhould ſtagger with them: and we doe alſo ſee that God was not offended therewith, ſeeing that hee yeelded vnto their requeſtes. But Chriſte noteth in this place a farre greater frowardneſſe. For the Iewes did ſo depende vpon myracles, that they left nothing for the worde. And firſte of all, there was this fault amongeſt them, that the dull and carnall did no whit reuerence doctrine, vnleſſe they were awaked by myracles. For it was meete that the worde of God wherein they were trained vp from their tender yeeres, ſhould haue beene more then familier vnto them: ſecondly, when wonders were wrought, there did ſo ſmall profite follow, that being aſtonied they waxed dul. So that their religion was nothing: there was amongeſt them no knowledge of God in exerciſe of godlines ſaue only in myracles. VVhereunto that vpbraiding which Paule vſeth tendeth, the Iewes ſeeke ſignes. For his meaning is that they were addicted vnto ſignes without reaſon & meaſure, and that they were neither moued with the grace of Chriſte, or promiſes of eternall life, or ſecret worke of the ſpirite: but that they did rather lothſomly refuſe the goſpel, becauſe they can diſgeſt nothing but ſignes. And woulde to God there were not many at this day infected with the ſame diſeaſe: ther is nothing more common then theſe wordes. Let myracles goe before, that wee may giue eare vnto this doctrine. As though the truth of Chriſte ought to be ſo vile and baſe in our eyes, vnleſſe it bee vnderpropped by ſome other thing. But although God ſhould ouerwhelme them with an huge heape of wonders, yet doe they lie when they ſay that they will beleeue there ſhould ſome outward wondering ariſe; but they woulde take neuer a whit the more heed vnto doctrine.

49 Lorde come downe. Seeing that going forward in his ſuite he doth at length obteine that which he would, we may gather that he was not therefore reprehended of Chriſt, as if he woulde vtterly haue reiected him, and refuſe his prayers: but that he did it rather to this ende that he might reforme that vice which did ſtoppe him from comming to true faith. And we muſt remember that which I ſaid before, that this common reprehenſion of all the people was greater, then the peculier reprehenſion of one man. So that which is prepoſterous or ſuperfluous in our petitions, muſt needes be amended or cut off by this meanes, that hurtfull lettes may be taken away.

Furthermore, where as courtears are wont commonly to bee daintie and proude, and will not willingly be hardly dealt with, we muſt note that this man being humbled with his owne neceſsitie, and feare, leaſt he ſhould be depriued of his ſonne, was neither angrie, neither did he repine when he was entertained ſomewhat vncourteouſly by Chriſt: but paſſed ouer that chiding with modeſt ſilence. VVe haue experience of the ſame euen in our ſelues: for our daintineſſe is wonderfull, our vnpaciencie and churliſhneſſe is ſtraunge vntill ſuche time as beeing brought vnder by aduerſitie wee bee compelled to lay away our pride & loftie lookes.

50 Thy ſonne liueth. Here appeareth firſt of all the ſinguler courteſie of Chriſt and his fauourablenes, in that he pardoneth the ignorance & rudeneſſe of the man, and extendeth his power farther then hee hoped for. He deſired that Chriſte by his comming woulde heale his ſonne. He thought that being ſicke he might be cured of the diſeaſe: But he was perſuaded, that being dead, he coulde not be raiſed vp againe: therefore he requeſteth him to make haſt, leaſt death ſhould preuent him. Therfore ſeeing that Chriſt pardoneth both theſe faultes, we may hereby gather how greatly he eſteemeth euē a ſlēder faith. This alſo is worthy the noting, that Chriſt not obeying his deſire, doth graunt him farre more thē he deſired. For he hath a teſtimonie of the preſent health of his ſon. So our heauenly father in not graunting oftētimes our petitions as touching the circumſtances, doth worke to helpe vs by ſuch meanes as we looked not for, that we may learne to appoint him nothing. VVhen hee ſaith that his ſonne liueth, his meaning is, that he was deliuered from dāger of death.

The man beleeued his wordes. Becauſe he came furniſhed with this perſuaſion that Chriſte was a Prophete of God, therefore was hee ſo readie to beleeue, ſo that he did by and by ſnatch at one worde, and hauing caught it, he did lay it vp deepely in his mind. And although he did not thinke ſo honourably of the power of Chriſt as he ought, yet the ſhorte promiſe did worke in his minde a newe hope of a ſodaine: ſo that hee did ſurely thinke that the life of his ſonne was included in the woorde of Chriſte. And with ſuch readineſſe ought we to receiue the woorde of God: but it is farre from hauing ſuch preſent effect alwayes in the hearers. For who is he that can profite ſo much by hearing many Sermons, as did this man beeing almoſt half profane hauing but heard one worde? VVherefore wee muſt be more diligent to ſtirre vppe our ſluggiſhneſſe: and muſt firſt of all pray vnto the Lorde that he wil ſo ſtirre vp our heartes, that we may be no leſſe readie to beleeue, then he is ready and bountifull to promiſe.

51 And as he was going downe. Here is deſcribed the effect of faith, togeather, with the force of the word. For like as Chriſt did by the word reſtore the childe to life that was at the point to die, ſo the father recouereth his ſonne ſafe in one moment, by his faith. Therfore let vs know that ſo often as the Lorde offereth vnto vs his benefites, his power is alwayes preſt to performe whatſoeuer he promiſeth: ſo that our vnbelief doe not ſtoppe the ſame. I confeſſe that this is not continuall, yea it is not often or commonly ſeene that the Lorde doth ſtraightway ſtretche foorth his hande to helpe vs: but ſo often as he deferreth, hee hath his reaſon for it, and that ſuch as is profitable for vs. This is moſt certaine, that he is ſo far from being the cauſe of delay, that he doth rather ſtriue with our lettes and hinderances. Therefore when as his help appeareth not preſently, let vs conſider howe great our vnbeliefe is, or at leaſt how ſlender & weak our faith is. And it is no maruel, if he wil not haue his benefites to periſh, and raſhly to throw them vpon the grounde, but will beſtowe them vpon thoſe who holde out the lappe of faith, and are readie to receiue them. And although he doth not helpe all his childrē, one maner of way, yet ſhall neuer any mans faith be voyde, but that we ſhall alwayes perceiue that that is true, which the Prophete teacheth, that, the promiſes of God doe moſt of all make haſt, when as they ſeeme to linger.

52 Therefore hee asked. In that he asked his ſeruants when his ſonne began to amende, it came to paſſe through the ſecret motion of GOD, to the end the truth of the myracle might the more plainly appear. For euen we are by nature more then wickedly bent to choake the light of the power of God, and Satan goeth about this with manie ſhiftes that hee may darken the beholding and ſight of his workes. Wherefore they muſt needes be made ſo plaine and euident that they may be prayſed amongeſt vs, that there may remaine no place for doubting. Howe vnthankfull therefore ſoeuer men are, yet this circumſtance doeth not ſuffer ſo excellent a worke of Chriſte to bee aſcribed vnto fortune.

53 Hee beleeued and his houſe. This ſeemeth to be an abſurd thing that the Euangeliſt maketh mention of the beginning of faith in that man, whoſe faith he did before commende. Neither can the worde beleeued be referred in this place vnto the going forward of faith: but wee muſt marke, that the man being a Iewe and brought vppe in the doctrine of the law, was nowe endued with ſome taſt of faith, when he came vnto Chriſte. In that he did afterward beleeue the wordes of Chriſte, that was a particuler faith, which reached no farther, ſaue only vnto the life of his ſonne. But now he began to beleeue after another ſort: namely, becauſe hauing embraced the doctrine of Chriſte, he profeſſed himſelfe to be one of his diſciples. So that he doth not only now hope that his ſonne was reſtored vnto him ſafe, through Chriſt his benefite: but he acknowledgeth Chriſt to be the ſonne of God, and ſubſcribeth vnto his goſpel: he hath all his familie to beare him companie, who ſaw the myracle. And yet it is not to be doubted, but that he endeuoured to bring al his together with himſelfe, vnto Chriſtianitie.

Chap. 5

1 AFter this was the feaſt day of the Iewes, and Chriſte went vp to Ieruſalem.
2 And there is at Ieruſalem beſide the sheep market, a poole which is called in Hebrewe Bethesda, hauing fiue porches.
3 In theſe lay a great multitude of ſicke people, of blinde, lame, and withered, waiting for the mouing of the water.
4 For an angel went downe at a certaine time into the poole, and troubled the water: he therefore that went downe firſt after the troubling of the water, was made whole of what diſeaſe ſoeuer he was ſicke.
5 And there was a man there who had paſſed thirtie eight yeeres in an infirmitie.
6 VVhen Ieſus ſaw this man lying, and knew that he had beene now long time ſicke, hee ſaid vnto him, wilt thou be made whole?
7 The man that was ſicke anſwered him: Syr, I haue not a man to put me into the poole when the water is troubled: but in the meane while whileſt I come, an other ſtepeth downe before mee.
8 Ieſus ſaith vnto him, Ariſe, take vp thy bed and walke.
9 And the man was by and by made whole, and he tooke vp his bed and walked: and the Sabboth was that day.

1 After this was the feaſt day. Although the Euangeliſt doeth not in plaine words expreſſe what day this was, yet we may well geſſe that he meaneth VVhitſuntide, if ſo be it that which is here recited was done immediately after that Chriſt came into Galilee. For he went from Ieruſalem immediately after Eaſter, and going through Samaria, he made account that it was foure monethes vntill harueſt: entring into Galilee, he healed the rulers ſonne. The Euangeliſt addeth immediately after, that this feaſt day followed. Therfore the courſe and reſpect of tyme perſuadeth vs to thinke, that he ſpeaketh in this place of Pentecoſt, although I will not greatly ſtriue about that matter. But Ieſus came vnto the feaſt day vnto Ieruſalem, partly becauſe there was greater opportunitie to ſpread abroad doctrine, then, by reaſon of the cõcourſe of people: partly becauſe he muſt be obedient to the law, that he might deliuer all men from the bondage of the law, as we haue ſaid els where alreadie.

2 A poole beſide the sheepe market. The circumſtance of the place is added: whence we gather that the myracle was not obſcure or knowen vnto a few only. For that the place was much frequented, both the fiue porches doe declare, and the nighneſſe of the temple alſo did require thus much. Moreouer, the Euangeliſt ſaith flatly, that many ſicke folkes layde there. As touching the worde it ſelfe, the learned do worthily reiect the vaine ſurmiſe of Ierome, who maketh Betheder of Bethesda, and interpreteth it an houſe of a flock. For there is in this place mention made of a poole which was nigh vnto the ſheep market. They alſo do it with reaſon who reade it Bethſeda, as it were a place of fiſhing. Therefore their opinion is more ſound who expound it a place of pouring out. For ahd doth ſignifie amongeſt the Hebritians a flowing. But the Euangeliſt dyd pronounce it Eſda, after the maner of the Chaldeans, as the common vſe of the tongue did then require.

For

For I thinke that the water was brought thither by conducts that the Prieſtes might draw thence. Vnleſſe peraduenture the place was ſo called, becauſe the water was powred out by pypes. In my iudgement it was called the ſheepe market, becauſe there were ſheepe brought thither to be offered vp in ſacrifice.

3 The multitude ſate. It may bee that the ſicke folkes laide in the porches to aske almes, when the people wēt that way, which went into the temple to worſhip. And they were alſo wont to buy ſheepe there, whiche they would offer in ſacrifice. In the meane while God did heale ſome number of them euery feaſt day, that by this meanes he might ſet foorth the worſhip appointed in the lawe, and the holineſſe of the temple. Notwithſtanding this may ſeeme an abſurd thing, that (ſeeing we do not reade that there was any ſuch thing done at ſuch time as religion did moſt of all floriſhe, yea, ſeeing that myracles were wrought only extraordinarily in the Prophetes time) the power and grace of God did appeare more plainely in myracles then they were wont, when thynges were ſo decayed and almoſt vtterly brought to confuſion. I anſwere, that in my iudgement there were two cauſes: for ſeeing that the ſpirite which dwelt in the Prophetes was a ſufficient witneſſe to teſtifie Gods preſence, religion had no need of any other confirmation at that time. For the law was eſtabliſhed by ſignes more then needed, and God ceaſed not to confirme the commaundement which hee had giuen by innumerable teſtimonies. But when the time of Chriſt his comming drew neere, becauſe they were deſtitute of Prophetes, their ſtate was moſt miſerable, and they were ſore tempted on euery ſide, they had need of this extraordinarie helpe, leaſt they ſhoulde thinke that they were vtterly forſaken of God, and being thus diſcouraged ſhould vtterly haue fainted & fallen away. For we know that Malachie, was the laſt of the prophets, and therefore he concludeth his doctrine thus, chap. 4. 4. That the Iewes may remēber the law giuē by Moſes, vntil Chriſt appeare. For it ſeemed to God a profitable thing, to let them be deſtitute of Prophetes for a ſeaſon, to the ende they might more earneſtly deſire Chriſt, and receiue him with greater reuerence when he was reuealed. In the meane while leaſt that the temple ſhoulde want teſtimonie, and the ſacrifices, and al the worſhip from whence ſaluation ſhoulde come vnto the worlde, the Lorde retained the Iewes by this gift of healing, that they might knowe that it was not in vaine that they were ſeparated from other nations by God himſelfe. For God did openly teſtifie by healing the ſicke, as if hee had reached his hand out of heauen, that he did allow of this kinde of worſhip, which they had from the preſcripe of the lawe. Secondly, I doe not doubt but that by ſuche ſignes hee taught them that the time of redemption was at hande, and Chriſte the authour of ſaluation drewe neere, to the ende all mens mindes might the better be awaked. I ſuppoſe that this vſe of myracles was at ꝑ time double: firſt, that the Iewes might knowe that God was preſent with them, and ſo might remaine conſtant in the obedience of the law: ſecondly, that they might be bent to wayte for a newe and vnwonted eſtate. Of lame, blinde, withered. To the end we may knowe that they were no common diſeaſes whiche the Lorde did cure, the Euangeliſt expreſſeth certaine kindes thereof. For the remedies which men can inuent cānot cure the halt, blind, & withewythered. Truly it was a ſorowfull ſight to ſee in ſuche a multitude of men,a manifolde deformitie of members. Yet the glory of God dyd more clearely ſhine there, then in the beholding of a great and well ordered armie. For there is nothing more famous and excellent,then whē as the power of GOD doth amend and reſtore the wants of nature: there is alſo nothing more beautifull and ſweete, then when as of his infinite goodneſſe,he helpeth the miſeries of man. Therefore the Lorde would haue that moſt noble Theater to be extant, wherein his maieſtie might appeare,not only to thoſe that were borne there aboutes, but alſo to all maner of ſtrangers. And (as I ſaid euen now) this was not the leaſt ornament of the Temple, when as God by ſtretching out his hand,did make it knowen that he was preſent there.

4 For an Angel. It was indeed the proper and peculier worke of the Lord to cure the ſicke: but as he was wont to vſe the hande and diligence of Angels,ſo he committed this vnto an Angels charge. In which reſpect Angels are called powers or might: not that God doth reſigne vp his power vnto them,and ſit idle himſelfe in heauen: but becauſe by working mightily in them,he doth wonderfully make knowen his power vnto vs. Therfore thoſe men do deale wickedly & peruerſly, who feigne that the Angels haue ſomething of their own,or who do make them Mediatours betweene God and vs,in ſuch ſort,that they doe darken the power of God,being as it were ſet far of,whereas it doth rather ſhew it ſelfe to be preſent in them. Therefore we muſt beware of thoſe doting ſpeculations of Plato,becauſe God is too farre diſtant from vs,we muſt goe vnto the Angels,that they may purchaſe fauour for vs:whereas we ought rather to goe ſtraightway vnto Chriſt,that by his guiding, ayde,and commandement,wee may haue the Angels to be helpers and miniſters of our ſaluation.

At a certaine time. God was able in one moment to heale them altogether: but as myracles haue their ende,ſo haue they alſo their meane, as Chriſt ſaith,when ſo many were dead in þ time of Eliæus, there was but one only boy rayſed vp againe: when as there were ſo many hungrie widdowes in the time of the drought,Elias did only help one in her neede. So it was ſufficient for the Lorde to ſhew ſome token of his preſence vpon a few ſick people. But the manner of healing whiche is deſcribed in this place,doth ſufficiently teach vs,that there is nothing more vnconuenient then that men ſhould make the workes of God ſubiect to their iudgement. For,I pray you,what helpe and remedie coulde they looke for,by the troubling of the water? But the Lorde doth by ſuch meanes accuſtome vs vnto the obedience of faith,when he doth thinges contrarie to our reaſon. VVe doe too too gredily follow thoſe thinges which beſides the worde of God doe pleaſe our reaſon. Therefore to the ende he may make vs obey him, he obiecteth oftentimes theſe things,which are contrary to our reaſon. Therfore we do then declare and proue our readineſſe to be taught,when as ſhutting our eyes,we follow the bare worde,although we ſeeme to our ſelues that we ſhal haue no reward for our labour. The like example haue we in Naaman the Aſſyrian,whom the Prophet ſent vnto Iordan to haue his leproſie cured, but he contemned this at the firſt as a mocke, yet at length hee perceiueth in deed that God doth ſo worke contrary to mans reaſon, that yet not-notwithſtanding he doth neuer deceiue or mocke vs . In the meane-while the troubling of the water was a manifeſt token that God doth vſe the elements freely at his owne pleaſure,and doth challenge to himſelfe the effect of the worke For this is a vice too cõmon,to aſcribe vnto the creatures that which belongeth to God alone. But it ſhalbe a point of too much fooliſhnes to ſeeke the cauſe of health,in the troubled water. Therfore he doth ſo commend the external ſigne,that by the beholding of the ſame, the ſicke may be compelled to looke vnto him who is the only authour of grace.

5 And there was a certaine man. The Euangeliſt gathereth diuers circumſtances which make the myracle more credible. The long continuance of the diſeaſe had taken away all hope of curing . He cõplained that hee was depriued of that remedie of the water : hee oftentimes went about to throwe himſelfe into the water, but in vaine, he had no man to helpe him : heereby appeareth more plainely the power of Chriſte. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth this, that hee was commaunded to take vp his bed,that all men might know that hee was healed by no other meanes,ſaue only by the benefite of Chriſte. For ſeeing that he ariſeth ſodenly being ſtrong in all his limbs,whereof he was lame before ſuch a ſodaine change ought ſo much the more to ſtir vp and moue the mindes of the beholders.

6 Wilt thou be made whole? He doth not aske the queſtion as if he did doubt of the matter : but partly that he may kindle in him the deſire of ☧ grace which was offered,partly that he might make the witneſſes who were preſent more attentiue,whom the myracle might otherwiſe eſcape whileſt they thought vppon ſome other matter, as it falleth out oftentimes in matters which chaunce on a ſodaine.Therefore this preparation was neceſſarie for theſe two cauſes.

7 I haue not a man. This ſicke man doth the ſame which almoſt al of vs are wont to doe : for he includeth Gods helpe in his cogitation,neither dare hee promiſe himſelfe any more, then hee can conceiue in minde. And whereas Chriſt doth pardon his infirmitie,we may therin beholde his mercifulneſſe,which euery one of vs tryeth dayly , whileſt that we doe ſtick faſt in the meanes which are nigh vs. Hee doeth by ſtretching out his hand out of hidden places,contrary to our expectation, declare howe farre his goodneſſe exceedeth our weakeneſſe and ſtraightnes in faith. Furthermore,we muſt be inſtructed by this example,to ſuffer. Thirtie yeeres were a long time,wherein God did deferre his benefite,in helping this miſerable man, which yet notwithſtanding he determined to beſtow vpon him from the beginning. How long ſoeuer therefore he make vs wayte,let vs ſo grone vnder our miſerie,that yet the yrkſomneſſe of the long time doe not diſcourage vs. For although there appeare no end,when as our miſeries are prolonged, yet we muſt alwayes perſuade our ſelues that God is a wonderfull deliuerer, who doth eaſily remoue all hinderances by his power.

9 And it was the Sabboth. Chriſt knewe well enough what great offence woulde followe immediately,when they ſhould ſee the man goe bearing a burden. For the lawe doth in plaine wordes forbid to beare any burden vpon the Sabboth day. But there was a double reaſon why Chriſte did ſet foorth ſuch a ſpectacle, ſetting a part all reſpect of this danger; Ier. 17. 21.

danger: namely, that the common people might the better knowe the myracle: ſecondly that there might ſome occaſion be miniſtred, and as it were a way made, for that excellent ſermon which hee made immediatly.

Furthermore, the knowledge of that myracle was ſo greatly to' bee eſteemed, that he ought not to haue paſſed for offending the people, eſpecially ſeeing that hee had in readines a lawefull excuſe, wherewith though he did not pacifie the wicked, yet did he ſufficiently refute their falſe ſlaunders. Therefore we muſt note this rule, that though the whole worlde do fret and fume againſt vs, yet muſt wee publiſhe the glory of God, and preache his workes, ſo farre foorth as it is expedient for his workes to be knowen. Neither muſt we be wearied or diſcouraged, although this our deſire fall not out ſo well as we would, ſo that wee ſet before our eyes that end whereof I haue ſpoken, and leape not ouer the boundes of our dutie.

10 Therefore the Iewes ſaid vnto him that was healed, it is the Sabboth: it is not lawfull for thee to take vp thy bed.

11 He anſwered them, hee that made mee whole, ſaid vnto mee, take vp thy bed and walke.

12 Therefore they asked him, what man is that, that ſaid vnto thee, take vp thy bedde and walke?

13 Furthermore, he that was healed, knewe not who it was: for Ieſus had withdrawen himſelfe, becauſe there was a multitude in the place.

14 Afterward, Ieſus found him in the temple, and ſaith vnto him, beholde, thou art healed, ſinne no more, leaſt a worſe thing happen vnto thee.

15 The man went and telde the Iewes, that it was Ieſus, who had healed him.

16 And therefore the Iewes did perſecute Ieſus, and they ſought to ſlea him, becauſe he did theſe thinges on the Sabboth day.

10 It is the Sabboth. Foraſmuch as it ſtoode all men vpon to defend the religion of the Sabboth, they doe well, and for good cauſes accuſe the man: but when as the excuſe that hee made, doth not ſatiſfie them, they doe nowe begin to offend therein: for they ought to haue looſed him when they knewe the cauſe. To beare a burden (as we haue ſaid) was a breaking of the Sabboth, but Chriſt who laide the burden vppon his ſhoulders, did vnburden him with his authoritie. Therfore we are admoniſhed in this place to beware of raſh iudgement vntill wee doe throughly knowe the reaſon of euery mans fact. What thing ſoeuer is contrarie to the worde of God, without doubt it deſerueth to be condemned: but becauſe it oftentimes falleth out ſo, that we are deceiued in this point, let modeſtie goe before, together with a quiet inquiſition, to the end our iudgement may be ſound and ſober. For becauſe the Iewes being poſſeſſed with a wicked affection, do not ſtay to make inquiſition, they ſtop the gate againſt iudgement and moderation. But and if they had ſuffered themſelues to be taught, the offence had not only been taken away, but they had been brought vnto the knowledge of the goſpel with farre more fruit.

Nowe wee ſee howe farre theyr ſinne reached, and wherein they ſinned: namely, becauſe they dyd not admit a iuſte defence.

And

And the defenſe is thus, that he that was healed did anſwere, that he dyd nothing, but that which he commaunded him to doe, who had authoritie and power to commaund. For although hee vnderſtood not as yet who Chriſte was, yet was he perſuaded that he was ſent of God, becauſe he had tryed his diuine power : and hee doth thereby gather that he was indowed with authoritie, ſo that he muſt needes obey him. But this alſo ſeemeth to be worthie of blame, that the myracle doth remooue him from the obedience of the law. Indeede I confeſſe he leaneth vnto, and fighteth with a reaſon that was ſcarſe ſtronge enough : yet the other doe offend double, in that they neither conſider that this was an extraordinarie work of God, neither yet do ſuſpend their iudgement vntyll ſuch time as they haue heard the prophet that was furniſhed with the worde of God.

13 Hee knew not who it was. Chriſt woulde not haue the glory of ſo great a worke to vaniſh away. Yet woulde he haue it firſt to be knowē and famous, before ſuch time as he would profeſſe himſelfe to be the authour thereof. Therefore he withdrew himſelfe a little, that the Iewes might iudge of the thing it ſelf, without any reſpect of perſon. Hence may we gather, that it cannot bee attributed to the faith of the man that hee was healed, who knoweth not his Phiſition when he was cured: and yet it ſeemeth that he did this by the direction of faith in that he tooke vp his bed when he was commaunded. For mine own part, as I do not denie that there was in him ſome ſecrete motion of faith, ſo I ſay that it doth plainely appeare by the text, that he was deſtitute of ſound doctrine, wherein he ſhould reſt, and of the pure light.

14 After this Ieſus found him. Theſe wordes doe more plainely ſhew, that Chriſt did not therefore lie hid for a time, that the memorie of his benefite might periſh : for he doth now come abroad of his owne accorde, his meaning was only to haue the worke firſt knowen, and then to haue himſelfe knowen to be the authour therof. Furthermore, this place containeth moſt profitable doctrine, for when Chriſt ſaith, Beholde thou art healed. His meaning is, that we doe wickedly abuſe God his benefites, vnleſſe we be moued vnto thankefulneſſe. Neither doth Chriſt caſt that in his teeth, which he had giuen him : but doth only admoniſt the man and tell him that he was healed for this cauſe, that being mindfull of the grace receiued, he might worſhip God his deliuerer, duryng his whole life. Therefore as God doth inſtruct vs vnto repentance, and pricke vs forward with light puniſhments : ſo hee doth exhort vs vnto the ſame with his goodneſſe and clemencie. Yea this is the generall ende aſwell of our redemption, as of all Gods gifts : to haue vs wholy addicted and knit vnto him.

Furthermore, this cannot bee, vnleſſe we remember the pain and puniſhment which we haue alreadie eſcaped : and hee that hath obtayned pardon doe exerciſe himſelfe in this meditation duryng his whole life. Alſo this admonition teacheth vs that what harme ſoeuer we ſuffer, it is to be imputed to our ſinnes. For doubtleſſe calamities doe not come by chaunce, but they are ſo many light puniſhments to chaſten vs. Therfore we muſt firſt of all acknowledge the hand of God which ſmiteth vs, & not imagine any blinde brunt of fortune in our aduerſitie : secondly, we muſt giue God this honor, that ſeeing he is our beſt father hee taketh no pleaſure pleaſure in our miſeries: and therefore that hee doeth neuer handle vs roughly vnleſſe he be offended with our ſinnes. VVhen he forbiddeth him to ſinne, he doth not require that he ſhould be free from all ſin: but there is a compariſon made of his former life. For Chriſte doth exhort him hereafter to amend his life, and not to continue like to himſelf. Leaſt any worſe thing. If God can do vs no good with light puniſhments, wherewith he being our moſt gentle father doth correct vs, as tender & daintie children, he is compelled to put vppon him a new, and as it were a ſtrange perſon. Therfore he taketh whips in hand to tame our fiercenes withal, as he denoteth in the law, Leui. 26.14.18. Deu. 28.15. & Pſa. 32.9. Yea ſuch teſtimonies are vſual in the ſcriptures. Therfore in ſ we are oftentimes puniſhed with new miſeries, we may thanke our owne ſtubbornneſſe for that. For we are not like to vnbroken horſes & mules: but we are more then vntamed beaſtes. Therefore it is no maruell if God doe as it were breake vs in peeces with more cruel puniſhments, as with hammers, whom indifferent puniſhment cannot amend: for it is meete that they be broken who will not bend. To conclude, this is the vſe of puniſhments, that we may be made to take better heed hereafter. If we ſtubbornly reſiſt the firſt or ſecond ſtroke, he will ſtrike ſeuen fold harder: if hauing ſhewed ſome token of repentance for a ſhort time, we do by and by returne vnto our nature, he doth more ſharply puniſh this our forgetfull lightneſſe, that is full of ſluggiſhneſſe.

But it is worthie to be noted in this man, how mercifully and fauourably the Lord ſuffereth vs. For ſuppoſe he drew nigh vnto old age: yet muſt he needes be taken with the diſeaſe in the firſt flower of his age: and peraduenture he had been ſicke from his childhood. Now conſider how greeuous the puniſhment and paine of ſo many yeeres was. And certain it is that God cannot be accuſed of too great ſeueritie, becauſe he did puniſh a man that was halfe dead, with ſo long ſickneſſe. Therefore in that we are lightly puniſhed, let vs learne that that commeth to paſſe becauſe the Lorde doth mittigate the greateſt rigour of puniſhments, for his infinite goodneſſe ſake. Let vs alſo learn that there are no paines ſo fierce & cruell, but that the Lord can adde ſomething thereunto, ſo often as he thinketh it good. And queſtionles miſerable men doe oftentimes pull downe vppon themſelues horrible & wonderfull tormentes, with their complaintes: whileſt that they ſay that their plagues cannot be augmented. Are not theſe thinges hidden in my treaſures ſaith the Lorde? Deut. 32.34. VVe muſt alſo note how ſmall fruite the chaſtiſements of God do bring foorth in vs. For if Chriſte his exhortation was not ſuperfluous, we may gather thence that this mans ſoule was not yet well purged from all vices. And truly vices doe take deeper roote in vs then that they can be plucked vp in one or two dayes. And the curing of the diſeaſes of the ſoule is harder then that it is contented with the remedies of a ſmall time.

15 The man went. He meant nothing leſſe then to purchaſe enuy vnto Chriſt: and alſo he looked for nothing leſſe then that they would ſo rage againſt Chriſt. Therfore it was a godly affection whenas he would honor his phiſition with due honor. The Iewes do vomite out their poyſon in this, that they doe not only accuſe Chriſt for breaking the Sabbaoth, but doe alſo burſt out into extreame crueltie.

17 And Ieſus anſwered them, my father worketh vntill this time, and I worke.
18 For this cauſe therefore the Iewes ſought the rather to kill him, becauſe he did not only breake the Sabboth, but did alſo call God his father, making himſelf equall with God.
19 Therefore Ieſus anſwered, and ſaid vnto them, verily, verily I ſay vnto you, the ſon can doe nothing of himſelfe: ſaue that which he ſhall ſee the father do, which things when he doth, the ſonne doth theſe in like ſort.

17 My father, VVe muſt mark what manner of defence Chriſt vſeth: He doth not anſwere, that the law concerning the keeping of the Sabboth was temporal, and ſuch as was now to be abrogated but doth rather ſay that he had not broken the Sabboth: becauſe this is a worke of God. It was indeed a ſhadowiſh ceremonie, whereof Chriſte made an end by his comming, as Paule teacheth, Col. 2. 16. 17. But the ſtate of this preſent cauſe conſiſteth not in that. For men are only commanded to reſt from their owne workes: therfore circumciſion which is a work of God, and not of men, is not contrarie to the Sabboth. Chriſt ſtandeth vpon this point, that the holy reſt is not troubled with the woorkes of God, which reſt was commanded in the law of Moſes. And by this reaſon he doth not only excuſe his own fact, but his alſo that bare his bed, for it was an appurtenance and as it were a part of the myracle: becauſe it was nothing els but an approuing of the ſame. Secondly, if thankſgiuing and the preaching abroade of the glory of God be, to be reckoned among the workes of God, it was no breaking of the Sabboth with foote and hande to ſet foorth the grace of God. Yet Chriſt doth chiefly ſpeake of himſelfe, with whom the Iewes were more offended: In the meane while he doth teſtifie that the health which hee reſtored to the ſicke man is a teſtimonie of his diuine power. He affirmeth that he is the ſonne of God, and that the maner of working is common to him and his father. I doe not nowe at large diſpute what was the vſe of the Sabboth, & for what cauſes it was commaunded. As touching this preſent place, the religion of the Sabboth is ſo farre from breaking and hindering the courſe of the workes of God, that it doth rather graunt place to them alone. For why doth the lawe commaunde men to reſt from their owne workes: ſaue only that they may applie all their ſenſes being emptie and free, to conſider vpon the workes of God? Therefore hee is a wicked ouerthrower of the lawe, and alſo a falſe interpreter, who doth not graunt vnto the workes of God a free kingdome in the Sabboth. If any man doe obiect that the example of God is ſet before men, that they may reſt the ſeuenth day: the anſwere is eaſie, that men are not like vnto God in that point, becauſe hee kept holy day, but becauſe that ceaſing from the troubleſome actions of this world, they doe aſpire vnto the heauenly reſt. Therefore the Sabboth of God is no loytering, but a ſound perfection which bringeth with it the quiet eſtate of peace. Neither is that any hinderance which Moſes ſaide, Gen. 2. 2. that God made an end of his workes. For his meaning is, that when God had finiſhed the frame and worke of the worlde, he did conſecrate that day, which men ſhoulde beſtowe on the meditating vppon his workes. In the meane while he ceaſeth not by his power to vpholde the worlde which he hath made, to gouerne it by his counſell, to nouriſhe it with his goodneſſe, and to determine all thinges at his pleaſure in heauen uen and earth. Therefore the creation of the worlde was finished in sixe dayes: but the gouernment of the same is perpetuall, and GOD doth worke continually in defending and preseruing the order thereof: as Paule teacheth, that in him we liue, we moue and haue our being. And Act. 17.28

Dauid teacheth that all thinges doe stande, forasmuch as the spirite of Psa. 104.29
God giueth life vnto them, and that they doe fayle so sone as they shalbe destitute of his force. Neither doth God only defende nature being created by him, with his generall prouidence only, but hee ordereth, & moderateth euery part thereof. And he doth especially keepe & gouern by his ayde the faithfull, whom he hath taken into his tuition. And I worke. Christe hauing omitted the patronage & defence of the present cause, hee declareth the ende and vse of the myracle: namely, that he may bee thereby knowen to bee the sonne of God. For this was his purpose in all his words & deedes, to shew himselfe to be the authour of saluation. This is proper to the diuinitie, which he challengeth to himselfe: as saith Heb. 1.3.
also the Apostle, that he susteineth all thinges by his mightie becke. And he doth testifie that he is God for this cause, that beeing reuealed in the flesh, he may execute the office of Christe: so that he affirmeth that hee came from heauen, because he would haue it knowen, especially why he descended into the earth.

18 For this cause therefore. Hee was so farre from pacifiyng their rage with this defence, that he did rather prouoke the same. Neither was hee ignorant how malitious their wickednes, and how hard their stubbornesse were: but this was his chiefe drift to profite a fewe of his who were then present: and secondly, to bring to light their incurable wickednesse. And he hath taught vs by example, that we must neuer yeelde vnto the furie of the wicked, but endeuour so much as neede requireth to defende the truth of God, though all the worlde gainsay vs, and murmur against vs. Neyther is there any cause why the seruauntes of God should be greeued, if so be it they haue not so good successe as they would wish: seeing þ euen Christ himselfe had not such successe. Neither is it any maruell if Satan doe so much more violently rage in his members and instruments, the more that the glory of God doth shew it selfe. In the former member, when the Euangelist saith that they were displeased with Christe, because he had broken the Sabboth, he speaketh according to their meaning. For I haue alredie taught that the matter was otherwise. The principall cause of indignation is, because he calleth god his father. And indeede Christ his intent was to haue God to bee taken for his father after a peculiar sort, that hee might exempt himselfe from the common order of other men. He made himselfe equall with God seeing that he did attribute vnto himselfe the continuall working. And Christe is so farre from denying of this, that he doth more plainly confirme the same. Whereby is refuted the madnes of the Arrians, who did confesse that Christe was God in such sort, that they thought that he was not equall with the father. As if there coulde any inequalitie be found in the one and simple essence of God.

19 Therefore Iesus answered. Wee see as I haue saide, that Christe is so farre from refuting that which the Iewes did obiect, although it were slanderous, þ he doth more plainely proue that it was true. And first of al he stadeth vpō this point, that þ was a work of god wherin þ Iewes found that they may perceiue that they muſt ſtriue with God, if they proceede to condemne that which muſt of neceſsitie be aſcribed vnto him. This place was in times paſt diuerſly toſt betweene the true fathers & the Arrians. Arrius did gather thereby that the ſonne was leſſer then the father: becauſe he could doe nothing of himſelfe. The fathers did obiect that the diſtinction of perſon is only meant by theſe words, that it might be knowen that Chriſt is of the father, and yet notwithſtanding that he is not depriued of the internall power of working. But they were both deceiued: for neither are theſe words ſpoken cõcerning the bare diuinitie of Chriſt: and thoſe thinges which we ſhall ſee by & by doe not belong of themſelues & ſimplie vnto the eternall worde of God, but doe only agree with the ſon of God inaſmuch as hee is reuealed in the fleſh. Let vs therefore ſet Chriſt before our eyes, as he was ſent of the father to be the redeemer of the worlde. The Iewes did conſider in him no farther thing, then his humane nature. Therefore he affirmeth that hee healed not the ſicke man, as he was man: but by his diuine power wiche laid hid vnder the viſible fleſhe. This is the eſtate of the cauſe, whereas they faſtening their eyes vpon the fleſh did contemne Chriſt, hee biddeth them ryſe higher, and behold God. All the ſpeech is to be referred vnto this matching of contraries, that they are greatly deceiued, who thinke that they haue to deale with a mortall man, whileſt that they accuſe Chriſt for his workes which were meere diuine. Therefore doth he ſo earneſtly affirme, that in this worke hee differeth nothing from the father.

20 For the father loueth the ſonne, and sheweth him all things which he doth: and he will shew him greater workes then theſe, that you may maruel.

21 For as the father rayſeth vp the dead, and quickeneth, ſo the ſonne alſo quickeneth whom he will.

22 For the father iudgeth no man: but he hath giuen all iudgement to the ſonne, 23 That all men may honour the ſonne as they honour the father: hee that honoureth not the ſonne, honoureth not the father that ſent him.

24 Verily, verily, I ſay vnto you, that he which heareth my wordes and beleeueth in him that ſent me hath eternall life: and ſhal not come into iudgement: but hath paſſed from death to life.

20 For the father loueth. All men ſee howe hard and farre fet the expoſition of the old writers is. God (ſay they) loueth himſelfe in his ſon. But this doth very well belong vnto Chriſt being clothed with the fleſh, to be beloued of his father. Yea we know that hee was diſtinguiſhed by this excellent title aſwell from angels as frõ men, This is my welbeloued ſon. Mat. 3. 17. For we know that Chriſt was elected, that in him might be reſident the whole loue of God that it might flow thence vnto vs as frõ a full fountaine. For Chriſt is beloued of God the father as hee is the head of the church. He teacheth that this loue is the cauſe why the father worketh al things by his hand. For when he ſaith that al things are shewed vnto him, by theſe words is to be vnderſtood the cõmunication or participation: as if he ſhould ſay, as the father hath powred out his mind into mee, ſo hath he poured into me his power, that in my works ꝑ diuine glory may appeare: ſo ꝑ mẽ cã ſeek no diuine thing, which they may not find in me.

And

And truely we ſhall in vaine ſeeke for the power of GOD without Chriſte.

Hee sheweth him greater workes then theſe. His meaning is that the myracle which he ſhewed in the curing of the man, was not the chiefeſt of the workes which were giuen him in charge by his father. For he had only giuen them a ſmall taſt there, of that grace, whereof he is properly both the miniſter and the authour: to wit, that hee may reſtore life to the worlde. When he addeth that, yee may marueil, hee toucheth by the way their vnthankfulneſſe, becauſe they did contemne that ſo excellent a token of the power of God: as if he ſhould ſay, how dull and blockiſh ſoeuer you bee, thoſe thinges which God ſhall bring to paſſe by mee hereafter, ſhall enforce you to wonder whether you will or no. Yet it ſeemeth þ this was not fulfilled, ſeeing that we know that in ſeeing they ſawe not, like as Iſaias ſaith alſo 6. 9. that the reprobate are blind when they behold the light of God. I anſwere, that Chriſte ſpake not in this place of their affection, but did onely note how valiantly he would afterwardes proue himſelfe to be the ſonne of God.

21 For as the father. He doth here briefly ſet downe what manner of office was giuen him of his father. For although he ſeemeth to chooſe one kynde: yet is it a generall doctrine, wherein he ſheweth that hee is the authour of life. And it containeth in it ſelf, life, and righteouſnes, and all the giftes of the holy Ghoſt, and all the partes of our ſaluation. And truly it was requiſite that this myracle ſhoulde be ſuch a ſpecial teſtimonie of Chriſtes power, that it might bring foorth that common fruite: namely, that it might open the gate vnto the Goſpell. We muſt farther note after what ſort Chriſt giueth vs life. For he found vs all dead: therefore it was needefull that he ſhoulde begin at the reſurrection. Yet notwithſtanding it is not ſuperfluous that he ioyneth two wordes together: Becauſe it were not ſufficient for vs to bee deliuered from death, vnleſſe Chriſt did reſtore life vnto vs fully and perfectly. Furthermore, he maketh not this life common to all men. For he ſaith, that he giueth life to whom he will, wherby he meaneth that hee doeth vouchſafe to beſtow this grace peculiarly only vpon certaine men, that is, the elect.

22 For the father. He doth now more plainly expreſſe the general thing it ſelfe, that the father doth gouerne the worlde in the ſonnes perſon, & doth by his hand rule. For the Euangeliſt taketh iudgement, for gouernement and power according to the phraſe of the Hebrewe tongue. Now we know what is the ſumme, that the father hath deliuered the kyngdome to Chriſt, that he may gouerne heauen and earth at his pleaſure. But this may ſeeme to bee a very abſurd thing, that the father hauing reſigned vppe the right of his gouernment ſhoulde ſit idle in heauen like ſome priuate man. The anſwere is eaſie, that this is ſpoken not ſo much in reſpect of God as of men. For there is nothing changed in God whileſt that hee hath made Chriſte the chiefe king and Lord of heauen & earth. For hee himſelfe is in the ſonne and he worketh in him. But becauſe when as we will aſcende vnto God, all our ſenſes doe by and by faile, Chriſte is ſet before our eyes, as the viſible image of God, who can not bee ſeene. There is no cauſe therefore why wee ſhould wearie our ſelues in vaine with ſeeking out the ſecrete places of heauen, ſeeing that God doth prouide for our infirmitie, when he sheweth himselfe nigh vn to vs in the person of Christ: But rather when as we haue to deale concerning the gouerning of the worlde, the estate of our selues, the heauēly ayde of our saluation, let vs learne to turne our eyes vnto Christe alone (like as al power is commited vnto him, and in his face appeareth god the father who shold otherwise be hid far away) least ꝑ bare maiestie of God doe swalow vs vp with his infinite brightnesse.

23 That all men may honour. This member doth sufficiently confirme that which I touched of late, that GOD doth not so reigne in the person of Christ as if he were at ease in heauen, as sluggish kings are wont to do: because he doth declare his power in Christ, and doth shewe himselfe to be present. For what other thing doe these wordes signifie, that al may honour the sonne, saue only that the father will bee acknowledged and worshipped in the sonne? Therefore it is our dutie to seeke God the father in Christ, there to beholde his power, there to worship him. For (as it followeth immediately after) hee that honoureth not the sonne, defraudeth god of his lawfull honour. All men do confesse that God is to be worshipped, and this sense being naturally ingrafted in vs, hath taken suche deepe roote in our heartes, that no man dare absolutely denie God his honour: in the meane while the mindes of men do vanish away by seeking God without the way. Hence came so many feigned gods, hence came so many peruerse worshippings. Therefore we shall finde the true God no where els saue only in Christ, neyther shal we worship him aright any other way saue only by kissing the sonne, as Dauid teacheth. For (as Iohn witnesseth els where 1. Iohn 2.12.) he that hath not the sonne he lacketh the father also. The Turkes and Iewes doe with gorgeous titles adorne the God whome they worship, but wee must note this that the name of god being separated from Christ is nothing els but a vaine fiction. Therefore whosoeuer wil haue his worship to be approued of the true God, let him not turne aside from Christe. Neither was the estate of the fathers vnder the lawe any other. For although they did beholde Christ obscurely vnder shadowes, yet GOD did neuer reueale himselfe without Christe. But nowe since that Christe was reuealed in the flesshe and made our king, all the worlde must bow their knees vn to him, that it may bee subiect to GOD. For seeyng that GOD the father hath commaunded hym to sit at his ryght hande, he that imagineth God without Christe, hee lameth him of the one parte of hymselfe.

Psal. 2. 12.

24 Hee that heareth my worde. Here is expressed the manner and order of the worshipp, least any man should thinke that it is placed in some externall ryte onely, and in friuolous ceremonies. For the doctrine of the gospel is vnto Christ as a scepter wherewith he doth gouern the faithful which are put vnder him by the father. And this definition is principally to be noted. There is nothing more common then the false profession of Christianitie. For euen the Papistes who are the most deadly enemies of Christ, doe yet notwithstanding too boldly brag of his name: but Christe doth in this place require no other honor at our hands, saue only that we obey his gospel. Vvherupon it followeth that what honor soeuer ꝑ hypocrites do giue vnto Christ, it is nothing els but ꝑ traiterous kisse of Iudas, Although they call him king an 100. times, yet doe they spoyle ſpoile him of his kingdom & al power, whileſt that they do not beleeue his goſpel. He doth alſo ſet foorth the fruit of obedience, when he ſaith: Hee hath eternall life, to the ende we may be more willing to performe the ſame. For who ought to be ſo hard hearted, but he will ſubmit himſelfe willingly vnto Chriſt, hauing the reward of eternall life ſet before him? and yet we ſee how few he winneth vnto himſelf with this ſo great bountifulnes. Such is our frowardnes that we had rather willingly periſh, then ſubmit our ſelues vnto the ſon of God, by whom we may be ſaued through his goodneſſe. Therefore Chriſt comprehendeth both theſe thinges in theſe wordes: both the rule of the godly and ſincere worſhip, which he requireth at our handes, and the way whereby he hath reſtored vs vnto life. For it were not ſufficient for vs to vnderſtand that which he taught before: namely, that he came to rayſe the dead, vnleſſe we did alſo know how he doth deliuer vs from death. He affirmeth that wee doe obtaine life by hearing his doctrine, vnderſtanding by the woorde (heareth) faith, as it doth immediately ſhew it ſelfe. And faith hath not his place in the eares, but in the heart.

Furthermore we haue els where declared whence ſo great force of faith commeth. We muſt alwayes conſider what the goſpel offereth vs. Neither is it any maruell, that he that receiueth Chriſte with all his merites, is reconciled vnto God, and is abſolued from the giltineſſe of death: that he that is indued with the holy ſpirite, is cloathed with the heauenly righteouſneſſe, that he may walke in newneſſe of life. Rom. 6.4. The clauſe which is added, Beleeueth in him that ſent mee, ſerueth to eſtabliſh the authoritie of the Goſpell, whyleſt that Chriſt doth teſtifie that it came from God, and was not forged by man. Like as in another place he denieth that that is of himſelfe which he ſpeaketh: but that it is commanded him of his father, afterward in the xiiii. chapter, and x. verſe Hee commeth not into iudgement. Herein is contained a ſecrete oppoſition betweene guiltineſſe, whereunto we are all naturally ſubiect, and the free acquitting which we haue through Chriſt. For vnleſſe all were in danger of damnation, to what end ſhould it ſerue to exempt thoſe that beleeue in Chriſt? Let this therefore be the meaning of theſe words, that we are out of danger of death, becauſe we are abſolued through the benefite of Chriſte. Therfore howſoeuer Chriſt doth ſanctifie vs and regenerate vs by his ſpirite into newneſſe of life: yet the free remiſſion of ſinnes is here ſpecially touched, wherein alone conſiſteth the happineſſe of men.

For he beginneth to liue indeed, who hath god to be merciful vnto him, and how ſhould God loue vs vnleſſe he did pardon our ſinnes? He hath paſſed. Whereas certaine latine copies haue it in the future tence, Hee ſhall paſſe, it proceedeth from the ignorance and raſhneſſe of ſome man, who not vnderſtanding the Euangeliſt his meaning, did graunt himſelf greater libertie thē was meet. For there is no doubtfulnes at all in the Greeke worde. And he ſaith not vnfitly that there is a paſſage made from death alreadie, becauſe both the vncorruptible ſeede of life is in the children of God, after that they are called, and they doe alreadie ſitte downe with Chriſte through hope in the heauenly glorye, and haue the kyngdome of GOD certainely appoynted within them ſelues. For although theyr life be hidden, yet do they not therefore ceaſe to to

Col, 3. 3. poſſeſſe it through faith: although they are beſet rounde about with death, yet they doe not therefore ceaſe to bee quiet: becauſe they know that they are ſafe enough through the ayde of Chriſte. In the meane while let vs remember that the faithfull are now in ſuch ſort in life, that they doe alwayes beare about them the matter of death: but the ſpirit which dwelleth in them is ỹ life, which ſhall at length aboliſh the relikes of death. For that ſaying of Paule is true, that death, is the laſt enemye
1. Cor. 15. 26. that ſhalbe deſtroyed. Neither doth he here intreate either of the perfect aboliſhing of death, or the full exhibiting of life. But although life bee onely begunne in vs, yet Chriſte doeth affirme that the faithfull are ſo ſure thereof, that they ought not to bee afraide of death: neyther is it any maruell, ſeeing they are ingrafted into him, who is the fountaine and VVell of lyfe that can neuer be drawen drie.

25 Verilie, verily I ſay vnto you, that the houre ſhall come, and nowe it is when the dead ſhall heare the voyce of the ſonne of GOD: and they that ſhall heare ſhall liue 26 For as the father hath life in himſelfe, ſo he hath alſo giuen vnto the ſonne to haue life in himſelfe.

27 And hee hath gyuen him power to doe iudgement, becauſe hee is the ſonne of man.

28 Maruell not at this: becauſe the houre ſhall come, wherein all they which are in the graues ſhall heare his voyce, 29 And ſhall come foorth, they that haue done good, vnto the reſurrection of life: and they that haue done euill, vnto the reſurrection of iudgement.

25 Verily, verily I ſay vnto you. Seeing that the Euangeliſt bringeth in the ſonne of God ſo oftentimes ſwearing in the matter of our ſaluation: we doe firſt of all hereby perceiue how carefull hee was for vs: and ſecondly, how greatly it skilleth that the credite of the goſpel be well and throughly eſtabliſhed and grounded. Truly hee ſeemeth to tell in this place a certaine vncredible thing, when as this effect of faith is declared whereof Chriſt intreateth: therefore he confirmeth with an oathe that the voyce of the Goſpel is ſo liuely, that it is able to rayſe vp the dead. It is euident enough that he ſpeaketh of the ſpirituall death. For they that referre it vnto Lazarus and the ſonne of the widdow of Naim, and ſuch like, they are refuted by the text it ſelfe. Chriſte telleth vs firſt that wee are all dead, before he doth quicken vs. And hereby it appeareth of what force the whole nature of man is vnto the obtaining of ſaluation. VVhen as the Papiſtes will ſet vp their free will, they compare it to the Samaritane, whom the robbers left halfe dead in the way. As though it were lawful with the ſmoak of an Allegorie to darken a cleare ſentence, whereby Chriſt doth flatly adiudge vs to death. And truly ſeeing that we are eſtraunged from God through ſinne, after the falling away of the firſt man, whoſoeuer doe not acknowledge themſelues to be oppreſſed with eternall deſtruction, they doe nothing els but deceiue themſelues with vaine flatterings. I graunt truly, that there remaineth ſome life in the ſoule of man: (for both the vnderſtanding, and will, & all the ſenſes are ſo many partes of life) but becauſe there is no part of life, which doth aſpire vnto the heauenly life, it is no maruell if the whole man, as appertaining vnto the kingdome of God, bee iudged dead.

dead. And Paule declareth this death at large (Ephe. 2.1. and 4. 17.) when as hee ſaith that we are eſtraunged frō the pure & ſound reaſon of the minde, and that being enemies vnto God with all the affection of our hearte, and aduerſaries of his iuſtice, that we wander in darkeneſſe beyng blinde, we are giuen to wicked concupiſcence. If there be no force in a nature, that is ſo corrupt, to deſire righteouſneſſe, it followeth that the life of God is quite extinguiſhed in vs. So that the grace of Chriſt, is the true reſurrection from death. Furthermore, we haue this grace giuen vs by the goſpell: not that the outwarde voyce hath ſo great force, which doth oftentimes beate the eares in vaine, but becauſe Chriſt doth ſpeake vnto our heartes within by his ſpirite, that wee may receiue by faith the life that is offered vs. Neither doth he intreate in this place generally of al the dead: but he meaneth only the elect, whoſe eares God doth bore through and open, that they may heare the voyce of his ſonne, that it may reſtore them to life. Yea Chriſt doth diſtinctly in his words cōmend vnto vs a double grace, when he ſaith, The dead ſhall heare the voyce of the ſon of God, and they that ſhall heare ſhall liue. For it is no leſſe contrary to nature for the dead to heare, then to bee called againe to life from which they were fallen. Therefore both of theſe are properties of the ſecrete power of God. VVhen he ſaith, The houre ſhall come and now is, he ſpeaketh as of a thing before vnaccuſtomed. And truly the publiſhing of the Goſpell, was a newe and ſodaine reſurrection of the worlde. If any man aske this queſtion whether the worde of God did not alwayes giue life to men, or no: wee may readilie anſwere, that the doctrine of the lawe and the propheres, foraſmuch as it was appointed for God his people, it rather had this office to nouriſh thoſe in life who were begotten to God, then to bring them backe againe from death. But the eſtate of the Goſpel was otherwiſe, whereby the Gentiles who were before aliants from the kingdome of God ſeparated from God, depriued of all hope of ſaluation, were gathered into the fellowſhip of life.

26 For as the father. Hee ſheweth by what meanes his voyce hath ſo great force, to wit, becauſe he is the fountaine of life, and doth powre out the ſame by his voyce into men. For wee ſhould not haue life from his mouth, vnleſſe the cauſe and originall thereof were in his power. For God is not only ſaid to haue life in himſelfe, becauſe he liueth alone through his owne and inward power: but becauſe hauing in himſelfe the fulnes of life, he quickeneth all thinges. And this truly doth properly appertaine vnto God, as it is Pſal. 36.9. VVith thee is the VVell of life. But becauſe the maieſtie of God as it is ſet far off frō vs, might be like to an hidden & ſecrete ſpring, therfore did it ſhewe it ſelfe in Chriſt. Therfore we haue a readie and common well out of which wee may draw. This is the meaning of the words, becauſe God would not haue life to be hidden with him, & as it were buried, he therefore powred it out into his ſonne, that it might flowe vnto vs. Hence wee gather that this title is properly aſcribed to Chriſt: inaſmuch as he was manifeſted in the fleſh.

27 And hath giuen him power. Hee repeateth this againe that the gouernment was giuen of the father, that hee may haue full power of all things both in heauen and earth. exouſia doth in this place ſignifie dignitie and iudgement is taken for gouernment, As if he ſhould ſay, that the ſonne is made of his father a king, that he may gouerne the world, and exerciſe his fathers power. The reaſon which followeth immediately, is principally to be noted. Becauſe he is the ſonne of man. For his meaning is, that hee commeth vnto men adorned with ſo great power, that he may impart vnto them that which he receiued of his father. Some do think that that which is here ſpoken is all one with that of Paule, Phil. 2. 7. That Chriſte when he was in the forme of God, did make himſelfe of no reputation taking vpon him the ſhape of a ſeruant, and did humble himſelfe vnto the death vpon the croſſe. Wherefore God hath alſo highly exalted him, and giuen him a name aboue all names, that euery knee may bowe before it, &c. But I doe make it to reache farther, that Chriſte inaſmuch as hee was man, was appointed of the father to be the authour of life, that we might not ſeeke farre for it. For Chriſte did not take it to himſelfe, as if he needed the ſame: but that he might inrich vs with his plentie. The ſumme is, that that was reueaſled vnto vs in Chriſt as he was man, which was hidden in God, & that the life which before could not be attained vnto, is now in readines. And whereas ſome doe knit this reaſon vnto the member following, hauing pulled it away from his owne text, it is farre fet, and contrary to Chriſts his meaning.

28 Maruell not at this. He ſeemeth to reaſon very vnfitlie whileſt that he ſetteth the confirmation of that which he had ſpoken from the laſt reſurrection. For it is no harder matter for the bodies to be rayſed vppe then for the ſoules. I anſwere that here is no cõpariſon made betwene the greater & the leſſer according to the thing it ſelfe: but according to the meaning of men. For, as they are carnall, they maruell at nothing but that which is carnall and viſible. Hereby it cõmeth to paſſe that they doe careleſly paſſe ouer the reſurrection of the ſoule: & do more wõder at the reſurrectiõ of ẏ fleſh. And alſo this our blockiſhnes cauſeth thoſe things to be more of credite, which can be ſeen ẅ the eyes, thẽ thoſe which cã be cõceued by faith only. becauſe he maketh mẽtiõ of the laſt day, ẏ reſtraint is no lõger added, And now is: but he doth abſolutely ſay that ẏ time ſhal once be. And here meteth vs another obiectiõ, for althogh the faithful do wait for the reſurrectiõ of the bodies, yet can they not leane vnto the knowledge thereof to bee perſuaded that the ſoules are nowe deliuered from death, becauſe the bodies ſhall in time to come ryſe out of the graues. And what is more ridiculous amongeſt the wicked then to proue that which is knowen by that which is (as they ſay) vnknowẽ? I anſwere, that Chriſt doth in this place boaſt of his power amongſt the reprobate, that he may declare that the perfect reſtoring of all things was commanded by the father, as if he ſhold ſay, that which I ſay I haue now begun, I wil once finiſh before your face. And truly whereas Chriſt doth now quicken the ſoules that were drowned in deſtruction by the voyce of his Goſpel, that is a certaine beginning of the laſt reſurrection.

Furthermore, becauſe it conteineth all mankinde, hee doth by and by diſtinguiſh betwene the elect and the reprobate. VVhich partition doth declare that as the reprobate are now cited vnto iudgement by the voyce of Chriſt, ſo they ſhalbe once brought by the ſame voice, and be preſented before his iudgement ſeate. But why doth hee only name thoſe who are shut vp in the graues, as if others shoulde not be partakers of the resurrectiō, whether they perished by shipwrack, or were deuoured of beasts, or were consumed to ashes? because the dead vse commonly to be buried, he vnderstandeth by Synecdoche all those who dyed long agoe. And this is more forcible then if he had said the dead only. For the sepulchre doth as as it were withdrawe those from the world, whom death hath alreadie depriued of breath and light. The voyce of the sonne of God doth signifie the sound of the trumpet, which shall sounde at the commandement, and through the power of Christ. For whereas the Angell shalbe the cryer or apparitour, 1. The. 4. 16. That is no let why that may not be attributed vnto the iudge which is doone through his authoritie, and as it were in his person. Mat. 24. 31. 1. Cor. 15. 52.

29 They that haue done good. Hee pointeth out the faithfull by good workes, like as hee teacheth that the tree is knowen by his fruite, Mat. 7. 19. 20. And he commendeth their good workes which they began to doe after they were called. For the thiefe, vnto whom Christe promised life vpon the crosse, who was giuen vnto wicked facts during his whole life, doth euen at the last gaspe as it were, desire to do that which was right. And because he is borne againe a new man, and of the bondslaue of sinne beginneth to be the seruante of righteousnesse all the former course of his life was neuer called to an account before God. Moreouer, euen those sinnes with the gyltinesse wherof the faithfull doe binde them selues dayly, are not imputed vnto them. For there was neuer any in the worlde who without pardon can be iudged to haue liued well. Yea, there shall no worke at all be accounted a good worke, saue that whose faultes God doth pardon: seeing they are al vnperfect and corrupt. Therfore they are called in this place doers of good workes, whom Paul calleth studious, or zealous of the same. And this estimation dependeth vpon the fatherly mercifulnesse of God, who doth freely allow that which did deserue to be reiected. VVhereas the papists doe gather out of these places, that eternall life is repayed vnto the merites of workes, it is easily refuted. For Christ doth not intreate of the cause of saluation: but he doth only distinguish the elect from the repro bate by their marke. And this doth he that he may exhort & inuite his children vnto holinesse and innocencie; Indeede wee doe not denie, that faith which iustifieth vs is ioyned with the desire of liuing well and righteously: but we do only teach that our hope can rest no where els saue only in the mercy of God. Tit. 2. 14.

30 I can do nothing of my selfe: as I heare, I iudge, and my iudgement is iust: because I doe not seeke my will: but the will of the father who sent me.

31 If I testifie of my selfe, my testimonie is not true.

32 There is another who doth testifie of me, and I knowe that the testimonie is true, which he doth testifie of mee.

30 I can do nothing of my selfe. It were superfluous in this place to dispute subtilly, whether the sonne of God can do that of himselfe or by the help of some other which belongeth vnto his eternall diuinitie: neyther would he haue vs to be occupied about such subtile matters. Therefore there was no cause why the old fathers should so trouble thēselues about about the refuting of ỹ falſe ſlander of Arrius: that knaue did obiect that the ſonne is not equall with the father, becauſe hee can doe nothing of himſelfe. The holy men doe anſwere that the ſonne doth by good right acknowledge that he hath receiued of the father whatſoeuer hee hath, of whome, in reſpect of perſon, he taketh his beginning. But firſt of al Chriſt doth not here ſpeake of his bare diuinitie: but as he was clothed with our fleſh, he teacheth that he is not to be eſteemed according to the outward ſhewe, becauſe he hath ſome higher thing then man. Secondly, we muſt marke with whom he hath to doe. It was his intent to refute the Iewes, who did goe about to ſet him againſt God. Therefore he denyeth that he doth any thing according to the manner of men, becauſe he hath God to be his guide and gouernour, who dwelleth in him. VVe muſt alwayes remember this, that ſo often as Chriſt doth ſpeake of him ſelfe, he taketh only to himſelfe, that, which is proper to man: becauſe he hath reſpect vnto the Iewes who did falſly ſay that he was as one of the common ſort of men. In like ſort whatſoeuer is aboue man, that doeth he referre vnto the father. This worde iudge doth properly belong vnto the doctrine: yet doth it alſo appertaine vnto all the adminiſtration. As if he ſhould ſay that he hath the father to bee his authour in all thinges, that his will is vnto him as a rule: and that therefore hee is a reuenger.

And my iudgement is true. He concludeth that his woordes and deedes are not to be reprehended, becauſe he ſuffereth not himſelfe to doe any thing but that which his father commaundeth him. For that ought to be ſure and certaine without all controuerſie, that all that is right whatſoeuer doth ſpring and flow from God. This modeſtie ought to be the firſt maxima of godlineſſe amongeſt vs, ſo reuerently to thinke of the workes and worde of God, that the name of God only ought to be ſufficient to proue his iuſtice and righteouſneſſe: but there bee but a fewe founde who can be perſuaded that God is iuſt, vnleſſe they be compelled. I graunt that God doth ſhewe vnto vs his righteouſneſſe by experience: but to reſtraine the ſame vnto the ſenſe of our fleſh, ſo that we can think no otherwiſe of the ſame, then our wit doth tel vs, is too licentious impietie

Let this then bee a certaine and vndoubted conſequent, that that is right and true, whatſoeuer is of God, and that it cannot be but that god muſt be true in all his wordes, iuſt and righteous in all his workes. wee are alſo taught that this is the only way to doe well, to take nothing in hande vnleſſe God be our guide and helper. And if the whole worlde do ryſe againſt vs afterwarde, let this inuincible defenſe ſuffice vs, that he erreth not that followeth God. Becauſe I ſeeke not mine owne will. Chriſte doth not in this place ſet his owne will againſt his fathers will, as being contrarie things: but doth onely refute their vaine ſurmiſe who thoughr, that he was rather enforced with humane boldneſſe, thē gouerned with the authoritie of God. Therefore he denieth that he hath any deſire of his owne, and ſuch a deſire as is ſeparated from the commaundement of his father.

31 If I teſtifie of my ſelfe. Hee doth not in this place any whit diſcredit his owne teſtimonie, which in another place he ſtoutly defendeth, but it is a maner of graunting. For, becauſe Chriſte was ſufficiently inſtructed and furniſhed by another,hee paſſeth not for beeing beleeued himſelfe. If,(ſaith he) according to the common cuſtome of men, you beleeue not my witneſſe which I beare of my ſelfe,let it be ſo,let my teſtimonie be of no force. And we knowe that that is not accounted true and lawfull which euery man ſaith of himſelfe,although he doe otherwiſe ſpeake the truth : becauſe no man is a ſufficient witneſſe in his owne cauſe. And although it be vniuſt dealing that the ſonne of God ſhould be reckoned in this number of men,yet will he rather yeeld ſome part of his right,that he may ouercome his enemies with the authoritie of God.

33 You ſent vnto Iohn and he bare witneſſe of the truth.

34 But I receiue no witneſſe of man: but I ſpeake theſe thinges that you may bee ſaſe.

35 He was a burning and a ſhining light: and yee woulde reioyce for a time in his light.

36 But I haue a greater teſtimonie,then of Iohn: for the workes which the father hath giuen mee to doe,the ſame workes whiche I doe,doe teſtifie of mee, that the father hath ſent mee.

33 You ſent vnto Iohn. Before he vttereth the teſtimonie of God, hee vrgeth them with the anſwere of Iohn, which they coulde not iuſtly diſcredite or diſtruſt. For to what purpoſe ſerued it to ſende vnto him, vnleſſe they woulde ſtand to his wordes? For they doe ſende as vnto a Prophet of God : therefore they feigne that his voyce is vnto them in ſteed of an oracle. And although there is another conceſſion or graunt contained in this,yet Chriſt doth plainely caſt in their teeth,that it was nothing but malice that did hinder them and keepe them backe from beleeuing. Therefore we ſee that this circumſtance maketh much to the matter,that they ſent vnto Iohn,and did aske of him as beeing deſirous to learne,who was the Meſſias: and yet they ſet light by his anſwere.

34 I receiue not witnes from man. But God did not chooſe him in vaine to bee his witneſſe : and in another place, Acts 1.8. Chriſt himſelfe affirmeth that his diſciples are his witneſſes. I anſwere,that Chriſt vſeth the teſtimonie of Iohn,not that he needeth it,but ſo farre foorth as it is profitable for vs to haue ſome confirmation thereby. One man borroweth teſtimonie of another: becauſe they cannot want that help. The eſtate of God and Chriſt is otherwiſe. For if the Philoſophers do ſay, that vertue needeth not the helpe of another, what hath man in himſelfe,wherewith he can vnderprop the truth of God? And Chriſte addeth alſo immediately,that he vttered the teſtimonie of Iohn for theyr ſake. VVhereby he giueth them to vnderſtand that he hath not reſpect ſo much vnto himſelfe, as that hee prouided for men, whileſt that hee rayſeth vp preachers of his goſpell, by whom hee may make his will knowen vnto vs. VVherein his wonderfull goodneſſe doth alſo ſhine, whileſt that he doth applie all thinges vnto our ſaluation. VVherefore it ſtandeth vs vpon to endeuour that he may not take paines in vaine in ſauing vs.

35 He was a burning light. In that he calleth Iohn a burning light, it is a farther argument of their vnthankefulneſſe. For it followeth that they are blinde of their owne accorde, ſeeing the light of God was ſet vp before their eyes. Therfore the mening of the words is, god wold not haue you to erre: for hee appointed Iohn to bee a light that his brightneſſe might direct you. In aſmuch therefore as you do not acknowledge me to bee the ſonne of God, it commeth to paſſe through voluntarie error. There followeth another exprobration: that they did not only paſſe by the light which was offered thē, with ſhut eyes: but did alſo of set purpoſe abuſe it to oppreſſe Chriſt withall. For in that they were readie to extol Iohn aboue his iuſt degree, that did ariſe of a malicious & vnfaithfull purpoſe, leaſt there ſhould be any place left for the ſonne of God. Chriſte doeth very finely compare this wicked abuſe of the heauenly light vnto wantonneſſe: like as if the good man of the houſe ſhould ſet vp a candle in the night ſeaſon for his ſeruants, that they may doe that worke which he hath commaunded them to doe: and they doe tranſlate the vſe thereof vnto banquetting, and all maner of naughtineſſe. Furthermore, as in theſe wordes Chriſte doth accuſe the Iewes, ſo hee doth admoniſh vs all in general, that we doe not abuſe to wander hyther and thyther, the godly teachers whom God hath appointed to direct vs in the right way.

The experience of all times, teacheth how profitable this admonition is. God doth take men into his gouernment during the whole courſe of their life, euen vntil they come to the laſt marke, he ſendeth his prophets as gouernours. Such is the diſtemperature of men, that they had rather leape frowardly without going forward, then goe forwarde walking, ſuch is their inconſtancie and lightneſſe, that hauing deſpiſed and reiected the perpetuall direction, they are carryed vnto theyr ſodaine affections. Therefore ſaith he, for a time, or an houre: in which word hee toucheth their fooliſhnes, that they thought that the eternall light of god could be extinguiſhed with fraile and vaine frowardnes. So deale the Papiſtes at this day, how many godly teachers ſoeuer the Lord hath giuen to his Churche as burning lights, they draw them vnto a contrary vſe, as if they were determined to blinde their owne eyes with the beholding of the light. Neither doe they only abuſe the lightes to choake the light of God, but doe alſo triumphe oftentimes in darkneneſſe, as whenas they boaſt of the doliſh inuentions of their blabbes & brawlers, againſt the pure doctrine of the goſpel. But that which Chriſt doth in this place affirme of Iohn, Paul maketh common to all the faithfull, becauſe hauing the worde of life, they ought to ſhine in the worlde as lightes: but Chriſt teacheth that it belongeth properly vnto the apoſtles and miniſters of the goſpel, to carry the light before others. For ſeeing that we be all in darkneſſe being blinde, God doth giue vs light by the light of his worde. But in this place he doth peculiarly adorne Iohn with this title, by whoſe miniſterie God did more plentifully ſhine vnto his church.

Phil. 2. 15.

36 I haue a greater teſtimonie. After that he hath ſhewed that the Iewes had wickedly corrupted the gift of God in the perſon of Iohn, he doeth now the ſecond time repeat, that which he had ſaid, that he had no need of mans teſtimonie, as if he were not ſufficient of himſelfe. Although according to his cuſtome he reclaimeth them vnto the father, becauſe hee ſaw that they did deſpiſe him. For the workes which the father hath giuen mee. He bringeth foorth two thinges whereby he was proued to bee the ſon of god. The father, ſaith he, doth teſtifie by myracles that I am the ſonne of God: and before I came into the world he gaue me a ſufficient teſtimonie in the holy ſcriptures. Let vs alwayes remember his drift. He will be acknowledged to be the promiſed Meſſias, that hee may bee hearde. Therefore he doth now proue that he was ſuch a one indeed as ỳ ſcripture ſpeaketh of. The queſtion is, whether myracles bee ſufficient to proue that or no, ſeeing the Prophetes had wrought the like. I anſwere, that the ſignes which God ſhewed by the hands of the prophets, reached no farther then vnto the end for which they were appointed: namely, that they might ſhew that they were the miniſters of God, who coulde haue authoritie by no other meanes: but God meant more highly to extoll his ſonne. And this purpoſe of God is to bee accounted the ende of myracles. Therefore vnleſſe being poſſeſſed with wickednesſe, they had ſhut their eyes of their owne accord, Chriſt might haue made it plaine vnto them by the power of his ſignes, who and what a one hee was.

37 And the father that ſent me, he hath teſtified of me: neither did you euer heare his voyce, nor ſee his ſhape.

38 And you haue not his word abiding in you: becauſe you beleeue not him whom he ſent.

39 Search the ſcriptures, becauſe you thinke that in them you haue eternall life: and they are they that teſtifie of mee.

40 And you wil not come vnto mee, that you may haue life.

37 And he that ſent me. This is falſly reſtrained vnto the voyce heard in his baptiſme. For he ſaith in the Pretertence that his father hath teſtified, that he may giue them to vnderſtand that he commeth not abrode vnknowen, becauſe God had marked him long agoe in the lawe & the Prophetes, ſo that he brought with him his markes, wherby he might be knowen. Therefore I doe interprete it, that God did teſtifie of his ſonne, ſo often as he put the olde people in hope of ſaluation, or promiſed the perfect reſtoring of the kingdome of Iſrael. So that the Iewes ought to haue conceiued the forme and image of Chriſt out of the ſcriptures before he was manifeſted in the fleſh. In that they contemne him being preſent, & ſo conſequently doreiect him, they doe thereby declare ỳ they haue no taſt of the law: which thing Chriſt doth alſo caſt in their teeth. They did boaſt of the knowledge of the lawe as if they had byn brought vp in Gods boſome. Neither haue yee hearde his voyce. After that Chriſt hath cõplained that he is not receiued, he inueigheth ſorer againſt their blindneſſe. In that he ſaith, that they neuer heard the voyce of god, nor neuer ſaw his ſhape, they are meraphoricall ſpeeches. wherein he teacheth briefly that they were alyantes from the knowledge of God. For as men doe make knowen themſelues by their voyce & countenance: ſo God vttereth his voyce in the voyce of the Prophetes, & in the Sacramẽts he doth as it were put vpõ him a viſible forme, wherby he may be knowen, according to our ſlender capacitie But he that doth not know God in his liuely image, hee doth ſufficiently bewray by this, that hee worſſippeth no power, but that which he himſelfe hath framed. Therfore

13. fore Paule ſaith that there was a vaile put ouer their eyes, ſo that they cannot ſee the glory of God in the face of Chriſt.

38 And you haue not his worde. This is true profiting when the word of God taketh roote in vs, that beeing faſtened in our heartes, it may haue there a certaine ſeate. Chriſt ſaith that the heauenly doctrine hath no place amongeſt the Iewes, becauſe they receiue not the ſon of God, whom it ſetteth foorth euery where: and he caſteth this in their teeth worthily. For God ſpake not in vaine by Moſes and the Prophets. And it was the only drift and purpoſe of Moſes to call all men ſtraight vnto Chriſt, whereby it appeareth manifeſtly that they are not his diſciples who reiect Chriſte. Secondly, how ſhall hee haue the worde of life abiding in him, who driueth away the life it ſelfe? How ſhall hee vnderſtand the doctrine of the lawe who extinguiſheth ſo much as in him lyeth the ſoule of the lawe? For the lawe without Chriſt is vaine, neither hath it any ſubſtaunce. The nigher therefore euery man knoweth Chriſte, ſo much hath he profited in the worde of God.

39 Search the ſcriptures. VVhereas Chriſt had ſaid before, that he hath the father for a witneſſe in heauen, we haue ſaide that it is referred vnto Moſes and the Prophetes. Now followeth a more plaine expoſition: for he ſaith that that teſtimonie is extant in the ſcriptures. And he toucheth againe their vaine boaſting, in that they profeſſed that they haue life in the ſcriptures, when as they did only catch at the dead letter. Neither doth he abſolutely reprehende this that they ſeeke life in the ſcriptures (ſeeing that they are appointed vnto vs for that ende and vſe): but becauſe the Iewes did thinke that the Scriptures did quicken them, whenas they knewe not the true meaning thereof: yea ſeeing that they did choake the light of life, which is contained therein. For howe ſhall the lawe giue life without Chriſte, who doth only quicken the ſame? VVe are taught in this place, that we muſt fet the knowledge of Chriſt out of the Scriptures. For they which imagine of Chriſt, according to their owne pleaſure, ſhall at length haue nothing but a ſhadowiſh ghoſte in ſteede of him. Therefore we muſt firſt of al hold this, that Chriſte can be knowen aright by no other meanes ſaue only out of the ſcriptures. And if it be ſo, it followeth, that wee muſt reade the Scriptures to this end that we may finde Chriſte there. VVhoſoeuer ſhall miſſe this marke, howſoeuer he wearie himſelfe during his whole life with learning, hee ſhall neuer attaine vnto the knowledge of the truth, for what ſhal our wiſedome be without the wiſedome of God?

Furthermore, as we are commaunded to ſeeke Chriſte in the Scriptures, ſo he affirmeth in this place that our ſtudie ſhall not be voide. For the father doth in ſuch ſort teſtifie there of his ſonne, as he doth vndoutedly reueale him vnto vs. But this hindereth a great many, that they do only looke vpon them negligently, and ſuperficially as it were, running ouer them. But they had neede of great attentiueneſſe. Therfore Chriſt commandeth to ſearche this treaſure which is deeply hidden. VVherefore in that the Iewes doe ſo abhor Chriſt, it is to be imputed to theyr ſlugiſhneſſe, who haue the lawe dayly in their handes. For the euident brightneſſe of Gods glory ſhineth in Moſes: but they doe deſire a veile to couer the brightneſſe. It is wel knowen that the old teſtament is vnderſtoode by the worde ſcripture. For Chriſt began not to be firſt manifeſted fested in the Gospel: but hee of whome the lawe and the Prophetes bare witnesse, did openly shew himselfe in the gospel.

40 And yee will not. He doth againe cast in their teeth that nothing letted them but malice, to take the life offered in the scriptures. For when he saith that they will not, he ascribeth the cause of ignorance and blindnesse vnto frowardnesse and stubbornnesse. And truly seeing that he offered himselfe so courteously vnto them, they must needes be wilfully blinde. And sithence that they fled from the light of set purpose, yea seeing that they did couet to ouerwhelme the Sun with their darknes, Christ doth sharply chide them for good causes.

41 I receiue not glory from men.

42 But I knowe you that you haue not the loue of God in you.

43 I came in my fathers name, and you receiue me not: if another come in his owne name, him will yee receiue.

44 How can yee beleeue, who receiue glory one of another, and seeke not the glory that commeth of God alone?

45 Thinke not that I will accuse you vnto my father: there is one that accuseth you, Moses in whom you trust.

46 For if you did beleeue Moses, you woulde also beleeue mee: for hee writte of mee.

47 But if you beleeue not his writinges, how will you beleeue my wordes?

41 I receiue not glory from men. He holdeth on in reprehending them: and least he be suspected, as if he did handle his owne cause, he saith first to preuent them, that he passeth not for the glory of man, neither passeth he, neither is he sory for his owne sake, that he seeth himselfe to be despised. And truly he is greater then that he dependeth vpon mens iudgementes, seeing that the wickednesse of all the whole worlde can take nothing from him, nor diminisshe his highnesse one heyre. He standeth so vpon the refuting of the false slaunder, that he extolleth himself aboue men. After that he inueigheth freely against them, and obiecteth vnto them the contempt and hatred of God. And although wee bee far distant from Christ in the degree of honour, yet must we contemne the sinister iudgements of men. Truly we must take great heed that the cõtempt of our selues doe not prouoke vs vnto wrath: But let vs rather learne to be angrie for this cause, if the honour that is due vnto God be not giuen him. Let this holy iealousie burne and vexe vs, so often as wee see the worlde to be so vnthankfull that it doth reiect vs.

42 Because you haue not the loue of God. The loue of God is in this place taken for the whole sense of Godlinesse. For no man can loue God, but he must receiue him, and wholy submit himselfe vnto him, like as againe where the loue of God doth not reigne, there can be no desire to obey. For which cause Moses putteth downe this briefe some of the law, that we loue our God with all our hearte, &c. Deut. 6.5.

43 I came. Christ proueth by this argument that the Iewes do neither loue nor reuerence God, because they wil greedily receiue false prophetes, when as they refuse to submit themselues vnto God. For hee taketh this for a thing which all men do graunt, that this is a signe of a fro-froward and wicked minde, when men doe subscribe willingly vnto lyes, setting apart the truth. If any man doe obiect that this doth come to passe for the most part rather through errour then malice: wee may easily answere, that no man is subiect to the deceits of Satan, saue only so far foorth as he preferreth lyes before ỹ truth, through a certain peruers greedinesse. For how commeth it to passe that God speaketh to vs as vnto deafe men, and Satan findeth vs redie and willing to heare, saue only because being turned away from righteousnesse we desire vnrighteousnes of our owne accord? Although we must note that Christ speaketh properly of those, whom God hath illuminated peculiarly: as hee vouchsafed to graunt this priuiledge vnto the Iewes, that being instructed in his law, they might keepe the right way of saluation. It is certain that such do not giue eare to false teachers, vnlesse it be because they de-Deut.13.3 sire to be deceiued. Therfore Moses saith, when false prophetes arise, the people is tryed & examined by this meanes, whether they loue the Lord their God or no. There seemeth to be in many, innocent simplicitie: but without doubt it is hypocrisie that blindeth their eyes, which lurketh within in their minds. For it is certaine ỹ God doth neuer shut the gate against those who knocke, that they are neuer deceiued who seeke him

2.Th.2.10 sincerely. Therefore doth Paule truly ascribe this vnto the vengeance of God, when as the power of deluding is graunted to Satan, that they may beleeue lyes, who hauing reiected the truth did approue vnrighteousnesse: and he saith that those men doe perish, who haue not receiued the loue of the truth, that they might be saued. So at this day the dissimulatiõ of many is discouered, who being addicted vnto the Popes deceite and wicked superstition, do fret and fume against the Gospel with poysoned furie. For if they had their mindes framed vnto the feare of God, that feare should alsõ beget obedience. In the name of the father. The false prophetes do boast of this title as at this day the Pope doth with full mouth boast, that he is Christ his vicar. Yea, Satan hath deceiued miserable men vnder this colour alone since the beginning. But Christe doth in this place note out the thing it selfe and no colour. For he doth testifie that he came in the fathers name for this cause: because he is both sent of the father, and doth faithfully dispatch that which he was commanded to doe.

Furthermore, he distinguisheth by this marke the lawfull teachers of the church, from false and corrupt teachers. Therfore whosoeuer do extoll themselues, and doe arrogate vnto themselues authoritie of their owne ouer soules, this place teacheth that they are to be reiected without feare. For he that will be accounted the seruant of God must haue nothing that is separated from him. Now if wee examine all the Pope his doctrine, euen the verye blinde shall see that hee came in his owne name.

44 How can you? Because it might seeme to be an hard matter that those who had been the household schollers of the law and the prophets from their childhood, should be condemned of so grosse ignorance, and made the enemies of the truth, yea it might seeme to be an vncredible thing, Christ telleth them what it is that letteth them to beleeue: namely, because ambition did take away their soundnesse of minde. For he

ſpeaketh properly vnto the Prieſtes and Scribes, who were ſo puffed vp with pride, that they could not ſubmit themſelues vnto God. This is a moſt excellent place, which teacheth that ỹ gate of faith is ſhut againſt all thoſe, whoſe mindes are poſſeſſed with a vaine deſire of earthly glory. For he that will be ſome bodie in the worlde, muſt needes wander and vaniſh away, ſo that he cannot goe forward vnto God. A man doth then prepare himſelfe vnto the obedience of the heauenly doctrine when he thinketh that he ought to ſeeke this eſpecially during his whole life, that he approue him ſelfe vnto God. But that peruers confidence wherby hypocrites do extoll thēſelues before god, ſeemeth to be a greater let then is worldly ambition: and we knowe that the Scribes were ſore ſicke alſo of that diſeaſe. VVe may eaſily anſwere: for Chriſte his mening was to pluck from their faces the falſe viſour of holines wherwith they deceiued the ignorant people. Therefore he doth as it were with his finger poynt out the groſſer vice, whereby all men might perceiue that they were nothing leſſe then that which they woulde bee accounted to be. Againe, although hypocriſie do boaſt it ſelf againſt God: yet is it alwayes ambitious in the worlde and before men. Yea this is the only vanitie which puffeth vs vp, euen wicked confidence, whyleſt that wee ſtande rather to our owne and the iudgement of other men, then of God. For he that doth truly ſet God before him as a iudge, hee muſt needes fall downe flat, being diſcouraged and throwen downe. Therfore he that will ſeeke glory of God alone muſt needes being confounded with the ſhame of himſelfe, flie vnto his free mercie. And truly thoſe that haue reſpect vnto God, doe ſee themſelues to be condemned and loſt, and that there remaineth nothing whereof they may boaſt, beſides the grace of Chriſt: ſuch deſire of glory ſhall alwayes be ioyned with humilitie.

And as touching this preſent place, Chriſte giueth vs to vnderſtand that men are no otherwiſe prepared to receiue the doctrine of the Goſpel, ſaue only when as they turne all their ſenſes, * hauing drawen them from the world, vnto God alone, and doe earneſtly conſider that they haue to deale with him, that, forgetting the delights wherewithall they are wont to deceiue themſelues, they may diſcend into their owne conſciences. VVherefore it is no maruell if the Goſpel doe finde at this day but a few that are eaſie to be taught, ſeeing ambition carryeth all men hyther and thyther. It is no maruell alſo if many doe fall away from the profeſſion of the goſpel, for being carryed away with their owne vanitie they doe flie away. VVherefore wee ought the more earneſtly to ſeeke this one thing, that being contemptible, and as it were caſtawayes in the ſight of the worlde, and beeyng caſt downe in our ſelues, wee may be reckoned amongeſt the children of God.

45 Thinke not. VVe muſt take this order with the obſtinate and ſtubborne, when we ſee that they profite nothing by doctrine and friendlye admonitions to that we cite them to appeare before Gods iudgement ſeate. There are but a few that mocke God openly: but very manie doe careleſly mocke him with vaine flatterings whom they are ſet againſt as enemies, feigning that he is mercifull vnto them. So at this day our Gyants, who doe wickedly treade vnderfoote all the whole doctrine of Christ, doe yet notwithstanding waxe as proude as if they were Gods deare friendes. For who can perſuade the Papiſts that Chriſtianitie is any where els ſaue only amongeſt them? Such were the Scribes, with whom Chriſt diſputeth in this place. VVhereas they were great contemners o f the lawe, yet did they boaſt much of Moſes, ſo that they were not afraide to ſet him againſt Chriſt as a buckler. If he had threatned that he himſelfe would be vnto them an heauie and vntollerable aduerſarie, he knew that all this would haue been contemned: therefore he denounceth that there is an accuſation prepared for them by Moſes. They are deceiued who thinke that there is a difference ſet downe in this place betweene the office of Chriſt and of Moſes, becauſe it is the office of the law to accuſe the infidels. For Chriſt doth not reſpect that: but only that he might take from the hypocrites all confidence, who did falſly boaſt of the reuerence of Moſes. Like as if at this day any man ſhould obiect vnto the Papiſtes, that the holy teachers of the Church haue no more deadly enemies then they, whoſe title they do wickedly corrupt.

Furthermore, let vs learne hereby, that we muſt not boaſt of the ſcriptures in vaine, becauſe vnleſſe we worſhip the ſonne of God with ꝑ true obedience of faith, they ſhall riſe to accuſe vs at the laſt day, whome God rayſed vp to be witneſſes there. VVhenas he ſaith, that they hope in Moſes, he doth not accuſe thē of ſuperſtition, as if they did aſcribe the cauſe of their ſaluation vnto Moſes: but his meaning is that they did wickedly leane vnto Moſes his aid, as if they could haue him to be a patrone of their wicked ſtubbornneſſe.

46 For if ye did beleeue. He ſheweth why Moſes ſhalbe their accuſer, to wit, becauſe they refuſe his doctrine. And we know that there can no greater iniurie be done to the ſeruants of God, then when as their doctrine is deſpiſed or ſlandered. Secondly, thoſe whom the Lord hath made miniſters of his word, they muſt alſo be defenders of it. Therfore he gaue vnto all his prophets a double perſon, that they ſhould teach ꝑ godly vnto ſaluation, & that they ſhould at length thruſt thrugh the reprobate with their teſtimonie. VVheras Chriſt ſaith that Moſes writ of him it needeth no long proofe amongſt thoſe, who know that Chriſte is the end of the law, and the ſoule therof. But if any man being not contented therwith doth deſire to ſee the places, I counſel him firſt that he reade diligently the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, wherwith alſo Stephen his ſermon agreeth, in the 7. chap. of the Acts. Secondly, that he marke when Paule applieth teſtimonies vnto his purpoſe. I cōfeſſe in deed that ther are few places, wherin Moſes doth openly preach Chriſt, but to what end ſerued the Tabernacle, ſacrifices, & all ceremonies, ſaue only that they might be figures formed according to that firſt example, which was ſhewed him in the mount? Therefore without Chriſt all Moſes his miniſterie is in vain. Againe, we ſee how he doth continually call backe the people vnto the couenant of the fathers, which was eſtabliſhed in Chriſt: inſomuch ꝑ he maketh Chriſt ꝑ principall point & ground worke of the couenant. Neither was this vnknowen to the holy fathers, who had alwaies reſpect vnto the mediator. A longer treatiſe would not agree with the breuitie which I deſire.

47 For if you beleeue not his words. Chriſt ſeemeth in this place to make himhimſelfe to be of leſſe credite then Moſes: but we *know*e that heauen and earth was ſhaken with the voyce of the goſpel. But Chriſt fraineth his ſpeech vnto thoſe vnto whom he ſpeaketh. For without all doubt the authoritie of the lawe was holy amongeſt the Iewes: ſo that it coulde not bee but that Chriſt was inferiour vnto Moſes. Hereunto appertaineth the oppoſition of writinges and wordes. For he doth therby exaggerate their inſidelitie, that the truth of God being as it were written in tables, is yet of no credite amongeſt them.

Chap. 6

1 AFterwarde went Ieſus ouer the Sea of Galilee, which is called Tyberias.

2 And there followed him a great multitude, becauſe they ſawe his myracles, which hee did vpon thoſe that were diſeaſed.

3 And Ieſus went vp into the mountaine, and ſate their with his diſciples.

4 And Eaſter a feaſt day of the Iewes was neere.

5 Therefore when Ieſus had lift vp his eyes, and ſawe that a great multitude came vnto him, hee ſaieth vnto Phillip, VVhence ſhall wee bute bread, that theſe may eate?

6 (Furthermore, hee ſaide this trying him: for hee himſelfe knewe what hee would doe:)

7 Phillip anſwered him, two hundred pennie woorth of bread are not ſufficient for them, that euerie one of them may take a little.

8 One of his diſciples ſaid vnto him, Andrew Simon Peters brother, 9 Heere is a lad that hath fiue barly loues, and two little fiſhes, but what are theſe amongeſt ſo many?

10 And Ieſus ſaid, Make the men ſit downe. And there was much graſſe in that place. Therefore the men ſate down, in number about fiue thouſand.

11 And Ieſus tooke the loaues, and hauing giuen thankes, hee gaue to the diſciples: and the diſciples to them that were ſet down, and in like ſort of the fiſhes ſo much as they would.

12 And after they were ſatisfied, he ſaid vnto his diſciples: Gather the fragments which remaine, that nothing bee loſt.

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and they filled twelue baskets with the fragments, which remained of the fiue barly loaues, to thoſe that had eaten.

1 Afterward went Ieſus. VVheras Iohn is wont to gather the wordes and deedes of Chriſte which the other three had paſſed ouer: in this place he repeateth an hiſtorie of a myracle, which they had ſet downe, contrary to his cuſtome: but he doth this for a certaine purpoſe, that he may thence paſſe ouer vnto Chriſte his ſermon, which hee made the day following in Capernaum: becauſe they were matters which were ioyned together. VVherefore although the other haue this narration aſwel as he, yet hath it this peculiar thing, that it tendeth to another end as we ſhall ſee. Some ſay that this was done anone after the death of Iohn Baptiſt: by which circumſtance of time they note the cauſe of the departure of Chriſte. For ſo ſoone as tyrants haue their handes once imbrewed with blood, they waxe more cruell, euen as the diſtemperature of drinking, doth make drunkē men more thriſtie. Therfore Chriſt his meaning was to pacifie the furie of Herod with his abſence. Hee taketh the ſea of Galilee for the lake Geneſara. VVhen he ſaith that it was called Tyberias, he doth better expreſſe the place whyther Chriſte went. Neither was all the lake thus called, but only a part thereof which was neere to the banke, whereon Tyberias ſtood.

2 There followed him a great multitude, becauſe, Hereupon followed ſuch deſire to follow Chriſte, that ſo ſoone as they had ſeene his power in myracles, they were perſuaded that he was ſome great Prophet, and ſent of God. And here the Euangeliſt paſſeth ouer that whiche the other three recite, that a part of the day was ſpent in teaching and healing the ſicke, and that when it was now almoſt Sunne ſet, he was requeſted by his diſciples that he would ſend the people away. For it was ſufficient for him to gather the ſumme briefly, that vpon this occaſion he might leade and bring vs vnto the reſt of the text which ſhall follow afterwarde. And here we ſee firſt of al how deſirous the people was to heare Chriſt, that hauing all of them forgotten themſelues, they doe quietly waite for the night in a deſert place. VVherfore our dulnes, or rather ſluggiſhnes is ſo much the more vnexcuſeable, ſeeing that we are ſo far frō preferring the heauenly doctrine of Chriſt before the care of hunger, that euery little let doth call vs away from meditating vpon eternall life. Yea, it falleth out very ſeldome that Chriſte findeth vs free from the hinderaunces of the world, VVe are all of vs ſo far from following him into a deſert mountaine, that there is ſcarſe one amongſt ten ꝑ can afoord to receiue him at home amidſt all commodities. And although this bee a common diſeaſe throughout all the world, yet is it certaine that no man is apt for the kingdome of God, but he that can learne to deſire the foode of the ſoule more earneſtly, hauing ſhaken off ſuche daintines, then that his belly ſhalbe any let vnto him. And becauſe the fleſh doth alwayes pricke vs forward to ſeeke the commodities thereof, wee muſt alſo note this againe, that Chriſt doth willingly take care for thoſe, who neglect themſelues. Neither doth he wait and ſtay vntill ſuch time as being hungrie, they crie that they periſh through pouertie, and that they haue no meat: but he prepareth meate for them before he is requeſted. Some man will ſay that this is no continual thing, becauſe we do oftentimes ſee that the godly, whileſt that they are vtterly addicted vnto the kindome of God, do yet hunger, and almoſt pine away through hunger. I anſwer, that although Chriſt will proue our faith & pacience by this meanes, yet doth he behold from heauen our pouertie, and is carefull to help the ſame, ſo far foorth as is expedient for vs: and in that he helpeth not the ſame by & by: I anſwere, that he doth that for good cauſe though the ſame bee hidden from vs.

3 He went vp into a mountaine, VVithout doubt Chriſt ſought ſom ſecrete and by place vntill the feaſt day of Eaſter: therfore is it ſaid that he ſate downe in the mountaine with the diſciples. Hee tooke ſuch counſell according to man: but in the meane ſeaſon, the counſel of God was otherwiſe, which he did willingly obey. Although therfore he did eſchew the ſight of men: yet doth he ſuffer himſelfe to be brought foorth as it were into a moſt famous theater by the hand of God. For there was greater reſort in the deſart mountaine, then in ſome populous citie; his fame al-

ſo became greater by reaſon of the myracle, then if hee had ſtand in the midſt of the market of Tyberias, whertore we are taught by this exãple, ſo to take counſel concerning things preſent, that if ſo be it they fall out otherwiſe then we thought, we be not ſory that God is aboue vs, who can order all things by his will.

5 He ſaith vnto Phillip. The reſt ſay, that that which wee doe in this place reade to haue been ſpoken to Phillip alone, was ſpoken to them all: but in that there is no abſurditie. For it is likely that Phillip ſpake as all of them thought: therfore Chriſt anſwereth him peculiarly: Like as immediately after he bringeth in Andrewe ſpeaking, whereas the other doe aſſigne the ſpeech vnto them all together. He tryeth the diſciples in the perſon of Phillip whether they did looke for ſuch a myracle as was wrought by and by or no, when as he ſeeth that they conceiue nothing touching the extraordinarie remedie, thẽ he awaketh their minds being as it were faſt on ſleepe, that they might at leaſt haue their eyes open to behold the preſent thing. This is the drift of all thoſe thinges whiche the diſciples do bring, that they may diſwade Chriſt from keeping the people there any longer. And peraduenture they doe therein priuately prouide for themſelues, leaſt they ſuffer ſom part of the diſcommodity. Wherefore Chriſt holdeth on in his purpoſe neglecting their obiections.

7 Two hundreth peniworth of bread. Seeing that a pennie according to Budeus his account is worth foure pence ſterling, & two pence turnois, this amounteth vnto three pound ten ſhillinges ſterling. If you deuide this ſumme amongeſt fiue thouſand men, euery hundred ſhall haue ſeuenteene pence halfpenie. Now let a thouſand women and children be added vnto the fiue thouſand, you ſhall finde that Phillip giueth vnto euery head halfe a farthing, to buy a little bread with. But peraduenture he ſuppoſed, (which thing happeneth in a great companie) that they were moe. And ſeeing that the diſciples were poore, and not very full of money, Andrew meant to terrifie Chriſt with the greatneſſe of the ſumme: as if he ſhoulde ſay, that they had not ſufficient ritches to feede the people.

10 Make the men ſit downe. Although the dulneſſe of the diſciples was worthie to be reprehended, in ꝓ they were no ſoner lifted vp vnto hope, and that it came not into their mindes to attribute ſo much vnto his power as was meete, yet their readie obedience deſerueth no ſmall praiſe, in that they doe now obey his commandement, not knowing what hee meant to doe, and what ſucceſſe they ſhoulde haue in doing that which they doe. The like readineſſe was there in the people in obeying: for being vncertaine of the end, when they were commanded but with one word, they ſit downe. And this is the true tryall of faith, when as God commandeth men to walke as it were in darknes. To the end this may come to paſſe let vs learne not to bee wiſe in our owne conceite but in things confuſed notwithſtanding to looke for a proſperous euent, whẽ as we follow God as our guide, who doth neuer deceiue his.

11 Hauing giuen thankes. Chriſt hath taught vs not once only by his example, that we muſt begin with prayer ſo often as we touch meat. For what things ſoeuer God hath appointed for our vſe they doe inuite vs to prayſe him, as ſignes of his infinite goodneſſe and fatherly loue. And thanksgiuing(as Paule teacheth, 1. Tim. 4.4.)is a certain ſolemne ſanctification,that the vſe of thoſe thinges may begin to be pure. VVhereupon it followeth that they are ſacrilegious profaners of the giftes of God,who deuoure the ſame,neglecting God. This admonition is ſo much the more to be noted,becauſe we ſee a great part of the worlde gorge themſelues after a beaſtly manner. VVhereas he would haue the bread which was giuen to the Diſciples to encreaſe in theyr handes,we are hereby taught that when one of vs doth ſeeke anothers profite,the Lorde doth bleſſe our labours. Now may wee gather the ſumme of the whole myracle. And this is cõmon to it with the reſt,that in it Chriſt did ſhew his diuine power ioyned with liberalitie. It is alſo vnto vs a confirmation of that ſentence,wherein hee exhorteth vs firſt to ſeeke the kingdome of God,and promiſeth that all other things ſhall bee added. For if hee tooke care for thoſe who were brought vnto him only with a ſodaine force and motion,how ſhould hee be wanting vnto vs,if wee ſeeke him with a conſtant purpoſe of minde? He will firſt(as I haue ſaide)ſuffer his to be hungrie,yet will hee neuer ſuffer thẽ to be deſtitute of his ayde. In the meane while he hath good cauſes and reaſons why hee doth not helpe vs ſaue only in extremitie. Moreouer, Chriſt did declare,that he did not only giue the ſpirituall life vnto the worlde: but that hee was alſo appointed to nouriſh our bodies. For the aboundance of all good thinges is giuen into his hande,that he may powre out the ſame into vs like a water conduit. Although I doe call him a conduit vnproperly, ſeeing that hee is rather ỽ liuely fountaine, flowing out of the eternall father. Therefore Paule wiſheth vnto vs all good thinges, from him and from the father. And hee teacheth that wee muſt giue thankes to GOD the father through him in all thinges. Neither is this office proper to his eternall Diuinitie only, but the father hath alſo made him in the fleſh ſteward for vs, that by his hande he may feede vs. Although we doe not dayly ſee myracles, yet doth Chriſt no leſſe liberally ſhewe his power in feeding vs. And truly we doe not reade that hee vſed new and ſtrange meanes ſo often as he would giue his a ſupper. VVherefore it ſhalbe a prepoſterous petition,if any do deſire to haue meate giuen him after a ſtraunge maner.

Eph. 5.20.

Moreouer, Chriſt prepared no great dainties for the people: but they muſt be contented with barly bread and dry fiſh, who did openly ſee his wonderfull power in that ſupper. And although he doth not at this day fill fiue thouſande men with fiue loaues,yet doth he not ceaſe to feede the whole worlde myraculouſly, VVe count this a paradoxe and ſtrange thing,that man doth not liue by bread only, but by the woorde which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. For we are ſo tyed to the externall meanes,that there is nothing more harde then to depend vpon the prouidence of God. Hence commeth ſuch trembling when as we ſee that we haue not bread readie at hand. But if any man doe well conſider vpon all thinges: hee ſhall be compelled to ſee the bleſſing of God in al maner of food: but the myracles of nature do waxe vile amongſt vs through continuance. Neither are we ſo much letted in this point by dulneſſe,as by malicioufneſſe. For who is hee that had not rather compaſſe ỽ heauen & earth about with a wandering gadding of the mynd, & that an hundred times,then behold God offering him ſelf vnto him?

Deut. 8.3.

13 And they filled twelue baskets. Matthew writeth that whenas there were foure thousand men satisfied with seuen loaues, there remained as many baskets full as there were loaues. Therefore seeing that leſſe Mat. 15. 37 ſtore was in like ſort ſufficient for a greater number of men, and there remaineth almoſt twiſe as much, wee doe hereby more plainely ſee of what great force that bleſſing of God is, at the beholding whereof wee ſhut our eyes of our owne accorde. VVe muſt alſo note this by the way that although Chriſt doth command to fill the baskets that the myracle might be made more knowen : yet doth he exhort his Diſciples vnto thriftineſſe, when he ſaith: Gather yee, lette nothing be loſt. For the greater liberalitie of God ought not to prouoke vs vnto waſtfulneſſe. Therfore let thoſe who haue aboundance remember that they ſhal once giue an account of their immoderate ſtore, vnleſſe they do beſtow the ouerplus diligently and faithfully vpon good vſes and ſuche as God alloweth.

14 Therefore when thoſe men had ſeene the myracle, which Ieſus had wrought, they ſaid, truly this man is the Prophete, which ſhall come into the worlde.

15 Therefore when Ieſus knew, that they would come, and carry him away that they might make him a king, he departed againe into the mountaine alone.

16 And when it was euening, his diſciples went downe vnto the ſea.

17 And going into a ſhip, they came ouer the ſea into Capernaum, and it was nowe darke, and Ieſus came not vnto them.

18 And the ſea did ſwell with a great winde which did blow.

19 Therefore when as they were gone forwarde fiue and twentie furlonges, or thirtie, they ſee Ieſus walking vpon the ſea : and when he drew nigh vnto the ſhip they were afraide.

20 And hee ſaith vnto them, It is I, be not afraid.

21 Therefore they would haue receiued him into the ſhip: and by and by the ſhip arriued at the land whereunto they went.

14 Therefore when thoſe men, The myracle ſeemeth to haue ſome ſucceſſe, in that they doe acknowledge Chriſt to bee the Meſſias : for that was Chriſt his only drift : but they doe by and by turne that knoweledge which they had cõceaued cõcerning Chriſt, vnto another end. And this vice is ouer cõmon amongeſt men, to corrupt with their lyes, & ouerthrow gods truth, ſo ſone as he hath once reuealed himſelf vnto thẽ: yea when they ſeeme to bee entred into the right way, they do by and by degenerate from themſelues.

15 That they might make him a king. VVhereas thoſe men were determined to giue vnto Chriſt the title and honour of a king, that did procede from ſome reaſon : and in this point were they greatly deceiued, that they did take to themſelues libertie to make a king : for the Scripture ſaith, that this belongeth to God alone, as it is Pſal. 2. 6. I haue ſet my king, &c. Secondly, of what ſort do they faine his kingdom to be? namely, an earthly kingdome which is altogether contrarie to his perſon. Let vs hereby learne how dangerous a thing it is, to inuent any thing according to our own reaſon, in matters appertaining vnto God, forſakyng the worde of God. For there is nothing which the froward quickneſſe of our wit cannot corrupt. And what doth the colour of zeale helpe

when as we are more contumelious againſt God through our diſorde-red worſhippe, then if any man ſhoulde impugne his glory of ſet purpoſe? VVe know how furious the endeuours of the enemies were to extinguiſh Chriſtes glory. That was the extreameſt violence when he was nayled vpon the croſſe. But by this meanes both ſaluation was obtained for the world, and Chriſt himſelfe triumphed glorioufly ouer death & Satã. If he had now ſuffered himſelf to be made a king, he had quite ouerthrowē his ſpirituall kingdome: the goſpel had bin eternally ſlaundered, the hope of ſaluation had been quite extinguiſhed. This is the ſucceſſe which feigned worſhippinges and honours raſhly inuented by men, haue, that they doe onely diſhonour God, hauing ſpoyled him of his true honour. VVe muſt alſo note the worde, carry away. For they would carry away Chriſte, ſaith the Euangeliſt, that is, they woulde violently make him a king, although it were againſt his will. VVherfore if we be deſirous to haue that honor which we giue vnto him to be approued of him, we muſt alwayes regard what he requireth. And truly thoſe who thruſt vpon God honours inuented by themſelues, they doe him iniurie after a ſort, ſeeing that obedience is the foundation of the true worſhip. Furthermore, we doe hereby learne, how reuerently we muſt remaine in the pure and ſimple worde of GOD: becauſe ſo ſone as we turne aſide but a little, the truth is infected with our leauens ſo that it is nowe made vnlike to it ſelfe. They had out of the worde of God, that the promiſed redeemer ſhould be a king: but they inuent of their owne head an earthly kingdome, and they giue him a kingdome contrary to the worde of God. So, ſo often as we doe mixe our opinions with the worde of God, faith doth degenerate into friuoulous coniectures. Therefore let the faithfull accuſtome themſelues vnto modeſtie, leaſt Satan carry them away into a peruers feruentneſſe of zeale, ſo that they doe violently runne vpon God, like Gyants, who is then worſhipped aright, when as we imbrace him offering himſelfe vnto vs. And it is a wonder, that there was ſuch headlong boldneſſe in fiue thouſand men, that they were not afraide leaſt they ſhould prouoke the weapons of Pilate & of the Empire of Rome againſt thē by creating a new king. It is certaine that they would neuer haue gone ſo farre, vnleſſe truſting to the Oracles of the Prophetes, they had hoped that God was on their ſide, and that by that meanes they ſhould haue the vpper hande. But in the meane ſeaſon they doe erre, in feigning a kingdome, which the prophetes did no where commend. Therfore they are ſo farre from hauing God to further theſe their indeuours, that Chriſt doth rather withdraw himſelfe, The ſame thing cauſed miſerable men to wander ſo longe in darkneſſe in tyme of Papiſtrie, as if God had been abſent: becauſe they were ſo bolde as to pollute all his worſhippe with theyr inuentions.

16 His Diſciples went downe. It is queſtionles that Chriſte meant to ſtay out of ſight, vntill ſuche time as the companie was gone. VVee know how hard a matter it is to ſtay the vprores of the people, but & if that had beene openly aſſayed which they had conceiued in theyr mindes, the rumour had ben ſpread abroad by and by. And then afterward it had not been ſo eaſie a matter to haue wiped away the blot. In the meane ſeaſon he employeth all the time in prayer, as the other Euangeuangeliſtes doe report: peraduenture that God the father woulde redreſſe that diſtemperature of the people. In that he goeth ouer the lake myraculouſly, this is profitable for the Diſciples, to confirme their faith againe. And the fruite ſpreadeth farther, becauſe all the people mighte eaſily gather, that he came thither, by his owne power, and not in anye ſhip. For they did beſet the banke, from which hee muſt of neceſſitie launch: and they could ſcarſe haue been pulled away from thence, vnleſſe they had ſeene the diſciples goe another way.

17 It was now darke. Iohn paſſeth ouer many circumſtances, whiche the other put in, as is that, that they had ſtriuen certaine houres with a contrarie winde. For it is likely that after the firſt darknes of the night began, there aroſe ſome tempeſt. And they ſay that Chriſt appeared to the Diſciples in the fourth watch. They who geſſe, that they were yet in the middeſt of the lake when Chriſte appeared vnto them (becauſe Iohn ſaith that they were gone fiue and twentie, or thirtie furlongs) are deceiued in that, becauſe they think that they ſayled croſſe vnto the further banke. For Bethſaida nigh wherunto, as Luke doth teſtifie, the myracle was wrought, and Capernaum, where the ſhip arriued, were placed both on one ſide. Plinie in his fift booke ſaith, that this lake was ſix myles broade, & ſixteene long. Ioſephus in his third booke of ♀ warres of the Iewes, ſaith, that it was an hundreth furlonges long, and fortie furlongs broade.

Furthermore, foraſmuch as eight furlonges do make a myle, we may eaſily gather hence, how muchthe one doth diſagree frō the other. howſoeuer it be, the Euangeliſt his drift was to teach that they were in great danger when Chriſt ſhewed himſelfe vnto them. It may ſeeme to bee an abſurd thing that Chriſt his diſciples are ſo troubled, when as others do ſayle quietly. But the Lorde doth thus exerciſe his children oftentimes with great daungers, that they may more freely and familiarly know him in the deliuerance.

19 They were afraid. The other Euangeliſtes do expreſſe the cauſe of their feare, becauſe they thought it had been a ſpirite. And it cannot be but that we ſhalbe caſt downe and afraid when we ſee any ſpirite: becauſe we thinke that either Satan doth delude vs, or God doth foreſhew ſome thing. But Iohn doth in this place as in a glaſſe ſet before our eies, what knowledge we can haue of Chriſte without the worde, & what hee bringeth. For if he ſhewe a bare token of his diuinitie we doe by and by fall away vnto our inuentions, and euery man forgeth to himſelf an Idoll inſteede of Chriſte: after the errours of the minde, followeth trembling, and confuſed feare of the minde: but ſo ſoone as he beginneth to ſpeak, we do both by his voyce gather euident & ſound knowledge, and alſo there ſhineth in our myndes ioy and gladſome peace. For there is in theſe wordes great weight. It is I, be not afraide. For wee are hereby taught, that wee haue large matter of confidence in the preſence of Chriſt, alone, ſo that we may bee quiet and voide of care. But this appertaineth only vnto Chriſt his diſciples: for we ſhal ſee afterward that the wicked were throwen down with the ſame voice. The cauſe of the difference is, becauſe he was ſent to be a iudge vnto deſtructiō to the reprobate and vnbeleeuers: wherefore they cannot abide to behold him, but they are by and by ſwallowed vp. Ioh. 18.6

But the godly who doe acknowledge that he was giuen to be their mediatour, ſo ſoone as they heare him once named, which thing is to them a certaine pledge both of Gods loue & their owne ſaluation, they pluck vp their heartes as being rayſed from death to life, and behold him ioyfully as the cleare heauen, they ſit quietly vpon the earth: and hauing the vpper hande of all euils, they ſet his aide againſt all dangers. Hee doth not only comfort them with his worde, and lift them vp: but hee doth alſo in very deede take from them feare, by ſtaying the tempeſt.

22 The day following, the multitude which ſtoode beyonde the Sea, when as they ſaw that there was no other ship there, ſaue that whereinto his diſciples went: and that Ieſus came not with his Diſciples into the Sea: but that the Diſciples wente awaye alone:

23 Furthermore, other ships came from Tyberias nigh to the place where they eat the bread, after that the Lorde had giuen thankes, 24 Therefore when the multitude ſawe that Ieſus was not there, neither his diſciples, they went vp alſo into ships, & came to Capernaum, ſeeking Ieſus.

25 And when they had found him beyond the Sea, they ſaid vnto him, Maſter, when cameſt thou hyther?

22 The day following. Here the Euangeliſt reciteth the circumſtances wherby the multitude might gather, that Chriſt his paſſage was diuine. There was but one ſhip, they ſaw that launche without Chriſt: the day following there came ſhips from another place, wherein they are carried to Capernaum: there found they Chriſte, therefore it remaineth that he came thyther myraculouſly. There is in the wordes ſmall conſequence: yet notwithſtanding, the ſenſe is plaine enough. For in the former member, Iohn ſaith, that there was but one ſhip, that the ſame went from the banke in preſence of them all, and that it had not Chriſt in it: afterward he addeth, that there came ſhips from Tyberias, wherein the multitude came, which ſate vpon the banke, as beſetting all landing places, leaſt Chriſte ſhoulde eſcape them.

23 Nigh to the place where they did eate bread. The meaning of the words is doubtfull: for they may be expounded thus, either that Tyberias was nigh to the place where they were filled by Chriſte, with fiue loaues, or that the ſhips arriued at the bank which was nigh to the place. I do better like of this latter expoſition. For Bethſaida nigh whereunto, as Luke expreſſeth, the myracle was wrought, is the midway betweene Tyberias and Capernaum. Therefore when as theſe ſhips came downe frō the vpper place, they ſayled along by that banke vpon which the multitudes ſtoode, and it is not to bee doubted, but that they arriued to take in paſſingers. VVhen as Iohn ſaith againe, that Chriſte gaue thankes, it is no ſuperfluous repetition. For his meaning is, that Chriſt did obtaine by prayer, that thoſe few loaues might be ſufficient to feede ſo manye men withall, and becauſe wee are colde, ſlouthful, and ſlow to prayer, therefore he beateth in one thing twiſe.

25 Ouer the Sea. VVe ſaid before, that the Citie Capernaum was not ſituate on the other banke. For Tyberias ſtandeth in that parte of the lake where it is the brodeſt: and Bethſaida foloweth afterward: Capernaum lyeth at the neathermoſt part not farre from the going out of Iordan. And whereas Iohn placeth it beyond the lake, it muſt not be ſo vnderſtoode, as if the region were directly placed againſt it: but becauſe the lake was croked in that neathermoſt part, and by reaſon of the creeke that went betweene, they could not iourney without going farre about. Therfore the Euangeliſt ſaith, beyond the ſea after the common cuſtome: Becauſe they had no ſtreight paſſage vnleſſe they went by water.

26 Ieſus anſwered them and ſaid, verily, verily, I ſay vnto you, yee ſeek me, not becauſe you haue ſeen the ſignes, but becauſe you haue eaten of the loaues and are filled.

27 Labour for the meate, not which perisheth: but for the meate which remaineth vnto eternall life, which the ſonne of man will giue you: for him hath God the father ſealed.

28 Therfore they ſaide vnto him, what ſhall we doe, that we may worke the works of God?

29 Ieſus anſwered and ſaid vnto them, this is the worke of God, that you beleeue in him, whom he hath ſent.

26 Ieſus anſwered them. Chriſt doth not anſwer to their queſtion, that he may ſet foorth vnto them his power in the myracle, but doeth rather chide them; for that they runne headlong without hauing any conſideration at all. For they had no true and lawfull reaſon to render, why they did ſo: becauſe they ſought in Chriſt another thing then Chriſte himſelfe. Therefore this fault is noted in them, that they ſeeke Chriſte for their bellies ſake, and not becauſe of the myracles. And yet it cannot be denyed, but that they had reſpect vnto the myracle. Yea the Euangeliſt ſaide before, that they were mooued with the myracles to followe Chriſt: but becauſe they did abuſe the myracles vnto a ſtraunge end, he doth worthily caſt in their teeth, that they haue greater reſpect vnto their bellie, then vnto the myracles: as if he ſhould ſay, that they did not goe forward in the workes of God as they ought. For this had beene true profiting, ſo to haue acknowledged Chriſte to bee the Meſſias, that they ſhould haue giuen themſelues to be taught and gouerned by him, and to haue gone toward the heauenly kingdome of GOD he beeing their guide. But they looke for no more at his hands, but to bee well in this world.

Furthermore, this is to ſpoyle Chriſte of his principall power. For he was giuen of the father for this cauſe, and he reuealed himſelfe vnto mē for this cauſe, that he may reforme thoſe who were endowed with the holy ghoſt according to the Image of God, that he may leade them into euerlaſting life, being clothed with his righteouſnes. Therfore it skilleth much what we reſpect in Chriſt his myracles. For he ꝑ doth not deſire to attaine vnto the kingdome of God, but ſticketh faſt in the commodities of this preſent life, he ſeeketh no other thing but to fill his bellie. Like as at this day many would gladly embrace the Goſpel, if beeing voide of the bitternes of the croſſe it did only bring with it the delights of the fleſh. Yea we ſee many offer themſelues to ſerue Chriſt, that they may liue more merily and freely. Some for hope of gain, ſome for feare, ſome for their ſakes whome they will pleaſe, doe profeſſe themſelues ſelues to be Chriſt his diſciples. Therefore this is the chiefeſt thyng in the ſeeking of Chriſt, that contemning the worlde we ſeeke the kingdome of God and the righteouſneſſe thereof. But becauſe men are well perſuaded of themſelues, and do aſſure themſelues that they ſeek Chriſt very well, when as they corrupt his whole power: Chriſt after his accuſtomed manner doth double the word vertlie, as if hee would by an oathe bring to light the vice which lyeth hid vnder our hypocriſie.

27 VVorke. He teacheth whereunto he would haue his wholie bent: namely, vnto eternall life: but becauſe by reaſon of the groſſenes of nature, we are alwayes addicted vnto earthly thinges, therefore he doth firſt correct that diſeaſe which is ingendered in vs, before he ſheweth what we muſt doe. This doctrine had been ſimple and plaine, labour for the incorruptible meate: but becauſe he knew that mens ſenſes are tyed vnto earthly cares, he doth firſt of all commaund them to acquit themſelues of theſe ſnares, that they may ariſe vp into heauen: not that he forbiddeth thoſe that be his to labour, that they may get themſelues dayly foode: but he telleth them that they muſt preferre the heauenly liſe before the earthly, becauſe this is the only cauſe of liuing to the godly, that being as ſtrangers in the world they may make haſt into the heauenly countrie. Secondly, wee muſt marke the drift of this place. becauſe they do corrupt the power of Chriſt, who are addicted to their belly and earthly thinges: hee ſheweth what we ought to ſeeke in hym and for what cauſe we ought to ſeeke him. And he vſeth ſuch metaphors as are agreeable vnto the circumſtance of the communication. If there had been no mention made of meate, he might haue ſaid without vſing any figure, it behoueth you ſetting aſide the care of the worlde, to ſtriue to attaine vnto the heauenly life: but becauſe they run to meate like beaſtes, Chriſt frameth his ſpeech metaphorically, and calleth all that meate, whatſoeuer doth appertaine vnto newnes of life. VVe know that our ſoules are fed with the doctrine of the Goſpel, whileſt that it worketh effectually in vs through the power of the ſpirite. Therefore ſeeing that faith is the life of the ſoule, what things ſoeuer do nouriſh & further faith, they are compared to meate. Hee calleth this kinde of meate vncorruptible, and he ſaith that it remaineth vnto eternall life, that we may know that our ſoules are not fed for a day: but that they are brought vp vnto the hope of bleſſed immortalitie: becauſe the Lord beginneth the worke of our ſaluation, that he may finiſh it vntyll the day of Chriſt. Therefore it is meet that we receiue the giftes of the ſpirite, that they may be to kens and pledges of eternall life. For although the reprobate doe oftentimes refuſe this meate hauing taſted thereof, ſo that it doth not remaine in them: yet doe the faithfull perceiue this force of the ſoule abiding, when as they do perceiue that force of the ſpirite, which is neuer fraile in his giftes, yea which neuer falleth away. Their reaſon is friuolous, who gather out of the word worke, that we doe merite euerlaſting life by workes. For Chriſt (as we haue ſaid) doth figuratiuely exhort men, to applie their ſtudies vnto the meditating vpon the heauenly life, whereas they are wont otherwiſe to bee ſet wholy vpon the worlde. And Chriſt remoueth all doubt, when he ſaith, that he giueth this meate. For no man doth obtain that by his own induſtrie, which he hath of his gifte. There is ſome ſhew of contrarietie in theſe words: yet theſe two things do eaſily agree together, that the ſpirituall meat of the ſoule is the free gift of Chriſt, and that it ſtandeth vs vpon to endeuour to be made partakers of this ſo great a good thing.

For him hath God the father ſealed. He confirmeth the ſentence next going before, becauſe he is appointed by his father to this end. The old writers did falily wreſt this place vnto the diuine eſſence of Chriſt, as if he were ſaid to be ſealed, becauſe he is the print, and expreſſe image of the father. For he doth not intreat in this place ſubtilly of his eternall eſſence: but what is commanded and inioyned him, what is his office, and furthermore, what we muſt hope for at his hands. Furthermore, the fit metaphor alludeth vnto the auncient cuſtome, for they ſealed that with ringes which they would eſtabliſh with thier authoritie. So Chriſt, that he may not ſeem to take any thing to himſelfe, affirmeth that this office was laide vpon him by his father, and that this decree of his father was reuealed as it were with a grauen ſeale. The ſumme is, ſeeing that it is not euerie mans office to feed ꝑ ſoules with vncorruptible meat, Chriſt commeth foorth. & promiſing himſelfe to be the authour of ſo great a good thing, he addeth moreouer, that he is approued of God, & that he was ſent vnto men with this marke of the ſeale. Hereupon it foloweth, that their ſtudie ſhall not be voyd, who ſhall offer their ſoules to Chriſte to be ſead. Let vs know therefore that we haue life offered vs in Chriſt ſo that euerie one of vs may looke to attaine vnto ꝑ ſame not at al aduẽtures. but being ſure to haue ſucceſſe. Notwithſtãding we are alſo taught that they are giltie of falſhood & theft before God, whoſoeuer do attribute this praiſe vnto any other ſaue only vnto Chriſt. VVhereby it appeareth that the papiſts are falſe forgers in all pointes of their doctrine. For whoſoeuer do put in Chriſt his place the meanes of ſaluation, ſo often do they mar this ſeale of God, which is only authentical, as it were blotting the ſame, & that with their wicked boldnes. & vnſpeakeable falſhood. And leaſt ꝑ we do fal into ꝑ ſame horrible giltineſſe, let vs learn to reſerue all that perfect & vntouched, to Chriſt, which is giuẽ him of his father.

28 VVhat ſhall we do then that &c. The multitude vnderſtood well enough that Chriſt exhorted them to ſtriue to go higher then vnto the cõmodities of this life: & that they muſt not be occupied in the earth whõ god calleth vnto another place. They who aſke this queſtiõ are in ſom point deceiued, becauſe they know not the way how to labor. For they do not think that God doth giue vs by the hand of his ſonn whatſoeuer is neceſſary vnto the ſpirituall life. Firſt they demaund what they muſt doe afterward, when they name the works of God, they wander without a mark, ſo that they bewray that they know not the grace of God. Although they ſeem here proudly to murmur againſt Chriſt, as if he did reprehend them vndeſeruedly: as if they ſhould ſay, doeſt thou think that we haue no care of eternall life? what then doeſt thou commaund vs to do more then we do? Vnderſtand by the works of God, thoſe workes which hee requireth, and which he alloweth.

29 This is the worke of God. They ſpake of workes, Chriſte reclaimeth thẽ vnto one work alone: namely, vnto faith. VVhereby he giueth vs to vnderſtand, that al that is vaine, whatſoeuer men do goe about without faith, and that faith alone is ſufficient: becauſe GOD requyreth this one thing of vs, that we beleeue. For here is a certaine ſecrete oppoſition betweeene faith and mens ſtudies and indeuours. As if hee ſhould haue ſaide, mens indeuours are in vaine when as they go about to pleaſe god without faith, as if running out of the way they did not goe towarde the marke. Therefore it is an excellent place, that how much ſoeuer mē doe miſerablie wearie themſelues during their whole life: yet all theyr labour, is in vaine vnleſſe faith be vnto them a rule of liuing. They which gather out of this place, that faith is the gift of God, they are deceiued: for Chriſt doth not teach what God worketh in vs, but what he requireth, and will haue. Notwithſtanding that ſeemeth to bee an abſurd thing, that God ſhould allow nothing ſaue faith alone: for loue muſt not be contemned, neither doe other offices of godlines looſe their place and honor. Therfore howſoeuer faith be the chief, yet other works are not ſuperfluous. VVe may eaſily anſwere, for faith doth not exclude either loue, or any other good worke: ſeeing that it comprehendeth thē all in it. For faith is called the only worke of God, becauſe wee poſſeſſe Chriſt by it, and are made the children of God, that he may gouerne vs by his ſpirite. Therefore becauſe Chriſt doth not ſeparate from faith the fruites thereof, it is no maruell, if (as they ſay) he place the head & helme therein. VVe haue ſaid in the third chapter what the worde beleeue doth ſignifie. VVe muſt alwayes remember this, that we may know the force of faith: that we muſt define what Chriſt is in whom wee beleeue, and why he is giuen vs of the father. Theſe mens cauill is rotten & nought worth, who vnder colour of this place doe hold that we are iuſtified by workes, if faith doe iuſtifie, ſeeing that it is called the firſt and principal worke. It is manifeſt enough that Chriſte ſpeaketh vnproperly when he calleth faith a worke: as when Paule compareth the law of faith & the law of workes together. Secondly, whenas we ſay that men are not iuſtified by workes, we vnderſtand thoſe workes, by the merite whereof men do purchaſe fauour with God. But faith bringeth nothing vnto God, but doth rather preſent man emptie and poore before God, that he may be filled with Chriſt and his grace. VVherefore it is a paſſiue worke (that I may ſo call it) whereunto no reward can be repaied: neither doth it giue vnto man any other righteouſneſſe, ſaue that which it receiueth of Chriſte.

30 Therfore they ſaid vnto him, what ſigne doeſt thou, that we may ſee, and beleeue thee? what workeſt thou?

31 Our fathers eate Manna in the wilderneſſe, as it is written, he gaue thē the bread of heauen ta eate.

32 Therefore Ieſus ſaid vnto them, verily, verilie, I ſay vnto you, Moſes gaue you not the bread from heauen, but my father giueth you the true bread from heauen.

33 For this is the bread of God, which came downe from heauen and giueth life to the worlde.

30 VVhat ſigne doeſt thou? This wickednesſe doth ſufficiently teſtifie how true that ſaying of Matthew is, This wicked generation ſeeketh a ſigne. They were drawē before the admiratiō of the myracles vnto Chriſt, being made aſtonied with a new myracle againe: they confeſſed Chriſt to be the Meſſias, & becauſe of this hope they would haue made him a king: Now they require a ſigne of him as if they had neuer knowē him. Mat. 12. 39.

VVhence

VVhence was this ſo ſodaine forgetfulneſſe, ſaue only becauſe being vnthankefull to God, they are maliciouſly blinde when as they behold his power? And without doubt they doe loath all the myracles which they ſaw hytherto, becauſe Chriſt did not graunt their requeſts, and becauſe they do not finde him ſuch a one, as they feigned to themſelues. If they had ſeen any hope of earthly felicite, they would cõtinually haue praiſed him: without doubt they would haue called him a Prophet, the Meſſias, and the ſonne of God. Now becauſe he doth chide them, becauſe they were too much giuen to the fleſh, they think that they ought not to hear him any more. And at this day there be many like vnto them. For at the beginning becauſe they perſwade themſelues that Chriſte will beare with their vices, they do greedily ſnatch at his Goſpell, they deſire no proofe therof: but when as they are called vnto the deniall of the fleſhe, and the bearing of the croſſe, then they begin to diſtruſt Chriſte: they demaunded whence the Goſpel came. Finally, Chriſte ſhall bee theyr maſter no longer, when as hee once is not anſwerable to their deſire.

31 Our fathers. Therfore Chriſt rubbed them on the gall, when as he ſaid that they came like bruite beaſtes to fill their bellies: for they doe bewray this groſſe affection when as they deſire to haue ſuch a Meſſias as will feede them. And whereas they doe highly extoll the grace of God in Manna, they doe it craftile that by that meanes, they may ſuppreſſe the doctrine of Chriſte, wherein he did condemne the immoderate deſire of the corruptible meate. For on the the other ſide they ſet againſt it the gorgeous title wherewith Manna is adorned, when as it is called the heauenly bread. But the ſpirite doth not therefore call Manna honourable the bread of heauen, to this end, as if God in feeding his people as an heard of ſwine, did giue them no more excellent thing. Therfore they haue no excuſe, when as they doe nowe wickedly refuſe the ſpirituall food of the ſoule which is now offered vnto them.

32 Verily, verily I ſay vnto you. Chriſt ſeemeth to denie that which was cited out of the Pſalme: yet doth hee ſpeake only by way of compariſon. Manna is called the bread of heauen, but for nouriſhing the bodie, but that is counted truly and properly the heauenly bread, which is the ſpirituall food of the ſoule. Therefore in this place he ſetteth the worlde againſt heauẽ, becauſe the vncorruptible life is only to be ſought in the kingdome of God. The truth is not ſet againſt figures in this place, as oftentimes els where: but Chriſt reſpecteth what is the true life of man: namely, whereby he differeth from bruite beaſtes, and whereby he excelleth all creatures. VVhen he addeth afterward, My father giueth you, it is as much as if he ſhould haue ſaid, the Manna whiche Moſes gaue vnto your fathers, brought not the heauenly life: but now is ꝑ heauẽly bread indeed offred you. He calleth the father ꝑ giuer of this bread: but his meaning is, that it is giuen by his hande. So that the oppoſition is, not referred vnto God & Moſes, but vnto Chriſt & Moſes. And Chriſt doth rather make the father the giuer of this gift, then himſelfe, that he may purchaſe more reuerence, as if he ſhould ſay, acknowledge me to be the miniſter of God, by whoſe hand hee will feede your ſoules vnto eternall life.

Againe this ſeemeth but a little to agree with Paule his doctryne.

1.Cor.10.3 For Paule calleth Man the ſpirituall meate, I anſwere, that Chriſt ſpeaketh according to their capacitie, with whom he hath to doe, neither is this any ſtrange thing in the ſcripture. VVe ſee how Paule himſelfe diſputeth diuerſly concerning circumciſion. VVhen he intreateth of the inſtitution, he confeſſeth that it was the ſeale of faith: whileſt that hee contendeth with the falſe Apoſtles, he maketh it rather the ſeale of the curſe, and that according to their meaning. Let vs conſider what was obiected to Chriſte: namely that hee is not proued to bee the Meſſias, vnleſſe he giue vnto thoſe that be his bodily foode. Therfore he declareth not what thing Man did prefigure, but ſaith plainely that that was not the true bread wherewith Moſes fead their bellies.

33 For this is the bread of God, Chriſt reaſoneth from the definition vnto the thing defined negatiuely, on this wiſe: that is the heauenly bread, which came downe from heauen to giue life vnto the world: there was no ſuch thing in Man: therefore it was not the heauenly bread. And in the meane while hee confirmeth that which he ſaid before: namely, that he was ſent of the father, ỹ he might feed men far more excellently then did Moſes. Man truly came downe from ỹ viſible heauen (that is frō the cloudes): but not from the euerlaſting kingdome of God, from whence life floweth vnto vs. But the Iewes vnto whom Chriſt ſpeaketh did looke vnto no higher thing, ſaue that their fathers bellies were wel filled and ſtuffed in the deſert. Hee calleth that the bread of God now, which he called before the bread of heauen: not that the bread wherewith we are fedde in this life commeth from any other ſaue only from God: but becauſe that is counted the bread of God which quickeneth the ſoules vnto bleſſed immortalitie. This place teacheth that all the worlde is dead to God, ſaue only in aſmuch as Chriſte doth quicken it: becauſe life ſhall bee found no where els ſaue only in him. In the comming downe from heauen we muſt note two thinges: namely, that in Chriſt we haue a diuine life: becauſe he came frō God, that he might be vnto vs the authour of life: & ſecondly, that life is neere vnto vs, ſo that wee neede not to flie vppe aboue the clowdes, or ſayle ouer the Sea. For Chriſt came downe vnto vs for that cauſe, becauſe no man coulde goe vp.

35 Ieſus ſaid vnto them, I am the bread of life: he that commeth vnto me ſhall not be an hungred: and he that beleeueth in me ſhall neuer thirſt.

36 But I haue ſaide vnto you, that you haue alſo ſeene mee, and you beleeue not.

37 VVhatſoeuer the father giueth me, it ſhall come vnto me: and him that commeth vnto me will I not caſt out.

38 Becauſe I came downe from heauen, not that I might do my will, but his will that ſent me.

39 And this is his will that ſent me, of the father: that whatſoeuer hee hath giuen me, I ſhould not looſe of it, but ſhoulde raiſe it vp in the laſt day.

40 And this is his will that ſent mee: that whoſoeuer ſeeth the ſonne, and beleeueth in him, he may haue eternall life: and I will rayſe him vp in the laſt day.

34 Alway giue vs. Vndoubtedly they ſpeake tauntingly, that they may may accuſe Chriſte of vanitie,becauſe hee doth boaſt that he giueth the bread of life.So miſerable men,whileſt that they refuſe the promiſes of God,being not contented with this one euill,they make Chriſt giltie of theyr infidelitie.

35 I am the bread of life. Hee teacheth firſt that the bread is preſent which they did aske in mockage: then afterward he chideth them. Furthermore,he began with doctrine,that he might the better declare that they were giltie of vnthankfulneſſe. And there are two partes thereof: becauſe he ſheweth whence we muſt fet life,and how we may enioy the ſame. VVee knowe what cauſed Chriſte to vſe theſe Metaphors: namely, becauſe there was mention made of Manna and the dayly foode. But notwithſtanding this figure is more fit to teache the ignoraunt withall,then a plaine kinde of ſpeech. VVhen as wee eate bread to nouriſhe our bodies withall,both our infirmitie,and alſo the ſtrength of Gods grace doth the better appeare,then if God did inſtill his ſecret power to nouriſhe the body without bread. So an inſtitution taken frō the body to the ſoule,cauſeth the grace of Chriſt to be the better felt: For when we heare that Chriſt is the bread which our ſoules muſt eate: this pearceth farther into our ſoules then if Chriſte ſhoulde ſay ſimplie, that he is our life. Notwithſtanding we muſt note that the liuely force of Chriſte is not expreſſed by the worde bread,in ſuch ſort as wee feele it. For bread doth not beginne the life:but it cheriſheth and preſerueth the life which is begun. But we doe not only retaine life through the benefite of Chriſte, but wee haue the beginning of life through hym. VVherefore the ſimilitude is vnproper in ſome reſpect. But in this there is no abſurditie: becauſe Chriſt frameth his talke according to the circumſtance of the talke had before. The queſtion was mooued,whether Moſes or Chriſt himſelfe was more excellent in feeding men. This is the ſelfe ſame reaſon why hee doth only call it bread: becauſe they did only obiect Manna vnto him,therfore it was ſufficient for him to ſet againſt the ſame another bread. The doctrine is ſimple,that our ſoules do not liue by an inward power(that I may ſo ſay)but that they do borow life of Chriſt.

Hee which commeth vnto me. Now he defineth the manner of eating: namely,when as we receiue him by faith. Neither doth it any whit profite the vnbeleeuers,that Chriſt is the bread of life: becauſe they continue alwayes emptie: but Chriſt is made our bread then, when as wee come hungrie vnto him,that he may fill vs. To come vnto Chriſt and to beleeue,haue all one ſignification in this place: but in the former worde the effect of faith is expreſſed: namely,that being enforced with the feeling of our pouertie we flie vnto Chriſte to aske life. Furthermore,they who gather out of this place,that the eating of Chriſte is nothing els, ſaue faith onely, they reaſon ſcarſe fitly enough, and to the purpoſe. I graunt indeed that we eate Chriſt no otherwiſe ſaue only by beleeuing: but the eating it ſelfe is rather an effect or fruite of faith,then faith. Neither doth faith behold Chriſte alone,as being a far off: but it imbraceth him that he may be made ours,& dwell in vs: it maketh vs to grow into one body with him,to haue one life with him,and finally to be one with him. Therefore it is true that Chriſt is eaten by faith alone,ſo that we do alſo vnderſtand,after what ſort faith ioyneth vs with him.

Hee shall neuer bee a thirst. This seemeth to be added contrary to reason: because it is not the office of bread to quench thirst, howsoeuer it doeth satisfie hunger. Therfore Christ doth attribute more to bread then the nature thereof doth beare. I haue alreadie said, that he doth only vse the word bread: namely, because the comparing of Manna with his heauenly power, whereby our soules are holden in life, did so require. In the mean while he vnderstandeth by bread all the whole summe of food: and that according to the common custome of his countrie. For the Hebrewes doe take this phrase to eate bread by Synecdoche, for to suppe or dine: & when as we aske our daylie bread, we comprehend vnder the same drinke & the other parts of our life. Therfore the meaning of the words is this, whosoeuer shal resort vnto Christe, that he may haue life of him, he shal want nothing, but shall haue sufficient nourishment to maintaine life with.

36 But I haue said vnto you. Now doth he blame them, because they doe wickedly reiect the gift of God, which is laid open vnto them. And this is too too wicked contempt of god, to reiect that which some man, doth acknowledge to be giuen by him. Vnlesse Christ had made his power knowen vnto them, & had manifestly declared that he came from god, the colour of ignorance might haue extenuated their fault: but in that they refuse his doctrine, whom they did before confesse to be the Messias of the Lord, it is extreeme vnthankfulnes. Truly it is true that men doe neuer so resist God of set purpose, that they think that they haue to deale with God. VVherunto appertaineth that of Paul, They would neuer haue crucified the Lord of glory, if they had knowen him. But the vnbeleeuers, because they
1. Cor. 2. 8 are blind, when they behold the light, are worthily said to see that which vanisheth streightway out of their sight, because Satã doth darken their mindes. This is questionles, that when as he said that they saw, he meant not the bodily sight, but doth rather touch their voluntarie blindnes in that they might know what he was, vnlesse their owne wickednes had letted them.

37 VVhatsoeuer the father giueth me. Least their vnbeliefe shoulde any whit discredit his doctrine, he saith that the cause of so great stubbornesse is, because they are reprobates, & strangers from the flocke of God. Therfore he doth distinguish the elect from the reprobate in this place, that his doctrine may neuertheless retaine the authoritie, although it be not beleeued of many, For the wicked do both speake euill of the word of God, and do make no account therof, because they are not touched with the reuerence of it: and many weaklinges and ignorant men doe doubt, whether it be the word of god or no, because a great part of the world doth refuse it. Christ remoueth this stumbling block, when as he saith, that they are not his, whosoeuer doe not beleeue, that it is no maruel if such haue no feeling of the truth of God: but that all the children of god do imbrace it. First of all he saith, that they come vnto him, whosoeuer his father giueth him. By which words he meaneth, ỹ faith is not in mans choyse & will, that this man or that may beleeue generally, or by chaunce: but that God doth choose those whom he may giue vnto his sonne as it were from hand to hand. For when hee saith that all that commeth, whatsoeuer is giuen, we gather therby that all men are not giuen. Again, we gather, that God doth work with so great efficacie of ỹ spirite ſpirite in his eleƈt, that none of them can fall away. For the woorde giue importeth as much as if Chriſt had ſaid, whom the father hath choſen, them doth he regenerate, and he doth appoint them vnto me, vnto the obedience of the goſpel. And him that commeth vnto mee. This is added for the comfort of the godly, that they may certainly perſuade thẽſelues that they haue acceſſe vnto Chriſt through faith, and that alſo they ſhall be courteouſly entertained, ſo ſoone as they haue once committed themſelues vnto his tuition: whereupon it followeth that the doƈtrine of the goſpel ſhall bring ſaluation vnto all the godly, becauſe no man offereth himſelfe to be Chriſt his diſciple, who may not againe perceiue & trie that he is a faithful and good teacher.

38 Becauſe he came downe from heauen. This is a confirmation of the next ſentence, that we do not ſeeke Chriſt in vaine. For faith is a worke of God, wherby he ſheweth that we are his, and he appointeth his ſonne to be the gouerner of our ſaluation. This was the only purpoſe of the ſonne, to fulfill his fathers commandement. Therfore he wil neuer caſt off thoſe whom the father ſendeth. VVherby it is plainely prooued that faith ſhall neuer be voide. VVhereas Chriſt putteth a difference betweene his owne and his fathers will, therein he applieth himſelfe vnto his hearers, becauſe (as mans nature is readie to diſtruſt) we are wont to feigne vnto our ſelues ſome contrary thing which may procure douting. To the end Chriſt may cut off all occaſion of ſuch wicked ſurmiſes, he affirmeth that he was reuealed vnto the worlde, to the end he may eſtabliſh by the very effect, that which the father decreed concerning our ſaluation.

39 And this is the wil. He doth teſtifie now that this is the purpoſe of the father, that the faithfull do find ſure & certaine ſaluation in Chriſt. VVherupon it followeth againe that they are reprobates, whoſoeuer do not profite and goe forward in the doƈtrine of the Goſpel. VVherfore if we ſee that it turneth to the deſtruƈtion of many, there is no cauſe why we ſhould therfore be diſcouraged: becauſe they doe of their own accord bring euill vpon themſelues. Let this be ſufficient for vs that the goſpell ſhall alwayes be able to gather the eleƈt vnto ſaluation. I maye not looſe of that. That is, I will not ſuffer it to be taken from me or to periſh. VVherby he giueth vs to vnderſtand that he is the keeper of our ſaluation, not for one or a few dayes: but that he is carefull for the ſame vntill the end, that he may bring vs from the beginning vnto the ending of our courſe. For this cauſe doth he make mention of the laſt reſurrection. And this promiſe is very neceſſarie for thoſe who do miſerably labour in ſo great infirmitie of the fleſh, wherof euerie one is gyltie in his owne conſcience. The ſaluation of the whole world might be ſubuerted euery minute, vnleſſe the faithfull being vpholden by the hand of Chriſt, did hold on couragiouſly vntill the day of the reſurrection. Let vs therfore hold this faſt, that Chriſt reacheth foorth his hand, that he may not forſake vs in the midſt of the courſe, but that truſting vnto his ayde, we may be bold to lift vp our eyes without feare, vnto the laſt day. He doth alſo make mention of the reſurrection for another cauſe, becauſe whileſt that our life is hid, wee are like vnto dead men. for what do the faithful differ frõ the wicked, ſaue only that being ouerwhelmed with miſerie, and being as ſheepe appointed to be ſlaine, they haue alwayes the one foote in the graue? yea ſometimes they are euen at deaths dore, and readie to be ſwallowed vp. Therefore the only prop of our hope and pacience is, if omitting the eſtate of this preſent life, we doe lift vp our mindes and all our ſenſes vnto that laſt day, if wee paſſe through theſe worldly lets, vntil ſuch time as the fruit of our faith doth appeare.

40 And this is the will. He ſaid that this office was enioyned him of his father to defend our ſaluation: now he doth alſo define the meane. Therefore this is the way to attaine vnto ſaluation, if we obey the Goſpell of Chriſt. This did he touch of late, but he doth now better expres that which was ſpoken then obſcurely. And if ſo be it God will haue thoſe to be ſaued through faith whom he hath choſen, and hee doth by this meanes eſtabliſh and put in execution his eternall decree, whoſoeuer being not contented with Chriſt, doth curiouſly enquyre after eternall predeſtination, he doth ſomuch as in him lyeth deſire to be ſaued otherwiſe then the purpoſe and counſel of God hath appoynted. The election of God is of it ſelfe hidden, and ſecrete: the ſame doeth God reueale by calling, whereof he vouchſafeth to make vs partakers. Therfore they are deceiued who ſeeke their or the ſaluation of other men in the labyrinth of predeſtination, not holding the way of faith whiche is ſet before them: yea they goe about with this prepoſterous ſpeculation to ouerthrow the force and effect of predeſtination. For if God hath choſen vs to this end, that we may beleeue, take away faith, and election ſhalbe vnperfect. But it is wickedneſſe to breake off the continuall and ordinate courſe of the beginning and the ende in the counſel of God. Furthermore, as the election of God carrieth with it calling, and they two are knit together with an vnſoluble knot, ſo when God hath called vs effectually vnto the faith of Chriſt, this ought to be of as great force with vs, as if he ſhould by ſetting to his ſeale confirme the decree concerning our ſaluation. For the teſtimonie of the ſpirite is nothing els, ſaue only the ſealing of our adoption. Therefore euery mans faith is vnto him a ſufficiēt witneſſe of gods eternall predeſtination, ſo ỽ it is ſacrilege to enquire any higher. Becauſe he doth the holy ſpirit opē iniurie, whoſoeuer doth refuſe to ſubſcribe vnto his teſtimony. He oppoſeth ſce & beleeue againſt the former ſentence. For hee had caſt in the lewes teeth that they did not beleeue, whē as notwithſtanding they had ſeen: now is the obedience of faith ioyned in the children of God, with the feeling of the diuine vertue and power which they perceiue to be in Chriſte. Furthermore, theſe wordes declare, that faith ſloweth from the knowledge of Chriſt: not that it deſireth any thing beſide the plaine worde of god: but becauſe if we beleeue Chriſt, we muſt perceiue what he is, and what we haue by him.

41 Therefore the Iewes murmured concerning him, becauſe he ſaid, I am the bread, that came downe from heauen.

42 And they ſaide is not this Ieſus the ſonne of Ioſeph, whoſe father and mother wee know? Therfore how ſaith he, I came downe from heauen?

43 Therefore Ieſus anſweared and ſaide vnto them, murmure not amongſt your ſelues.

44 No man can come vnto mee, vnles the father that ſent me ſhall draw him: and I will will rayſe him vp in the laſt day.

45 It is written in the Prophets, and they ſhall be all taught of God. Therefore whoſoeuer hath heard of the father, and learned, he commeth vnto mee,

41 They murmured. The Euangeliſt teacheth that the murmuring did ariſe hereupon, becauſe the Iewes being offended with the humilitie of the fleſh did conceiue no diuine and heauenly thing in Chriſt: Although he ſheweth that they had a double let. For they did feigne the one them ſelues by reaſon of a falſe opinion, when they ſaid: This is the ſonne of Ioſeph, whoſe father and mother we know. The other did proceede frō peruers iudgement, becauſe they did not thinke that Chriſte was the ſon of God, becauſe he came downe vnto men being clothed with fleſhe. But we are too malicious if we doe therefore deſpice the Lord of glory, becauſe he did abaſe himſelfe for our ſake, taking vpon him the ſhape of a ſeruant. For this was rather a plentifull token of his infinite loue, and wonderfull grace toward vs. Secondly, the diuine maieſtie of Chriſt did not ſo lye hid vnder the contemptible and baſe ſhape of fleſh, but that he did ſend foorth beames of his manifold brightneſſe: but theſe groſſe & dull headed men did want eyes, to ſee his manifeſt glory withall. VVee doe alſo offend dayly both wayes. Firſt of all, this is vnto vs a great let, that we doe only beholde Chriſt with fleſhly eyes, whereby it commeth to paſſe that we doe ſee in him no worthie thing. For wee doe peruert whatſoeuer is in him and his doctrine with our corrupte ſenſe: ſuch miniſter interpreters are we. Againe, being not contented therewith wee catch hold of many falſe thinges, which may breed the contempt of the Goſpel. Moreouer, many men doe forge to themſelues monſters, vnder colour whereof they may hate the Goſpell. Therfore the worlde doeth of ſet purpoſe beat back the grace of God. The Euangeliſt expreſſeth the Iewes by name, that we may know that the murmuring did proceede from them, who did boaſt of the title of faith and the Church that al of vs may learne reuerently to receiue Chriſt, when he commeth humblie vnto vs, and the nigher he is vnto vs, ſo much the more willingly to come vnto him, that he may extoll vs vnto his heauenly glory.

43 Murmur not amongeſt your ſelues. He layeth to their charge the faulte of murmuring: as if he ſhould ſay, my doctrine containeth no matter of offence, but becauſe you are reprobates, it moueth your poyſoned minds: and therefore is it vnſauerie, becauſe you haue an vnſauerie palate and taſte.

44 No man can, &c. He doth not only accuſe their wickedneſſe, but doth alſo tell them that this is the peculiar gift of God to embrace the doctrine which hee ſetteth before them, which he doth for this cauſe, leaſt their vnbelief do trouble the weake. For many mē are holden with this fooliſhneſſe, that they do depend vpon the reſpect of men in matters appertaining vnto God, whereby it commeth to paſſe that they ſuſpect the goſpel, ſo ſone as they ſee that the world doth not receiue it. Againe, the vnbeleeuers flattering themſelues in their frowardnes dare condemne the goſpel, becauſe it doth not pleaſe them. Therfore chriſt affirmeth on the contrary, ꝑ althogh ꝑ doctrine of the goſpel be preached vnto al men generally, yet cānot all men receiue it, but that they haue need of a new mind, & a new vnderſtāding: and that therfore faith is not in mans will but that it is God who giueth it. Becauſe to come vnto Chriſt is put metaphorically in this place, for to beleeue, the Euangeliſt to the end he may frame the metaphor in the contrary member, ſayth that they are drawen, whoſe mindes God doth illuminate, and whoſe heartes he bendeth and frameth vnto the obedience of Chriſt. This is the ſumme, that it is no maruell if many do loath the goſpel, becauſe no man ſhall euer bee able to come vnto Chriſt willingly, ſaue he whom God ſhal preuent with his ſpirite. And thereupon it followeth that all men are not drawen, but that God doth graunt this grace vnto thoſe whom he hath choſen. As touching the manner of drawing, the ſame is not violent, whiche may compel a man with an externall motion: yet notwithſtanding it is an effectuall motion of the holy ſpirit, which maketh men that were vnwilling to be willing. VVherfore that is falſe and prophane, that none are drawen ſaue thoſe who are willing: as if man did ſhew himſelfe obedient vnto God of his owne motion. For in that men do follow God willingly, they haue that now of him, who hath framed their heartes to obey him.

45 It is written in the prophetes. Chriſt confirmeth that which he ſaide with the teſtimonie of Ieſaias, that no man commeth vnto him ſaue he whom the father draweth. He calleth them the Prophetes in the plural number, becauſe al the Propheſies were gathered into one body, ſo that all the bookes of the prophets might worthily be counted one booke. Furthermore, the place which is cited is extant in Ieſaias chap. 54. 13. and Ier. 31. 34 VVhere ſpeaking of the reſtoring of the Church, he promiſeth vnto her ſonnes taught of God. VVhence we may eaſily gather, that the Church can by no other meanes be reſtored, vnleſſe God taking vpon him to play the ſcholemaſter, do bring the faithfull vnto himſelfe. The maner of teaching, whereof the Prophet ſpeaketh, is not placed only in the external voyce: but alſo in the ſecret working of the holy ghoſt. To bee briefe, this teaching of God is the inward illumination of the heart. In that hee ſaith (all) it ought to bee reſtrained vnto the elect, who are only the true children of the Church. Now it is no hard matter to ſee how Chriſt applyeth this propheſie vnto the cauſe which he hath in hand. Ieſaias teacheth that the Church is then edified indeed, whē it hath childrē who are taught of God. Therefore Chriſt inferreth fitly, that men haue not eyes to ſee the light of life, vntil God doth open thē. Alſo he ſtandeth vpon the vniuerſall word, becauſe he reaſoneth thence, that all thoſe who are taught of God, are drawen effectually that they may come. And hereunto appertaineth that which foloweth by and by. VVhoſoeuer therfore hath hearde. The ſumme is, that the reprobate are euen giuen ouer vnto deſtruction, whoſoeuer doe not beleeue: becauſe God doth make all the children of the Churche, and the heyres of life his obedient ſchollers. VVhereupon it followeth that none of the elect of God are ſtrangers from the faith of Chriſt. Therefore as Chriſt did before denie that men are apt to beleeue, vnleſſe they be drawen: ſo he doth nowe pronounce that it is the effectuall grace of the ſpirite, wherby they are drawen, that they may neceſſarily beleeue. By theſe two members is quite ouerthrowen all the libertie of free will whereon the Papiſtes doe dreame. For if wee begin to come vnto Chriſte then, when the father hath drawen vs, the beginning of faith is not in vs, neyther any preparation: againe, if all doe come whome the father hath taught, he doth not only giue them the earneſt of faith only, but faith it ſelfe. Therefore in that we doe willingly obey the direction of the ſpirite, this is a part of grace, & as it were the ſealing: becauſe God ſhould not draw vs, if reaching out his hand only, he left vs to our own choiſe. And he is properly ſaid to draw vs when he extendeth the power of his ſpirite euen vnto the full effect of faith. They are ſaid to heare of God, who do ſubmit themſelues vnto God when he ſpeaketh vnto them inwardly, & that with all their heart, becauſe the ſpirite reigneth in their hearts.

Commeth vnto mee. Hee ſheweth the vndiuiſible coniunction which he hath with the father. For the meaning of the wordes is, that it cannot be but that they ſhal addict themſelues vnto Chriſt, whoſoeuer are the diſciples of God, and that they are vnapt to bee taught of God who do reiect Chriſt: becauſe this is the only wiſedome, which the elect do learn in Gods ſchoole, to come vnto Chriſt. For doubtleſſe the father who ſent him cannot denie himſelfe.

46 Not that any man hath ſeene the father, ſaue he who is of God, he hath ſeene the father.

47 Verilie, verilie, I ſay vnto you, hee that beleeueth in mee hath eternal life.

48 I am the bread of life.

49 Your fathers did eate Manna in the wilderneſs, and died.

50 This is the bread which came downe from heauen, that ſome man may eat thereof and not die.

51 I am the liuely bread which came downe from heauen, if any man ſhall eate of this bread, he ſhall liue for euer: and the bread which I will giue, is my fleſh, which I will giue for the life of the world.

46 Not that any man. As hee hath hytherto commended the grace of his father, ſo he doth call backe the faithful vnto himſelfe alone. For both theſe muſt bee ioyned togeather, that there can no knowledge be had of Chriſt vntill the father doe illuminate with his ſpirite thoſe who are naturally blinde: and that it is but all in vaine to ſeeke God, vnleſſe Chriſt go before: becauſe the maieſtie of God is higher then that mans wit and ſenſes can reach vnto it. Yea, that ſhalbe a deadly dungeon, which ſhalbe thought to be the knowledge of God, without Chriſte. When he ſaith, that he alone knoweth the father, his meaning is, that this office appertaineth vnto him properly, to declare him vnto me, who is otherwiſe hidden.

47 Hee that beleeueth in mee. This is the expoſition of the ſentence next going before. For we are taught in theſe wordes, that we doe then knowe God, when we beleeue in Chriſte. For we doe then begin to ſee the inuiſible God as it were in a glaſſe, or in a liuely & expreſſe Image. Therefore accurſed be that which is ſet before vs concerning God, vnleſſe it direct vs vnto Chriſt. I haue before declared what it is to beleeue in Chriſt, for we muſt not imagine any confuſed or vaine faith, whiche may ſpoyle Chriſt of his power: ſuche as is amongſt the Papiſts, who doe beleeue ſo much of Chriſt as pleaſeth them. For we doe therefore obtain life by faith, becauſe we know that all the partes of life are conteined in Chriſte. VVhereas certaine doe gather out of this place, that to beleeue in Chriſt is as much as to eate Chriſt or his fleſh, it is not firme enough. For theſe two thinges doe differ as the former and the latter: as to come vnto Chriſt and to drinke him: for comming vnto him goeth before. I graunt that we doe eate Chriſt only by faith: but the reaſon is, becauſe we doe receiue him by faith, that he may dwell in vs, and that we may be partakers of him, and ſo be one with him. VVherfore eating is an effect or worke of faith.

48 I am the bread of life. Beſides that which he ſaid before, that hee is the liuely bread, wherewith our ſoules are fed: to the ende he may the better amplifie that, he doth alſo repeat the oppoſition of this bread and the old Manna, together with a compariſon of men: Your fathers (ſaith he) eate Manna, &c. He ſaith that Manna was vnto their fathers fraile food, which did not deliuer them from death. Therfore it followeth that the ſoules doe finde meate no where els, ſaue in him, wherby they may bee fed vnto the ſpirituall life. Furthermore, we muſt remember that which I ſaide in another place, that he doth not in this place ſpeake of manna, as it was a ſecrete figure of Chriſt (for in that reſpect Paule calleth it ſpirituall meate) but we haue ſaid that Chriſte doth attemper and applie his ſpeech vnto his hearers, who being only carefull for the feeding of the belly did looke vnto no higher thing. Therefore hee doth for good cauſes affirme, that their fathers were dead, that is, ſuche as were in like ſort addicted to the bellie. And yet notwithſtanding hee inuiteth them to eate, when he ſaith that he came that ſome man might eate. For this ſpeech importeth as muche, as if he ſhould ſay, that hee is readie for all, who wyll only eate. Vnderſtande that none of thoſe who haue once eaten Chriſt doe die, becauſe the life which he giueth vs is neuer put out, as it is in the fift Chapter.

51 I am the liuely bread. He doth oftentimes repeate the ſame thing, becauſe there is neither any thing more needefull to be knowen, and euery man doth perceiue for his owne part, how hardly wee doe beleeue it, and howe eaſily and quickly we doe forget it. VVe do all deſire life: but we doe wander frowardly and fooliſhly through by wayes in ſeeking the ſame: the greateſt ſort doth lothſomely refuſe it when it is offered vnto them. For who is he that doth not feigne vnto himſelfe life without Chriſte? And howe many are there whom Chriſte alone can ſatiſfie? Therefore it is no ſuperfluous repetition, whileſt that Chriſte doth ſo often affirme, that he alone is ſufficient to giue life, For he doth challenge to himſelfe alone the tytle of bread, that hee may plucke out of our myndes all feygned hopes of liuing. Hee doth now call that the liuing bread, which he called before the bread of life, in ꝑ ſame ſenſe, wherein he called it liuely. Hee doth oftentimes make mention of comming downe from heauen: becauſe the ſpirituall and vncorruptible life ſhall not be found in this worlde, the ſhape whereof paſſeth and vaniſheth away: but only in the heauenly kingdome of God. So often as he putteth in the worde eate, he exhorteth vs vnto faith, which only maketh vs to inioy this bread vnto life. And that not in vaine, becauſe there are but a few who can vouchſafe to reach foorth their hande, that they may put this bread to their mouth: yea when the Lord doth euen reach it vnto their mouth, there are but few that can taſt it: but ſom do gorge themtheſelues with winde, otherſome being like to Tantalus, being nigh vnto the meate it ſelfe are through their ſluggiſhnes hungrie. The bread whiche I will giue. Becauſe that ſecret force of giuing life wherof he ſpake, might bee referred vnto his diuine eſſence, he doth now diſcende vnto the ſeconde degree, and teacheth that that life conſiſteth in his fleſhe, that it may bee drawen thence. Truly it is a wonderfull purpoſe of God, that hee hath ſet before vs life, in that fleſhe, wherein was the only matter of death before. And ſo by this means he prouideth for our infirmitie, whi Ieſt that he doth not cail vs aboue the cloudes to inioy life: but ſheweth the ſame vpon the earth, as if he did lift vs vp into the hidden places of his kingdome. In the meane ſeaſon correcting the pride of our nature, hee alloweth the humilitie and obedience of faith, whileſt that he commaundeth thoſe who will craue life, to reſt and ſtay in his fleſh, being to ſee to, contemptible.

But it is obiected on the contrarie, that the fleſh of Chriſt cannot giue life, which was both ſubiect to death, and is not now of it ſelfe immortall: ſecondly that this doth not agree with the nature of fleſh to quicken the ſoules. I anſwere, although this power doe come from ſome thyng els, then from the fleſh, yet is there no let but that this title doeth aptly agree thereunto. For as the eternall worde of God is the fountaine of life, ſo his fleſhe doeth powre out vnto vs as a conduit, the life, which reſteth (as they ſay) in the inwarde diuinitie. And in this ſenſe is it called liuely, becauſe it imparteth vnto vs the life which it borroweth of ſome other. That ſhalbe plaine enough, if we conſider what is the cauſe of life, namely righteouſneſſe. And although righteouſneſſe doe flow from God alone, yet wee haue the ſame fully giuen vnto vs, onely in the fleſh of Chriſt. For the redemption of man was fulfilled in it: in it was offered the ſacrifice for ſatisfaction for our ſinnes, the obedience was perfourmed towardes God, which might reconcile him vnto vs. It was alſo ſprinckled with the ſanctification of the ſpirite, it was receiued into heauenly glory after that death was ouercome. Therefore it followeth that all the partes of life were placed in it, ſo that no man canne iuſtly complaine that he is depriued of life, becauſe it is hid farre off.

Which I will giue for the life of the worlde. The worde giue, is diuerſly taken: the former giuing whereof hee maketh mention, is done daylye: namely, ſo often as Chriſte doth offer himſelfe vnto vs: in the ſeconde place he meaneth that onely giuing which was done vpon the croſſe when he offered himſelfe vnto the father for a ſacrifice. For then hee gaue himſelfe vnto death for the life of men: now he inuiteth vs to reap the fruite of his death. For it ſhould nothing profite vs that that ſacrifice was once offered, vnleſſe we ſhould now eate the holy banket. Furthermore, we muſt note this, that Chriſt challengeth to himſelfe the office of ſacrificing his fleſh. VVhereby appeareth with what wicked ſacrilege the papiſtes do pollute themſelues, who doe in the Maſſe vſurpe that, which was proper to that prieſt onely.

52 Therefore the Iewes did ſtriue amongeſt themſelues, ſaying, how can hee giue vs his fleſh to eate?

53 Therefore Ieſus ſaid vnto them, verilie, verilie I ſay vnto you, vnleſſe you ſhall eat the fleſh of the ſonne of man, and ſhall drinke his blood, you haue not life in you.

54 Hee

54 Hee that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternall life: and I will rayse him vp at the last day:

55 For my flesh is meate in deede, and my bloud is drinke indeed.

56 Hee that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in mee, and I in him.

57 As the liuing father hath sent me, I doe also liue for the father, and he that eateth me, he shall also liue for mee.

58 This is the bread which came downe from heauen: not as your fathers eat Manna and dyed: he that eateth this bred shall liue for euer.

52 Therefore the Iewes did striue. Hee nameth the Iewes againe not for honours sake: but that he may caſt in their teeth their vnbeliefe, becauſe they doe not receiue his familiar doctrine concerning eternall life, or at leaſt, becauſe they do enquire vnmodeſtly of a thing which was as yet dark & doubtful. For it is a ſigne of frowardnes & contempt, in that he ſaith they did contende: and they who doe diſpute ſo contentiouſly, do ſtoppe the way before themſelues, ſo that they cannot come vnto the knowledge of the truth. Neither is this ſimplie reprehended in them, that they did aske concerning the meanes: for then ſhould the ſame reprehenſion fall vpon Abraham and the bleſſed virgin. Therefore they are either deceiued through ignorance, or they deale vncourteouſly, who paſſing ouer the luſt and boldneſſe which they had to contend (whiche the Euangeliſt doth only condemne) doe only toſſe this worde how, as if it had been wickedneſſe for the Iewes to enquyre of the manner of eating. But this is rather to be imputed vnto ſlouthfulneſſe, then vnto the obedience of faith, if we keepe thoſe knots of doubtes vnlooſed, willingly & wittingly, which are looſed for vs by the word of the Lord. VVherfore it is not onely lawfull to enquire of the manner of eating of the fleſh of Chriſt: but it is alſo profitable for vs to know the ſame, ſo farre foorth as it is expounded in the ſcripture. Away with that twiſe ſtubborne colour of humilitie, that one only ſaying of Chriſt is ſufficient for me, when he affirmeth that his fleſh is meate in deede, I am willingly blinde in the reſt. As if the heretikes may not haue the ſame colour, if they be willingly ignorant of this, that Chriſt is conceaued of the holy Ghoſt, becauſe beleeuing that he is the ſeed of Abrahã, they will ſearch no farther. VVe muſt only holde this moderation in the ſecrete workes of God, that we deſire to knowe no more then he ſetteth downe in his worde.

53 Verilie, verilie, I ſay vnto you, Indignation did wring out of Chriſte this oath, when he ſaw his grace refuſed with ſo proud contempt: for he doth not now vſe plaine doctrine: but doth alſo intermingle threatnings to make them afraid withall: for he denounceth eternall deſtruction vnto all thoſe who ſhall refuſe to fet life from his fleſh, as if hee ſhoulde ſay, if you deſpiſe my fleſhe, knowe yee that there remaineth no other hope of life for you. This vengeance remaineth for all the contemners of the grace of Chriſte, that they doe wickedly periſh through their pride: and they are to bee vrged with this preciſe ſeueritie, that they may not proceede to flatter themſelues. For if we doe threaten death vnto ſicke men which refuſe remedies, what ſhall the wicked doe, when as they endeuour ſo much as in them lyeth to aboliſh the life it ſelfe? In that he ſaith, the fleſh of the ſonne of man, it hath great force: for he toucheth their contempt, which did ariſe thereupon, becauſe they ſaw that he was like vnto other men. The meaning therfore of the wordes is, contemne me at your pleaſure, becauſe of the humble & baſe ſight of my fleſh: yet is there life included in this contemptible fleſh, whereof if you depriue your ſelues, you ſhall finde no where els, that which can quicken you. It was a groſſe error of the mē of old, who thought that infants were depriued of eternal life, vnleſſe that the ſacrament of the Lords body were giuen them. For he ſpeaketh not of the ſupper: but of the euerlaſting participation, which wee haue without the vſe of the ſupper. And the Boemians dealt not well, whenas they did prooue by this teſtimony, that the vſe of the Cuppe ought to bee common vnto all in general. As touching infants, Chriſt his inſtitution doth barre them from the partaking of the ſupper, becauſe they cannot yet try themſelues, they can not obſerue the memoriall of the death of Chriſt. The ſame inſtitution maketh the cup cōmon vnto all, together with the bread: for hee commaundeth vs all to drinke thereof.

54 Hee that eateth my fleſh. This is a repetition, but not ſuperfluous: for it confirmeth that which was harde to beleeue, that the ſoules are no otherwiſe fed with his fleſh and blood, then the bodie is ſuſteined with meate and drinke. Therefore as he did of late teſtifie vnto all men, that there remaineth nothing but death for thoſe who ſeeke life any where els ſaue only in his fleſh: ſo hee doth now encourage the godly vnto good hope, whileſt that he promiſeth life vnto them in the ſame fleſhe. Note that he dothe ſo often adioyne the reſurrection vnto eternall life: becauſe our ſaluation ſhall lye hid vntill that day. Therefore no man can feele what we haue of Chriſte, ſaue he who hauing ouercome ꝑ world doth ſet the laſt reſurrection before his eyes. It appeareth plainely by theſe wordes that all this place is vntruly expounded of the ſupper: for if it were true, that all thoſe who thruſt in vnto the holy Table of the Lord, are made partakers of his fleſh and blood, all men ſhould find life in lyke ſort.

And truly it had byn a fooliſh and vnſeaſonable thing to reaſon then concerning the ſupper, which he had not yet inſtituted: therefore it is certain that he doth intreate of the continuall eating of faith. And yet notwithſtanding I do alſo confeſſe, that ther is nothing ſaid in this place which is not figured in the ſupper, and is indeed perfourmed vnto the faithfull. So that Chriſt would haue the holy ſupper to bee as it were a ſeale of this ſermō. And this is the reaſon why Iohn maketh no mention of the ſupper. Therefore Auguſtine followeth the naturall order, whileſt that in expounding this chapter, he doth not touch the ſupper, vntil he come vnto the end. And then he teacheth that this myſterie is repreſented in the ſacrament, ſo often as the Churches doe celebrate the holy ſupper, in ſome places euery day, in ſome places only on the Sabboth dayes.

55 My fleſh is meate indeede. He confirmeth the ſame thing with other wordes, that as the body pyneth away with hunger, ſo ſhall the ſoule periſh with hūger, vnleſſe it be refreſhed with the heauenly bread. For whē he affirmeth that his fleſh is meate indeede, he giueth vs to vnderſtande that the ſoules are hungrie if they want this meate. Therefore thou ſhalt

then finde life in Christ if thou shalt seeke the matter of life in his flesh. So that we must boast with Paule, that there is nothing excellent with vs saue Christe crucified, because so soone as we are once departed from the sacrifice of his death, we can see nothing but death. Neither doth he bring vs any other way vnto the feeling of his diuine power, saue onely by his death and resurrection. Therefore embrace Christ the seruaunt of the father, that he may shew himselfe vnto thee the prince of life. For in that he made himselfe poore, by this meanes are we inriched with all aboundance of good thinges: his humbling and descending into hell, hath lifted vs vp into heaue: by taking vpō him the curse of the crosse, he hath erected a noble ensigne of righteousnesse. Therefore they are peruers interpreters, who leade away the soules from the flesh of Christe. But why doth Christe make mention apart of his blood, which is conteined vnder the flesshe? I answer, that hee had respect vnto our ignoraunce. For when he maketh mention of meate and drinke seuerally, he telleth vs that the life which he giueth is in all respectes perfect, least we should feigne vnto our selues halfe a life or an vnperfect life: as if hee should say that we shal want no part of life, if so be it we do eate his flesh, & drink his blood. So also in ỳ supper, which agreeth with this doctrin, being not contented with the signe of the bread, he addeth also the Cuppe, that hauing a double token of life in him, we may learne to be content with him alone. For doubtlesse no man shall finde a part of life in Christ, saue only hee, who shal bee perswaded that hee is vnto him whole and perfect life.

56 Hee that eateth my flesh. Another confirmation. For seeing that he alone hath life in himselfe, he prescribeth the meanes to inioy it, that we do eate his flesh: as if he should say that there is no other meanes whereby he is made ours, saue only when our faith is directed vnto his flesh. For he shall neuer come vnto Christ as he is God, who neglecteth him as hee is man. Wherefore if thou wilt haue any thing to doe with Christ thou must aboue all things beware that thou loath not his flesh. When as he saith, that he abideth in vs, it is as much as if he should say that this is the only bond of vnitie, and that by this meanes he groweth to be one with vs, when our faith leaneth vnto his death. Furthermore, we may againe gather hence, that he maketh not mention of the outwarde signe: which many of the infidels do receiue, yet do they continue aliants frō Christ.

Furthermore, out of this place is refuted that doting, that Iudas did no lesse receiue the body of Christ then the rest, whileſt that Christ reached the bread vnto them all. For as this doctrine is foolishly restrained vnto the externall signe, so we must hold that which I said before, that the doctrine which is here set downe, is there sealed. But it is certaine that Iudas was neuer a member of Christ: secondly, it is more then absurde, to imagine the flesh of Christ to be dead and without a spirite: last of all, they are to be laughed at who doe dreame of any eating of Christ his flesh without faith, seeing ỳ faith only (that I may so say) is both the mouth and stomacke of the soule.

57 As the liuing father hath sent me. Christ hath hytheto taught how we must be made partakers of life: now he passeth ouer vnto the principall cause, because the first beginning of life is in the father. And he preuenteth an obiection: becauſe he might ſeeme to take from GOD that which appertaineth vnto him, when as he made himſelfe the cauſe of life. Therfore he maketh himſelfe the authour of life in ſuch ſort, that he graunteth that this is giuen him by another, which he miniſtreth vnto others. Let vs alſo note that this ſentence is applied vnto their capacitie, vnto whom Chriſt ſpake: for he doth only compare himſelfe vnto the father in reſpect of his fleſhe. For although the father is the beginning of life, notwithſtanding the eternall worde he alſo is properly life. But Chriſt entreateth not in this place of his eternall diuinitie, becauſe he ſetteth himſelfe before vs, as he reuealed himſelfe vnto the world being clothed with our fleſh. Therefore in that he ſaith, that he liueth for the father, it doth not agree with the bare diuinitie, neither yet doth it appertain ſimplie & of it ſelfe vnto the humane nature, but it is a title of the ſonne of God reuealed in the fleſh. Secondly, we know that Chriſte doth commonly aſcribe vnto the father what diuine thing ſoeuer he had in himſelfe. And we muſt note that there are three degrees of life reckoned vp in this place: the liuing father hath the firſt place, who is the foũtain, but yet placed farre off and hidden: the ſonne followeth, whõ we haue laid out vnto vs as a fountaine, & through whom life is powred out vnto vs:: the third is life which we doe draw from him. Now wee know the ſumme: becauſe God the father in whoſe power is life, is farre diſtant from vs, Chriſt is placed in the middle, who is the ſecond cauſe of life, that that may come vnto vs thence, which ſhould otherwiſe lie hid in God.

58 This is the bread. He returneth vnto the compariſon of Manna & his fleſh where he began. For he ſhould haue ended his ſpeech thus, there is no cauſe why yee ſhould preferre Moſes before me, becauſe hee fedde your fathers in the deſert: ſeing that I giue you a farre better meat. For I bring the heauenly life with me. For (as it was ſaid before) the bread is ſaid to come downe from heauen, which taſteth of no earthly or corruptible thing, but breatheth out the immortalitie of the kingdome of God. They tryed not this power in Manna, who were only bent to feed their bellie. For whereas there was a double vſe of Manna, the Iewes with whom Chriſt diſputeth in this place did loke vnto nothing but the corporall meat. But the life of the ſoule is not fraile: but groweth to be better vntill the whole man ſhalbe renued.

59 Theſe thinges ſaid he in the ſynagogue, teaching in Capernaum.

60 Therefore many of his diſciples, when they had heard, ſaide, This it a hard ſaying, who can heare it?

61 And when Ieſus knew in himſelfe that his diſciples murmured concerning this, hee ſaid vnto them, doth this offend you?

62 If therefore you ſhall ſee the ſonne of man aſcending, where he was before?

63 It is the ſpirite that giueth life: the fleſh profiteth nothing, The wordes whiche I ſpeake vnto you, are ſpirite and life.

64 But there are ſome of you, that doe not beleeue. For Ieſus knewe from the beginning, who they were that did not beleeue, and who it was that ſhoulde betray him.

59 Theſe thinges ſpake hee in the ſynagogue. Iohn aſſigneth the place, ſ we may.

may know that there were many preſent: and ſecondly, that the ſermon was made about a graue and waighty matter. Yet notwithſtanding it followeth by and by, that there were ſcant a few of ſo great a company, who did profite: yea this doctrine was vnto a great many who did profeſſe themſelues to be Chriſte his diſciples, a cauſe of falling away. If the Euangeliſt had ſaid, that only ſome wer offended, that might haue byn counted now a wonder: but in that they do ryſe againſt him in troupes & do conſpire together, what maner example ſhal we ſay this is? Vvherefore let vs deeply imprint in our minds this hiſtorie, leſt at any time we doe murmur againſt Chriſte when hee ſpeaketh. Secondly, if wee ſee anye ſuche like thing in others, let not theyr pryde trouble our faith.

60 This is an hard ſaying. Nay there was rather hardnes in their hearts and not in the ſaying. But the reprobates are wont after this ſort to gather together ſtones out of the worde of God, whereat they may ſtumble. And when as they runne headlong againſt Chriſte through their harde ſtubbornneſſe they complaine that his word is harde, which ought rather to make them ſoft. For whoſoeuer ſhall humblie ſubmit himſelfe vnto Chriſt his doctrine, hee ſhall finde no harde or ſharpe matter therein: and it ſhalbe vnto the vnbeleeuers who ſhall ſtubbornely ſet themſelues againſt it an hammer which breaketh the rockes, as the prophete calleth it, Ier. 23. 29.

Furthermore, ſeeing that the ſame hardnes is bred in vs al, if we iudge according to our owne meaning of the doctrine of Chriſt, there ſhalbe as many paradoxes as wordes. Vvherefore there remaineth nothing but that euery one doe commende himſelfe vnto the direction of the ſpirite, that he may write that in our heartes, which otherwiſe would not enter into our eares.

Vvho can heare it? Heere we ſee how malitious vnbeliefe is. For they which vngodlily & wickedly reiect the doctrine of ſaluation, being not content with an excuſe, they dare make the ſonne of God giltie in their ſteed, and pronounce him to be vnworthie to be heard. So at this day the Papiſts doe not only boldly refuſe the Goſpel: but doe alſo thunder out horrible blaſphemies, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to reſiſt God without a cauſe. And truely ſeeing that they deſire darkneſſe, it is no maruell if Satan doe delude them with feigned monſters. But that which they by reaſon of their diſtemperature cannot endure, ſhall not only be ſuffered of the modeſt and thoſe who are eaſie to be taught: but it ſhall alſo lift them vp and vphold them. In the meane while the reprobate ſhall doe nothing els with their murmuring raylings, but bring vppon themſelues a more greeuous deſtruction.

61 And when Ieſus knew. Chriſte knew that the offence which the reprobate had taken could not be remoued (for the doctrine doth not ſo much wound them, as it doth diſcouer the rotten gall which they nouriſhed within in their harts): yet would he by all means trye, whether any of thoſe who were offended were as yet curable, intending to ſtop the mouth of the reſt. By asking the queſtion he giueth them to vnderſtand, that they had no cauſe, or at leaſt that in the doctrine it ſelfe there was no matter of offence. In like ſort the wickedneſſe of thoſe men is to bee brideled, who being only ſmitten with a dogged madneſſe, do ſpeaeuill of the worde of God: and their fooliſhneſſe is alſo to be corrected who ruſh raſhly againſt the truth. He ſaith that Ieſus knew in him ſelfe becauſe they had not yet freely vttered, what did byte them: but did fret amongeſt themſelues with a ſecrete whiſpering. Therefore he preuenteth their open complaints. If any doe obiect that their nature was not obſcure, ſeeing that they did in plaine wordes refuſe Chriſte his doctrine, I contene in deede that the woordes are playne whiche Iohn recited before: but I ſay alſo that they did toſſe amongeſt themſelues theſe murmurings, and as it were ſecrete ſpeeches and words after the manner of reuoltes. For if they had conferred with Chriſte, there had bin better hope, becauſe they had opened him a way vnto doctrine: now when as they murmur amongſt themſelues, they exclude themſelues frō learning. Therefore there is nothing better then when as we doe not at the firſt vnderſtand the Lords meaning, to come ſtraightway vnto him, that he may open vnto vs all doubtes.

Doth this offend you? Chriſt ſeemeth in this place not ſo much to remoue the offence, as to encreaſe it: yet if any man doe more narrowly weigh the cauſe of the offence, there was in this ſentence, that which ought to haue appeaſed their mindes. The low and baſe eſtate of Chriſt, which they ſaw with their eyes, ſeeing that being clothed with fleſh he differed nothing from the common ſort of men, was vnto them a let that they could not giue place to his diuine power, now hauing as it were pulled away the vaile, he reclaimeth them vnto the beholding of his heauenly glory: as if he ſhould ſay, becauſe I am conuerſant amongſt men without honour, you deſpice me, neither doe yee acknowledge in me any diuine thing: but before it be long it ſhall come to paſſe, that God ſhall lift me vp aboue the heauens, being adorned with great power, from this contemptible ſtate of the mortall life. For in Chriſtes reſurrection, there appeared ſuch power of the holy ſpirite, as might make it knowen that Chriſt was the ſonne of God: as Paule alſo teacheth in the firſt chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romanes, the fourth verſe, when it is ſaid in the 2. Pſalme, the ſeuenth verſe, Thou art my ſonne, this day haue I begotten thee: the reſurrection is made as a token whereby this glory of Chriſte ought to be knowen: and his aſcending into heauen, was the fulfilling of that glory. In that he ſaith, that hee was in heauen before. It doth not properly agree with his humanitie, & yet notwithſtanding he ſpeketh of the ſon of man. But this kinde of ſpeeche is not ſtrange, ſeeing that two natures doe make one perſon in Chriſt, to applie that which is proper to the one vnto the other.

63 It is the ſpirite that giueth life. In theſe wordes Chriſt teacheth that his doctrine had no ſucceſſe amongeſt the Iewes: becauſe whereas it is ſpirituall and liuely, it findeth eares ſcarſe wel prepared. But becauſe this place hath been diuerſly expounded, it is firſt of all requiſite to knowe the true and naturall meaning of the wordes: hereby ſhall we eaſily ſee what was Chriſt his drift. In that he denieth that the fleſh doth profite, Chryſoſtome in my iudgement doth not well referre it vnto the Iewes who were carnall. I confeſſe indeede that all the force of mans wit doeth vaniſhe awaye and quaile in heauenly myſteries: but that is not the meaning of Chriſtes wordes, vnleſſe they be violently wreſted. In lyke ſort the ſenſe ſhoulde bee farre ſet in the contrarie; namely, that the illumination of the ſpirite doth quicken. Neither doe they ſay well, who ſay that the fleſh of Chriſt doth profite, inſomuch as it was crucified, but that it bringeth no good vnto vs being eaten: but we muſt rather eate it, that it may profite vs being crucified. Auguſtine thinketh that this word alone or of it ſelfe, ought to be vnderſtood, becauſe it ought to be ioyned with the ſpirite: which agreeth with the thing it ſelfe. For Chriſt doth ſimplie reſpect the maner of eating. Therfore he doth not exclude all manner commoditie, as if there could none bee reapt by his fleſh: but he doth affirme that it ſhall be vnprofitable if it bee ſeparated from the ſpirit. For whence hath the fleſh this that it doth quicken, ſaue only becauſe it is ſpirituall? Therefore whoſoeuer he be that ſhall remaine in the earthly nature of the fleſh, he ſhall finde nothing in it but that which is dead: but thoſe who ſhal lift vp their eyes vnto the power of the ſpirit, wherwith the fleſh is beſprinkled, they ſhall perceiue that it is called liuely not in vaine, by the verye effect, and experience of faith.

Now we know how the fleſh is meate indeed, and yet it profiteth nothing: namely, it is meate, becauſe through it we haue life, becauſe in it God is reconciled vnto vs: becauſe in it we haue all the partes of our ſaluation fulfilled, it profiteth nothing if it be eſteemed according to ỹ beginning & nature (for ỹ ſeed of Abrahã which of it ſelfe is ſubiect to death, ſhal not giue life): but it receiueth that of the ſpirite wherewith it feedeth vs. VVherefore to the ende that we may be nouriſhed indeede by it, we muſt bring the ſpirituall mouth of faith. And in that the breuitie of the ſentence is ſo ſhort, it is to be thought that Chriſte did thus, becauſe he thought that he ought thus to deale with the vnbeleeuers. Therefore he brake of his ſpeech with this ſentence, becauſe they were vnworthie to haue any more ſpeeches. In the meane while he did not neglect the godly and thoſe that were readie ro be taught, becauſe they haue heere in a fewe woordes, that which may ſatisfie them aboundantly.

The wordes which I ſpeake. He alludeth vnto the ſentence next going before, for he taketh the worde ſpirit in another ſenſe. But becauſe he ſpake of the ſecrete power of the ſpirite, he doth very finely applie this vnto his doctrine, becauſe it is ſpirituall. For the worde ſpirite muſt be reſolued into an adiectiue. Furthermore, the worde is called ſpirituall, becauſe it willeth vs to aſcend vpwarde, that wee may ſeeke Chriſt in his heauenly glory (the ſpirite being our guide) by faith: and not by the reaſon of the fleſh. For we know, that there is nothing of thoſe thinges which are ſpoken which can be vnderſtood without faith. This is alſo worthie the noting, that he ioyneth life with the ſpirite. He calleth his worde life, of the effect, as being liuely yet he teacheth that it is liuely vnto none ſaue only vnto thoſe, who receiue it ſpiritually. For ſom ſhall rather draw death thence. This title of the Goſpell is moſt ſweete vnto the godly, becauſe they are certaine that it is appointed vnto them vnto eternall ſaluation. Notwithſtanding they are alſo admoniſhed to endeauour to ſhew themſelues apt ſchollers.

64 But there are certaine of you. He layeth the blame vpon them ſelues againe, becauſe being voide of the ſpirite, they do wickedly corrupt and depraue his doctrine, and by this meanes turne it to their deſtruction.

For

For they might otherwise obiect, Thou dost boast that that which thou speakest is liuely, but we finde no such thing therein. Therefore he saith that they hinder themselues. For vnbeliefe as it is alwayes proud, will neuer attaine vnto any thing in the wordes of Christ, which it despiseth despitefully. Therefore if we couet to profite any thing vnder this master, let vs bring our mindes well prepared to heare him. For vnlesse humilitie and reuerence doe prepare a way for his doctrine, our mindes are more then deafe, neither wil they admit any part of sound doctrine. Therefore let vs remember, that it commeth to passe through the wickednesse of men, that there appeareth so small fruite of the Gospel at this day. For who is he that renouncing himselfe doth addict himselfe wholy and truly to Christ? Whereas he saith that there bee onely certaine that did not beleeue (when as this fault was common to them all almost) it seemeth that he did it for this cause: least if there were any who were as yet curable they should bee discouraged through despaire.

For he knewe from the beginning. The Euangelist added this for this cause least any man should thinke that Christ iudged rashly of his hearers. Many did professe that they were of his flocke: but their sodaine falling away did discouer their hypocrisie. The Euangelist saith that their vnfaithfulnesse, when as it was as yet hidden from others was knowen to Christe: and that not so much for his sake, as that wee may learne not to iudge before we knowe the truth of matters. For in that Christ knew it from the beginning, this was proper to his diuinitie. Our condition is otherwise: for because we know not the heartes, wee must suspende our iudgement vntill vngodlinesse do bewray it selfe by outward signes, and so the tree may be iudged by his fruites.

65 And he said, therefore haue I saide vnto you, that no man can come vnto me, vnlesse it shalbe giuen him of my father.

66 After that many of his disciples went backward, neither did they walke any longer with him.

67 Therefore Iesus said vnto the twelue, will you also gee away?

68 Therfore Simon Peter answered him, Lorde vnto whom shall wee goe? Thou hast the wordes of eternall life.

69 And wee haue beleeued, and knowen that thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God.

70 Iesus answered them, haue not I chosen you twelue, and one of you is a Diuell?

71 For he spake of Iudas Iscariot the sonne of Simon for hee was about to betray him, although he was one of the twelue.

65 Therefore haue I saide. Hee telleth vs againe that faith is a verye rare and singuler gift of the holy ghoste, least wee should marueyle, that the Gospell is not euerie where receiued of all men. For as we are sinister interpreters, wee thinke not so honourably of the Gospell as we ought, because the whole worlde doeth not agree thereto. For we thinke thus with our ſelues, how can it be that the greater parte of the worlde doth reiect their owne ſaluation? Therfore Chriſt aſſigneth the cauſe why the faithfull are ſo few, becauſe no man commeth vnto faith by his owne quickneſſe of witte: for all men are blinde vntyll they bee illuminated by the ſpirite of God: and therefore they only are made partakers of ſo great a good thing, whom God doth vouchſafe to make partakers thereof. For if this grace were common to all men, then ſhoulde mention be made hereof in this place beſides the matter and out of ſeaſon. For we muſt marke Chriſt his drift, that there are not many who beleeue the Goſpell, becauſe faith proceedeth from the ſecrete reuelation of the ſpirite alone. He vſeth the woorde giue for that which hee ſaid before, drawe. VVhereby hee meaneth that God hath none other cauſe to draw vs, ſaue only becauſe he fauoureth vs freely and of his own accorde. For no man doth attaine vnto that by his owne induſtrie, whiche we obtaine by the gift and grace of God.

66 After that many of the diſciples. The Euangeliſt declareth nowe what great perturbatiō did followe that Sermon. This is a very ſtrange and horrible matter, that ſo mercifull and gentle an inuiting of Chriſt, could eſtraunge the mindes of many, eſpecially thoſe who had giuen him their names before, and were ſuch familiar diſciples of his. But this example is ſet before vs as a glaſſe, wherein wee may ſee, what great wickednēſſe, frowardneſſe, and vnthankfulnes there is in the worlde which findeth matter whereat to ſtumble euen the plaine way, leaſt it ſhould come vnto Chriſt. Many would ſay that it had been better that no ſuch talke had been moued, which was vnto many a cauſe of falling away: but we muſt thinke farre otherwiſe. For it was requiſite that that which was foretold of Chriſt ſhould appeare in his doctrine, and it muſt now dayly appeare: namely, that hee is a ſtone of offence. As for vs we muſt ſo temper our doctrine, that we offend none through our fault. So much as in vs lyeth we muſt keepe all. Finally, we muſt beware leaſt by ſpeaking vnadui ſedly we trouble the ignorant & weak: yet can we neuer take ſo good heed, but that the doctrine of Chriſte is vnto many an occaſion of offence: becauſe the reprobate being giuen ouer vnto deſtruction, doe ſuck poyſon out of moſt wholſome meate, and gall out of honnie. The ſonne of GOD knewe well what was profitable: yet wee ſee that hee doth not eſcape but he offendeth many of his.

Therfore howſo euer many do deteſt pure doctrine, yet is it not lawfull to ſuppreſſe the ſame. Onely let the teachers of the Church remember Paule his admonition, that the worde of God ought rightly to bee cut, and then they muſt goe forward couragiouſly through all manner of ſtumbling blockes. And if ſobeit, it chaunce that many doe fall away, let the worde of the Lorde be neuer a whit the leſſe fauourye in our mouthes, becauſe it doth not pleaſe the reprobate: for they are too daintie & faint hearted, whom the falling away of many doth ſo pearce, that they begin alſo to faint when theſe men fall. VVhen the Euangeliſt addeth that they walked no longer with Chriſt, his meaning is, that their reuolting was not full: but that they did only withdraw theſelues frō keeping cōpany with Chriſt.

2. Tim. 2. 25.

Yet doth he cōdemne thē as reuolts. VVhence we may learne, that wee can-cannot goe a footes breadth backward, but that there stayeth for vs the steepe downefall of vnfaithfull denial.

67 Therefore Iesus saith vnto the twelue. Because the Apostles faith might be sore shaken, when as they sawe that there did only remaine suche a few of so many, Christ turneth his talke vnto them: and teacheth that there is no cause, why they shoulde suffer themselues to be carried away with the lightnesse and inconstancie of other men. For when as hee asketh them whether they also would depart or no, he doth it to confirme their faith. For whilest that he setteth himselfe before them, with whom they may remaine, he doth also exhort thē, that they do not adioyn thēselues vnto the reuoltes. And truly if faith shalbe grounded in Christ, it shall not depend vpon men, neither shall it euer quaile, although it shall see heauen and earth go together. We must note the circumstance, that Christe beeing depriued of all his Disciples almost, doth onely retaine twelue, as Esay, 6. 16. was commanded first to binde the testimonie, & seale the law in the disciples. Euery one of the faithfull is taught by such examples to followe GOD, although hee haue neuer a companion.

68 Therefore Simon Peter answered him. Simon answereth in this place, as els where, in the name of them all, because they thought all the same, saue only þ in Iudas there was no sinceritie. Furthermore, there are two mēbers of this answer. For Peter sheweth a cause why he together with his brethren doth rest vpon Christ: because they perceiue that his doctrine is wholesome and liuely vnto them. Secondly he confesseth, that whyther soeuer they goe when as they haue left him, there remaineth nothing but death. When as he saith, the wordes of life, the genetiue case is put in steede of the adiunct, which is common amongest the Hebrewes. Furthermore, this is an excellent commendation of the Gospel in that it ministreth vnto vs eternall life. As Paule doth testifie that it is the power of God vnto saluation vnto euery one which beleeueth. The law truly conteineth life: but because it denounceth the giltinesse of eternal death vnto the transgressors, it can do no other thing but kill. Life is offered vs in the Gospel after a farre other sort: namely whilest that God doth reconcile himselfe vnto vs freely, in not imputing our sinnes. And Peter speaketh no common thing here concerning Christ, when as hee saith that he hath the wordes of eternall life: but he attributh this vnto him, as proper to him: whereupon followeth that second thing, which I touched of late, so soone as we are once departed from Christ, there remayneth nothing euery where saue death. Wherfore there remaineth certaine destruction for all those who being not content to haue him to be their master, doe flie away vnto mens inuentions. Rom. 1. 16.

69 And wee haue beleeued. The verbes are of the preterperfecttence, but, they may be resolued into the presentence: but this doth not muche belong vnto the sense. Furthermore, Peter doth briefly comprehend the summe of faith in these wordes. But it seemeth that this confession doth but a little appertaine vnto the present matter: for the question was moued concerning the eating of Christ his flesh. I aunswere, although the twelue did not by and by comprehend whatsoeuer Christe taught, yet is it sufficient that according to their smal measure of faith they confesse him to be the authour of saluation, and doe submit themselues vnto him in all things. The worde beleeued is placed in the former place because the obedience of faith is the beginning of true vnderstanding: yea faith it selfe is indeed the eye of the minde. But immediatly after is added knowledge, which distinguisheth faith from erronious and false opinions. For the Turkes, the Iewes, and the Papists do beleeue: but they know nothing, ne yet vnderstand any thing. But knowledge is annexed vnto faith: because we know certainely and vndoubtedly the truth of God, not as humane sciences are apprehended: but whileſt that the spirit sealeth it in our heartes.

70 Iesus answered them. Seeing that Christ answereth them all, wee gather hereby, that they spake all by the mouth of Peter. Furthermore Christ doth in this place furnish and arme the eleuen Apostles, against ꝑ new offence, which was now at hand. This had been a greeuous engine of Satan to shake their faith, seeing they were brought vnto so smal a number: but the fall of Iudas might haue vtterly discouraged them. For seeing that Christ had chosen that holy number, who woulde haue thought that there coulde any thing bee taken away from the integritie thereof? Therefore this admonition is as much as if he shoulde haue saide, You are only twelue left of a great company. If the vnbeliefe of many hath not made your faith to quaile, prepare your selues vnto a newe combate: for this bande, though it be but a small one, shall yet be lesse by one man. In that Christ saith that he chose twelue, it is not referred vnto the eternall counsell of God (for doubtlesse it cannot bee that any of those should fall away who are predestinate vnto life) but seeing that they were chosen vnto the office of the Apostleship it was meete that they should excell others in godlinesse and holinesse of life. Therefore he put chosen in steede of excellent, and those wich were separated from the common sort. Is a diuell. It is questionles that his meaning was to make Iudas most detestable by this name. For they are deceiued that do extenuate the crueltie of the worde: and truly we can not sufficiently detest those that doe disalow so holy an office. Those Mal. 2. 7. teachers are called angels who doe execute their embassage well. Therfore he is worthily counted a Diuell, who being admitted into such an honorable order, doth degenerate through his vnfaithfulnesse, and wickednes. There is also another reason why God doeth suffer vs to vse more libertie against the reprobate, and wicked ministers of Satan, then against any other of the common sort of men. Wherefore if a diueliſh furie doth driue them, and mooue them, who were chosen to be pastors, that they become like vnto bruite beastes, and monsters, the dignitie of the order ought to be so farre from waxing vile, because of this, that it may rather bee commended vnto vs, seeing that such cruell reuenge doth follow the profanation thereof.

71 And he spake of Iudas. Although Iudas his owne conscience did accuse him, yet doe we not reade that hee was moued: so dull are hypocrites, that they doe not feele their wounds: and their faces are so harde before men, that they doe not doubt to preferre them selues before the veriè best

1 AND after theſe things Ieſus walked in Galilee: for he would not walke in Iudea becauſe the Iewes ſought to kill him.

2 And an holy day of the Iewes was at hand, the faſtening of the Tabernacles,

3 Therefore his brethern ſaid vnto him, Goe hence, and goe into Iurie, that thy diſciples may alſo ſee thy workes, which thou doeſt.

4 For no man doth any thing in ſecrete, and he himſelfe ſeeketh to be knowen: if thou doeſt theſe thinges ſhew thy ſelfe vnto the worlde.

5 For neither did his brethren beleeue in him.

6 Therefore Ieſus ſaid vnto them, my time is not yet come: but your time is alwayes readie.

7 The worlde cannot hate you: but me it hateth becauſe I teſtifie of it, that the workes thereof are euill.

8 Goe you vp vnto this feaſt: I goe not vp yet vnto this feaſt, becauſe my time is not yet fulfilled.

1 And he walked. The Euangeliſt as it ſeemeth doth not ſet downe the whole hiſtorie in order, but doth gather out of diuers times ſuche thinges as were worthie to be remembred. He ſaith here that Ieſus was conuerſant for a time in Galilee, becauſe he had no ſafe abiding place amongeſt the Iewes. If any man doe thinke it an abſurd thing, that Chriſt ſought lurking places, who was able with his becke to breake and make voyde all the endeuours of his enemies: we may eaſily anſwere: namely, that being mindful of the perſon which was giuen him by his father, he would keepe himſelfe within the boundes of man. For hauing taken vpon him the perſon of mā, he abaſed himſelf, vntil ſuch time as his father ſhould lift him vp. Therefore he eſcheweth danger after the maner of men. If any man obiect, ſeeing that he knewe that the time of his death was appointed before, there was no cauſe why he ſhoulde flie: that former anſwere doth alſo agree with this fitly. For he behaued him ſelfe as a man ſubiect to perils: wherefore he ought not to burſt in into the middeſt of daungers. It is not for vs to marke, in entring into daungers, what God hath determined with himſelf concerning vs: but what hee commaundeth and preſcribeth, what our duetie doeth exact and require, how we may lawfully leade our life. But Chriſt did ſo auoid dangers, that notwithſtanding hee turned not an hayres breadth aſide from the courſe of his office: for to what end ſeeketh ſafetie of life, ſaue only that we may ſerue the Lorde? Therefore we muſt alwayes beware that we looſe not the cauſes of liuing for life. And in that the deſpiſed corner of Galilee doth lodge Chriſt, whome Iurie cannot awaye with, wee doe hereby ſee and perceiue, that godlineſſe and the feare of GOD doe not alwayes appeare in the principall places of the Church. Phil. 2. 7.

2 And the feaſt day. Although I affirme nothing, yet is it likely that this chaunced in the ſeconde yeere after Chriſte his Baptiſme,

It ſkilleth not at this time to ſpeake any more of this feaſt day, whereof the Euangeliſt maketh mention. Moſes declareth to what end and vſe it was commaunded, Leuit, 23.34. namely, that by that yeerely ryte the Iewes might remember, that their fathers liued fortie yeeres vnder tents when as they wanted houſes, that by this meanes they might celebrate the grace of their deliuerance. VVe haue ſaid before that a double cauſe did moue Chriſt to come vnto Ieruſalem vnto the feaſt dayes: namely, becauſe being ſubiect to the law that he might redeeme vs from the bondage thereof, he would omit no point of the obſeruation therof: and ſecondly, becauſe he had better opportunitie offered to preach the goſpel, in ſuch an extraordinarie aſſembly and multitude of men. The Euangeliſt ſaith that Chriſt did ſo reſt apart in Galilee, as if he would not haue come to Ieruſalem.

3 Therfore his brethren ſaid vnto him. Vnder this word do the Hebrewes comprehend all kinsfolkes and alyances of what degre ſoeuer they bee. He ſaith that Chriſt was mocked of them, becauſe that he did lie hid in the obſcure place of Galilee. Notwithſtanding it may be doubted whether ambition did moue thē or no, to deſire, that Chriſt might become famous. Although we graunt this, yet is it manifeſt that they do contemptiblie mocke him, becauſe they doe thinke that he dealeth not according to reaſon and counſell: yea, they caſt fooliſhneſſe in his teeth, becauſe when as he woulde be ſomething, diſtruſting himſelfe he dare not come abroad, that he may be ſeene of men. VVhen as they ſay, that thy diſciples may alſo ſee, they doe not only ſpeake of thoſe who were continually with him: but of thoſe whom he would gather to himſelfe euery where out of the whole nation. For they adde afterward, thou wilt be knowen of all men, and in the meane ſeaſon thou lyeſt hid. If thou doeſt theſe things, that is, if thou doeſt deſire ſuch honour, that al men may ſpeake of thee, make all mē to looke vpō thee. They ſet the world againſt a few men, amongſt whom he liued without honour. There may alſo another ſenſe bee gathered out of theſe wordes, If thou doeſt theſe thinges, that is, ſeeing that thou arte endewed with ſo greate power, that thou purchaſeſt fame vnto thy ſelfe with myracles, looſe them not. For whatſoeuer is giuen thee of God thou ſpendeſt it heere in vaine, whereas there are no fit witneſſes and iudges. Here we ſee how great the ſlacknеſſe of men is, in conſidering vpon the workes of God: for Chriſtes kinſmen woulde neuer haue ſpoken thus, vnleſſe they had troden vnder foote the plentifull teſtimonies of his diuine power, which they ought to haue receiued and reuerenced with great admiration. That which wee heare in this place of Chriſt falleth out dayly, that neighbours doe more diſquiet the childrē of god then ſtrangers: for they are inſtrumēts of Satā, to prouoke thoſe ſomtimes vnto ambition, ſometimes vnto couetouſneſſe, who deſire to ſerue God purely, ſincerely, and faithfully. But when as Chriſte doth driue away ſuch Satans, hee teacheth vs by his exāple, that we muſt not graunt the fooliſh petitions of our brethren.

5 For neither did his brethren. Heereby wee gather howe little carnall kindred doth auaile: for the ſpirite marketh Chriſte his kinſfolkes with a continuall mark of infamie, in that being conuinced with ſo many teſtimonies of workes, they did not then beleeue. Therefore as Paule ſaith, whoſoeuer doth wish to be iudged in Chriſt let him bee a new creature. For they who adict themſelues wholy to ſerue God, are vnto Chriſte inſteede of father, mother, and brethren. Wherfore the ſuperſtition of the Papiſts is ſo much the more ridiculous, who ſetting apart all other, doe only extoll the honour of the blood in the virgin Marie: as if the woman was not reprehended by Chriſte himſelfe, whiche cryed out of the middeſt of the companie, Bleſſed is the wombe which bare thee, and the paps which gaue thee ſucke. For Chriſt anſwered, Nay rather bleſſed are they that heare the woorde of God. Luk. 11. 27.

6 My time is not yet come. Some doe falſly expound it of the time of his death. For he ſpeaketh of the time of his iourneying. And hee doth teſtifie that he differreth from his kinsfolks in this, becauſe they may freely and without feare goe abrode in the ſight of the world at all houres becauſe they haue the world to be their friend: but he himſelfe is afraid becauſe the world hateth him. By theſe words he giueth thē to vnderſtād, that they gaue him counſell amiſſe concerning a matter whiche they knewe not: ſecondly he proueth that they are altogether carnall, when as he ſaith that the world cannot hate thē. For the peace of the world muſt be redeemed with wicked conſent vnto vices and all manner of euill.

7 But me it hateth, becauſe I teſtifie. The worlde is taken in this place for the men who are not borne againe, who retaine their owne nature. Therefore whoſoeuer are not begotten againe as yet with the ſpirite, Chriſt pronounceth them to be his aduerſaries. And why? becauſe he condemneth their workes. And if ſobeit we ſtay our ſelues vpon Chriſt his iudgement, we muſt needes graunt that the whole nature of man is ſo corrupt, and peruers, that there can no right thing, no ſincere thing, no good thing proceede thence. Behold why any of vs doth pleaſe himſelf, ſo long as he abideth at home with himſelfe.

Nowe Chriſte ſaith that he is hated, becauſe he doth teſtifie that the workes of the world are euill. He giueth vs to vnderſtand that the goſpel cannot be rightly preached, but that the whole worlde muſt be cited giltie before Gods iudgement ſeate, that by that meanes it may be trodē down, & that fleſh & blood may by brought to nought, according to that, when the ſpirite ſhall come, he ſhall reproue the world of ſin. We doe alſo learne heere, that there is ſuche pride bread in men, that they flatter themſelues in their vices. For doubtles they would not waxe angrie, when as they are reprehended, vnleſſe being blinded with too much loue of themſelues they did flatter themſelues in their owne vices: yea, pride and arrogancie are the moſt deadly & the chiefeſt of all the vices which are in man. It is the ſpirite alone which maketh vs meeke and gentle, to ſuffer our ſelues to bee reprehended, and ſo conſequently to offer our ſelues to be ſlaine with the ſworde of the Goſpell. Ioh. 16. 8.

9 And when he had ſaid theſe thinges vnto them hee abode in Galilee.

10 And when his brethren were gone vp, then went he himſelfe vnto the feaſt alſo not openly, but as it were priuilie.

11 Therefore the Iewes ſought him on the holy day, and they ſaid, where is he?

12 And there was much murmuring concerning him in the companies: ſome ſaid he is good, and other ſome ſaid, Nay, but he ſeduceth the multitude.

13 Neuer

13 Notwithſtanding no man ſpake openly of him for feare of the Iewes.

9 He abode in Galilee. Here the Euangeliſt ſetteth before our eyes on the one ſide the kinsfolkes of Chriſt, who after the common cuſtome make a ſhew of the worſhip of God: yet neuertheleſſe they are friends with the wicked, and therefore they walke without feare. On the other ſide he ſetteth before vs Chriſt, who being hated of the worlde, came priuily into the citie, vntill ſuche time as the neceſſitie of his office dyd compell him to ſhowe himſelfe openly. And if ſobeit there is nothing more miſerable then to bee pulled away from Chriſte, accurſed bee that peace whiche coſteth ſo deare, that wee muſte renounce Chriſte.

11 Therefore the Iewes. Here wee muſt conſider in what ſtate the Church did ſtande. For the Iewes did at that time gape after the promiſed redemption, as being hungrie: yet when Chriſt appeareth vnto thē they ſtand in doubt, hereupon did ariſe that confuſed murmuring, & diuers ſpeeches. In that they murmur priuilie it is a ſigne of the tyrannie which the Prieſtes and Scribes had taken to themſelues. Truely it is an horrible example, that ſeeing there was but that Church only vpon the earth, there ſhoulde be ſet before vs here a confuſed and disfigured diſorder. They who gouerne in ſteed of ſhepheardes doe keepe the people vnder with feare and terrour, in the whole bodie there is filthie waſtneſſe and dolefull diſsipation.

By the Iewes hee vnderſtandeth the common ſort, which being now accuſtomed to heare Chriſt for the ſpace of two yeeres, doth ſeeke him, when as hee appeareth not according to his common cuſtome. For when as they ſay where is hee? They ſpeake of a knowen man: and yet notwithſtandyng this woorde doth ſhew that they were not earneſtly affectioned hytherto, and that they ſtande alwayes in doubt.

12 Much murmuring. He giueth vs to vnderſtande, that whereſoeuer men did aſſemble themſelues in companies (as it falleth out often in great aſſemblies) there paſſed ſecrete ſpeeches concerning Chriſt. The diſſentiō wherof mētion is made in this place, doth declare, that there be diuers iudgements of men concerning Chriſte, euen in the middeſt of the Church. And as wee are not afraide to receiue Chriſt who was condemned long agoe, of the moſt part of his nation: ſo wee muſt be armed in ſuch ſort, that we be not troubled with the diſſention whiche reigneth at this day.

Againe, we may ſee how great the raſhneſſe of men is in matters appertayning vnto God. They wold not haue bin ſo licentious in any ſmall buſines: but ſo ſoone as there ariſeth a queſtion concerning the ſonne of God and his holy doctrine, they doe by and by iudge raſhly. Wherfore we muſt keepe ſo much the greater moderation, leaſt we doe raſhly condemne our life with the eternall truth of God. And if ſobeit the worlde doe count vs deceiuers, let vs remember that theſe are Chriſte his markes, ſo that in the meane ſeaſon wee doe indeede declare that we ſpeake the truth. Furthermore, this place ſheweth, that in a great multitude, euen whereas the body it ſelf is confuſed, there are alwayes ſome who thinke well: but theſe few who are ſober minded, are ouerrunne of many that are mad, 13 Notwithſtanding no man ſpake openly. Hee calleth the chiefe gouernours Iewes in this place, in whoſe power the gouernment was. They did ſo hate chriſt, that they ſuffered no word to be ſpokē on either part: not becauſe it greeued them to haue him ſlaundered: but becauſe they thought that it was the beſt way to burie his name by forgetfulneſſe. So the enemies of the truth after that they haue tryed, that they cannot preuaile by their crueltie, they would couet nothing more, thē ſ the remembrance thereof may be ſuppreſſed, and this is all they goe about. In that being brought vnder with feare they kept ſilence, that was altogether tyrannicall, as I haue ſaide before. For as vnbrideled libertie hath no place in the eſtate of the Churche, when as it is well ordered: ſo when as all libertie is kept vnder with feare, that no man dare ſay any thing, it is a moſt miſerable eſtate. The power of Chriſt did appeare to bee ſo much the more excellent and wonderfull in that getting an audience amongeſt his armed enemies, and their furious hatred, and in ſuche a fearefull gouernment, he did defend the truth (as they ſay) with open mouth.

14 And when halfe the holy day was paſt, Ieſus went vppe into the Temple and taught,

15 And the Iewes wondered ſaying, how knoweth this man learning ſeeing hee never learned?

16 Ieſus anſweared them and ſaide, My doctrine is not mine, but his that ſente mee, 17 If any man will doe his will, he ſhall knowe of the doctrine, whether it be of god, or I ſpeake of my ſelfe.

18 Hee that ſpeaketh of himſelfe, ſeeketh his owne glory: and hee that ſeeketh the glorye of him that ſent him, this man ſpeaketh the truth and there is no vnrighteouſneſſe in him,

19 Did not Moſes giue you the lawe, and none of you doth the lawe? why doe ye ſeeke to kill mee?

14 He went vp into the Temple. Now wee ſee that Chriſt did not ſo feare, that he fayled in his ductie. For this was the cauſe of his tarying, that hee might make his Sermon in the moſt famous aſſemblie. Therefore we may ſometimes giue place to daunger, but no opportunitie of well doing muſt be omitted or neglected. In that hee teacheth in the Temple, he doth this according to the auncient order and cuſtome. For when as God commaunded ſo many ceremonies, hee woulde not haue his people to be occupied in colde & vain ſightes only. And that the cōmoditie might appeare, it was requiſite that doctrine ſhould bee ioyned with them. By this meanes outward rytes, are liuely images of ſpirituall thinges, when as they haue their forme out of the worde of God. And now becauſe the Prieſtes were almoſt dumbe, and the Scribes did corrupt the pure doctrine with their leauen, and falſe gloſſes, Chriſt tooke vppon him the office of teaching: and that for good cauſes, ſeeing that he was the chiefe prieſt: as he doth ſhortly after affirme, that hee doth take in hand nothing but at his fathers commandement.

15 And the Iewes maruelled, They are deceiued who thinke ſ Chriſt his his talke was ſo picked, that it was greatly liked of. For the Iewes doe ſo wonder that they take an occaſion to deſpice him therefore. For ſuch is the vnthankfulnes of men, that they doe alwaies willingly find matter to erre in eſteeming the workes of God. If God doe worke by ordinarie meanes, and by a common way (as they ſay) theſe meanes which appeare vnto the eyes, doe hinder vs like vailes from ſeeing the hand of God, therefore we acknowledge nothing then, but that which is humaine.

But and if the vnwonted power of God doe appeare aboue both the order of nature, and the meanes which are commonly knowen, we are aſtonied, & that paſſeth away as a dreame which ſhould haue moued al our ſenſes throughly. For (which is our pride) wee make no account of that, the reaſon whereof doth not appeare. This was a merueilous token of the grace and power of God, that Chriſt being taught of no maſter, did yet notwithſtanding excell in the excellent knowledge of the ſcripture: yea, he that was neuer a ſcholler, was a moſt excellent teacher & maſter. And for this cauſe do the Iewes deſpice the grace of god, becauſe it doth exceede their capacitie. Therefore being admoniſhed with this example, let vs learne to vſe greater reuerence in weighing the workes of God, then we are wont.

16 My doctrine is not mine. Chriſt telleth the Iewes that that whiche was vnto them an offence, is rather a ladder, which ought to carry them vp to behold the glory of God, as if he ſhold ſay: VVhenas you ſee a teacher that is not trayned vp in the ſchoole of men, confeſſe that hee is taught of God. For the heauenly father would therfore rather haue his ſonne to come out of a carpenters ſhop, then out of the ſchooles of the Scribes, to the ende the beginning of the Goſpell might be more famous leaſt any man ſhoulde thinke that it was forged vppon earth: or leaſt any man ſhoulde feigne that man is the authour thereof. So likewiſe Chriſte did chooſe to himſelfe ignorant men and idiots to be his Apoſtles, and he ſuffered them to continue in groſſe ignorance three yeeres, that being taught in one moment, he might bring them foorth as newe men, and conſequently as angels which came downe from heauen. In the mean ſeaſon Chriſt ſheweth from whence we muſt fet the authority of the ſpirituall doctrine: namely, frō god alone. And wheras he denieth ỳ the doctrin which is his fathers, is his, he hath reſpect vnto the capacitye of the auditorie therein, who had no higher opinion of him, but that he was a man. Therefore by a conceſſion or graunting he ſuffereth himſelfe to be thought ſo to differ from the father, that notwithſtanding he ſpeaketh nothing, but that which he commaunded. The ſumme is, that that which he teacheth in his fathers name, is not mans, neither did it proceed from man, that it may be freely contemned. VVee ſee with what argument he wianeth authoritie to his doctrine: namely, by referring it vnto god the author therof. VVe ſee alſo by what right & reaſon hee deſireth to bee heard: namely, becauſe hee is ſent of his father to be a teacher. Therefore it is meete that hee haue both theſe, whoſoeuer doeth take vppon him the office of teaching, and will be beleeued.

17 If any man will. A preuention which cutteth of contrary obiections.

For

For seeing that he had there many aduersaries, euerie man might easily murmur against him, why doest thou tell vs of the name of God, from whom we doe not acknowledge that thou camest? Why doest thou enforce vpon vs that principle (which we do not graunt vnto thee) that thou teachest nothing but that which he commaundeth thee? Therefore Christ gathereth here that right iudgement doeth flowe from the feare of God, and reuerence: therefore if they had their mindes framed vnto the feare of God, they should easily know whether that be true or no which he preacheth. Whereby he toucheth them also by the way. For how commeth it to passe that they cannot discerne, saue only because the chiefe point of vnderstanding faileth them: namely, godlinesse, and the desire to obey God? This sentence is chiefly to be noted, Satan lyeth in wayte for vs continually, and he setteth snares on euery side, that hee may take vs by his subtiltie. In this place Christ armeth vs very well to take heed, that we may neuer be subiect to his seducings: namely, if we be readie to obey God, he will not faile vs, but will lighten vs with the light of his spirite, that we may be able to discerne betweene truth and lying.

Therefore there is nothing which hindereth vs from iudging aright, saue only because we are vnapt to be taught and stubborne, and we are iustly punished for our hypocrisie, so often as Satan doth delude vs. So Moses telleth vs, that when as false Prophetes arise, we are tempted & prooued of the Lord: because they shall neuer be deceiued that shalbe of a right heart. Heereby it appeareth how wickedly and foolishly many men doe keepe back themselues from all studie & desire to learne with this feare, whileſt that they are afraid least they should erre: as if it were spoken in vaine, knock, and it shall bee opened vnto you. But let vs rather not doubt but bee fully perswaded that the spirite of discretion is giuen vs, to be our continuall guide, if we be wholy giuen to serue and obey God. If other men be desposed to erre, they shall at length perceiue how vaine the cloakes and colours of their ignorance are. And truly whosoeuer doe doubt at this day, and had rather nourish their doubting then either by reading or hearing earnestly to enquire where the truth of God is, we see that these men doe carelesly contemne God in generall principles. One man will say that he prayeth for the dead, because distrusting his owne wit he dare not condemne that which wicked mē did inuent concerning Purgatorie: In the meane season he will graunt himselfe libertie to play the whoremonger. Another man will say that hee hath not wit enough to distinguish betweene the pure doctrine of Christe and the corrupt inuentions of men: in the meane while hee will haue enough to steale and forsweare. Deut. 13. 3. Mat. 7. 7.

Finally, all these men who will holde nothing, who pretende the vayle of doubting in matters which at this day are called in question, do bewray their manifest contempt of God, in matters which are nothing darke. Therfore there is no cause why wee shoulde marueile that the doctrine of the Gospel is at this day receiued of very fewe, seeing that the feare of God is so rare in the worlde. And in these words of Christ is contained a true definition of godlinesse: namely, when as we are readie to follow the will of God with all our heart: which no man can do vnlesse he do abandon himselfe in his owne conceit.

Or

Or I speake of my selfe. VVe must note how Christ woulde haue vs to iudge of euerie doctrine. For he will haue vs to receiue that without doubting which is of God: and doth freely permit vs to refuse ỹ which is of man. For he setteth downe this marke onely, whereby we may discerne betwene the doctrines.

18 Hee which speaketh of himselfe. He hath hytherto taught that this is the only cause why men are blinde, because they are not gouerned with the feare of God: now he addeth another marke in the doctrine it selfe, whereby we may know whether it be man his doctrine or Gods. For what doctrine soeuer doth set foorth the glory of God, it is holy and diuine: and what doctrine soeuer doth serue for the ambition of men, & doth darken the glorie of God by extolling them, it doth not only deserue no credite, but it ought sharply to be reiected. Therfore he shal neuer erre that shall set before his face the glory of God to aime at: he shal neuer be deceiued with the shew of that which is right, that shal try by this touchstone, that which is brought in the name of God. VVe are also taught hereby, that no man can faithfully vndertake the office of a teacher in the church, saue only he who being void of ambition, shall take this one thing in hand, with al his might and maine to further the glory of God. VVhen as he saith, that there is no vnrighteousnes in him, he giueth vs to vnderstand that ther is no wicked or deceitful thing in him: but that he doth that whiche becommeth a good & sincere Minister of God.

19 Did not Moses, The Euangelist doth not recite all the wordes of Christ in order, but doth onely gather briefly the principall pointes of things, which appertaine vnto the summe of the whole matter. The Priests and Scribes were incensed against him, because he had healed the man that was sick of the palsey: they professed that they did this through zeale of the law. to the end he may refute their hypocrisie, he draweth an argument not from the matter, but from the person. For because they do al of them licentiously pamper themselues in their vices, as if they had neuer knowen any law, he gathereth thence that they are touched with no loue or desire of the law. Truly this defence were not sufficient to proue the matter: (for admit we graunt that they did paint their wicked and vniust hatred with a false colour, yet notwithstanding it followeth not hereupon that Christ did well, if he committed any thing cõtrarie to the appointment of ỹ law, for we must not set the mittigatiõ of our fault from other mens offences): but Christ doth in this place ioyne two members together: in the former he appealeth vnto the consciences of his enemies, and seeing that they did proudly boast that they were patrones of the law, he plucketh this visure from their face: for he obiecteth vnto them, that they graunt themselues leaue to breake the law as often as they will: and that therefore they cared not for the lawe. That done he descendeth vnto the matter it selfe, as we shall by and by see: so that the full and perfect defence consisteth vpon his partes. Therfore the summe of this member is, that there is no zeale of the law in the despisers therof. VVhereupon Christ inferreth that the Iewes are enforced vnto so great madnesse by some other cause, whileſt that they couet to kill him. After this sort must we pul out the wicked out of their lurking dennes, as often as they set themselues against God and sound doctrine, feigning that they doe this vpon a godly affection. Thoſe that are at this day the moſt bitter enemies of the Goſpel, and the moſt ſtoute defenders of papiſtrie, they haue nothing wherewith they doe more purchaſe fauour then this, that they are moued with feruentneſſe of zeale: but and if their life bee throughly examined being altogether polluted with moſt filthie crimes, they doe openly mocke God. Who is he that knoweth not that groſſe Epicuriſme doth reigne in the Pope his courte? Doe the Biſhops and Abbots ſo ſhamefully couer their filthineſſe, that any ſhew of religion doth appeare? Are not the Monkes alſo, and ſuche brawlers ſo giuen ouer vnto all wickednes, luſt, couetouſnes, & al monſters of wickednes, that their life doth crie that they haue quite forgotten God? And now ſeeing they are not aſhamed to make their boaſt of the zeale of God and the Church, they are to be brideled with this anſwere of Chriſt?

20 The compame anſwered and ſaid, thou haſt a Diuell, who ſeeketh to kill thee?

21 Ieſus anſwered and ſaid vnto them, I haue done one worke, and yee all marueile.

22 Therfore gaue Moſes you circumciſion (not that it is of Moſes, but of the fathers) and ye circumciſe a man on the Sabboth day.

23 If a man receiue circumciſion on the Sabboth day, that the lawe of Moſes may not be broken, are you angrie with me, becauſe I haue made a man all whole on the Sabboth day?

24 Iudge not according to the outward ſight: but iudge right iudgement.

20 Thou haſt a Diuell. It is as much as if they had ſaid, thou art mad. For it was a common ſpeech amongſt the Iewes, who were exerciſed in this doctrine that men are poſſeſſed of the diuel, whenas they go mad, or when as vnderſtanding & reaſon are taken from them. And truly as light & moderate chaſticements, are the fatherly corrections of God: ſo when he handeleth vs more hardly and ſharply, he ſeemeth not to ſtrike vs with his hand: but rather to vſe the Diuel as an executioner or miniſter of his wrath. But the multitude chideth Chriſt with a ſingle minde: for the counſels of the Prieſtes were not openly knowen. Therfore theſe fooliſh men do aſcribe it vnto madnes, that Chriſt complaineth that they ſought to kill him. Hereby we are taught, that we muſt take good heed that we giue not iudgement vpon vnknowen things: but & if it fal out that at any time we are condemned raſhly of the vnskilfull, we muſt according to the example of Chriſt patiently put vp iniurie.

21 I haue done one worke, Now bidding adue vnto the perſons, hee beginneth to intreat of the thing it ſelfe. For he ſheweth that that myracle which he hath wrought is not repugnant vnto the law of God. In that he ſaith that he hath done one work, his meaning is, that hee is accuſed only of one crime, or that he is reprehended for one work only, becauſe he had healed a man vpon the Sabboth day: & that when as they doe more works of the ſame ſort or altogether like vnto theſe, they are not found fault with. For there paſſed no Sabboth but there were many infants circumciſed in Iurie. By this exãple doth he defend his fact: althogh he doth not ſimply reaſon from the like thing: but it is a compariſon of the greater thing & the leſſer. Circumciſion & the healing of the man that was ſick of the paſſey were like in this, becauſe they were both the worke of God: but Chriſt proueth that this ſecond was the more excellent, becauſe the benefite is extended vnto the whole man.

Fur-

Furthermore, if he had cured a man onely of a corporall diſeaſe, the compariſon ſhould haue been nothing worth : for circumciſion which appertaineth to the health of the ſoule, ſhould be more excellent. Therefore Chriſt ioyneth the ſpirituall fruit of the myracle with the external benefit done to the bodie, and therfore doth worthilie prefer the perfect health of the man before circumciſion. There may be alſo another reaſon of the compariſon : namely, that the Sacraments haue not alwayes their force and effect preſent : but Chriſt himſelf wrought effectually in curing the man that was ſick of the palſey. But I doe rather imbrace that former expoſition: that the Iewes do maliciouſly & reprochfully find fault with that work, wherein the grace of God doth more plainly appeare, then in circumciſion, which they do ſo much honor, that they do think that the Sabboth is not broken by it. The marueiling wherof he ſpeaketh, doth ſignifie that murmuring which aroſe about the fact of Chriſt: becauſe they thought that he durſt do more then was lawfull.

22 Therefore Moſes gaue you circumciſion. The illatiue word ſeemeth not to agree, therfore ſome do take (dia touto) for (dia to,) but the Greeke conſtruction is repugnant to their opinion. Therfore I do expound it more ſimplie, that circumciſion was ſo commaunded, that the vſe of that ſigne was neceſſary euen vpon the Sabboths: as if he ſhould ſay, that it was ſufficiently ſhewed vnto them therby, that the worſhip of the Sabboth is not violated by the works of God, that Chriſt may applie the example of circumciſion vnto the preſent cauſe: yet notwithſtanding he vſeth a correction by and by, when as he ſaith, that Moſes was not the firſt miniſter of circumciſion. But this was ſufficient for him, that Moſes who was ſo ſtraight an exactor of the Sabboth, did notwithſtanding cõmaund that infants ſhould be circumciſed the eight day, although it fell vpon the Sabboth day.

24 Iudge not. After that he had ended his defence, he vſeth alſo an expoſtulation, becauſe being carried away wᵗ wicked affections, they iudge not according to the thing and the cauſe. Circumciſion was reuerenced amongeſt them for good cauſes, when as it was done vpon the Sabboth day. They knew that the law was not broken becauſe the workes of god doe agree well together: why do they not thinke the ſame of the worke of Chriſte, ſaue only becauſe a preiudice conceiued of the perſon of Chriſt doth poſſeſſe their mindes? Therefore there ſhall no iudgement be right ſaue that which ſhall bee giuen according to the truth of the matter. For ſo ſoone as the perſons come abroade, they turne the eyes and ſenſes of all men vnto them, ſo that the truth doth vaniſhe away by and by. As this admonition ought to be of force in all cauſes and matters, ſo is it more then neceſſarie when as we haue the heauenly doctrine in hand. For ther is nothing which happeneth ſoner, then that wee be eſtraunged from the ſame with the hatred and contempt of men.

25 Therefore ſome of the men of Ieruſalem ſaide, Is not this he whome they ſeeke to kill?

26 And beholde he ſpeaketh openly, and they ſay nothing to him: whether or no doe the rulers know indeed, that this is Chriſt indeed?

27 But we know whence this man is: but when Chriſt ſhall come, no man ſhall know whence hee is.

28 Therfore Ieſus cryed in the Temple, teaching, and ſaying you both know mee, and yee know whence I am: and I came not of my ſelfe: but he ſpeaketh the truth that ſent me, whome you know not.

29 But I know him, becauſe I am of him, and he hath ſent mee.

30 Therfore they ſought to take him, & no man laid hand on him, becauſe his howr was not yet come.

25 Certaine of the men of Ieruſalem. Namely ſuch as knewe of the lying in wayt of the rulers, and which knewe, how greatly Chriſt was hated. For the common people (as wee ſaw a little before) counted this as a dreame or doting. Therfore thoſe who knewe with what outragious hatred the chiefe rulers of their nation were incenſed againſt Chriſt, do not marueile in vaine that Chriſte was not only openly conuerſaunt in the temple they being quiet, but that he did alſo preach freely: but they offend in that, that in a myracle altogether diuine, they do not conſider the prouidence of God. So carnall men ſo often as they ſee any ſtraunge worke of God, they marueile indeed: but in the meane ſeaſon, there commeth no conſideration of Gods power into their minde. But it is our dutie more wiſely to weigh the workes of God: eſpecially ſeeing that the wicked whenas they haue aſſayed all things, doe not ſo hinder the courſe of the goſpel as they would deſire, we may ſurely think that their endeuours are void, becauſe God is able to throw them down with his hand being ſet againſt them.

27 But we know whence this man is. Heere we doe ſee not only howe great the blindneſſe of men is, when they are to iudge of diuine matters: but that this vice is almoſt ingendred in them, that they haue witte enough to lay ſtumbling blockes before themſelues, that they may not come vnto the knowledge of the truth. There doe oftentimes fall out offences through the ſubtiltie of Satan, which may driue away moſte men from Chriſt, but and if the way were plaine and equall euery man would feigne vnto himſelfe an offence. So long as the rulers knew not Chriſt, this multitude would haue beene letted with their vnbeliefe alone: now whenas that impediment is remoued they inuent a new cauſe leaſt they ſhould come vnto Chriſt. Yea, whereas it was meet that they ſhould be moued with the example of the rulers, they are ſo farre from following that which is right, that they do willingly ſtumble at the firſt ſtep. Euen ſo men that haue begun well are wont to faile by & by in ſuch ſort: vnles the Lord do direct their goings euē vnto the end. Furthermore, the argument wherwith they hinder themſelues, is this. The Prophets haue teſtified that the beginning of Chriſt ſhalbe vnknowē: but we know from whence this man came: therefore he is not to bee taken for Chriſt. Hereby are we taught what a dāgerous thing it is to teare in peeces the ſcriptures, and ſo conſequently Chriſt himſelfe, that he may be iudged only by the halfe of himſelf. God promiſed a deliuerer of the ſeed of Dauid: but he challengeth this office euery where vnto himſelfe, as proper to himſelfe. Therefore it was requiſite that God ſhould be reuealed in the fleſh, that hee might be the Redeemer of his Mich. 5. 2. Church. So Micheas assigneth the place where Christ should be borne. Out of thee Bethleehem shall arise a captaine, that he may gouerne my people. But immediately after he speaketh of an higher going out, and therefore hidden and secrete. These miserable men, whilest that they respect nothing in Christ saue that which is subiect to contempt, they doe rashlye gather that he is not he that was promised. Therefore let vs learne so to behold Christ being humble in ȳ flesh, that this humilitie which is despised amongest the wicked, may extoll vs vnto his heauenly glory. So that Bethlehem where he should haue beene borne as he was man, shall be vnto vs a gate through which we may goe in vnto the eternall God.

28 Therefore Iesus cryed. Hee inueigheth with bitter wordes against theyr rashnes, because that pleasing themselues proudly in a false opinion, they did exclude themselues from the knowledge of the truth. As if he shoulde say, whilest that you know all thinges, you know nothyng. And truly there is no worse plague then when as the confidence of that little knowledge which men haue, doth make them so drunken, that they doe carelessly reiect whatsoeuer is contrarie to their meaning. Hee speaketh tauntingly, when he saith, Yee know mee, and yee know from whence I am, I came not of my selfe. He setteth that which is true against the opinion which they had falsely conceiued: as if he should say, whilest that you haue your eyes fastened vpon the earth, you doe also thinke that I am wholy subiect to these thinges: and therefore you contemne me as a base start vp: but God will testifie that I came from heauen. Therfore howsoeuer you doe reiect mee, God will indeede acknowledge that I am his. He calleth God true in the same sense wherein Paule calleth him faithful, If so be it (saith he) we be vnfaithful, he continueth faithfull, he 2. Tim. 2. 13. cannot denie himselfe. For his drift is this, that there is no whit of the credite of the Gospell diminished howsoeuer the worlde doe goe about to supplant it: that how much soeuer the wicked do pull from Christ, yet doth he remaine perfect: because the truth of God remaineth alwayes sound and like to himselfe. Christ seeth that he is despised: hee is so farre from yeelding that he doth rather couragiously tryumph against their mad arrogancie, who set nothing by him. It becommeth all the faithfull to be endewed with this inuincible and heroicall stoutnes. Yea our faith shall neuer be firme & stable, vnlesse it set light by the frowardnes of the wicked when as they arise against Christe. And it doth especially become godly teachers trusting to this ayd, to goe forward in defending sound doctrine, although the whole world say nay. So Ieremie calleth God his promiser and reuenger, because he is condemned as a deceiuer. Thou hast deceiued mee O Lord (saith he) and I am Ier. 20. 7 deceiued. So Isaias being on euery side ouerwhelmed with slaunders & reproches, he flieth vnto this sanctuarie, that he shall haue God the approuer of his cause. So Paule being oppressed with vniust iudgements, May. 50. 7. prouoketh them all vnto the day of the Lorde, counting it sufficient to set God alone against the raging world.

Whom yee know not. His meaning is that it is no maruell, if the Iewes know not him, who know not God: for this is the beginning of true wisdome to haue respect vnto God. When he doth attribute vnto him selfe ſelfe the knowledge of God, he giueth vs to vnderſtand that hee is not extolled raſhly vnto ſo great confidence. And he teachethvs by his example, that we muſt not lightly thruſt in the name of god, that we may boaſt of our patron, and the reuenger of our cauſe. For there are many too bold in boaſting of the authoritie of GOD, yea there is nothing more readie and bold to reiect the iudgements of all men, then frantike perſons, who make boaſt of their inuentions inſteed of the oracles of God. But we are taught by theſe wordes of Chriſt, that we muſt take good heed of vaine and friuolous confidence: and that then we muſt valiantly reſiſt men, when as we know the truth of God throughly. And he that is certainely perſuaded, that God is on his ſide there is no cauſe why he ſhould feare the crime of inſolencie in treading vnderfoote all the loftineſſe of the world.

29 Becauſe I am of him. Some there be that doe ſo diſtinguiſhe theſe two members, that they referre the former vnto the diuine eſſence of Chriſte, the other vnto the office inioyned him of his father, which that he might take vpon him, he clothed himſelfe with mans fleſh & nature, which although I dare not reiect, yet I cannot tell whether Chriſte woulde ſpeake ſo ſubtillie or no. I confeſſe indeede that the heauenly beginning and ariſing of Chriſt may bee gathered thence: but yet this is no ſufficient proofe of his eternall diuinitie againſte the Arrians.

30 Therefore they ſought to catch him. There wanted no will in them to hurt him, nay no endeuour: and they had ſtrength ſufficient. VVhy then do they linger in ſo great heate as though their handes and theyr feete had been bound? The Euangeliſt anſwereth, Becauſe his houre was not yet come. VVherby he telleth vs, that Chriſt was couered with his fathers ayde againſt their ſtrength and furious force. And he doth alſo preuent the offence of the croſſe: becauſe there is no cauſe why wee ſhould be troubled when as we heare that Chriſt was carryed away vnto death not at mans pleaſure: but becauſe he was aypointed of the father to be ſuch a ſacrifice. Hence may we gather a generall doctrine. For howeſoeuer we liue vntill a day, yet the houre of euerie mans death is appointed of God. It is an hard matter to beleeue, that being ſubiect to ſo many caſualties, being laid open vnto ſo many iniuries & layings in wayte of men and wilde beaſtes, being inuironed with ſo manie diſeaſes, yet we are out of all daunger, vnleſſe it be when the Lorde will call vs away. But we muſt ſtriue with diſtruſt: and firſt of all wee muſt hold ſuch doctrine as we heare in this place: Secondly, the ende thereof, and the exhortation which is gathered thence that all cares being caſt vpon God, euery man doe ſerue in his vocation, and that he bee not called away with any feare from his office: Yet may no man paſſe his bounds. For we muſt not go any farther truſting vpon the prouidence of God then God commaundeth.

31 And manie of the companie beleeued on him, and ſaide: when Chriſt ſhall come, ſhall he doe more myracles then this man doth?

32 The Phariſees heard the companie murmuring theſe thinges about him: and the Phariſees and Prieſtes ſent miniſters to take him.

33 Therefore Ieſus ſaid vnto them, yet a litle while am I with you, and I go vnto him that ſent me.

34 Yee ſhall ſeeke mee, and ſhall not finde mee: and where I am, you cannot come.

35 Therefore the Iewes ſaid amongeſt themſelues, whyther will he go, that we ſhall not finde him? will he goe into the diſperſion of the Greekes, and teach the Greekes?

36 VVhat ſpeech is this that he hath ſaid, yee ſhall ſeeke me, and ſhall not find mee? and, whither I goe, yee cannot come?

31 And many of the companie. It might ſeeme that Chriſt preached vnto thoſe which were deafe and altogether obſtinate: yet the Euangeliſt ſaith that there followed ſome fruite. Therefore howſoeuer ſome do fret, ſome do mocke, ſome do cauill, diuers diſſentions doe ariſe: yet ſhall not the preaching of the Goſpel be vnprofitable. Therefore wee muſt ſow the ſeed, and ſuffer patiently, vntill in tract of time the fruite doe ſhow it ſelfe. And here the worde beleeued is taken vnproperly, becauſe they did depend rather vpon ☞ myracles, then leane vnto the doctrine, neyther were they yet perſwaded that Ieſus was Chriſte: but becauſe they were readie to heare him, and becauſe they yeelded themſelues vnto him as vnto a maſter to be taught, ſuch preparation of faith is called faith. Therefore ſeeing that the ſpirite doth vouchſafe to giue ſuch a ſmall ſparke of a good affection, ſuch an honourable title, that ought to encourage vs to thinke that god accepteth faith how ſmal ſoeuer it be.

32 The Phariſees hearde. Hereby it appeareth that the Phariſees were bent to take all opportunities, being placed as it were in ſcout watches, leaſt they ſhould ſuffer Chriſt to come abrode. In the former place the Euangeliſt nameth them only: then afterward he adioyneth the prieſts vnto them, a part whereof they were. It is queſtionleſſe that, as they woulde be accounted the moſt zealous obſeruers of the law, ſo they did more ſharply ſet themſelues againſt Chriſt then all the reſt. But becauſe ſo long as they were alone they were not able to oppreſſe Chriſt, they referred the buſineſſe vnto the whole order of the Prieſts. So that they who did otherwiſe diſagree amongeſt themſelues, doe nowe with one conſent through the ayd of Satan, conſpire together againſt the ſonne of God.

And ſeeing that the Phariſees were ſo hote, and diligent to defende their tyrannie and corrupt ſtate of the Church, how much more feruent ought we to be in defending the kingdome of Chriſt? As mad is the contention of ☞ Papiſts at this day to quench the Goſpell. In the meane ſeaſon this is the worſt, that they doe not ſharpen our ſtudies with their example, to ſweat & labor more couragiouſly in the defending of ſound and godly doctrine.

33 Yet alittle. Some there be that thinke that theſe wordes were ſpoken vnto the preſent aſſemblie of the people: other ſome who think ☞ they were ſpoken vnto the miniſters ☞ were ſent to take Chriſt: But I am certainly perſuaded that Chriſt ſpeaketh properly vnto his enemies, which which tooke counſel together to deſtroy him. For he derideth their endeuours, becauſe they goe about all thinges in vaine, vntill ſuch time as the time appointed of the father be come. And he caſteth their ſtubbernesſe in their teeth, becauſe they doe not onely refuſe the grace offered vnto them, but doe alſo furiouſly reſiſt it, and he doth alſo threaten them, that it ſhalbe taken away ſhortly. VVhen he ſaith, I am with you, hee toucheth their vnthankfulnes, that whereas hee was giuen them of the father, whereas he deſcended from his heauenly glory, whereas inuiting them vnto himſelfe familiarly he deſired nothing more then to be preſent with them: yet were there but a few that did admit hym. VVhen as he ſaith, yet a little while, he telleth them that God will not long ſuffer his grace to be ſo filthilie deſpiced, And in the meane ſeaſon hee giueth them to vnderſtande that neither his life nor death are ſubiect to their will: but that there is a time appointed him of his father which muſt be fulfilled.

I goe vnto him that ſent mee. In theſe words he doth teſtifie that he ſhal not be extinguiſhed with death: but that rather when as he ſhall put of the mortall body, he ſhall declare by the moſt mightie triumph of his reſurrection, that he is the ſonne of God. As if he ſhould ſay, doe what you can: yet ſhall yee neuer bring to paſſe, but that my father ſhall receiue me into his heauenly glory, after that I haue ended the embaſſage inioined me. Therefore my eſtate ſhall not only remaine perfect after death: but there is a farre better eſtate prepared for me then. And hence may we gather a generall admonition: for Chriſt is preſent with vs ſo often as he calleth vs vnto hope of ſaluation, through the preaching of the Goſpel. For the preaching of the Goſpell is not called in vaine the cō-ming downe of Chriſt vnto vs. If we take holde of his hand, which he Ephe. 2. 17 holdeth foorth vnto vs, he will bring vs vnto the father: and he will not only ſhewe himſelfe nigh vnto vs ſo long as wee are ſtraungers in the worlde, but will dwell in vs continually. But and if we doe neglect his preſence, hee ſhall be no whit impayred: but when as he departeth from vs, he ſhall leaue vs altogether aliaunts from God and life.

34 Yee ſhall ſeeke mee, and ſhall not finde me: and where I am, They ſought Chriſt that they might put him to death. Here Chriſt deceiueth them with the diuers ſignifications of the word, becauſe it ſhould ſhortly come to paſſe, that they ſhoulde ſeeke him after another manner: namely, that they might finde ſome helpe and comfort in their miſerable and decayed affayres. As if he ſhould ſay, it troubleth you, and you cannot ſuffer me to be preſent with you a ſmall ſpace: but it ſhall come to paſſe ſhortly, that you ſhall ſeeke me in vaine: becauſe beeing remoued farre from you not only in body but alſo in power, I will behold your deſtruction. But here may a queſtion be asked, what manner ſeeking of Chriſte this was, ſeeing that it is manifeſt enough that Chriſt ſpeaketh of the reprobate, who were obſtinate euen vnto the end in the reiecting of the goſpel.

Some doe referre it vnto the doctrine: becauſe the Iewes in following the righteouſneſſe of workes amiſſe, did not obtaine that which they would, Many men doe vnderſtand it of the perſon of the Meſſias, that the Iewes being brought vnto extremitie ſhall ſeeke the Redeemer in vaine, But I doe ſimplie interprete it, that hereby are meant the ſorrowfull ſighings of the wicked, whileſt that being enforced with neceſſitie they after a ſort haue reſpect vnto God. But euen then in ſeeking they ſeeke not. For vnbeliefe and ſtubbornnes doe driue them from God, their heartes being as it were locked vp. They would deſire that God might be preſent to deliuer them, but they ſtoppe the way before themſelues with their want of repentance and the hardneſſe of their

Gen. 27. 38. hearte. VVe haue an example in Eſau, who was not only ſory becauſe the birthright was gotten away from him: but alſo fretting & fuming he breaketh out into furious indignation. But in the meane ſeaſon hee is ſo farre from the right kinde of ſeeking the bleſſing, that he doth then make himſelfe moſt vnworthie thereof. God is wont to reuenge the contempt of his grace in the reprobate in ſuch ſort, that being either ſore puniſhed, or bound with the feeling of their miſerie, or being driuen into other ſtraytes, they complaine, crie, and howle: but all in vain: becauſe being alwayes like to themſelues, they inwardly nouriſhe the ſame crueltie which they had before: neither are they carryed vnto god: but they had rather haue him chaunged, when as they cannot abolliſhe him. Henee may we learne that we muſt receiue Chriſt in time, whileſt that he ſtandeth as it were before vs: leaſt that the opportunitie to enioy him do eſcape vs, becauſe if the gate ſhall once be ſhut, we ſhall in Eſay. 49. 8. Prophet ſaith in another place: becauſe we know not how long the Lord will beare with our ſluggiſhneſſe. In theſe wordes, where I am, you cannot come, the preſentence is put inſteed of the future tence.

35 VVhether will he goe? The Euangeliſt addeth this of ſet purpoſe, that he might declare the great dulnes of the people. So the wicked are not onely deafe when they ſhould heare the doctrine of God: but they do alſo paſſe ouer horrible threatnings in mockage, as if they heard ſom friuolous thing. Chriſte ſpake plainely and by name of the father: but they doe ſtay vppon the earth, neither doe they thinke vpon any other thing ſaue only the flitting into farre countries. It is well knowen that the Iewes did call the nations which were beyond the Seas, Greekes: yet doe they not meane that Chriſt would come vnto the vncircumciſed, but vnto the Iewes which were diſperſed through diuers parts of the world. For the worde diſperſion, would not agree with thoſe who abyde in the place where they are borne, and which inhabite their natiue ſoyle. But it agreeth very well with the Iewes that were runnagates & baniſhed men. So Peter did write his former Epiſtle vnto thoſe who dwelt here and there, throughout Pontus, Galatia, &c. And Iames Saluteth the twelue tribes that were ſcatered abrode. VVhich kinde of ſpeech is taken from Moſes and the Prophetes. Therefore the meaning of the wordes is this, will he goe ouer the ſea, that he may goe vnto the Iewes, who dwell in a worlde which we know not? And it may bee that their meaning was to moleſt Chriſte with this mocke, If this be the Meſsias, will he eſtabliſh his kingdome in Grecia, ſeeing that God hath aſſigned the land of Chanaan to be his owne dwelling place? But howſoeuer it be, we ſee that they were no whit moued with the ſharpe denunciation of Chriſt,

37 Further-

37 Furthermore in the laſt day, which was the greateſt day of the feaſt, Ieſus ſtoode and cryed, ſaying, If any man be a thirſt, let him come vnto me and drinke.

38 He that beleeueth in mee, as ſaith the ſcripture, there ſhall flow out of his bellie floods of liuing water.

39 And this ſpake he of the ſpirit which they ſhould receiue that beleeued in him. For the holy ſpirite was not yet, becauſe Ieſus was not yet glorified.

37 The laſt day. Here we muſt firſt of all note that Chriſte was not ſo afrayed either with any layings in wayte, or pollicies of his enemies, that he did foreſlowe his office: but that his ſtoutneſſe of courage dyd encreaſe with his daungers, ſo that he went more valiantly forward. This thing doth both the circumſtance of time, the great aſſemblie of people, and the libertie to crie, teſtifie, when as he ſawe them readie on euerie ſide to lay hand vpon him. For it is likely that the miniſters were then readie to doe that which was commaunded them. Againe, wee muſt note that he ſtoode armed with no other thing ſaue onely with Gods ayde againſt ſo violent endeuours, which could do all things. For what other reaſon can be giuen, why Chriſt did preach after they had ſet their bande in order vpon a moſt famous day, in the middeſt of the Temple whereas they had a quiet kingdome, ſaue only becauſe God did bridle their madneſſe? Notwithſtanding this is very profitable for vs, that the Euangeliſt bringeth in Chriſt crying with open mouth, that they com vnto him whoſoeuer are a thirſt. For we gather hence that it is not one or two that is iuuited with a ſlender and obſcure whiſpering: but that this doctrine is ſo publiſhed vnto all men that it is hidden from no man, ſaue only from him, who ſtopping his eares of his owne accord doth not admit the loud crying.

If any man be a thirſt. In this member he exhorteth all men to be partakers of his goodnes, ſo that acknowledging their owne pouertie they deſire to be helped. For we are all poore indeed, and void of all goodneſſe: but the feeling of pouertie doth not pricke forwarde all men to ſeeke remedie. Hereby it commeth to paſſe, that many not once mouing their foote, doe pine away in their miſerable want: yea many are not touched with their want vntill ſuch time as the ſpirite of god doth with his fire kindle in their hearts, both an hunger and a thirſt. Therefore the office of the ſpirite is, to make vs deſire his grace. And as touching this preſet place we muſt chiefly hold this, ỹ ther are none called to obteine the riches of the ſpirit, ſaue thoſe who do earneſtly deſire the ſame. For we know that the torme̅t of thirſt is moſt bitter: ſo that thoſe who are moſt ſtrong, and can endure all labours, doe notwithſtanding faint in thirſt. Notwithſtanding hee doth rather inuite the thirſtie then the hungrie, that he may holde on in the metaphore, which he will afterwardes vſe, in the woorde water and drinke, that all the partes of the ſentence may agree together. Neither doe I doubt but that hee alludeth vnto the place of Ieſaias, All that are a thirſt come vnto mee. For it was requiſite that that ſhould be fulfilled at length in Chriſt, which the Prophet doth in that place attribute vnto God: like as that again whiche the bleſſed Virgin ſong, that he ſendeth away the rich and full emptie. Luke. 1. 53. Iſay. 55. 1.

Therefore he commaundeth them to come vnto him ſtraightway. As if he ſhould ſay: that he alone is ſufficient to quenche all their thirſt: and that they are deceiued and labour in vaine, whoſoeuer doe ſeeke euen the leaſt quenching of their thyrſt at the handes of any other.

And let him drinke. There is a promiſe added vnto the exhortation. For although this be a worde of exhorting, yet doth it conteine in it a promiſe: becauſe Chriſte doth teſtifie that he is no drie and emptie ceſterne, but a well that cannot be drawen drie, which giueth drink largely and plentifully to all men. VVhereupon it followeth that his deſire ſhall not be in vaine, if we beg of him that which we want.

38 Hee that beleeueth in mee. The maner of comming is here ſhewed: namely, that we muſt come by faith, and not on our feete. Yea, to come is nothing els but to beleeue, if ſobeit you doe rightly define the woorde beleeue, like as we haue ſaid before, that we doe beleeue in Chriſt whileſt that we imbrace him, as hee ſetteth himſelfe before vs in the Goſpel repleniſhed with power, wiſdome, righteouſneſſe, puritie, life, and with al the giftes of the ſpirite. And he doth here confirme the promiſe more plainely which we touched of late: for he teacheth that he hath ſtore, wherewith he is able to refreſh vs ſufficiently. It is indeede a metaphore hard enough at the firſt ſight: whē as he ſaith that there ſhal floods of liuing water flow out of the belly of the faithfull: yet is the ſenſe no whit doubtfull, that the beleeuers ſhall neuer want any ſpiritual good thing. He calleth that liuing water, the ſpring whereof doth neuer waxe drie, neither doth the continuall flowing ceaſe. I expounde that the manifold graces of the ſpirite, are called floods in the plurall number, whiche are neceſſarie vnto the ſpirituall life of the ſoule. To bee briefe, aſwell the perpetuitie of the giftes of the ſpirite, as the aboundance thereof is promiſed vs in this place. Some doe thinke that waters doe flow out of the bellie of the beleeuers, when as he that is endowed with the ſpirit, doth impart ſome part vnto his brethren, as there ought to be a mutuall participation amongeſt vs. Notwithſtanding the ſenſe ſeemeth to me to bee more ſimple, that whoſoeuer ſhall beleeue in Chriſt, he ſhall haue a well of life as it were ſpringing in him. Like as Chriſte ſaid before in the fourth Chapter, Hee that ſhall drinke of this water ſhall neuer bee a thirſt. For whereas the ordinarie drinke doth only quenche the thirſt for a ſhort time, Chriſt ſaith that we doe draw vp by faith the ſpirite, whiche is a fountaine of water leaping out vnto eternall life. And yet notwithſtanding he doth not teach that the faithfull are ſo full of Chriſte the firſt day, that they are afterward neither an hungred nor a thirſt: but rather that the enioying of Chriſt doth kindle a new deſiring of him: and the ſenſe is, that the ſpirit is like to a liuely fountain which runneth alwaies in the faithfull. Like as Paule alſo doth teſtifie, that he is life in vs, although we doe yet carry about the matter of death in the relikes of ſin. And truly ſeeing that euerie one is made partaker of the giftes of the ſpirite according to the meaſure of his faith, there can no perfect fulnes thereof be had in this life. But in the mean ſeaſon the faithful do ſo aſpire oftentimes vnto new encreaſings of the ſpirit, by going forward in faith that the firſt fruites which they haue, are vnto them ſufficient vnto the continuaunce of life. But heereby wee are alſo admoniſhed howe ſmall the meaſure of our faithe is, ſeeinge that the graces tes of the spirit do scarse drop by little & little in vs, which should run like floods, if we did yeeld vnto Christ due place as we ought: that is, if faith did make vs able to receiue him.

As saith the scripture. Some doe restraine this vnto the former member: other some vnto the latter: but I doe extend it vnto all the whole sentence. Againe, in my iudgement Christ doth not here assigne any certaine place of the scripture: but he taketh a testimonie from the commō doctrine of the Prophets. For so often as the Lord promising the aboundance of his spirite, doth compare it vnto liuely waters, he doth chiefly respect the kingdome of Christ, and directeth the minds of the faithfull thyther. Therfore all the prophesies concerning the liuely waters haue their fulfilling in Christ: becausse he alone hath opened and reuealed vnto vs the hidden treasures of God. Therefore the graces of the spirite are powred out vpon him that wee may all draw of his fulnesse. Therefore they are worthie miserablie to perishe, who being called so gently and mercifully of Christ, doe wander hyther and thither. He spake of the spirite. The spirite is sometimes called by the name of water, becausse of the cleannesse, becausse it is proper to it to purge our filthinesse: but in this place and such like the maner of this phrase is vnlike: namely, that we are destitute of all ioyce and humor of life, saue only when as the spirit of God doth quicken vs, & doth water vs as it were with a secret force. And here is the figure Synecdoche vsed, becausse all ỹ parts of life are comprehended vnder one worde water. VVhence we do also gather that whosoeuer are not regenerate with the spirite of Christ, they are to bee accounted as dead, howsoeuer they boast themselues as if they did liue.

For the spirite was not yet. VVe know that the spirit is eternall: but the Euangelist saith, that that grace of the spirite which was powred out vpon men after Christ his resurrectiō, did not appeare openly so long as Christ was conuersant in the world vnder the humble shape of a seruaunt. And he speaketh comparatiuely: like as when the new Testament is set against the olde, God promiseth his spirit vnto the faithful, as if he had neuer giuen it vnto the fathers. The Disciples had then receiued the first fruites of the spirite: for whence commeth faith but from the spirite? Therefore the Euangelist doth not simply denie that the grace of the spirit was giuen vnto the godly before Christ his death. but that it was not then so apparant, as it should be afterward. For this is the principall worship of the kingdome of Christe, that hee doth gouerne his Church with his spirite. But he did then take iust and as it were solemne possession of his kingdome, whenas he was lifted vp vnto his fathers right hande. It is no marueile then if he did referre the perfect giuing of his spirite vntill that time. Yet there remayneth one question, whether he vnderstandeth in this place, the visible graces of the spirite, or regeneration, which is a fruite of adoption. I answere, that the spirite appeared in these visible giftes as in glasses which was promised by the comming of Christ: yet doth hee properly intreat in this place of the power of the spirit, whereby we are borne againe, and are made new creatures. In that therefore that Christe being glorious and indued with great maiestie of gouernment, doth sit at the right hand of God, but we doe lie vpon the earth poore, hungrie, and almoſt voide of ſpirituall giftes: it is to bee imputed to our ſlownes, and weakneſſe of faith.

40 Therfore many of the companie, when they heard theſe words ſaid, This is indeed a Prophet.

41 Other ſome ſaid, This is Chriſt. And others ſaide: ſhall Chriſte come out of Galilee?

42 Saith not the Scripture that Chriſt ſhall come of the ſeed of Dauid and out of the towne of Bethlehem?

43 Therfore there was a ſtrife in the companie becauſe of him. 44 Furthermore, certaine of them would catch him: but no man laid handes on him.

40 Therfore many of the companie. Nowe the Euangeliſt reciteth what fruit did ſpring of the laſt ſermon: namely, that whileſt one thought one thing & another another, there aroſe diſſention amongeſt ỹ people. VVee muſt note that Iohn ſpeaketh not of the profeſſed enemies of Chriſt, or of thoſe thathated ſound doctrin: but of the cõmõ ſort of mẽ, where ther ſhold haue bin greater integritie. And he reckoneth vp three ſorts. The firſt did confeſſe in deed, that Ieſus was a Prophet, whereupõ we gather that they did not loath his doctrine: but againe it appeareth how light & friuolous this confeſſion was, that whenas they allowe of him as of a teacher, yet they do neither vnderſtande nor taſt what hee meaneth or what he teacheth. For they could not imbrace Chriſt indeed as a Prophet, vnleſſe they did acknowledge him to be both the ſonne of God & the authour of their ſaluation. Yet there is this good thing in them, that they perceiue that there is ſome diuine thing in Chriſt which bringeth them to reuerence him: for they might eaſily paſſe afterwarde vnto faith from this docilitie. The ſecond ſort do better, who do flatly confeſſe that he is Chriſt: but others doe gaineſay them: whereupon ariſeth the conflict. By which example we are taught, that we ought not to maruel at this day, if men by diuers ſtrifes be cur aſunder. VVee heare that ther aroſe a Schiſme by reaſon of Chriſts words, & that not amongeſt the Gentiles who were ſtrangers from the faith: but euen in the middeſt of the Church of Chriſt, & euen in the principall place of the Church: ſhall therfore the doctrine of Chriſt be blamed as if it were the matter of tumults? Yea howſoeuer the whole world do rage, ỹ truth of god is ſo precious, that we muſt wiſh ỹ it may be receiued euẽ of a few. VVherfore there is no cauſe why our conſciences ſhould faint, whileſt that we ſee euen thoſe, who wil be reckoned amongſt the people of god to ſtriue amongſt thẽſelues with diuers opinions. Although we muſt alſo note that diſſentiõ hath not his beginning properly frõ ỹ goſpel. For there can be no certaine & ſound agreement of men, ſaue only in ſome certaine truth, whereas therfore they keepe peace amongeſt themſelues, who are ignorant of God, that proceedeth rather from ſom amazednes, then from true conſent and agrement. To be briefe, what diſſentions ſoeuer ariſe whenas the Goſpel is preached, the cauſe and ſeed therof laid hid before in man: but being then as it were awaked out of ſleepe, they begin to ſtirre: like as vapours do proceede from ſome other thing then from from the ſunne, although they doe not appeare vntill the Sunne ariſe.

41 Shall Chriſt come, Leaſt they ſhould ſeeme raſhly to reiect Chriſte they arme themſelues with the teſtimonie of the ſcripture: which although they do wickedly wreſt againſt Chriſt, yet had it ſome ſhew of truth. They are only deceiued in this, that they make Chriſt a Galilean. But whence came this ignorance ſaue only from contempt? For if they had not thought much to enquire, Chriſt had appeared vnto them to be notable for both titles, in that he was borne in Bethlehem, & that he was the ſonne of Dauid. But ſuch is our nature, we are aſhamed to be ſlouthfull in ſmall things, we ſnort more then carelefly in the myſteries of the kingdome of heauen. This is alſo worthie the noting, that they are diligent to ſeeke ſome excuſe whereby they may turne away themſelues from Chriſt: who were otherwiſe marueilous ſlouthfull & ſluggiſh to receiue ſound doctrine. Behold how men are wont to frame to theſelues a ſtumbling block out of the very ſcriptures, leaſt they ſhould come vnto Chriſt. which lead vs by the hand vnto Chriſt.

43 Certaine of them. By theſe wordes the Euangeliſt giueth vs to vnderſtand, that they did not only deſpiſe Chriſt: but that there was alſo adioyned vnto the wicked reiecting of him crueltie, & a deſire to hurte him: as ſuperſtition is alwayes cruel. And whereas their endeuoures were in vain, that muſt be attributed vnto Gods prouidence. For becauſe Chriſt his hower was not yet come (as we ſaid before) truſting to his fathers aid, & being couered with the ſame, he was aboue all dangers.

45 Therfore the miniſters came vnto the high Prieſts, and Phariſees, and they ſaide vnto them, why haue you not brought him?

46 The miniſters anſwered, there was neuer man that ſpake as this man.

47 Therfore the Phariſes anſwered them, Are you alſo deceiued?

48 Hath any of the rulers beleeued on him, or of the phariſees?

49 But this companie, which knoweth not the lawe, are accurſed.

50 Nicodemus ſaid vnto them, he which came vnto him by night, although he was one of them:

51 Doth our law iudge a man vnleſſe it ſhall heare of him firſt, and ſhall know what he doth?

52 They anſwered and ſaid vnto him, Art thou alſo of Galilee? ſearche and ſee, that there hath ariſen no prophet out of Galilee?

53 And euery man went vnto his owne houſe.

45 Therfore the miniſters came. Here may we ſee how blinde the arrogancie of the wicked is, they are ſo in loue with, and doe ſo adore the greatnes and honour wherein they excell in the worlde, that they are not afraid proudly to tread vnder foote equitie & right. And if any thing fall out otherwiſe then they would, they would gladly ioyne heauen and earth together. For whileſt that the wicked prieſtes do demaund why Chriſt was not brought vnto them they do ſo highly extoll their power, that nothing ought to haue gainſtood their cõmandemẽt.

46 There was neuer any man, Theſe men doe confeſſe that their conſbes were cut, and they tamed with the word of Chriſt alone: yet doe they not repent, neither giue due honor vnto the word. If it be true, that there were neuer any mã ꝑ ſpake ſo, why did not ꝑ diuine power which they were en-

enforced to feele, ſo moue their hearts that they might giue themſelues wholy vnto God? But it was meete it ſhoulde be ſo that that of Iſaias Eſay. 11.4. myght be fulfilled, He ſhall throwe downe the wicked with the breath of his mouth.

Moreouer, we ſhall afterwarde ſee how thoſe who ſought him that they might put him to death, fell backward as if they had been beaten downe with beetles, being confounded with the only voyce of Chriſte. Therefore let vs learne that there is ſuch force in Chriſte his doctri e, that it doeth euen terrifie the wicked: but ſeeing that this turneth to their deſtruction, let vs rather endeuour to bee ſoftened then bro-ken.

But we ſee many at this day too like vnto thoſe miniſters, whom although the doctrine of the Goſpel doth cauſe to woonder at it againſt their willes, yet are they ſo far from ſubmitting themſelues vnto Chriſt, that they do notwithſtanding remain in the tents of the enemies. And there be others who are worſe, who do deface and defame with what ſlaunders they can the doctrine, which they know aſſuredly, being conuict in their owne conſciences, is of God.

46 Are you alſo deceiued? They doe ſo rate their miniſters, that notwithſtanding they keepe them vnder obedience. For by theſe woordes they meane, that it is an abſurd and vnmeete thing that they ſhould not ſtand, although all the people doe faile. And we muſt marke with what argument they are vnderpropped, when they doe ſo proudly vaunt againſt Chriſte. They ſay hee hath onlie, the riffe raffe and vnskilfull men on his ſide: the rulers and euery notable man is ſet againſt him. They expreſſe the Phariſees by name, becauſe they had the fame aſwell of knowledge as of holineſſe aboue other men, ſo that they were as it were the princes of princes. This obiection ſeemeth indeed to haue ſome colour. For vnleſſe the gouernours and rulers of the Church haue their authority, there can be nothing ſet down well, neither can the eſtate alſo continue long in good order. VVee know how great the diſtemperature of the common people is: wherefore there muſt needes deformed confuſion enſue immediately, where euery man may do what him liſteth.

Therefore the authoritie of thoſe who are gouerners is a neceſſarie bridle to moderate the order of the Church. And it was ſo prouided Deut. 17.9. by the law of God, that if ther ſhould any queſtion or controuerſie ariſe, the knowledge thereof ſhould be in the high Prieſt his power. But theſe men offend in this, in that they doe challendge to themſelues the chiefeſt authoritie, and doe refuſe to ſubmit themſelues vnto God. God gaue vnto the high Prieſt the iudgement: but he would haue him to giue ſentence only according to his lawe. Therefore what authoritie ſoeuer the paſtors haue, it is ſubiect to the word of God, that being all brought vnder from the higheſt to the loweſt, God alone may be aboue them all. If paſtours who execute their office well and ſincerely do challenge to themſelues authoritie, this ſhalbe an holy and lawfull boaſting: but whereas the bare authoritie of men is extolled without the woorde of God it is vaine and friuolous bragging. But it falleth out oftentimes that the wicked doe rule in the Church. So that we muſt beware that we do attribute nothing vnto men ſo ſoone as they depart from the woorde of God. VVee ſee that almoſt all the Prophetes were vexed with this griefe.

grieſe. For theſe gorgeous titles, Princes, Prieſts, and Churche were oftentimes obiected to ouerwhelme their doctrine. The Papiſts being furniſhed at this day with the ſame weapons, doe no otherwiſe rage then did the aduerſaries of Chriſt and the Prophetes. This is horrible blindneſſe, that mortall man is not afraid to ſet himſelf againſt God. But Satã driueth them vnto ſuch madneſſe, who ſet more by ambition, then by the truth of God. In the meane ſeaſon it is our part to giue ſuch reuerence vnto the worde of God, as may driue away all the brightneſſe of the whole worlde, and may deſperſe the vaine ſmoakes therof. For wee ſtood in bad caſe if our ſaluation did depende vppon the will of rulers, and that faith were too vnſtable, which ſhoulde ſtand or fall at theyr becke.

49 This companie. The firſt part is a point of pride, in that truſting to the title of the Prieſthood, they would bring al men in ſubiection vnder them tyrannouſly. The other is, that they deſpice other men as beeing nothing worth: like as they are alwayes reprochfull againſt other men whoſoeuer haue better liking of themſelues then they ought, and the contempt of our brethren doth follow the immoderate loue of our ſelues. They pronounce all the whole common people to be accurſed. For which cauſe they colour this with the ignorance of the lawe: but there was another thing which lay hid vnder this: namely, that they thought that there was no holineſſe ſaue only in their order. Like as at this day, whileſt that the Popiſh ſhauelings doe onely make boaſt of the title of the Church, they deſpice the lay men (as they cal them) like profane men. But to the end God may throw downe this mad loftines, hee preferreth the baſe and deſpiced, before the moſt loftie and excellent. And we muſt note, that they doe not make their boaſt of ſuch knoweledge of the lawe as did inſtruct men vnto godlineſſe and the feare of God: but of ſuch as they had, when as with a loftie countenance they anſwered as if they alone were fit interpreters of the law. And truly this is true that they are accurſed whoſoeuer are not taught in the law of god, the knowledge whereof doth ſanctifie vs in deed: yet this knowledge is not reſtrained vnto a few, that being puffed vp with wicked confidence, they may exempt themſelues out of the number of other men: but it doth appertaine generally vnto all the children of God, that they may be gathered together vnto the ſame obedience of faith.

50 Nicodemus ſaid vnto them. The Euangeliſt deſcribeth Nicodemus vnto vs as an indifferent man, who neither dare take vpon him earneſtly to defend godly doctrin, neither yet can ſuffer the truth to be oppreſſed. VVhen he ſaith, that it was he that came by night, this ſerueth partly to his commendation, and partly to his diſcommendation. Vnleſſe he had loued the doctrine of Chriſt he durſt neuer haue ſet himſelfe againſt the furie of the wicked. For he knew that if any did but once whiſper, hee ſhould by and by be hated and be in daunger. Therefore in that he dare ſay ſomething though faintly, there ſhineth ſome ſmall ſparkle of godlines out of his hart: but ſeeing that he doth not more freely defend Chriſt he doth therein bewray his too great fearefulneſſe. Therefore the Euangeliſt giueth vs to vnderſtand, that hee did yet ſmell of the lurking dennes of the night, and that he is not the true diſciple of Chriſt. Hee ſaith that he came once by night vnto Chriſt, & that he ſtood openly amongſt mongeſt his enemies and did keepe a place in their tentes. VVee muſt note this ſo much the more diligently, becauſe that many whileſt that they doe pretende that they are like vnto Nicodemus, hauing on this viſure, they doe thinke that they can mocke God freely. Admit wee doe graunt that which they require, that they differ nothing from Nicodemus, yet I pray you what doth ſuch an example helpe thē? Nicodemus ſaith that Chriſt was not to be condemned, vntill he were heard: truly there might ſo much be ſaid by a thiefe, by a royſter. For that is well knowen and famous, that it is better that the giltie be acquitted, then that the innocent be condemned. Secondly, howſoeuer hee deſireth to lighten the perſon of Chriſt, he leaueth and forſaketh the doctrine it ſelfe, what ſhall wee finde here that is meete for a godly and faithfull mā? Therfore ỹ ſeed of ỹ goſpel which brought foorth fruit afterward, did as yet lie hid being choked in him. VVe ſhal far more profitablie apply this example vnto another end, that the Lord doth oftētimes bring to paſſe, that the doctrine which ſeemed to haue periſhed, doth by little and little take roote ſecretely, and doth at length after long time, ſhoot foorth ſome bud, at the firſt like vnto one that is vntimely, but afterwarde liuing and hauing ſappe: like as Nicodemus his faith had newe and ſodaine force after and from the death of Chriſt.

52 Art thou alſo of Galilee? They ſay ỹ thoſe are of Galilee whoſoeuer are on Chriſt his ſide, and that reprochfully, as if he could haue none in his ſect, but out of the baſe corner of Galilee. And in that they are ſo earneſtly ſet againſt Nicodemus, it appeareth thereby howe furiouſly they hated Chriſt. For he did not as it were openly defend Chriſt: but did only ſay that he was not to be condemned before they had hearde him. So falleth it out at this day amongeſt the Papiſts, no man can ſhew the leaſt token of equitie, that the Goſpell may not be oppreſſed, but the enemies beeing moued with furies doe crie out that he is an heretike.

53 And euerie man went. Now followeth the wonderfull end of this action. If any man conſider what manner of kingdome the kingdome of the Prieſtes was then, how great their furie was, what prouiſion they had made: and on the other ſide thinke with himſelfe that Chriſt was naked and without weapon, and that he was furniſhed with no garriſon of men: he was an hundreth times vndone. In that ſo valiant a conſpiracie doth paſſe away willingly, and they all doe one-breake another with their owne force, like waues of the Sea, who will not confeſs that they were driuen away with the hand of God? And God continueth alwayes like to himſelfe. Therfore he ſhall and will make voyd the endeuours of the enemies ſo often as he will, ſo that although they haue all thinges readie at hand, and are readie and furniſhed to accompliſhe their purpoſe, yet doe they depart, leauing their matters vndiſpatched. VVee haue oftentimes tryed that whatſoeuer the aduerſaries did inuent to ſuppreſſe the Goſpell withal, it was all in vaine through the wonderfull grace of God.

1 AND Ieſus went into the mount Oliuete.

2 And in the morning he came againe into the Temple: and all the people came vnto him, and ſitting downe he taught them.

3 And the Scribes and the Phariſees bring vnto him a woman taken in adulterie, & ſetting her in the midſt:

4 They ſay vnto him, Maſter, this woman was taken in the very act, when as ſhee did commit the adultrie.

5 And Moſes commaunded vs in the law, that ſuch ſhould be ſtoned: therefore what ſayeſt thou?

6 Furthermore, they ſaid thus tempting him, that they might haue ſome matter to accuſe him. And Ieſus caſting downe his eyes, did write with his finger vppon the grounde.

7 And whenas they continued asking him, lifting vp his eyes he ſaid vnto thē, he that amongeſt you is free from ſinne, let him caſt the firſt ſtone at her.

8 And looking downe againe, he wrote vpon the earth.

9 And when they had heard, and were accuſed of their conſciences, they went out one after another, beginning at the elders euen vnto the laſt: ſo that Ieſus was left alone, and the woman that ſtood in the middle.

10 And when Ieſus lift vp his eyes, and ſaw none but the woman, hee ſaide, woman where be theſe thine accuſers? hath no man condemned thee?

11 Shee ſaid, none Lord. Ieſus anſwered her ſaying, Neither will I condemne thee: go thy way and ſinne no more.

3 And the Scribes and the Phariſees bring. It is well knowen that the Grecians did not know of this hiſtorie in times paſt, therefore ſome do geſſe that it was annexed by ſome other: but becauſe it was alwayes receiued of ꝑ latine Churches, and it is found in the auncienteſt Greeke bookes, and it conteineth nothing that is vnmeete for the ſpirit of the Apoſtle, there is no cauſe why we ſhold refuſe to applie it vnto our vſe. VVhereas the Euangeliſt ſaith that the Scribes brought the woman, his meaning is that they did that of ſet purpoſe, that they myght lie in wayte for Chriſt. He expreſſeth the Phariſees by name, becauſe they were the chiefe in the order of the Scribes. And their wickednes was too great in catching a cloake for their craftines, which they themſelues do bewray with their owne mouth. For they doe not diſſemble that they haue the manifeſt commandement of the law. VVhereupon it followeth that they doe it maliciouſly, becauſe they aske as yet as if it were concerning a doubtfull matter. But this was their purpoſe, to enforce Chriſt to depart from the office of preaching grace, that he might ſeeme to be diuers and vnconſtant. Therefore they ſay plainely & flatly that Moſes condemneth adultereſſes, to the ende they may holde Chriſt faſt bound with a preiudice of the law. For doubtles it was vnlawfull to acquit thoſe whom the law did condemne. If he did ſubſcribe vnto the law he ſhould ſeeme after a ſort to be vnlike to himſelfe.

6 And Ieſus hauing caſt his eyes downeward. By this geſture hee ſhewed that he cōtēned thē, therfore in my iudgemēt they deale very vnskilfully, who who thinke that he wrote this or that. Neither doe I allow that ſubtile ſaying of Auguſtine, who thinketh that the difference of the lawe and the Goſpell was noted by this meanes, becauſe Chriſt did not write in tables of ſtone, but in man who is duſt and earth. For Chriſt woulde rather declare the matter by doing nothing, how vnworthie they were to be hearde. Likeas if a man ſhould draw lynes vpon a wall whileſt another ſpeaketh, or turne away his backe, or by ſome other ſigne declare that hee taketh no heede vnto thoſe things which are ſpoken. So ſeeing that Satan doth at this day endeuour by diuers meanes to lead vs away from the right courſe of teaching, wee muſt lightly paſſe ouer manye thinges which he obiecteth vnto vs. The Papiſts do moleſt vs ſo muche as in them lieth, with many friuolous cauils, as it were with cloudes diſpearſed in the ayre. If godly teachers doe occupie thẽſelues in diſpearſing euery one of them, they ſhal begin Penelopes webbe. Therfore ſuch trifles, which doe nothing els but hinder the courſe of the Goſpel, are wiſely contemned.

7 He that amongeſt you is free. Hee ſpake this according to the euſtom of the law. For God hath appointed that the witneſſes ſhoulde with Deut. 17. 7 their owne handes ſlea the wicked doers, according to whom iudgemẽt was giuen, to the ende there might be greater religion in bearing witnes. For many men doe runne headlong into periurie that they may ouerwhelme their brother, becauſe they do not think that they make a deadly wounde with their tongue. And this ſelfe ſame reaſon was of force amongeſt theſe men though they were wicked ſlaunderers: becauſe being brought vnto the preſent matter, they doe lay away thoſe fierce ſpirites, wherewith they came puffed vp. Although the wordes of Chriſte doe differ from the preſcript of the lawe in this, becauſe God did ſimply admoniſh them there, that they ſhoulde condemne no man with their tongue ſaue only him whom they might ſlea with their handes: in this place Chriſt requireth perfect innocencie of the witneſſes: that no man take vpon him to reuenge a fault in another man, ſaue he that is perfect, pure, and free from all fault himſelfe.

And we muſt take that as ſpoken to vs, all which was then ſpoken to a few: namely, that whoſoeuer doth accuſe another he doe appoint vnto himſelfe the law of innocencie: otherwiſe we doe not ſeeke to haue the euill deeds puniſhed, but do rather enuie the perſons of ỹ men: But in the meane ſeaſon he ſeemeth to take away iudgement out of ỹ world, ſo that no man dare profeſſe himſelfe to be a puniſher of wickednes. For what Iudge ſhall there be found, whoſe conſcience ſhall not bee giltie in ſome point? what witneſſe ſhall there come abroad that is ſubiect to no offence? Therefore he ſeemeth to driue away all witneſſes from the common place of iudgement, and al iudges from the ſeate of iudgement. I anſwere, that this is no ſimple forbidding, whereby Chriſt forbiddeth ſinners to doe their dutie in correcting the faults of other men: but that hypocrites alone are reprehended by theſe wordes, who being more then ſeuere, yea cruel Iudges in other mens faultes, doe gently flatter themſelues in their owne vices. Therfore a mans owne ſinnes ſhall not hinder him from correcting the faultes of other men, and when need ſhall require let him alſo puniſh ſo that he hate whatſoeuer is to be condemned aſwell in himſelfe as in others. Yea wee muſt begin here, that euery man doe doe aske his owne conſcience, and be a witnes and iudge againſt him-ſelfe, before he deſcend vnto others. So ſhall it come to paſſe, that we ſhal be at the ſtaues end with ſin without the hatred of men.

9 And were accuſed of their conſcience. Here it appeareth what great force an euill conſcience hath. Although theſe wicked hypocrites were determined to mocke Chriſt with their cauils: yet ſo ſoone as he once pricketh them with one worde, being ſtriken they flie away. With this hammer muſt we breake the pride of hypocrites: to wit, wee muſt call them backe vnto Gods iudgement. Although it may be that the ſhame which they ſuffer amongſt men ſhall be more forceable with them, then the feare of God. Notwithſtanding this is a great matter, that they doe confeſſe themſelues to be giltie of their owne accord, whileſt that they flie away being aſhamed. We muſt alſo note the circumſtance, which is expreſſed immediatly, as one of them did exceed another in honor, they were ſo much the ſooner touched with their giltines. And would to God there were but ſo much ſhamefaſtneſſe in our Scribes, who doe all they are able at this day in the Pope his behalfe, þ they may ouerthrowe Chriſt: but they are become ſo ſhameleſſe, that being polluted with all offences, they boaſt of this, that they may be reprochfull without puniſhment. Furthermore, we muſt note how much this feeling of ſin wherewith the Scribes were touched, differeth from true repentance. For we muſt be ſo moued with the iudgement of God, that notwithſtanding we muſt not flie into corners out of the ſight of the Iudge: but let vs rather run ſtraightway vnto him to craue pardon. Ieſus was left alone. The ſpirit of wiſedome brought this to paſſe, that the wicked departed, hauing tempted Chriſt in vaine. Neither is it to be doubted but that wee ſhal eſcape & ouercome al the engines of our enemies, if ſobeit we ſuffer our ſelues to be gouerned by the ſame ſpirite: but it falleth out that we are therfore oftentimes oppreſſed, becauſe neglecting their lyings in waite, we are nothing carefull to take counſell, or truſting to our own wiſdome, we do not conſider, how neceſſarie the gouernment of the ſpirit is for vs. He ſaith that Chriſt remained alone, not that he was left of the multitude & common people which he taught before: but becauſe al the Scribes which brought foorth the adultreſſe did trouble him no longer. When it is ſaid that the woman abode with Chriſt, let vs learne by this example that there is nothing better for vs then to be brought giltie before his iudgement ſeat, ſo that we do ſubmit our ſelues quietly, meekly, & obediently vnto his iudgement.

11 Neither do I condemne thee. It is not ſaid that Chriſt doth ſimply acquit the woman in this place, but that he doeth only ſet her at libertie: neither is it any maruell. For he would take nothing vpon him that was not meet for his perſon. He was ſent of his father to gather together the loſt ſheep of Iſrael, therfore being mindfull of his vocation, he exhorteth the woman vnto repentance, & he comforteth her with the promiſe of grace. They which gather hence, that adulterie is not to bee puniſhed with death, they muſt of neceſſitie graunt by the ſame reaſon that inheritances are not to be diuided, becauſe Chriſt would not make himſelfe a dayes man in that buſines betwene two brethren. Yea all manner of wickednes ſhalbe exempted frō the puniſhment of þ lawes, if the adulterers be forgiuen. For then ſhall the gate be ſet open for all maner vn-faithfulnes, for witchcraft, gluttonie & theft. Moreouer the adultreſſe wheas ſhe priuilie ſtealeth in a baſtard, ſhe doth not only ſteal the name of a familie: but ſhe tranſlateth the right of the heires being taken away from the lawfull iſſue vnto ſtrangers. And this is the head of euils that the wife which was coupled vnto an husband doth ſet foorth her ſelfe to comuit wickednes with his ſhame, & doth alſo violate the holy couenant of god, without which there remaineth no holines in ỹ world. And yet this is the Papiſticall diuinitie, that Chriſte brought in, in this place the law of grace, wherby adulterers may be ſet free from puniſhment. And whereas they do go about to blot out by all meanes out of the minds of mẽ, the grace of Chriſt which the doctrine of Chriſt doth euery where ſet foorth vnto vs, they do only preach the law of grace in open mouth in this point. And why ſo? that they may defile all beds almoſt with their vnbrideled luſt and that freely. This proceeded from that diueliſh ſingle life, that they commit whooredome generally who may not haue a lawfull wife. And let vs hold that Chriſt doth ſo forgiue mẽ their ſins, that notwithſtãding he doth not ouerthrow politike order, he doth not aboliſh iudgements, & puniſhments appointed by the lawes, Sin no more. Hence we gather what is ỹ end of the grace of Chriſt, namely, that a ſinner being reconciled vnto god, do worſhip the author of his ſaluation by liuing godlilie & holily. To conclude, we are called vnto repentance in the ſame word of God, wherin pardon is offered vnto vs. And although this exhortation doth reſpect the time to come, yet the remembrance of the former life doth alſo humble ſinners.

12 Therfore Ieſus ſpake vnto them againe, ſaying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me, ſhall not walke in darkyes, but ſhall haue the light of life.

13 Therfore the Phariſees ſaid vnto him, Thou doeſt teſtifie of thy ſelfe: thy teſtimonie is not true.

14 Ieſus anſwered and ſaid vnto them, Although I teſtifie of my ſelfe my teſtimonie is true: becauſe I know whence I came, and whither I ſhall go: but yee know not whence I came, and whither I ſhall go.

12 I am the light of the world. They that omit the hiſtorie next going before, do ioine this communication of Chriſt with the ſermon whiche he made ỹ laſt day of the feaſt. And this is a moſt notable title of Chriſt, when as he is called the light of the world. For ſeeing that wee are all blinde by nature, there is a remedie ſet before vs, wherby being deliuered from darkneſſe, we may be partakers of the true light. Neither is this benefite offered vnto one or two only, becauſe Chriſt affirmeth that he is the light of all the whole world. For his meaning was not only to take away the difference that was betwene the Iewes & the Gentiles by this generall ſentence: but alſo betwene the learned & the idiots, betweene the gouernors & the common ſort. But firſt of all we muſt note the neceſſitie of the ſeeking of this light. For doubtleſſe none will offer themſelues to bee illuminated by Chriſte, ſaue thoſe who ſhall firſt acknowlege that this world is darknes, & that they are altogether blind. Therfore let vs know, that whenas the meanes to obtaine light is ſhewed vnto vs in Chriſt, we are all condemned of blindnes, and what light ſoeuer we think to be any where els, it is compared to darknes & thicke night. For Chriſt ſheweth not what thing is common to him with others: but he challengeth this as proper & perticular to himſelf. Wherupon upon it followeth that there is nor on ſparkle of true light without him. There commeth out in deede ſome kinde of brightnes: but being onely like vnto a lightning, it doth nothing els but make the eyes daſel. Furthermore, wee muſt note that the force & parts of lightning are not reſtrained vnto the perſon of Chriſt. For although he be farre from vs in reſpect of body: yet doth he ſhew vnto vs this light dayly in the doctrin of the Goſpel, & by the ſecret power of his ſpirite. Yet doe wee not know the perfect definition of this light, vnleſſe we learne that we are illuminated by the goſpel & ſpirit of Chriſt, that we may know that in him is hidden the fountaine of all knowledge & wiſdome Hee that followeth me. There is an exhortation put after doctrine, which the promiſe which is added immediately doth confirme. For whenas we heare that they are out of danger of erring, whoſoeuer doe ſuffer Chriſte to rule them, we muſt be ſtirred vp to follow him: & hee himſelfe draweth vs hither as it were with his out ſtretched hande. And alſo ſuch a large & great promiſe ought to bee of great force, that they are certaine that they haue a ſure way through the middeſt of darkneſſe, who ſhall caſte their eyes vpon Chriſt: and that not for a ſhort time only, but vntill they come vnto the marke it ſelf. For the words of the future tenſe import ſo much, that they ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but ſhall haue the light of life. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth this laſt thing wherein the continuaunce of the light is plainely expreſſed. Wherefore we need not feare leaſt he faile vs in the middeſt of the iourney, ſeeing that he bringeth vs through vnto life. The Genetiue caſe is taken for the adiunct noting the effect, after the maner of the Hebricians, as if he had ſaid, the liuely light. Furthermore, it is no maruel that there raigneth ſuch groſſe and thick miſts of errors and ſuperſtitions in the world, ſeeing that there be ſo fewe that beholde Chriſt.

13 Therfore the Phariſees ſaid. They obiect that which is wont cõmonly to be ſaide, that no man is to be truſted in his owne cauſe. For a true teſtimonie is put in ſteed of a lawfull teſtimonie, & ſuch a one as is worthy to be beleeued. To be ſhort, their mening is, that he looſeth his words in vaine, vnleſſe he haue ſome proofe from ſome other.

14 And if I teſtifie. Chriſt maketh anſwere that his teſtimonie is of credite and authoritie enough: becauſe he is no priuate man of the cõmon ſort of men: but he beareth a farre other perſon. For when as he ſaith that he knoweth whence he commeth, and whither he will goe, hee doth by this exempt himſelfe out of the cõmon ſort of men. Therefore his meaning is, that wheras euery n.ã is ſuſpected in his own cauſe, & it is prouided by the lawes, that no man be beleeued whenas he ſpeaketh in his owne cauſe, that taketh no place in the ſonne of God, who is far aboue all the world. For hee is not reckoned in the common ſorte of men: but hee is adorned with this priuiledge of the father, that hee can bring all men into order by his word alone, I know from whence I came. In theſe woordes hee affirmeth, that hee hath not his beginning of the world: but that hee came from God: and that therefore it is an vniuſt and abſurd thing that his doctrine which is diuine ſhoulde be ſubiect to the lawes of men. But becauſe beeing then cloathed with the forme of a ſeruaunt, he was deſpiſed of them becauſe of the humilitie of the fleſhe, hee doeth alſo call them backe vnto the glory of his reſurrection whichwas to come,which was an excellent token of the godhead whiche was hidden & vnknowen before. VVherefore that meane eſtate ſhould not haue hindered the Iewes frō ſubmitting themſelues vnto the only embaſſadour of God promiſed vnto them long before in the law. VVhē as he ſaith that he knoweth,& that they know not,his meaning is that their vnbelief doth no whit impayre his glory. Furthermore,ſeeing that he hath declared the ſame vnto vs,our faith muſt deſpice all the backbitings & whiſperings of the wicked. For it cannot be grounded in God,vnleſſe it be far aboue the greateſt height of the world. But to the end the goſpel may haue his maieſtie amongſt vs,we muſt alwayes take heed vnto the heauenly glory of Chriſt,& ſo heare him ſpeaking in the world,that we remember whence he came,& what maner empyre hee hath now hauing ended his embaſſage. For as he humbled himſelfe for a ſeaſon,ſo he ſitteth now vpon the right hand of the father, that euery knee may be bowed vnto him.

15 You iudge according to the fleſh, I iudge no man.

16 And if I iudge, my iudgement is true: becauſe I am not alone, but I and the father that ſent mee.

17 Furthermore it is written in your law, that the teſtimonie of two men is true.

18 I am he that teſtifie of my ſelfe, and the father that ſent me doth teſtifie of me.

19 Therefore they ſaid vnto him, where is thy father? Ieſus anſwered them, you neither know me nor my father, if you did knowe me, you ſhoulde alſo verilie knowe my father.

20 Theſe wordes ſpake Ieſus in the treaſurie, teaching in the temple, And no man laid hand on him becauſe his houre was not yet come.

15 You iudge according to the fleſh. It may be expounded two maner of wayes,either that they iudge according to the wicked iudgement of the fleſh,or that they iudge with reſpect of perſon: for fleſh is ſometimes taken for the outward ſhew of man,and both ſenſes will well agree with this place. Becauſe whether the affections of the fleſh do beare rule, or the reſpect of perſons do preuaile in iudgement,neither truth nor equity haue any place there,yet it ſeemeth to me that the ſenſe is more ſure, if wee ſet the fleſh againſt the ſpirite ſo that hee doth denie that they are lawfull & meete iudges for this cauſe: becauſe they haue not the ſpirite for their guide. I iudge no man. In this alſo do the interpreters vary. Some do diſtinguiſh thus, that he iudgeth not as he is man. Other ſome doe refer it vnto the time,that ſeeing he was vpon the earth,he did not yet take vpon him the office of a iudge. Auguſtine bringeth both expoſitions,ſuſpendinge his iudgemente. But that former diſtinction can by no meanes agree. For there bee two members of this ſentence, that Chriſt iudgeth not,and if he iudge,his iudgement is firme and authenticall,becauſe it is diuine. Therefore I doe reſtraine the former member,where he ſaith that he iudgeth not,rather vnto the circumſtance of the preſer place. For to the ende hee may the better proue that his enemies are giltie of pride, hee vſeth this compariſon that they vſurpe vnto themſelues the libertie of iudging prepoſterouſly, and yet they cannot away with hym who teacheth ſimplie,and abſtaineth from the office of a iudge.

16 And if I iudge. This is a correction, least he seeme altogether to depart from his right. If I iudge, saith he, my iudgement is true, that is, it deserueth authority. And the authoritie commeth thence, because hee doth nothing but that which his father commaundeth. These wordes, I am not alone, import as much, as if he should say, that he is not one of the number of men, but that he is to be considered with the person whiche his father hath laid vpon him. But why doth he not rather plainly challendge to himselfe the diuinitie, as he might truly and worthily? To wit, because the godhead laid hid vnder the vaile of the flesh, he bringeth foorth the father, wherein it did more plainly appeare notwithstanding his wordes tend to this end, that that is to be accounted diuine whatsoeuer he doth and teacheth.

17 Furthermore, it is written in your law. His argument might seeme weake at the first blush, because no man is suffered to beare witnesse in his owne cause. But we must remember that which I saide euen nowe: namely, that Christ ought to be exempted from the common sort of men: because he is neither a priuate man, neither doth he yet handle his owne priuate businesse. In that he maketh himselfe to differ from the father, he doth in that applie himselfe vnto the capacitie of the hearers, and that in respect of his office, because he was then his fathers minister, and therefore he maketh him the authour of all his doctrine.

19 Where is thy father? It is questionles that they enquired tauntingly of his father. For besides, that according to their accustomed pride, that was despitefully receiued of them, which he spake concerning the father, they doe also mocke him, because hee doeth highly extoll his father as if hee had had his beginning from heauen. Therfore in these words they denie that they care so much for Christ his father, that they do attribute any thing vnto the sonne for his sake. And heereupon is it that Christ is so boldly contemned euery where at this day, because there be but a few that thinke that he is sent of God.

You neither know mee. He doth not vouchsafe to giue them a flat aunswere: but doeth flatly cast in their teeth their ignorance wherein they flattered themselues. They enquired concerning the father: yet neuertheless whenas they had the sonne before their eyes, in seeing they saw not. This was therefore a iust punishment for pride and such wicked vnthankfulnesse, that they who had despised the sonne of God shewed vnto them so familiarly, should neuer come vnto the father. For how shall any mortall man ascend vnto the highnesse of God, vnlesse he bee lifted vp on high by his hand? Furthermore, God did abase himself in Christ vnto the humilitie and basenesse of men, that he might reach foorth his hand. Are not those worthie to be driuen away from heauen, who do reiect God drawing neere vnto them after this sort? And let vs know that this selfe same thing is saide to vs all. For whosoeuer he be that aspireth vnto God, and beginneth not at Christ, he must needes wander as it were in a labyrinth For it is not in vain that he is called the image of the father, as we haue said elswhere. And as they are depriued of all right and true knowledge of God, who passing ouer Christ, doe striue like giaunts to come vnto heauen: so whosoeuer shall direct his minde and all his senses vnto Christ, he shall straightway be led vnto the father. For the Apostle doth not falsly say, 2. Cor. 3. 18. that through the glaſſe of the goſpel wee doe plainely behold God vnder the perſon of Chriſte. This is an incomparable reward of the obedience of faith, that he that humbleth himſelfe before Chriſt, doth pearce aboue all the heauens, euen vnto the miſteries which the Angels doe beholde and adore.

20 Theſe wordes ſpake hee, &c. The treaſurie was a part of the Temple, where the holy offeringes were laid vp. Therefore it was a famous place. VVhence we doe gather that Chriſt ſpake theſe words in a great aſſemblie of men, that the people might haue the leſſe excuſe. And alſo the Euangeliſt commendeth vnto vs the wonderfull power of God in this, that they were enforced to ſuffer Chriſt, when as he taught openly in the temple, whom they ſought of late to kill. For ſeeing that they had a quiet gouernment in the Temple, ſo that they might rule there with tyrannicall luſt, they were able to caſt out Chriſt with one becke. And ſeeing ỹ he was ſo bold as to take vpon him the office of teaching, why do they not ſtraightway lay hand vpon him? Therfore we ſee that God did get him an audience, and did aſſiſt him, leaſt theſe cruel beaſtes ſhould touch him, when as he was euen almoſt in their iawes. Hee maketh mention againe of the houre, that we may know that we liue and die not by the will of man, but by the will of God.

21 Therfore Ieſus ſaid vnto them againe, I go, & ye ſhall ſeeke me, and ye ſhall die in your ſinnes. VVhether I goe, thither can yee not come.

22 Therfore the Iewes ſaid, will hee kill himſelfe, becauſe hee ſaith, whether I goe, yee cannot come?

23 Then he ſaid vnto them, yee are from beneath, I am from aboue, yee are of the worlde, I am not of this world, 24 Therefore ſaid I vnto you, that you ſhall die in your ſinnes. for vnleſſe you ſhal beleeue, that I am, you ſhall die in your ſinnes.

21 I goe. After that he ſeeth that he can do no good amõgſt the obſtinate, he denounceth vnto them deſtruction. And this is the end of all thoſe that doe refuſe the Goſpel. For it is not raſhly throwen into the ayre, but it muſt needes breath out the ſauour of life or death. The ſumme of the words is, that the wicked ſhall once perceiue that to their great dammage, they haue reiected Chriſt offering himſelfe vnto them willingly: but to late, when as there ſhall be no more place left for repentance. And to the end he may the more terrifie them with the nigheneſſe of the puniſhment, he ſaith firſt that he wil be gone ſhortly (which ſignifieth, that the Goſpel is preached vnto them only for a ſhort time,) and if ſo be it they paſſe ouer this opportunitie, there ſhall not alwayes be an acceptable time, and dayes appointed for ſaluation. So likewiſe when as Chriſt knocketh at our gate at this day, we muſt ſtraightway goe to meete him, leaſt being wearie of our ſlouthfulneſſe he withdrawe himſelfe from vs. And truly it hath been knowen by many experiments of all times, how greatly we ought to bee afraide of this departure of Chriſte. But we muſt now firſt of all note how theſe ſought Chriſt, of whom the Euangeliſt ſpeaketh. For if their conuerſation had been true, then they had not ſought him in vain: becauſe he did not falſly promiſe, that he woulde be preſent ſo often as a ſinner ſhould grone. Therefore Chriſt meaneth not that they would ſeeke him with true faith: but as men being brought into great diſtreſſe, doe ſeeke deliueraunce euery where. For the vnbeleeuers would couet to haue God to bee mercifull vnto them: but in the meane ſeaſon they ceaſe not to flie from him. God calleth them: the comming conſiſteth in faith and repentance. But they ſet the hardneſſe of their heart againſt God: and being diſcouraged with deſpayre, they fret and fume againſt God. To be briefe, they are ſo farre from deſiring to come truly vnto God, that they leaue no place for his ayde vnleſſe he deme himſelf: which he will neuer doe. In like ſort how wicked ſoeuer ỹ Scribes were they wold willingly haue applied vnto thẽſelues the redeption which was promiſed by the hand of the Meſsias, ſo Chriſte would haue transfigured himſelfe vnto their nature. Therefore Chriſt threatneth in theſe wordes, and denounceth vnto all the vnbeleeuers, that they ſhalbe brought into ſuch ſtraits after that they haue deſpiſed the doctrine of the Goſpel, that they ſhalbe enforced to crie vnto God: but yet this their owling ſhall be in vaine: becauſe (as we haue ſaid) in ſeeking they doe not ſeek. And that is expreſſed plainly enough in the next clauſe, when he ſaith, You ſhall die in your ſinne. For he teacheth that this is the cauſe of their deſtruction, becauſe they ſhalbe diſobedient and rebellious againſt God euen to the end. And we ſhal ſee by and by what manner of ſinne this is.

Chriſt

22 VVill hee ſlea himſelfe? The Scribes goe on forward not onely in careleſſe contempt, but alſo in frowardnes. For they mocke him becauſe he ſaid, that they cannot follow him thyther, whyther he was about to go, as if they ſhould ſay, if he kill himſelfe, we confeſſe wee cannot beare him companie, becauſe we will not doe ſo. For they did both make no account of Chriſt his abſence, and they thought that they were his ſuperiours in all thinges. Therfore they bid him be packing whither hee will. This is horrible dulneſſe: but Satan doeth ſo bewitch the wicked, that through their more then drunken ſlouthfulneſſe they throw themſelues into the middeſt of the fire of Gods wrath. Doe we not ſee the ſame fury in many at this day, who hauing their conſciences made amazed, doe make a mock of al that which they heare of the feareful iudgements of God? Although it is certaine that this laughter is but from the teeth forward, becauſe they are digged within with blind prickings: but by and by they burſt out into furious nickerings like mad men.

23 You are from beneath. Becauſe they were vnworthie to be taught, his meaning was onely to ſtrike them with ſhort chidinges: as in this place he affirmeth that they doe not receiue his doctrine, becauſe they doe altogether loath the kingdom of God. Furthermore, he comprehendeth vnder theſe wordes worlde and beneath, what thing ſoeuer men haue of nature: and ſo he maketh his Goſpell, and the ſharpnes and quickneſſe of mans minde to diſagre. Becauſe the Goſpel is heauenly wiſedome, and our minde reſteth vpon the earth. Therfore no man ſhall be a meete diſciple for Chriſt, ſaue only he whom he ſhall faſhion with his ſpirite. And this is the cauſe that faith is ſo rare in the worlde: becauſe all mankinde is naturally eſtraunged and turned away from Chriſte, ſaue only thoſe whome he lifteth vp with the peculier grace of his ſpirite.

24 You shall die in your ſinnes. He putteth in the plurall number nowe, whereas he vſed the ſinguler before in the ſame ſenſe: ſaue only becauſe he meant to note in the former place that vnbeliefe is the cauſe & fountaine of all euilles: not becauſe only vnbeliefe is ſinne, or becauſe it alone doth make vs giltie of eternall death before God (as ſome do ſay too hyperbollically:) but becauſe it doth eſtrange vs frō Chriſt, & depriueth vs of his grace, from whence we ſhould haue fet deliuerance from all our ſinnes. Therefore becauſe the Iewes doe of obſtinate malice refuſe medicine, this is vnto them a deadly euill: and hereby it commeth to paſſe that being made the bondſlaues of Satan, they ceaſe not to heape ſinne vpon ſinne, and to make themſelues gilty againe & againe. Therefore he addeth by and by, Vnleſſe you beleeue, that I am. For doubtleſſe the loſt haue no other meanes whereby they can recouer ſaluation, ſaue only by flying vnto Chriſt. And in theſe wordes, that I am, is contained a great force: becauſe all theſe thinges are to be vnderſtood, whatſoeuer the ſcripture doth attribute vnto the Meſsias, and commaundeth vs to hope for at his handes. Notwithſtanding the ſumme is the reſtoring of the Church, the beginning whereof is the light of faith, whence ſpring righteouſnes and newneſſe of life. Certaine of the old writers did falſly applie this vnto the diuine eſſence of Chriſt, whereas he intreateth of his office towarde vs. This ſentence is worth the marking: for men doe neuer ſufficiently conſider the euils wherein they are drowned: againe although they be enforced to acknowledge theyr deſtruction, yet neglecting Chriſt, they looke about them vnto vaine remedies. VVherfore we muſt holde this, that vntill ſuch time as the deliueryng grace of Chriſte doe ſhewe it ſelfe, there raigneth an innumerable ſinke of all euils.

25 Therefore they ſaid vnto him, who art thou? Ieſus ſaide vnto them, from the beginning, becauſe I doe alſo ſpeake vnto you.

26 I haue many thinges to ſpeake and iudge of you: but hee that ſent me is true: & I ſpeake thoſe thinges in the worlde which I haue heard of him.

27 They knewe not that he ſpake vnto them of the father. Therefore Ieſus ſaide vnto them:

28 VVhen yee haue lifted vp the ſonne of man, then ſhall yee knowe that I am, & that I doe nothyng of my ſelfe: but like as the father hath taught mee, theſe thynges ſpeake I.

29 And he that hath ſent me, is with me, the father hath not left me alone, becauſe I doe alwayes thoſe thinges which pleaſe him.

25 From the beginning. They are muche deceiued that take beginning in the nominatiue caſe, as if Chriſt did in this place affirme his eternall Godhead. There can be no ſuch doubtfulnes in ὁ Greeke: and yet notwithſtanding the Greek interpreters doe alſo vary amongeſt themſelues. All doe agree in this, that the prepoſition is to be vnderſtood: but many doe expound it aduerbially, as if Chriſt did ſay, that this is principally to bee holden. Some alſo as Chryſoſtome, doe reade it in one text: The beginning which I alſo ſpeake vnto you, I haue manie thinges both to ſpeake and iudge of you. VVhich ſentence Nonnus did alſo gather into a verſe. Yet the other reading is more vſuall, and ſemeth to mee to bee the true rea-reading. Furthermore, I interprete (ten archen) from the beginning, and in my iudgement the ſenſe is this, I am not ſtart vp of a ſodaine, but as I was promiſed in times paſt, nowe doe I come abroade. And hee addeth, becauſe I doe alſo ſpeake vnto you: whereby he meaneth, that he teſtifieth plainly enough, who he is, if ſobeit they had eares. The cauſall coniunction (oti) is not put ſimplie to render a reaſon, as if Chriſt would prooue that hee was from the beginning, becauſe he ſpeaketh now: but he affirmeth that his doctrine doth ſo agree with that euerlaſtingneſſe whereof he maketh mention, that it ought to bee accounted inſteede of an vndoubted confirmation. It may be thus reſolued: According to the beginning: that is, he of whom alreadie in times paſt, like as now alſo, I do confirm as it were againe: or, and truly that which I nowe ſpeake agreeth alſo with the oracles of all ages: ſo that it is a ſure approbation. To bee briefe, this anſwere conſiſteth vpon two members: for vnder the worde beginning, he comprehendeth the continuall courſe of all ages, ſince that the couenant of god was eſtabliſhed with the fathers. VVhenas he ſaith that he doth alſo ſpeake, he ioyneth his preſent doctrine with the olde propheſies, and teacheth that it dependeth thereupon. VVhereupon it followeth that this was the only cauſe of the Iewiſh ignorance, becauſe they did neither beleeue the Prophetes nor the Goſpel. For there is one Chriſt ſet before them euery where. They did feigne that they were the Prophetes ſchollers, and that they had reſpect vnto the eternall couenant of GOD: but in the meane ſeaſon they refuſed Chriſte, who was promiſed from the beginning, and did offer himſelfe vnto them.

26 I haue many things to ſpeake of you. Becauſe he ſaw that he ſung a ſong vnto deafe men, he proceedeth no farther in his talke: but doth only pronounce that God will reuenge that doctrine which they contemne, becauſe he is the authour thereof. If (ſaith he) I would accuſe you, your malice and wickedneſſe doth miniſter vnto me large matter: but I doe now omit that. But the father who hath commaunded me to teache, hee ſhall not foreſlow his duetie: for he will ſurely defende and deliuer his worde from the wicked and ſacrilegious contempt of men. The ſaying of Chriſt tendeth almoſt vnto the ſame ende, whereunto that of Paule. 2. Tim. 2. 13. If wee ſhall denie he continueth faithfull, he cannot deny himſelfe. To be briefe, he threateneth the iudgement of God vnto the vnbeleeuers, who doe not beleeue his worde, becauſe he muſt needs defend his truth. And this is the true ſtabilitie of our faith, when as we are perſuaded that God alone is ſufficient to eſtabliſh the authoritie of his doctrine, although the whole world doe refuſe it. All thoſe which ſerue Chriſte and truſt to this ayde, may ſafely conuince the whole world of lying.

And the things which I haue heard. He ſaith that he vttereth nothing ſaue that which he hath receiued of the father. And this is the only approbation of doctrine, when as the miniſter ſheweth that all that proceedeth from God which he ſpeaketh. Furthermore, we know that Chriſt did then play the part of a miniſter: therefore it is no marueile, if hee doe therefore deſire to be heard, becauſe he bringeth the commaundements of God vnto men. And by his example he preſcribeth a common lawe vnto all the whole Church, that none be heard ſaue only hee that ſpeaketh out of the mouth of God. But like as he caſteth downe the peruers arrogancie of men who thruſt in theſelues without the word of God, ſo doth he furniſh and arme with inuincible conſtancie, godly teachers, who are well aſſured in theyr conſciences of their calling: ſo that whileſt that they haue God for their guide they may boldly triumph againſt all mortall men.

27 They knew not. Heereby it appeareth how dull thoſe men are, whoſe mindes Satan doth poſſeſſe. There could nothing bee more certaine then that they are cited vnto the throne of God: but they are altogether blinde, which thyng chaunceth alſo dayly vnto other enemies of the Goſpell. Furthermore, ſuch making blinde of them ought to teach vs to feare. 28 When ye haue lifted vp. Chriſt being offended with that dulnes which the Euangeliſt noteth, he affirmeth againe that they are altogether vnworthie to heare any more out of his mouth. You haue (ſaith he) al your ſenſes as it were bewitched, and therfore you vnderſtand nothing of theſe thinges which I ſpeake: but there ſhall once be a time whē you ſhal know that there was a Prophet of god conuerſant amōgſt you, which ſpake vnto you. Thus muſt we deale with the wicked: they muſt be called preciſely vnto the iudgement ſeate of the higheſt Iudge. And this knowledge whereof Chriſt maketh mention is too late, when as the wicked being drawen vnto puniſhment, do againſt their wylles acknowledge God to be their iudge, whom they ſhoulde haue meekely reuerenced. Neither doth he promiſe vnto them amendment of life: but he ſaith plainely that after they ſhall be ſtriken with a new and vnlooked for feare of Gods wrath, the dulneſſe wherein they now reſt ſhall
Gen. 3. 7. bee taken from them. So the eyes of Adam were opened, that being aſhamed, in ſeeking lurking dennes in vaine, he might at length perceiue that he was loſt. Although that knowledge of Adam, which might haue beene of it ſelfe vnprofitable, turned to his good through the grace of God: but the reprobate being ouerwhelmed with deſpayre, haue their eyes opened only to this ende, that they may ſee their deſtruction. And God doth bring them to this kinde of knowledge diuers waies. For oftentimes being ſcourged they learne that God is angrie with thē: ſometimes hee vexeth them inwardly without vſing any outwarde torments: ſometimes he ſuffereth them to ſleepe vntill hee call them out of the worlde. By the worde lifted vp, Chriſt meaneth his death. And he maketh mention, of his death, that hee may foretell them, that although they extinguiſh him according to the fleſh, yet ſhall it profite them nothing: as if he ſhould ſay, You doe now proudly mock me when I ſpeake vnto you: your vngodlineſſe ſhall ſhortly goe farther, to wit, euen vnto my death: then ſhall you triumph as if you had obteyned your deſire. But you ſhall ſhortly perceiue by your moſt wicked deſtruction, howe much my death differeth from deſtruction. He vſeth the word (lifted vp) that he may the more pricke them. Their purpoſe was to drowne Chriſt in the neathermoſt hell: he affirmeth that this their hope ſhalbe fruſtrate, and that the euent ſhalbe farre contrarie. It may be indeed that he alludeth vnto the external maner of his death, to wit, becauſe he was to be lifted vp vpon the croſſe: yet he did chiefly regard his glorious ſucceſſe, which followed ſhortly after contrary to all their expectations. He did triumph glorioufly ouer Satan before God and the Angels, hauing blotted out the hande writing of ſinne, and aboliſhed the giltineſſe of death vpon the croſſe; but this triumph beganne at length to appeare vnto men, when the Goſpel was preached. The ſame thing chaunced afterward, that Chriſt ſhould riſe out of the graue, and aſcend into heauen. VVhich thing we muſt hope for at this day: for whatſoeuer the wicked doe inuent to oppreſſe Chriſt with in his doctrine & church, he ſhall not onely ſpring vp againſt their willes: but ſhall turne their wicked endeuours vnto the greater encreaſe of his kingdome. That I am. I haue alreadie ſaide that this is not referred vnto the diuine eſſence of Chriſt, but vnto his office onely, which thing doth alſo appeare by the text, where he denieth that he doth any thing ſaue onely according to his fathers commaundement. For this is as much as if he ſhould ſay, that he is ſent of God, and that he did diſcharge is dutie faithfully.

I doe nothing of my ſelfe. That is, I doe not raſhly thruſt in my ſelfe to doe any thing. The worde ſpeake tendeth to the ſame ende: namely, vnto the office of teaching. For when Chriſt will proue that he doth nothing without his fathers commandement, he ſaith that he ſpeaketh according as he teacheth him. Therefore this is the ſumme of the words: In all this adminiſtration which yee condemne there is nothing myne: but I doe onely execute that which God hath enioyned me: they be his wordes which you heare out of my mouth: and he alone doth gouerne my calling, the authour whereof he is. Let vs remember, that which I haue ſometimes touched, that theſe wordes are applyed vnto ỹ capacitie of the hearers. For becauſe they iudged Chriſt to be one of the common ſort of men, he denieth that that is his, what diuine thing ſoeuer he hath: as if he ſhould ſay, that it is not mans, neither of man: becauſe ỹ father teacheth vs by him, & maketh him the onely ſchoole maſter of the Church: therfore he affirmeth that he is taught of the father.

29 And he that ſent me. He boaſteth againe that God, through whoſe conduct & aid he doth all things, wil be preſent with him, leaſt he labor in vain & without fruite: as if he ſhould ſay, that ỹ power of the ſpirit of God is ioyned with his miniſterie. All godly teachers muſt be endowed with the ſame confidence, that they doubt not but be fully aſſured that the hand of god wil be nigh vnto thẽ, whileſt that with a pure cõſcience they ſhew theſelues to bee ſuch' miniſters vnto him as he requireth. For God doth not furniſh them with his worde that they may beate the ayre with a cold & vain ſound: but he giueth ſucceſſe by the ſecrete working of his ſpirite, & he doth alſo couer thẽ with his ayde, that their enemies beeing throwen downe they may ſtande inuincible againſt the whole world. And truly if they looke vpon themſelues & their owne habilitie, they muſt needs fall euery moment. Therfore the only way to ſtand is this, if they be perſuaded that they are vpholdẽ with the hand of god. But we muſt note the cauſe why Chriſt doth profeſſe that god is on his ſide, & that he ſhall neuer be deſtitute of his aid: namely, becauſe he dependeth wholy vpon him, & doth ſerue him faithfully. For the aduerbe (alwaies) importeth thus much, that he doth obey god not only in ſome part: but that he his altogether & without exceptiõ addicted to ſerue & obey him. Therfore if we couet to trie the ſame preſence of God, wee muſt ſubmit all our reaſon vnto his gouernment. For if our wit do poſſeſſe any part of the gouernment, becauſe gods bleſsing ſhalbe abſent, all our ſtudies ſhal be in vain, & if ſobeit there appeare for a time ſome ioyful ſhew of proſperous ſucceſſe, yet the end ſhalbe vnfortunate.

VVhen

VVhen as Chriſt ſaith, that he was not left alone, he complaineth by the way of the vnfaithfulneſſe of his nation, wherein he did almoſt finde none which did ioyne handes with hym. Neuertheleſſe he ſheweth that this one thing is ſufficient for him, that he hath God to be his reuenger. So muſt we alſo be encouraged at this day, leaſt we be diſcouraged with the ſmalneſſe of the number of the faithfull. For although all the whole worlde do gainſtand our doctrine, yet are we not alone. Moreouer, it appeareth hereby, how fooliſh the boaſting of the Papiſtes is, who paſſing ouer God, doe make their boaſt of theyr multitude.

30 As he ſpake theſe things many beleeued on him.

31 Therfore Ieſus ſaid vnto the Iewes, which beleeued in him, If you ſhall abide in my worde, you are my diſciples indeed:

32 And yee ſhall knowe the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free.

33 They anſwered him, we are the ſeed of Abraham, and we neuer ſerued any man: how ſayeſt thou yee ſhall be free?

34 Ieſus anſwered them, verily, verily I ſay vnto you, that euery one that doth ſinne is the ſeruant of ſinne.

35 And the ſeruaunt abideth not in the houſe euer: but the ſonne abydeth for euer.

36 Therfore if the ſonne ſhal ſet you free, you ſhalbe free indeed.

37 I know that you are the ſeed of Abraham: but you ſeeke to kill mee: becauſe my word dwelleth not in you.

38 I ſpeake that which I haue ſeene with my father: and you doe that which you haue ſeene with your father.

30 As he ſpake theſe things. Although the Iewes were then almoſt like to drie and barren land, yet God did not ſuffer the ſeed of his worde to periſh wholy. Therefore there ariſeth ſome fruite amongſt ſo many lets, contrarye to hope. And the Euangeliſt termeth that faith vnproperly, which was only a certaine preparation vnto faith. For he ſpeaketh no higher thing of them ſaue onely that they were bente to receiue Chriſte his doctrine: whereunto the next admonition doth alſo appertaine.

31 If you ſhall abide in my worde. Chriſt doth in this place firſt of al admoniſh vs, that it is not ſufficient if a man begin well, vnleſſe his proceedings euen vnto the end be anſwerable. By this meanes doth he exhorte thoſe who haue taſted his doctrine, vnto the perſeuerance of faith, whē as he affirmeth that they are his diſciples in deede, who haue taken deep and ſure roote in his worde, that they may abide in him. He giueth vs to vnderſtand that there bee many diſciples by profeſsion, who notwithſtanding are not Diſciples indeede, neyther doe they alſo deſerue to bee ſo accounted. And he diſtinguiſheth his from hypocrites by this marke, that they who haue falſly made their bragge of faith, doe either faint ſo ſoone as they are begunne to runne, or els in the middeſt of the race: but the faithfull goe conſtantly forwarde vnto the mark. Therfore muſte wee bee conſtant that Chriſte may take vs for his Diſciples.

32 Yee ſhall know the truth. Hee ſaith that they ſhall know the truth, who who were come vnto ſome knowledge therof. They were as yet very rude, and ſcarce taught in their A B C vnto whom Chriſt ſpeaketh: therefore it is no maruell if hee promiſe vnto them greater vnderſtanding of his doctrine: but the ſentence is generall. Therfore how muche ſoeuer euery one of vs hath profited in the goſpel, let him know that he hath neede of new encreaſings. And Chriſt vouchſafeth to beſtow this reward vpon the conſtancie of his, that he maketh himſelf more familier with them. Although he doth nothing els by this meanes but augment the other gift, leaſt any man ſhould thinke that there is any thing repaied vnto mans merit. For it is he that faſtneth his word in our harts by his ſpirite: the ſame doth dayly wipe away the clowdes of ignorance in our mindes, which do darken the brightneſſe of the Goſpel. Therfore to the end the truth may be reuealed vnto vs to the full, we muſt ſtriue to attaine vnto the knowledge therof, with an earneſt and conſtant affection.

Furthermore, it is the ſame & no other truth, which Chriſt teacheth his from the beginning vntill the end: but whom he doth lighten a litle in the beginning as it were with ſmall ſparkles, thoſe doth he at length lighten with perfect light. So that the faithfull vntill they ſhalbe fully confirmed, are after a ſort ignorant of that which they know. Notwithſtanding there is no ſo obſcure or ſmall knowledg: of faith, whiche is not effectuall vnto ſaluation.

The truth ſhall make you free. He commendeth the knowledge of his Goſpel for the fruite which we reape therof, or (which is all one) for the effect: namely, that it maketh vs free. Furthermore this is an vncomparable good thing: VVhereupon it followeth that there is nothing better or more to be deſired then the knowledge of the Goſpell. All men do feele bondage and confeſſe that it is a moſt miſerable thing: ſeeynge that the Goſpell deliuereth vs from it, it followeth that the treaſure of bleſſed life proceedeth from the ſame. Now muſt we note what maner libertie Chriſte ſpeaketh of in this place: namely, ſuch as ſetteth vs free from the tyrannie of Satan, ſinne, and death. And if ſobeit we obtaine the ſame by the benefit of the Goſpel, it appeareth hereby that we are all the ſeruaunts of ſinne by nature. Furthermore, wee muſt alſo know the manner of this deliueraunce. For ſo long as we are gouerned by our owne wit and vnderſtanding, we are the bondſlaues of ſin: but when the Lorde doth regenerate vs with his ſpirite, hee doth alſo make vs free, that being looſed from the miſerable ſnares of Satan, we may of our owne accorde obey righteouſneſſe. But regeneration commeth from faith: whereby it appeareth that libertie commeth from the Goſpel.

Now let the Papiſts be packing, & let them proudly extoll their free will: but let vs being gilty in our own cõſciences of our own bondage, let vs, I ſay, boaſt only of Chriſt who is our deliuerer. For euen for this cauſe is the Goſpel as it were the rod and ſigne of our manumiſſion or freedome, becauſe it offereth vs vnto Chriſt, and deliuereth vs to bee ſet free from the yooke of ſinne. Laſtly, we muſt alſo note this, that freedome hath his degrees according to the manner of his faith. VVherfore Paul being alreadie ſet free, doth notwithſtanding grone as yet, deſiring to be fully ſet free.

33 The ſeed of Abraham. It is vncertaine whether the Euangeliſt bringeth in the ſame men, or other ſpeaking. I thinke thus, that as it falleth out in a great multitude, there was anſwere made vnto Chriſt, and that indeed rather by the deſpiſers, then thoſe that beleeued. And this is a thing much vſed in the ſcripture, ſo often as ther is any mention made of the bodie of the people, generally to aſcribe that vnto all, whiche belongeth only vnto the one part. Furthermore, thoſe that obiect, that they are the ſeed of Abraham, & that they were alwayes free, dyd eaſily gather out of Chriſt his wordes that libertie is promiſed vnto them as vnto ſeruants. They cannot diſgeſt this, that they that were an holy & elect people ſhould be accounted bond. For what did the adoption & couenant whereby they were ſeparated from the other nations profite them, vnleſſe they were counted the children of God? Therefore they thinke that they haue iniurie offered them, when as libertie is promiſed vnto them as an accidentall good thing. Notwithſtanding it may ſeeme an abſurd thing in that they ſay that they did neuer ſerue, ſeeing they were byn ſo often oppreſſed by other tyrants, & being then ſubiect to the Romane Empire they groned vnder the moſt heauie burden of bõdage. Hereby it appeareth how ridiculous their boaſting was: yet this was ſome cloake and colour, that the vniuſt gouernment of their enemies did no whit hinder them, but that they continued free by right. But they erred firſt, in that they did not conſider that the right of their adoption was grounded in the mediatour alone. For whence came the free ſeede of Abraham, ſaue only becauſe it is exempted from the common ſeruitude of mankinde, by the ſinguler grace of the Redeemer? And alſo the other errour is not to bee borne with, that whereas they were altogether growen out of kinde, yet would they be reckoned amongeſt the children of Abraham: neither did they thinke that it is only the regeneration of the ſpirit, which maketh the lawfull children of Abraham. This hath beene a fault, almoſt in all ages too common, to referre the extraordinarie giftes of God, vnto the beginning of the fleſh: and to aſcribe vnto nature thoſe remedies which god giueth vs to correct our nature. In the mean ſeaſon we ſee how they do driue away from thẽſelues the grace of Chriſt, whoſoeuer being puffed vp with a vaine confidence doe flatter themſelues in their own eſtate. This pride goeth through the whole worlde almoſt, ſo that there is ſcarce one amongeſt an hundred that doth perceiue that he hath need of the grace of God.

34 He that doth ſin &c. An argument drawen from contraries. They made their boaſt that they were free: he proueth that they are the ſeruants of ſinne, becauſe being ſubiect to the deſires of the fleſh, they ſinne continually. And it is a maruell ỹ mẽ are not conuinced with their own experience, that hauing laid away pride, they may learne to humble themſelues. This thing is at this day too common, that the more a mans vices are, ſo much the more fiercely doth he with loftie words extol free wil. And Chriſt (as it ſeemeth) affirmeth no other thing in this place, ſaue that which in times paſt was toſſed amongſt the philoſophers, that thoſe who are addicted vnto their luſtes, are in the worſt bondage. But there is a deeper and more hidden ſenſe. For he doth not only diſpute what euill men doe bring vppon themſelues, but what maner eſtate the eſtate of mans nature is. The philoſophers thought that euerie man is made a bondſlaue at his own pleaſure, & doth returne vnto libertie againe. But Chriſt proueth & aduoucheth in this place that al thoſe are ſubiect to bõdage whõ he doth not ſet free,& ſo conſequently that they are ſeruantes by beginning,who draw the infection of ſin frõ corrupt nature;we muſt note the compariſon of grace & nature, whereupon Chriſt ſtandeth in this place,wherby it ſhall eaſily appeare that men are ſpoyled of libertie vnleſſe they recouer the ſame by ſome other meanes. This bondage is ſo voluntarie,that thoſe which offend neceſſarily are not compelled to ſin.

35 And the ſeruant, &c. He addeth a ſimilitude,takẽ from the lawes & the politik law,as a ſeruant although he rule for a time,yet is he not the heire of the houſe,whereupon he concludeth that there is no perfect & continuall libertie ſaue that which is obtained through the ſonne. By this meanes he doth accuſe the Iewes of vanitie, becauſe they make boaſt of the ſhadow inſteed of the thing. For in that they were the carnal progenie of Abrahã,they were nothing els but a ſhadow, they had a place in ỹ church of God,but ſuch an one as Iſmael did vſurp vnto himſelfe for a ſhort ſpace,the ſeruant triumphing againſt the free brother. The ſum is, whoſoeuer do boaſt that they are the childrẽ of Abrahã ,they haue nothing but a falſe & vaniſhing ſhow. 36 Therfore if the ſon ſhal make you free. In theſe words he giueth vs to vnderſtãd ỹ the right of liberty appertaineth vnto him alone: & that al other forasmuch as they are born ſeruants,are ſet free only through his grace. For he doth impart that vnto vs by adoptiõ which is proper to himſelf by nature, whileſt that we are engrafted into his bodie by faith,& are made his mẽbers. So that we muſt remẽber that which I ſaid before,that he ſetteth vs free by the goſpel. Therefore our liberty is the benefit of Chriſt: but we obtain the ſame by faith,whiche doth alſo cauſe Chriſt to regenerate vs by his ſpirit. VVheãs he ſaith that they are free indeed,there is great force in ỹ aduerb(indeed,) for we muſt vnderſtãd the contrary,which is the falſe perſwaſiõ wherwith the Iewes did ſwell:likeas euen now a great part of the world imagineth to themſelues a kingdom in moſt miſerable ſubiectiõ. 37 I know that you are the ſeed of Abraham. I take this to be ſpoken by a kind of conceſsion. Notwithſtãding in ỹ meã ſeaſon he derideth their fooliſhnes,becauſe they boaſt of a friuolous title: as if he ſhould ſay,admit I graunt you that, wherein you do ſo much flatter your ſelues,Yet what doth it profit thoſe to bee called ỹ ſeed of Abrahã,who rãgẽ againſt god & his miniſters:who being moued with an vngodly & wicked hatred of the truth,are carried headlong to ſhed innocẽt blood. wherupõ it foloweth that they are nothing leſſe thẽ that which they wilbe called,becauſe they are in no point like vnto Abrahã. You ſeeke to kyll me. VVhen he ſaith ỹ they ſeek to put him to death,becauſe his word hath no place in thẽ:his meaning is that they are not ſimply mãſlears,but that they are enforced vnto ſuche madnes with the hatred of god & his truth:which is far more cruel. For the iniurie doth not thẽ keep it ſelf within the cõpaſſe of mẽ,but it doth alſo diſhonour God. Hee ſaith that they cãnot receiue his word,becauſe their minds are ful fraught with malice,ſo that they cã admit no ſound thing.

38 That which I haue ſeen with my father. He had oftentimes alreadie made mẽtiõ of his father.Now he gathereth by an argument drawen frõ contraries,that they are both the enemies of God & children of the Diuell that reſiſt his doctrine.I do only (ſaith he) ſpeake that which I haue heard of my father: therfore how commeth it to paſſe that the word of GOD doth ſo nettle you,ſaue only becauſe you haue the father ſet againſt you?

Hee

He ſaith, that he ſpeaketh and they doe, becauſe he did take vppon him the office of a teacher: & they did furiouſly endeuour to extinguiſh his doctrine. Neuertheleſſe he ſetteth his Goſpel fre from contempt, becauſe it is no maruell if the children of the Diuell doe reſiſt it. Some doe tranſlate it doe yee: as if Chriſt did ſay, goe too, ſhew your ſelues to be the children of the Diuell, in reſiſting me. For I do only ſpeake according to the preſcript of God.

39 They aunſwered, and ſaide vnto him, Abraham is our father. Ieſus ſaieth vnto them, If you were the children of Abraham, yee woulde doe the workes of Abraham.

40 And now yee ſeeke to kill me, a man that haue ſpoken the truth vnto you, which I haue heard of God. Abraham did not this.

41 You doe the workes of your father. Therfore they ſaid vnto him, we are not begotten of fornication, we haue one father which is God.

42 Ieſus ſaid vnto them, If GOD were your father, you woulde loue mee: for I came out from God, and came, neither came I of my ſelfe but hee ſent me.

39 Our father Abraham. This chiding doeth plainely declare howe proudly and cruelly they deſpiſed all Chriſt his chidinges. They challendge this to themſelues continually, that they are the children of Abraham: and not only in that ſenſe, becauſe they had Abraham his progenie for their progenitours: but becauſe they are an holy kinred, gods inheritance, & the childrē of god. Notwithſtāding they leane only vnto the confidence of the fleſh. But the fleſhly ſtocke is nothing els but a meere viſure without faith. Now we vnderſtande what did ſo blinde them, that they toſſed Chriſt to and fro being euen armed with a deadly thunderbolt. So at this day the Papiſts doe laugh at, and boldly with fire and ſwoorde perſecute the worde of God which is able to moouе ſtones: only becauſe truſting to the deceitfull title of the Churche. they thinke that they are able to mocke God and men. To be briefe, hypocrites ſo ſoone as they haue gotten any beautifull cloake, doe oppoſe harde ſtubbornneſſe againſt God, as if hee did not pearce into theyr heartes.

If yee were the children of Abraham. Chriſt doth more plainly extinguiſh the degenerate children of Abraham from lawfull children, for hee taketh away the very name from all thoſe that are vnlike vnto Abraham. It falleth out oftentimes indeede, that the children doe not repreſent in manners their fathers, which begate them: But Chriſt doth not diſpute in this place of the carnall originall: but doth onely deny that they are accounted amongeſt the children of Abraham before God, whiche doe not hold the grace of adoption by faith. For ſeeing that the Lorde had promiſed vnto the ſeed of Abraham that he would be their God, all the vnbeleeuers which did caſt away this promiſe, did thruſt thēſelues out of the ſtock of Abraham.

Therfore the ſtate of the queſtiō is, whether they are to be accounted the children of Abraham or no, which doe caſt away the bleſſing offered vnto them in the worde, ſo that they may be neuertheles an holy ſtock, the peculiar people of God, and a princely prieſthood. Chriſte denieth this this and that for good cauſes: becauſe they muſt be borne againe of the ſpirite, which are the children of promiſe, and be new creatures, whoſoeuer deſire a place in the kingdome of God. The fleſhly ſtocke of Abraham, was no vnprofitable thing or of no valew, if ſobeit the truth were added. For the election of God reſteth in the ſeede of Abraham, yet being free, ſo that they are accounted the heires of life, whō god doth ſanctifie by his ſpirite:

40 And now yee ſeeke. He proueth by the effect, that they are not the children of Abraham, as they did bragge, becauſe they reſiſt God. For what is chiefly ye commended in Abraham but the obedience of faith? Therfore this is the marke of the difference, ſo often as wee are to diſtinguiſh his children from ſtraungers. For vaine titles are nothing worth before God, what credite ſoeuer they carry before men. Therefore Chriſte concludeth againe that they are the children of the Diuell, becauſe they are ſuche deadly enemies vnto true and ſounde doctrine.

41 VVe are not of fornication. They challenge no more to themſelues now, then before. For they thought it was all one to be the ſonne of Abraham and of God. But they were greatly deceiued therein, in that they thought that God was bound vnto all the ſeed of Abraham. For they reaſon on this wiſe, God adopted vnto himſelfe the ſtocke of Abraham, therfore ſeeing that we are begotten of Abraham, we muſt needs be the children of God. VVe ſee now how they thought that they had holyneſſe from the wombe, becauſe they ſprang from an holy roote. Finally, they affirme that they are the Church of God, becauſe they deſcende from the holy fathers. Like as at this day the continuall ſucceſſion from the fathers puffeth vp the Papiſtes, and maketh them more then ſwell. Satan doth ſo delude them and deceiue them, that they ſeparate God from his word, the church from faith, the kingdome of heauen from the ſpirite.

Therefore let vs know, that although they be not baſtards according to the fleſh, but boaſt of the laudible title of the Church, yet are they nothing leſſe then the children of God, who haue corrupted the ſeede of life. For what corners ſoeuer they runne into, yet ſhall they neuer bee able to eſcape, but that they bee puffed vp with this vaine bragge onely: VVe ſucceede the holy fathers: therfore we are the Church. And if ſo be it Chriſt his anſwere was ſufficient to refute þ Iewes withal, it is no leſſe ſufficient at this day to refute theſe men. It wil neuer be otherwiſe but þ hypocrites will with their moſt wicked boldnes vainly make boaſt of the name of God: but they ſhall neuer make thoſe beleeue that will ſtand to the iudgement of Chriſt, but that theſe falſe boaſtinges whiche they blunder out, are ridiculous.

42 If God were your father you woulde loue mee: for I. This is Chriſte his argument: VVhoſoeuer is the child of God, he wil acknowledge and loue his firſt begotten ſonne: but you hate me: therefore there is no cauſe, why you ſhoulde boaſt that you are Gods children. VVe muſt diligently note this place, that there is no godlineſſe, no feare of GOD, where Chriſt is reiected. Feigned religion pretendeth God boldly, but what agreement can they haue with the father, who diſagree with his only ſonne? what maner knowledge of God is that, where his liuely image is refuſed? And this is the meaning of Chriſt his wordes, when he teſtifieth that he came from the father. For hee giueth vs to vnderſtand that all that is diuine which he hath: and that therefore it is not likely that the true worſhippers of God doe refuſe his truth. I came not (ſaith he) of my ſelfe, you can obiect nothing vnto me which agreeth not with God: and finally you ſhall finde no earthly or humane thyng in my doctrine, and in the whole adminiſtration thereof. For hee intreateth not of his eſſence but of his doctrine.

43 VVhy doe yee not acknowledge my ſpeeche, becauſe yon cannot heare my worde?
44 You are of your father the Diuell, and yee will doe the luſtes of your father. He was a murtherer frō the beginning, & ſtood not in the truth, becauſe the truth is not in him. VVhen he ſpeaketh a lye, he ſpeaketh of his owne, becauſe he is a lyer and the father therof.
45 But becauſe I ſay the truth, you beleeue not mee.

43 VVhy doy yee not. He caſteth the ſtubbornnes of the Iewes in their teeth in this place, which was ſo great that they could not abide to heare him. Hence gathereth he that they were caried with a diueliſh furie. I ſee no difference betwene ſpeech and word. For it is more to ſay, then to ſpeak. But it were an vnmeete thing to put the leſſer in the former place. Many doe diſtinguiſh it ſo, that the ende of the interrogation may be in the worde ſpeech, as if the interrogation did only conſiſt in theſe words, VVhy doe yee not acknowledge my ſpeech? ſo that the rendring of the reaſon doth follow immediately, becauſe you cannot heare my word. But I think they ought rather to be read in one text, as if he ſhould haue ſaid, what is the cauſe that my word is barbarous and vnknowen to you, that I do you no good by ſpeaking vnto you, and ſo conſequently that you cannot vouchſafe to heare that which I ſpeake? Therefore he toucheth their dulnes in the former member: in the other, the ſtubborne hatred of his doctrine: afterward he aſſigneth the cauſe of both, when as he ſaith, that they are the children of the diuell. For his meaning was to cut of that wherof they made their boaſt continually, that they were perſwaded by reaſon and iudgement to reſiſt.

44 You are of your father the Diuell. He doth now more fully expreſſe that which he ſpake twiſe obſcurely. And we muſt vnderſtand the oppoſitiō, that they could not be ſo enuious againſt the ſon of god, vnles they had the continuall aduerſarie of God, to be their father. Furthermore, he calleth them the children of the Diuell, not only becauſe they doe imitate him, but becauſe they are enforced by him to gainſtand Chriſt. For like as we are called the children of God, not only becauſe wee are like him, but becauſe he gouerneth vs with his ſpirite, becauſe Chriſte doth liue in vs, that he may make vs like vnto the image of his father: ſo againe, the Diuel is called their father, whoſe mindes he blindeth, whoſe heartes he pricketh forward vnto all vnrighteouſneſſe: and finally in whome hee exerciſeth his tyranny by working mightily. But the Maniches did in vaine and fooliſhly abuſe this place to proue their doting. For like as when the ſcripture calleth vs the children of God, it doth not referre this

2. Cor. 4. 4. Eph. 2. 2.

vnto the propagation or beginning of the substance, but vnto the grace of the spirite which doth regenerate vs vnto newnes of life: so this saying of Christ doth nothing appertain vnto the propagation of the substance: but vnto the corruption of nature the cause and beginning whereof is the fall of man. In that therefore men are borne the children of the Diuell, it is not to be imputed vnto the creation, but vnto the vice of sinne. And this doth Christ proue by the effect, because they are bent readily and willingly to follow the Diuell.

Hee was a manslear. He expresseth what these lustes be: and he reckoneth vp two kindes, crueltie and lying: wherein the Iewes were too like Satan. In that he saith he was a manslear: he meaneth that he imagined mans destruction. For so soone as man was created, Satan being pricked forward with a wicked desire to hurt, did bende all his force to destroy him. And Christ doth not meane the beginning of the creation, as if God had giuen him a desire to hurt: but he vnderstandeth the corruption of nature in Satan, which he got to himselfe, which appeareth better out of the second member, wher he saith that he stood not in the truth. For although they would escape who feigne that the Diuell was euill by nature, notwithstanding these words doe plainely expres a changing vnto worse: & that therfore Satā is a lyar: because he fell away frō the truth. Therfore in that he is a lyar, it is not therefore because he dissented from the truth by nature: but because he fell away from the same by a voluntarie fall. This description of Satan is verye profitable for vs, that euery man may take heede of his subtiltie, and also studie to resist his violence and force. For he goeth about like a roaring Lion seeking whom he may deuour, and he is furnished with a thousand craftes and sleightes to deceiue: wherefore the faithfull ought so muche the more to be furnished with spirituall weapons to fight, and to be giuen to watchfull sobrietie that they may watch. Now if Satan cannot put off this affection, there is no cause why we should be troubled with this as with some new and vnwonted thing, when as errours arise: for Satan pricketh forward his children, as fannes to make mad the world with their errours. And it is no maruell if Satan doe so earnestly endeuour, to ouer runne the truth: for it is the only life of the soule. Therefore lying hath a most deadly dart to slea the soule. Seeing that all men which haue eyes, doe see this image of Satan in Papistrie at this day, they must first of all consider with what enemie they make warre: and secondly flie vnto the ayd of Christ their captain, vnder whose banner they fight. That which followeth next, because the truth is not in him, is a confirmatiō of the effect, or taken (as they say) from the latter. For because Satan hateth the truth, neyther can abyde the same, but is rather altogether ful of lyes: Christe gathereth hence that hee is altogether fallen from the truth, and that he is an enemie to the same. Therfore let vs not maruel if hee shew some fruite of his Apostacie. 1. Pet. 5. 8.

When hee speaketh a lie. They expounde this commonly thus: as if Christe dyd denie that lying did belong vnto GOD the authour of nature, and dyd rather say that it came from depraūation. But I interprete it more simplie, that it is the Diuell his common custome to lye, and that hee canne doe nothing els but woorke fraude, deceite and guile. And yet may we fitly gather out of theſe words, that the Diuell hath this vice of himſelfe, and that it is ſo proper vnto him, that it is alſo accidentall. For whenas Chriſte maketh the Diuel the craftes man of lying, he doth manifeſtly ſeparate him from God, yea hee affirmeth that he is contrarie vnto him. To the ſame ende tendeth the worde father, which is added immediately: for Satan is called the father of lying for this cauſe, becauſe he is eſtraunged from God, in whome alone the truth abydeth, and from whom as from the onely fountaine it floweth.

45 And becauſe. He confirmeth the former ſentence: becauſe ſeeing that they haue no cauſe to reſiſt, ſaue onely becauſe they hate the truth, they doe openly bewray them ſelues to bee the children of Satan.

46 Which of you accuſeth mee of ſinne? And if I ſpeake the truth, why doe ye not beleeue me?

47 He that is of God, heareth the words of God: yee heare not, becauſe yee are not of God.

48 Therfore the Iewes anſwered, and ſaid vnto him, doe not we ſay well, that thou art a Samaritane, and haſt a Diuell.

49 Ieſus anſwered, I haue not a Diuell: but I honour my father, and yee haue diſhonoured mee.

50 And I ſeeke not my glory: there is one that ſeeketh and iudgeth.

46 Which of you. This interrogation proceedeth from boldnes. For ſeeing that he was giltie of no crime, hee triumpheth ouer his aduerſaries as a conquerour. And yet notwithſtanding he doth not ſay that he is free from their ſlaunders: for whenas they had no matter to ſpeake againſt him, yet did they not ceaſe to raile vpon Chriſt: but he vnderſtandeth ſ there was no faultin him. And thus much doth the word elegchein ſignifie, as the latines doe call it (rebuking), whenas any man is founde giltie indeed. And yet notwithſtanding they are deceiued who thinke that Chriſte doeth in this place defende his perfect innocencie, wherein he alone did excell amongeſt men, inſomuch as he was the ſon of God. For this defence muſt be reſtrained vnto the circumſtance of the place, as if he did deny that any thing can bee obiected vnto him, for which he is not the faithfull miniſter of God. Like as Paul boaſteth that
1. Cor. 4. 4 he knew nothing by himſelf. For this is not extended vnto his whole life: but it is a defence of his doctrine and Apoſtleſhip alone. Therefore ſome there bee who without cauſe doe play the Philoſophers concerning the perfection of righteouſnes, which appertaineth onely vnto the ſonne of GOD, ſeeing this is his only purpoſe, to make his miniſterie to be of credite, as it appeareth more plainely by that which followeth. For he addeth againe immediately. If I ſay the truth, &c. VVhence wee gather that Chriſt doth rather defende his doctrine then his perſon.

47 He that is of God. Becauſe hee may by good right take this for a thing graunted, that hee is the Embaſſadour of his father, and that hee doeth truely execute the function whiche was enioyned hym, hee inueigheth inueigheth more vehemently againſt them. For their vngodlineſſe was not now vnknowen, ſeeing they were ſo ſtubborn in refuſing the word of God. He had declared that they could lay nothing to his charge, but that he taught as out of the mouth of God. Therfore he concludeth that they had nothing to do with God, becauſe they heare not: & omitting to ſpeak of himſelf, he denounceth that they did feight againſt god. We are taught by this place that there is no more euident ſigne of a reprobate minde, then whenas a man cannot abide the doctrine of Chriſt although otherwiſe he ſhine with angelicall holineſſe to looke vnto: like as if we willingly embrace the ſame, wee haue as it were a viſible ſeale of our election. For he that hath the word enioyeth God himſelfe: and he that reiecteth it depriueth himſelf of righteouſneſſe and life. Wherefore we ought to be afraid of nothing more, then leaſt we fall into that horrible iudgement.

48 Say wee not well. They doe more and more bewray how greatly they were made amazed by Satan, who being more then cõuinced, are not yet afraid to runne headlong through the middeſt of deſpayre. Furthermore, in that they raile double vpon Chriſt, yet this is their whole drift, to proue him to be a deteſtable man, and that he is driuen with an euill ſpirite. Becauſe the Iewes did account the Samaritanes reuoltes and corrupters of the law, ſo often as they would ſlaunder any man, they called him a Samaritane. And therefore nowe becauſe they haue no greater fault, wherewith they can defame Chriſte, they ſnatch at that without iudgement and raſhly, which was common. To be briefe, wee ſee that they do wantonly rayle, becauſe being incenſed with a dogged madnes they can finde nothing to ſay.

49 I haue not a Diuell. In that paſsing ouer the former fault he doth only purge himſelfe of the ſecond, ſome do thinke that it was done for this cauſe, becauſe he neglected the reproch doone to his perſon, and did only take in hand the defence of his doctrine: but in my iudgement they are deceiued: for it is not to be thoght ỹ the Iewes did ſo cunningly diſtinguiſh betweene his life and doctrine. Againe, the hatred of this name proceeded hence (as we haue ſaid) becauſe the Samaritanes being peruers and degenerate keepers of the lawe, had corrupted the ſame with much ſuperſtition and corruption. And they polluted the whole worſhip of God with ſtraunge inuentions. Auguſtine fyeth vnto the allegorie that Chriſt did not refuſe to be called a Samaritane, becauſe he is the true keeper of his flocke, But I thinke that Chriſt did ayme at another marke. For ſeeing that the two reproches did tend both to one end, he refuteth both vnder one, Yea if a man do well weigh the words they did burden him ſorer by calling him a Samaritane, then one that had a Diuell. But (likeas I haue alreadie ſaid) Chriſt was content with a ſimple refutation, which he taketh from the contrary, when as he affirmeth that he is deſirous to honour his father. For he muſt needes be gouerned with the ſpirit of God, and be the ſeruant of God, which honoreth him aright and ſincerely.

You ſlaunder mee. This member may be expounded thus, as if Chriſte did complaine that he was not honoured with that honour, whereof he is worthie that furthereth Gods glory: but I thinke that he hath reſpect vnto a farther thing: namely, that he ioyneth his fathers glory with his owne glory as if he ſhould ſay, I take nothing vnto my ſelfe, whiche turneth not vnto Gods glory: for his maieſtie ſhineth in mee, his power and gouernment are reſident in me. Therfore ſeeing that you entertain me ſo ſimply, you are reprochfull againſt God himſelfe. Therfore hee addeth by and by, that God would reuenge this iniurie. For they might lay ambition vnto his charge, vnleſſe he had teſtified that he was careful for his owne honour or contempt, not for any priuate affection of the fleſhe, but ſo farre foorth as it concerneth the honour or diſhonour of God. And although we be farre diſtant from Chriſte, yet euery man may be fully perſwaded, that if hee bee fully bent to ſeeke the glory of God: there is ſufficient praiſe laid vp for him with God. For we ſhall

1. Sam. 2. 30. alwayes trie that that is true, Thoſe that honour mee, will I make honourable. If he be not only deſpiſed amongſt men, but alſo rayled vpon, let him wait patiently vntill the day of the Lord appeare.

51 Verily, verilie I ſay vnto you, if any man ſhall keepe my woorde, hee ſhall not ſee death.

52 Therfore the Iewes ſaid vnto him, Now we know that thou haſt a diuell: Abraham is dead, and the Prophets, and thou ſayeſt, If any man ſhall keepe my woorde he ſhall not taſt of death.

53 Art thou greater then our father Abraham that is dead? and the Prophetes are dead, whom doeſt thou make thy ſelfe?

54 Ieſus anſwered, If I glorifie my ſelfe, my glory is nothing, it is my father that glorifieth me, who you ſay is your God.

55 And you know him not: but I know him: and if I ſhall ſay that I know him not, I ſhalbe a lyar like vnto you: but I know him, and keepe his worde.

51 Verily, verily I ſay vnto you. It is queſtionles that Chriſte knew that there were ſom in that companie that were curable, & alſo þ there were ſome which were not aduerſaries to his doctrine. Therfore he meant ſo to terrifie the wicked, whoſe wickednes was deſperate, that notwithſtanding he might leaue ſome matter of comfort for the good, or he might yet allure vnto himſelfe thoſe that were not yet loſt. Therfore howſoeuer the greater part doth loath the worde of God, yet a godly teacher muſt neuer be bent ſo wholy to reproue the wicked, but that he muſt alſo impart vnto the children of GOD the doctrine of ſaluation, and endeuour to bring them vnto a ſound mind, if there be any that are not altogether vncurable. Therfore Chriſt promiſeth in this place vnto his diſciples eternall life: but hee requireth ſuch Diſciples as may not only beeken with their eares as aſſes, or profeſſe with their mouthes that they allow his doctrine: but thoſe that will keepe it as a precious treaſure, he ſaith, they ſhall not ſee death, becauſe where faith doth quicken the ſoule of man, death cannot giue any deadly wounde any more hauing his ſting beaten back, & poyſon wyped away.

52 Now we know. The wicked perſiſt in their dulneſſe, neither are they touched any more with promiſes then with threatnings: ſo that they can neither be led nor drawen vnto Chriſt. VVhereas ſome doe thinke that they craftily wreſt the wordes, becauſe they ſay, taſt of death, which which they heard not of Chriſt, I thinke it is ſcarſe ſound. I do rather thinke that the phraſes did ſignifie all one thing amongeſt the Hebrues: To taſt of death, and to ſee death, for to die. But in this they are falſe interpreters, becauſe they apply the ſpirituall doctrine of Chriſte vnto the body.

None of the faithfull ſhall ſee death, becauſe being borne againe of vncorruptible ſeed, they liue euen by dying, becauſe beeing ioyned vnto Chriſt their head, they cannot be extinguiſhed by death, becauſe death is vnto them a paſſage into the kingdome of heauen, becauſe the ſpirit that dwelleth in them is life for righteouſnes, vntill he ſwallow vp the death which remaineth. But theſe men as they are carnall, ſo they do acknowledge no deliuerance from death but ſuch as may appeare openly in the body. And this diſeaſe is too cõmõ in the world, ſo that moſt men do almoſt make no account of the grace of Chriſt, becauſe they eſteeme the ſame only by the ſenſe of the fleſh. Therfore leaſt the ſame befall vs, our mindes are to be awaked, that they may be made partakers of the ſpirituall life in the middeſt of death.

53 Then our father. This is the other vice, becauſe they endeuour to darken the glory of Chriſte with the brightneſſe of Abraham and the ſaintes. But as the brightneſſe of the Sun doth darken all the ſtarres, ſo all the glory which is in the Saintes muſt vaniſh away at the vnmeaſurable brightneſſe of Chriſt. Therefore they deale vniuſtly and peruerſly in that they ſet the ſeruantes againſt the maſter. Nay, moreouer they are iniurious vnto Abraham and the Prophets, whileſt that they abuſe their name againſt Chriſt. But this frowardnes hath alſo reigned almoſt in al ages, and it doth as yet reigne at this day, that the wicked by pulling in peeces the workes of God, doe make him as it were their aduerſarie. God did make his name knowen by the Apoſtles and martyres: the Papiſtes make vnto themſelues Idols of the Apoſtles & Martires, that they may ſupplie the place of God: doe they not by this meanes forge vnto themſelues of the graces of God, engins to pul down his power? For what remaineth vnto God or Chriſte, if the Saintes haue that which the Papiſtes doe giue vnto them lauiſhingly? Therfore we muſt knowe that all the order of the kingdome of GOD is confounded vnleſſe the Prophetes, Apoſtles, and all the Saintes bee farre inferiour vnto Chriſte that hee alone may excell them all. And truly we cannot ſpeake more honourably of the Saints then whenas we put them vnder Chriſt.

But howſoeuer the Papiſtes doe deceiue the vnskilfull, by boaſting that they are good worſhippers of the Saintes, yet they are iniurious both vnto God and them, becauſe they pull downe Chriſt by ſetting them vp. And truely they offende double in this, that they preferre the Saintes before Chriſt in theyr doctrine: ſecondly in that cloathing them with that which they take from Chriſt, they doe almoſt diſpoyle Chriſte of his power.

54 If I glorifie. Before hee anſwere them concerning that vnequall compariſon, he ſaith firſt, that hee ſeeketh not his owne glory, & by this meanes he anſwereth their ſlaunder. If any man obiect that Chriſt did alſo glorifie himſelfe, we may readily anſwere, that hee did this not after the manner of men, but hauing God for his authour and guyde: for in this place (as in many other) he ſeparateth himſelfe from God by a kinde of graunting, In ſumme, he affirmeth that he deſireth no glory, ſaue that which is giuen him of his father. And we are taught by theſe wordes, that ſithence God doth glorifie his ſon, hee will not ſuffer the world to contemne him freely. In the meane ſeaſon theſe voyces of god ſounding from heauen ought not a little to encourage the faithfull to worſhip Chriſt reuerently, Kiſſe the ſonne, Let all the Angels worſhip him, Let euery knee bowe vnto him, heare him, let the Gentiles ſeeke after him, let all flesh be humbled. Furthermore, we are admoniſhed by theſe words, that all that glory is vaine and nothing worth, which men doe purchaſe to themſelues of themſelues. Therfore what blinde ambition is this when as we are buſie about nothing? Therefore let vs alwayes haue that ſaing of Paule before our eyes, 2. Cor. 10. 17. Hee that commendeth himſelfe is not allowed, but he whom God commendeth. And becauſe we are all deſtitute of the glory of God, let vs learne to glory in Chriſt alone, foraſmuch as hee maketh vs partakers of his glory through grace.

VVho you ſay. He wreſteth from them the falſe colour and cloake of the name of God, which they were wont to catch at. I knowe (ſaith he) how boldly you boaſt, that you are the people of God: but that is a falſe title becauſe you doe not acknowledge GOD. VVhence wee doe alſo learne what profeſſion of faith is lawfull: namely, that which ſpringeth from true knowledge: and whence commeth that knowledge but frō the word? therfore whoſoeuer make boaſt of the name of God without the word of God, they do nothing els but lie. In the meane ſeaſon, Chriſt ſetteth the boldnes of his conſcience againſt their frowardneſſe. And thus doth it become all the ſeruaunts of God, to haue theyr mindes ſo ſetled, that they be content with this one thing, that God is on their ſide, although all the whole world do rebell againſt him. Thus did the couragiouſneſſe of the Prophets & Apoſtles ſtand inuincible againſt al ỹ horrible brunts of ỹ whole world: becauſe they knew who it was that ſent them. And whereas the perfect knowledge of God is wanting there is nothing that can hold vs vp.

55 And if I ſhall ſay. By this clauſe Chriſt doth teſtifie that he is enforced by the neceſſitie of his office to ſpeake: becauſe his ſilence ſhould be a traiterous betraying of the truth. An excellent ſentence, that God doth reueale himſelf vnto vs to this end, that we may with our mouth profeſs amongeſt men, the faith of our heart, when neede requireth. For doubtleſſe this ought not a litle to terrifie vs, that they which do diſſemble for mans ſake, and do either denie the truth of God, or diſfigure the ſame with falſe inuentions and gloſſes, are not only a little weakened: but are euen ſent away to be the ſonnes of Satan.

56 Your father Abraham reioyced, to ſee my daye: and hee ſawe it and was glad.

57 Therfore the Iewes ſaid vnto him, Thou haſt not yet fifty yeeres, and haſt thou ſeen Abraham?

58 Ieſus ſaid vnto them, verilie, verily I ſay vnto you, before Abraham was made, I am.

59 Therfore they tooke vp ſtones, to caſt at him: and Ieſus was hidde, and went out of the Temple.

56 Your father Abraham. He graunteth vnto them only in word, that which he tooke from them before: namely, that Abraham is their father. And he ſheweth how vaine that obiecting of the name of Abraham was, This (ſaith he) was the only end which was ſet before him during his whole life, to ſee my kingdom floriſh. For he deſired me whē I was abſent: you deſpice me being preſet. That which Chriſt affirmeth in this place as touching Abraham alone, appertaineth vnto all the ſaints: but this doctrine is more weighty in the perſon of Abraham, becauſe he is the father of all the whole church. Therefore whoſoeuer is deſirous to be reckoned in the number of the godly, let him receiue with ioy conuenient the preſence of Chriſt, which Abraham did moſt earneſtly deſire. For in the worde reioyced is expreſſed his vehement and earneſt affection.

Now muſt we vnderſtand the oppoſition. When as the knowledge of Chriſt was as yet ſo obſcure, Abraham was ſo inflamed with the deſire therof, that he preferred the enioying therof before all good things whatſoeuer: therfore how filthie is their vnthankfulneſſe, who deſpice him being opēly reuealed vnto thē, & ſo cōſequently reiect him? Day doth not ſignifie in this place (as Auguſtine thought) eternitie, but the time of Chriſt his kingdom, after ꝑ being clothed with fleſh he appeared vnto the world, that he might fulfill ꝑ functiō of a redeemer. But now the queſtion is how Abraham ſaw the manifeſtation of Chriſt euen with the eies of faith: for this ſeemeth not to agree with the other ſaying of Chriſt, many kinges and prophetes haue wiſhed to ſee the things which you ſee, and haue not ſeen thē. Luk. 10. 24. I anſwere that faith hath her degrees in the beholding of Chriſt: wherby it commeth to paſſe that the olde propheres ſawe Chriſt a farre off, as he was promiſed vnto thē: & yet coulde they not behold him as if he had been preſent, likeas he reueiled himſelfe familiarly and throughly when he came downe from heauen vnto men.

Furthermore we are taught by theſe wordes, that as God did not ſuffer the deſire of Abraham to be fruſtrate, ſo hee will not at this day ſuffer any man in vaine to deſire to come vnto Chriſt, but he will ſatisfie his deſire. Therfore in that he doth not giue himſelfe to be enioyed of many, the cauſe therof is mans frowardnes, becauſe there is but a fewe that deſire him. The ioy of Abrabam doth teſtifie that he counted the knowledge of the kingdome of Chriſt, an vnſpeakable treaſure: and to this end is he ſaid to haue reioyced when he ſaw the day of Chriſt, that we may know ꝑ there was nothing wherof he made greater account. This fruite of faith doe all the faithfull reape that beeing content with Chriſt alone, in whō they are fully & perfectly bleſſed, they haue quiet and merie conſciences. And truly no man knoweth Chriſt aright, ſaue he that giueth him this honour, that hee ſtay himſelfe wholy vpon him. Some do expound it thus, that Abraham after he was dead, did perceiue the preſence of Chriſt, when he appeared vnto the worlde: and ſo they make the time of the deſire and the time of the ſeeing diuers times: It is true in deed that the comming of Chriſte was reuealed vnto the holy ſpirits after death, for whom they looked during their whole life: but I cannot tell whether ſo ſubtile an expoſition will agree with the wordes of Chriſt or no.

57 Fiftie yeeres. They goe about to refute the ſaying of Chriſt as a thing vnpoſsible, in that he maketh himſelfe equall with Abraham who dyed many yeres agoe, being himſelfe as yet not 50. yeres olde. And although Chriſt were not yet foure and thirtie yeeres of age, yet they do graunt him more age, leaſt they ſhoulde ſeeme to deale too preciſely & ſtraightly with him, as if he ſhould ſay, thou wilt not make thy ſelfe ſo olde, that thou canſt boaſt that thou art fiftie. Therefore thoſe who doe cõiecture that his face was more ſhrieueled then his age required, or that mention is not made in this place of the yeeres according to the aſcending and deſcending of the Sun, they both buſie themſelues about nothing: and the vaine ſurmiſe of Papia who taught that Chriſte liued aboue fiftie yeeres, is in no caſe to be receiued.

58 Before Abraham was made. Becauſe the vnbeleeuers doe iudge only according to the carnal ſight, Chriſt telleth them that he hath ſomwhat that is greater and higher then mans ſhape, which beeing hidden from the ſenſes of the fleſh, is onely ſeene with the eyes of faith. In this reſpect he affirmeth that he might haue been ſeene of the holy fathers before he did appeare in the fleſh. Yet he vſeth other wordes, before (ſaith he) Abraham was borne, I am. But in theſe wordes he exempteth himſelfe from the common ſort of men, and challengeth to himſelfe an heauenly and diuine power, the feeling and perceiuing wherof was ſpread abroad from the beginning of the worlde, throughout all ages. Although theſe wordes may be expounded two manner of wayes: for ſome do thinke that this may agree with the eternall Godhead of Chriſt ſimplie, and they compare it with that place of Moſes, I am that I am. Exod. 3. 14. But I doe ſtretch the ſame further: becauſe the power and grace of Chriſt, inaſmuch as he is the redeemer of the worlde, was common to all ages. Therfore it agreeth with that ſaying of the Apoſtle, Chriſt yeſterday, & to day, and for euer, Heb. 13. 8. For the text ſeemeth to require that it ſhould be ſo. He had ſaid before that Abraham did earneſtly deſire his day: becauſe the Iewes would not beleeue that, he addeth that he was euen then alſo. Furthermore, the rendring of the reaſon ſhall not bee ſtrong enough vnleſſe we vnderſtand, that hee was euen then knowen to be the mediatour, by whom God ſhould be pacified. And yet notwithſtanding in that the grace of the mediatour was of force in all ages, this depended vpon his eternall Godhead. Therefore this ſaying of Chriſt containeth an excellent commendation of his diuine eſſence. Furthermore, wee muſt marke the ſolemne forme of his aſſeueration verily, verily. Neyther doe I miſlike that, in that Chryſoſtome thinketh that there is great weight in the preſentenſe of the verbe. For he ſaith not, I was, or I haue beene, but I am: whereby he ſignifieth an equall and the ſame ſtate from the beginning of the world vntil the end therof, neither ſaith he, before Abraham was: but, before he was made, attributing vnto him a beginning.

59 Therefore they tooke vp ſtones. It is to bee thought that they did this as if according to the appointment of the law, Chriſt were to be ſtoned. VVhence we gather how great the madneſſe of raſh zeale is. For they haue no eares to know the matter, but they haue handes readie to commit ſlaughter. But I doe not doubt but that Chriſt deliuered himſelfe by his ſecrete power, but yet vnder the ſhowe of humilitie. For he would would not plainely shew foorth his diuinitie, but wouldе leaue somewhat for humane infirmitie. VVhereas some bookes haue that he passed so through the midst of them, Erasmus coniectureth not vnaduisedly that this was taken out of the 4. Chapter of Luke. And this also is worth the noting, that the wicked Priestes and Scribes, hauing driuen away Christ, in whom dwelleth all the fulnesse of the Godhead, doe keepe possession of the externall temple. But they are sore deceiued, when as they thinke that they haue a temple which is voide of God. So at this day the Pope and his adherents, seeing that hauing driuen away Christ they haue polluted the church, they boast foolishly of the false visure of the Church.

1 And as Iesus passed by, he saw a man that was blinde from his birth.
2 And his Disciples asked him saying, Master, who sinned, this man or his parents, that he was borne blinde?
3 Iesus answered, neither did this man sin, nor his parents, but that the workes of god may be made manifest in him.
4 I must worke the workes of him that sent me, while it is day: the night commeth, when no man can worke.
5 As long as I shall be in the worlde, I am the light of the worlde.

1 He saw a man that was blinde. In this Chapter the Euangelist describeth the giuing of sight to a blinde man, mixing therewithall a doctrine which setteth foorth the fruite of the myracle. From his birth. This circumstance amplifieth the power of Christe. For the blindnes could not be cured with mans remedies, which he had suffered tyll hee came to mans state, hauing brought the same from his mothers wombe. And hereupō was offered vnto his Disciples an occasion to mooue a questiō, whose sinne was punished with this blindnesse. First of all, seeing the scripture doth testifie that all afflictions whereunto mankinde is subiect doe proceede from sinne: so often as we see any man in miserie, it cannot be, but that this cogitation must needes come into our minde, that the discommodities wherwith he is oppressed, are punishments laid vpon him by the hand of God. But here we are wont to erre three maner of wayes: for seeing that euerie man is a most sharpe iudge against other men, there are but a few that can vse the like seueritie, as it is meet, against themselues. If my brother be in aduersitie, I doe by and by acknowledge Gods iudgement: if God doe more sharplye chasten mee, I winke at mine owne sins. But euery man ought to begin with himselfe in weighing punishments, that hee may spare none lesse then himselfe. VVherefore if we wil be equal iudges in this case, let vs learn to be quick eyed rather in our owne euils then in other mens. The second errour is in immoderate rigour: because so soone as any man is touched with the hand of God, we expound this to bee deadly hatred, makyng haynous offences of ſmall faultes, and are almoſt out of hope of his ſaluation: but on the contrarie wee are ſcarce giltie in our owne ſight of a ſmall faulte, when as we haue commited a moſt greeuous crime. Thirdly, we offend, in that we think generally that all thoſe are condemned, on whō God doth lay his croſſe for their tryal. That which we haue ſaid of late is certaine and ſure, that all miſeries doe proceede from ſinne: but god doth puniſh thoſe that be his for diuers cauſes. For as he doth not puniſh the ſinnes of ſome in this world: dut deferreth the puniſhments vntill the life to come, that they may be the ſharper: ſo he handleth the faithful ſomtimes more hardly, not becauſe they haue offēded more greeuouſly: but that he may hereafter mortifie the vices of the fleſh. Yea, ſometimes not reſpecting their ſinnes, he doth proue their obedience, or els teach them patience. As wee ſee that holy Iob was oppreſſed with miſerie abone all other men, and yet was hee not vrged with his ſinnes: but God had reſpect vnto another thing: namely, that his godlines may be the better declared euen in aduerſitie. Therfore they are peruers interpreters, which do aſſigne all aduerſities indifferently vnto ſinnes, as if the manner of puniſhments were equall, or God did not reſpect another thing in puniſhing of men, then euery mans deſarts. VVherefore we muſt note two things in this place, ſ judgement doth begin for the moſt part at the houſe of God. 1. Pet. 4. 17. and that therfore he doth ſharply puniſh his owne children whē they haue offended, paſsing ouer the wicked, and that his whips are much more ſharpe in correcting the faultes of the Church. Secondly, that ther be diuers ends why he doth afflict men. For he did no leſſe make Peter and Paule ſubiect to the hangman, then the moſt cruell murtherers. VVhence we gather that in the puniſhmentes of men there are not alwayes cauſes extant which can bee pointed out with the finger. And whereas the diſciples according to the common ſenſe, doe demaund what manner of ſinne that was which god did puniſh in the blinde man ſo ſoone as he was borne, they doe that not ſo much out of ſeaſon, as when they aske whether hee ſinned before he was borne or no. Although this ſo abſurd a queſtion was taken from that common ſurmiſe and friuolous opinion, which was then common amongeſt all men. For it appeareth euen out of other places of the ſcripture, that they beleued that ſame flitting of the ſoule out of one body into another, wherof Pythagoras did dreame. Here may we ſee what a deepe Labyrinth mans curioſitie is, eſpecially when boldnes is adioyned thereunto.

They ſaw ſome that were borne lame, ſome ſpurre blinde, ſome ſtarke blinde, ſom hauing a monſtrous body. VVheras it became them to reuerence the hidden iudgements of God, they would haue an euident cauſe in his workes, they did ſo fall away vnto thoſe childiſhe toyes through their raſhnes, that they thought that the ſoule whē one life was paſt, did flit into a new body, & did ther ſuffer the puniſhments which were due vnto the life before ſpent. Neither are the Iewes aſhamed at this day, to toſſe ſuch a filthie doting in their ſynagogues, as if it were an heauenly oracle. By which example we are taught to take good heed, leaſt that if we enquire after the iudgements of God beyond the meane of ſobrietie, the wandering errour of the minde doe carry vs away, and throwe vs headlong into moſt horrible dungeons. This was moſt monſtrous, that the elect people of God, in whom the light of wiſdome was kindled by the lawe and the Prophetes, ſhould yeelde vnto ſuch a groſſe and forged tale. And if ſo be it God did ſo ſharply puniſh their boldnes, there can be nothing better then this modeſtie, in conſidering the workes of God, that our minds may breake foorth into an admiration, ſo often as we know not the reaſon thereof, and our tongues may cry out, Iuſt art thou O Lord, and righteous are thy iudgements, although they cannot be comprehended. That which the diſciples aske concerning the ſinnes of the parents is not vnneceſſarie. For although the innocent ſonne be not puniſhed for the fathers faulte, but the ſoule which hath ſinned, it ſhall dye. Ezech. 18. 20. yet is not that threatning in vaine, that the Lord doth caſt the offences of the fathers into the boſomes of the children, and taketh vengeaunce euen vppon the thirde and fourth generation, Exod. 20. 5. Therefore the wrath of God remaineth oftentimes through many ages euen vpon one houſe: and like as he bleſſeth the poſteritie of the faithfull for their ſake, ſo he doth alſo caſt off the wicked ſtocke, appointing, according to his iuſt iudgement, the fathers together with the children vnto like deſtruction. Neither can any man by this meanes complaine that hee is puniſhed vndeſeruedly for another mans offence: becauſe where the grace of the ſpirite is wanting, euill crowes muſt needes bring foorth euill egges. This was the occaſion that moued the Apoſtes to doubt whether the Lord had puniſhed any fault of the parents in their ſonne, or no.

3 Neither hath this man ſinned. Chriſte doth not ſimplie acquit the blinde man and his parents of all fault: but doth only denie that the cauſe of the blindnes is to be ſought in ſinne. And this is that whiche I ſaid before, that God hath ſometimes ſome other purpoſe, when he layeth ſorrowes and miſeries vpon men, then to puniſh their ſinnes. Therfore whenas we know not the cauſes of afflictions wee muſt reſtraine curioſitie, leaſt we be both iniurious vnto God, and malicious towarde our brethren.

For Therfore Chriſte ſheweth another reaſon why this man was borne blinde, that in him the workes of God might be declared. He ſaith not one worke, but in the plurall number, workes: for ſo long as he was blinde, there was ſhewed in him a token of Gods ſeueritie, whereby the reſt might learne to feare and humble themſelues. There followed afterward the benefite of deliuerance, wherein appeared the wonderfull goodneſſe of God: wherefore Chriſt his drift was by theſe wordes to ſturre vppe the mindes of his diſciples to hope for the myracle. Yet neuertheleſſe he teacheth generally, that this cauſe ought to be counted in the Theater of the worlde iuſt and lawfull enough, when God doth glorifie his name. And there is no cauſe why men ſhould chide with God, when hee maketh them inſtruments of his glory on both ſides, whether hee appeare merciful or ſeuere.

4 I muſt worke. He doth now teſtifie that hee was ſent to this ende, that he may declare the glory of God in reſtoring ſight to the blinde. Furthermore, he borroweth a ſimilitude from the common cuſtome of life. For when the Sunne is ryſen, man riſeth vnto labour, but the night is appointed to reſt in, as it is in the Pſalme 104. 22. Therefore hee calleth the time that was appointed him of his father, wherein he was to do the work giuen him in charge, the day. So that euery one that is called vnto any publike function, muſt apply him ſelfe to doe that whiche his office doth require, as vnto workes which are to be done in the day time.

Furthermore, we muſt gather thence a generall rule, that the life of euery man is vnto him as a day. VVherefore as the ſhortneſſe of the day doth prick forward workemen vnto diligence and induſtrie, leaſt the darknes of the night do ouertake thē when they are but newbegun to worke: ſo ſeeing that we ſee that there is but a ſhort time of life graunted vs, let vs be aſhamed to waxe ſluggiſh in idleneſſe: finally, ſo ſoone as God by calling doth giue vs light, wee muſt not linger leaſt the opportunity do eſcape vs.

5 So long as I ſhalbe in the world. I expound this to haue beene added by a preuention: for it might haue been thought to be an abſurd thing, that Chriſte ſhoulde appoint vnto himſelfe a time to worke in, as if it were to be feared, leaſt the night ſhoulde oppreſſe him as it did other men. Therefore hee doth ſo ſeparate him ſelfe from other men, that yet notwithſtanding he ſaith that he hath an appointed time, wherein he muſt worke. For he compareth himſelfe vnto the Sunne, whiche although it lighten the earth with the brightneſſe thereof, yet when it ſetteth, it taketh away the day with it. Therefore he giueth vs to vnderſtande that his death ſhall bee as the ſetting of the Sunne: not becauſe it ſhall extinguiſh or darken his light: but becauſe it ſhall take him out of the ſight of the world. Neuertheleſſe he teacheth that when hee was brought foorth in the fleſhe, hee was then the true bright ſhining day of the world. For although God had lightened all ages, yet Chriſt brought foorth by his comming, a new and vnwonted brightneſſe. VVhereupon he bringeth in, that this time was moſt apt and fit to ſet foorth his fathers glory, as a moſt cleere day, wherein God woulde more euidently reueale himſelfe in marueilous workes. But here ariſeth a queſtion becauſe there appeared greater power of God after the death of Chriſt both in the fruite of doctrine, and alſo in the myracles: and Paule 2. Cor. 4. 6. doth apply this properly vnto the time of his preaching, that God who from the beginning of the world commaunded light to ſhine out of the darkneſſe, did then ſhine by the Goſpel in the face of Chriſte.

And Chriſte doeth at this time no leſſe ſpread abroade his bright beames in the worlde then when he was openly conuerſaunt amongeſt men. I anſweare, that after that Chriſt had fulfilled the courſe of his function, he wrought no leſſe mightily by his miniſters, thē by himſelfe when he was in the world. In deede that is true: but firſt of all that is no let, but that he ought to haue done that himſelf which was enioyned him by his father, at ſuch time as he was reuealed in the fleſh to that ende. And ſecondly, it hindereth no whit, but that his corporall preſence, was the true and ſingular day of the world, the brightnes whereof was ſpread abrode throughout all ages. For whence had the holy fathers in times paſt, and whence haue we at this day light & day, ſaue only becauſe the giuing and reuealing of Chriſt hath alwaies ſent out farre and wyde his bright beames to make a continuall day? VVhereupon vpon it followeth, that whoſoeuer haue not Chriſt to be their direcer, they wander groping in darkeneſſe confuſedly, and without order, like blinde men. Neuertheleſſe, we muſt note this ſenſe, that like as the Sunne doth open vnto the eyes of men, the moſt beautifull ſtage of the heauen and earth, and all the order of nature: ſo God hath reuealed in his ſonne the principall glory of his workes.

6 When he had ſaid this, he ſpit vpon the earth, and made clay of the ſpittle, and laid it vpon the eyes of the blinde.

7 And ſaid vnto him, Goe, waſh in the poole of Siloa, which is, if thou interprete it, ſent: he went therfore and waſht, and came ſeeing.

8 Therfore the neighbours, and theſe that had ſeen him before, becauſe he was a begger, ſaid, is not this he that ſate and begged?

9 Otherſome ſaid, truly this is he. And otherſome ſaid, he is like him. But he ſaide, I am hee.

10 Therfore they ſaid vnto him, how are thine eyes opened?

11 He anſwered and ſaid, The man that is called Ieſus, made clay, and put it vpon mine eyes, and ſaid vnto me, goe into the poole Siloa, & waſh: and after that I went, and waſhed, I did ſee.

12 Therfore they ſaid vnto him, where is hee? hee ſaid, I know not.

6 Hee ſpit vpon the earth. Chriſt his purpoſe was, to reſtore ſight to the blinde: but he goeth about the matter in ſuch a ſort, as at the firſt ſight may ſeeme very abſurd: for by annointing his eyes with clay, hee doth after a ſort double his blindneſſe: who would not haue thought that hee did either mocke the miſerable man, or els that he toyed like a man that was diſtract? But his meaning was by this meanes to prooue the faith and obedience of the blinde man, that he might be an example vnto all men.

This was no ſmall token of faith, that the blinde man hauing embraced the bare worde, doth beleeue aſſuredly that he ſhould haue ſight reſtored vnto him: and vpon this hope hee maketh haſt to goe thither whyther he was bidden. And alſo this is an excellent commendation of obedience, that he doth ſimplie obey Chriſt, although many things do perſuade him to the contrary. And this is alſo a declaration of a true faith, when as a godly minde being, contented with the plaine worde of God, doth promiſe vnto it ſelfe that thing which ſeemeth to bee otherwiſe vncredible. The readineſſe of obedience doth followe faith immediately, ſo that hee doth quietly ſubmit himſelfe to bee gouerned by God, whiche is perſwaded that he will be vnto him a faithfull guide. It is queſtionleſſe that the ſuſpition and feare of mocking did come into the blinde mans mynde: but it was an eaſie matter for him to breake through all impediments, ſeeing he was perſwaded that it was ſafetie it ſelfe to followe Chriſt. If any man obiect, that the blinde manne knewe not what Chriſte was, that hee might gyue vnto him due honour as vnto the ſonne of GOD, I confeſſe that indeede: but becauſe hee dyd beleeue that he was ſent of God, ſubmitting himſelfe vnto him, & not doubting but ỹ he ſpake the truth, he ſeeth nothing in him but that which is diuine. Yea in that hee did addict himselfe wholy vnto Christ in so small knowledge, his faith deserueth so much the more praise.

7 Wash in the poole Siloa. It is certaine that there was no vertue either in ỹ clãy, or in ỹ water of Siloa, to cure his eyes: but Christ did not once only adorne his myracles with these externall signes freely: either that hee might accustome the faithfull vnto the vse of signes, or that hee might shew that all thinges are subiect to his will, or that he might declare that there was as much power in all creatures as he woulde giue them. Yet some doe demaund what the clay made of dust and spittle doth signifie: and they expound this to haue been a figure of Christe: because the dust doth betoken the earthly nature of the flesh, and the spittle which came out of his mouth, the diuine essence of the worde. But I omit this Allegorie, because it hath in it selfe more subtiltie then soundnesse, being contented with this simplicitie, that like as man was first created of clay, so Christ did vse clay in framing his eyes againe, shewyng the same power in a part of the body, which the father declared in making the whole man: or peraduenture his intent was by this signe to declare, that it was no harder a matter for him, hauing remooued the impediment, to open the eyes of one that was blind, then for any man to wype away clay: and againe, that it was in his power to stoppe the sight of eyes, in like sort as if any man should stoppe vp the eyes with clay: which latter thing pleaseth me better. Peraduenture he commaunded him to wash in the poole of Siloa, that he myght vpbraide vnto the Iewes, that they themselues were to blame, because they did not perceiue the power of God which was present with them: like as Esaias doth chide the men of his time in the eight Chapter, and sixt verse, because setting at nought the waters of Siloa, which ran calmely, they desire the swift and violent riuers. And also it seemeth to me that the same reason did persuade Elizeus to commaund Naaman the Assyrian to wash in Iordan. If we beleue Ierome, the waters which did spring out of the mount Sion at certaine houres, did make this poole. The Euangelist setteth downe of set purpose the interpretation of the word Silea, because that well beeing nigh vnto the Temple did dayly put the Iewes in minde of Christ who was to come: whom yet notwithstanding they despiced being offered vnto them. Therefore the Euangelist setteth out vnto vs the grace of Christe that he alone doth lighten our darknes, & giue sight to the blind. For the estate of our nature is depaynted in the person of this one man: namely, that all of vs are depriued of light and vnderstanding euen from our mothers wombe: and secondly, that wee must seeke remedie for this euill only at Christe his hands.

And note that although Christe was present then, yet woulde hee not haue the signes neglected, to reproue the blockishnesse of the nation, which did only retaine a vaine shadow of the signes, the substance being abolished. Herein appeareth also the wonderfull goodnes of Christ, that he being the Phisition came of his own accord vnto the blind man, and doth not wayte for his prayers in helping him. And truly seeing that we are naturally turned away from him, we are vtterly vndone, vnlesse he meet vs before he be called, and preuent vs with his mercie, which are drowned drowned in the forgetfulnes of light and life.

8 Therfore the neighbours, and those that had seene him. Not only the neighbours did know the blinde man, but also all the inhabitants of the citie, because he was a begger and was wont to sit at the gate of the Temple: and such do cause the common people to looke vpon them. This knowledge of the man did cause the fame of the myracle to bee spread the farther abroade. But (as vngodlinesse is wittie in darkening the workes of God) many men thought that it was not the same man, because there appeared in him a new power of God, so that the more excellent the maiestie of Gods workes is, they finde the lesse credite amongest men. But their doubting did serue greatly to prooue the myracle, because it came to passe hereby, that the blind man did the more extol the grace of Christ by his own testimony. Therfore the Euãgelist gathereth al these circumstances not in vaine, whereby the truth of the myracle did more plainely appeare.

11 And after that I went and washed. Such happie successe of obedience teacheth vs, that hauing ouercome all hinderances, we must goe forwarde stoutly, whyther soeuer the Lorde doth call vs: and let vs not feare but that that shall come to good passe what soeuer wee take in hande so long as he is our ayder and guide.

13 They bryng hym that had beene sometimes blynde vnto the Pharisees.

14 And it was the Sabbeth, when Iesus made claye and opened his eyes.

15 Therefore the Pharisees also asked him againe, howe hee had receiued his sight. And hee sayde vnto them, Hee put clay vppon mine eyes, and I washed, and doe see.

16 Therfore some of the Pharisees said, This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the Sabbeth. Other some said, how can a man that is a sinner doe these myracles? And there was a dissention amongest them.

17 They say vnto hym that had beene sometimes blinde, what sayest thou of him, because hee hath opened thine eyes? And he saide, hee is a Prophete.

13 They bring him. The narration whiche shall followe immediatly, doth declare, that the wicked are so farre from profiting in the workes of the Lord, that the more they are vrged with the power therof, the more doe they vomit out the poyson which they had inwardlye conceiued. The sight which was restored to the blinde man ought to haue made euen stonie mindes softe: at least the Pharisees beeing stricken with the newnesse and greatnesse of the thyng, ought to haue pawsed so long, vntyll suche time as they coulde enquyre whether it were a worke wrought of God or no: but the hatred of Christ drieueth them headlong vnto such madnesse, that they doe by and by condemne that which they heare he had done. The Euangelist nameth the Pharisees, not because the other sectes did beare with Christe, but because this secte was more couragious to defende the present state, then the other.

Hypocrisie is alwayes cruell and proude: therefore seeing that they dydswel with a false opinion of holinesse, the doctrine of þ gospel woũded them chiefly, which condemned all their feigned righteousnesse: and they did eſpecially fight for their owne power and kingdome vnder colour of defending the lawe. VVheras the Euangeliſt recordeth that the multitude brought the blinde man vnto the Phariſees, it is vncertaine for what ende and purpoſe they did this: there was ſcarſe anye that dyd not know, how enuiouſly the Phariſees were ſet againſt Chriſt. Therefore it may be, that many flatterers did for their ſakes of ſet purpoſe aſſay to darken the glory of the myracle. Notwithſtanding (as I thinke) this ſeemeth to bee more like to bee true, that the greater part of the people ſuſpending their owne iudgement (as it falleth out ſometimes) did meane to make thoſe dayesmen and iudges, that were gouernours.

In the meane ſeaſon being blinde of their owne accorde, they bring darknes vpon themſelues in the Sun, that it may darken his light. This is the diſordered religion of the common people, that it doth worſhip the wicked tyrants of the Church vnder colour of diuine reuerence: & contemneth God himſelfe aſwell in his worde as in his workes, at leaſt it doth not vouchſafe to haue any reſpect vnto him.

14 And it was the Sabboth. Chriſt did chooſe the Sabboth day of ſet purpoſe, which would giue matter of offence vnto the Iewes. He had alreadie ſufficiently tryed in the man ſicke of the palſey, that they wold alſo be cauilling at this worke. Therefore why doth he not preuent the offence (which hee might haue done moſt eaſily) ſaue onely becauſe the defenſe which his enemies had taken in hand malitiouſly, woulde ſerue to the ſetting foorth of the power of God? The Sabboth day was vnto them in ſteede of a whetſtone to ſharpen them to enquire of the whole matter. And what doe they gaine I pray you by the queſtion, which they asked diligently and carefully, ſaue onely that the trueth of the myracle appeareth more plainely? VVe muſt learne by this example, that we ought to nettle the enemies of the Goſpell: and that thoſe men doe altogether dote, who doe in ſuch ſort reconcile the world vnto Chriſt, that they doe condemne all manner of offences: ſeeing that Chriſt did rather willingly & wittingly prouoke the wicked. Therfore we muſt hold that rule which he preſcribed els where, that we muſt contemne the blinde and the leaders of the blinde. Mat. 15. 14.

15 The Phariſees alſo asked him. The people had heard this confeſſion proceed before frō the mouth of the blind man: now are the Phariſees alſo made witneſſes therof, who might obiect that the cōmō people had no leſſe raſhly receiued a rumour without any head, then it was raſhly rayſed. And firſt of all omitting the queſtion of the fact (as they ſay) they doe only diſpute concerning the lawfulneſſe thereof: for they doe not denie but that Chriſte reſtored ſight to the blinde: but they finde a fault in the circumſtance of the time: and doe denie that it is a woorke of God, ſeeing the Sabboth was broken thereby. But they ſhould firſte haue decided this queſtion whether a diuine worke were the breaking of the Sabboth or no. And what is it that will not ſuffer them to ſee this, ſaue onely becauſe beeing blinded with wicked affection, and malitiouſneſſe, they can ſee nothing? Furthermore, they had beene alreadie ſufficiently taught by Chriſte, that thoſe benefites which God giueth vnto men do no more diſagree with the Sabboth then doth circumciſion, eumciſion. And the woordes of the lawe doe commaunde men to ceaſe from their owne workes, and not from the workes of God. Therefore in that they take an errour, which had been ſo ſtrongly refuted alreadie, for a manifeſt truth, it is to bee imputed vnto obſtinate wickednesſe: at leaſt they erre for no other cauſe saue onely, becauſe it pleaſeth them ſo to doe. So the Papiſtes doe not ceaſe to bring in oftentimes, friuolous and rotten cauils which haue byn anſwered an hundreth times. Therefore what muſt we doe? To wit, when wee haue opportunitie we muſt refute ſo much as in vs lyeth their wickednesſe, who burden and ſlaunder the Goſpel with falſe enuie. If no defence, howe iuſt ſoeuer it be, can ſtoppe their mouthes, wee muſt not be weary but muſt courageouſly tread vnder foote this wicked deſire whiche they haue to ſpeake euill, wherewith they goe about to oppreſſe vs. They take vnto themſelues maximes which wee doe willingly graunt vnto them, that they are not to bee hearde who doe depart from the Church, and breake the vnitie of faith. But they doe ſlyte paſſe ouer that whiche was chiefly to be diſcuſſed, and which we haue plainely expounded in a thouſande places, that the Pope with his traine are nothing leſſe then the Churche, that ỹ hotchpotch cõpounded of ſo many corrupt inuentions, and infected with ſo many feignings of ſuperſtitions, doeth much differ from ſincere faith. But they ſhall neuer bring to paſſe with their furious wantonneſſe, but that the truth which wee haue ſo often and ſo ſoundly teſtified, ſhall at length haue the vpper hande. In like ſort the Phariſees did take a maxime againſt Chriſt, which the people did approue, that hee was not of God whoſoeuer did not keepe the Sabboth day: but they did vniuſtlie and falſely obiect that a worke of God, was the breaking of the Sabboth day.

16 How can a man that is a ſinner. A ſinner is taken in this place as in many other places, for a wicked perſon and contemner of God. Wherfore doeth your maſter eate with publicanes and ſinners, that is, with wicked and vngodly men, whoſe wickednesſe is openly knowen? For the enemies of Chriſt did gather by the breaking of the Sabboth, that he was a profane man, and one that was voide of all religion. On the other ſide, thoſe that be indifferent and iudge more iuſtly, do think that hee is a godly and religious man, becauſe he was furniſhed with excellent power of God to worke myracles. Although this argument ſeemeth to be ſcarſe ſtrong enough. For God doth promiſe that euen the falſe Prophetes ſhall ſometimes worke myracles: and we know that Satan doth imitate the workes of God, like an Ape, that he may deceiue thoſe that do not take heede. Yea, Tranquillus reporteth that when Veſpaſian was in Alexandria, and did ſit in the midſt of the market place to giue iudgement, he was requeſted by a blinde man that he would annoynt his eyes with his ſpittle: and that Serapis had ſhewed him this remedie in ſleepe. Veſpaſian becauſe he would not raſhly ſet himſelfe to bee mocked of all men, could hardly and with much adoe be perſwaded to doe this: yet when as his friendes were very importunate vpon him, he granted the blind man his requeſt, and ſo his eyes were opened ſodainly. Who will therefore reckon Veſpaſian amongeſt the ſeruants of God, or adorne him with the praiſe of godlineſſe?

I anſwere, that amongeſt the godly and ſuche as feare God, myracles are vndoubted marks of the power of the holy Ghoſt: but that it commeth to paſſe by the iuſt iudgement of God, that Satan doth deceiue the vnbeleeuers with falſe myracles, as it were with deluſions. I thinke that that is no lie which I did of late recite out of Suetonius: but I doe rather aſcribe this vnto the iuſt vengeance of God, that ſeeing that the Iewes did contemne ſo many and ſuche excellent myracles of Chriſte they were at length deliuered into the handes of Satan, according as they had deſerued. For they ſhould haue gone forward in the pure worſhip of God, by the myracles of Chriſt, they ſhould haue been confirmed in the doctrin of the law, & haue riſen vp vnto the Meſsias himſelfe, who was the ende of the lawe. And trulie Chriſt did manifeſtly teſtifie by giuing ſight to the blinde that hee was the Meſſias. Are not thoſe men, which refuſe to acknowledge God in his workes, ſeeing they doe not only through ſluggiſhneſſe, but alſo through malicious contempt refuſe him, worthie to be giuen ouer of God vnto the ſubtiltie of Satan? Therefore let vs remember that we muſt ſeeke God with the ſincere affection of the hearte, that hee may reueale himſelfe vnto vs by the power of his ſpirite: that wee muſt obediently heare his worde, that he may decipher out the true Prophetes, by no deceiuing myracles. So ſhall it come to paſſe that myracles ſhall profite vs, and wee ſhall not bee ſubiect to the ſeducinges of Satan. As touching theſe men, although they doe well in this, that they ſpeake reuerently of the myracles, wherein the power of God appeareth, yet doe they not bring a reaſon ſtrong enough to prooue that Chriſt is to bee accounted a Prophete of God. Neither yet would the Euangeliſt haue their anſwere to bee accounted an Oracle, hee doth only bring to light, the wicked ſtubbornenesſe of the enemies of Chriſt, who catching at ſomewhat maliciouſly, wherewith they may finde fault, being admoniſhed, they doe no whytte yeelde.

And there was a diſſention amongeſt them. Diſſention is the worſt & moſt hurtfull euill that is in the Church: how is it then that Chriſte doeth ſowe matter of diſcorde euen amongeſt the very Doctors of the Church? VVe may eaſily anſwere, that the onely intent and purpoſe of Chriſte was to bring all men vnto God the father, ſtretching out his hand as it were. But the diſſention did ariſe and proceede from their wickedneſſe, who had no deſire to come vnto God. Therefore they doe as it were cut the church in peeces by diuiſion, whoſoeuer will not obey the truth of God. But it is better that men doe diſagree amongeſt themſelues, then that they ſhould all fall away together with one conſent frō godlineſſe. Therfore ſo often as diſſention appeareth, wee muſt alwaies conſider whence it ſpringeth.

17 They ſay vnto him that had beene blinde, The more diligently they enquire, the more mightily doth the truth of GOD ſhewe it ſelfe: For they do as if a man would quench a flame with his blowing. Therfore ſo often as wee ſee the wicked aſſay all thinges that they may at length oppreſſe the trueth of God, there is no cauſe why we ſhould be afraid, or be too carefull for the euent, becauſe they ſhall doe nothing els by this meanes, but kindle the light thereof. Furthermore, in that they demaund of the blinde man, what hee thinketh, it is not therfore, becauſe they paſſe for his iudgement, or ſet an heyre by it: but becauſe they they hope that the man being ſtriken with feare will anſwere according as they woulde haue him. In which point the Lord deceiueth them. For truly ſeeing that a man of the common ſort, ſetting nought by their threatnings doth boldly affirme that Chriſte is a Prophete, the grace of God is to be thanked for this, ſo that this boldneſſe is as it were an other myracle. And if ſobeit hee confeſſed ſo couragiouſly and freely that Chriſt was a Prophete: who did not as yet vnderſtand that he was the ſonne of God, how ſhamefull is their vnbelief, who being diſcouraged with feare, doe either denie him or keepe ſilence, whenas they know that he ſitteth at the right hand of God the father, and that he ſhal come thence to iudge the whole world? Therefore ſeeing that this blind man did not choake a ſmall ſparkle of knowledge, wee muſt endeuour that there may a free and perfect confeſſion ſhine againe from that perfecte brightneſſe which hath ſhined into our heartes.

18 Therefore the Iewes beleeued not him, that he had been blind and had receyued his ſight, vntyll they called the parents of him that had receiued his ſight.

19 And they asked them ſaying, Is this your ſonne, who you ſay was borne blind? therefore how doth he now ſee?

20 His parents anſwered them ſaying, we know that this is our ſonne, and that hee was borne blinde.

21 But howe hee nowe ſeeth we know not, or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he hath age, aske him: he ſhall ſpeake of him ſelfe.

22 Theſe thinges ſaid his parents, becauſe they feared the Iewes. For the Iewes had alredy conſpired, that if any man ſhoulde confeſſe that he was Chriſte, he ſhould be caſt out of the Synagogue.

23 Therfore ſaid his parents, he hath age, aske him.

18 Beleeued not. VVe muſt in this place note two thinges, that they doe not beleeue that the myracle was done, and that being of their owne accorde blinded with a wicked hatred which they did beare againſt Chriſt, they ſee not that which is manifeſt. The Euangeliſt reporteth that they beleeued not. If the reaſon be demaunded, it is not to be douted but that their blindneſſe was voluntarie. For what doth keepe them from ſeeing a moſt manifeſt worke of god which was before their eyes: yea, that being more then conuict, they doe yet notwithſtanding not beleeue that which they knowe is true, ſaue only becauſe the inward wickedneſſe of their heart doth keepe their eyes faſt ſhut. Paule teacheth that the ſame is alſo fulfilled in the doctrine of the Goſpell: for he ſaith that it is not couered or obſcure, ſaue only to the reprobate whoſe minds the God of this world hath blinded. 2. Cor. 5. 3. 4. Beeing admoniſhed with ſuche examples, let vs learne not to lay ſtumbling blockes in our owne way, which may keepe vs from beleeuing. The Euangeliſt calleth the gouernours the Iewes by Synecdoche.

19 Is this your ſonne. Becauſe the matter would not frame the former way, they aſſay a newe way: but the Lord doth not onely myraculouſly euen here alſo diſturbe their endeuours: but turne them vnto a contrary ende. Furthermore, they do not demaund one particuler queſtion only, but they did pack more things together, that they may cut of all occa-ſion of anſwering, But the parentes of the blind man doe only take the one halfe of the manifold and captious interrogation, whereunto they anſwere: they teſtifie that he was their ſonne, and that he was blinde from his mothers wombe. Hereupon it followeth that hee doeth not ſee naturally, but that his eyes were opened myraculouſly. But they paſſe ouer this latter thing, becauſe it was odious: by which their ſilence they bewray their vnthankefulneſſe. For truely ſeeing they had ſo great a benefite of God powred vpon them, they ſhould haue beene feruently bent to praiſe and magnifie his name. But being afraid they do as much as in them lyeth bury the grace of God: ſaue only that they make their ſonne a witneſſe in their ſteede, that hee may both with leſſe enuie and greater credite, declare the whole matter as it was done. And although they doe wiſely inuent this middle meanes, whileſt they them ſelues eſchew danger, ϸ they may teſtifie concerning Chriſt, ouerthwartly by the mouth of their ſonne: yet is this no let but that by the mouth of the Euangeliſt the ſpirite may condemne their ſoftneſſe, becauſe they doe not in the meane ſeaſon their owne dutie. Therefore how much more vnexcuſable are thoſe who doe ouerwhelme Chriſte with his doctrine, his myracles, his power, and grace, and that by their vnfaithfull denyall.

22 They conſpired. This place teacheth that the cuſtome of excommunication was auncient, and vſed in all ages: neither was excommunication then newly inuented, but that that puniſhment which was vſed in times paſt againſt Apoſtataes, and the deſpicers of the lawe, was turned vnto the Diſciples of Chriſt. Therfore we vnderſtand that the ryte of excommunication did ariſe from the moſt auncient diſcipline of the Churche, and ſecondly that it began not of late, and that this is not a fault of one age only, that wicked men do corrupt the holy inſtitutions of God with their ſacriledge. God would that there ſhoulde be ſome forme of correction from the beginning, wherewith rebels might bee kept vnder. The high Prieſtes and Scribes did not only tyrannouſly abuſe this power to vexe the innocent withall: but they did alſo at length wickedly reſiſt God himſelf & his doctrine. Seeing that the truth of Chriſt was mightier, thē that they were able to reſiſt ϸ ſame by order and lawe, they did ſhake the lightnings of excommunications to oppres it. The ſame was done euen amongeſt the Chriſtians: for it canne ſcarſe be expreſſed what barbarous tyranny the falſe Biſhops did vſe in bringing vnder the common people, that none might bee ſo bold as to mutter, and we doe now ſee with what great crueltie they wreſt this dart of excommunication againſt all the worſhippers of God. But we muſt thus perſwade our ſelues, that whenas excommunicatiō is turned to a wrong end, it may ſafely be contemned. For whenas God did giue vnto his Church the law of excommunication, he did not arme tyrants or hangmen with a ſwoord to cut the throates of ſoules: but he preſcribed a rule how to gouerne his people: & that vpon this cōdition, that he himſelfe might be the chiefe gouernour, and might haue men to bee his miniſters and officers. Therefore let the falſe biſhops ſend out their lightnings as it ſhall pleaſe them: yet ſhall they make none afraide with their vaine crackes, ſaue only thoſe who beeing not as yet taught by the voyce of the chiefe ſheephearde, which is the true ſheepefolde, doe wander to and fro being doubtfull. To conclude if we see any that be not vnder and subiecte to Christe, it is most certaine they are depriued of the lawfull power of excommunication. VVee must not feare least they exclude vs out of their congregation, out of which Christe who is our life and health is banished. But rather if we couet to be ioyned vnto Christe, we must willingly depart out of the Pope his synagogues: so farre off is it that the feare of casting out must hinder vs. And although the ryte of excommunicating was so wickedly corrupt in the old church yet would not Christ haue the same extinguished by his comming: but hee restored it to the puritie thereof, that it might againe bee of force amongest vs. So although there raigne at this day a most filthie profanation of this holy discipline, in Papistry, we must rather reclaime the same vnto his auncient integritie with great diligence, then abolish it. Things are neuer so well framed in the world, but that the most holy lawes of God doe degenerate into corruptions through mans fault and follie. Satan shoulde haue too great libertie, if hee coulde bring to nought, whatsoeuer hee doth corrupt. VVee should haue at this day no Baptisme, no Supper, and finally, no religion, whereof hee hath left no parte free from his pollutions.

24 Therfore they called the man againe that was blinde, and saide vnto him, Giue the glory to God: we know that this man is a sinner.

25 Therfore he answered and saide, I knowe not whether hee bee a sinner or no: one thing I know, that whereas I was blinde I now see.

26 Therfore they saide vnto him againe, what did he to thee? howe opened hee thine eyes?

27 He answered them, I told you alreadie, and yee heard not: what will you heare againe? will you also be made his disciples?

28 Therefore they rayled on him, and said, be thou his Disciple: wee are Moses his Disciples.

29 VVee knowe that God spake vnto Moses: but wee knowe not whence this fellowe is.

30 The man answered, and said vnto them, truly in this is a wonder, that yee know not whence he is, and he hath opened mine eyes.

31 And we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doe his will, him he heareth.

32 From the beginning hath it not been heard, that any man hath opened the eyes of him that hath been borne blinde.

33 Vnlesse this man were of God, hee coulde doe nothing.

24 Therefore they called him the second time. It is questionles that being enforced with shame they called the blinde man, whom they had tryed before to bee too firme and constant. So that the more vehemently they striue against God, they doe oftentimes intangle themselues the more, and tye themselues the faster. But they doe so question with him, that they may make him say as they say. This is a beautifull Preface whenas they doe exhort him to giue the glorie vnto God: but they doe by & by imperiously commaund him that he should not answere as hee thought, and according to his meaning. Therefore vnder colour of the name of God they do require at his handes seruile obedience.

Giue the glory to God. Although this their requeſt may be referred vnto the circumſtance of the cauſe, that the blinde man doe not darken the glory of God, by attributing vnto man the benefit which hee had receiued: yet do I rather ſubſcribe vnto their opinion, who thinke that it was a ſolemne forme, which they vſed, when they required an oath of any man. For euen Ioſua, 7.19 doth ſweare Achan by the ſame wordes when he wil wring out of him the true confeſſion of the garment which was ſtollen. And by theſe wordes they did teach men that God was not a little blaſphemed, if any man ſhold vnder colour of his name deceiue. And truly ſo often as we are to ſweare, we muſt remember this preface, that the truth may be no leſſe precious vnto vs, thē the glory of God. If this were ſo, men ſhould ſweare with farre more reuerence: now becauſe a great part (not thinking that GOD is denyed, when his name is called vpon to defend and maintaine a lye withall) doe come raſhly and contemptuouſly to ſweare: all thinges are ſtuft with periuries. In the meane while we ſee how hypocrites, euen whileſt they pretende the greateſt reuerence of God, do not only deceiue, but euen impudently mock alſo. For they proceed to get the blind man to ſweare to their wordes, & that wickedlie not without great reproch of God. God doth by this meanes bring their wicked counſels to light, howſoeuer they goe about with diuers colours to paint them, and with feigned ſhadowes to couer them.

25 I know not whether he be a ſinner or no. The blind man ſeemeth ſomwhat to digreſſe through feare, from his free teſtimonie, neither muſt we thinke that he doubted any thing of Chriſt, as the words do ſound: but I doe rather thinke that hee ſpake tauntingly that hee might the more nettle them. He had confeſſed before that he was a Prophet: when as he ſawe that he preuailed not, ſuſpending his iudgement concerning the perſon, he ſetteth before them the thing it ſelfe. Therfore this graunting wanteth not a mocke.

26 Therfore they ſaid vnto him againe. Seeing that wee ſee the wicked ſo earneſt in their wicked actions, let vs bee aſhamed of our ſluggiſhneſſe, that we are ſo cold in doing the buſines of Chriſt. And ſeeing ỳ they do euerie where hunt after matter to cauill at, that they may darken the miracle, the Lord doth excellently driue away their endeuours, by the vnuincible conſtancie of the blind man. For he doth not only ſtand ſtoutly in his opinion: but doth alſo chide them freely & ſharplie, becauſe they doe goe about with asking many queſtions to couer the truth whiche was knowen and manifeſt,

Furthermore he caſteth in their teeth the peruerſe hatred of Chriſte, when he ſaith, will yee bee his diſciples? For his meaning is that although they ſhalbe an hundreth times conuict, yet are they poſſeſſed in ſuch ſort with a malitious and deadly affection, that they will neuer yeeld. This is wonderfull boldneſſe, that a baſe perſon and obſcure fellow, yea one that for his begging was almoſt nought ſet by, doth freely prouoke the fury of all the Prieſtes againſt him. If only a ſmall preparation of faith, did make him ſo bolde when he was come vnto the battle, what excuſe will they make who beeing great preachers of the Goſpell in time of tranquilitie, are dumbe in time of danger? Furthermore, this interrogation is alſo made in ieſt: for ỳ meaning therof is, that they were moued by

ſome euill will, and not with the ſincere deſire of the truth, to vrge and aske this queſtion ſo diligently.

28 Therefore they rayled on him. It is like that whatſoeuer raylinges the force of furious wrath did miniſter vnto them, they did ragingly caſt out the ſame againſt him: and this was one of many, that they called him a reuolt from the law. For in their iudgement he could not be a diſciple of Chriſte, but he muſt fall away from the lawe of Moſes: they make theſe two things as cõtrarie one to the other. And this is to looke vnto a moſt beautifull colour, in that they are afraide to departe from the doctrine of Moſes. For this is a true rule of godlineſſe, that we muſt heare the prophetes, by whom God did ſurely ſpeake: leaſt faith bee carryed about with euery doctrine of man. From this true principle doe they fet the certaintie which they haue of the lawe of Moſes: but they lye when they ſay that they are Moſes his diſciples, when they are turned away from the ende of the lawe. So hypocrites are wont to pull God in peeces when they will pretende his name. If Chriſt be the ſoule of the lawe as Paule teacheth Rom. 10.4. VVhat ſhall the lawe be when it is ſeparated from him, but a dead body? By this example are we taught that God is not heard aright, ſaue onelie when the hearer giueth good eare vnto his voyce, that he may perceiue what he meaneth & ſpeaketh. VVhẽ as they ſay that they cannot tell whence Chriſt is, this is not referred vnto his countrie or the place where he was borne: but vnto his Propheticall office. For they obiect that they haue no knowledge of his calling, that they may receiue him as cõming from God.

30 Truly in this is a wonder. He toucheth them by the way, becauſe being nothing moued with ſuch a ſinguler myracle, they feigne that they know not the calling of Chriſt: as if he ſhould ſay, that it is vnſeemely that ſuch a token of Gods power ſhould be counted as nothing, & that the calling of Chriſt being ſo proued and teſtified, ſhould yet notwithſtanding purchaſe no credite amongſt them. And to the end hee may the more vrge theyr ſluggiſhneſſe or wickedneſſe, hee amplifieth the excellencie thereof by that, that ſince man can remember it was neuer hearde that man did any ſuch thing. VVhereupon it followeth that they are malitious & vnthankfull, which winke willingly at a manifeſt worke of God. Therefore he gathereth that he was ſent of God, whiche was furniſhed with ſo great power of the ſpirite to purchaſe credite to himſelfe and to his doctrine.

31 And we know that God heareth not ſinners. They are deceiued which think that the blind man ſpake thus according to the opiniõ of the cõmon people. For this word ſinners is taken in this place alſo for a wicked and vngodly perſon, as a little before. And this is the continuall doctrine of the ſcripture, that God heareth none ſaue thoſe that call vpon him truly and with a ſincere heart. For ſeeing that faith alone openeth vnto vs the gate vnto God, it is certaine that all the wicked are driuen away from comming vnto him: yea he doth teſtifie that he doth abhorre their prayers, as he doth loath their ſacrifices. For hee biddeth his children come vnto him by a ſinguler priuilege, and it is the ſpirit of adoption alone, which cryeth in our heartes, Abba father. Rom. 8.15. To be briefe, no man is rightly prepared to pray vnto God, ſaue he which hath an heart purged by faith. As for þ wickedas they doe profane the name of god in their prayers, ſo they doe rather deſerue to be puniſhed for this their ſacrilege, then to obtaine any thing that may be for their welfare. Therefore this is a good reaſon which the blinde man bringeth in, that Chriſt came from God, ſeeing he was ſo readie to graunt his petitions.

34 They anſwered and ſaid vnto him, thou art altogether borne in ſinne, and teacheſt thou vs? And they did caſt him out.

35 Ieſus hearde that they had caſt him out: and when he had found him, he ſaide vnto him, beleeueſt thou in the ſonne of God?

36 He anſwered and ſaid, who is he Lord that I may beleeue in him?

37 And Ieſus ſaid vnto him, thou haſt both ſeene him: and hee that ſpeaketh with thee, is hee.

38 And he ſaid, I beleeue, Lord. And he worſhipped him.

39 Then ſaid Ieſus, I am come to iudgement into this world, that they which ſee not, may ſee: and that thoſe which ſee may be made blinde.

40 This heard ſome of the Phariſes which were with him, and ſaid vnto him. Are we alſo blinde?

41 Ieſus ſaid vnto them, if you were blind, you ſhould haue no ſinne: but now yee ſay, we ſee: Therefore your ſinne remaineth.

34 Thou art borne in ſinne. I doe not thinke but that they alluded vnto his blindneſſe: as it is a common cuſtome amongeſt proude men to vexe thoſe that are in aduerſitie, and miſerie. Therefore they mock him as if hee had come out of his mothers wombe with the marke of his wickedneſſe. For this was a common opinion amongeſt the Scribes that the ſoules after that one life was paſt, did flit into newe bodies and did there ſuffer puniſhment for their former ſinnes. VVhereupon theſe men ſet downe this, as a manifeſt truth, that he that was born blind was then polluted and corrupt with ſinnes ſo ſoone as he was borne. VVee ought to learne by this corrupt iudgement, that we muſt not alwayes meaſure euery mans ſinnes by the whips of God. For the Lorde (as wee ſaw before) hath diuers ends for which he layeth miſeries vppon men. And beſides this that theſe hypocrites doe mocke this miſerable man, they do alſo refuſe reprochfully, all his holy and good admonitions: as this is a thing too common, that no man can abide to be taught of him who he deſpiſeth. Furthermore, ſeeing that we muſt alwaies heare god, by whomſoeuer he ſpeake vnto vs: let vs learne to deſpice no man, that God may alwayes find vs meek & redie to be taught, although he vſe a moſt ſimple man & one whereof there is no account made to teache vs by. For there is no worſe plague, then when pride ſtoppeth our eares, ſo that we cannot vouchſafe to heare thoſe which giue vs profitable & good counſell. And God doth oftentimes chooſe vile & baſe perſons of ſet purpoſe, to teach vs and admoniſh vs, that hee may bring downe our loftines.

They did caſt him out. Although it may be that they did caſt him out of the temple by violence, yet I doe thinke that the Euangeliſt meaneth otherwiſe, that they did excommunicate him, & ſo his caſting out was couered with ſome colour of the law. And this agreeth better with the text: becauſe if he had been caſt out only reprochfully, & matter had not bin of ſuch weight, that the fame ſhold haue come vnto Chriſt. Now in that Chriſt hearde of it, I doe thereby conieƈture that they did it with ſome ſolemne ryte as if it had been ſome earneſt matter. By this example are we taught, how little the curſings of the enemies of Chriſt are to be cared for. If we be caſt out of that congregation wherin Chriſt reigneth, that horrible iudgement is giuen vpon vs, that we are deliuered vnto Satan, becauſe we are baniſhed from the kingdome of the ſonne of god. But we muſt of our own accord flie frō that place, wher Chriſt ruleth not by his worde and ſpirite, if no man do expell vs: ſo far off is it that we muſt feare that tyrannous iudgement, wherewith the wicked do mocke the ſeruants of Chriſt, 35 And when he had found him. If hee had been kept ſtill in the Synagogue, it had been to be feared leaſt being eſtranged from Chriſte hee ſhould haue been drowned in deſtruƈtion dayly with the wicked: now as he wandered without the temple, Chriſte met him, Chriſte receiueth him, being caſt out by the Prieſtes, and embraceth him: he raiſeth him vp lying proſtrate, he offereth life vnto one that was condemned to death. And this ſame haue we alſo tryed in our time. For when as in the beginning Luther and ſuch like did reprehende the groſſer abuſes of the Pope, they had ſcarſe a ſlender taſt of Chriſtianitie: after that the Pope did caſt our his lightnings againſt them, and they were caſt out of the Romiſh Synagogue, Chriſt reached out his hande vnto them, and was throughly knowen vnto them. So there is nothing better for vs, then to bee fartheſt from the enemies of the Goſpell, that Chriſt may come nearer vnto vs.

Doeſt thou beleeue in the ſonne of God? Hee ſpeaketh vnto a Iewe, who hauing been inſtruƈted of a childe in the doƈtrine of the law, had learned that God had promiſed the Meſsias. Therefore this interrogation importeth as much as if Chriſte did exhort him, to follow the Meſsias and to addiƈt himſelfe wholy vnto him. Although he vſeth a more honorable name then they were wont to vſe as then: for the Meſsias was only accounted the ſonne of Dauid at that time.

36 VVho is he that I may beleeue? By this anſwere of the blinde man it appeareth, that although he knewe as yet no certaine or manifeſt thing concerning Chriſt, yet was he redy & eaſie to be taught. For theſe words import as much as if he did ſay, I am readie to imbrace him, ſo ſooneas he ſhalbe reuealed vnto me. And we muſt note that the blinde man is deſirous to be taught of Chriſt who was a Prophete: for hee was alreadie perſwaded that Chriſt was ſent from god. VVherfore he doth not raſhly ſubmit his faith vnto his doƈtrine,

37 And thou haſt ſeene him. The blinde man coulde be ſet no farther forwarde by theſe woordes of Chriſte, ſaue only vnto a bare, colde, and hungrie porcion or parcell of faith: for Chriſte maketh no mention either of his power, or why he was ſent of his farher, or what he broughte vnto men. But this is the principal thing in faith, to know that by the ſaƈtifice of his death ſinnes are purged, and that wee are reconciled vnto God: that his reſurrection is the tryumph ouer death beeing ouercome: that wee are renewed by his ſpirite, that beeing dead vnto the fleſhe and ſinne, wee may liue vnto righteouſneſſe: that hee is the onely mediatour: that his ſpirit is the earneſt of our adoption: and finally that all the parts of eternall life are in him. But the Euangeliſt doth either not recite all the communication which he had with Chriſt, or els he doth only giue vs to vnderſtand that the blinde man gaue Chriſt his name, that he might hereafter begin to bee his diſciple. I do not doubt but that Ieſus his mening was to haue him to know that he was chriſt. that he might bring him from this beginning of faith vnto a more full knowledge of him.

38 And hee worshipped him. The queſtion may be whether hee gaue vnto Chriſt the honour that is due vnto God or no. The worde which the Euangeliſt vſeth, ſignifieth nothing els, ſaue this, that by bowing the knee and other ſignes, he did teſtifie ſome worſhippe and reuerence. I thinke that hereby is meant ſome rare and vnwonted thing: namely, that the blind man gaue farre more honor to Chriſt then to a man or a prophete. And yet notwithſtanding I doe not thinke that he was come ſo farre then, that he knew that Chriſt was God reuealed in the fleſh. Therfore what meaneth this worſhipping? Seeing that the blind man was perſwaded that Ieſus was the ſonne of God, beeing as it were in a traunce by reaſon of wondering, hee dyd throwe downe himſelfe before him.

39 I am come to iudgement. Iudgement cannot be ſimply taken in this place for the puniſhment, which is laid vpon the wicked and the deſpicers of God, becauſe it is extended vnto the grace of illumination. Therefore Chriſt calleth it iudgemẽt, becauſe it reſtoreth things which were cõfuſed and ſcattered abroade into ſome lawfull order: yet notwithſtanding his meaning is, that this is done by the wonderfull counſell of God, and contrarie to the common ſenſe of men. And truly mans reaſon iudgeth that nothing can be more vnconuenient, then that thoſe ſhoulde bee made blinde by the light of the world which doe ſee. Therefore this is one of the ſecrete iudgements of God, whereby he caſteth downe mans pride.

Furthermore, we muſt note that the blindneſſe which is here mentioned, doth not ſo much come frõ chriſt, as through mans fault. Neither doth any mans owne nature properly make him blind: but ſeeing ṕ the reprobate deſire nothing els but to quẽch his light, it muſt needs be that the eyes of their minde which are infected with wickednes & frowardneſſe, muſt be blinded with the light offered vnto them. To be briefe, ſithence Chriſte is of his owne nature the light of the worlde, this is a thing that is accidentall, that ſom are made blinde by his comming. Yee may this queſtion be asked againe, ſeeing all men are generally condemned of blindneſſe, who are thoſe that ſee? I anſwere, that that was ſpoken tauntingly by a conceſſion, becauſe the vnbeleeuers, althogh they be blinde, doe yet notwithſtanding thinke that they are very ſharpe and quicke of ſight, and being puffed vp with this confidence, they doe not vouchſafe to heare God, and the wiſedome of the fleſh hath a fayre ſhew without Chriſt: becauſe the world doth not comprehende what true wiſdome is. Therefore Chriſt ſaith that thoſe men doe ſee, who are carried with their owne ſenſe and fantaſie, deceiuing themſelues and others vnder a fooliſh hope of wiſdome, accounting their vaine imaginatiõns wiſdome.

Such

Such men become blinde ſo ſoone as Chriſte appeareth in the brightneſſe of his Goſpell : not only becauſe their fooliſhneſſe whiche lay hid before in the darkneſſe of infidelitie, is diſcouered, but becauſe being deeper drowned in darkneſſe, through the iuſt iudgement of God, they looſe that little light, which remained in them. All men truly are born blinde : yet there ſhine ſome ſparkles as yet in the darkneſſe of corrupt and depraued nature, that men may differ from bruit beaſtes. Nowe if any man being puffed vp with a proud confidence and truſt which he hath in his own reaſon, do refuſe to ſubmit himſelf to God, hee ſhall ſeeme wiſe without Chriſte : but the brightneſſe of Chriſte ſhall make him fooliſh: Becauſe the vanitie of mans minde beginneth then to appeare, when as the heauenly wiſedome commeth abroade. But Chriſte his meaning was to expreſſe by theſe words (as I haue ſaid before) ſome greater thing. For hypocrites doe not ſo ſtubbornly reſiſt God before ſuch time as Chriſt doeth beginne to ſhine : but ſo ſoone as the light commeth neerer them, they rebell againſt God with open warre, and as if they were his open enemies. Therefore this frowardneſſe & vnthankfulneſſe cauſeth their blindnes to be doubled, & that God doth eyther put out, or altogether pluck out in his iuſt iudgement, their eyes which were before depriued of the true light. Now doe we know the ſumme of this place, that Chriſt came into the worlde that hee may illuminate the blinde, and bring thoſe vnto madneſſe which ſeeme to themſelues to be wiſe.

And in the former place he maketh mention of giuing ſight, becauſe this is the proper cauſe of his comming. For hee came not to iudge the worlde, but rather to ſaue that which was periſhed : as Paule 2. Cor. 10. 6. when he ſaith that God hath vengeance in readineſſe, againſt all the rebellious: he addeth alſo that this puniſhment ſhall take place, after that the obedience of the godly ſhalbe fulfilled. Neither ought this vengeance to be reſtrained vnto the perſon of Chriſt, as if hee did not the ſame dayly by the miniſters of his Goſpell. VVerefore we muſt take good heede, leaſt any of vs doe pull downe vpon his own pate this horrible puniſhment through a fond opinion of wiſdome : but experience teacheth vs how truly Chriſt vttered this ſame ſentence. For we ſee many men ſmitten with the ſpirite of giddineſſe and furye, for no other cauſe, ſaue onely becauſe they cannot abyde the riſing of the ſunne of righteouſneſſe. Adam liued at that time, and he was endued with the true light of vnderſtanding, when he loſt that diuine good thing by deſiring to ſee more then was lawfull for him. Nowe if when wee are drowned in blindnes, and being thus humbled of the Lord, wee do yet neuertheleſſe flatter our ſelues in our darknes, and ſet our phrenſie ſenſe and vnderſtanding againſt the heauenly wiſedome, it is no maruell yf Gods vengeance waxe heauie vppon vs, ſo that wee bee made double blinde.

This puniſhment was laid vpon the wicked vnder the lawe (for Ieſayas is ſent to make blinde the old people, that in ſeeing they may not ſee. Make blinde the hearte of this people, and aggrauate their eares &c. Ieſaias 6. 9. And the more fully the brightneſſe of the diuine light did ſhew forth it ſelfe in Chriſt then in the Prophets, ſo much the more manifeſtly & plainely ought this example of making blinde to appeare: as at this day the the noone day light of the Goſpell, doth driue the hypocrites headlong into extreame madnes.

40 Certain of the Phariſees had heard. They did by and by perceiue that they were wounded with that ſaying of Chriſt: and yet they ſeem not to haue byn of ỹ worſt ſort. Becauſe thoſe which were his opē & deadly enemies did more abhor Chriſt then that they would adioyne themſelues vnto him: but theſe men could abide to heare Chriſte, but all in vaine: becauſe no man is a fit diſciple of Chriſtes, ſaue only he that hath put off himſelfe: from which thing theſe men are farre. Furthermore, this interrogation did ſpring from indignation, becauſe they thought they had open iniurie done vnto them, if they were reckoned amongeſt thoſe that are blinde: and alſo it hath a ſhow of a proud contempt of the grace of Chriſt, together with a mocke. As if they ſhould ſay, Canſt not thou therefore become famous without our reproch? Shall we ſuffer this that thou ſhalt purchaſe vnto thy ſelfe honour, by our ſhame? And whereas thou promiſeſt newe light to the blinde, get thee hence and be packing with thy benefit: for we will not pay ſo deare for our lightning, that thou mayeſt hereby proone that wee haue beene blinde hytherto. Hereby it appeareth that hypocriſie is alwayes proud and poyſonfull. It is a point of pride, in that being content with themſelues, they will loſe nothing of that which they haue: of poyſonfulnes, in ỹ whē their diſeaſe is ſhewed them, they are netled, as if they were ſore hurt, and doe chide Chriſt. Hence commeth the contempt of Chriſt & of the grace which he offereth. There is great force in this worde (alſo): becauſe their meaning is, that although all the reſt be blinde, yet is it vnmeete that they ſhould be reckoned amongſt the common ſort. It is a vice too familier with thoſe which are placed aboue other men, that being almoſt drunkē with pride they doe forget that they are men.

If you were blinde. Theſe wordes may haue a double meaning, eyther that ignorance did ſomewhat extenuate their fault, vnleſſe being manyfeſtly conuict they would ſtriue of ſet purpoſe againſt the truth, or that the diſeaſe of ignorance which was in them was medicinable, if ſobeit they would acknowledge it. The wordes of Chriſt which we ſhall haue in the fifteenth Chapter, do confirme the former ſentence, If I had not come and ſpoken vnto them they ſhould haue no ſinne, &c. But becauſe] it followeth heere in the text, that they ſay that they ſee: to the end the oppoſites may the better anſwere one another, this ſeemeth the better to agree, if you expound him to be blinde, who knowing his blindneſſe, doth ſeek remedie for his diſeaſe. After this ſort the ſumme ſhalbe, if you did acknowledge your griefe it ſhould not be altogether vncurable: but now becauſe you thinke that you are ſound, yee cōtinue deſperate. V When as he ſaith that they haue no ſinne, whiche are blinde, hee doth not ſo excuſe ignorance as if it were innocent and without the giltineſſe of a fault: his meaning is only that it is a readie remedie for the diſeaſe when it is throughly perceiued: becauſe when the blinde man is deſirous to be delinered, God is ready to help him. And they are vncurable, who being amazed in their miſeries, doe deſpiſe the grace of God,

Chap. 10.

Chap. 10.

1 VErily, verilie I ſay vnto you, hee that entreth not into the ſheepefolde by the dore, but climbeth vp ſome other way, he is a theefe and a robber.

2 And hee that entreth in by the dore, hee is the ſheepehearde of the ſheepe.

3 Vnto him the porter openeth, and the ſheepe heare his voyce, and he calleth his owne ſheepe by name, and leadeth them out.

4 And when he hath ſent out his owne ſheepe, hee goeth before them, and the ſheepe follow him: becauſe they know his voice.

5 But a ſtranger doe they not follow, but flie from him: becauſe they knowe not the voyce of ſtrangers.

6 This ſimilitude ſpake Ieſus vnto them: and they vnderſteode not what theſe thinges were whiche hee ſpake vnto them.

1 Verily, verily I ſay vnto you. Becauſe Chriſte had to deale with the Scribes and Prieſtes who were accounted the paſtours of the Churche: if he woulde haue his doctrine receiued, it was requiſite that they ſhould be diſpoyled of the honour of this title. And furthermore, the ſmall number of thoſe that beleeued might haue muche diſcredited his doctrine. Therefore he auoucheth that they are not al to be accounted ſheepheardes or ſheepe, which vſurpe an outwarde place in the Church: but that the lawfull paſtours are knowen frō the reprobate, & the true ſheepe are knowen from the falſe by this marke, if he be the only marke whereat they doe all ayme, the beginning and the end. This admonition hath beene for all ages profitable, and is at this day moſte neceſſarie.

There is no plague more hurtfull to ꝑ church, then whē wolues creepe in, in ſhepheards clothing. VVe know alſo what great occaſiō of offence it giueth when baſtardes or degenerate Iſraelites, do boaſt themſelues to bee the children of the Church, and vnder this colour do mocke ꝑ faithfull. The Churche hath been almoſt throughout all ages ſubiect to both theſe euilles: but there is at this day nothing whiche doeth more trouble the ignorant and weake, then when they ſee the greateſt enemies of the Goſpel haue the ſanctuarie of GOD in poſſeſſion. For they are not eaſily perſwaded that that is the doctrine of Chriſte, which the Paſtours of the Churche doe ſo valiauntly and ſtoutly gainſtand.

Againe, becauſe the greater part is ledde about through diuers errours by falſe doctrines, whyleſt euery one of them looketh vnto and waiteth for another, no man almoſt ſuffereth himſelf to be brought into the right way. Therefore vnleſſe wee wyll wilfully lay open our ſelues vnto VVolues and Theeues, wee muſt take good heede that wee bee not deceiued with viſured Paſtours or ſheepe. The name of the Churche is honourable, and that for good cauſes: but the more reuerence it deſerueth, the more diligentlye muſte wee marke

the difference betwene the true Church and the falſe. Chriſt doth in this place flatly denie that thoſe are to be accounted paſtours, whiche boaſt themſelues to be ſuch, or that thoſe are to be accounted ſheep whiche make boaſt of the outward markes. Hee ſpeaketh of the Iewiſhe Churche: and ours is not much vnlike vnto it in this reſpect. VVe muſt alſo marke the ende of his purpoſe, whereof I haue ſpoken: namely, that weake conſciences be not afraide or faint, when as they ſee thoſe enuiouſly bent againſt the Goſpell, who reigne in the Churche in ſteede of Paſtours, that they doe not therfore ſtart backe from the faith, becauſe they haue but a few of the cõmon ſort of chriſtians to be theyr ſchoolefellowes in hearing the doctrine of Chriſt.

Hee that entreth not in. They deale fooliſhly in my iudgement which doe ſubtillie diſcuſſe euery part of this parable. Let it therefore be ſufficient for vs to holde this ſumme, that ſeeing that Chriſte maketh the Church like to a ſheepfolde, wherin God gathereth together all his children, he compareth himſelfe to the dore, becauſe there is no entrance into the Church, ſaue only through him. Hereupon it followeth that thoſe are good ſheepheardes, which lead men ſtraightway vnto Chriſt: that thoſe are truly gathered into Gods ſheepefolde, that they may bee reckoned in his flocke, who addict themſelues to Chriſt alone. And all this is referred vnto doctrine. For ſeeing that all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge are hid in Chriſte Col. 2. 3. Hee which turneth aſide from him vnto any other, doth neither keepe the way, nor enter in by the dore.

Now whoſoeuer will not refuſe to haue Chriſt to be his teacher, hee ſhall eaſily acquit himſelf of that doubt (which maketh ſo many to ſtand in doubt) which is the church, and who are to be heard in ſteed of ſheepheards. For if thoſe who are called ſhepheards do aſſay to lead vs away from Chriſte, we muſt flie from them, as Chriſt commandeth vs, as frõ theeues and wolues: neither muſt we linke our ſelues or haue any fellowſhip with any other flocke, ſaue with that which cõſenteth together in the pure faith of the Goſpell. For this cauſe Chriſt exhorteth his diſciples, to ſeparate themſelues from the vnbeleeuing multitude of all the whole nation, that they do not ſuffer themſelues to be ruled by the wicked Prieſtes, and that they permit not themſelues to be deluded with vayne names.

3 To him the porter openeth. If any man liſt to vnderſtande God, I doe not gainſtand him. Yea Chriſt ſeemeth in this place to ſet the iudgemẽt of God againſt the falſe opinion of men, in allowing paſtours: as if hee ſhould ſay, the world truly doth for the moſt part delight in ſome, and doth willingly honour them: but God in whoſe hand the gouernment is, doth acknowledge and allow none other ſaue thoſe whiche leade his ſheepe this way. In that he ſaith, that the ſheepe are called by name, I referre it vnto the mutuall conſent of faith: becauſe the ſcholler and the teacher are coupled together with one ſpirite of God, that the teacher may goe before, the ſcholler may come after. VVhereas ſome do thinke that the priuate knowledge which the ſheepheard ought to haue of euery particuler ſheepe, is hereby expreſſed, I know not whether it be firme enough or no.

4 Becauſe they know his voice. Although he ſpeake in this place of the mi-miniſters, yet will he not ſo much haue them heard, as God when hee ſpeaketh by them. For we muſt marke the exception which he putteth, that he alone is a faithfull paſtour of the Church, who gouerneth his ſheepe vnder Chriſt his guiding. And we muſt note the reaſon, why the ſheepe are ſaid to followe: becauſe they knowe to diſcerne the ſheepe-heardes from wolues by the very voyce: This is the ſpirite of diſcretion whereby the elect doe know the truth from the falſe inuentions of men. Therefore in the ſheepe of Chriſt, there goeth before the knoweledge of the truth: then there is added thereunto an earneſt deſire to obey, that they may not only know what is truth: but receiue the ſame with all their heart. And hee doth not only commend the obedience of faith for this cauſe, becauſe the ſheepe do come quietly together when they heare the ſheepheards voyce: but alſo becauſe the doe not giue eare to ſtrange voyces, neither are they ſcattered abroad when any man calleth them or rebuketh them.

6 This ſimilitude. Behold why they did refuſe the light of Chriſte, being puft vp with the light of wiſedome: for they are ouer dull in a matter not very hard. In theſe wordes, They vnderſtood not what theſe thynges were, &c. the reading is diuers amongſt the Grecians, ſome bokes haue it worde for worde, They vnderſtood not what things he ſpake. The other which I haue followed is more perfect, although the ſenſe come all to one ende. The third is, that they did not acknowlege him to be the ſonne of god, who ſpake of himſelfe: but this is not vſed very much.

7 Therfore Ieſus ſaid vnto them againe, verily, verily I ſay vnto you, that I am the dore of the sheepe.

8 All which came before mee, are theeues and robbers: but the sheepe hearde not them.

9 I am the doore: if any man enter in by mee, he shalbe ſaued: and hee shall goe in, and goe out, and shall finde paſture.

10 The theefe commeth not, ſaue only to ſteale, and kill, and deſtroy, I came that they may haue life, and that they may haue it more abundantly.

7 I am the doore. Vnleſſe this expoſition had been added all the whole ſpeech had been allegoricall. Now doth he more plainely expounde that which was the chiefeſt thing in the ſimilitude, when he affirmeth that he is the doore of the ſheepe. And the ſumme is this (as wee haue ſaide) that the head of all the ſpirituall doctrine wherewith ſoules are fed, is contained in him. Wherupon Paul one of the ſhepheards. 1. Cor. 2. 2. eſteemed not to know any thing ſaue Ieſus Chriſt. For theſe words import aſmuch, as if Chriſt had teſtified that it was he alone vnto whome we muſt be gathered. Therfore he biddeth all thoſe that deſire to be ſaued, come vnto him. Wherby he giueth vs to vnderſtand, that all theyr labour is but loſt, whoſoeuer do ſtriue to come vnto God leauing him: becauſe there is but one gate that ſtandeth open, and all other entrances whatſoeuer are ſtopt.

8 All which came before mee. It is worde for worde, All howe many ſoeuer. And thoſe which reſtraine this vnto Iudas of Galilee and ſuch, myſſe the marke in my iudgement very much, and are farre from Chriſt his meaning. For he doth generally ſet all falſe doctrines againſt the Goſpell, and all falſe Prophetes againſt the godly teachers.

Moreouer, this ſentence is extended euen vnto the Gentiles and that not vnfitly, that whoſoeuer from the beginning of the world haue profeſſed themſelues to bee teachers, and haue not ſtudied to gather the ſheepe vnto Chriſte, they haue abuſed this title to deſtroy ſoules. This doth in no caſe appertaine vnto Moſes & the Prophetes, who dyd only intende this, to eſtabliſh the kingdome of Chriſte. For wee muſt note, that in the wordes of Chriſt, contrarie thinges are conferred together. But there ſhall bee ſo ſmall diſagreement founde betweene the lawe and the Goſpell, that the lawe is nothing els but a preparation vnto the Goſpel.

To conclude, Chriſte doeth teſtifie that all doctrines whereby the worlde was led away from him, were ſo many deadly plagues: becauſe without him there is nothing but horrible ſcattering abroad. In ỹ meane ſeaſon we ſee what account God maketh of antiquitie, & what account we ought to make thereof ſo often as it is, as it were, ſet againſt Chriſt. For leaſt any man ſhould be moued, becauſe there haue been teachers in all ages, who haue cared for nothing leſſe, then to directe men vnto Chriſt, Chriſt himſelfe doth expreſly ſet downe, that It skilleth not how many ſuch there haue been, or how long ago it was ſince they began to come abroad, becauſe this is to be conſidered, that there is but one only gate, which being left, they are theeues which dig through ỹ walles or make hoales.

But the sheepe hearde them not. Hee doth now more plainely confirme that, which he ſpake euen nowe, vnder the forme of an allegorie: namely, that they were not of the Church of God, which were led away out of the way by ſeducers. This is ſaid for this cauſe, firſt, leaſt when we ſee a great multitude of thoſe, which goe aſtray, we ſhould delight to periſh by their example: and ſecondly, leaſt we ſtumble when God giueth the reynes vnto ſeducers to deceiue manie. For doubtleſſe this is no ſmall comfort, or ſlender matter of hope, when as wee knowe that Chriſt hath alwayes defended his ſheepe amongeſt manifolde inuaſions and lyinges in wayte of wolues and robbers, with his faithfull ayd, leaſt any one ſhoulde fall from him. But here ariſeth a queſtion, when a man beginneth to be of the flocke of Chriſt. For wee ſee many wander through the deſart, and goe aſtray during the moſt part of their life, which are at length gathered vnto the folde of Chriſt. I anſwere, that the worde sheepe is taken two manner of wayes in this place: when Chriſt ſhall ſay heereafter, that he hath yet other ſheepe, he comprehendeth all the elect of God, who were then nothing like vnto ſheepe: he doth nowe vnderſtande the ſheep which are marked with their ſheepheards marke. VVee are by nature nothing leſſe then ſheepe, who are rather borne VVolues and Lions vntill the ſpirite of Chriſt doe tame vs, and make vs of wilde beaſtes and vntamed beaſtes, meeke ſheepe. So that according to the ſecrete election of God, we are alreadie in his heart ſheep, being not yet borne: we begin to bee ſheep in our ſelues, by that calling, whereby he gathereth vs into his ſheepfolde.

Nowe, as for thoſe that are called to be of the number of the faithfull, Chriſt affirmeth that they cleaue faſter vnto him, then that they can be bee carryed about with euery blaſt of new doctrine. If any man obiect, that euen thoſe which had addicted themſelues vnto Chriſte may erre, and that that is proued by often experience, and that this function is not in vaine inioyned a good paſtour, Ezech. 34. ver. 12. to gather togeather the diſperſed ſheepe: I confeſſe in deede that this falleth out oftentimes, that thoſe which haue beene of the houſholde of faith, may be eſtraunged for a time: but this is not contrarie to Chriſtes meaning: becauſe in as muche as they erre, they doe after a ſort ceaſe to bee ſheepe.

Chriſt meaneth thus much ſimplie, that although all the elect of God be tempted with innumerable errors, yet are they retained in the obedience of pure faith, leaſt they ſhoulde bee laid open as a pray vnto Satan & his miniſters. And this is no leſſe a wonderfull woorke of God, when he gathereth togeather againe the ſheep which are a little wandered, then as if they ſhould ſtill continue ſhut vp in the ſheepefolde. That is alwayes and without ende true, that they are not ours, which go out from vs, 1. Iohn. 2. 19. but that thoſe which are of vs, do continue with vs vntill the ende. And this place ought to make vs greatly aſhamed. Firſt in that we are ſo little acquainted with our ſheepeheardes voyce, that there are ſcarſe a few which doe coldly marke the ſame: and ſecondly, in that we are ſo ſlowe and ſluggiſhe to heare the ſame. I ſpeake of the good who are at leaſt way tollerable: for a great many of thoſe which boaſt themſelues to be the Diſciples of Chriſt, do frowardly kick againſt him.

Furthermore, in that ſo ſone as the voyce of any ſtranger doth ſound we are carryied hyther and thither: this inconſtancie and lightnes doth ſufficiently bewray vs how little we haue profited in faith. But and if the number of beleeuers be ſmaller then is to be wiſhed, and ſecondly, if many of a fewe doe oftentimes fall away: the godly teachers haue a comfort whereon they may ſtay themſelues, that they are heard of the elect of God, who are the ſheepe of Chriſt. It is our dutie to doe our endeuour diligently, and by all meanes to goe about this, that all the whole worlde may growe together into the vnitie of faith, if it can bee poſſiblie brought to paſſe: in the meane while let vs bee content with our number.

9 If any man enter in by mee. An excellent comfort for the godly, that ſo ſoone as they haue once embraced Chriſte, they heare that they are without daunger. For Chriſt promiſeth vnto them ſaftie and proſperous eſtate. Secondly he expreſſeth two partes and pointes, that they ſhall goe ſafely whither ſoeuer they haue neede: and ſecondly, they ſhall be fed to the full. By going in and comminge out, the Scripture doth oftentimes ſignifie vnto vs all the actions of life: as wee ſay in Frenche Aller et venir, for to bee conuerſaunt. Therefore there is a double commoditie of the Goſpel ſet foorth vnto vs in theſe woordes: that our ſoules ſhall finde food in it, which doe otherwiſe pine away through hunger, & are only fed with winde: and ſecondly that it ſhall be vnto vs a faithfull fortreſſe and ſtrong holde againſt the inuaſions of wolues and theeues.

10 For the theef cometh not. By this ſaying Chriſt doth as it were awake vs, leaſt the miniſters of Satan doe enuiron vs before we be aware, and are drowſie. For our too great ſecuritie cauſeth vs to ſtande open and naked on euery ſide vnto falſe doctrines. For whence commeth ſo great credulitie, and light beleefe, that they who ought to remaine ſtedfaſt in Chriſte are carried about through many errors, ſaue onely becauſe they doe not ſo beware and take heede of ſuche falſe teachers as they ought? Furthermore, our vnſatiable curioſitie is ſo delighted in newe and ſtraunge inuentions of men, that we runne wilfully like madmen vnto wolues and theeues. Therefore it is not without cauſe that Chriſte doth teſtifie that falſe teachers, how flatteringly ſoeuer they doe inſinuate thēſelues, doe alwayes offer deadly poyſon, to the end we may be the more bent to driue them away. Like vnto this is the admonition which Paule giueth. Colloſ. 2. 8. Take heede leaſt any man ſpoyle you through philoſophie, &c.

I am come. An other ſimilitude, for ſeeing that Chriſt hath hitherto called himſelfe a gate: and thoſe true ſheepheardes which gather their ſheep vnto this gate: he doth now take vppon himſelfe the perſon of a ſhepheard, and doth indeed affirme that hee is the onely ſhepheard, ſo that this honour and title doth properly appertaine vnto none other. For howe many faithfull ſhepheards of the Church ſoeuer there be, yet becauſe hee rayſeth them vp, furniſheth them with neceſſarie gifts, gouerneth them with his ſpirite, worketh in thē, they doe no whit hynder him from being the only gouernour of his Church, and being the only moſt excellent paſtour. For although he vſe their miniſterie, yet doth hee not ceaſe from executing the office of a paſtour by his power: and alſo they are maſters and teachers, ſo that they take nothing away from his dignitie and office.

Furthermore, this woorde sheepheard, when it is applyed vnto men is ſubalternum (as they call it) or placed vnder another. And Chriſt doth ſo impart his honour vnto his miniſters, that hee doth yet notwithſtanding remaine the only ſhepheard as well of them as of the whole flock. Nowe when as he ſaith, that he came that the ſheepe may haue life, his meaning is, that they are only ſubiect to bee carryed away and deuoured by theeues and wolues, which keepe not themſelues vnder his ſheephooke. And to the end he may make them the more bold, he affirmeth that life is continuallie by little and little encreaſed and confirmed in thoſe, which doe not depart from him. And truly the more that euerye man goeth forward in faith, the nigher he commeth vnto the perfection of life, becauſe the ſpirite encreaſeth in him which is life.

12 But an hyreling and hee that is not the sheepheard, whose the sheepe are not, seeth the wolfe comming, and forsaketh his sheepe, and flyeth: and the wolfe catcheth them, and scattereth them.

13 But the hyreling flieth, because hee is an hyreling, and careth not for his sheepe.

14 I am the good sheepheard: and I know my sheepe, and am knowen of mine.

15 As

15 As the father knoweth mee, and I knowe the father, and I lay downe my life for my sheepe.

11 A good sheepehearde layeth downe his life. He declareth by that singular affection which he beareth toward his sheepe how truly he shewe th himselfe a shepheard toward them. Because he is so carefull for their safetie, that he spareth not his owne life: whereupon it followeth that they are more then vnthankfull, and an hundreth times woorthie to perish and to bee laide open vnto all manner of harme, who refuse to be kept by so bountifull, louing a shepheard. Furthermore, that is most true which Augustine saith, that in this place is set before vs, what is to be desired, what is to be fled, and what is to bee suffered in the gouernment of the Church. There is nothing more to be desired, then that the Churche may be gouerned by good and carefull sheepheads. Christ doth professe that he alone is a good shepheard, who first by himselfe and secondly by his instruments doth make the Church sound and safe. Therefore so often as thinges are set in good order, and fit men are made gouernours, there Christ playeth the sheepheard in deede. But there bee many Theeues and VVolues, who hauing on sheepeheardes, visures do wickedly despearse the Church: Christ affirmeth that suche are to be fled, by what name or title soeuer they be called, and howsoeuer they vaunt and bragge of their name. If the Church could be purged of hyrelinges, it should be in better case: but because by this meanes the Lord doth exercise the pacience of his faithfull children, and we are also vnworthie of that singuler benefite, that Christ shoulde appeare vnto vs in sincere pastours: they are to bee suffered, howsoeuer they be not allowed, and do mislike vs for good causes. By hyrelings vnderstand those who retaine and keepe backe pure doctrine, and which do rather preach the truth by occasion then of any true zeale, as saith Paule. Phil. 1.15. Such men are to bee hearde although they doe not serue Christe faithfully. For like as Christ wold haue the Pharisees hard, because they did sit in Moses his chaire. Mat. 23.3. so must we giue this honor vnto the Gospel, that we despice not the ministers thereof, although they bee not very good. And because euery little offence doth make the gospell vnsauery in our taste, least such daintines do hinder vs, let vs alwaies remember that which I said before, that if the spirite of Christ bee not of suche power and force in the ministers, that hee doe openly shew himselfe in them to be a sheepheard, then are we punished for our sinnes: and that in the meane season our obedience is tryed.

12 But the hireling and hee that is not the shepheard. Although Christ doth challendge the name of a shepheard to himselfe alone, yet doth he secretly graunt that it is in some respect common to the instruments in whom he worketh. For we know that many after Christ, were not afraid to shed their blood for the saferie of the Church, neither did the propheres which were before Christes comming spare their liues. But in his owne person he setteth before vs an absolute example, that he may prescribe a rule vnto his ministers. For how filthie and shamefull is our slouthfulnes, if our life be more precious vnto vs then the safety of the church, before which Christ did not preferre his owne life? And that which is said in this place of giuing the life for the sheepe, is as a sure and princi-pall ſigne of fatherly affectiō. Chriſt his mening was firſt to teſtifie vnto vs how ſinguler a tokē of his loue towards vs he ſhewed in his death: and ſecondly to prouoke al his miniſters to folow his example. Notwithſtanding we muſt note the difference betweene them and him, that he gaue his life for the price of ſatisfaction: hee ſhed his blood to purge our ſoules: he offered his body for a ſacrifice whereby he might purge our ſinnes, and pacifie Gods wrath which was ſtirred vp againſt vs. But there cā be no ſuch thing in ỹ miniſters of the goſpell, who haue all need to be purged, and whoſe ſins are cleanſed by that only ſacrifice, and are reconciled vnto God. But Chriſte diſputeth not in this place of the efficacie of his death, or fruite thereof, that he may compare himſelfe with others: but that he may declare how he was affected toward vs: and ſecondly, that hee may inuite others to follow his example. In ſumme, as it was proper to Chriſt to purchaſe life vnto vs by his death, and to perfourme whatſoeuer the Goſpell doth containe: ſo it is the common office of all paſtours, to defend the Goſpell and doctrine which they preach with the loſſe of their life, & by ſealing the doctrine of ỹ goſpell with their blood, to teſtifie that they teach not in vaine, that Chriſt hath purchaſed life for them and others. Notwithſtanding here may a queſtion be moued whether he is to be accounted an hyreling or no, which doth auoide the inuaſion of the wolues for what cauſe ſoeuer he wil.

This queſtion was handeled in times paſt as if it had been in the preſent matter, when the Tyraunts did cruelly rage againſt the Churche. Tertullian and others in my iudgement, were too ſeuere in this point. The moderation which Auguſtine vſeth is farre better, who doth ſo ſuffer Paſtors to flie, if they do rather prouide for the common ſafetie by their flying, then betray the flocke committed vnto them by forſaking it. And he ſheweth ỹ this is done when as the Church is not deſtitute of fit miniſters, and the enemies doe ſeeke the paſtours life ſo particularly, that his abſence may mittigate their madnes. But & if the danger be cōmon, & it be rather to be feared, leaſt the ſhepheard be thought to flie not for any wil he hath to prouide, but for feare leaſt he looſe his life, he affirmeth that that is in no caſe lawfull: becauſe the example of his flight ſhall doe more harme, then his life can doe good hereafter. Let any man that is diſpoſed, reade the hundreth and foureſcore Epiſtle written vnto Honoratus the Biſhop. In this reſpect it was lawefull for Cyprian to flie, who was ſo little afraide of death, that he did valiantly refuſe to redeeme the life which was offered vnto him, by traiterous deniall. Only wee muſt hold this, that the Paſtour muſt preferre his flocke, and conſequently euery particuler ſheepe, before his owne life.

Whoſe the sheepe are not. Chriſt ſeemeth in this place to make all men hyrelings without exception, beſides himſelf alone. For ſeeing that he is the only ſhephearde, it is not lawful for any of vs to call the ſheep which he feedeth his owne. But let vs remember that thoſe, which are mooued with the ſpirite of Chriſt, doe account that their owne, which is their heades: and that not to the ende they may vſurpe vnto themſelues power, but that they may faithfully keepe that which is committed vnto them. For he that is truly ioyned vnto Chriſt, will neuer account that ſtraunge vnto him, which was ſo deare vnto Chriſte. That is it

Which he ſaith afterwarde, that the hyreling doth flie: becauſe hee careth not for the ſheepe: as if he ſhould ſay, that he is not touched though the flocke be ſcattered, becauſe he thinketh that it doth nothing appertaine vnto him. For he ꝑ regardeth the hyre and not the flock, how craftily ſoeuer he deale in time of the quiet eſtate of the Churche, hee will at length ſhew ſome manifeſt token of his falſhood, when he is to encounter with the aduerſarie.

14 And I know my sheepe. He doth againe commend his loue toward vs in the former member: for knowledge ariſeth of loue, and carrieth with it a care: notwithſtanding hee doth alſo giue vs to vnderſtande, that he careth not for thoſe which doe not obey the Goſpel, as he repeateth in the ſecond member, and confirmeth that which hee ſaid before, that his ſheepe doe alſo know him.

15 As the father knoweth mee. It is not appertinent, neither is it expedient to enter into theſe thornie ſpeculations, howe the father knoweth his wiſedome: becauſe that Chriſt doth ſimplie make hymſelfe the meane betweene God and vs in as much as he is the bond of our coniunction with him: as if he ſhoulde ſay, that it is as vnpoſsible that hee ſhoulde forget vs, as that the father ſhould caſt him off, or deſpice him. In the meane ſeaſon he requireth a mutuall dutie of vs: becauſe like as he beſtoweth all that habilitie which hee receiueth of the father to defend vs, ſo will hee haue vs to bee obedient, duetifull, and wholy addicted vnto him ſelfe: like as he is wholie the fathers and referreth all vnto him.

16 And I haue other sheepe, which are not of this folde: them must I also bring, and they shall heare my voyce, and there shall bee one sheepefolde and one sheepeheard.

17 Therfore doth the father loue me, because I lay downe my life, that I may take it againe.

18 No man taketh it from mee, but I lay it downe of my selfe: I haue power to lay it downe, and haue power to take it againe. This commandement haue I receiued of my father.

16 I haue other sheepe. Although ſome men doe referre this vnto all in generall, as well of the Iewes as of the Gentiles, who were not as yet the Diſciples of Chriſt: yet do I not doubt but that he had reſpect vnto the calling of the Gentiles. For he calleth the gathering together of the olde people a ſheepefolde, which beeing taken from the other people of the worlde, did growe to bee the peculiar people of God and to bee one body. For God had ſo adopted vnto him the Iewes, that he did appoynt vnto them rites and ceremonies as certaine boundes, leaſt they ſhoulde bee myxed with the vnbeleeuers. Although the free couenaunt of eternall life made in Chriſt, was the doore of the folde. Therefore hee calleth thoſe, other ſheepe, which had not the ſame marke, but were of another ſort. The ſumme is, that the paſtorall office of Chriſt is not ſhut vp within the corners of Iurie, but that it reacheth father.

That which Auguſtine ſaith is true in this place, as within ꝑ Churche there be many wolues, ſo without there be many ſheepe: but it agreeth not in all pointes with this place: where the outward face of the church is intreated of: becauſe the Gentiles who were for a time ſtraungers, were at length brought vnto the kingdome of God togeather with the Iewes. Notwithſtanding I confeſſe that it agreeth in this point, becauſe Chriſt calleth the vnbeleeuers ſheepe, who could be accounted nothing leſſe in themſelues then ſheep. And he doth not only by this word teach what they ſhalbe, but he doth rather refer it vnto the hidden election of the father, becauſe we are ſheep vnto God, before we can perceiue that he is our ſhepheard: like as in another place it is ſaid that we were his enemies at ſuch time as he loued vs. Rom. 5. 9. 10. In which reſpect Paul doth alſo ſay that we were knowen of God before we knew him. Gal. 4. 9.

Them alſo. His meaning is, that the election of God is ſtedfaſt and ſure, ſo that nothing can periſh which he will haue to be ſaued. For calling did at length in his time reueale the ſecrete counſell of God, wherby men are ordeined vnto life: and certainely it is effectuall, whyleſt that he doth regenerate vnto himſelf by his ſpirit, thoſe to be his ſonnes, who were before begotte of fleſh & blood. Notwithſtãding here ariſeth a queſtion how the Gentiles were brought to bee gathered vnto the Iewes. For it was not meete that the Iewes ſhould caſt away the couenant which god had made with the fathers ỹ they might offer thẽſelues to ſerue Chriſt: & againe, that it was not conuenient that the Gentiles ſhould take vpon them the yoke of the lawe, that being ingrafted into Chriſt they might become companions of the Iewes. Here muſt wee marke the diſtinction betweene the ſubſtance of the couenant and the externall additions. For the Gentiles coulde by no other meanes ſubmit themſelues vnto ỹ faith of Chriſt, ſaue only by imbracing that eternall couenant, wherein the ſaluation of the worlde was grounded. By this meanes were the Propheſies fulfilled: Straungers ſhall ſpeake the language of Canaan, Iſay 19. 18. And againe, ſeuen Gentiles ſhall catch holde on the cloake of one Iewe, and ſhall ſay, we will walke with you. Zach. 18. 23. And againe, they ſhall come from far, and go vp into the mount Syon. And therefore was Abraham called the father of many nations. Gen. 17. 5. becauſe they ſhould come from the Eaſt & VVeſt which ſhould ſit downe in the kingdome of God with him. Mat. 8. 11. And as touching the ceremonies, they are the middle wall whiche Paul ſaith was taken away. Ephe. 2. 14. So that wee were ioyned vnto the Iewes into the vnitie of faith as touching the ſubſtance: and the ceremonies were aboliſhed, leaſt there ſhould be any thing which might keepe them back from ioyning hands with vs.

And there ſhall be one flock. That is, that al the children of god may grow into one body: as we doe all confeſſe one catholike faith, and one body muſt of neceſſitie haue one head onely. There is one God (ſaith Paule) one faith, one baptiſme. Therefore we muſt be one as we are called into one hope. Eph. 4. 4. And although this flock doth ſeeme to be diuided into diuers fouldes, yet are the faithfull which are diſpearſed throughout the whole world encloſed with common hedges: becauſe the ſame worde is preached vnto all, the ſame ſacraments are in vſe, there is the ſame forme of prayer, and thoſe thinges which are requiſite in the profeſſion profession of faith. Marke the meanes wherby the flocke of God is gathered togeather: namely, when there is one shepheard of all, and his voyce is hearde. The meaning of which wordes is this, when as the Church is subiect to Christ alone, is subiect to gouernment, and taketh heed vnto his doctrine, then is the estate thereof well ordered. If the Papistes can shew vs any such thing amongst them, let them inioy that title of the Churche whereof they boast so muche, but and if Christe bee silent there, his Maiestie be troden vnder foote, his holy ordinaunces be mocked: what other thing is their vnity, but a diuelish conspiracie, which is worse and more execrable then all disorder and flattering abroade? Therfore let vs remember that we must alwayes begin at the head. For which cause, when as the Prophetes doe describe the restoring of the church, they doe alway ioyne Dauid the king with God as if they should say, that there is neither any church, where God doth not reigne, neither any kingdome of God, where the honour of a shepheard is not ascribed vnto Christ.

17 Therfore doth the father loue mee. There is an other higher cause for which the father loueth the sonne. For the voyce was not heard in vain from heauen. That he was the welbeloued sonne in whom God was well pleased. Mat. 3. 17. But because hee was both made man for our sake, and the father loued him to this end that he might reconcile vs vnto himselfe: it is no maruell that he doth affirme that he is loued therfore: because our saluation is more deare vnto him, then his owne life. And this is a wonderful commendation of Gods goodnesse toward vs, and such as ought worthilie to cause vs to loue him wholy, in that hee doth not only powre vpon vs the loue which is due to his only sonne, but referreth it vnto vs as vnto the finall cause. And truly Christ had no need to put vppon him our flesh, that in it he might be beloued, but that by redeeming vs, he might be a pledge of his fathers mercy.

That I may take it againe. Because the death of Christe whereof the Disciples heard, might make thē not a little sorowfull, yea might greatly shake their faith, he comforteth them with the hope of his resurrection which should immediately ensue: as if he should say, that he woulde not die vpon this condition, that he may be swallowed vp of death, but that he may rise againe a conquerour straightway. And we must at this day so thinke vpon the death of Christ, that we doe therewithall remēber the glory of his resurrection. So that we do acknowledge him to haue been life, because hauing entred into combate with death, he hath ouercome the same mightily, and tryumphed victoriously.

18 No man taketh it from mee. The other comfort wherwith the disciples may vphold thēselues in the death of Christ is this: that he dyeth not against his will, but doth willingly offer himselfe for the sauegarde of his flocke. Furthermore, he doth not only deny that men haue power to put him to death, saue only in asmuch as he will suffer them: but he doth also exempt himselfe from all manner force of necessitie. We stand in another state, who must of necessitie die, because of sin. Christe himselfe was also borne a mortall man: but this was voluntarie submission, and not any bondage laid vpon him by some other. Therefore Christes intent was to fortifie his disciples, least that seeing him shortly after caried away to be put to death, they should haue bin discouraged, as if

if he had been oppreſſed of his enemies: but that they might acknowe-ledge that he did die to redeeme his flocke, through the wonderfull prouidence of God. There is a continuall profite in this doctrine, that the death of Chriſt is a continuall ſacrifice for our ſinnes therfore: becauſe it was a voluntarie ſacrifice, according to that ſaying of Paul, Rom. 5. 19. Theſe wordes, I lay it downe of my ſelf, may be expounded two maner of wayes, either that Chriſt putteth his life from him, hee himſelfe remayning perfect (as if any man ſhould put off his cloathes) or that hee dyeth of his owne accord.

This commandement. Hee calleth vs vnto the eternall counſell of God the father, to the end we may know that he was ſo carefull for our ſaluation, that he gaue vs his only ſonne, how great ſoeuer hee bee. And Chriſt himſelfe, who came into the world that he might ſhew himſelfe, obedient vnto the father, ſheweth that this is the only marke wherat he aymeth in all thinges, to prouide for vs.

19 There was a diſſention therefore againe amongeſt the Iewes for theſe ſayings.

20 And many of them ſaide, hee hath a Diuell, and is madde: why doe yee heare him?

21 Otherſome ſaide, theſe are not the wordes of one that hath a Diuell: can a Diuell open the eyes of the blinde?

22 And it was at Hieruſalem the feaſt of the dedication, and it was winter.

23 And Ieſus walked in the Temple, in the porch of Salomon.

24 Therefore the Iewes compaſſed him about, and ſaide vnto him. Howe long doeſt thou holde our ſoule in doubt? If thou be Chriſt tell vs freely.

25 Ieſus anſwered them, I haue tolde you, and yee beleeue not: the workes which I doe in my fathers name theſe teſtifie of me.

26 But yee beleeue not becauſe yee are not of my sheepe, as I ſaid vnto you.

27 The sheepe which are mine, doe heare my voice: and I know them, and they follow mee.

28 And I doe giue vnto them eternall life, and they ſhall not perish for euer: neither ſhall any man take them out of my hand.

29 My father which hath giuen them mee, is greater then all: and no man can take them out of my hand.

30 I and the father are one.

19 There was a diſſention. This was the fruite of Chriſte his Sermon, that he gathered vnto him ſelfe ſome diſciples: but becauſe his doctrine hath alſo many aduerſaries, there ariſeth thereupon a diſſention, ſo that they are diuided amongeſt them ſelues, who were before as it were one body of the Churche. For they did all with one conſent profeſſe, that they worſhipped the God of Abraham, and followed the lawe of Moſes.

Nowe ſo ſoone as Chriſte doth appeare, they beginne to diſagree becauſe of him. If that had beene a true profeſſion, Chriſte (who is the principall bond of charitie, & whoſe office it is to gather together thoſe things which are ſcattered abroade) ſhould not haue broken their agreement. But he did diſcouer the hypocriſie of manye by the light of his goſpell, who vnder a falſe colour did boaſt that they were the people of God. Euen ſo at this day the frowardneſſe of many, doeth cauſe the Church to be troubled with diſſention, and contentions to waxe whot. And yet thoſe which trouble the peace, doe lay the blame vpon vs, and call vs Schiſmatikes and contentious perſons. For the Papiſtes doe chiefly lay this crime to our charge, that our doctrine hath diſturbed the quiet eſtate of the Churche. But and if they would meekely ſubmitte themſelues vnto Chriſte, and yeeld vnto the truth, all motions ſhoulde ſhortly bee pacified. But ſeeing that they doe fret and fume againſte Chriſte, and will not ſuffer vs to bee quiet vppon any other condition, vnleſſe the truth of God bee extinguiſhed, and Chriſt be baniſhed from his kingdome, they doe vniuſtly burden vs with the crime of diſſention, which all men ſee is to be imputed vnto them.

It is to bee lamented truly that the Church is pulled in peeces with inward and ciuill diſcorde: but it is better that there bee ſome which ſeparate them ſelues from the wicked, then that all doe agree togeather in the contempt of God. Therefore wee muſt alwayes in diuiſions marke who thoſe bee which departe from GOD and his pure doctrine, 20 He hath a Diuell. They ſlaunder Chriſte with as odious a ſlaunder as they poſſiblie can, that all men may be afraid, and refuſe to heare him. For the wicked, doe furiouſly, and with ſhut eyes, breake out into the proude contempt of God, leaſt they be compelled to yeelde vnto him, yea they prouoke others vnto the like madneſſe, that no worde of Chriſt may be heard with ſilence. But the doctrine of Chriſt is well enough able, to defende it ſelfe againſt all ſlaunders. And this doe the faithfull meane by their anſweare, when as they ſay that theſe are not the words of one that hath a Diuell. For it is as much as if they ſhould require that iudgement might be giuen according to the thing it ſelfe. For the troth (as the prouerbe is) doth ſufficiently defende it ſelfe. And this is the only ayde and ſtay of our faith, that the wicked ſhall neuer be able to bring to paſſe, but that the power and wiſdome of God ſhal ſhine in the goſpel.

22 And it was at Ieruſalem the feaſt of the dedication. As if he ſhold ſay, innouations: becauſe the temple which was polluted, was conſecrated againe by meanes of Iudas Machabeus: and then was it ordeined, that there ſhoulde be a yeerely feaſt and famous day of the new dedication: that they might, remember the grace of God, which made an end of Antiochus his tyrannie. And Chriſt appeared then according to his cuſtom in the Temple, that his preaching might bring foorth greater ſtore of fruite in a great aſſemblye of men. The Euangeliſt calleth Salomons porche the temple: not that it was the ſanctuarie, but onely an appurtenance of the temple. Neither doth he meane the olde porch which was ſometimes built by Salomō (which was quite pulled down by the Chaldeans) but that which peraduenture firſt the Iewes when they were returned from the captiuitie of Babylon, had called by that name, beeing built according to the patterne of that olde one, that it might haue the greater dignitie: and ſecondly Herode the builder of the new temple.

24 Therefore the Iewes did compaſſe him about. It is queſtionleſſe that they did ſubtillie ſet vpon Chriſt at leaſt thoſe ẏ were the principall authours of this counſell & purpoſe. For the cōmon people might without fraud

deſire, that Ieſus would make it openly knowen, that he was ſent of God to be a deliuerer: but ſome there were which did go about craftily and captiouſly to ſtirre vp this voice in the multitude, that he might either be murdred in the tumult, or els that the Romans might lay hands vpon him. VVhereas they complaine that they ſtand in doubt, they doe thereby pretend that they did ſo vehemently deſire the promiſed redemption, that the deſire of Chriſt doth continually trouble & moleſt their mindes. And this is the true affection of godlines, that that can no where els be found, which can ſatisfie our minds and truly pacifie them, ſaue only in Chriſt, as he himſelfe ſaith, Come vnto me, all yee that are weary and loaden, and I will refreſh you, and your ſoules ſhall find reſt, Mat. 11.28.

Therfore thoſe that come vnto Chriſt muſt be ſo prepared, as theſe men do feigne themſelues to bee. But they doe vndeſeruedly accuſe Chriſt, as if he had not hytherto eſtabliſhed their faith: for they themſelues were to blame that they had not attained vnto ſound and perfect knowledge of him. But this is a perpetuall thing amongſt the vnbeleeuers, that they had rather wauer to and fro, then be grounded in the certaine and ſure worde of GOD. So wee ſee at this day manye men, who ſeeing, they ſhut their eyes of their own accord, they do ſpread abroade the clowdes of their doubting, whereby they may darken the cleare light of the Goſpel. And alſo we ſee many light ſpirits, who flying through friuolous ſpeculations, do finde no certaine ſtation and reſting place during their whole life. VVhen as they deſire Chriſt to make himſelfe knowen openly or freely, and boldly, their meaning is that he do not inſinuate himſelfe any longer, ouerthwartly, and as it were by certaine long circumſtances. So that they accuſe his doctrine of obſcuritie, which was notwithſtanding plaine and ſtrill enough, vnleſſe it had fallen amongſt deaf men. This hiſtory teacheth vs that wee cannot eſcape the deceits and ſlaunders of the wicked, if wee be called to preach the Goſpel. VVherfore we muſt watch diligently, & not be moued herewithall as with ſome new matter, when the ſame ſhall befall vs, whiche befell our maſter.

25 I haue told you. The Lord doth not diſſemble that he is Chriſt, and yet notwithſtanding he doth not teach them as if they were apt to learne: bot doth rather caſt in their teeth their malice and wickedneſſe, wherin they were become obſtinate: becauſe they had profited nothing hitherto, being taught by the word and works of God. Therfore he blameth them for that, that they did not know him, as if he ſhould ſay, my doctrine is eaſie enough to be vnderſtood of it ſelfe: and you are in the fault, becauſe you do wickedly and maliciouſly reſiſt God. Hee doth afterward ſpeak of works, that he may proue that they are guilty of double ſtubbornnes. For beſides his doctrine, they had an euident teſtimonie in his myracles, vnleſſe they had been vnthankfull vnto God. Therfore he repeateth that twiſe, that they did not beleeue, that he may manifeſtly proue vnto them, that they are wilfully deafe, when they ſhoulde heare his doctrine, and blind, when they ſhold behold his works, which is a token of extreeme and deſperate wickednes. He ſaith that he hath done workes in the fathers name, becauſe this was the ende thereof, that he might make the power of God knowen by them: whereby it might be made manifeſt that he came from God.

26 Becauſe you are not of my sheep. He ſheweth an higher cauſe why they doe neither beleeue his myracles, nor doctrine: namely, becauſe they are reprobates. And we muſt note Chriſt his purpoſe. For becauſe they did boaſt that they were Gods Church, leaſt theyr vnbeliefe ſhould any whit diſcredite the Goſpell, he pronounceth that the gift of beleeuing is ſpeciall, and truly it is neceſſarie that men be knowen of God that men may know him, as ſaith Paule, Galat. 4. 9. Againe, it muſt needes be that thoſe whome God regardeth not, muſt alwaies continue turned away from him. If any man murmur and ſay, that the cauſe of vnbeliefe is in God, becauſe it is in his power alone to make ſheepe: I anſwere that he is free from all fault, ſeeing that men do only of voluntarie wickednesſe reiect grace, God doth purchaſe vnto himſelfe ſo muche credit as is ſufficient: but wilde beaſtes doe neuer waxe tame, vntill ſuche time as they be chaunged into ſheepe by the ſpirit of God. They that are ſuch ſhall in vaine aſſay to lay the blame of their fiercenesſe and wildeneſſe vpon God, which is proper to their nature. In ſumme, Chriſte giueth vs to vnderſtande, that it is no maruell if there bee but a fewe that obey his goſpell, becauſe they are cruell and vntamed beaſtes, whoſoeuer are not brought vnto the obedience of faith by the ſpirite of God. Wherefore it is an vnmeete and abſurd thing, that the authoritie of the goſpell ſhould depend vpon the faith of men: but rather let the faithfull conſider, that they are ſo much the more bound vnto God, becauſe whereas others do continue in blindnes, they are drawē vnto Chriſt by the illumination of the ſpirite. Moreouer, the miniſters of the goſpel haue in this place wherewith they may comfort themſelues, if their labour bee not profitable to all men.

27 My sheepe. He proueth by an argument drawen from contraries that they are not ſheepe, becauſe they obey not the Goſpell. For God doth call thoſe effectually whom he hath choſen: ſo that Chriſts ſheepe, are tryed by faith And truly this name sheepe is therfore giuen vnto the faithful: becauſe they ſubmit themſelues vnto God to be gouerned by the hand of the chiefe ſhepheard, and hauing laid away their former wildneſſe, they ſhew themſelues eaſie to be guided and obedient.

This alſo is no ſmall cōfort for godly teachers, that howſoeuer the greater part of the worlde doth not hearken vnto Chriſte, yet hath hee his ſheepe, whom he knoweth, and of whom he is knowen againe. Let them endeuour ſo much as in them lyeth to bring the whole world vnto Chriſte his ſheepfold: but when it falleth not out as they would wiſh, let them be content with this one thing, that thoſe ſhalbe gathered together by their diligence, who are ſheepe. The reſt I haue expounded before.

28 And they shall not perish for euer. This is an vncomparable fruit of faith, that Chriſt commaundeth vs to be ſure, certaine, & voyde of care, when as we are gathered into his ſheepfold by faith. But wee muſt alſo note vnto what proppe this certaintie leaneth: namely, becauſe hee wil be a faithfull keeper of our ſaluation: for he doth teſtifie that it is in his hand. And if ſobeit this be not yet ſufficient he ſaith that it kept is ſafe by the power of the father. An excellent place, whereby we are taught that the ſaluation of all the elect is no leſſe ſure, then the power of God is inuincible, uincible. Furthermore, Chriſte would not ſpeake this raſhlye and in vaine: but his meaning was to make vnto his a promiſe, which may remaine ſurely fixed in their mindes. Therefore we gather that this is Chriſt his drift in theſe wordes, that the faithfull and elect may be ſure of their ſaluation. VVe are compaſſed about with ſtrong enemies, and ſo great is our weakeneſſe, that we are not farre from death euery moment: yet becauſe he is greater (or mightier) then all, whiche keepeth that whiche is committed vnto him to keepe in our behalfe, there is no cauſe why we ſhould feare, as if our life were in daunger: we doe alſo gather heereby howe vaine the hope and confidence of the Papiſtes is which leaneth vnto freewill, vnto their owne power, and vnto the merites of workes. Chriſte doth teache thoſe that bee his farre otherwiſe, that they remember that they are in this worlde as in the middeſt of a wood amongeſt many robbers: and that beſides that they are vnweaponed, and alwaies as a pray, they do alſo acknowledge that they haue the matter of death ſhut vp in them: ſo that they doe walke in ſafetie, truſting vnto the keeping of God alone. Finally, our ſaluation is therfore certaine and ſure, becauſe it is in the hand of God, becauſe our faith is both weake, and we are too too readie and bent to fall. But God who hath taken vs into his hand, is ſtrong enough, ſo that hee is able to driue away all the engines of our enemies with the breath of his mouth alone. It is profitable for vs to looke vnto this, leaſt the feare of temptations doe diſcourage vs. For Chriſt did intende to ſhewe ſome meanes, howe the ſheepe mighte bee ſafelye conuerſaunt amongeſt wolues.

And no man can take them out of my fathers hande. The copulatiue is heere put in ſteed of the illatiue. For Chriſte gathereth out of the inuincible power of God, that the ſaluation of the godly is not ſubiect to the will of their enemies: becauſe then muſt God of neceſſitie be ouercome, who hath vs vnder the tuition of his hand.

30 I and my father are one. His intent was to preuent the ſcoffes of the wicked: for they might obiect that the power of God did nothing appertaine vnto him, ſo that he might promiſe vnto his Diſciples the ſure ayde thereof. Therefore hee doth teſtifie that hee and his father are ſo ioyned togeather, that hee and his ſheepe ſhall neuer want his ayde.

The old writers abuſed this place, that they myght proue that Chriſt was conſubſtantiall with the father. For Chriſt doth not diſpute concerning the vnitie of ſubſtance: but concerning the agreement whiche he hath with the father: namely, that whatſoeuer Chriſte doth it is confirmed by the power of the father.

31 Therfore the Iewes tooke vp ſtones againe to ſtone him.

32 Ieſus anſwered them, I haue ſhewed you many good workes from my father: for which of them doe yee ſtone mee?

33 The Iewes anſwered him, ſaying, We do not ſtone thee for thy good workes ſake, but for thy blaſphemie: and becauſe thou whereas thou art a man, doeſt make thy ſelfe a God.

34 Ieſus anſwered them, Is it not written in your lawe, I haue ſaide yee are Gods?

35 If hee called them Goddes, vnto whom the worde of GOD was ſpoken, and the ſcripture cannot bee broken:

36 Doe yee ſay that hee doth blaſpheme, whom the father hath ſanctified, and ſente vnto the worlde, becauſe I ſaid, I am the ſonne of God?

31 Therefore the Iewes tooke vp ſtones againe. As Godlines doth enflame him with the zeale of God in defending his glory whome the ſpirite of God doth gouerne: ſo vnbeliefe is the mother of fury: and the Diuell doth ſo pricke forward the wicked, that they deſire nothing but ſlaughter. This end and iſſue doth ſhew with what minde they asked Chriſt: for the open confeſſion, whereof they feigned themſelues to be deſirous doth by and by make them mad: and yet notwithſtanding it is not to be doubted but that when as they were thus violently carryed to oppres Chriſt, they did it vnder colour of iudgement: as if they did this according to the preſcript of the law, where GOD commaundeth that falſe prophetes be ſtoned Deut. 13,5.

32 Many good workes. Chriſt doth not onely in this place denie that there is any cauſe why they ſhould thus rage: but he doth accuſe them of vnthankfulneſſe, becauſe they did ſo vniuſtly recompence Gods benefites. He ſaith that hee had deſerued well at their handes, not for one worke or two only, but that he had been beneficiall vnto them in many thinges: Secondly, he proueth vnto them that they were not onely vnthankefull vnto him, but rather to God, when he calleth himſelfe the fathers miniſter, who hath brought his power to light, that it might bee knowen vnto them. For when he ſaith from the father, his meaning is, that God was the authour thereof. The ſumme is this, God his intent was to bee made knowen vnto you by mee, he hath beſtowed excellent benefites vpon you by my hand: trie mee as muche as you will, I haue done nothing amongeſt you, but that which is worthie of thankes and prayſe. Therefore it muſt needes bee that you will furiouſly perſecute in mee now, the giftes of God. And the interrogation is more forceable to pricke their conſciences withall, then if he had ſpoken ſimplie affirmatiuely.

33 Not for thy good workes ſake. Howſoeuer the wicked doe make open warre with God, yet will they neuer offend without an honeſt colour. Therefore when as they rage againſt the ſonne of God, beeing not yet content with this crueltie, they doe of their owne accord accuſe him, and make themſelues patrones and reuengers of Gods glory. Wherefore it is neceſſarie that a good conſcience bee vnto vs a braſen wall, whereby wee may be able to beate backe the reproches and ſlaunders, wherewith we are ſtrongly aſſaulted. For howſoeuer their wickedneſſe be brauely painted, and howſoeuer they ſlaunder vs and cauſe vs to be euill thought of for a time, if we feight in Gods cauſe, he wil not denie himſelfe, but will defende his truth. But becauſe the wicked doe neuer want cloakes and colours to burden the ſeruants of God, and there is alſo added thereunto moſt hard impudencie, ſo that when they are ouercome they ceaſe not to ſpeake euill: wee haue neede of meekeneſſe and patience to hold vs vp and vnderproppe vs vntyll the ende.

The

The ſcripture referreth this woorde blaſphemie which is generally taken amongeſt profane writers for euery rayling, vnto God, when any poynt of his Maieſtie is derogated and ſlaundered.

Becauſe thou whereas thou art a man. There be two ſorts of blaſphemies either when God is diſpoyled of his owne honour, or when any thing is forged vpon him which is vnmeete for, or contrarie to his nature. Therefore they hold and auouch that Chriſt doth both blaſpheme, and commit ſacrilledge, becauſe he being a mortall man doth vſurpe to himſelfe Gods honour. And this had been in deed a true definition, if Chriſt had been nothing els but man: they doe only offend in this, that they do not vouchſafe to behold his diuinitie which appeared in the myracles.

34 Is it not written. Hee refuteth the crime that was laide to his charge, not by denying that he was the ſonne of God: but by defending that this was well ſaid. Although he doth rather applie this his anſwere vnto the perſons, then throughly expound the matter it ſelfe. For hee thought it ſufficient for him at this preſent, to refute their wickedneſſe. Hee doeth rather by the way inſinuate, then plainely expreſſe in what ſenſe he calleth himſelfe the ſonne of God. And the argument which he vſeth is not taken from things that are equal, but from the greater to the leſſer. The ſcripture calleth them Goddes on whom the Lorde hath laid an honourable function: therfore he is farre more worthie of this title of honor whom God hath ſeparated, to excel all other men. Vpon which occaſion it followeth that they are wrong & malicious interpreters, which admit the former, and doe take an occaſion of offence in the latter. The teſtimonie which Chriſt citethis in the Pſa. 82. 6. Vvhere God chideth þ kings and iudges of the earth, who abuſe their gouernment and might tyrannouſly to their owne luſt, to oppreſſe the miſerable, and to commit all manner wickedneſſe. And he vpbraideth them, that beeing vnmindefull whence they had ſo great dignitie, they doe profane the name of God. Chriſt applieth this vnto this preſent matter, that they are called Gods, becauſe they are Gods miniſters to gouerne the worlde. In the like reſpect the ſcripture doth alſo call the Angels Gods, becauſe by the the glory of God ſhineth abroade in the worlde. Vvee muſt note this phraſe vnto whom the worde of God was ſpoken, for his meaning is, that they were appointed by the certaine commaundement of God. Vvhence we gather, that empyres and gouerments did not raſhly begin, neither yet through mans errour, but that they were appointed by the will of god: becauſe he will haue ciuill order kept amongſt men, and haue vs gouerned by authoritie & lawes. In which reſpect Paule ſaith, Ro. 13. 2. that they rebel againſt God whoſoeuer do reſiſt the power: becauſe ther is no power but of God. If any man obiect, that other callings are of God alſo, and that he alloweth them, and that yet notwithſtanding husbandme, and neatheardes, and coblers are not called Gods: I anſwere, that this is no generall thing, that all thoſe ſhoulde be called Gods, who are called vnto ſome certaine kinde of life: but Chriſt ſpeaketh of kinges, whome God hath extolled vnto an higher degree, that they may rule and excell. To be briefe, let vs know that Magiſtrates are called gods for this cauſe becauſe God hath committed vnto them the gouernment. Vnder this worde lawe, Chriſt doth camprehend all the doctrine, wherby GOD did gouerne the old Church. For becauſe the Prophetes were only interpreters interpreters of the lawe, the Psalmes are also worthilie accounted an addition or appurtenance of the lawe. That the scripture cannot be broken, importeth as much as that the doctrin of the scripture cannot be violate.

36 Whome the father hath sanctified. All the godly haue a certaine common sanctification: but Christ challengeth to himselfe in this place a farre more excellent thing: namely, that he alone was separated from all other, that in him the power of the spirite, and the maiestie of God might shew themselues: like as he said before (chap. 6. 27.) that he was sealed by the same father. And this is properly referred vnto Christ his person in as much as he was reuealed in the flesh. Therefore these two are ioyned togeather, that he was sanctified, and sent into the world. But we must also vnderstand to what ende and vpon what condition hee was sent: namely, that he might bring saluation from God, and that he myght in all respectes prooue and shewe himselfe to be the sonne of God.

You say that he doth blaspheme. The Arrians did in times past wrest this place, that they might proue that Christ was not God by nature, but that he had the diuinitie as it were at the will and pleasure of another. But this errour may easily be refuted: because Christ doth not in this place dispute, who he is in himselfe, but what hee ought to bee knowen to be by his myracles in mans flesh. For doubtles we can neuer comprehend his eternall diuinitie, vnlesse we embrace him, in as much as he was giuen by the father to bee a redeemer. Moreouer we must remember that whiche I touched before, that Christ doth not plainly and openly (as amongest his Disciples) testifie who hee is, but doeth rather stande vppon the refuting of the slaunder and cauill of his enemies.

37 If I doe not the works of my father, beleeue me not.

38 And if I doe them, although you beleeue not mee, beleeue the workes: that you may know and beleeue, that the father is in me, and I in him.

39 Therfore they sought againe to apprehend him: and hee escaped out of their hande.

40 And hee went againe beyond Iordan, into the place where Iohn did first baptise, & stayed there.

41 And many came vnto him and said, Iohn truly did no myracle: but what thinges soeuer Iohn said of him were true, 42 And many beleeued in him there.

37 If I doe not the workes. Least the Iewes shoulde obiect that he did in vaine make his boast of sanctification, and whatsoeuer did depende thereupon, he doth againe repeate these myracles, wherein hee had shewed a most manifest token of his diuinitie. And it is a kind of graunting: as if he should say, I will not haue you vpon any other condition bounde to beleeue mee, then if the thing it selfe appeare manifestly: you may freely reiect me, if God doe not openly testifie of me. Hee calleth those works the fathers, which were in deed diuine, wherein there appeared greater power, then that they coulde bee ascribed vnto man.

38 And if I doe the workes of my father. Hee sheweth that they were openly guiltie of wicked and sacrilegious contempt, because they giue no honour vnto the manifeſt workes of God. And there is a ſecond graunting, when he ſaith, although I ſuffer you to doubt of the doctrine, at leaſt it ſhall not be lawfull for you to denie that the workes which I haue ſhewed are of God. Therefore you doe openly reiect God and not man. And in that he ſetteth knowledge before faith, as if it were inferiour in order, he doth it for this cauſe, becauſe he had to doe with vnbeleeuing and froward men, who doe neuer yeeld vnto God, vnleſſe they be ouercome and enforced by experience. For the rebellious will knowe before they can beleeue. And yet notwithſtanding God doth ſo farre foorth beare with vs, that the knowledge of his workes may and doth prepare vs vnto faith. But the knowlege of God & of his hydden wiſdome, doth follow faith in order: becauſe the obedience of faith openeth vnto vs the gate of the kingdome of heauen.

The father is in mee. He repeateth the ſame thing which hee had ſaide before in other wordes, I and the father are one. This is the drift of al, that in his adminiſtration he differeth not from his father. The father, ſaith he, is in mee: that is, the diuine power doth ſhew it ſelfe in me. And I am in the father. That is: I doe nothing without his direction and authoritie, ſo that there is a mutuall coniunction betweene mee and the father. Neither doth he ſpeake in this place of the vnitie of the eſſence, but of the reuealing of the diuine power in Chriſtes perſon, whereby it did appeare that he was ſent of God.

39 Therefore they ſought to take him, VVithout doubt that they might pull him out of the temple to be ſtoned by and by: for doubtleſſe their furie was not aſſwaged with the wordes of Chriſt. In that he ſaith that hee eſcaped out of their handes, this could by no other meanes come to paſſe, ſaue only by the wonderfull power of God. VVhereby wee are taught that we are not laide open vnto the luſt of the wicked, whiche God doth reſtraine with his bridle ſo often as he thinketh good.

40 Hee went beyond Iordan. Chriſt went ouer Iordan, leaſt hee ſhould fight continually without any great fruite. Therefore he hath taught vs by his example, that we muſt vſe opportunitie. Concerning the place wherunto he departed, reade the 2. chap. ver. 28.

41 And many came vnto him. This concourſe doth ſhew that Chriſte ſought not the wilderneſſe, to the end he might foreſlowe his office, but that he might erect the ſanctuarie of God in the wildernes, ſeeing that Ieruſalem (which was his owne ſeate) had obſtinately refuſed him. And truly this was an horrible vengeance of God that ſeeing that the temple which was choſen of God was a denne of theeues, the Church of God was gathered together in a baſe place.

Iohn truly. They gather that Chriſte was more excellent then Iohn becauſe he wrought ſo many notably myracles, whereas Iohn did no myracle: not that we ought alwayes to iudge by myracles, but becauſe myracles being ioyned vnto doctrine are of no ſmall importance, as we haue ſometimes alreadie ſaide. Furthermore, this ſpeeche is vnperfect: for they compare Chriſte with Iohn, but they doe onely expreſſe the one member. Secondly, they take this for a thing which all men do graunt, that Iohn was a great prophet of God, and that he was endewed with the ſingular grace of the ſpirit, Therfore they reaſon fitly, that Chriſt was to be preferred before Iohn: becauſe this came to paſſe only only by the certaine prouidence of God, that Iohn who was otherwise the greateſt Prophete, ſhould yet notwithſtanding bee ſet foorth by no myracle: whereby it is proued, that there was reſpect had of Chriſte in that, that there might the more account bee made of him. And whatſoeuer thinges. It ſeemeth that they ſaid not thus, but that it is added by the Euangeliſt, that hee might teache vs that they were perſuaded by a double reaſon to beleeue in Chriſt: becauſe they did in deed ſee that the witneſſe which Iohn bare of him was true, & the myracles did purchaſe vnto him more dignitie.

1 AN d there was a certaine man ſick called Lazarus of Bethania the towne of Marie and Martha her ſiſter.

2 And it was Mary that anointed the Lord with eyntment, and wiped his feete with her hayre, whoſe brother Lazarus was ſicke.

3 Therefore his ſiſters ſente vnto him, ſaying, beholde, hee whome thou loueſt is ſicke.

4 And when Ieſus hard this, he ſaid, this ſicknes is not vnto death: but for the glory of God, that the ſonne of God may be glorified through it.

5 And Ieſus loued Martha and her ſiſter, and Lazarus.

6 Therefore after that hee heard that hee was ſicke, he abode then in the place where he was two dayes.

7 Then afterwarde he ſaide vnto his diſciples, Let vs goe into Iury againe.

8 His diſciples ſay vnto him, Maſter, the Iewes ſoughs euen now to kill thee, and doeſt thou goe thither againe?

9 Ieſus anſwered, are there not twelue houres of the day? If any man walke in the day time, he ſtumbleth not: becauſe hee ſeeth the light of this world.

10 But and if any man walke in the night, hee ſtumbleth, becauſe he hath no light.

1 And there was a certaine man ſicke. The Euangeliſt paſſeth ouer vnto another hiſtorie, which conteineth a moſt famous myracle. For beſides that Chriſt did ſhewe a ſinguler token of his diuine power in rayſing Lazarus from death, he hath alſo ſet before our eyes a liuely image of the reſurrection to come. And this was as it were the laſt act & concluſion: for the time of his death did now draw neere. It is no maruell therefore if he did eſpecially ſet foorth his glory in that worke, the remembrance whereof he would haue deeply imprinted in their minds, that it might be a certaine ſealing of all the former thinges. Chriſt had rayſed vp other that were dead, but nowe he ſheweth his power vpon a rotten and ſtinking carkaſſe. The circumſtances which ſerue in this myracle to ſet foorth the glory of God, ſhall bee noted in their place and order. In that he ſaith that Lazarus was of Bethania the towne of Mary & Martha, it is likely that this was expreſſed, becauſe Lazarus was not ſo famous amongeſt the faithfull as were his ſiſters. For theſe holy women were wont to lodge Chriſt, as it appeareth out of Luk. 10. 38.

The Monkes and ſuch bablers in time of Papiſtrie did too groſly erre, who made of Caſtellum (that is a little towne or ſtreete) a Caſtle. It proceedeth from like ignorance that they feigne that this Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, was that infamous and wicked woman, whereof Luke maketh mention. 7. 37. The annoynting was the cauſe of the errour: as if it did not manifeſtly appear that Chriſt was oftentimes annoynted, and that in diuers places. The ſinnefull woman of whom Luke maketh mention, annoynted Chriſt at Ieruſalem where ſhe liued. And Mary did the ſame thing at Bethania afterward in her ſtreete. And the pretenſe which the Euangeliſt vſeth, annoynted, muſt not be referred vnto the time of the thing done, which we haue now in hande, but vnto the time when the Euangeliſt did write, as if he ſhould ſay this is Mary which she did afterwarde powre out the oyntment, which cauſed the murmuring amongſt the diſciples.

2 Beholde, hee whome thou loueſt is ſick. A ſhort meſſage, but yet ſuch that Chriſt might gather out of the ſame what the two ſiſters meant, for vnder this cõplaint they do modeſtly inſinuate their praiers. that he would helpe them. For we are forbidden to vſe a long forme of prayer: yet the ſumme is this, that we muſt caſt our cares, and what miſeries ſoeuer doe vexe vs into God his boſome, that he may ſend remedie for them. So doe theſe women deale with Chriſt. They doe familiarly lay before him their griefe, and doe hope to be releaſed thereof. We muſt alſo note that they conceiue hope to obtaine helpe, by the loue of Chriſte. And this is a continuall rule of praying aright: for where the loue of God is, there is certaine and preſent health: becauſe he loueth not, and forſaketh.

4 And when Ieſus heard this. His meaning was by this anſwere to deliuer his Diſciples from care. leaſt they ſhoulde be greeued, becauſe they ſawe him ſo careleſſe in his friend his daunger. Therefore leaſt they ſhoulde be in the meane ſeaſon carefull, hee ſaith that the ſickneſſe is not vnto death: but he rather promiſeth that it ſhalbe vnto him a new matter of glory. Furthermore, although Lazarus were dead, yet becauſe Chriſte reſtoreth him ſhortly after vnto life, reſpecting this end, he ſaith that the ſickneſſe is not vnto death. The other member, for the glory of God, is not ſo ſet againſt it, as if this were a perpetuall argument. For wee know that euen whileſt the wicked do periſh, the glory of God doeth no leſſe manifeſtly appeare in their deſtruction, then in the ſaluation of the godly. But Chriſt dyd properly in this place ſpeake of the glory of god which was ioyned with his office.

Furthermore, there appeared no fearefull power of God in the myracles of Chriſte, but that which was ſweete and bountifull. Therefore ſeeing that he affirmeth that there is no perill of death, when hee will ſhew foorth his glory and the glorie of his father, wee muſt conſider wherefore, and to what end he was ſent of his father: namely, that hee may ſaue, & not deſtroy. Furthermore, this ſpeech is of great importance, for the glory of God, that the ſonne of God may be glorified. For we doe gather thereby, that God will bee ſo knowen in the perſon of his ſonne, that what honour ſoeuer he requireth to be giuen vnto him, may be giuen vnto his ſonne.

Therefore we had before chap. 5. 23. He that honoureth not the ſonne, doth doth not honour the father. VVherefore the Turkes and Iewes doe in vaine pretend that they worſhip God, ſeeing that they rayle vppon Chriſt and are enuiouſly bent againſt him: yea by this meanes they endeuour to pull away God from himſelfe.

5 And Ieſus loued Martha. Theſe things ſeeme at the firſt bluſh to bee contrary, that Chriſt tarryeth two dayes beyonde Iordan, as not regarding Lazarus his life, and is yet ſaid to loue him and his ſiſters. For ſeeing that loue cauſeth carefulneſſe, he ought to haue runne vnto him. Furthermore, ſeeing that Chriſt is the only glaſſe of Gods fauour, wee are taught by this his delay, that we muſt not eſteeme the loue of God by the preſent eſtate of thinges. Hee doth oftentimes deferre his aide when he is requeſted, either that he may the more ſharpen the feruentneſſe of praying, or that he may exerciſe our pacience, and may alſo accuſtome vs to obey. Therfore let the faithfull ſo craue Gods helpe, that they doe alſo learne to ſuſpend their petitions, if at any time hee ſtretche foorth his hande more ſlowly to helpe them, then neceſsitie ſeemeth to requyre. For howſoeuer he linger, yet doth hee neuer ſleepe, nor forget thoſe that bee his. In the meane ſeaſon let vs be certainly perſuaded that he will haue all thoſe whom he loueth to be ſaued.

7 Then afterward he ſaith. He doth now at length declare that he cared for Lazarus, whan as the Diſciples thought hee had forgotten him, or at leaſt that he preferred other thinges before the life of Lazarus. Therefore he exhorteth them that paſsing ouer Iordan, they goe into Iurie.

8 Maſter, euen now the Iewes ſought. VVheras the diſciples terrifie Chriſt, they doe it peraduenture not ſo much for his ſake as in reſpect of themſelues, becauſe euery one is afraid of himſelfe: like as the daunger was common to them all. Therefore ſeeing that they withdraw themſelues from the croſſe, and are aſhamed to confeſſe ſo much: they pretend that they are carefull for their maſter, which hath a fairer ſhew. The ſame thing befalleth manie dayly: for they which foreſlowe their duetie for feare of the croſſe, gather to themſelues many cloakes and colours here and there to couer their ſoftneſſe withall, leaſt they ſeeme to defraude God of his due obedience without iuſt cauſe.

9 Are there not twelue. This place hath been diuerſly expounded. In that ſome haue thought that we are taught by theſe wordes, that the mindes of men are mutable, ſo that they take ſometimes new and other counſell euery houre, it is too farre from Chriſt his meaning: neither had I vouchſafed to recite it, vnleſſe it had been a common prouerbe. Therfore let vs be content with the naturall and plaine meaning. Firſt of all, Chriſt boroweth a ſimilitude frō ỳ night & day. For if any mā iourney in the darke, it is no maruell if he ſtumble oftentimes, or goe aſtray, or fall: But the light of the Sunne ſheweth in the day time, the way, that ther may be no danger. And the calling of god is like vnto the day light, which ſuffereth vs not to wāder or ſtumble. Therefore whoſoeuer doth obey the worde of God, and taketh nothing in hand without his commaundement, he hath him alſo from heauen to be his guide and directer, and vpon this hope he may ſafely take his way without feare: for (as it is in the Pſalm. 9. 11.) whoſoeuer walketh in his wayes, hee hath his Angels to keepe him, and by their guiding is hee defended, leaſt hee daſh his foote againſt a ſtone. Therefore Chriſt truſting to this aide, goeth forwarde couragiouſly into Iurie, not fearyng ſtonyng: becauſe wee are in no daunger of going aſtray, where GOD, doing the dutie of ꝑ ſun giueth vs light, & doth gouerne our courſe. VVe are taught by theſe wordes, that ſo often as man doeth ſubmit himſelfe vnto his owne counſels without the calling of God, his whole life is nothing els but a wandering and erronious courſe: and that thoſe which ſeeme to themſelues to be moſt wiſe, when as they aske not the mouth of God, and haue not his ſpirite to be the gouernour of their actions, are blinde and goe grabbing in darknes: & that this is the only right way, if being well aſſured of the calling of God, we haue God alwayes to go before vs. The certaine hope of proſperous ſucceſſe, doth enſue this rule of framing the life: becauſe it cannot bee but that God doeth gouerne happily. And we haue more then neede of this knowledge, for the faithfull can ſcarſe ſet one foote forward to follow him, but Satan doth lay a thouſand ſtumbling blockes in their way, hee ſheweth them diuers daungers on euery ſide, and endeuoureth by all meanes to ſtop the way before them. But whenas the Lorde doth bid vs goe forward, hauing as it were lighted his light, we muſt goe forwarde couragiouſly, although many deathes doe ſtop the way, becauſe he doth neuer bid vs goe forwarde, but he doth therewithall encourage vs by adding a promiſe, ſo that we may certainly perſuade our ſelues, that that ſhal fal out well for vs, whatſoeuer we take in hande at his commandement. This is our charriot, whereinto whoſoeuer ſhall climbe, he ſhall neuer faynte for wearineſſe: yea if the lets be harder then that we can be carryed through them in a chariot, yet being furniſhed with theſe winges, wee ſhall alwayes find a way to get out, vntill we come to the marke: not becauſe no aduerſitie doeth befall the faithfull: but becauſe aduerſitie helpeth them forward vnto ſaluation. The ſumme is this, that the eies of God ſhalbe alwaies ouer thoſe to keepe them, who ſhall be obedient and readie to marke his becke.

Againe, we doe gather heereby that ſo often as men neglecting and deſpicing the worde of God doe raſhly flatter themſelues, and take in hand whatſoeuer pleaſeth them, all the courſe of their life is accurſed of the Lorde, and there is vengeance alwayes prepared for their boldneſſe and blinde luſt. And here Chriſt diuideth the day into twelue houres according to the olde cuſtome. For although the dayes doe differ in Sommer and VVinter, yet they had alwayes twelue houres in the daye, and twelue in the night.

11 Hee ſpake theſe thinges, and after this he ſaith vnto them, our friende Lazarus ſleepeth: but I goe to awake him.

12 Therfore his diſciples ſaid, Lord, if he ſleepe he ſhalbe ſafe.

13 Howbeit Ieſus ſpake of his death: but they thought that hee ſpake of naturall ſleepe.

14 Therefore Ieſus ſaid then plainely vnto them, Lazarus is dead.

15 And I am glad for your ſakes, that I was not there, that you may beleeue. But let vs goe vnto him.

16 Then Thomas that was ſurnamed Didimus, ſaid vnto his felow diſciples, let vs go alſo that we may die with him.

17 Therefore

17 Therefore Ieſus came, and founde that hee had lyen in the graue foure daies alreadie.

11 Our friend ſleepeth? Becauſe hee ſaid before that the ſickneſſe was not vnto death, leaſt the diſciples ſhould bee too much troubled with a thing vnlooked for, he doth now alſo declare that he was dead, and putteth them in hope of his reſurrection. And their rudeneſſe is wonderfull, that they vnderſtand the ſaying of Chriſt of ſleepe. For although it be a metaphoricall kinde of ſpeech, yet is it ſo often vſed, and ſo common in the ſcriptures, that it ought to haue bin wel knowen vnto al the Iewes.

12 If he ſleepe, he is ſafe. VVhen as they ſay that ſleepe will be wholeſom for Lazarus, they do by this means by the way exhort Chriſt not to goe thyther. And yet doe they not craftily wreſt the wordes of Chriſte vnto their owne commoditie: but becauſe they thought hee ſpake of ſleepe, they doe willingly catch at that occaſion to eſcape daunger. Auguſtine and many after him, do cunningly play the Philoſophers in this worde ſleepeth: namely, that it is applyed vnto death for this cauſe, becauſe it is as eaſie a matter for God to rayſe the dead to life, as it is for vs to awake thoſe that ſleep. But we may gather out of the continual vſe of the ſcripture, that Chriſt thought no ſuch thing: yea ſeeing that this ſelfe ſame tranſlation is common alſo amongeſt the profane writers, it is without all doubt, that it came into vſe by no other means ſaue only becauſe the dead carkas lyeth without any ſenſe or feaſing, euen as the body of man when he ſleepeth. For which cauſe ſleepe is not vnfitly tearmed the image of death, & in Homer it is called the brother of death. Furthermore, whereas by this worde, the ſleeping of the bodies onely is ſignified, certaine mad felowes do moſt fooliſhly wreſt it vnto the ſoules as if being depriued of vnderſtanding they were in daunger of death. Furthermore, Chriſte ſetteth foorth his power in this, becauſe he ſaith he will come that he may awake Lazarus. For although the eaſineſſe of the reſurrection is not expreſſed by this woorde ſleepe, yet Chriſte ſheweth that he is the Lord ouer death, when as he ſaith that he awaketh thoſe whom he reſtoreth to life.

Therfore Ieſus ſaid thē plainely vnto them. This was the moſt ſinguler goodneſſe of Chriſt, that he could ſuffer ſo great groſſeneſſe in his Diſciples. And truely he deferred to endow them with greater grace of the ſpirit, for a ſeaſon, that being renued in a moment, the myracle might bee the greater. VVhen he ſaith, And I am glad for your ſakes, his meaning is that his abſence was profitable for them, becauſe his power ſhould haue byn more obſcure, if he had holpen Lazarus by and by. For the nigher the workes of God doe drawe vnto the ordinarie courſe of nature, the more baſe doe they waxe, and the glory thereof doth the leſſe appeare: which thing we doe dayly trie. For if hee reache foorth his hande by and by we do not lay holde vpon his helpe. Therefore to the ende the Diſciples might acknowledge, that the reſurrection of Lazarus was indeed a work of God, it was requiſite that it ſhould be deferred, that he might be moſt farre from all remedie that could come by meanes of man.

And we muſt remember that which I ſaide before, that the fatherly ſufferance of god is here repreſented in þ perſon of Chriſt. Therfore when as God doth ſuffer vs being ouerwhelmed, with griefs long time to languiſh, let vs know that hee doeth by this meanes prouide for our ſafetie. VVe truly doe grone being carefull and ſorrowfull: but the Lorde reioyceth in our welfare: and there appeareth in this poynt double gentleneſſe of his, that he doth not only pardon our faults, but doth ioyfully find meanes to redreſſe the ſame.

That you may beleeue. He doth not meane that this was the firſt beginning of faith in them, but a confirmation of the faith which was already begun, for as much as it was very ſmall and weake. Neuertheleſſe he telleth them that they would not haue beleeued, vnleſſe the hande of God had been openly ſhewed.

16 Then Thomas. Hitherto the diſciples endeuoured to pull backe Chriſte. Now is Thomas readie to follow: but without any confidence: he doth only arme himſelfe with Chriſt his promiſe, that he may follow him ioyfully and quietly. For theſe are wordes of diſtruſt, Let vs goe that we may dye, whereas it became them to be ſure of life. Furthermore, the relatiue (him) may bee expounded as well of Lazarus as of Chriſt: but and if you expound it to be ſpoken of Lazarus, it is a taunt: as if he had ſaide, what good ſhall we doe by comming thither? Vnleſſe peraduenture we cannot otherwiſe doe the dutie of friendes, vnleſſe we die together with him. Yet doe I rather allow the other ſenſe that Thomas doth not refuſe to die with Chriſt. But this (as I haue ſaid) floweth from a raſh zeale: becauſe he ſhould rather haue been encouraged by the faith of the promiſe.

18 And Bethania was nigh to Ieruſalem, almoſt fifteene furlongs.

19 And many of the Iewes came vnto Martha and Mary, that they might comforte them for their brother.

20 Therfore when as Martha had hearde that Ieſus did come, ſhe came to meet him: and Mary ſate at home.

21 Therefore Martha ſaide vnto Ieſus, Lord, if thou hadſt been heere, my brother had not been dead.

22 But nowe I knowe alſo, that what ſoeuer thou ſhalt deſire of God, God will giue it thee.

23 Ieſus ſaith vnto her, thy brother ſhall ryſe againe.

24 Martha ſaith vnto him, I know that he ſhall riſe againe in the reſurrection in the laſt day.

25 Ieſus ſaith vnto her, I am the reſurrection and the life: he that beleeueth in me, though he were dead, yet ſhall he liue, 26 And euery one that liueth and beleeueth in mee, ſhall neuer die. Doeſt thou beleeue this?

27 Shee ſaith vnto him, truly Lord I beleeue, that thou art Chriſt the ſonne of God, which ſhoulde come into the worlde.

28 And Bethanie was. The Euangeliſt doth diligently proſecute thoſe thinges which ſerue vnto the certaintie of the hiſtorie. He ſheweth how nigh Ieruſalem was vnto the towne of Bethanie, leaſt any ſhoulde maruell, that many of their friendes came thence to comfort the ſiſters, whō God would haue so beare witneſſe of the myracle. For although they were moued with the dutie of curteſie,yet were they gathered together by the ſecrete counſell of God,to ſome other ende,leaſt the reſurrection of Lazarus ſhould be obſcure,or ſhoulde haue thoſe onely to beare witneſſe thereof,who were of his owne family. And here is proued the malicious vnthankfulneſſe of the nation, that this ſo manifeſt a token of Gods power being ſhewed in a famous place,in a great aſſemblie of people,and euen almoſt at the gates of the Citie (as vpon a ſtage) doth ſtraightway vaniſh out of their ſight. Yea the Iewes ſhutting their eyes maliciouſly,did of ſet purpoſe not ſee that which was before their eies. And truly this is no new or ſtrange thing,that men who doe alwayes too greedily gape after myracles,are altogether dull and blockiſh at the conſideration thereof. The diſtance of place which is here noted, was not two miles. For a furlong containeth ſixe hundred foote, that is an hundred and ſiue and twentie paſes.

were

19 That they might comfort them. This was the thing for which they came,but God had reſpect vnto another thing,as I haue alreadie ſaide. Furthermore,it appeareth that the houſe of Lazarus and of his ſiſters was full of dignitie,and honourably reuerenced. And becauſe it is a naturall thing that the death of friendes ſhould bring vnto men ſorrow & heauines, this dutie whereof the Euangeliſt maketh mention is not to be diſalowed: ſaue only that the corrupt exceſſe whiche reigneth as in other parts of the life,ſo in this,doth corrupt a thing which is of it ſelf not to be diſcommended.

20 Therfore when Martha had heard. Martha went out of the Towne, as wee ſhall afterward ſee,peraducenture not only for reuerence ſake: but that ſhe might receiue him more priuily: becauſe the daunger was freſhe in memorie, and the rage of the enemies was as yet ſcarſe wel appeaſed,which being ſomewhat pacified by the departure of Chriſt into Galilee,might breake out a freſh ſo ſoone as it was heard that hee was returned.

21 Lord,if thou hadſt been heere. She beginneth with a complaint: although ſhee doeth by this meanes modeſtly ſignifie vnto him what ſhee wold. For it is as much as if ſhe ſhold ſay,Thou couldeſt by thy preſence haue deliuered my brother from death, yea thou canſt euen now do it: becauſe God will denie thee nothing. And by ſpeaking thus,ſhe doth rather fauour her affection,then keepe her ſelfe vnder the rule of faith. I confeſſe indeede that theſe wordes did partly proceede from faith: but I ſay,that ther were certaine diſordered affectiõs mixed with thẽ,which carryed her beyond her boundes. For whence had ſhe this hope that her brother ſhould not haue died if Chriſt had been preſent? Truly it was not conceiued of any promiſe of Chriſte, therefore it remaineth that ſhe doth rather obey her owne deſires,then ſubmit her ſelfe vnto Chriſt. It is a poynt of faith that ſhee aſcribeth vnto Chriſte power and moſt ſinguler goodneſſe: but in that ſhe promiſeth herſelf more then ſhe had heard of Chriſt,that agreeth not with faith. For we muſt alwayes hold the mutuall conſent betweene the worde and faith,leaſt man doe forge vnto himſelfe any thing raſhly beſides the worde of God. Moreouer, Martha did ſticke too much in the corporal preſence of Chriſt. Therefore the faith of Martha being mixed with,and intangled with immoderate deſires,and not altogether voide of ſuperſtition,could not ſhine out with perfect brightneſſe: ſo that there do only certaine ſparkles appeare in theſe wordes.

23 Thy brother ſhall riſe againe. This is wonderfull gentleneſſe of Chriſte, in that pardoning vnto Martha thoſe faultes whereof we haue ſpoken, he promiſeth vnto her more of his owne accord, then ſhe durſt preciſely and openly aske.

24 I know that he ſhall riſe againe. Now appeareth the too too greate fearfulneſſe of Martha, in that ſhee doth extenuate the ſaying of Chriſt. VVe ſaid euen now that ſhe went farther then was meete, when ſhee feined vnto her ſelfe, an hope after her owne imagination: now ſhee falleth into the contrarie vice, in that ſhee ſtood as it were trembling, when as Chriſte reached out his hande. VVherefore wee muſt take heed of both theſe thinges, that we take not vnto our ſelues friuolous hope heere and there as winde, being deſtitute of the worde of god, and againe that the Lord doe not finde our heartes eyther ſhut, or els too ſtraitly reſtrained when he openeth his mouth. But Martha meante to gather out of this anſwere ſome other thing, then ſhe durſt hope for out of the wordes of Chriſte: as if ſhe ſhould ſay, if thou meane the laſt reſurrection I doe not doubt but that my brother ſhall riſe againe in the laſt day, and with this hope doe I comfort my ſelfe: but I cannot tell whether it hath any farther meaning or no.

25 I am the reſurrection and the life. Chriſte doth firſt of al affirme that he is the reſurrection and life: that done, he doeth ſeuerally expounde both the members of that ſentence. In the former place he calleth him ſelfe the reſurrection: becauſe the reſtoring from death to life is former in order, then is the ſtate of life. But all mankinde is drowned in death. Therefore no man ſhall bee made partaker of life ſauc hee that ſhall firſt riſe from death. So that Chriſt doth teache that hee is the beginning of life, and he addeth afterwarde that the perpetuitie & continuaunce of life is a worke of his grace.

Furthermore the expoſitiō which foloweth immediatly doth manifeſtly declare that he ſpeaketh of the ſpirituall life: He that beleeueth in me although hee ſhall bee dead yet ſhall hee liue. VVhy, is Chriſt then the reſurrection? Becauſe he doth regenerate by his ſpirite the children of Adam, who were eſtranged frō God through ſin, that they may begin to lead a new life. VVhich thing I haue handeled more largely before in the Chap. 5.21. and 24. ver. And Paule vnto the Epheſians is the beſt interpreter of this place, Epheſians 2.5. and 5,8. Let them now bee packing who babble that men are prepared by the motion of nature to receyue the grace of God. It is as much as if they ſhoulde ſay that dead men doe walke. For in that men doe liue and breath, are endowed with ſenſe, vnderſtanding, and will, all that tendeth to deſtruction: becauſe there is no part or facultie of the ſoule, which is not corrupt, and turned away from that which is right. VVhereby it commeth to paſſe þ death reigneth euery where. For the eſtranging from God is the death of the ſoule. Therefore thoſe which beleeue in Chriſt, whereas they were before dead, they do begin to liue: becauſe faith is the ſpirituall reſurrection of the ſoule, & doth after a ſort quicken the ſoule it ſelf, that it may liue vnto God, according to that which is ſaid before. chap. 5.25. The dead ſhall heare the voyce of the ſonne of God: and they that ſhall heare shall liue. This is surely an excellent title and commendation of faith, that powring the life of Christe into vs, it deliuereth vs from death, 26 And euery one that liueth and beleeueth in mee. This is the expofition of the second member: namely, how Christ is the life: because he doth neuer suffer that life to fall away which he hath once gyuen, but preserueth it vnto the ende. For what should become of men in so greate frailtie of the flesshe, if hauing once obtained life they shoulde afterward be left vnto themselues? Therefore the continuall estate of the life must be grounded vpon the power of the selfe same Christ, that hee may finish that which he hath begunne. And the faithfull are saide neuer to dye, for this cause, because their soules being borne againe of the vncorruptible seed, haue the spirite of Christ abiding in them, whereby they are continully quickned. For although the body be subiect to death, because of sinne, yet that spirite is life for righteousnesse, Rom. 8.10. And in that the outwarde man is dayly corrupted in them, that is so farre from impayring theyr true life, that it euen helpeth forwarde the same: becausse the inwarde man is renewed from day to day, 2. Cor. 4.16. Yea death it selfe is in them a certaine setting free from the bondage of death.

Doest thou beleeue this? Christ seemeth at the firste sight to intreate of the spirituall life, for this cause, that hee may withdrawe the minde of Martha from her present desire. Martha did desire to haue her brother restored to life. Christ answereth that he is the authour of a better life: namely, because he quickneth the soules of the faithfull by his heauenly power. But I doe not doubt but that his meaning was to comprehende a double grace. Therefore he commendeth generally the spirituall life which he giueth vnto all those that be his, but he will giue some taste thereby of this power, which hee would afterward shewe in rayssing vp Lazarus.

27 Truly Lorde. To the end that Martha may proone that she did beleeue that which she had heard of Christ, that he is the resurrection & the life, she maketh answere, that she beleeueth that he is Christe and the sonne of God: so that indeed this knowledge comprehendeth in it selfe the summe of all good things. For we must alwayes mark to what end the Messias was promised, and what office the Prophetes doe attribure vnto him. And when as Martha confesseth that it was he that shoulde come, she confirmeth her faith with the prophesies of the Prophetes. VVhereupon it followeth that the full restoring of all thinges, and perfect felicitie is to behoped for at his hands, and finally that he was sent for this cause, that he may erect & set in order a true and absolute estate of the kingdome of God.

28 VVhen she had saide these thinges, she went and called her sister Mary secretly, saying, the master is present and calleth thee.

29 So soone as thee heard that, thee ryseth straightway, and commeth vnto him.

30 And Iesus was not yet come into the towne: but was in the place where Martha met him.

31 The Iewes therefore, which were with her at home, and did comfort her, seeing that Mary arose sodainely, and went out, they followed her, saying, shee goeth vnto the graue that shee may weepe there.

32 Therefore

32 Therefore after that Mary came where Ieſus was, when ſhee ſawe him, ſhee fell at his feete, ſaying vnto him, Lorde, if thou haddeſt beene heere, my brother had not beene dead.

33 Therefore ſo ſoone as Ieſus ſaw her weeping, and the Iewes whiche came with her, weeping: he groned in the ſpirite and troubled himſelfe.

34 And hee ſayde, where haue you laide him? They ſay vnto him, come and ſee.

35 Ieſus wept.

36 Therfore the Iewes ſaid, behold how he loued him.

37 And certaine of them ſaid, could not he which opened the eyes of one that was blinde, bring to paſſe that this man ſhould not die?

38 Then Ieſus groned againe in himſelfe, and came vnto the graue: and it was a caue, and a ſtone laid vpon it.

32 Called her ſiſter. It is likely that Chriſt ſtayed without the towne at the requeſt of Martha, leaſt he ſhould come into ſuch an aſſemblie of men. For ſhe feared daunger, becauſe Chriſt had but of late hardly eſcaped out of the middeſt of death. Therefore leaſt his comming ſhoulde be noyſed abroade any further, ſhe telleth her ſiſter priuilie. The maſter is preſent. This word maſter, doth ſhew what account theſe godly matrones did make of Chriſt, And although they had not profited ſo much as became them, yet was this a great matter, that they had wholy addicted themſelues to be his diſciples. And the ſodaine departure of Mary, that ſhe might come to meet him, doth not a little teſtifie how ſhe reuerenced him.

31 Therfore the Iewes that were with her. Although Chriſt ſuffereth Martha to returne home, that ſhe might draw aſide her ſiſter out of the companie, yet Chriſte did intend an other thing: namely, that he might haue the Iewes to ſee the myracle. They doe in no caſe thinke vpon this: but it was no new matter that men ſhould be brought thyther, as it were in darknes by the ſecret prouidence of God, whyther they went not. They thinke þ Mary goeth vnto the graue, as thoſe are wont to doe who ſeek to haue their ſorrow ſtirred vp. For this diſeaſe reigneth commonly euery where, that husbands being depriued of their wiues, and parents of their children, and again wiues of their husbandes, and children of their parents, or kinſfolkes, or friendes, doe increaſe ambitiouſly by all meanes poſsible their mourning: and it is a ſolemne thing to finde out diuers inuentions to this ende. So that indeede whereas the affections of men are alreadie inordinate, they prick them forward with newe prickes, to the ende they may the more vehemently and with greater force reſiſte God.

Furthermore, it was their dutie to pull backe Mary, leaſt by beholding the Sepulchre ſhe ſhould gather matter of mourning: but they dare not vſe ſo ſharpe a remedie: but euen they themſelues doe nouriſh the intemperancie of her grief, in that they beare her cõpanie. So that it falleth out oftentimes, that their conſolations are little worth, who beare with their friendes too much.

32 Shee fell downe at his feete. In that ſhe falleth downe at his feet, we doe thereby gather, that he was worſhipped in that houſe aboue the cõmon order and manner of men. For although they were wont to proſtrate themſelues before kinges and rulers: yet becauſe Chriſt had him

selfe no princely or loftie thing in himselfe according to the flesh, Mary falleth downe at his feete for another ende. Neither would she haue doone so, vnlesse shee had beene perswaded that hee was the sonne of God.

Lord if thou hadst been here. Although she seemeth to speake honourably of Christ, after a sort, yet we haue of late declared what corruption is in these wordes. For doubtlesse the power of Christ whiche did repleniſh heaue & earth, ought not to haue bin restrained vnto his corporall presence.

33 Hee groned in the spirite. Vnlesse Christ had sorrowed togeather with them, he woulde haue stood rather with a fierce countenance, but when as he conformeth himselfe vnto them, euen vnto weeping, he declareth his agreement with them. For the Euangelist seemeth in my iudgement to expresse the cause of such affection, when he saith that he saw Mary and the rest weep. Although I do not doubt but that he had respect vnto some higher matter: namely, vnto the common miserie of man. For he vnderstood what commaundement the father had giuen him, and wherefore he was sent into the worlde: namely that he might deliuer vs frō all euilles. Vs he did this in very deed, so his meaning was to declare that he did it with an earnest affection of the minde. Therefore whenas he was about to rayse vp Lazarus, before he did help & remedie him, he doth testifie by the deepe groning of the spirit, by the feeling of griefe and teares, that he is touched with our miseries in like sort as if he felt them in himself. But how doth groning & perturbation agree with the sonne of God? Because it seemeth to some an absurd thing if we say that Christ was subiect to humane passions as some one of the number of men, they thinke that hee sorrowed and reioyced no other wayes, saue only because he receiued into himselfe these affections so often as he thoght good, by a secret dispensation. Augustine thinketh that the Euangelist said for confirmation of this opinion, that Christe troubled himselfe, whereas other men are carried by their affections, which doe tyrannously rule them to trouble their mindes. Therefore he thinketh that the meaning of the wordes is this, that Christe who was otherwise quiet in minde and free from all manner passions did of his owne accorde grone and sorrowe. But in my iudgement, this plainenesse agreeth better with the scripture, if we say, that when the sonne of God did put vpō him our flesh he did also willingly take vpō him mans affections, that he might not differ from his brethren in any thing, sinne only excepted. By this meanes the glory of Christ is no whit impayred, seeing that his submission is said to haue been only voluntarie, wherby it came to passe that he was like vnto vs in the affections of the soule. And after that he submitted himselfe from the beginning, we must not thinke that he was voide and free from them: and in this hath he proued himselfe to bee our brother, that we may know that we haue a mediatour, that can easily pardon our infirmities, & is readie to help them, which he hath felt in himselfe. If any man obiect, that seeing that humane passions are corrupt, it is not likely that they are common to the sonne of God with vs: I answere, that there is a great distance betwene vs and Christ. For our affections are corrupt, for this cause, because they runne headlong intemperately, neither keepe they any meane: but in Christ they were voide of all corruption, becauſe they were framed to obey God. Yea the affections of men are corrupt and froward two manner of wayes. Firſt, becauſe they are carried with a troubleſome motion, neither are they ordered according to the true rule of modeſty. Secondly, becauſe they doe not alwayes arite from a lawfull cauſe, or at leaſt are not referred vnto a lawfull ende. I call it intemperancie, becauſe no man reioyceth and ſorroweth ſo much as is ſufficient, and as much as God doth permit: and alſo there be many which doe rather refuſe to be brideled.

Furthermore, the vanitie of our minde cauſeth vs to lament and bee ſorrowfull for things of no importance, or for no cauſe: becauſe we are too much addicted vnto the world. There was no ſuch thing in Christ: for there was no paſſion of his, which did goe beyond his meane, there was none but that which was iuſt, and taken from reaſon and right iudgement. To the ende this may the more plainely appeare, it ſhall be good and profitable to diſtinguiſh betweene the firſt nature of man, as it was created of God, and this degenerate nature which is corrupt through ſinne. When God dyd create man he gaue him affections, but thoſe which were dutifull and obedient vnto reaſon: and in that they are now diſordered and rebellious, it is an accidentall fault.

Nowe Chriſte did take vppon him humane affections, but without diſorder, whereby it commeth to paſſe that hee whiche obeyeth the paſſions of the fleſh, hee doth not obey GOD. Chriſte troubled himſelfe and he was vehemently moued: but yet ſo, that he contained him ſelfe within the bounds of his fathers will. To be briefe, if you conferre his paſſions with ours, they ſhall no leſſe differ, then faire and cleere water which runneth pleaſantly, doth differ from ſudly and muddy fomes. Furthermore, the ſole example of Chriſt ought to bee ſufficient for vs to teach vs to refuſe the ſtony hardnes of the Stoicks: for whence muſt we fet the rule of principall perfection, but from him? And we muſt rather ſtudie, hauing corrected, and tamed the ſtubbornneſſe, wherewith our affections are intangled by reaſon of Adam his ſinne, to follow Chriſte as a guide, that he may bring vs into order. So Paule, 1. Theſſ. 4. 13. doth not require at our hands ſtonie blockiſhnes, but he commaundeth vs to moderate our mourning, that wee be not ſwallowed vp of ſorrow as the vnbeleeuers, who haue no hope: for euen for this cauſe dyd Chriſte take vppon him our affections, that through his power we may ſubdue what corruption ſoeuer is in them.

36 Beholde how hee loued him. John deſcribeth in this place vnto vs a double iudgement of Chriſt. For the former ſort of men which ſaid, behold how he loued him, although they think not ſo honourablie as became them to doe, in that they attribute nothing vnto him, but that which was humane, yet doe they ſpeake more iuſtly and modeſtlye of him then the other, who doe maliciouſly backbite him, becauſe hee deliuered not Lazarus from death. For although they commend the power of Chriſt (whereof the other ſpake nothing) yet they doe not this without a certaine vpbraiding. It appeareth ſufficiently thereby, that they knewe of the miracles which Chriſt had wrought: but yet their vnthankefulneſſe is ſo much the more filthie, in that they are not afraide to murmur, becauſe he did nowe ceaſe off in one point. In like fort men haue alwayes been vnthankfull vnto God, and proceede so to be: vnlesse he graunt all our desires. wee doe by and by breake foorth into complaining. Seeing that he hath been alwayes wont to help me hitherto, why doth he now forsake and disapoint mee? And heere reigneth a double disease: first, because we doe rashly desire that which is not expedient, yet wil we make God subiect to the desires of our flesh: and secondly, because we are importunate beggers, and run headlong through the feruentnesse of our wilfulnesse and rashnesse before the time.

38 When Iesus therefore had groned againe. Because Christ commeth not vnto the Sepulchre as an idle beholder, but as a champion preparing himselfe vnto the combate, it is no maruell if he grone againe. For the violent tyrannie of death which he was to ouercome, was before his eyes. There be some which expound it, that this groning did proceede from indignation, because this vnbeliefe whereof we haue spoken, did offende him. But the other way seemeth vnto me more fit: namely, that he did rather behold the thing it selfe thē the men. There follow diuers other circumstances which doe more set foorth the power of Christe in rayssing Lazarus from death: namely, the space of foure dayes, that ỹ graue was couered with a stone, which Christ commandeth to be taken away in presence of them all.

39 Iesus saith vnto them, take away the stone, Martha the sister of him that was dead, saith vnto him, he stinketh by this: for he hath been dead foure dayes.

40 Iesus saith vnto her, said I not vnto thee, that if thou beleeue thou shalt see the glory of God?

41 Therefore they tooke away the stone, where he was laid, that was dead: and Iesus lifted vp his eyes, and said, Father, I thanke thee that thou hast hearde mee:

42 And I did knowe that thou hearest mee alwayes, but because of the companie which standeth about, I haue saide it, that they may beleeue that thou hast sente mee.

43 When he had spoken these wordes, hee cryed with a loude voyce, Lazarus come foorth.

44 And hee that was dead came foorth, bounde hande and foote with bandes, and his face was bounde with a napkyn. Iesus saith vnto them, loose hym, and let him goe.

39 Lord he stinketh by this. This is a signe of distrust, because shee is not so fully persuaded of the power of Christe as becommeth her. The roote of this euill is, because she measureth the infinite and incomprehensible power of Christ with the sense of her flesh. For because there is nothing which agreeth lesse with life then rottennesse and stinke, Martha gathereth that hee was alreadie past remedie. So that when as peruers cogitations doe possesse our mindes, God is after a sorte driuen away from vs, so that hee cannot fulfil and accomplish his worke in vs. Truly there wanted no will in Martha to haue her brother lie in the graue continually: because cutting of all hope of his life from her selfe, shee doeth also endeuour to stoppe the way before Christe and keepe hym backe from rayssing him vppe: and yet shee intended nothyng lesse.

This

This commeth to passe through the weaknesse of faith, that being drawen hyther and thyther, we fight with our selues, and whilest that reaching out the one hand we craue helpe of God, we put backe the same with the other whē it is offered vnto vs. Martha lied not, when she said, I know that whatsoeuer thou shalt desire of God hee will giue it thee: but a confused and intangled faith helpeth but a little, vnlesse when we are come vnto the matter it bee applyed vnto our vse. And in Martha may we see what manifold defects and wants there be in faith euen in the best. She came the first of all to meete Christe: this was no small testimonie of godlynesse: and yet doth she not cease to let him. Therfore to the end we may make way for the grace of God that it may come vnto vs, let vs learne to attribute farre greater power vnto him then our sences can comprehend. And if sobeit the first and only promise of God be not of sufficient force with vs, yet at least let vs stay our selues as did Martha, whē he confirmeth vs the second and third time.

40 Did not I say vnto thee. He reproueth the distrustfulnesse of Martha, because shee had not conceiued sufficient hope of the promise which she had heard. And it appeareth by this place that there was somewhat more saide to Martha, then Iohn doth set downe worde for worde: although (as I haue said) Christ meant thus much, when hee called him selfe the resurrection and the life. Therfore Martha is condemned, because she doth not wayt for some work of God.

If thou beleeue. This is said for this cause, not only becausse faith openeth our eyes, that we may see the glory of God shining in his woorkes: but becausse our faith maketh a way for the power and goodnes of god, that it may shew foorth it selfe towards vs, as is said, Psal. 81.11. Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it. Like as on the other side, vnbeliefe stoppeth the way before God, and doeth as it were keepe his handes fast shut: in which respect it is said in another place, Iesus coulde not shew any myracle there becausse of their vnbeliefe. Math. 13.58. Not that the power of God is tyed vnto the wil of men, but becausse so much as in them lyeth, they driue away the same with the let of their wickednesse, they are vnworthie that he should reueale himselfe vnto them. It commeth to passe oftentimes, that god doth ouercome such lets: yet notwithstanding so often as hee plucketh backe his hande from helpyng the vnbeleeuers, he doth it for this cause, becausse they doe not admitte and accept the same, beeing enuironed with the straytes of vnbeliefe.

Thou shalt see the glory of God. Note that the myracle is called the glorye of God wherein whilest God sheweth foorth the power of his hande, he glorifieth his name. Martha being at length content with this second saying of Christ, doth suffer the stone to be remoued: she saw nothing as yet: but becausse she heareth that the sonne of God, did not in vaine commaund them to doe this, she doth willingly depend vpon his commandement alone.

41 And Iesus lifted vp his eyes. This was a token of a mind that was well framed to pray: for to the ende a man may rightly call vpon god, he must be ioyned with him, which cannot be vnlesse being lifted vp aboue the earth, hee ascend vp into the very heauens. This is not done with the eyes: seeing that hypocrites who are drowned in the deepe filth and dregges of their fleſh,ſeeme with their ſterne countenance to draw heauen vnto them: but the children of GOD muſt ſincerelie perfourme that which they doe feigne. Neither yet muſt he that lifteth vp his eyes toward heauen there include God in his cogitation, who is euery where,and filleth heauen an earth: but becauſe mens mindes can neuer eſcape from and acquit themſelues of thoſe groſſe inuentions, but that they mall ſurmiſe ſome baſe and earthly thing of God, ſaue onely when they be lifted vp aboue the worlde: the ſcripture calleth vs thyther,and teſtifieth that heauen is Gods ſeate. As touchiug the lifting vp of eyes, it is no continuall ceremonie, which lawfull prayer cannot want. For the publicane that prayeth with his countenance turned towarde the earth,doth neuertheleſſe pearce the heauens with his faith. Yet that is a profitable exercite, whereby men awake and ſtirre vp them ſelues to ſeeke God. Yea,the feruentneſſe of prayer doeth ſo affect and moue the body oftentimes,that beſides meditation it doth willingly follow the minde. Certainely it is without all doubt that when Chriſte lifted vp his eyes towards heauen, hee was carried thither with ſinguler vehemecie. Moreouer,as he was wholy with the father: ſo he would alſo bring others vnto him beſides himſelfe.

I thanke thee. He beginneth with thankes giuing, although he asked nothing: but although the Euangeliſt doth not declare that he prayed in plaine words,yet is it queſtionles that there went ſome petition before: for otherwiſe he could not be heard. And it is to bee thought that hee prayed in time of thoſe gronings whereof the Euangeliſt maketh mention: for there is nothing more vnlikely then that he raged inwardly in himſelfe,as men amazed are wont to doe. Hauing now obtained Lazarus his life he giueth thankes vnto the father. Furthermore, in that he acknowlegeth that he receiued this power from his father,in this hee confeſſeth that he is only his fathers miniſter: for as he applyeth hymſelfe vnto mans capacitie,ſometimes defending openly his diuinitie, he challendgeth to himſelfe whatſoeuer is proper to God: ſometimes being content to beare the perſon of a man,he graunteth all the glory of the diuinitie vnto the father. The Euangeliſt reconcileth both thinges together in one worde very well,when he ſaith,that Chriſte is heard of the father: and that he giueth thankes,that men may knowe that hee was ſent of the father: that is,that they may confeſſe that hee is the ſonne of God. For becauſe the Maieſtie of Chriſt could not be comprehended in his highneſſe,the power of God,which appeared in his fleſh, carryed vp the rude and dull ſenſes of men by degrees vnto that highneſſe. For ſeeing that he would be ours wholy, it is no maruell if hee apply himſelfe vnto vs diuers wayes: yea, it is no maruell if hee doe abaſe himſelfe for our ſakes, who ſuffered himſelfe to be humbled for vs,

42 I did know that thou didſt alwayes. This is a preuention, leaſt any man ſhould think that he was not ſo highly in the fathers fauour,that he could readily worke what myracles ſoeuer he would. Therefore hee giueth them to vnderſtand that there is ſuch agreement betweene hym and the father,that he denieth him nothing: yea that hee had no neede to make any prayer,ſeeing that he did only that which hee knewe his father had commanded him to do. But to the end it might the better be made knowen vnto men, that this was a worke of God, he called therfore vpon the fathers name. If any man obiect: VVhy did he not then rayse all the dead: we may easily answere, that there was a certaine meane appointed by the counsell of God for myracles, as muche as he knewe was sufficient to proue the Gospell, 43 Hee cryed with a loud voyce. In that he touched him not with his hand but did only call vpon him with his voyce, his diuine power did therein the better shew it selfe: and he doth therewithall set foorth vnto vs the hidden and wonderfull power and force of his worde. For howe doth Christ restore life to the dead saue only by the word? Therfore he shewed a visible token of the spiritual grace in rayling Lazarus, whiche we doe dayly trie by the fealing of faith, whileſt that he sheweth that his voyce doth quicken.

44 Bound with bandes. The Euangeliſt doth diligently reckon vp the kerchiffe, and bandes, to the ende wee may knowe that Lazarus came out of the graue in ſuch ſort, as he was laid there. The Iewes alſo retain this manner of burying at this day, that hauing wounde the bodie in a linnen cloath, they wrap the head apart in a kerchiffe. Looſe him. This thing remayned to amplifie the glory of the myracle, that the Iewes might alſo feele with their handes the worke of God, which with their eyes they had beholden. For Chriſt could haue made Lazarus ſhake off the bandes wherewith he was bounde, or haue cauſed them to fall away of their owne accord: but he did intende to haue the handes of thoſe that ſtood by him to bee his witneſſes. Thriſe ridicolous are the Papiſtes who gather auriculer confeſſion thence. Chriſte (ſay they) after that he had reſtored Lazarus to life, woulde haue his Diſciples to looſe him: therefore it is not ſufficient for vs to be reconciled to God vnleſſe the Church doe alſo forgiue our ſinnes. But whereby doe they coniecture that the diſciples were appointed to looſe Lazarus? Nay rather we gather that he commaunded the Iewes to doe this, to the ende he might take from them all occaſion of doubting.

45 Many therefore of the Iewes, which came vnto Mary, behelde what thinges Ieſus had done, and beleeued in him.

46 But ſome of them wente vnto the Phariſees, and tolde them what Ieſus had done.

47 Therfore the high Prieſtes and Phariſees gathered a councell, and ſaid, what doe wee? becauſe this man doth many myracles.

48 If we let him goe thus, all men ſhall beleeue in him: and the Romanes ſhall come and take away our place, and the nation.

49 And one of them called Caiphas, who was high Prieſt that yeere, ſaid vnto them, Yee know nothing:

50 Neither doe yee conſider, that it is expedient for vs, that one man die for the people, and that all the nation doe not perish.

51 And he ſaid not this of himſelfe: but for aſmuch as hee was chiefe Prieſt that yeere he propheſied, that Ieſus ſhoulde dye for the nation.

52 And not for the nation only, but that hee might gather togeather into one the children of God which were diſpearſed.

45 Many therefore. Chriſte did not ſuffer the myracle which hee wrought to bee vnfruitfull: becauſe by this meanes hee brought ſome vnto faith. For we muſt note that there is a double vſe of myracles: namely, that they may either prepare vs vnto faith, or confirme vs in the faith. The Euangeliſt toucheth the former in this place: for hee meaneth that thoſe of whom he ſpeaketh did maruell at, and reuerence the diuine power of Chriſte, ſo that they ſubmitted themſelues vnto him to be his diſciples: otherwiſe the bare myracle could not haue been ſufficient vnto faith. Therefore we muſt vnderſtand nothing els in this place by this worde believed, ſaue onely readineſſe to imbrace the doctrine of Chriſt. In the other which fortake Chriſte there appeareth deteſtable vnthankfulneſſe: or rather horrible madneſſe: wherby we gather how blinde and madde vngodlineſſe is. The reſurrection of Lazarus ought to haue ſoftened euen ſtonie heartes: but there is no worke of God, which vngodlineſſe doth not infect and marre with the bitternes of her poyſon. Therefore if men will profite by the myracles of God they muſt haue cleane heartes. For thoſe in whom there is no feare of God, although they ſee heauen and earth goe together, they will neuer ceaſe to refuſe ſounde doctrine. So you may ſee at this day, many enemies of the Goſpel, fight againſt the manifeſt and euident hand of god like mad men. Yet notwithſtanding they doe in the meane ſeaſon craue myracles at our handes: but to no other ende, ſaue this, that they may ſhewe themſelues to be monſters of men by reſiſting ſtubornely. And in that Chriſt is brought vnto the Phariſees, it is done for this conſideration, becauſe by reaſon of their hypocriſie they were more ſharpe ſet to reſiſt the Goſpel. In like ſort he doth afterward expreſſe thē by name, whenas he ſaith that there was a councell gathered together. They themſelues were a part of the prieſts: but the Euangeliſt nameth them ſpecially, becauſe they were as fannes to ſet on fire the fury of all the whole companie.

47 Therefore the high Prieſtes gathered togeather. There is no leſſe monſtrous blindneſſe deſcribed in this place in the prieſts. Vnleſſe they had beene more then dull and blockiſh, they ought to haue been touched at leaſt with ſome reuerence of Chriſte after ſo euident a token of his diuine power: nowe they meete togeather of ſet purpoſe to oppreſſe the glory of God (with the beholding whereof they become amazed). They doe not in plaine wordes make their boaſt, that they would make warre againſt God: but ſeeing that they cannot ſuppreſſe Chriſt, without the ſubuerſion of Gods power, they doe queſtionleſſe fight againſte this openly and without doubt with ſacrilegious boldnes. Infidelitie is alwayes proude and a contemner of God: but ſhe doth not ſtraightway breake out into this, that ſhe lifteth vp her hornes againſt God. But when as men haue long time wraſteled with God, this is ſtill the ende to endeuour like Giants to climbe vp aboue the heauens without anye feare of God. For they confeſſe that Chriſte wrought many myracles. And whence had hee ſo great power? Therefore they doe openly addreſſe thēſelues to ſuppreſſe the power of god which appeareth in ỹ myracles of Chriſt. In the mean while god is not ſlacke: But althogh he diſſembleth for a time, he laugheth at their fooliſh arrogancie, vntil ỹ time to foorth his wrath do come, as it is Pſal. 2. 12.

What doe wee? In theſe wordes they accuſe their ſlouthfulneſſe: as if they ſhoulde ſay that it came to paſſe through their delay, that Chriſte creepeth farther: becauſe they are able by behauing themſelues ſtoutly, to breake off his courſe. This is the boldneſſe of the wicked, whereby they challenge to themſelues all thinges: as if it were in their hande to doe whatſoeuer ſhould ſeeme good in their owne eyes: and as if the ſucceſſe of the worke were ſubiect to their deſires. And if a man doe well weigh all thinges, they doe in this place ſet their owne induſtrie againſt the power of God, as if they coulde exceede God through theyr diligence.

If wee let him goe, VVhat if they doe not let him goe? Certainly (as I haue ſaid euen now) they are fully perſuaded that it is in their will to ſtop the way before Chriſt, that he may goe no farther, ſo they be diligent to withſtand him. If Chriſt had bin ſom ſeducer, it had bin their dutie to haue medled in the matter, leaſt he ſhould lead away the ſheepe from the Lordes flocke: but in that they confeſſe his myracles, they doe ſufficiently declare, that they cared not for God, whoſe power they doe ſo carcleſly and hautily contemne.

The Romans shall come. They couer their wickednes with a fayre colour: namely, the deſire which they had to preſerue the common wealth: this was the feare which troubled them moſt, leaſt their tyranny ſhould fall to the ground: but they feigne that they are carefull for the Temple, and worſhip of God, for the name of the nation, for the eſtate of the people. And wherefore was this? For doubtleſſe they doe not ſeeme to vſe ſuch colours that they may deceiue: they preach not vnto the people: they conſult together apart and in ſecrete. Seeing that they are all guiltie of the ſame falſhood in their owne conſciences, why doe they not vtter their counſels and meanings? Becauſe how groſſe and euident ſoeuer vngodlineſſe is, yet it hath alwayes almoſt hypocriſie to accompanie it. It doth ſo inwrap it ſelfe in croked boughtes and lurking corners that it deceiueth vnder the ſhew of vertue. It was their chiefe drift to ſhowe ſome ſhape of grauitie, moderation, and wiſedome, that they might deceiue others: but it is to be thought that they were alſo deceiued with that vaine viſure for as much as they feigned that it was a iuſt occaſion to perſecute Chriſt. So hypocrites, although their conſcience doth inwardly accuſe them, yet doe they make themſelues drunken with vayne inuentions, that they may ſeeme innocent in ſinning: neuertheleſſe they are manifeſtly contrary to themſelues. For at the beginning theſe men did confeſſe that Chriſt wrought many myracles: nowe they are afraide of the Romanes: as if there were not helpe enough and more then enough in the power of God, which ſheweth it ſelfe to be preſent in theſe myracles.

The Romanes shall come, The Euangeliſt meaneth that this was the ſumme of their deliberation, to auoide the daunger which did hang ouer their head. If (ſay they) the Romanes ſhall vnderſtande that there is any thing renued in our ſtate publike, it is to bee feared leaſt they will ſende an armie, and deſtroy both our nation, the Temple, and the worſhip of GOD. But that is a peruerſe conſultation, whiche is had about the auoiding of thoſe daungers which we cannot eſcape, vnleſſe we wil turne aſide from the right courſe. VVe muſt firſt of all ſee what God commaundeth, and will haue to be done: what euent ſoeuer ſhall befall vs, that muſt continue ſure and certaine. But thoſe men thinke it beſt to make away with Chriſte, leaſt any diſcommoditie doe befall them, if they ſuffer him to goe forwarde as he had begun. But what and if he were ſent by God? VVill they reiect a Prophet of God, that they may redeeme peace with the Romans? Theſe are their counſels, who doe not feare God truly and from their heart, they paſſe not what bee lawfull and right, or what be vnlawfull and wrong: becauſe they depend only vpon chaunce. But this is the onely way to take godly & good counſell, for to ſeeke and ſee what doth pleaſe God: ſecondly, to follow that couragiouſly, whatſoeuer he preſcribeth, and not to bee diſcouraged with any feare, although wee bee compaſſed about with a thouſand deathes. For our actions are continually to be directed not according to euery blaſt of winde, but according to the wil of God alone. VVhoſoeuer doth boldly deſpice daungers, or at leaſt hauing ouercome the feare of them, doth ſimplie pleaſe god, he ſhal at length haue an happy ende. For God doth bleſſe contrary to all hope, the conſtancie which is grounded in the obedience of his worde: as for the wicked, their cautions do them ſo little good, that the more feareful they are, the more doe they entangle themſelues in ſnares. In this hiſtorie we haue ỹ forme and ſhape of our age moſt liuely depainted out vnto vs. Thoſe that deſire to be accounted prudent and circumſpect, they haue this ſong oftentimes in their mouth, that we muſt take care for the common tranquillitie. and that that innouation which we goe about is not free from many daungers, after that they haue burdened vs with this falſe enuie they can finde no better way, then by burying Chriſte, to preuent all tumults. As if they ſhould haue good ſucceſſe with ſuch wicked contempt of the grace of God, whileſt that they intuent this remedie to pacifie tumultes withall, that the doctrine of ſaluation may be aboliſhed. Nay rather that ſhall befall the wicked whereof they are afraide: notwithſtanding howſoeuer the wicked doe obtaine that which they hope for: yet this is an vnmeete rewarde to pacifie the worlde by offendyng God.

Our place. It is vncertaine whether they ſpeake of the Temple or of their Countrie. They thought their ſafetie did conſiſt in both. For when the temple was pulled downe, the ſacrifices, the ſolemne worſhippe of God, and the calling vpon his name, did ceaſe. Therefore if they had any care of religion, it became them to be carefull for the temple. And againe, this was very profitable for maintenaunce of the eſtate of the Church, not to be carried away out of their countrie againe. They did yet remember the captiuitie of Babylon, whiche was a moſt ſharpe vengeance of God. Againe, that was common amongeſt them as a prouerbe, which is oftentimes repeated in the law, that it was a kinde of caſting off, if the Lorde ſhould caſt them out of that land. Therefore they gather, that the Church cannot continue in ſafetie, vnleſſe Chriſt be deſtroyed.

49 One of them called Caiphas. This was a ſhort conſultation, becauſe Caiphas did not ſuffer them to ſtande in doubt long. Furthermore, hee aſſigneth one way to obtaine health, and ſafety that they ſlea an innocent? Behold into how great wickednes thoſe men breake out, who doe rather take counſell according to the ſenſe and reaſon of their fleſh without the feare of God, then according to the worde of God, and doe thinke that that will be profitable for them, which they cannot do without diſpleaſing the authour of all goodnes. For it is as much as if Caiphas ſhould ſay that they muſt prouoke the wrath of God, that thinges may goe well with them. VVherefore let vs learne neuer to ſeparate that which is profitable, from that which is lawfull: ſeeing that wee muſt hope for no good thing or ioyfull thing, ſaue only from the bleſſing of God, which is not promiſed vnto the wicked & rebellious, who ſeeke for helpe at the handes of the Diuell, but vnto the faithfull who walke plainely in the wayes of God. And yet this reaſon had ſome colour: becauſe the common commoditie ought alwayes to bee of more weight. But (as I ſaid euen now) the people is no more ſafe by the wicked death of an innocent, then the whole body of man, whileſt that the throate onely is cut, or the breaſt thruſt through with a ſwoord.

VVho was high Prieſt. Hee doth not call him high prieſt of that yeere, becauſe it was a yerely office only: but wheras it was ſold for money, it was giuen vnto diuers men, contrary to the preſcript of the law, God would not haue the honour ended vnleſſe the man did die: but when as thinges were all out of order, and turned topſie turuie, it came to paſſe that the Romanes did oftentimes chaunge the Prieſtes. Furthermore, the Euangeliſt ſaith that Caiphas ſpake not this of himſelfe, not that he ſpake that which he vnderſtood not, as a madde man, and one that is frenſie: (for he ſpake as he thought) but the Euangeliſt meaneth that there was a ſuperiour mouing of his tongue, becauſe God meant to ſhewe foorth by his mouth ſome greater matter then came into his minde. Therfore Caiphas was at that time as it were double tongued. For he vomited out that wicked & cruell counſell and purpoſe to put Chriſt to death, which he had conceiued in his minde: and God turned his tongue another way, that he might alſo vnder doubtfull words vtter a Propheſie. God would haue the heauenly oracle to proceede euen from the ſeate of the high prieſt, that the Iewes might be the more without excuſe. For although no mans conſcience of all that crue was touched, yet they perceiued afterward that their blockiſhnes deſerued no pardon. Neither yet did the wickedneſſe of Caiphas any whit hynder his tongue from beeing the inſtrument of the holy Ghoſte, becauſe God had rather reſpect vnto the Prieſthood which he himſelf had inſtituted, then vnto the mans perſon, and that was the reaſon, which I touched, that the voice comming from an high place, might be the better hearde, and might haue the more reuerence and weight. In like ſort did he bleſſe his people by the mouth of Balaam, whom he had endowed with the ſpirit of propheſie. But the Papiſtes are more then ridiculous, who doe thereby gather that that is to be accounted as an oracle, whatſoeuer itpleaſeth the biſhop of Rome to blunder out. Firſt of al, admit we graunt (which thing is in vaine) that he is alwayes a Prophet who is high prieſt, yet muſt they proue of neceſsitie, that the Biſhop of Rome is created by the commaundement of God. For the Prieſthoode of one man was aboliſhed by the comming of Chriſte, neither doe wee any where reade, that it was afterwarde ordeined, that any one man ſhould gouerne the Church. But admit we graunt them this ſecondly, that the title and honour of the high prieſt was tranſlated vnto the biſhop of Rome, we muſt marke what good this did the Prieſts, that they embraced Caiphas his propheſie. They conſpyre together to put Chriſt to death, that they may ſubſcribe vnto his iudgement. But let ſuch obedience be farre from vs, which may driue vs vnto horrible apoſtacie, by denying the ſonne of God. Caiphas doth with one voyce blaſpheme and alſo propheſie: thoſe which obey his ſaying doe contemne the propheſie and catch at the blaſphemie. VVe muſt take heed leaſt the ſame befall vs, if we giue eare vnto the Romane Caiphas, otherwiſe the ſimilitude ſhould be vnperfect.

Furthermore, I aske this queſtion, whether all the wordes of the high Prieſt be propheſies or no, becauſe Caiphas did once propheſie. But hee did afterward condemne the chiefeſt and principall poynt of our faith of blaſphemie: whence we gather, that that was extraordinarie whereof the Euangeliſt maketh mention now, & that it is prepoſterouſly take for an example.

51 That Ieſus ſhoulde die. The Euangeliſt doth firſt of all declare that the ſumme of our ſaluation conſiſteth in that, if Chriſt do gather vs together into one. For by this means he reconcileth vs vnto the father, in whoſe power the fountaine of life is. VVhence we doe alſo gather that mankinde is ſcattered abroade, and eſtraunged from God, vntill ſuch time as the children of God doe growe together vnder Chriſte their head. So that the communion of the ſaints is the preparation vnto eternall life: becauſe they abide all in death, whom Chriſt doth not gather vnto the father: as we ſhall ſee againe in the ſixteenth Chapter. Therefore is it that Paule Ephe. 1.10. teacheth that Chriſt was ſent, to the ende hee might gather together all things which are in heauen and earth. VVherfore if we will enioy the ſaluation which is brought vnto vs by Chriſt, we muſt remoue all diſſention and be at one with God, the Angels, and amongeſt our ſelues. The death of Chriſt was the cauſe of this vnitie and the pledge thereof, whereby he tooke all thinges vnto himſelfe: but yet we are gathered together dayly by the Goſpell into Chriſt his ſheepfolde.

52 And not for the nation only: The Euangeliſt his meaning is, that the reconciliation made by Chriſt is alſo extended vnto the Gentiles. But how are they called the children of God, whom the miſerable ſcatteryng abroade, wherein they wandered, did make the enemies of God? I anſwere (as I haue ſaide els where) that they were ſonnes and children in the breaſt of God, who were in themſelues wandering & loſt ſheepe yea nothing leſſe then ſheepe, but rather wolues and wild beaſts. Therfore he counteth them the children of God by their election, euen before they be called, becauſe they begin at length to be reuealed both vnto themſelues and vnto others by faith.

53 Therefore from that day they tooke counſell to put him to death.

54 Therefore Ieſus walked no more openly amongeſt the Iewes: but went thence into a region nigh vnto the deſart, into a citie called Ephraim: and aboade there with his diſciples.

55 And the Iewes Easter was at hande: and many of the countrie went vp to Ieruſalem, before Easter that they might purifie themſelues.

56 Therefore they ſought Ieſus and ſaid amongeſt themſelues, as they ſtoode in the Temple, what thinke yee, that he came not vnto the feaſt.

57 And the Prieſtes and Phariſees had giuen a commaundemente, that if any did knowe, where hee were, he ſhoulde tell it, that they might take him.

53 They tooke counſell to put him to death, The Euangeliſt ſaith that Chriſte fled againe, ſeeing that he knewe that his enemies did ſo furiouſly purſue him. Yet let vs remember that he did not ſo flie that hee myght withdrawe himſelfe from his fathers calling. For this was his only purpoſe to preſent himſelfe readie, to ſuffer death willinglye at the time which God had appointed. Furthermore, the counſell whereof the Euangeliſt maketh mention, was not ſo much concerning the death of Chriſte, as that they might finde ſome meanes howe to ſupreſſe him. This was alreadie decreed amongſt them, that he was to be made away: the other deliberation did onely remaine, how they might accompliſh, that which they had determined.

54 Which is called Ephraim. I thinke that the name of the citie which is heere ſet downe, was either corruptlie pronounced or els was ſome new name. For we know what great alteration was made in the tongue after the captiuitie of Babylon, and alſo howe much the faſhion of the lande was chaunged. When he ſpeaketh of the diſciples of Chriſt, hee meaneth not al thoſe which receiued his doctrine but thoſe which were continually with him, and were wont to liue together with him in the ſame houſe.

55 Many of the countrie went vp &c. before Easter, that they myght purifie themſelues. This was not flatly commaunded that they ſhould purifie themſelues before the offering of the Paſſeouer. Therefore the Euangeliſt ſaith not that they came all, but manie: It was not lawefull for any that was vncleane to eate: but I ſaye that they tooke vppe this ſanctifiyng of their own accord, and of ſome priuate affection, ſo that the other were not forbidden to eate, although they were not prepared by any ſuch rite, before the feaſt day. But the drift of the Euangeliſt is, to ſhew howe famous Chriſte was, and howe greatly hee was ſpoken of throughout all Iurie. For thoſe that meete together out of all partes in the Temple, are eſpecially bent to ſeeke Chriſte, and talke together concerninge him. They ſeeke him after the manner of menne, but yet by ſeeking hym they declare that the tyrannie of the Prieſtes was the cauſe that he did not appeare openly.

Chap. 12.

1 IEſus therefore, ſixe dayes before Easter came to Bethania, where Lazarus was, that had beene dead, whom he had rayſed vp from the dead.

2 Therefore they made him a banquet there, and Martha ſerued: but Lazarus was one of thoſe that ſate at meate with him.

3 Then

3 Then tooke Marie a pounde of eyntment of Spickeard precious, she annoynted the feete of Ieſus, and wiped them with her haire: and the houſe was filled with the ſauour of the eyntment.

4 Therefore one of his diſciples, Iudas Iſcariot Simons ſonne, whiche was about to betray him, ſaid, 5 VVhy was not this eyntmente ſolde for three hundred pence, and giuen to the poore?

6 This ſaid he, not that he cared for the poore: but becauſe he was a theefe, and had the bag, and did carry thoſe thinges which were giuen.

7 Therfore Ieſus ſaid, ſuffer her hath kept this vntill the day of my buriall.

8 For you haue the poore alwayes with you, but me yee haue not alwayes.

1 Ieſus, &c. came to Bethania. VVe ſee that their iudgement was ouer raſh, who thought that Ieſus would not come, whereby wee are taught that we muſt not make ſuch haſt, but with patient and quiet minds ſtay vntill the opportunitie come whereof wee know not. Chriſt came firſt to Bethania, that he might goe thence to Ieruſalem three dayes after. In the meane while his intent was to giue Iudas a fit time and place to betray him, that he might be a ſacrifice readie, at the appointed houre. Neither is he ignoraunt what ſhall befall him, but goeth willingly to be offered vp. VVhereas he came to Bethania ſixe dayes before Eaſter, we may gather out of Matthewe and Marke that hee ſtayed there foure dayes. Iohn doth not expreſſe the day wherein the banquet was made vnto him, wherein he was annoynted by Mary, but it is likely that this was done not long after his ariuall. Furthermore, in that ſome do think that this was not the annoynting whereof Matthew and Marke make mention, they are deceiued therin. The reſpect of ỹ time moueth them, becauſe before the two Euangeliſts ſay, that Chriſt was annoynted, they make mention of two dayes. But the anſwere is eaſie, and that double. Iohn ſaith not that Chriſt was annointed the firſt day hee came. So that this might haue been done when as he was redie to depart. Although (as I haue ſaid alreadie) the other coniecture is more lik to be true, that he was annoynted a day or two before his departure. For it is certaine that Iudas had barganed with the Prieſtes, before Chriſte had ſent two of his diſciples to prepare the paſſeouer: and it muſt needs be that there was one day betweene at the leaſt. The Euangeliſts adde, that he waited a fit time to betray Chriſte, after that he had his hire. Therefore in that, hauing made mention of two dayes, they adde the hiſtorie of the annoynting, they ſet downe that firſt which was done laſt. The reaſon is, becauſe that ſeeing they had recited the wordes of Chriſte: you know that after two dayes the ſonne of man ſhalbe betrayed: they now adde that which was before omitted, howe and vpon what occaſion hee was betrayed by the diſciple. It appeareth ſufficiently that he was annointed at Bethania. Matthew and Marke ſay that he ſupt then with Simon the Leper, Iohn doth not expreſſe the houſe: but he doth ſufficiently ſhewe that he ſupt at ſome other place then with Lazarus and Martha, whyleſt that he maketh Lazarus one of thoſe that ſate at meate: that is, that hee was inuited together with Chriſte. Neither is there any diſagreement in this that Matthew and Marke do ſay that his head was annoynted, and our Euangeliſt his feete. The annoynting of the head was ordinarie, whereupon Plinie counteth it a poynt of too much ryot, that certain did annoynt the ancles. The three agree together in this, that Mary did annoynt Christ plentifully, and powred out great store of ointmente. Therefore whereas Iohn speaketh of the feete, it is as much as if he had said, that all the whole body of Christ was annoynted euē vnto the feet. For there is an augmentation in this word feet, which appeareth better by that which followeth, when he addeth, that Mary did wipe his feete with her hayre, And the house was filled with the smell. It was no simple liquor drawen out of Narde, but a compounde confection made of smellyng things: therfore it is no maruel if all the house were filled with the smel.

4 Therefore one of his Disciples saith. The murmuring of Iudas followeth, which Matthew attributeth vnto the Disciples in generall, and Marke only to certaine of them. But that is an vsuall thing by Synecdoche to apply that vnto many, which belongeth only vnto one or a few. Although it seemeth to mee a thing like to bee true, that the murmuring began at Iudas alone, and that the rest were moued to consent vnto him, as it is an easie matter for diuers affections to be kindeled in vs by whisperings, as with fannes: and principally backbitinges (as we are too much bent vnto finister iudgements) doe take place in vs. But the too too great credulitie and rashnes in beleeuing, which the spirit of God reproueth in the Apostles, teacheth vs, and is vnto vs an example, that we be not too readie & credulous to heare malitious speeches.

5 Why was not this ointment. A pound of common oyntment cost but (as Plinie doth testifie) ten pence: but the same man affirmeth that the highest price of the best oyntment was three hundred & ten pence. The Euangelistes agree together in this, that this was the most costly oyntment, wherefore it is not without cause that Iudas doeth valewe it at an hundreth pence, which summe amounteth vnto fiftie poundes of French money, according to Budæus his account. Furthermore, forasmuch as all daintinesse almost, hath included in it a superfluous ryot, the greater the losse of the money was the more colour had Iudas for his murmuring: as if he should haue said, if Mary had bestowed som small cost, shee should haue some excuse: but now seeing that she hath wasted a great summe of money vpon a matter of no importance, hath she not done iniurie to the poore, who might haue been greatly relieued therewithal? Therfore her fact deserueth no pardon.

6 Because he was a theefe. The rest of the Apostles do condemne Mary, not of any euill affection, but rashly: but Iudas colloureth and couereth his wickednesse with an honest cloake, when he speaketh for the poore, for whom he cared not. By this example are we taught what a monstrous beast the desire to haue is: the losse which Iudas thought he had sustained, by hauing the matter of stealing taken from him, doeth driue him vnto so great outrage, that he feareth not to betray Christe. And it is likely that he had not onely lyed vnto others, that the poore were defrauded: but also that he flattered himselfe inwardly (as hypocrites are wont to doe) as if it had beene but a light offence to betraye Christ that he might thereby recompence the damage which he had receiued. This was one cause which moued him to betray Christ, that hee might pull againe vnto himself the pray which had escaped him by som maner of meanes. For the indignation which he had conceiued by reason ſon of the gaine which he had loſt, cauſed him to determine to betray Chriſt. It is a maruell that Chriſte woulde chooſe ſuch a man to b his ſteward as he knew was a theef, for what other thing was this but to reach him an haulter to hang himſelfe withal? Mortall man muſt make no other anſwere in this place, but that the iudgementes of God are a deepe dungeon. Neuertheleſſe the fact of Chriſt muſt not be made a common rule, that we commit the caring for the poore or any other office to a wicked & vngodly man. For God hath giuen vs a law, wherein he hath ſet downe who thoſe be that muſt be called vnto the gouernment of the Church and vnto other offices, which law wee may not violate. Chriſt his eſtate was far vnlike vnto ours, who ſeeing that he was the eternall wiſdome of God, he ſuffered his ſecrete predeſtination to take place in the perſon of Iudas.

7 Suffer her. VVhenas Chriſt commandeth thē to let Mary alone, hee teacheth that thoſe men do wickedly & vniuſtly who moleſt their neighbours without cauſe, & procure cōtention about a matter of nothing. Chriſt his anſwere is longer in the other Euangeliſts, yet the ſumme is al one, The annointing, wherwith Iudas found fault, is defended by this reaſon, becauſe it was done to bury him. Therfore Chriſt doth not alow it to be an ordinarie worſhip, & which ought to be cōmonly vſed in the Church. For if he wold haue ſuch dutie done vnto him dayly, he would rather haue ſaid any thing, then that this was giuen to his buriall. And truly God careth not for externall pompe: yea ſeeing that hee ſeeth that mans nature is too much bent vnto carnall rites, he doth oftentimes cōmand vs to be ſparing & ſober in theſe things: wherfore they miſtake Chriſt very much, who infer out of his anſwer, that god is delighted in coſtly & gorgeous worſhipping, ſeeing that he did rather excuſe Mary, becauſe ſhe did vnto him an extraordinarie dutie, which ought not to be made a common rule of worſhipping God. Againſt the day of my buriall, &c. In that he ſaith that the oyntment was kept, his meaning is, that it was not powred out in vain, & out of ſeaſon, but according to ẏ circumſtāce of ẏ time. For that is ſaid to be ſaued or kept, which is laid vp ſafe, that it may be brought foorth in due time. For it is certaine that if any would haue burdened him before with ſumptuous dainties, he would not haue ſuffered him. And he ſaith not ẏ Mary did this according to ẏ cuſtome, but that ſhe might doe him the laſt dutie. Furthermore, the annoynting of the bodies was thē no vain ceremony: but rather a ſpirituall ſigne, to ſet before the eies of men, the hope of the reſurrection. The promiſes were as yet dark, Chriſt was not yet riſen againe, who is for iuſt cauſes called ẏ firſt fruits of thoſe that riſe againe, 1. Cor. 15. 20. Therfore the faithfull had neede of ſuche helpes, ẏ they might direct thē vnto chriſt, who was yet abſent. Therfore the annointing of Chriſt was not ſuperfluous thē, ſeeing that he ſhould ſhortly after be buried. For he is annointed as if he ſhould haue been laid in his graue. The diſciples knewe not thus much as yet: and without doubt Mary was inforced at a ſodaine, to doe that through the direction of the ſpirite, whereon ſhe thought not before. Chriſt applieth that vnto the hope of the reſurrection, which they did ſo much diſalowe, that the commoditie it ſelfe might reclaime them from wicked churliſhnes. But how ſoeuer Chriſt would haue the childhood of the old people to be gouerned with ſuch exerciſes, it were an abſurd thing for vs to aſſay the like now: neither coulde we doe it without doing iniurie to Chriſt, who hath driuen away ſuch ſhadowes by his comming. Becauſe his reſurrection had not as yet fulfilled the figures of the lawe, it was requiſite that his buriall ſhoulde bee adorned with the externall rite: the ſmell of his reſurrection hath ſtrength enough of it ſelfe now, without nard and oyntments, ſo that it quickeneth the whole worlde. And let vs remember that in iudging concerning mens factes, we muſt ſtand to Chriſt his iudgement alone, before whoſe iudgement ſeat we muſt once ſtand.

8 For yee haue the poore alwayes. VVe muſt note that which I ſaide before, that the extraordinarie fact of Marie, is in this place diſtinguiſhed from the common worſhip of Chriſte. VVherefore they are Apes and not true followers, who couet to worſhip Chriſt with pomp and ſumptuous apparrell: as if Chriſte did allow that becauſe it was once done, and not rather forbid it to be done afterward. VVhereas he ſaith that he will not be alwayes with his Diciples, it muſt bee referred vnto the manner of his preſence wherewith carnall worſhip and coſtly honour can agree. For in that he is preſent with vs by the grace and power of his ſpirit, in that he dwelleth in vs, in that he doth alſo feed vs with his fleſh and blood, this appertaineth nothing vnto bodily worſhip. Therefore what pompe ſoeuer the Papiſts did inuent to worſhip Chriſt withall, they did beſtow it vpon him all in vaine, ſeeing that hee doth openly refuſe it. VVhereas he ſaith that the poore ſhall be alwayes with vs, although he toucheth therein the hypocriſie of the Iewes yet may we gather a profitable doctrine thence: that is, that the ſacrifices whiche God alloweth, and which ſmell ſweete, are thoſe almes deedes wherewith the pouertie of the poore is holpen, and that there is no other coſt rightly beſtowed in worſhipping of God.

9 A great companie of the Iewes knewe that hee was there, and came, not for Ieſus his ſake onely: but that they myghte ſee Lazarus alſo whom hee rayſed vppe from the dead.

10 And the chiefe Prieſtes tooke counſell togeather to put Lazarus to death alſo, 11 Becauſe many of the Iewes did depart becauſe of him, and beleeued on Ieſus.

12 On the morrow a great multitude, which came to the feaſt, whē they had hard that Ieſus came to Ieruſalem, 13 They tooke braunches of Palme trees, and went out to meete him, and cryed, Hoſanna, bleſſed is he that commeth in the name of the Lord, kyng of Iſrael.

14 And when Ieſus had founde a yoūg Aſſe, he ſate thereon, as it is written,

15 Feare not daughter of Syon, becauſe thy kyng commeth ſitting vpon the colt of an Aſſe.

9 Therefore the multitude knewe. The nigher the time of Chriſtes death did drawe the more requiſite was it that his name ſhould be prayſed & ſpoken of amongſt all men, to the ende this might be a preparation vnto more perfect faith after his death. The Euāgeliſt mētioneth eſpecially, that freſh myracle of Lazarus who was rayſed vp from death was moſt famous, and becauſe Chriſte did ſhowe therein a ſinguler token of his diuinitie, god would haue many to ſee the ſame. VVhen as he ſaith that they came not for Ieſus his ſake only, but alſo becauſe of Lazarus, hee meaneth meaneth not for Lazarus ſake,as if they gaue him this honor apart,but that they might ſee a manifeſt token of Chriſt his power in Lazarus.

They tooke counſell togeather. This was more then furious madneſſe, to goe about to killhim,who (as it did manifeſtly appeare)was raiſed from death by God.But this is the ſpirite of gyddineſſe, wherewith Satan pricketh forward the wicked,ſo that they make no ende of their madneſſe,although God doe ſet the heauen, the earth, and the ſea agaynſt them.For this ſo wicked a conſultation is deſcribed for this cauſe, that we may knowe that the enemies of Chriſt were brought vnto ſo great ſtubbornneſſe,not through errour or madnes,but through furious wickednes,ſo that they were not afraid euẽ to make war againſt God himſelfe:and ſecondly,that we may know that the power of God was nothing obſcure in Lazarus his reſurrection. to extinguiſh the which,vngodlines could inuent no other remedie,but to make away an innocent man by cruell and deteſtable death. But ſeeing that it is Satans whole drift to ſuppreſſe,or at leaſt darken the workes of God: it is our dutie to be bent continually to meditate thereupon, 12 The next day a great companie. The other Euangeliſtes ſet downe this entrance of Chriſt more at large: yet this our Euangeliſt comprehendeth the ſumme of all. VVe muſt firſt of all note Chriſtes purpoſe: namely,that he came to Ieruſalem of his owne accorde, that hee might offer himſelfe to die: for it was requiſite that his death ſhould bee voluntarie,becauſe the wrath of God conceiued againſt vs could be appeaſed by no other meanes ſaue only by the ſacrifice of obedience. For hee knew what ſucceſſe he ſhould haue.Yet before he be crucified,he wilbe entertained and receiued of the people as a king, with ſome ſolemne rite: yea,he declareth manifeſtly that he beginneth his kingdome by going to die. Although his comming was celebrated by a great aſſembly of people,yet is it vnknowen to his enemies,vntill ſuch time as he proued himſelf to be the true Meſsias, by fulfilling the propheſies (which we ſhall ſee in their place). For he would omit nothing which might ſerue to the perfect confirmation of our faith.

A great multitude which came to the feaſt. Therefore ſtraungers were far more ready to do the dutie of godlines vnto the ſonne of God,then the citizens of Ieruſalem, who notwithſtanding ought to haue been an example vnto others. For they had the ſacrifices dayly: the temple was alwayes in their ſight, whiche thing ought to haue kindeled in their heartes the deſire to ſeeke God: there were the principall doctors of the Church,there was the ſanctuarie of Gods light. Therefore theyr vnthankfulnes was too filthie,that hauing had ſuch excerciſes from their childhood,they doe either refuſe or els neglect the redeemer promiſed them frõ the beginning.But this hath been a common vice almoſt in all ages,that men doe ſo much the more boldly deſpice God, the nigher & more familiarly he offereth himſelfe vnto them. But there was greater zeale and feruentneſſe in the other, who hauing left their houſes were come together to celebrate the feaſt day,ſo that they enquired diligently after Chriſt:& whẽas they heare ỹ he commeth into the Citie, they goe out to meete him,and to welcom him. Queſtionles they were raiſed vp to meet him in ſuch ſort,by ỹ ſecret inſtinct of the ſpirit.VVe do not reade that this was done before: but as earthly princes do call their ſubiects vnto them by the ſounde of a Trumpet or the voyce of a Cryer, when they take poſſeſsion of their kingdomes: ſo Chriſte gathered together this people by the vehement motion of his ſpirit, that they might ſalute him as a king. VVhen as the multitude would haue made him a king in the wildernes, he withdrew himſelf priuily into the mountaine: for at that time they thought vpon no other kingdome, ſaue only ſuch a one, during which they might haue their bellyes well filled, lyke brute beaſtes. Therfore Chriſte coulde not yeeld vnto their fooliſh and diſordered deſire, vnleſſe he would deny himſelfe, and caſt off that function, which was enioyned him by the father. But he doth now chaleng ſuch a kingdome, as hee had receiued of his father. I confeſſe indeede that the common people, which went out to meete him, did not throghly know the nature of this kingdome: but Chriſte had reſpect vnto the time to come. Neuertheleſſe he ſuffered them to doe nothing, but that which did agree with the ſpiritual kingdome.

14. Boughes of palme trees, and they went out to meete him. The Palme tree was a token of victory and peace amongſt the menne of olde: but they were alſo woonte to vſe braunches of Palme trees, when they did aſcribe the empyre vnto any, or humbly craue pardon of one that was a conqueror. Notwithſtanding it ſeemeth that theſe menne tooke braunches of Palme trees in their handes, as a token of mirth and ioy, ſeeinge they did entertaine a new king.

They cryed Hoſanna. By this woorde they did teſtifie that they did acknowledge that Meſsias in Ieſus Chriſte, whoe was promiſed in tymes paſt to the fathers, and at whoſe hands they were to hope for redemption and ſaluation. For the hundred and eighteenth Pſalme, out of which this crye is taken, was made touchinge the Meſsias to this ende, that all the Saintes might feruentlye with continuall petitions deſire his comming, and receiue him with great reuerence, when hee was reuealed and giuen. Therefore it is like to bee true, yea truelye it may be gathered, that this prayer was aunciente euery where amongſt the Iewes, and ſo conſequentlye, that it was in euerye mannes mouth. Therefore theſe menne wiſhed well vnto Chriſte, the ſpirite of GOD goinge beefore theyr woordes, and they were choſen as cryers to make it knowne that the Meſsias was come.

This woord Hoſanna being compounded of two Hebrew wordes, ſignifieth aſmuch as Saue, or, make ſafe, I pray thee. The Hebritians pronounce it after another ſorte, namely Hoſiah-na: but it is an vſuall thinge for the pronunciation to be corrupted ſo often, as wordes are tranſlated into another tongue. Notwithſtanding although the Euangeliſts wrote in Greeke, yet retained they the Hebrewe worde, to the end they might the better declare that the multitude did vſe a ſolemne forme of praier, which was firſt delyuered by Dauid, and receiued continually from time to time amongſt the people of God, and was ſanctified peculyerly vnto that end and vſe, that they might bleſſe the kingdome of Chriſt. To the ſame end tendeth that, which followeth immediately, Bleſſed is he that commeth in the name of the Lord. For this is alſo an happy prayer, for the ioyfull and proſperous ſucceſſe of that kingdom, whereupon the felicity and reſtoring of the Church of God did depende. But becauſe Dauid ſeemeth rather to ſpeake of himſelfe, then of Chriſt in that Pſalme, we muſt reſolue this doubt firſt of all. Neyther is it any hard thing to do: for wee know to what end the kingdome was eſtabliſhed with Dauid and hys poſteritie namely, that it might be as it were a certeine entraunce into that eternall kingdome, which was to bee manifeſted at the appoynted time.

Neither was it for Dauid to ſtay in himſelfe, and the Lorde doth euer now and then turne the eies of al the godly vnto ſome other by the prophets. For whatſoeuer Dauid did ſay of himſelfe, it is referred for good cauſes vnto that king, which ſhuld ariſe according to the promiſe of his ſeede, to be a Redeemer. Hence haue we to gather a profitable admonition. For if we be members of the Church, the Lord dooth ſtirre vs vppe euen at this day vnto that ſelf ſame deſire, wherewith he would haue the faithfull to bee moued vnder the lawe: namelye with all our hearte to wiſh that the kingdome of Chriſt may flouriſh and haue good ſucceſſe: and not that onelye, but that by prayer wee doe teſtifie this: and to the end we may be the more encouraged to pray, wee muſt note that he ſetteth downe the woordes, which we ſhall vſe. VVoe bee therefore vnto our ſluggiſhnes, if we doe either extinguiſh with our coldnes, or choake with our lukewarmnes that feruentnes, which God ſtirreth vppe. In the meane ſeaſon let vs know that our prayers ſhall not bee in vaine, whiche we make through Gods direction and inſtruction. Onely let vs not be ſluggiſh, or weary in asking: he wil be a faithfull gouernor of this kingdome, that hee may defend the ſame by his inuincible power and ayde. The maieſty thereof will continue and ſtande, though we do ceaſe: but in that it doth not floriſh ſo gorgiouſly oftentimes, as it ought, but doth rather decay (as we ſee at this day horrible ſcattering abroad and diſorder, yea waſteneſſe of the ſame) it is certeine that that happeneth throgh our ſinnes. And in that there appeareth veryе ſmall or almoſt no reſtoring therof, or at leaſt that it goeth but ſlowly forward, let vs impute that vnto our ſlouthfulneſſe. VVee craue daylye of God, that his kingdome may come but ſcarſe one of an hundreth beggeth this in earneſt & feruently. Therefore we are iuſtly depriued of that bleſsing of God, which we cannot aforde to aske.

Moreouer we are taught by this word, that it is God alone that ſaueth and defendeth his Church: neither doth he challeng or commaunde any thing to be attributed vnto him, ſaue that which is his owne. Therefore when as (hauing our tongues by him directed, we craue that he wil preſerue Chriſt his kingdome, wee confeſſe that God himſelfe is the onelye authour of ſafety, that this kingdome may ſtande in his eſtate. He vſeth in this thing mens diligence, yet ſuch as he hath framed and made meete with his owne hand. Secondly he vſeth the helpe of menne to further or preſerue the kingdome of Chriſt in ſuch ſorte, that he alone doth begin and accompliſh all things through their meanes by the power of his ſpirite.

He that commeth in the name of the Lord. VVee muſt firſt marke what this phraſe meaneth, To come in the name of the Lord. Hee commeth in the name of the Lord, who intrudeth not himſelf raſhly, nor vſurpeth to himſelfe the honour falſelye: but being rightly called, hath GOD to be the guid and authour of his action.

This

This title belongeth vnto all ỹ lawfull miniſters of God. That Prophet commeth in the name of God, who being directed by the ſpirit of god, deliuereth that doctrine ſincerely vnto men, which he hath receiued from heauen. The king commeth in the ſame name, by whoſe hande god doth gouerne his people. But becauſe the ſpirit of ỹ Lord reſted vpon Chriſt, and he is the head of all, and becauſe whoſoeuer haue been appoynted to rule the Church, they haue been ſubiect to his power and gouernement: yea they are but ſtreames flowing from this fountaine: he is properly ſaid to haue come in the name of the Lord. Neither doth he only excel others in the degree of gouernment: but becauſe god doth wholy reueale himſelfe vnto vs in him. For in him dwelleth the Godhead bodily as ſaith Paule, Col. 2. 9. and hee is the expreſſe image of God: Finally, he is the true Immanuel. VVherefore he is ſaide to haue come in the name of God by a ſinguler kinde of right, becauſe God reuealed himſelf by him not in part (as before time by the Prophets) but in whole. Therfore we muſt begin with him, as at the head, whēas we wil ſpeake good of the miniſters of God.

Now becauſe the falſe Prophetes doe proudly boaſt of the name of God, and doe vaunt themſelues vnder this falſe colour (whereas notwithſtanding they are carried through the vehement motion of the Diuell to deſtroy the Church) we muſt vnderſtand the oppoſition, that the Lord may ſcatter them abroade, and bring them to naught. So that we cannot bleſſe Chriſt but we muſt curſe the Pope, and that ſacrilegious tyrannie which he hath ſet vp againſt Chriſte. Hee ſhaketh his curſes againſt vs as thunder bolts and lightning with great force: yet may we ſafely contemne them as vaine and proud wordes. On the contrarie, the holy Ghoſte ſetteth down in this place an horrible curſe, wherwith he may be drowned euen in the deepe pit of hell, with all his glory and pompe. Neither hath he need of any high Prieſt, to pronounce a curſe againſt him, ſeeing that Chriſt did once endow children with this power, when as hee confirmed their crie as the other Euangeliſts doe ſay.

14 And when Ieſus had found a young Aſſe. The other Euangeliſtes doe more diſtinctly ſet downe this part of the hiſtorie: namely, that Chriſt ſent two of his Diſciples to fet the Aſſe. It was enough for Iohn who writ the laſt of all, briefly to note the ſummes of the things which were handeled by the reſt alreadie. Hereby it commeth to paſſe that he omitteth many circumſtances, And the ſhow of contrarietie which troubleth many, is eaſily taken away. VVhereas Matthew ſaith, that Chriſte ſate vpon an Aſſe and her colte, it muſt bee taken as ſpoken by Synecdoche. Some doe thinke that he ſate firſt vpon the ſhe Aſſe, and afterwarde vpon her colt, & frō this their ſurmiſe they draw an allegorie, that he ſate firſt vpon the Iewiſh people, which had been long time accuſtomed to beare the yooke of the lawe: and afterward he made the Gentiles ſubiect vnto him as a wilde and young Aſſe. But that is ſimply true, that Chriſt did ride vpon an Aſſe, which was brought together with his damme: & hereunto do the wordes of the Prophet agree, who hath a repetition which is common enough amongſt the Hebritians, which expreſſeth one thing twice in diuers wordes, vpon the Aſſe ſaith he, and vpon the colte of the Aſſe accuſtomed to the yoke. Our Euangeliſt who ſtudieth to be briefe, omitting omitting the former member doth only bring in the latter. Furthermore, the Iewes themſelues are enforced to expound the propheſie of Zacharie conteined in the nienth chapter & nienth verſe, which was thē fulfilled of the Meſsias. And yet they doe mocke vs, becauſe being deceiued with the ſhadow of the Aſſe, we giue the honour of the Meſsias vnto the ſonne of Mary. But our faith leaneth vnto farre other teſtimonies. Neither doe we whenas we ſay that Ieſus is Chriſt, begin heere, becauſe he came to Ieruſalem ſitting vpon an Aſſe. For there appeared in him ſuch glory as became the ſonne of God, as wee haue had before in the firſt chapter. And his diuine power appeared chiefly in his reſurrectiō. But we muſt not deſpice this confirmation, that God did by his wonderful prouidence as it were ſet open before all men as vpon a ſtage, the propheſie of Zacharie which was fulfilled: by that entrance. I eare not. In this ſentence of the prophete, as the Euangeliſt repeateth it, we muſt firſt note, that our mindes cannot be in quiet by any other meanes, and that we are not deliuered from feare & trembling by any other meanes, ſaue only when as Chriſt doth reigne amongſt vs. The Prophete vſeth other wordes (for he exhorteth the faithfull to be light and glad) but our Euangeliſte hath expreſſed howe our minds reioyce with true ioy: namely, when as we are deliuered from feare, wherewith all men are tormented vntill ſuch time as being reconciled vnto God, they haue that peace, which proceedeth from faith. Rom. 5. 1. Therefore we haue this goodneſſe through Chriſt, that being deliuered from the tyranny of Satan, the yoake of ſinne being broken, giltineſſe being diſſolued, death being aboliſhed, we doe freely make our boaſt, truſting to the ayde of our king, vnder whoſe tuition whileſt we are, we need not feare any daunger, not that we are void of feare ſo long as wee liue in the worlde, but becauſe that hope which leaneth vnto Chriſt, ſurpaſſeth all feare. VVhē as Chriſt was as yet farre off, the Prophete commaunded the godly of that time to be mery and ioyfull, becauſe he ſhould come, Behold (ſaith he) thy king ſhall come, therefore feare not. Now ſithence that he is come ſo that wee doe enioy his preſence, we muſt ſo much the more valiantly wraſtle with feare, that being ſafe from our enemies, wee may worſhip our king meekly and ioyfully. The Prophete ſpake in his time vnto Syon: becauſe the houſe and ſeate of the Churche was there, God hath now gathered vnto himſelfe a Church out of all the whole world: yet this promiſe is properly directed vnto the faithfull, who ſubmit themſelues vnto Chriſt, that he may reigne in them. In that he bringeth in Chriſt riding vpon an Aſſe, he giueth vs to vnderſtand that his kingdom ſhalbe void of worldly pompe, gorgeouſneſſe, riches and might, and that it was requiſite that that ſhould be ſhewed by ſome externall figure to the end all men might openly acknowledge that it was ſpirituall.

16 Theſe thinges knew not his diſciples at the firſt: but when Ieſus was glorified, thē they remembred that theſe things were written of him, and that they had done theſe things vnto him.

17 The multitude therefore, which was with him, when he called Lazarus out of the graue, and rayſed him vp from the dead, bare him witneſſe.

18 Therfore the multitude met him, becauſe they had heard that hee had wrought this myracle.

19 Furthermore, the Phariſees ſaid among themſelues, yee ſee that yee preuaile nat, beholde the world is gone after him.

16 Theſe thinges knew not his Diſciples. As the ſeede ſpringeth not vppe ſo ſone as it is caſt into the ground, ſo the fruit of the works of God appeareth not by and by. The Apoſtles are the miniſters of God to fulfill the propheſie, but they cannot tell what they doe. They heare the peoples crie, and that no confuſed crie, but that Chriſt was plainely ſaluted as a king: yet they doe not as yet vnderſtand to what ende this is, or what it meaneth. Therfore it is vnto them a vaine ſpectacle vntill ſuch time as the Lorde doth open their eyes. VVhen as it is ſaid, that they remembred at length, that theſe thinges were written of him, the cauſe of ſuch groſſe ignoraunce is noted, which went before knowledge: namely, becauſe they had not the ſcripture to be their guide and teacher then, to directe their mindes vnto the pure and right conſideration. For we are blinde vnleſſe the word of God doe goe before vs. Although euen this is not ſufficient, that the worde of God doth ſtine vnto vs, vnleſſe on the other ſide the ſpirite doe illuminate our eyes, which ſhould otherwiſe be blind euen in perfect light. Chriſt vouchſafed to beſtow this grace vppon his diſciples after his reſurrection: becauſe the full time was not yet come, wherein he poured out abundantly the riches of his ſpirit, vntill ſuch time as he was receiued into the heauenly glory, as wee had in the vii. chapter ver. 39. Let vs learne by this example to iudge of all things which appertain vnto Chriſt according to the ſcripture, and not according to the proper ſenſe of our fleſh. Let vs ſecondly marke that this is a peculiar grace of the ſpirite, that he doeth inſtruct vs in tract of time, leaſt wee be dull in conſidering vpon the workes of God. I interprete this member, That theſe things were written of him, and that they had doone theſe thinges vnto him, thus, that the diſciples did then firſt of all remember that theſe thinges were not done vnto Chriſt raſhly, and that theſe men did not raſhly mocke him: but that all this buſineſſe was gouerned by the prouidence of God (becauſe it was requiſite that all theſe thinges ſhould be fulfilled which were written. Therfore reſolue it thus, They did theſe things vnto him, as they were written of him.

17 The multitude bare him witneſſe. Hee repeateth that againe which he had ſaid alredie, that many being ſtirred vp with the fame of ſo great a myracle came to meete Chriſt. For they went out by troupes for this cauſe, becauſe the rumour of the rayſing againe of Lazarus from death was euery where diſperſed. Therefore theſe men had iuſt matter and cauſe miniſtred vnto them, to giue the honour due vnto Chriſte vnto the ſonne of Marie, ſeeing that ſuch excellent power of his was made knowen vnto them.

19 Yee ſee that ye preuaile not. By theſe wordes they pricke forwarde themſelues vnto greater madneſſe. For it is a certaine vpbraiding of ſluggiſhneſſe, as if they ſhoulde ſay that the common people fell away vnto Chriſt, becauſe they themſelues were too ſlacke and faint harted. This manner of phraſe is common amongeſt deſperate fellowes, when as they prepare themſelues to aſſay euen the verye laſt and vttermoſt things. But and if the enemies be ſo ſtubbornly bent to do euil, we muſt be farre more conſtant in a good purpoſe.

20 And there were certaine of those that went vppe to worship on the holye day, Greekes.

21 Therefore these men came vnto Phillip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and requested him, saying. Syr wee will see Iesus.

22 Philip came and telde Andrew againe, Andrew and Phillip tell Iesus hym-selfe.

23 And Iesus answered them saying, the houre commeth, and now is, that the sonne of man must be glorified.

24 Verily, verily I say vnto you, vnlesse the wheat corne when it is fallen into the earth, shall die, it abideth alone, but if it dye, it bringeth forth much fruite.

25 He that loueth his life shall destroy it: and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keepe it vnto eternall life.

26 If any man will serue mee, let him follow mee: and where I am, there shall my minister bee also: and if any man shall serue mee, him shall the father honour.

20 And there were certaine. I doe not thinke that they were Gentiles, or vncircumcised: because it followeth shortly after, that they came to worship. And this was straitly forbidden by the lawes of Rome, and the procōsules and other Magistrates did sharpely punish it, if any man were founde, which fell vnto Iudaisme, hauing left the worship of his Countrie. It was lawfull for the Iewes which were dispersed through Asia and Grecia to come ouer the Sea to offer sacrifice in the Temple. Secondly, the Iewes woulde neuer haue suffered the Gentiles to be mingled amongest them in that solemne worship of God: because they would haue thought that both the Temple and themselues and the sacrifices were polluted by this meanes. And although they came of the Iewes: yet because they dwelt farre beyonde the Sea, it is no maruell if the Euangelist bring them in as strangers and men whiche knewe not al those things which were then done at Ierusalem or at the places nigh thervnto. Therfore his meaning is that not only the inhabitants of Iurie which came out of the villages and cities vnto the feast, did intertaine Christe as a king: but that his fame was spread abroade also vnto those that dwelte beyonde the Sea, whiche came from farre Countries.

To worship. They might doe this also in their countrie, but Iohn speaketh of a solemne kinde of worship, which was ioyned with the sacrifices. For although religion and godlinesse were not tyed vnto the Temple, yet was it not lawfull to offer sacrifices vnto God any where els. Neyther had they the ark of the testimonie, which was a token of Gods presence any where els. Euery man did worship God dayly spiritually at his owne house, yet was it requisite that the holy men whiche were vnder the lawe shoulde outwardly professe religion, and that they shoulde make suche profession as was commaunded by Moses that they shoulde present them selues in the Temple before the face of the Lorde: and vnto this end were the festiuall dayes appoynted. If so bee it these menne dyd take suche a longe iourney, not without greate charges and trouble, that they mighte not neglecte the externall profession of their godlinesse: what excuse can wee haue at this day, if wee dos not testifie that wee worshippe the true GOD, at our owne houſe? The worſhip of the lawe is ceaſed : yet the Lorde hath left vnto his Church, Baptiſme, the holy Supper, and the publike ryte of prayer, that in theſe the faithfull may exerciſe themſelues, Therfore the neglecting of theſe things, doth bewray, that the ſtudie of godlineſſe is too cold in vs.

21 They came vnto Phillip. This is a ſigne of reuerence, that they goe not ſtraightway vnto Chriſt, but are deſirous to haue Phillip to make a way for them that they may come vnto him. For reuerence doeth alwayes bring foorth modeſtie of her ſelfe. And whereas the Papiſtes do hereby gather, that the dead muſt be called vpon, that they may be our patrones with Chriſt and God the father, it is ſo ridiculous that it needeth no refutation. The Greekes ſpeake in preſence of Phillip: he that calleth vpon the dead from whom he is ſeparated, how is he like vnto them I pray you? But theſe are fruites of mans boldneſſe, after that it hath once graunted to it ſelf libertie to wander without the bounds of the worde of God. The Papiſtes did fooliſhly and raſhly inuent of their owne braine the inuocation of Saints: now to the ende they may get to themſelues ſome falſe colour and cloake out of the worde of God, they corrupt and rack the ſcriptures, and are not afraide to ſet the ſame to be laughed at ſhamefully.

23 The houre commeth. Many doe expound this of his death, becauſe the glory of Chriſt was thereby declared : therefore (as they thinke) Chriſt doth now ſhew that the time of his death was at hand. But I do rather referre it vnto the preaching of the Goſpel: as if he had ſaid, that the knowledge of him ſhould be immediately ſpread abroade throughout all partes of the world. So that he meant by this meanes to preuent that deſpayre or caſting downe, into which his death myght bring his diſciples. For he ſheweth that there is no cauſe why they ſhould bee diſcouraged, becauſe the doctrine of the Goſpell ſhall neuertheleſſe be publiſhed throughout the whole world.

Furthermore leaſt this cogitation concerning his glory, doe vaniſh away ſhortly after, when as he ſhalbe adiudged to die, hanged vpon the croſſe, and at length buried : he preuenteth that in time, & ſheweth that the ſlaunder of his death doth no whit hinder his glory. He vſeth a moſt fit compariſon concerning this matter, vnleſſe (ſaith he) the wheat corne ſhall die, or rot, it remaineth drie and barren. But the death of the ſeede doth quicken it better, that the fruite may come thence. In ſumme Chriſt compareth his death vnto ſowing, which whileſt that it ſeemeth to tende to the deſtruction of the wheat, it is a cauſe of farre greater encreaſe. And although this admonition was moſt neceſſary at that inſtant, yet it hath a continuall commoditie in the Church, And it is meete that wee begin firſt at the head. That terrible ſhowe of ignominie and curſe, which appeareth in the death of Chriſt, doth not only darken his glory but alſo take it quite away out of our ſight. Therefore wee muſt not ſticke and abide in his death alone, but wee muſt alſo conſider what fruite his reſurrection brought foorth. So that nothing ſhall keepe backe his glory from ſhining euery where. Afterward we muſt paſſe vnto the members. For we doe not only thinke that wee periſhe in death, but our life is alſo like vnto a continuall death. Colloſſ. 3. 3.

Therfore

Therefore we ſhall be quite vndone, vnleſſe that comfort doe helpe vs wherewith Paule lifteth vs vp: If our outward man be corrupt, the inwarde man is renued from day to day, 2. Cor. 4: 16. Let this therfore be the continual meditation of the godly, whenas they are oppreſſed with diuers ſorrowes and miſeries, when as they are brought vnto the greateſt ſtraits, whenas they are pinched with hunger, nakednes or diſeaſes, when as they are vexed with iniuries, when as they thinke that they ſhalbe continually ſwallowed vp of death, that this is the ſowing which ſhall bring foorth fruite in due time,

25 he that loueth his life. Chriſt adioyneth an exhortation vnto doctrine: for if we muſt die that we may bring foorth fruite, we muſt patiently ſuffer God to mortifie vs. And becauſe he ſetteth the loue of life againſt the hatred thereof, we muſt vnderſtand and know what it is to hate the life, and what to loue it. He which is intangled with the immoderate deſire of this life, and cannot leaue this world willingly, he is ſaid to loue his life: and he that contemning this life, doeth goe vnto death with a valiant minde, is ſaid to hate his life. Not that the life is ſimplie to be hated (which is for good cauſes reckoned amongeſt the chiefeſt benefites of God:) but becauſe the faithfull muſt willingly caſt away the ſame, when as it keepeth them backe from comming vnto Chriſt. Likeas if any man ſhould ſhake off from his ſhoulders a troubleſome and vnprofitable burden, when as he will make haſt to go to ſom other place. To be briefe, it is not euill of it ſelfe to loue this life, ſo that we be only as ſtrangers in the ſame, being alwaies bent toward ỳ mark: For this is the lawfull maner of louing the life, if wee continue in the ſame, ſo long as the Lorde thinketh good, and are alwayes readie to depart out of the ſame at his will and pleaſure: or (that I may conclude in a word) if carrying the ſame as it were in our hand, we do offer it vn to God as a ſacrifice. VVhoſoeuer is addicted vnto this life, beyonde this, he deſtroyeth his life, that is, he throweth it into eternal deſtructiõ, For ỳ word perdere doth not ſignifie in this place to looſe a thing, which we loue dearely, but to deſtroy. This word anima, is vſually taken for the life. Some doe take it in this place for the place of the affections, as if Chriſte had ſaide, hee that yeeldeth too much vnto the deſires of the fleſh, he deſtroyeth his ſoule. But this is too far fet; ỳ other is more ſimple and plaine, that hee hath the beſt way to enioy his life continually, which neglecteth the ſame. Furthermore, to the end the ſenſe may the better appeare, this clauſe in the worlde, which is only once expreſſed muſt be repeated twice, that the ſenſe may be, that thoſe men do but euil prouide for their life, which loue the ſame in this world: & again that thoſe men doe truly know howe they may ſaue their life, who deſpice the ſame in the worlde. And truly whoſoeuer is tyed faſt to the worlde, hee doth of his owne accord depriue himſelfe of life, whereof wee ſhall not bee heires vnleſſe we be pilgrimes and ſtrangers in the worlde. Therefore that is a beaſtly affection whiche reigneth in all the vnfaithfull, whiles that deſiring to be, they include that their beeing, in the worlde. Hereby it commeth to paſſe that the more euery man is bent to ſaue him ſelfe, the more doth he eſtraunge himſelfe from the kingdome of God, (that is from the true life.) He that hateth his life. I haue already ſaide that this is ſpoken comparatiuely, becauſe wee muſt deſpice the life ſo often as it hindereth vs, from liuing vnto God. For if the meditation of the heauenly life doe beare the greateſt ſway in our heartes, the worlde ſhal not be able to keepe vs backe. Here is alſo anſwered the queſtion which may be obiected in this place, many mē do ſlay them through deſpaire, or for other cauſes, and chiefly becauſe they are wearie of their life: notwithſtanding we will not ſay that theſe men doe prouide for their ſaftie and ſoules health: otherſome die through ambition, which doe alſo throw thēſelues headlong into eternall deſtruction. But Chriſt doth in plaine words in this place cōmend the hatred or contempt of the fraile life, which the faithfull do conceiue by the feeling of a better life. Therfore whoſoeuer doth not looke vp into heauen, he hath not yet learned how to ſaue his life. Furthermore Chriſt added this latter member, to the end he might terrifie thoſe that were too deſirous of the earthly life: becauſe if we be too much drowned with the loue of the world, ſo that we cannot eaſily forget the ſame, we cannot walke towardes heauen. But for aſmuch as Chriſt doeth ſo violently awake vs, it were too abſurd a thing to ſleepe a deadly ſleepe.

26 If any man ſhall ſerue mee. To the end death may bee the leſſe bitter and troubleſome vnto vs, Chriſte doth inuite vs vnto the ſame by his example. We ſhall be aſhamed to refuſe this honour, to become his diſciples. But he admitteth vs into the number of his children, vppon no other condition, but that we follow the way which he himſelfe preſcribeth. But he doth goe before vs vnto death. Therefore the bitterneſſe of death is aſſuaged, and doth become as it were ſweete, whileſt that the condition to die is common to vs togeather with the ſonne of GOD. Therefore it is ſo farre off, that we muſt loath Chriſte for the croſſes ſake, that we muſt rather therefore deſire to die. To the ſame end tendeth ỳ which followeth, And where I am, there ſhall my miniſter be alſo. For he requireth, that his miniſters refuſe not to ſubmit themſelues to die, ſeeing that they ſee him goe before them. For it is not meete that the ſeruant be ſeparated from his maſter. The futuretence in the woorde ſhalbe is put in ſteede of the Imparatiue mode, after the manner of the Hebritians. Some thinke that this is a conſolation, as if Chriſt did promiſe, that they ſhalbe partakers of his reſurrection, whom it greeueth not to die togeather with him. But that whiche I ſaide ſeemeth more like to be he true. For the conſolation is added afterward, that the father ſhal not defraude Chriſt his miniſters of their hyre, who haue kept him companie continually as well in life as in death.

27 Now is my ſoule troubled and what ſhall I ſay? Father ſaue mee from this houre: but therefore came I into this houre.

28 Father glorifie thy name. Therfore there came a voyce from heauen: I haue both glorified it, and will glorifie it againe.

29 Therfore the multitude which ſtood, and had heard, ſayd, that it thundreth: other ſaid, an Angel ſpake vnto him.

30 Ieſus anſwered and ſaide, this voice came not becauſe of mee, but for your ſake.

31 Nowe is the iudgement of this worlde: nowe ſhall the prince of this worlde bee caſt out.

32 And

32 And if I ſhall be lifted vp from the earth, I will drawe all men vnto my ſelfe.
33 This ſpake he ſignifying what manner of death he ſhoulde die.

27 Now is my ſoule. This ſentence ſeemeth at the firſt to diſagree much with the ſpeech next goyng before. That was a manifeſt token of an heroyicall heartte, to exhort his not only to dye, but alſo to die willingly when as the matter ſo requireth. Nowe in that he flyeth from death, he doth confeſſe his faintneiſe of hearte. Yet notwithſtanding wee reade nothing in this place but that which is moſt cõuenient, like as euery mã is taught by his owne experience. If thoſe wittie fellowes do laugh, it is no marueile: for doubtleſſe this cannot be vnderſtood without practiſe. But it was profitable, yea neceſſarie for our ſaluation, that the ſonne of God ſhould bee thus affected. VVee muſt chiefely conſider in his death, the ſacrifice wherewith hee pacified the wrath and curſe of God.

Furthermore, that could not be, vnleſſe he ſhoulde take to himſelfe our giltineſſe. Therfore it muſt needs be that that death which he dyed was full of horrour: becauſe he could not make ſatisfaction for vs, but that hee muſt needes feele the horrible iudgement of God. VVhence wee may better gather the crueltie of ſinne, which the heauenly father did ſo ſharply puniſh in his only begotten ſonne. Therefore let vs know that death was no ſport or paſtime to Chriſte: but that hee was throwen euen into extreame torments for our ſake. Neither was it any abſurde thing that the ſonne of God ſhould be thus troubled: for his diuinitie being hidden, and not ſhewing foorth his force, did after a ſort reſt, that it might make roome for the ſacrifice. Chriſt himſelfe dyd not only put vpon him our fleſhe, but alſo humane affections, Theſe were indeed voluntarie affections in him: (becauſe hee was not enforced to feare, but becauſe he ſubmitted himſelfe willingly vnto feare) yet notwithſtanding wee muſt thinke that hee feared indeed and not feignedly. Although he was vnlike other men in this, in that he had his affections tempered to obey Gods iuſtice: as we haue ſaid els where. Alſo there commeth another commoditie hence vnto vs. If there had beene no perturbation in Chriſte, by reaſon of the feare of death, which of vs woulde not thinke that his example did appertaine vnto himſelfe, For doubleſſe it is not graunted vnto vs to die without feeling of ſorrow & griefe, but whenas we heare that there was not in him hard ſtrength, we encourage our ſelues to follow him. Neither doth the infirmitie of the fleſh which feareth death, hinder vs from adioyning our ſelues vnto our captaine as companions, to ſtriue and wraſtle.

And what ſhall I ſay. Here we ſee plainely how deare a price the ſonne of God did pay for our ſaluation, whileſt that being brought euen into the greateſt ſtraites, he found not wordes, wherewith he might expreſſe the vehemencie of his griefe, neither yet counſell according to man. And (which did only remaine) he flieth vnto prayers, and deſireth to be deliuered from death. Againe, becauſe he doth alſo ſee that he was appointed by the eternall counſell of God to be a ſacrifice for ſinnes, he doth by and by correct that petition which his huge ſorrowfulnes had wroung out of him, and doth as it were with his owne hand pull backe himſelfe that hee may ſtay himſefe wholy vpon his fathers will.

VVe muſt note in this place fiue degrees. For the complaint poſſeſſeth the firſt place, which breaketh out of his vnmeaſurable ſorrow: ſecondly, he perceiued that he had need of remedie, and leaſt he be ouerwhelmed with feare, he asketh of himſelfe, what he ſhoulde doe: thirdly, hee getteth himſelf vnto his father, and deſireth him to deliuer him: fourthly, he calleth backe that petition which hee knewe was contrary to his calling, and deſireth to ſuffer whatſoeuer, rather then he ſhould not fulfill that function which was enioyned him by his father: Laſtly, beeing content with the Glory of God alone, he forgetteth all other thinges, and ſetteth nothing by them. But this ſeemeth to be vndecent for the ſonne of God, that a petition doth eſcape him vnaduiſedly, whiche hee muſt by and by call backe againe and renounce, that hee may obey the father. I confeſſe indeede that this is the fooliſhnes of the croſſe, wherewith proud men are offended, & wherat they do ſtumble. But the more the Lorde of glory abaſed himſelfe, the more manifeſtly doeth his loue towarde vs appeare. VVe muſt remember that which I ſaid before, that the humane affections from which Chriſte was not free, were in him pure, and free from ſinne: The reaſon is, becauſe they were framed and tempered to obey God. Neither is any let but that Chriſte may feare death naturally, and yet may deſire to obey God: namely according to diuers reſpects. Hence proceedeth that correction, But therefore am I come into this houre. For howe ſoeuer hee feareth death of it ſelfe: yet notwithſtanding becauſe he conſidereth to what ende he was ſent, and what the office of a redeemer doth require, he offereth the feare which he had conceiued by the fealing of nature, to be gouerned of his father: or rather when he had tamed the ſame, being free and at libertie, he addreſſeth himſelfe to doe that which God had commanded him to doe. If ſobeit it was requiſite that the affections of Chriſte whiche were free and pure from all vice ſhoulde be thus brought vnder, that hee might obey his father: how diligent muſt we be in this point, ſeeing that there are as many enemies of God in vs, as there flow affections frō our fleſh? Let this therfore be the meditatiō of the godly, ỹ they do violence to themſelues vntil they denie themſelues. VVe muſt alſo note that we muſt not only bridle thoſe affections which are flat contrarie to the will of God, but alſo thoſe which do hinder the courſe of our calling, although they be not otherwiſe wicked or corrupt. To the ende this may the better appeare, we muſt place the will of God in the firſt degree: & the ſincere & perfect will of man in the ſecond, ſuch as was that whiche God gaue Adam, & ſuch as was that which was in Chriſte: in the laſt, ours, which is infected with ſin. The will of God is a rule wherunto all that muſt be ſubiect which is lower then it is. Nowe the pure will of nature ſhall not rebell againſt God of it ſelfe: yet ſhall man bee preuented with many hinderances, although he be wholy framed to do that which is right, vnleſſe he bring vnder his affections ſo, that they may obey god. Therfore Chriſt had but one and a ſingle combate ſo that he ceaſed to feare that which he feared naturally, whenas he acknowledgeth that it doth pleaſe God, that it ſhould be otherwiſe. But we haue a double combate, becauſe we muſt wraſtle with the ſtubbornnes of our fleſh. Hereby it commeth to paſſe that euen the moſt valiant champions doe not gee the vpper hand without a wound.

Eat her

Father ſaue mee. VVe muſt keepe this order ſo often as we are vexed with feare, or tormented with ſorrowe, that our hearts do ſtraightwaies lift vppe themſelues vnto God: for there is nothing worſe or more hurtfull, then to nouriſh that within, which tormenteth vs, as we ſee a great part of the world gnawe themſelues with blinde torments: and this is a iuſt puniſhment for ſlouthfulneſſe in all thoſe which ariſe not vppe vnto God, that they feele no releaſe and eaſe.

28. Father glorifie thy name. He ſheweth by theſe wordes that he preferreth his fathers glory before all other things, yea he ſetteth nothyng by his life in reſpecte thereof. This is the true moderation of all our petitions, if we doe in ſuch ſort deſire Gods glory, that all other things giue place thereunto. For this recompence oughte to ſatiffie vs abundantly, that we beare and ſuffer thoſe thinges with a quiet minde, which are grieuous and troubleſome vnto vs. And I haue glorified it. Theſe woordes import as much, as if he had ſayd, I will finiſh that which I haue begun: for doubtleſſe God doeth not leaue the worke of his handes vnperfect, as it is in the Pſal. 138.8. And becauſe God his intent and purpoſe was to preuent the offence of the croſſe, he doeth not onely promiſe that the death of Chriſte ſhall be glorious: but doeth alſo ſet out ſo many ornaments wherewith he had already adorned the ſame.

29. That it thundered. This is like to a monſter, that the multitude was aſtonied and became amaſed, when as they ſawe ſo manifeſt a myracle. Some doe heare that with deafe eares, as a confuſed noyſe, which God vttered plainly. Other ſome were not ſo blockiſh: yet doe they greatly diminiſh the maieſtie of the voyce of God, when as they faine that an Angell was the authour thereof. But the ſame is alſo common at thys day. For God ſpeaketh plainly inough in the Goſpell, and the force and efficacie of the ſpirite doeth ſhewe it ſelfe there, whiche ought to ſhake heauen and earth: but this doctrine is as cold amongſt many, as if it did only proceede from a mortall man. Vnto other ſome the word of God is balde and barbarous like vnto thunder. Notwithſtanding, the queſtion is whether that voyce ſounded from heauen, in vain or no. I anſwer, that that which the Euangeliſt doeth heere aſcribe vnto the multitude, doeth only belong vnto a part thereof. For there were ſome beſides the Apoſtles, which were not ſo ſiniſter interpreters: but the Euangeliſt hys meaning was briefly to note, what is wont moſt commonly to happē in the world: to wit, that whē the more part hearing God ſpeak plainely and alowd, it doth not heare.

30. Not for my ſake. Had Chriſte no neede of confirmation, or did the father care leſſe for him then he did for vs? But we muſt holde that maxima that like as Chriſt did put vpon him fleſh for our ſake, ſo what good thinges ſoeuer he receiued of the father, they were beſtowed vpon him for our ſake. Againe, this is alſo true, that the voice came from heauen in reſpecte of the people. For doubteleſſe hee hymſelfe hadde no neede of anye externall myracle. Furthermore heere is a certeine ſecrete kynd of exprobration, that the Iewes are deaffe like ſtones, when as they heare the voice of God. For ſeeing that God ſpeaketh for theyr ſakes, theyr vnthankfulneſſe hath no excuſe, whileſt that they doe not hearken.

31. Now is the iudgement of this world. The Lord hauing ended his com-

bate, and hauing cõquered not only feare, but alſo death, he triumpheth. For he doth royally ſhew forth the fruit of his death, which might haue beene a cauſe of caſting downe and diſcouragement vnto his Diſciples. Some thinke that this woord iudgement doth ſignifie reformation, other ſome thinke that it ſignifieth damnation. I doe rather agree with the former ſorte, who expound it thus, that the world ſhall be reſtored into a good order. For the Hebrew word Miſphat, which is tranſlated iudgment, doth ſignifie good order. And we knowe that without Chriſte there is nothing but confuſion in the world. And although Chriſt had begunne already to erect the kingdome of God, yet was his death the beginning of the well ordered eſtate, and was the perfect reſtoring of the worlde. Yet we muſt note that this good order cannot be had in the worlde, vnleſſe the kingdome of Sathan be firſt aboliſhed, and the fleſh bee brought to nothing, and whatſoeuer is contrary to the righteouſnes of God. Fynally mortification muſt needes goe beefore the newnes of the worlde. Wherefore Chriſt pronounceth that the prince of this world muſte be caſt out: becauſe diſcipation & deformity proceed hence, becauſe whileſt that Sathan vſurpeth his tyranny, iniquitie dooth get the vpper hande. Therefore when as Sathan is once caſt out, the world is reclaymed from backſliding, and is brought vnder the gouernment of God. If anye man demaund now Sathan was caſt out in the death of Chriſt, who ceaſeth not to make warre continually. I anſwere that this caſting out is not reſtrained vnto any ſmall time, but that that excellent effect of Chriſtes death is deſcribed, which appeareth dayly.

Ver. 32. When I ſhalbe lifted vp. The maner of appointing this iudgment doth followe: namely, that Chriſt, when as he is lifted vp vpon the croſſe, ſhal draw al men vnto him, that he may lift them vp from earth to heauen. The Euangeliſt ſaieth, that Chriſte did ſhew the manner of his death. Therfore it is not to be doubted but that the ſence is this, that the croſſe ſhalbe like to a chariot, wherein he may liſte vp all men vnto the Father with him. He might ſeeme then to haue beene lifted vp from the earth, to the end he might haue nothing to doe with men afterward: but hee pronounceth, that it ſhall fall out farre otherwiſe: namely, that hee maye drawe them vnto himſelfe, who were faſtned and wholly ſet vppon the earth. And although he allude vnto the forme of his death, yet hee meaneth generally, that his death ſhalbe no breach, whereby he ſhall bee ſeparated from men, but a new way to drawe the earth into heauen. In that he ſaith, all men, it is to be referred vnto the children of God, who are of his flocke. Yet doe I agree with Chryſoſtome, who teacheth that Chriſt vſed the vniuerſall word: becauſe the Church was to be gathered aſwell of the Gentiles as of the Ieives, according to that, there ſhall bee one ſhepheard, and one ſheepefold, aboue 10. 16. The old latine tranſlation hath, I will draw all thinges vnto me: and Auguſtine holdeth that it ought to be read ſo: but the agreement of al the Greeke bookes ought to be of greater force amongſt vs.

34 The multitude anſwered him, we haue heard out of the lawe, that Chriſte abideth euer: and how ſaiſt thou then the ſonne of man muſt be lifted vp? who is that ſame ſon of manne?

35. Therefore Ieſus ſayd vnto them,yet a litle while is the light with you:walke whilſt that yee haue the light,leaſt the darknes catch you:and he that walketh in darknes,knoweth not whether he goeth.

36. VVhilſt ye haue the light,beleeue in the light,that ye may be the children of the light.Theſe thinges ſpake Ieſus,and going away,he hid himſelf from them.

34 VVe haue heard out of the law. It is queſtionleſſe that their intent was malitiouſly to cauill at the wordes of Chriſt: therefore he maketh them blinde in their owne wickednes,ſo that they can ſee nothing in the clear light. They deny that they muſt take Ieſus for Chriſte, becauſe he ſaide that he ſhould die,whereas the law attributeth vnto the Meſsias perpetuity:as if both theſe were not expreſly ſet downe in the law,that when as Chriſt ſhal dye,his kingdome ſhal floriſh vntill the end of the world. Theſe men take occaſion to cauill, out of the ſeconde member. But the beginning of the errour was this,becauſe they did eſteme the gorgeouſnes of the kingdome of the Meſsias, according to the ſenſe of the fleſhe. Hereby it commeth to paſſe,that they refuſe chriſt,becauſe he is not correſpondent vnto their surmiſe. Vnder this word law they do alſo comprehend the Prophets,and the preſent tence is put in ſteede of the future tence in this word abideth,according to the Hebrew phraſe. This interrogation,who is that ſon of man? conteineth in it a mock,as if Chriſt did yeeld, being ouercome with that ſhort refutation. VVhereby it appeareth how arrogant ignoraunce is. For it importeth as much as if they had ſaid, go thy wayes now,and boaſt thy ſelfe to be Chriſte, ſeeing that thine owne confeſſion proueth that thou art vnlike vnto him.

35. Yet a litle while. Although the Lord doth gently admoniſh them with this anſwere,yet doeth he therewithal prick them ſharply: for he chideth them,becauſe they could not ſee in the light,and doth alſo denounce that the light ſhalbe taken from them ſhortly. VVhē as he ſaith that there remaineth but a ſmal time of light,he confirmeth that which he had already ſaid concerning his death. For although he doth not meane the light of his corporal preſence, but of the goſpel: yet hee alludeth vnto his departure,as if he ſhuld ſay,when as I ſhal then go away,I wil not ceaſe to be light:ſo litle ſhal your darknes be able to impare me. VVhen as hee ſaieth that the light is preſent with them, he toucheth them by the way, becauſe they paſſe ouer the light with ſhut eies. And therefore he giueth them to vnderſtand,that they were vnworthy to haue their obiectiō anſwered,becauſe they miniſter vnto themſelues matter of errour,of their owne accord. VVhenas he ſaith that the light ſhineth vnto them only for a ſhort time,it is a thing common to al the vnbeleeuers:for the ſcripture promiſeth that the ſonne of righteouſnes ſhal ariſe vnto the children of God,which ſhal neuer ſit,Iſai.60.19. The ſunne ſhal not ſhine vnto you hereafter by day,nor the moone by night:but the Lord ſhalbe vnto you an euerlaſting light. Yet muſt al men walk circumſpectly becauſe darknes doeth followe the contempt of the light. VVhich thing was alſo the cauſe that ſuch thick night & darknes did ouerwhelm the whole world, becauſe there were but a few that vouchſafed to go forward when as the brightnes of the heauenly wiſedom appeared vnto them. Chriſt ſhineth vnto vs by the goſpel to the end we may folow the way of ſaluatiō,which he ſheweth. Therfore thoſe men which do not vſe the grace of God, do,aſmuch as in them lieth,extinguiſh the light whiche is offered them,

And

And (to the end he may the more terrifie them) he telleth them how miſerable the eſtate of thoſe men is, who being deſtitute of the light, doe wander during theyr whole life. For they cannot moue their foote forwarde without daunger of ſlyppinge or fallynge. And now Chriſte pronounceth that we are in darknes, vnleſſe he giue vs light. Hence gather of what force the quicknes of mans minde, in ſeeing things is, whē as ſhe is her own miſtreſſe and guid without Chriſt.

36. Beleeue in the light. Hee exhorteth them to poſſeſſe the lighte by fayth. For he calleth thoſe the children of light, who like true heires doe enioy the ſame vntill the end.

Theſe thinges ſpake Ieſus. It may ſeeme a merueilous matter, why he withdrewe himſelfe from them, who receiued him ſo willingly: but we may readily gather out of the other Euangeliſts, that this ſpeach concerneth the enemyes, who were grieued at the godlye deſire of good and playne men. For the ſtraungers, which went out to meete Chriſt, followed him euen into the temple, where hee hit amongſt the Scribes and the multitude of the Citie.

37. Furthermore, although he had wrought ſo many miracles before them, they beleeued not in him:

38. That the woordes of Iſaias the Prophet might be fulfilled, whiche hee ſpake, Lorde, whoe hath beleeued our reporte? and vnto whome is the arme of the Lorde reuealed?

39. Therfore they could not beleeue, becauſe Iſay ſaith, againe:

40. Hee hath blynded their eyes, and hardened theyr hearte, that they may not ſee with theyr eyes, and vnderſtand with theyr heart, and be conuerted, and I may heale them.

41. Theſe thinges, ſayeth Ieſaias, when hee ſawe his glorye, and ſpake of him.

37. Although he had wrought. Leaſt that ſhoulde hinder any manne, that Chriſt was deſpiſed amongſt the Iewes, the Euangeliſte remoueth this ſtumbling blocke, ſhewing that he was furniſhed with excellent and euident teſtimonies, which might make him and his doctrine to be of credit: but yet the blinde did not ſee the power and glorye, whiche ſhined plainly in the miracles. Therefore we muſt firſt of all holde, that Chriſt was not in the faulte, that he was not beleeued amongſt the Iewes: becauſe hee didde aboundantly teſtifie by manye miracles, who hee was: and that therefore it is an vniuſt thing, and contrary to reaſon, that their vnbeliefe ſhould any whit diſcredit him. But becauſe this ſelf ſame thing might haue cauſed many to ſtand in doubte, whence this came, that the Iewes were ſo dull, that the viſible power of God did moue them nothing, Iohn goeth further: namely, that faith ariſeth not from the common ſenſe of man: but that it is a ſinguler and rare gift of God: and that this was ſayde before of Chriſte, that ſcarſe a fewe ſhoulde beleeue the Goſpell.

38. That the wordes of Ieſaias. Iohn meaneth not that there was any neceſsity laide vpon the Iewes by reaſon of the propheſie: neither did Ieſaias vtter any thing, Chap. 53. 1. Rom. 10. 16. ſaue that whiche God had reuealed vnto him out of the hidden treaſures of his counſel. That ſhuld haue happened although the Prophet had ſaid nothing: but becauſe it was not known what ſhuld haue befallen them, vnleſſe God had made it knowne by the mouth of the Prophet, the Euangeliſte ſetteth beefore their eyes, as in a glaſſe, a matter, which was otherwiſe darke, and vncredible almoſt.

Lorde, who hath beeleeued. This ſentence hath two members: in the former Eſay hauing already begunne to ſpeake of Chriſte, ſeeing that hee foreſeeth, that whatſoeuer eyther he ſhould ſpeake, or the Apoſtles ſhuld afterward publiſh, it ſhould be reiected of the Iewes: beeinge as it were aſtonyed with ſome great wonder, he cryeth out, Lorde, who shal beleeue our report? And in the ſecond member he acknowledgeth what was the cauſe that they were ſo few: to witte, becauſe men come not vnto this by theyr owne induſtry: and God dooth not illuminate all men in generall, but dooth onely vouchſafe to graunt the grace of his ſpirite vnto a fewe. And if ſo be the obſtinate vnbeliefe of many ought not to haue hindered the faythful amongſt the Iewes, how few ſoeuer they were: the ſame reaſon ought alſo to perſwade vs, not to be aſhamed of the Goſpell, although it haue but a few Diſciples: yet muſt we eſpecially note that reaſon, which is added, that not their own wit, but the reuelation of God doth make men to be faythful. It is well knowne, that by this woorde arme, is meante the power of GOD. The Prophet telleth vs that the arme of God, whiche is included in the Goſpell, dooth lye hidde, vntyll ſuche time as it bee reuealed, and hee doth alſo teſtifie, that all menne generallye are not partakers of this reuelation. VVhereuppon it followeth that manye beeinge voyde of thys inwarde lyghte, are lefte to theyr blindeneſſe, who in hearing cannot heare.

39. Therfore they could not beleeue. This is ſomwhat harder: beecauſe (as the wordes doe ſound), the way was ſtopt before the Iewes, and the power to beleeue was cutte off, becauſe that the propheſie of the Prophet had adiudged them vnto blindnes, beefore they did chuſe eyther of the two. I anſwere, that there is no abſurdity, if it could not otherwiſe come to paſſe, then God had foreſeene. But wee muſt note that the bare and plaine foreknowledge of God is not the cauſe of things. Although we muſt not ſo much reſpecte the foreknowledge of God in this place, as his iudgment and vengance. For God doth not declare what he ſeeth from heauen menne wil doe, but what he himſelfe wil doe: namely, that he will ſtrike the wicked with dulneſſe and giddineſſe, that he may bee auenged of their wickednes. For here is ſet downe the nigh and inferiour cauſe why God wil haue his word, which is by nature wholſome, to be the cauſe of death and deſtruction vnto the Iewes: to wit, becauſe they had ſo deſerued for their wickednes. It was impoſsible for them to eſcape this puniſhment, when as God had once determined to caſt them off into a reprobate ſenſe, and to turne vnto them the light of his worde into darknes. For this latter propheſie is vnlyke to the former in this: becauſe the Prophet doth teſtifie, that none doe beleeue, ſaue thoſe, whome God dooth illuminate of his free good pleaſure, the cauſe wherof doth not appeare. For ſeeing that all men are loſt alike, God doth of his mere mercy and goodnes diſtinguiſh whom he thinketh good, from the reſt. And here he maketh mention of the hardning of the heart, wherewith God did reuenge and puniſh the wickednes of the vnthankfull people.

They

They which marke not theſe degrees, do wickedly confound and mixe together diuers places of ſcripture.

40. He blinded their eies. This place is taken out of the ſixt chapter of Ieſaias, where the Lorde telleth the Prophet by times, that his paynes which he ſhall beſtow in teaching, ſhall haue no further fruit, ſaue onely that the people ſhall be made worſe. Therefore he ſaith firſt, Go and tel this people: In hearing, heare ye, and heare not. As if he ſhould ſay, I ſend thee to ſpeake vnto thoſe that are deaffe. Afterwarde hee addeth, Make blinde the heart of this people, &c. In which wordes he giueth vs to vnderſtand, that he appointeth his worde to be a puniſhment vnto the reprobate, to the end their blindnes may be made the thicker thereby, and they may be the deeper drowned in darkenes. It is an horrible iudgmēt of God, when as he doth ſo ouerwhelme the mindes of menne with the light of his doctrine, that they are depriued of all vnderſtanding: yea, when as he bringeth darknes vppon them by their onely lyght. Furthermore, we muſt note that that is a thing, which befalleth the woorde of God accidentally, that it doth blinde menne. For there is nothing more vnconuenient, then that trueth ſhould differ nothing from lyinge, that the bread of life ſhuld become deadly poyſon, and that the diſeaſe ſhuld be encreaſed with the medicine. But that is to be imputed vnto the wickednes of man, which turneth life into death. Furthermore, wee muſt note, that the Lord doth ſometime make mens mindes blinde himſelfe, when as he depriueth them of iudgement and vnderſtanding: ſomtimes by Sathan and the falſe Prophetes, when as hee maketh them fooliſhe through their iuglinges: and ſomtimes alſo by his miniſters, when as the doctrine of ſaluation is vnto them hurtfull and deadly. But ſo that the Prophets doe apply themſelues diligently in their function, and commit the fruit of their labor vnto the lord, althogh it fal not out as they wold wiſh, they muſt not faint and faile. Let this be rather ſufficient for them, that they know that God alloweth their labour, although it be vnprofitable to men: yea, that that ſmell of doctrine, whiche the wicked make deadly to themſelues, is good and ſweete to God, as Paule doth teſtifie, 2. Cor. 2. 15. The heart is ſometimes taken in the ſcripture for the place and ſeate of the affections: but in this place (as in manye other) by thys word is meant the intellectiue part of the ſoule (as they call it.) In lyke ſorte Moſes ſaieth, Deut. 29. 4. The Lord hath not giuen thee an hearte to vnderſtand.

That they may not ſee with their eyes. Let vs remember that the Prophet ſpeaketh of the vnbeleeuers, who hadde now already refuſed the grace of God.

It is certeine that all menne are ſuch by nature, vnleſſe the Lorde did frame thoſe whom he hath choſen vnto his obedience: therfore the condition of men is lyke and indifferent from the beginning: but after that the wicked rebelled againſt GOD of their owne accorde and through their own wickednes, this vengeaunce taketh place, that beeing caſt into a reprobate ſenſe, they ceaſe not to runne more & more into their owne deſtruction. Therefore in that the Lorde will not haue them to be conuerted, it floweth from their fault, becauſe they themſelues were vnto themſelues the authours of diſpayre. By theſe words of the Prophet wee are taught briefly after what ſort we beginne to turne vnto God: namelye, lye, when as he lighteneth our heartes, which must needes bee turned away from him so long, as they are ouerwhelmed with the darknesse of Sathan. On the other side, such is the force of the diuine light, that it pulleth vs vnto it, and transformeth vs into the image of God. The fruite of the conuersion is added, which is healing. By which woord the Prophet meaneth prosperous estate, the blessing of God, and consequently deliuerance out of al miseries, which procede from the wrath of God. Now, if this befal the reprobate contrary to the nature of the word, we muste mark the opposition of the contrary vse: namely, that the woord is preached vnto vs, to that end that it may illuminate vs so, that we may know God aright, that it may turne vs vnto God, and reconcile vs vnto him, to the end we may be blessed and happy.

41. These thinges saieth Iesaias. Least the readers should thinke that this testimony is cited out of season, Iohn telleth them plainely, that the Prophet was not a teacher for one age onely, but that the glory of Christe was rather reuealed vnto him, that hee might beare witnesse of those thinges, which should happen in the time of his reigne. For to what end serued the propheticall reuelations, saue only that they might deliuer, as it were, with their handes that which they hadde receiued of GOD. The Euangeliste taketh this for a thing which all menne doe graunte, that Iesaias saw the glory of Christe, whence he gathereth, that hee applyed his doctrine vnto the estate of that kyngdome, whiche shoulde bee.

42. Notwithstanding many, euen of the rulers beleeued in him: but they did not confesse, because of the Pharises, least they should be cast out of the Synagogue.

43. For they loued the glory of men more then the glory of God:

44. But Iesus cried and said, he that beleeueth in me, beleeueth not in me, but in him that sent me.

45. And he that seeth me, seeth him that sent me.

46. I came as a light into the world, to the end that euery one that beleeueth in me, may not abide in darknes.

42. Notwithstanding. Seeinge that the Iewes didde so frowardlye reiecte Christe with so confused a noyse and fearcenesse, it myght seeme that they hadde all conspired together. Notwithstandinge the Euangeliste saieth, that euen in the middest of so great maddenesse of the nation, there were many that were well minded. This is an example of the grace of God worthy to bee remembred: for impiety, after it hath once gotten the vpper hande, it is a certeine vniuersall plague, which infecteth all the partes of the body with the infection thereot. Therefore it is a singuler gift of God, when as some remaine founde in the middeste of a people that was so corrupt. Although the same grace of God appeareth euen at this daye in the world: for how much soeuer vngodlynesse and the contempt of God doe rage euery where, and an infinite companye doe endeuour vtterly to banish the doctrine of the Gospel, yet it findeth many bie places where to rest: whereby it commeth to passe, that fayth hath as it were her resting places, least shee should be quite banished out of the world.

This woorde euen is of great force: for the Gospell was so deadlye hated hated amongſt the rulers, that it is an vncredible thinge, that anye one ſhuld be found there, whiche was ſo faythfull: ſo much the more was the power of the ſpirit to be wondred at, which pearced in thyther, where there was no entraunce. Although this was not the faulte of one age onely, that the rulers were ſtubborne & rebellious againſt Chriſte: for honor & riches & dignitie, haue pride almoſt alwaies to keepe thē company. VVherefore it is a hard matter for thoſe menne to be tamed with willing humility, who beinge puft vppe with arrogancye, doe ſcarſe acknowledge themſelues to be men. Therefore what man ſoeuer is excellent in the word, let him if he be wiſe, not truſt too much to his greatnes, leaſt it be to him an hinderaunce. VVhereas hee ſaieth, that they were many, you muſt not ſo take it, as if they were either the more parte, or the halfe: for being compared vnto others, whereof there was a great multitude, they were but a few: but the ſame were many, if they were cōſidered in themſelues. Because of the Phariſees. Hee ſeemeth to ſpeake vnproperly, when as he ſeparateth faith from confeſsion. For with the hearte man beeleeueth vnto righteouſnes, with the mouth confeſsion is made vnto ſaluation: neither can it be but that faith being once kindled in the heart, ſhe muſt put forth her flame. I aunſwere, that in this place is declared how weake their faith was, who were ſo lukewarm, or rather cold. To be briefe, Iohn meaneth that they embraced the doctrine of Chriſt, becauſe they knew it did proceede from GOD: but yet there was no liuely fayth in them, and ſuch a faith as was endowed with that power, which was requiſite: becauſe Chriſt giueth not vnto thoſe that he liis the ſpirit of feare, but of conſtancy, that they may be bold freely and without feare to confeſſe, that which they haue learned of him. Although I doe not think that theſe were altogether dumbe: yet becauſe their confeſsion was not free enough, the Euangeliſt in my iudgement doth flatly denye that they made confeſsion of their faith. For that was a lawfull profeſsion, openly to giue their names vnto Chriſt. VVherefore let no man flatter himſelfe, who couereth and cloaketh his faith in any point, leaſt he incurre the hatred of men. For how much ſoeuer they hate the name of Chriſte, yet that feare is not to bee excuſed, which compelleth vs to turne aſide, euen but a litle from the confeſsing thereof. Note alſo that there is leſſe ſtrength and conſtancy in the rulers: becauſe ambition doth reigne in them for the moſt parte, then which there is nothing more ſeruile. And (that I may be briefe) earthly honours do as it were bind men with golden fetters, ſo that they cannot doe their duety freely. Therefore thoſe that be baſe and of low eſtate muſt be therewith ſo much the rather contented: becauſe they are free from manye (at leaſt the worſte) ſnares. Neuertheleſſe great and noble men muſt ſtriue with their eſtate, leaſt it be vnto them an hinderance, and keepe them backe from ſubmitting themſelues vnto Chriſt. Iohn ſaieth, that they were afrayde of the Phariſees: not that it was lawful for any man to call himſelfe the Diſciple of Chriſt for the other Prieſts and Scribes: but beecauſe there was a more outragious kynd of crueltye in theſe menne coloured with zeale. Zeale to defend relygion is an excellent vertue: but when as there lyeth hypocriſie vnder it, there canne bee no worſe plague. VVherefore wee muſt the more inſtantly deſire the Lord to gouerne vs with the certeine and ſure rule of his ſpirit.

Leaſt

Least they should be cast out of the Synagogue. Beeholde what was the thing that hindered them: to witte, the feare of infamy: becausse they shuld haue beene cast out of the Synagogue. Furthermore, hecreby appeareth howe great the frowardnes of men is, which doth not onely corrupt the beste ordinaunces of God: but turneth them into deadly tyranny. Excõmunication ought to haue beene a string and sinow for holy discipline, that they might haue a punishment in readines, if any manne did despise the Church. But it was brought to that passe, that whosoeuer did confesse that he was Christes, he was banyshed from the company of the faithfull. Likeas the Pope dooth at this daye falsely pretende the lawe of excommunication, that he may practise the lyke tyrannie: he dooth not only with blind madnesse thunder and cast out his lightenings agaynst all the godly, but dooth also endeuoure to throwe downe Christ out of his heauenlye seate. And yet is he not ashamed impudently to pretende the tytle of the holy iurisdiction, wherewith Christ didde adorne hys Church.

43. For they loued. The Euangelist doth in plaine words set downe, that these men became not superstitious: but did onely auoide reproach amongst men. For if ambitiõ was of more force amongst them, then the feare of God, it followeth that they were set free from the vaine feare of cõscience. Now let the readers mark of what great ignominy their fearfulnes is condemned with God, who dissemble and cloake their fayth amongst men, for feare of enuy. VVhat is more prepostrous, yea what is more beastly, then to preferre the vaine praises of men, before the iudgemente of God? And yet he pronounceth, that they are all possessed with suche madnesse, who auoide the enuy of menne, when as the pure faith must be confessed & that for good causes: for, when as the Apostle, Heb. 11.27. doth commend the inuincible constancy of Moses, he saieth, that he waxed hardye, as if he had seene him that was inuisible. In whiche woordes hee giueth vs to vnderstand, that when as any man hath fastened his eyes vppon God, his heart shall be strong and more hard then the Adamant.

Therefore hence commeth that softnesse, which maketh vs fall awaye vnto vnfaithful dissimulation, becausse al our senses waxe dull in beholding the world. For the sincere beholding of God should by and by put away al the smokes of honour and riches. Let them now go shake theyr eares, who thinke that the wicked denying of Christ is but a lighte and veniall sinne, seeing that the spirit pronounceth on the contrary, that this is a more filthy monster, then if the heauen and earth shuld go together. To loue the glory of men, doth signifie in this place, to be desirous to be esteemed of amongst men. Therefore the Euangelist meaneth that those men were so addicted vnto the woorlde, that they hadde rather please menne then God. Moreouer whyleste that the Euangelist accuseth the denyers of Christ of this crime, hee dooth also declare that excommunication was litle sette by: becausse the high Priestes did abuse it contrarye to equitie and ryghte. VVherefore lette vs knowe that all is but a vaine terrifyinge, what cursinges and excommunications soeuer the Pope dooth thunder out againste vs, when as wee knowe assuredly that hee goeth aboute nothinge elsse, saue onelye to leade vs away from Christ.

44. And Ieſus cryed. This ſentence tendeth to this ende, that Chriſte may encourage his vnto the iuſt and vnbowable conſtancy of faith: yet there is contained herein a reprehenſion, whereby he meant to correcte that wicked feare. The crying ſerueth to make this more vehemēt, becauſe it is not a doctrine onely, but an exhortation alſo to prick them forward. The ſum is this, that the faith in Chriſt doth not leane vnto any mortal man, but vnto God: becauſe it findeth nothing in Chriſt, but that which is diuine: yea, it beholdeth God in his face. Thence he gathereth that it is an abſurd thing that it ſhuld faint and quaile, as being doubtful. For we cannot do God greater iniury, then if his trueth bee not ſufficiente for vs. Therefore that man hath rightly profited in the Goſpel, who leaning vnto this confidence & hope, that he beleeueth not men, but God, doth perſiſt ſtrong and quiet againſt al the engines of Satan: therefore to the end we may giue God his honour, let vs learne that we muſt ſtande in the faith not only when as the world doth faile, but alſo when as Satan doth trouble and ſupplant whatſoeuer is vnder heauen. The faithful are ſaid not to beleeue in Chriſt, when as they doe not abyde in beholdinge him as hee is manne. For when as hee compareth himſelfe in this place with the father, he commaundeth vs to haue reſpecte vnto the power of God, becauſe the weakenes of the fleſhe hath of it ſelfe no ſtrength. VVhen as he ſhall afterward exhort the diſciples to beleeue in him, hys wordes ſhall haue another meaning. For God is not ſet in that place againſt man: but Chriſt is ſet in the midſt with al his giftes, which ought to haue ſufficient force to retaine our fayth.

45. And he that ſeeth me. Take this ſight for knowledge. For, to the ende he may ſet at reſt the conſciences, who ſhould otherwiſe be ſubiecte to many toſsinges and turmoylinges, he calleth vs vnto the father. For the ſtabilitie of faith is certeine and firme for this cauſe, becauſe it is aboue the world. And when as Chriſt is truely knowyn, the glory of God ſhineth in him, ſo that we maye knowe aſſuredly that the faith which wee haue in him doth not depend vpon man: but that it is grounded in the eternal God, becauſe it riſeth from the fleſh of Chriſt vnto his diuinity: which thing if it be ſo, it muſt not only be ſetled continually in the hart, but alſo it muſt vtter it ſelf in the tongue without feare, when need ſhal require.

46. I came as a light. To the end hee may make his diſciples the more ſtout and ſtrong, he proceedeth yet in preaching the certeinty of fayth. And he doth firſt of all teſtifie that hee came into the worlde, that hee might be a light, whereby men may be delinered from darknes and errours: and alſo aſsigneth the meanes to attaine vnto ſo great goodnes, ſaying, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in me, &c. Furthermore hee accuſeth them all of vnthankefulnes, who being taught by his Goſpel, doe not ſeparate themſelues from the vnbeleeuers. For the more excellēt this good thing is, to be called out of darknes into light, the leſſe excuſe haue they, who choake the light that is kindled in them with their ſlouthfulnes & cōtempt. Theſe wordes are of great force, I came as a light into the world. For althogh Chriſt was a light from the beginning, yet doth he not in vain adorne himſelf with this title, that he came to fulfill the function of the light. And (to the ende we may haue diſtinct degrees) hee teacheth that he is rather a light vnto others, then vnto himſelf: and ſecondly, not only ly to Angels,but alſo to men:thirdly, that he was reueaſed in the fleſh, to the end he might ſhew forth perfect brightnes. The vniuerſall word ſeemeth to be put in of ſet purpoſe,partly to the end he might make this goodneſſe common vnto all the faithfull without exception, partelye that he might ſhew that the vnbeleeuers do therfore periſhe in darknes, becauſe they flye from the light of their own accord. Nowe, if all the wiſdome of the world be gathered togeather, there ſhall not be founde one ſparkle of true light in that huge heape,but it ſhall be rather a lump without forme:for as much as it is proper to Chriſt alone to deliuer vs out of darknes.

47. And if any man ſhal heare my words,and ſhal not beleeue,I do not iudge him:for I came not to iudge the world,but to ſaue the world.

48. He that reieɔteth me,and doth not receiue my words,hee hath one that ſhal iudge him:the word which I haue ſpoken,it ſhal iudge him in the laſt day.

49. Becauſe I haue not ſpoken of my ſelf: but the father that ſent me,he gaue me a commandement,what I ſhal ſay,and what I ſhall ſpeake.

50. And I know that his commandement is eternal life. The things therfore which I ſpeake as the father hath told me,ſo ſpeak I.

47. If any man ſhall heare my woordes. After that he hath entreated of his grace,and exhorted thoſe that are his,vnto conſtancie of faith,he beginneth now to nettle the rebellious. Although he doeth in this place alſo mitigate the ſeuerity, whereof their vngodlineſſe is woorthy, who do as it were of ſette purpoſe reiecte God: For he omitteth to iudge them,becauſe hee came rather to ſaue all men. VVe muſt firſt of all vnderſtande that he ſpeaketh not in this place of all manner of vnbeleeuers, but of thoſe,who willingly and wittingly doe reiecte the doctrine of the Goſpell which is ſhewed them. VVhy then will not Chriſt condēne them? becauſe,hauing laid away the perſon of a iudge in this place, to the end all menne may be the more encouraged to repent, he offereth ſaluation vnto all men in generall, and holdeth his armes abroade to embrace all men. Although in the meane ſeaſon he amplifieth the fault with no ſmal circumſtance, if they refuſe ſo gentle and ſweete an inuitation. For it is as much as if he had ſaid: Behold,I ſtand to cal all men,and hauing forgotten the perſon of a iudge,this is mine only purpoſe,to allure al men, and to deliuer thoſe from deſtruction, who ſeeme to be twiſe deſtroyed already. Therefore no man is condemned for the contempt of the Goſpel,ſaue he,who deſpiſing the louely meſſage of ſaluation, would of his owne accorde bring deſtruction vppon himſelfe. The worde (iudge) (as appeareth by the contrary, ſaue.)is heere taken for to condemne. And thys ought to be referred vnto the proper and naturall office of Chriſt. For in that the vnbeleeuers are more greuouſly condemned for the Goſpels ſake,it is an accidentall thing, and not naturall to the ſame, as we haue elſe where ſayde.

48. He that reiecteth me. Leaſt the wicked ſhoulde flatter themſelues,as if they might play the wātōs againſt Chriſt freely, he addeth in this place an horrible denunciation,that though he ſay nothing,yet is the doctrine ſufficient to condemne them, like as he ſaieth elſe where, that they haue no neede of anye other iudge then Moſes, of whome they made theyr boaſt, aboue: 5.45. The meaning therefore of the wordes is this, I beeing enflamed with an earneſt deſire to haue you ſaued, doe abſtaine from mine own authority in condemning you, and am wholye bente to ſaue that whiche is loſte: but you maye not therefore thinke that you are eſcaped out of the hand of God. For howſoeuer I hold my peace, that word which you haue deſpiſed, is a fitte iudge.

And doth not receiue my wordes. The latter member expoundeth the former: for becauſe hypocriſie is naturally engrafted in men, they canne do nothing more readily, then onely in word boaſte that they are ready to receiue Chriſt. And we know how cõmon this boaſting is euen amõgſt the worſt men. VVherefore we muſt marke this definition, that Chriſt is reiected, when as we doe not imbrace the pure doctrine of the Goſpell. The Papiſtes doe with full and open mouth blunder out the name of Chriſt: but ſo ſoone as his ſincere trueth is brought abroad, there is nothing which is more deteſted amongſt them, ſuch men kyſſe Chriſte, as did Iudas. Therfore let vs learne to include him in his word, and to giue him the worſhip of obedience, which he requireth only. The word which I ſpeake. The authority of the Goſpell coulde not haue had greater commendation giuen it, then when as the power of iudgement is attributed vnto it. For, according to theſe words, the laſt iudgment ſhalbe nothing elſe, but an approbation of the doctrine of the Goſpell. Chriſte him ſelfe ſhal goe vppe into his iudgement ſeate: but hee affirmeth that hee wil giue ſentence according to the word whiche is now preached. This denuntiation ought to make the wicked ſore afrayd, when as they ſhalt not be able to eſcape the iudgment of that doctrine, which they do now ſo proudly ſloute. Notwithſtanding Chriſt his meaning is, that they are now depriued of feeling, when as he maketh mention of the laſt iudgement. For he telleth them that that puniſhment ſhal then manifeſtly appeare, which they doe now mocke. Againe, the godly may gather hence an ineſtimable comforte, that howſoeuer they are condemned of the world, yet do they not doubt, but that they are acquited in heauen, becauſe wheroſoeuer the faith of the Goſpell hath a place, the iudgemente ſeate of God is erected there to ſaue. There is no cauſe why wee ſhould paſſe for the Papiſts with their peruerſe iudgements, ſo long as we truſt to this right: becauſe our faith doth ſurpaſſe the Angels.

49. Becauſe I ſpeake not of myſelfe. Leaſt the outwarde ſhape of manne ſhould any whitte impaire the maieſty of God, Chriſt dooth euer nowe and then call vs vnto the Father. For this cauſe dooth hee ſo often make mention of the Father. And truely ſeeing that it is wickednes to tranſlate any iot of Gods glory vnto any other, it muſt needes be, that that word came from GOD, whereunto the iudgement is aſcribed. In this place Chriſt diſtinguiſheth himſelfe from the Father, not ſimplye, according to his diuine perſõ, but rather according to the fleſh, leaſt his doctrin being eſteemed after the maner of men, ſhuld be of leſſe weight & importãce. But and if the conſciences were ſubiect to the doctrine and lawes of mẽ, this reaſon ſhuld not agree, which Chriſt bringeth. My word (ſaith he) ſhal iudge, becauſe it came not frõ mã, according to that ſaying of Ia. 4. 12. There is one lawgiuer, &c. Moreouer we gather hence, what monſtrous ſacrilledge

this is, that the Pope durſte tye mennes ſoules vnto his inuentions: for by thys meanes hee taketh more to hymſelfe, then the Sonne of God, whoe ſayeth, that he ſpeaketh onelye according to his Fathers appointmente.

50. His commaundement is eternal lyfe. Hee commendeth againe the fruite of his doctrine, to the ende al menne may the more willingly ſubmitte themſelues thereunto. And nowe it is meete that the wicked doe feele Gods vengeaunce, whom they now refuſe, and wil not haue to be vnto them the authour of life.

Chap. 13.

1. BEfore the holye daye of Eaſter, when Ieſus knewe that his houre was come, that he ſhould go out of this worlde vnto the father, ſeeing that he loued his, which were in the world, vntil the end loued he them.

2. VVhen ſupper was ended, when as the deuil had now put into the hart of Iudas, the ſon of Simon Iſcariot, to betray him,

3. VVhen Ieſus knew that the father had giuen al things into his hands, and that he came out from God, and ſhould go vnto God,

4. He roſe from ſupper, and layd downe his cloathes: and hauing taken a linnen towell, he girded himſelf.

5. Then put he water into a baſon, and began to waſh the diſciples feete, and to wype them with the towel, wherwith he was girded.

6. Therefore he came to Simon Peter: who ſaith vnto him, Lord, doeſt thou waſh my feete?

7. Ieſus anſwered and ſaid vnto him, what I doe, thou knoweſt not yet: but thou ſhalte know hereafter.

1. Before the holy day. Iohn paſſeth ouer many thinges of ſette purpoſe, which he knew Matthew and Luke had recited: and hee himſelfe taketh in hande to handle that whiche hee knew they had omitted: of which number the hyſtory of the waſhing of the feete is. And although he will more plainely declare afterward to what end Chriſt waſhed his diſciples feete, yet doth he in one word in this place ſette downe, that the conſtant and perpetuall loue wherewith hee once loued them, was declared by that token, ſo that although hee were taken out of their ſight, yet might they certeinelye perſwade themſelues, that this loue was not quenched by death. VVhich perſwaſion muſte ſticke faſte euen in our heartes at this daye. The woordes are, that Chriſt loued thoſe euen vntil the end, which were in the worlde. VVhy doth he deſcribe the Apoſtls by this Periphraſis, ſaue onely that we may know that Chriſte cared ſo muche the more for them: becauſe they were in a daungerous and harde warfare, as wee are? VVherefore although we ſeeme to be farre off from Chriſt, yet we muſt knowe that he hath reſpect vnto vs, becauſe he loueth his, who are conuerſant in the world. Neither nede we to doubt, but that he beareth the lyke affection euen now, which he had at that inſtant, when he loued them.

That hee might goe out of this worlde, vnto the father. This phraſe is woorthy the noting: for it is referred vnto Chriſt his knowledge, in that he knew that his death was a paſſage vnto the heauenly kingdome of God. And if ſo bee it, when as he made haſte thither, he ceaſed not to loue hys, as he was woont, there is no cauſe why we ſhoulde thinke that his affection is now altered. Now for aſmuch as he is the firſt begotten of the dead, this definition of death doth appertaine vnto the whole body of the church, that it is a paſſage vnto God, from whome the faithfull are now eſtranged.

2. When ſupper was done. VVee ſhall anon handle more at large in hys place the whole purpoſe of Chriſt, in waſhing his diſciples feete, and alſo the fruite of this hyſtory: let vs now follow the text. He ſaieth, that this was done at ſuch time, as Iudas was determined to betraye Chriſte: not onely that he might ſhew forth the wonderfull patience of Chriſt, who could abide to waſh ſuch a wicked and falſe traitours feete: but alſo that he choſe that time of ſette purpoſe, wherein he would play the laſt acte of his life, being euen at deathes dore. In that he ſaith, that Iudas conceiued the intent and purpoſe to betray his maſter, through the inſtigation and perſwaſion of the deuill, this ſerueth to expreſſe the crueltye of the wickednes. For that was an horrible & more then a tragical fact, wherin the efficacie and force of Sathan did ſhew forth it ſelfe. It is true, that men commit no wickednes, whereunto Sathan doth not pricke thē forwarde: but the more cruell and execrable that euery fact is, ſo wee muſt ſo much the more conſider the fury of the deuill in it, who dooth carrye men, which are forſaken of God hither and thither. But although mans concupiſcence be kindled with the fanne of Satan: yet doth it not ceaſe to be a furnace it ſelfe, it hath fire in it ſelfe, it receiueth the mouinge of the fanne willingly, ſo that the wicked are without al excuſe.

3. VVhen Ieſus knew that the father had giuen all thinges into his hand. I thinke that this was added for this cauſe, to the end wee may knowe whence it was that Chriſt was ſo quiet in minde: to witte, becauſe hauing alreadye ouercome death, he lyfted vppe his minde towarde the triumph whiche ſhould immediately follow. Menne are woont to tolle many things too and fro in their mindes, when as they are afraide. The Euangeliſte giueth vs to vnderſtand that there was no ſuch motion in Chriſte: becauſe although he ſhould immediately be betrayed of Iudas, yet he knew that his father hadde giuen him all thinges. If any manne aske, howe it was then that he was afterwarde ſo ſorrowfull, that hee ſwette bloud: I aunſwere that both thinges were neceſſary, that he ſhuld be afraid of death, and that yet notwithſtanding hee ſhould fulfill the whole function of a mediatour.

4 He laid away his clothes Vnderſtande that hee laide away his vpper garment only, not his coate. For we know that the men of the Eaſt parts of the world did vſe long garmentes. The wordes which follow ſhortly after, he beganne to waſh the feete, &c. doe rather expreſſe Chriſt his purpoſe, then the external acte: for the Euangeliſt ſaieth afterward, that he began with Peter.

6. Lord, doeſt thou waſh my feete? This ſpeach is proper to one that abhorreth an abſurde and vndecent thinge: for when as hee asketh Chriſte what he doth, he doth as it were lay hand vpon him. This modeſty were laudable, if ſo be it obedience were not more worthe in the ſighte of

God,

God,then all manner of worſhip and honour: yea,if this were not the true and onely rule of humilitie, to ſubmit our ſelues to obey God,and to haue all our ſenſes bound to his will:to the end we may allowe that without any controuerſie,whatſoeuer he ſaith doth pleaſe him. Therefore we muſt chiefly keepe this law and rule of worſhipping,to be ready without delay to ſubſcribe and giue our conſent,ſo ſoone as he commãdeth any thing.

7. What I do. VVe are taught in theſe wordes that we muſt ſimplye obey Chriſt,although we ſee no reaſon why he will haue vs to doe this or that.In a well ordered houſe,counſel is in the power of the good man of the houſe alone: the ſeruauntes muſt with foote and hande doe that which he willeth thē to do:therfore he is too proud ỳ refuſeth to do that which God commaundeth hym to do, though he know no reaſō therof.Moreouer this admonitiō reacheth farther:to wit,that it be no trouble to vs to be ignoraunt of thoſe thinges, which God will haue to bee hidden from vs for a time. For this kind of ignorauncе is better learned then all manner of knowledge,when as we ſuffer God to be wiſer then we our ſelues are.

8. Peter ſaith vnto him,thou ſhalt neuer waſh my feete.Ieſus anſwered him, ſayinge, If I waſh not thee,thou ſhalt haue no part with me.

9.Simon Peter ſaieth vnto him, Lorde,not my feete onely, but my hands and my head.

10. Ieſus ſaith vnto him,he that is waſhed,hath neeede to be waſhed, ſaue only his feete,but is al cleane:and ye are cleane,but not al:

11. For he knew his betrayer:therefore he ſaid,ye are not al cleane.

8. Thou ſhalt not waſh. The modeſty of Peter was hitherto excuſable, although it was not cleane without fault:notwithſtanding he offendeth now more grieuouſly, in that he yeeldeth not being reproued. This is a common vice,that ſtubbernnes commeth vnto errour. This was a fayre coulour,becauſe his refuſall did proceede from reuerence:but becauſe he doth not ſimply obey the ſaying,the very deſire to maintain Chriſte his honour,doth looſe his grace. Therfore this is the true wiſdome of fayth, to allow and reuerently to imbraee that as doone rightly and orderlye, whatſoeuer doth proceede from the Lord. For we cānot otherwiſe hallow his name:becauſe vnleſſe we be perſwaded that that is don by good reaſon,whatſoeuer he doth,our fleſh will euer now and then repine, as it is froward,and will not yeelde vnto him his honour,vnleſſe it be conſtrained.To be briefe, vntill ſuch time as manne do diſpoyle himſelfe of liberty to iudge in the workes of God,although he endeuoure to honor God himſelfe, yet pride ſhall alwayes lye hid vnder colour of humilitie, If I ſhall not waſh thee. This anſwere which Chriſte maketh, doth not yet expreſſe to what end he determined to waſh the diſciples feete, he teacheth only by a ſimilitude fet from the ſoule to the body,that he doth no new thing,or which did not agree with his perſon in waſhing the diſciples feete.In the meane whil he ſheweth how fooliſhly Pet.is wife. The ſame thing doth befal vs in like ſort,ſo oftē as the lord ſhal once begin to ſtriue with vs.So long as he holdeth his peace,men do think that they do not diſagree with him raſhly:but hee can do nothing more readily,then with one word refute,what excuſes ſoeuer they pretend.Becauſe Chriſte is hys Lord and maiſter,Peter thinketh it an abſurd thing, that he ſhuld waſh his feet:but whē as he refuſeth this duty,hee refuſeth that which is the chiefeſt thing in his ſaluation,

This ſentence dooth alſo comprehende a generall doctrine, that wee are all filthy and polluted before God, vntill Chriſt doe wype away our filthineſſe. Now ſeeing that he challengeth to himſelfe alone the office of waſhing, let euery manne offer his vncleanneſſe vnto him to be waſhed, that he may haue a place amongſt the chyldren of God. But before wee goe any further, we muſt marke what this woord wash dooth ſignifie in this place. There be ſome that referre it vnto free forgiuenes of ſinnes, otherſome which referre it vnto newnes of lyfe, the third ſorte extend it vnto both, which laſt I doe willingly admitte. For Chriſt doth waſh vs when he wypeth away our ſinnes with the ſatiſfaction of his ſacrifice, that they may not come into Gods iudgemente: hee waſheth vs agayne, when as he abolyſheth the wicked and corrupt luſtes of our fleſhe with his ſpirite. But beecauſe it ſhall appeare ſhortelye after in the texte, that hee ſpeaketh of the grace of regeneration, I do not flatly think & holde, that he ſpeaketh in this place of the waſhing of pardon.

9. Lord, not onely my feete. VVhen Peter heard that he was loſt, vnleſſe he ſhould ſuffer himſelfe to be waſhed, when as Chriſt offered to do this thing, this neceſsity was at length a fitte miſtreſſe to tame him: therefore ceaſing any longer to contend, he yeelded, but he will bee washed all ouer: and he confeſſeth indeede that how great ſoeuer hee was, yet was he wholly polluted naturally with filthines: and that therefore it is as good as nothing, if he be but waſhed in one part onely. But heere hee erreth lykewiſe through raſhnes, in that he maketh no accounte of that benefitte, which hee hadde alreadye receiued. For hee ſpeaketh as if hee hadde beene indued with no remiſsion of ſins as yet, with no ſanctification of the ſpirit. Therefore is he reprehended in this place by Chriſte for good cauſes. For hee putteth him in minde of that, which he had giuen him before: although he teacheth all thoſe that bee his vnder the perſonne of one manne, that being mindefull of that grace, which they haue receyued, they conſider with themſelues what they haue neede of as yet hereafter.

Firſt of all, he ſaieth, that the faythfull are cleane all, not that they are ſo cleane in euery parte, that there is no blot in them any longer: but becauſe they are cleanſed in their principall part: to witte, whileſt that the kingdome of ſinne is taken away, ſo that the righteouſneſſe of GOD hath the vpper hande: like as if any manne ſhoulde ſaye, that al his bodye is whole, becauſe it is not infected with any vniuerſall diſeaſe. Therfore it is meete that we teſtifie by newneſſe of life that we are Chriſt his Diſciples, ſeeing that he affirmeth that he is the authour of puritie in all thoſe that are his.

This other ſimilytude is alſo applyed vnto this preſent matter, leaſt Peter ſhulde reiect the waſhinge of his feete as abſurd. For as Chriſt waſheth euen from the head to the feete thoſe whom he chuſeth to bee his diſciples: ſo the lower part of thoſe men muſt be daily purged, whom he hath purged. For the children of god are not wholly regenerated the very firſt day, ſo that they liue an heauenlye life altogether: but there doe rather remaine in them certeine reliques of the fleſhe, againſt which they ſtryue during their whole lyfe. Therefore all the affections and cares, which are worldly, are called the feete metaphorycallye.

For

For if the ſpirite did poſſeſſe all partes of vs, wee ſhoulde haue nothing to doe any longer with the filthineſſe of the worlde. And nowe in what part ſoeuer we are carnall, ſo farre are we vncleane by creeping vpon the grounde, or at leaſt by treading in the myre. So that Chriſte doth alwayes find ſome thing to purge in vs. Furthermore, he intreateth not in this place of remiſsion of ſinnes, but of the renuing wherby Chriſt exempteth his quire from the luſtes of the fleſh by little and little and by continuall ſucceſsion.

10 And you are cleane. This is as it were the minor propoſition in the Sillogiſme, whereuppon it followeth that the waſhing of the feete doth become them properly. Yet there is an exception added, that euery man may examine himſelfe, if peraduenture Iudas might bee touched with a deſire to repent: although his intent was, betimes to arme the other Diſciples, leaſt the crueltie of that hayneus fact which ſhould bee reuealed incontinent, ſhould trouble them, as if it had been conceiued in an heart endowed with the heauenly grace. Notwithſtanding he doth conceale his name of ſet purpoſe, leaſt he ſhould ſhut the gate of repentance againſt him. But foraſmuch as he was deſperate, the admonition ſerued to none other ende, but to augment his fault, as for the diſciples it profited them much, becauſe the diuinitie of Chriſt did more plainely appeare vnto them thereby: and againe they did perceiue that puritie was a moſt ſinguler gift of the ſpirite.

12 Therefore after that he had washed their feete, and had taken his cloathing again, ſitting downe againe, he ſaith vnto them, know yee what I haue done?

13 You call mee, Maſter and Lord: and ye ſay well, for I am.

14 Therefore if I who am your Lord and maſter haue washed your feete: you muſt alſo wash one anothers feet.

15 For I haue giuen you an example, that as I haue done vnto you, ſo you may doe alſo.

16 Verily, verily I ſay vnto you, the ſeruant is not greater then his maſter, neyther the Apoſtle greater then he that ſendeth him.

17 If yee know theſe thinges, happie are yee if ye doe them.

12 Therefore after that. He doth now at length declare to what end Chriſt did waſh his diſciples feete. For that which he put in concerning the ſpiritual waſhing, was, as it were, a digreſsion from the purpoſe. Vnleſſe Peter had made a ſtay, Chriſt had ſpoken nothing concerning that matter. Therefore he doth now render a reaſon why he did this: to wit, that he who was ϕ Lord and Maſter of all, had giuen an example which all the godly muſt follow: leaſt any man ſhould grudge to abaſe himſelfe to doe any maner of dutie how baſe and vile ſoeuer it bee, to his brethren and equals. For hence commeth the contempt of charitie, becauſe whileſt euery man maketh more account of himſelf then is meet, he deſpiceth al other men almoſt. Neither was it his intent only to teach modeſtie: but alſo to preſcribe this rule of loue, that one doe ſerue another. For there is no loue, where there is not mutual bondage in helping the neighbour.

Know yee what I haue done? VVee ſee that Chriſt kept this thing from his diſciples for a ſmal time, ſo that when as hee had proued their obedience he reuealed that in due time, whereof it was meete they ſhoulde be ignorant before. Neither doth he ſtay nowe vntill ſuch time as they aske him, but he preuenteth them of his owne accord: The ſame thing ſhall befall vs likewiſe if we ſuffer our ſelues to bee led through vnknowen wayes by his hand.

14 If I who am your Lorde and Maſter. This is an argument drawen from the greater to the leſſer. Pride will not ſuffer vs to reraine that equalitie amongeſt our ſelues which we ought: but Chriſt who excelleth all, doth abaſe himſelfe, that he may make prowde men aſhamed, who forgetting their order and degree, doe exempt them ſelues from brotherly fellowſhip. For whom doeth mortall man thinke himſelfe to be, if he refuſe to beare the burden of his brethren, to apply himſelfe to the conditions of other men? Finally, to doe thoſe duetes wherein the vnitie of the Church is contained. The ſumme is this, that that man doth take too much vpon him, who doth not thinke that he is conuerſaunt amongeſt his weake brethren vpon that condition, that hee may ſubmit himſelfe meekely and gently vnto thoſe offices whiche ſeeme to be vncomely and filthie. VVe muſt alſo note that Chriſt telleth them that he had giuen them an example. Neither muſt we make all his facts examples in generall, that we may follow them. The Papiſts do boaſt that they doe keepe the faſt of Lent imitating therein the example of Chriſt. But we muſt firſt mark whether he did this to the end his diſciples ſhould frame themſelues to doe the like or no. VVe reade of no ſuch thing, wherfore it is no leſſe peruers emulation then if they did aſſay to flie into heauen.

Moreouer, whereas they ought to haue followed Chriſt, they became Apes rather then followers. They ordeine euery yere a publike waſhing of the feete as it were vpon a ſtage: ſo that they thinke that they haue fulfilled the bare and vaine ceremonie excellently: when they haue done this they ſuffer themſelues freely to contemne their brethren. And not that onely, but after that they haue waſhed twelue mens feete, they pull in peeces all Chriſtes members cruelly, and ſo conſequently do euen ſpit in Chriſt his face. VVherefore that comicall pompe is nothing els but a meere and filthie mocking of Chriſt. Neither doth Chriſt in this place commende vnto vs a yeerely ryte: but hee commaundeth vs to bee readie duringe our whole life to waſhe the feete of our brethren.

16 Verily, verily I ſay vnto you. Theſe are prouerbiall ſentences the vſe whereof reacheth farther: which notwithſtanding are to bee applyed vnto this preſent circumſtaunce. VVherefore they are deceiued in my iudgement which take them generally, as if Chriſte did in this place exhort his diſciples to beare the croſſe: for this is true that he vſed them for his purpoſe. Hee addeth afterwarde, that. they are bleſſed if they know them and doe them. For that doth not deſeruc to bee called true knowledge which doth not bring the faithfull ſo far, that they may become like to their head. It is rather a vaine imagination, whileſt that we beholde Chriſte, and thoſe thinges which are Chriſtes without vs. Gather hence that vntill ſuche time as a man ſhall learne to ſubmit himſelfe vnto his brethren, he knoweth not whether Chriſt be his maſter or no. And for-foraſmuch as no man doth ſubmit himſelfe vnto his brethren in all reſpects, and many men doe alſo exerciſe themſelues ſleightly and coldly in the duties of loue,it appeareth heereby how farre we are as yet frō the full light of faith.

18 I ſpeake not of you all: I knowe whome I haue choſen: but that the Scripture may bee fulfilled, hee that eateth bread with mee, hath lifted vppe his heele againſte mee, 19 Now I tell you before it be doone, that when it is done,you may beleeue, that I am.

20 Verily,verily I ſay vnto you,he that receiueth if I ſhal ſend any,he receiueth mee: and he that receiueth me,receiueth him that ſent mee.

18 I ſpeake not of you all. Hee giueth them to vnderſtand againe, that there is one amongeſt the Diſciples who is nothing leſſe in very deede then a Diſciple,and this doth he partly for Iudas his ſake,to the ende he may make him the more inexcuſable: partly becauſe of the reſt of the companie,leaſt Iudas his fall doe ſubuert any of them. Neither doeth he only encourage them,to ſtand neuertheleſſe in their calling, though Iudas doe fall: but becauſe the felicitie whereof he made mention is not common to all men, hee teacheth that it is ſo much the more earneſtly to be deſired,and that we muſt ſo much the more conſtantly abide therin.

Nowe hee attributeth this thing to their election, in that they ſhall ſtand. For as mans power is fraile,it ſhould yeeld at euery blaſt, and ſhould fall with euery vehement motion,vnleſſe the Lorde did vphold it with his hand: and becauſe he gouerneth thoſe whom he hath choſen, what engines ſoeuer Satan doth erect againſt them,yet ſhall he not preuaile,but they ſhall perſeuere firme and conſtant euen vntil the end. Neither doth he only affirm that they muſt confeſſe,ſ they receiue perſeuerance frō their electiō,but alſo the beginning of godlines. How cōmeth it to paſſe that one man doth more addict himſelfe vnto the worde of God then another? euen becauſe he is elected. Againe,how commeth it to paſſe that the ſame man goeth forwarde in the right courſe of godly life, ſaue only becauſe Gods purpoſe is ſtable,and that he will finiſhe the worke which he hath begunne with his hande? Finally,this is the fountaine of the difference betweene the children of God and the vnbeleeuers,that the former ſort are drawen vnto ſaluation by the ſpirit of adoption,the other are carried headlong into deſtruction by their vnbrideled fleſh. Otherwiſe Chriſt might haue ſaide, I knowe what euerie one of you will be. And to the end they may arrogate nothing to themſelues,but may rather acknowledge that they differ from Iudas by grace only,and not by their owne power,he ſetteth before them free election, that in it they may be grounded. Wherefore let vs learne,that all the partes of our ſaluation doe depend thereupon. And whereas hee reckoneth Iudas in another place amongeſt the elect, it is another manner of ſpeech,& not contrary. For he ſpeaketh in that place of the temporall election,whereby God appointeth vs vnto ſome certaine kind of worke: as Saul who was elected to bee a king,yet was he a reprobate.

But

But Christ intreateth now of the eternall election, wherby we are made the children of God, & wherby God hath predestinated vs vnto life, before the worlde was made. God doth sometimes adorne the reprobate with ꝑ gifts of the spirit, that they may execute that function wherunto they are called. So princely vertues do appear for a time in Saul, so Iudas did excel in such notable gifts, as were meet for an Apostle of Christ. But ꝑ sanctificatiō of the spirit which ꝑ Lord doth vouchsafe to bestow vpon none saue only his children, is farre vnlike to these. For he renueth them in minde and heart, to the ende they may bee holy and without blame in his sight. Secondly it hath a liuely roote in them, which can neuer be plucked vp, because God doth not repent him selfe of his adoption. In the meane season this remaineth sure and certaine, that it is the gift of Gods election, that whenas we haue embraced Christ his doctrine by faith, we doe also follow e it in life: and that this is the onely cause of our blessednes, whereby we are distinguished from the reprobate, that they being destitute of the grace of the spirite do wickedly perish: we haue Christ to be our keeper, who gouerneth vs with his hand, & defendeth vs with his power.

Furthermore, Christ giueth in this place an euident testimonie of his diuinitie. First of al, when he saith that he iudgeth not after the manner of men: secondly, when he maketh himselfe the authour of Election. For this knowledge whereof he speaketh, is proper to God: but this other thing is more effectuall when he testifieth that hee did choose those that were chosen before the creation of the worlde. For this so excellent a token of his diuine power ought to moue vs more, then if the Scripture should call him God an hundred times.

That the scripture may be fulfilled. It might haue seemed to haue been an absurd thing, that he that was elected to be of so honourable an order, should not also haue beene endowed with true godlinesse. For it was a readie obiection, why Christe had not chosen him whom he meant to make one of his Apostles. Yea, why he made him an Apostle, whom he knew would be such a wicked fellow. Therefore he telleth them that it was meete it should be so, because it was foretolde: or at least that this was no new thing, because Dauid had tryed the same. For some doe thinke that the prophesie whiche is cited, belongeth properly to Christe. Some other doe thinke that it is a plaine comparison, that as Dauid was betrayed by an housholde enemie, and that vniustly: euen so Gods children are subiect to the like estate. As those men think, the sense should bee, whereas one of my disciples is a wicked traytour and betrayer of his master, this is not the first falshood of that sort that hath been in the world: but rather that commeth to passe at this day, whiche the scripture doth testifie was done in times past. But forasmuche as that was shadowed in Dauid, which did appeare more plainely afterwarde in Christ, I doe willingly agree with the former sort, who say that that was properly fulfilled, which Dauid had foretold by the spirite of prophesie. Psal. 41. 10. Othersome think that it is an vnperfect sentence wherein the principall verbe must be vnderstood. But if you reade it in one texte, that the scripture may be fulfilled, Hee that eateth bread with mee, hee lifteth vp his heele against mee, there shalbe nothing wanting.

Further-

Furthermore, to lift vp the heele doth ſignifie metaphorically, to ſet vpon any man craftily vnder pretence of friendſhip, that he may be oppreſſed at vnawares.

Now we muſt ſuffer that thing patiētly alſo who are Chriſts members, which Chriſt who is our head and patterne hath ſuffered. And truly this hath been an ordinarie thing almoſt in all ages in the Church, that it hath no greater and more deadly enemies, then thoſe that be of the houſholde of the Churche. VVherefore leaſt ſuche crueltie doe trouble the faithfull: let them accuſtome themſelues betimes to ſuffer traytours.

19 Now I tell you of it. He telleth his Diſciples in this ſentence, that they haue ſo ſmall cauſe to faint, becauſe there is one reprobate gone out from amongeſt them, that their faith ought the better to be confirmed. For vnleſſe we ſhould ſee that in the Church with our eyes, which was fortetold concerning her troubles and combates, wee ſhoulde for good cauſes doubt where the propheſies were become. But when as ẏ truth of the ſcripture agreeth with our experience, then doe we the better perceiue that god careth for vs, & that we are gouerned by his prouidence. In theſe wordes, that you may beleeue that I am, he giueth thē & vs to vnderſtand that he was that Meſsias, which was promiſed. Not that the treaſon which Iudas wrought did beginne to bring the Diſciples vnto faith: but becauſe their faith was the more encreaſed, whenas they came vnto the experience of thoſe things, which they had heard before out of the mouth of Chriſt. And now there may be a double ſenſe and meaning in theſe words: ſo that he may ſay that they ſhould beleeue when the thing was come to paſſe, becauſe he knew al thinges, or that hee wanted nothing of all thoſe things which the ſcripture doth teſtifie concerning Chriſt. But becauſe they doe both agree reaſonable wel with the wordes: the readers may for me chooſe whether they will.

20 Verily, verily I ſay vnto you. There is either a new ſpeech ſet downe in this place, whiche is vnperfect: or els Chriſte preuenteth an offence, which was about to ariſe by reaſon of the wicked fact of Iudas. For the Euangeliſtes doe not alwayes knit togeather the whole Sermons of Chriſt, but doe ſometimes gather together diuers ſentences briefly: although it is more likely that Chriſt meant to cure and preuent the offence. It appeareth too plainly how apt wee are to receiue woundes by euill examples: wherby it commeth to paſſe that the falling away of one man doth wound two hundreth more to extinguiſh their faith: but the conſtancie of tenne or twentie godly men can ſcarſe edifie one. Therefore ſeeing that Chriſt did ſet ſuch a monſter before their eyes, it was ne ceſſary for him to reach out his hand vnto the diſciples leaſt beeing ſtroken with this noueltie, they ſhould goe backwarde. Neither had hee reſpect vnto thē only, but he prouided for thoſe that ſhould come after them alſo. For otherwiſe the remembraunce of Iudas might hurt vs much at this day. For whenas the Diuell cannot eſtrange vs frō Chriſt, by cauſing vs to hate his doctrine, he maketh vs either weary of it, or els cauſeth vs to contemne it becauſe of the miniſters. But this admonition of Chriſt doth ſhew that it is an vniuſt thing, that the vngodlineſſe of certaine which behaue themſelues wickedly and vngodlily in theyr office, ſhould any whit empayre the Apoſtolicall dignitie. The reaſon is be-becauſe we muſt haue reſpect vnto God the authour of the miniſterie: in whom we ſhall finde nothing that is worthie of contempt: and ſecondly Chriſt himſelfe, who is appointed of the father to be the onely teacher, ſpeaketh by his Apoſtles. Therfore whoſoeuer doth not vouchſafe to receiue the miniſters of the Goſpell, he reiecteth Chriſt in them, and God in Chriſt. Fooliſh are the Papiſts and abſurd, whileſt that they wreſt this title and commendation to eſtabliſh their tyrannie. For firſt of al they adorne themſelues with other mens & begged feathers, wherein they are nothing like to Chriſt his Apoſtles: ſecondly, although we graunt them to be Apoſtles, Chriſt meant nothing leſſe in this place, the to giue his right vnto men. For what other thing is it to receiue thoſe whom Chriſt ſendeth, but to giue them place, that they may fulfill the function which is enioyned them.

21 VVhen Ieſus had ſaid thus, he was troubled in the ſpirit, and ſaid, verily, verily I ſay vnto you, that one of you ſhall betray mee.

22 Then the Diſciples looked one vppon another, doubting of whome hee dyd ſpeake.

23 Furthermore, one of Ieſus his Diſciples, whome Ieſus loued leaned vppon his breaſt.

24 Therefore Simon Peter beckoned vnto him that hee ſhould aske who it was, of whom hee ſpake?

25 Therefore when he leaned vpon Ieſus his breaſt, he ſaith vnto him, Lorde, who is it?

26 Ieſus anſwered, he it is to whom I ſhall giue this ſoppe after that I haue dipped it. And when hee had dipped the ſoppe, hee giueth it to Iudas the ſonne of Simon Iſcariot.

27 And after the ſoppe Satan entred into him. Therefore Ieſus ſaith vnto him, that which thou doeſt, doe quickly.

28 But none of theſe that ſate at meate knew why he ſaid this vnto him.

29 For ſome thought, becauſe Iudas had the bagge, that Ieſus ſaid vnto him, buy thoſe things whereof we haue neede againſt the holy day: or that he ſhould giue ſomewhat to the poore.

21 And when Ieſus had ſaid thus. The more holy the Apoſtolicall office is, and the more excellent it is, the more filthie and deteſtable was the treaſon of Iudas. Therefore ſuch and ſo horrible a monſter did make Chriſt himſelfe afraide, when as he ſawe that holy order, wherein the maieſtie of God ought to haue ſhined, polluted with the incredible wickednes of one man. To the ſame ende tendeth that whiche the Euangeliſt addeth afterwarde, that hee teſtified: to wit, becauſe it was a more monſtrous thing, then that it could haue been beleeued beeing but ſimply vttered. He ſaith that Chriſt was troubled in the ſpirite, to the end we may know that hee ſhewed ſome token of a troubled man, not only in countenance and wordes, but that he was altogether ſo affected in minde. The ſpirite is taken for the minde or ſoule. Neither am I of ſome mens opinion who expound this, that Chriſt was moued as it were with ſome violent motion of the ſpirite, ſo that he brake foorth into theſe wordes. I confeſſe in deede that the ſpirite did gouerne all Chriſtes affections: but the Euangeliſt his meaning is otherwiſe, that this paſsion was from within and not feigned. It is very requiſite that wee know this: becauſe his zeale is ſet before vs to the end we may follow the ſame, that wee may be horriblie afraide of thoſe monſters, which doe ouerthrowe the holy order of God and the Church.

Chriſtes

22 Therefore they looked one vpon another. Thoſe who know nothing by themſelues, are made to doubt, with that ſaying of Chriſte: only Iudas was ſo amazed in his wickednesſe, that he is not touched. The diſciples made ſo great account of Chriſte, that they were certainely perſuaded that he ſpake nothing vnadviſedly: but Satã had quite pluckt out of the hearte of Iudas all reuerence, ſo that hee was harder then a ſtonie rock to beate backe all admonitions. And although Chriſte ſeemeth to deale ſomwhat vncourteoully in that he vexeth the innocent for a ſeaſon, yet becauſe this doubtfulneſſe was profitable for them, Chriſt did them no iniurie. For it is expedient that euen the children of God be vexed, when as they heare the iudgement of the wicked, to the ende they may examine themſelues, and beware of hypocriſie: for there is an occaſion giuen them thereby to examine themſelues and their life. This place teacheth, that the wicked muſt be ſo touched ſometimes, that wee doe not by and by poynt them out with the finger, vntill ſuch time as God doth bring them to the light by his hand. For there are ſometimes ſecrete diſeaſes in the Church, which we may not hide. In the meane ſeaſon, the wickednesſe of thoſe men is not ſo ripe that it may be diſcouered, therfore we muſt keepe this meane then.

23 VVhom Ieſus loued. The particuler loue wherewith Chriſte loued Iohn, doth manifeſtly teſtifie, that it is not alwayes repugnaunt vnto loue, if we loue ſome more then otherſome: but in this conſiſteth the whole, that our loue haue reſpect vnto God, and that the more euery man excelleth in the giftes of God, wee loue him ſo muche the more. Chriſt dyd neuer miſſe this marke, no not the leaſt iote. But it fareth farre otherwiſe with vs: for (ſuch is the vanitie of our nature) there bee few which draw nigher vnto God by louing men. But the loue of men ſhall neuer be wel framed amongeſt themſelues, vnleſſe it be referred vnto God. VVhereas Iohn ſaith, that hee leaned vppon Ieſus his breeſt, that might ſeeme an vndecent thing at this day: but ſuche was the maner of ſitting at meate at that time. For they ſate not at a Table as we doe, but hauing put off their ſhoes, and leaning vpon couſhins, they ſate halfe vpright in beds.

24 To whom I ſhall giue a ſop If any man demaund, to what end it ſerued by reaching a ſop to poynt out the traytor, ſeeing that Chriſt might haue named him openly if hee woulde haue had him knowen: I aunſwere, that it was ſuch a token, as that Iudas was but made knowen to one by it, and was not by and by ſo bewrayed that they myghte all ſee and knowe hym. It was alſo verye profitable that Iohn ſhoulde knowe this to the ende hee mighte afterwarde reueale it vnto others in his time. Chriſte did deferre to make Iudas knowen, to the end we may the more eaſily ſuffer hypocrites, vntill they be brought to light.

VVe ſee that Iudas was yet condemned by the mouth of the iudge, as he he ſate amongeſt others. Their condition is neuer a whit the better who haue a place amongſt the children of God.

27 Satan entred into him. Seeing that it is certaine that Iudas conceiued ſo great a wickedneſſe only through the perſuaſion of Satan, why is it ſaid that Satã entred now firſt of al into him, who did alredy reigne in his heart? As they are oftentimes ſaid to beleeue, who are more confirmed in the faith which they had long agoe, and ſo that addition of faith is called faith: ſo now when as Iudas is wholy addicted vnto Satan, ſo that he is by furious force caried vnto the very extreameſt things, Satan is ſaid to haue entred into him. For, as the ſaints goe forwarde by degrees, and inaſmuch as they are oftentimes encreaſed with new gifts, they are ſaide to be filled with the holy Ghoſt: ſo for aſmuche as the wicked doe prouoke Gods wrath againſt them with their vnthankfulneſſe: the Lorde doth giue them ouer to be Satan his bondſlaues, being diſpoyled of his ſpirite, of all light of reaſon, and conſequently of all humane ſenſe and feaſing. This is the horrible vengeance of God, when as men are giuen vp into a reprobate ſenſe, that they differ almoſt nothing from bruite beaſtes: yea they runne headlong into wickedneſſe, which the very beaſtes abhorre. Therefore we muſt walke carefully in the feare of the Lord, leaſt that if we ouercome his goodneſſe with our wickedneſſe, he deliuer vs vp at length to the luſt and will of Satan. But the ſop which Chriſt reached made no place for Satan: but rather when Iudas had receiued the ſop, he gaue himſelfe wholy to Satan. This was the occaſion but not the cauſe. Furthermore, ſo great mercifulneſſe of Chriſt ought to haue ſoftned euen a breaſt of Iron: but his deſperate and vncurable obſtinacie deſerueth this now, that God ſhoulde in his iuſt iudgement make his heart more harde by Satan. So whyleſt that wee heape coales of fire vppon our enemies heades by doing well vnto them, if they be altogether vncurable, they ſinke deeper into deſtruction. Neither ought our well doing to bee blamed for this, ſeeing that their heartes ought to haue been enflamed thereby to loue vs. Auguſtine thought, but vntruly, that that ſoppe was the ſacrament of the bodye of Chriſte, foraſmuch as it was reached without the action of the ſupper. And thoſe men dote too fooliſhly, who thinke that the Diuell entred into Iudas eſſentially (as they ſay). For the Euangeliſt ſpeaketh only of his force and efficacie. By this example are we taught how fearefull a puniſhment is prepared for al thoſe, who profane Gods benefits with their abuſe.

That which thou doeſt doe quickly. Chriſt doth not ſo exhort Iudas, that he may be thought to enforce him: it is rather a voyce of one that deteſteth a thing. He had endeuoured hytherto to call him backe diuers wayes: but all in vaine: he ſpeaketh now as vnto a man paſt al hope, periſh ſeeing that thou art determined to periſh. And therein doth hee play the part of a iudge, who adiudgeth thoſe vnto death, not whom he deſireth to haue caſt away, but who haue caſt away themſelues through their owne fault. To be briefe, Chriſt cauſeth not Iudas to periſhe whether he will or no, but hee affirmeth that he is ſuch a one as he was before.

28 None of thoſe that ſate at meate. Either Iohn had tolde none as yet, what he had heard of Chriſt, or els they were ſo ſtriken ℔ they were not wel in their wits: yea, it is to be thought that Iohn himſelf was in a great quandary quandary. And that which happened then doth oftentimes happen in the Church, that fewe of the faithfull can diſcerne hypocrites, whom the Lord doth manifeſtly condemne.

29 That hee ſhould giue ſomewhat to the poore. It appeareth ſufficiently by other places, how poore Chriſte was: yet hee gaue ſomewhat of that little which he had, vnto the poore, to the end he might preſcribe vnto vs a rule. For the Apoſtles woulde not otherwiſe haue geſſed that he ſpake of the poore, vnleſſe hee had beene accuſtomed to helpe the poore.

30 Therefore when hee hadde taken the ſoppe, hee went out by and by, and it was night.

31 When he was gone out, Ieſus ſaith, now is the ſonne of man glorified, and God is glorified in him.

32 If God be glorified in him, God ſhall alſo glorifie him in himſelf, & ſhal ſtraightway glorifie him.

33 Little children, I am with you yet a little while: yee ſhall ſeeke me, and as I haue ſaid vnto the Iewes, that whither I goe, you cannot come: I dee alſo ſay vnto you now.

34 A new commandement giue I vnto you, that yee loue one another, as I haue loued you, that you doe alſo loue one another.

35 By this ſhall all men knowe, that you are my Diſciples, if you ſhall loue one another.

31 Now is the ſonne of man glorified. The laſt houre was at hand. Chriſt knewe well how weake the courages of his diſciples were, hee meant therefore to vnderproppe them leaſt they ſhoulde altogeather be diſcouraged. The onely remembraunce of the croſſe of Chriſt cauſeth vs to tremble at this day, vnleſſe this comfort doth by and by meete vs that the very conquerour of Satan, ſinne, and death did triumph vpon the croſſe. Therefore what might haue befallen the Diſciples, when as they ſhould immediately ſee their Lord carryed to the croſſe, loaden with all manner of reproches? might not ſo ſorrowfull & vncomely a ſpectacle haue ouerwhelmed them an hundred times? Wherefore Chriſt preuenteth this danger, and calleth them backe from beholding his death outwardly vnto the ſpirituall fruit. Therefore howſoeuer ignominie do appeare in the croſſe, which might of it ſelfe confounde the faithfull, yet Chriſt doth teſtifie that the ſame croſſe is vnto him glorious. The member which enſueth next, And God is glorified in him, is added in ſteede of a confirmation. For that was a ſtrange thing amongeſt the common ſorte, that the ſonne of man ſhould be glorified by a death amongeſt men reprochfull, before God accurſed. Therefore he ſheweth how he wil purchaſe to himſelfe glory by ſuch a death: namely, becauſe hee gloryfieth God the father. For the vncomparable goodneſſe of God appeared vnto all the whole worlde vpon the croſſe of Chriſte, as vppon a moſt gorgeous Theatre. The glory of God ſhineth euery where in all his creatures, but it was neuer more excellent and euident any where then vpon the croſſe, whereupon was made a wonderfull chaunge of things, the damnation of all men was ſhewed, ſinne was aboliſhed, ſaluation was giuen vnto men: and finally all the whole worlde being repayred, all thinges were brought into order. Although this worde (in) is oftentimes taken for the Hebrewe beth, and then it ſignifieth as muche as by: yet had I rather tranſlate it ſimplie, that God was glorified in the ſonne of man, becauſe the ſpeech ſeemed to be more Emphaticall & fuller of force. VVhen he ſaith, And God is glorified, this coniunction copulatiue (and) muſte bee reſolued into the cauſall in my iudgement.

32 If God bee glorified. Chriſt gathereth that he ſhal triumph gloriouſly becauſe of his death, wherin this is his only purpoſe, to glorifie his father. For the father did not ſo ſeeke his owne glory by the death of his ſonne, but that he made him partaker of the ſame glory. Therefore he promiſeth that it ſhall ſhortly come to paſſe, that when as that ignominy ſhall bee done away which he ſhould ſuffer for a ſhort time, there ſhall great honour appeare in his death: which thing was alſo fulfilled. For the death vppon the croſſe is ſo farre from darkening the dignitie of Chriſt, that it doth moſt of all appeare there: for aſmuch as his incredible loue towarde mankinde, his infinite righteouſneſſe in making ſatisfaction for ſinne, and pacifying Gods wrath, his wonderfull power in ouercomming death, ſubduing Satan: and finally, in ſetting open the heauens, did there ſhewe foorth their perfect brightneſſe. Nowe this doctrine is alſo extended vnto vs all: becauſe although all the whole world do conſpire together to defame vs, yet if wee ſhall endeuour to ſeek Gods glory ſincerely & from our hart, we need not doubt but that he will glorifie vs againe. Chriſte augmenteth their comfort by the ſhortneſſe of the time, whenas he promiſeth that it ſhall bee ſtraightway. Furthermore, although this glory began at the day of his reſurrection, yet he toucheth heere chiefly the ſpreading abroade thereof, which followed immediately after, when as raiſing vp the dead by the power of the Goſpell and of his ſpirit, he created vnto himſelfe a new people. For the proper renowne of Chriſte his death, is the fruite whiche flowed thence to the ſaluation of men.

33 Little children, yet a little. Becauſe it could not be but that the departure of their maſter ſhould make the Diſciples ſorrowfull, therefore he telleth them in time that he will not bee long with them, and doth alſo exhort them vnto pacience: laſtly, to the ende hee may take from them the vnſeaſonable feruentneſſe of their deſire, he telleth them that they cannot follow him immediately. VVhen as hee calleth them little children, he teacheth by this faire ſpeech, that he did not therfore depart from them, becauſe he careth not for their health and ſaluation, ſeeing that he loueth them moſt tenderly. Hee put vpon himſelfe our fleſhe to this ende, that he may be our brother: but there is greater vehemencie of loue expreſſed in that other name. In that he ſaith, that hee repeateth that vnto them which hee had ſaide before vnto the Iewes, before 7.34. that is true as touching the wordes, but there is a difference in the ſenſe. For he ſaith that they cannot folow, to the end they may ſuffer his temporall abſence pacientlye: and he doth as it were bridle them, to the end they may keepe themſelues in their ſtanding, vntill they haue fulfilled their warfare vpon earth: therfore he doth not exclude them out of the kingdome of God for euer, as he doth the Iewes: but doeth onely commaund them to wayt pacientlye vntill he gather them into the kingdom of heauen with him.

34 A new commaundement giue I you. Hee addeth an exhortation vnto the consolation, that they loue one another, as if hee should say, whilest that I am absent from you in body, declare by louing one another that you were not taught of mee in vaine: let this be your principall desire, let this be your chief meditation. All men do not agree about this, why hee calleth it a new commaundement. Some men thinke that this is his reason, because seeing that that was litterall and externall, whatsoeuer was appointed in the law in times past concerning loue, Christe did write it in the heartes of the faithfull by his spirit. So that as they think, that is a newe lawe, whiche hee publisheth after a newe manner, that it may haue full force. But in my iudgement that is too farre fet, & too farre from Christ his meaning. Some doe thinke that it is therefore called a newe commaundement, because although the law doth call vs backe vnto loue, yet because it is intangled with many ceremonies and appurtenances, the doctrine of loue doth not so plainely appeare there: and on the contrary that loue is perfectly set downe in the gospel without any shadowes. Therefore as I doe not altogether reiect this interpretation, so I thinke that Christ spake more simplie. For wee knowe that lawes are more diligently kept at the first, & that by little & little they slip out of mans memory, vntil at length they be growē out of vse. Therefore to the ende Christe may the more deepely imprint the doctrine of loue in the mindes of his, hee commendeth the same for the newnesse, as if hee should say, I wyll haue you to remember this commaundement continually, as if it were a lawe newly giuen. To bee briefe, we see that Christes drift in this place, was, to exhort his vnto loue, to the ende they myght neuer suffer themselues to bee ledde away frō the studie therof, or that doctrine to slip out of theyr minds.

Furthermore, we learne by dayly experience, how necessary this admonition was. Because it is an hard matter to retaine loue, men doe inuent vnto themselues newe wayes to worship God, setting apart this, & Satan putteth many thinges into their heades wherein they may occupie themselues. So that it commeth to passe that by doing thinges in vaine, they endeuour to mocke God, and deceiue themselues. Therefore this title of newnes may stirre vs vp oftentimes to embrace loue. In the meane season let vs knowe that it is called new, not because it began to please God nowe first of all, seeing that it is called elswhere the fulfilling of the law.

That you loue one another. Loue is also extended euen vnto strangers: because we are al of one flesh, & are al created after the image of God. But because the image of God shineth more clearely in the regenerate, it is meete that the bande of loue bee stronger amongest Christ his Disciples. Loue seeketh a cause in God, shee hath her roote thence, and thither is it referred, so that the more it knoweth euery man to bee the childe of God, the more willingly and earnestly doth it imbrace him. Againe, there cannot be any mutuall affection of loue, saue only in those that are gouerned with the same spirit. Therfore Christ toucheth ỹ first degree of loue in this place: but againe we must mark, that as the goodnes of god doth extend & spread abroad it selfe vnto & throughout the whole worlde, euē so we must loue euē those that bee our enemies. Hee setteth before vs his own example, as afterward. 15. 12, not that we can ouertake him who is far before vs: but that at leaſt wee goe forward toward the ſame marke.

35 By this ſhall all men know. Chriſt confirmeth that againe, which hee had ſaid before, that they haue not beene taught in his ſchoole in vaine who ſhall loue one another, as if he ſhould ſay, you your ſelues ſhall not only knowe that you are my Diſciples, but your profeſſion amongeſt other men, ſhall alſo be proued true. Seeing that Chriſte diſtinguiſheth thoſe that be his from ſtraungers by this marke, they weary themſelues in vaine, who hauing left and forſaken loue, doe take vpon them newe and feigned kindes of worſhipping: which vanitie raigneth at this day in Poperie. Neither is it ſuperfluous that Chriſt ſtandeth ſo much vpon this point. There is no better agreement betweene the loue of our ſelues and of our neighbours, then betweene fire and water. But the loue of our ſelues keepeth all our ſenſes ſo faſt tyed, that loue is quite baniſhed. Neuertheleſſe wee thinke that wee doe our duetie in this poynt well and throughly, becauſe Satan hath many ſleights and enticements to deceiue vs with. Therfore whoſoeuer he be that is Chriſts in deede, and deſireth to be knowen of God, let him frame and direct all his life to loue his brethren, and let him continually ſtyrre vp himſelf vnto this.

36 Simon Peter ſaith vnto him, Lorde whither goeſt thou? Ieſus anſwered him, whither I goe thou canſt not follow me nowe but thou ſhalt follow me afterward.

37 Peter ſaith vnto him, Lorde, why can I not follow thee now? I will lay downe my life for thee.

38 Ieſus anſwered him, wilt thou lay downe thy life for mee? verily I ſay vnto thee, the cocke ſhall not crow, vntill thou haue denied me thriſe.

36 Lord whither goeſt thou? This queſtion dependeth vppon that ſaying of Chriſte, As I haue ſaid vnto the Iewes, &c. By this it appeareth how ignoraunt Peter was, who hauing been ſo oftentimes told of Chriſt his departure, is troubled in like ſort as if he had heard ſome ſtrange thing. Although we be too like to him in that point. For wee heare daylie out of Chriſtes mouth, what thinges ſoeuer are fit and neceſſary to bee knowen vnto the vſe of life: when we come to the matter, wee are ſtriken like nouices vnto whom nothing was euer ſaid. Again, Peter declareth that he is too deſirous of Chriſtes carnall preſence. For he counteth it an abſurd thing that he ſhould ſtay behinde when Chriſte went vnto ſome other place.

Whither I goe. Chriſte brideleth in theſe wordes the immoderate deſire of Peter: And hee ſpeaketh preciſely and ſharpely as becommeth a maſter: yet doth he temper anon the ſharpneſſe of the ſaying. Hee teacheth that this ſhall be but for a time that he ſhall bee ſeparated from his: and in this place are we taught to make our deſires ſubiect vnto god, that they paſſe not their boundes: and if they doe at any time leape ouer, let vs at leaſt ſuffer them to be brought backe with this bridle. And leaſt we be diſcouraged, let that conſolation whiche is added immediately helpe vs when as Chriſte promiſeth that it ſhall once come to paſſe that wee ſhall bee gathered vnto hym. For his meanynge is, that PETER is not yet ripe enoughe to beare the Croſſe, but but that he is as yet like corne in the blade: yet muſt he be formed and ſtrengthened in tract of time that he may follow. VVherefore we muſt pray God that hee will encreaſe that in vs dayly, which he hath begunne in vs. And in the meane while we muſt creepe, vntill we ſhal be better able to runne.

Now as Chriſte beareth with vs whileſt we are as yet ſoft and tender: ſo let vs learne not to caſt away our weake brethren, who are as yet farre from the marke. It is to be deſired that all men may run, with great feruentneſſe, and all men muſt be encouraged likewiſe: but if any goe ſlowly, ſo they hold way, we muſt hope well.

37 VVhy cannot I follow thee now? Peter declareth in theſe words, that he tooke Chriſt his anſwere heauenly. Hee perceiueth that he was admoniſhed of his owne infirmitie, whereby he gathereth, that his owne vice hindered him, that hee cannot follow Chriſt forthwith: yet hee is not perſuaded of this. For men are puffed vp by nature with a confidence and truſt which they repoſe in their owne vertue and power. Therefore theſe wordes of Peter declare what opinion we haue naturally of our ſelues: to wit, that we attribute more then wee ought vnto our owne ſtrength. Hereby it commeth to paſſe, that they dare take in hande any thing without crauing Gods ayd, who notwithſtanding are able to doe nothing of themſelues.

38 VVilt thou lay downe thy life for my ſake. Chriſt would not contende with Peter, but woulde haue him to waxe wiſe through his owne experience, like fooles who are neuer wiſe vntill they haue caught harme. Peter promiſeth inuincible conſtancie, Matth. 26. 33. 34. 35. and ſpeaketh according to the ſincere meaning of his minde: but confidence is full of raſhneſſe, becauſe it conſidereth not what is graunted vnto it. And becauſe the example appertaineth vnto vs, let euery man learn to examine his wants, & imperfections leaſt he be puffed vp with vaine confidence. VVe cannot be too much perſwaded of the grace of God, but the careleſſe preſumption of the fleſh is reprehended in this place, ſeeing that faith doth rather beget feare and carefulnes.

The cocke ſhall not crow. Becauſe boldneſſe and raſhneſſe doe proceede frō the not knowing of our ſelues, Peter is reproued, becauſe he is a ſtout ſouldier without the battaile where there is no daunger, becauſe hauing not tryed his ſtrength as yet, he thinketh that he is able to do ſomthing. He was puniſhed for his arrogancie, as he deſerued: let vs (miſtruſting our owne ſtrength) learne to flie vnto the Lorde betimes, that hee may vnde rproppe vs with his power.

Chap. 14.

1 LEt not your hearte bee troubled, you beleeue in GOD, beleeue alſo in mee.

2 In my fathers houſe there are many manſions: and if there were not, I had tolde you, I goe to prepare you a place.

3 And if I ſhall goe, I will prepare you a place, I will returne againe, and will take you vnto me, that where I am, you may be alſo.

4 And whither I goe you know, and the way you know.

5 Thomas saith vnto him, Lorde we know not whither thou goest, and howe can wee know the way?

6 Iesus saith vnto him: I am the way and the truth and the life. No man commeth vnto the father but by me.

7 If you had knowen mee, you had knowen my father also: and from this time you know him, and haue seene him.

1 Let not your heart bee troubled. It is not without good cause that Christe confirmeth his disciples with so many wordes, for whom there was such an hard and fearefull combate prepared. For doubtlesse this was no small tryall that they shoulde shortly after see him hanging vpō the crosse, in which sight there was nothing els but matter of extreeme dispaire. Therfore seeing þ the time & houre of so great perturbatiō was at hand, he sheweth a remedie, least being ouercom they should fal down flat. Neither doth he encourage them only by exhorting them: but teacheth them also whence they must fet strength, to wit, from faith, whē they acknowledge him to be the sonne of God, which hath strength enough in himselfe to defend the saluation of his. VVe must alwayes marke the circumstance of the time, that Christ would haue his Disciples to stand stoutly and valiantly, when as all things might seeme to go hande ouer head. Therefore wee must also apply vnto our selues this buckler to beare such bruntes. It cannot be but that we shall feele diuers motions: but we must be so striken that we fall not. Therefore the faithfull are said not to be troubled, because they leane vnto the word of God, although they be brought into great straites, yet they stand strong and vpright.

Yee beleeue in God. It may also be read in the imparatiue mode, Beleeue in God, and beleeue in mee: yet the former reading agreeth the better, and is more vsuall. And heere is shewed the way to stand, as wee haue alreadie said: namely, if our faith doe leane vnto Christe, and beholde him euen as if he were present, and did helpe vs with his outstretched hand. But it is a maruell why faith in the father is placed in the former place. For he shoulde rather haue saide vnto his disciples that they should beleeue in god after þ they had beleeued in Christ: because, as Christ is the expres image of his father, so we must first cast our eyes vpon him: & for this cause came he down vnto vs, that our faith myght begin at him, and then goe vp vnto the father: but Christe had respect vnto another thing. For all men confesse, that we must beleeue in God: and this is a sure axioma, whereunto all men subscribe without any more adoe: yet is there scarse one amongest an hundreth that beleeueth indeede, both becaufe the bare Maiestie of God is too farre distant from vs, and also becaufe Satan casteth all manner of cloudes and mystes before our eyes, which can keepe vs from beholding God. VVhereby it commeth to passe that when our faith seeketh God in his heauenly glory, and in light which no man can attaine vnto, it vanisheth away, and also the flesh doth of his owne accord put into our heads a thousand imaginations, which may turne vs away from beholding G O D aright. Therefore Christ setteth himselfe before vs as a marke, whereunto if our faith bee directed, it ſhall finde a place in readineſſe, where it may reſt. For hee is the true Immanuel, who ſo ſoone as he is ſought by faith he anſwereth vs within. This is one of the principall points of our faith, that it muſt be directed vnto Chriſt alone, leaſt it wander here & there: that it muſt be ſtaide in him, leaſt it faint in temptations. And this is the true tryall of faith, when as we doe neuer ſuffer our ſelues to be pulled away from Chriſt, and the promiſes made in him. VVhen as the popiſh diuines do diſpute cõcerning the obiect of faith, or rather do bable, they doe only make mention of God: they haue no reſpect vnto Chriſte. Thoſe that gather wiſdome out of their inuentions, they muſt needes quaile at euery ſmall blaſt. Prowd men are aſhamed of Chriſt his humilitie: therefore they flie vnto the vncomprehenſible power of GOD. But there ſhall neuer any faith come into heauen ſaue that which ſubmitteth it ſelfe vnto Chriſte, who appeareth to looke vnto, to be an humble God: neither ſhall faith euer bee ſtrong, vnleſſe it ſeeke ſome ſtay in Chriſte his weakeneſſe.

2 In my fathers houſe. Becauſe Chriſt his abſence did cauſe the Diſciples to ſorrowe, hee teſtifieth that he goeth not away for this cauſe, that he may remaine ſeparated from them: becauſe they haue a place alſo in the kingdome of heauen. For it was requiſite that this ſuſpition ſhoulde be taken away, that Chriſt did aſcende vnto the father, that hee myght leaue his behinde him vpon earth, and not care any more for them. This place was falſly wreſted vnto another ſenſe: as if Chriſt did teach that there are diſtinct degrees of honour in the kingdome of heauen. For he ſaith, that there are many manſions, not diuers or vnlike, but ſuche as are ſufficient for many: as if he did ſay, that there is roome there, not only for himſelfe, but alſo for all his Diſciples.

If not, I had told you. The interpreters doe vary heere. For ſome doe reade it all in one text, thus, If there were not manſions prepared for you alreadie, I would haue tolde you that I goe before to prepare them for you. But I am rather of their minde, who diſtinguiſh it thus, If the heauenly glory were prepared for me alone, I would not deceiue you: therefore I would haue tolde you, that there is a place prepared for none but only for mee with the father. But it is otherwiſe: for I go before you to prepare a place for you. In my iudgement the text requireth that wee ſhould reade it thus: for it followeth immediatly after, And if I ſhall goe away, and prepare you a place: In which wordes Chriſte giueth vs to vnderſtande, that this is the ende of his departure, to prepare a place for his. The ſumme is, that the ſonne of God did aſcende into heauen not for himſelfe alone, that hee may dwell there apart: but rather that it may bee a common inheritaunce for all the godly, and that by this meanes the head may be ioyned with the members. Yet here ariſeth a queſtion, in what eſtate the fathers were after their death before Chriſt aſcended into heauen, for they gather commonly that the faithfull ſoules were included in the Limbe, becauſe Chriſt ſaith that there ſhall a place be prepared by his aſcending into heauen. But we may eaſily anſwere, that he ſaith, that he will prepare this place againſt the day of the reſurrection.

For mankinde is baniſhed from the kingdome of God naturally: but the ſonne who is the only heyre of heauen, hath taken poſſeſsion in our name, that we may haue acceſſe thereunto through him. For we poſſeſſe heauen alreadie in his perſon through hope, as Paul teacheth. Ephe. 1. 3. yet ſhall we not inioy ſo great a good thing vntill the ſame Chriſte appeare againe in heauen. Therefore the eſtate of the fathers after death is not diſtinguiſhed from ours in this place: becauſe Chriſt hath prepared a place both for them and vs, into which he ſhall receiue vs all at the laſt day. The faithful ſoules did looke vnto the promiſed redemption as vnto glaſſes before the reconciliation was finiſhed, and they enioy bleſſed reſt now, vntill the redemption be fulfilled.

3 And if I ſhall goe away. The coniunction conditionall muſt bee reſolued into the aduerbe of time: as if he had ſaide, after that I ſhall goe hence, I will returne to you againe. This returne muſt not be vnderſtood of the holy Ghoſt, as if Chriſte did ſhew himſelfe to the diſciples againe in the holy Ghoſt. That is true in deede, that Chriſte dwelleth with vs and in vs by the holy ſpirite, but he ſpeaketh in this place of the laſt day of iudgement, wherein he ſhall come at length to gather his togeather. And truly he prepareth a place for vs dayly if we reſpect the whole body of the Church. VVhereupon it followeth that the day of our entring into heauen is not yet come.

4 And whither I goe. Becauſe we haue neede of no ſmall ſtrength, that wee may patiently ſuffer our ſelues to bee ſo long ſeparated from Chriſt, there is another confirmation added, that the Diſciples do know that his death is no deſtruction, but a paſſage vnto the father: and ſecondly that they know the way, wherin they may follow him, that they may come vnto the ſocietie of the ſame glory. VVee muſt diligently note both members, that we behold Chriſt with the eyes of faith in the heauenly glory, and bleſſed immortalitie: and ſecondly, that wee know that hee is the firſt fruites of our life, and that he hath ſet open the way before vs, which was ſtopt before time.

5 Thomas ſaith vnto him. Although Thomas his anſwere ſeemeth to diſagree with Chriſt his ſaying at the firſt bluſh, yet was hee not determined any whit to diſcredite his maſter. Yet the queſtion is, howe hee denieth that which Chriſt affirmed. I anſwere, that there is ſomtimes in the ſaints confuſed knowledges, becauſe they knowe not the manner and reaſon of a thing that is certaine, and laid open before them. So the calling of the Gentiles was foretolde by the Propheres according to the true ſenſe of faith, and yet Paul doth teſtifie, Ephe. 3. 5. that it was vnto them an hidden myſterie. Therefore foraſmuch as the Apoſtles beleeued that Chriſte did flit vnto the father, and yet did not knowe how he ſhould obtaine the kingdome, Thomas obiecteth for good cauſes, that they knewe not whither he went. Hee gathereth thence that the way is more obſcure: for before wee enter into any courſe, we muſt knowe whither to goe.

6 I am the way. Although Chriſt anſwereth not directly vnto the queſtion whiche was asked him, yet he omitteth nothing which is profitable to be knowen. It was requiſite that Thomas his curioſitie ſhould bee bridled, therfore Chriſt diſputeth not in what eſtate he ſhalbe with the father: but he ſtādeth vpō a more neceſſarie point. Thomas would willingly haue heard what Chriſt would do in heauē, likeas we are ſome-

times wearied with thoſe curious ſpeculatiõs. But it is more meet for vs to be occupied about ſom other matter: to witte, how we may be partakers of the bleſſed reſurrection. Furthermore, the ſumme of this ſetence is, that whoſoeuer enioyeth Chriſte, hee wanteth nothing, and that for this cauſe he ſtriueth to gee beyond the fartheſt perfection, whoſoeuer is not content with him alone. He ſetteth downe three degrees: as if hee did ſay, that he is the beginning, the middle, and the ende. VVhereupon it followeth that we muſt beginne at him, we muſt gee forward in him, and in him muſt we end. VVe neede not to deſire any higher wiſdome, then that which can leade vs vnto eternall life: he teſtifieth that this wiſdome is found in him.

Now the way to obtaine lyfe is, that we become new creatures: he affirmeth alſo that this thing muſt be ſought no where els, ſaue only in him, he telleth vs furthermore that he is the way, wherby alone we may come thither. Therefore leaſt he fayle vs in any poynt, he giueth vs his hande when we go aſtray: and he humbleth himſelfe ſo farre, that he directeth euen ſucking children: hauing profeſſed himſelfe to be a guide, hee leaueth not his in the middeſt of the race, but maketh them partakers of the trueth. He maketh them reape the fruite thereof at length, then whiche there can no better or more excellent thing be inuẽted. Seing that chriſt is the way, there is no cauſe why the ignoraunt and weake ſhould complaine that he hath forſaken them: ſeeing that hee is the trueth and the life, he hath alſo in himſelfe that, wherwith he is able to ſatiſfie the moſt perfect. Finally Chriſt ſpeaketh that now of bleſſednes, which I ſayd of late, touching the obiecte of faith. All men doe rightly iudge and confeſſe, that bleſſednes conſiſteth in God alone: but they are deceiued afterward in this, that whileſt they ſeeke God elſe where then in Chriſt, they pull him away after a ſort from his true and perfect diuinitie. Some mẽ do take trueth in this place for the ſauing light of the heauẽly wiſdom: otherſom take it for the ſubſtance of life and of al ſpiritual good things, which may be ſet againſt ſhadowes and figures, as in the firſte chapter grace and truth were made by Ieſus Chriſt. I think ἡ (trueth) ought to be taken for the perfection of faith, as (way) ought to be taken for the beeginning and firſt rudimentes. The ſumme is this, that if anye man turne aſide from Chriſt, he can do nothing but erre: if any man ſtay not wholy vppon him, he ſhalbe fedde with nothing elſe but winde and vanity elſe where: if any man go beyond him, he ſhall finde death in ſteede of lyfe.

No man commeth vnto the father. This is the expoſition of the ſentence nexte going before: for hee is the way for this cauſe, becauſe he leadeth vs vnto the father: he is the trueth and the life therfore, becauſe we apprehende and lay hold on the father in him. This may be truely ſaid concerning inuocation, that no praiers are heard, ſaue onelye through Chriſtes ayde and aſsiſtance: but becauſe Chriſt intreateth not in this place of prayer, vnderſtand ſimply, that men do feigne vnto themſelues meere labirinths, ſo often as hauing left Chriſt, they ſtriue to come vnto God. For Chriſt proueth that he is the life, becauſe wee poſſeſſe God in him alone, with whõ is the foũtaine of life. VVherfore al diuinitie without Chriſt, is not only confuſed and vaine, but alſo fooliſh, falſe, and corrupt. For although there proceede ſomtimes excellent ſpeaches from the Philoſophers, yet haue they nothing but that which is fraile, and alſo entangled with peruerſe errours.

7. If you had knowne mee. He confirmeth that which we haue already ſayde, that that curioſitie is fooliſh and daungerous, when as mennethat are not content with him, doe deſire to come vnto God by bie wayes. They confeſſe that there is nothing better then the knowledge of God: but when as he is nigh vnto them, and inſinuateth himſelfe familyarlye, they wander through their owne ſpeculations, and ſeeke him aboue the cloudes, whom they cannot afoarde to beholde being preſent. Therefore Chriſt reprehendeth the Diſciples, beecauſe they doe not acknowledge that the fulnes of the godhead was reuealed vnto them in him. I ſee, ſaith he, that you haue not known me hetherto rightly and lawfully, beecauſe you know not as yet the liuely image of the father, which is expreſſed in me.

And from this time. Hee addeth this, not onely that hee may mytigate the bytterneſſe of the reprehenſion, but alſo that hee may accuſe them of vnthankefulneſſe and ſluggiſhneſſe, vnleſſe they conſider and weigh, what is giuen him. For this is ſpoken rather in commendation of his doctrine, then that hee might extoll their fayth. Therefore hys meaninge is this, that they maye nowe beeholde GOD, if ſobeit they open their eyes. In this woorde (ſeene) is expreſſed the certeintie of fayth.

8. Philip ſaith vnto him, Lord, ſhew vs the father, and it ſufficeth vs.

9. Ieſus ſaith vnto him, am I ſo long with you, and haue you not knowne me? Philip, he that hath ſeene me, hath ſeene the father: and how ſaieſt thou, ſhew vs the father?

10. Beleeueſt thou not that I am in the father, and the father in me? the words which I ſpeake vnto you, I ſpeake them not of my ſelfe: but the father, which abideth in me, hee doth the workes.

11. Beleeue me, that I am in the father, and the father in me: if not, beleeue me for the workes ſake.

22. Verely, verely, I ſaye vnto you, hee that beeleeueth in mee the woorkes which I doe, hee ſhall alſo doe them, and hee ſhall doe greater then theſe: beecauſe I goe to my father.

13. And that which ye ſhal aske in my name, this wil I do, that the father may bee glorified in the ſonne.

14. If you ſhal aske any thing in my name, I wil do it.

8. Shew vs the father. It ſeemeth to be a very abſurd thing, that the Apoſtles do ſo interrupt the Lord now and then. For to what end ſpak he ſaue onely that he might teach them that thing, wherof Philip asketh & enquireth? yet is there no fault deſcribed in this place, whichis not common to vs aſwel as to them. VVe ſay that we ſeeke God earneſtly, when he ſtandeth before vs, we are blind.

9. Am I ſo long with you. Chriſt chideth Philip by good right, becauſe he had not the cleare eies of faith. He had God preſent in Chriſt, yet did he not behold him. VVhat letted him, ſaue onely his vnthankfulnes? So at this day they profit litle in the Goſpel, who being not contente with Chriſt alone, are carried into wandring ſpeculations, that they may ſeek God. This fooliſh deſire ariſeth of the contempt of Chriſt his humilitie, which is a very vnmeete thinge, ſeeing that hee repreſenteth the infinite goodnes of his father in this poynt.

10. That

10. That I am in the father. I referre theſe wordes not vnto the diuine eſſence of Chriſt, but vnto the manner of reuelation. For Chriſt as touching his ſecrete godhead is no more known vnto vs then the father, but he is ſaid to be the expreſſe image, becauſe God did reueale himſelf wholye in him, for aſmuch as his infinite goodnes, wiſdome and power doe perfectly appeare there. And yet queſtionleſſe the old writers doe not amiſſe, when as they fet a teſtimony hence to defend Chriſt his diuinitie withall. But becauſe Chriſt doth not ſimply diſpute, whoe hee is in him ſelfe, but whom and what maner a one we ought to acknowledge him to be, it is rather a title of his power then of his eſſence. Therefore the father is ſaid to be in the ſonne, becauſe the full diuinitie dwelleth in him, and ſheweth forth his power: againe, Chriſt is ſayde to bee in the father, beecauſe hee ſheweth by his diuine power that hee is one with him.

The wordes, which I ſpeak. Hee proueth by the effect that we muſt ſeeke God no where elſe, ſaue onely in him: for he affirmeth that his doctrine is a manifeſt and euident teſtimony of Gods preſence, for aſmuch as it is heauenly and diuine indeede. If any manne obiecte on the contrary that all the Prophetes are to be accounted the ſonnes of God, beecauſe they ſpake diuinely, by the inſpiration of the ſpirit, and had God for the authour of their doctrine, wee may eaſily aunſwere, that wee muſt marke what the doctrine containeth. For the Prophetes doe ſende theyr Diſciples vnto ſome other, but Chriſte retaineth them in himſelfe. VVee muſt alſo note that which the Apoſtle teacheth in the firſte Chapter to the Hebrewes, that God ſpeaketh now from heauen by the mouth of his Sonne, who ſpake as it were, vppon the earth by Moſes. I ſpeak not (ſaith hee) of my ſelfe, that is as a manne onely, or after the manner of mennes beecauſe iwhen as the Father ſheweth foorth the power of hys ſpyrite in his doctrine, hee wyll haue vs to acknowledge hys power in him. VVhen he ſaith, that the Father doeth the workes, this muſt not bee reſtrayned vnto the myracles: for hee proceedeth rather in the former ſentẽce, that the maieſtie of God doth ſhew it ſelfe in his doctrine. As if he ſhuld ſay, that this was a work of God in deede, whereby we may know aſſuredly that God did abide in him. Therefore by the works I vnderſtande the token of Gods power.

11. Beeleeue mee that I am. Hee requireth firſte at the diſciples handes that they beleeue his teſtimonie, whileſt that he affirmeth that hee is the Sonne of God. And beecauſe they were hitherto too ſlowe, hee toucheth their ſluggiſhnes by the way. If, ſaieth hee, you doe not beeleeue myne affirmation, and you make ſo ſmall account of mee, that you doe not thinke my woordes worthye to bee beleeued, at leaſte beholde that power, whiche is a viſible image of Gods preſence. That is a verye abſurde thinge, not to depende wholye vppon Chriſtes mouth, ſeeinge that al that ought to be imbraced without any doubting, whatſoeuer he hath ſhewed euen in one woorde. But Chriſt chideth his diſciples in this place, becauſe they profited ſo litle, when as they were ſo often tolde of one thing.

He teacheth not what is the nature of faith, but he telleth thẽ that he hath that which is ſufficiẽt euen to reproue the wicked and vnbeleeuers. In that he beateth in this againe, I in the father, and the father in me, it is not ſuperfluous.

For

For we haue too good tryall of this, howe our nature dooth pricke vs forward vnto vaine curioſitie. For when as we are gone without Chriſt, we ſhall onely haue Idolles, which we our ſelues haue forged: but there is nothing in Chriſt, but that which is diuine, and which may retaine vs in God.

12. Verely, verely, I ſay vnto you. VVhatſoeuer he hath told the diſciples of him ſelfe, as concerning their beholding, it was temporall. Therefore the cõſolation had not beene perfect, vnleſſe this member had beene added, eſpecially ſeeing that our memory is ſo fraile in calling to minde Gods benefites. In which thing we haue no neede of any ſtraunge examples. For when as God hath beſtowed vpon vs al maner of good thinges, we will thinke that he liueth no longer, if he reſt but one fortnight. For this cauſe Chriſt maketh mention not onely of his preſent power, which the Apoſtles ſaw with their eyes, but hee promiſeth that they ſhal continually e feele the ſame afterward. And truly his diuinitie was declared not only ſo long as he was conuerſant vpon the earth: but after that he departed vnto the father, the faithfull did trye ſufficiente teſtimonies and tokens thereof. But either our blockiſhneſſe or els our malytiouſnes dooth hinder vs, that we doe neither conſider God in his works, nor Chriſt in the workes of God. Notwithſtanding this troubleth many, in that the Apoſtle ſaieth, that they ſhal doe greater workes then he hath done. I omitte other anſweres which vſe to be made to this, being content with this alone. We muſt firſt marke what Chriſt meaneth: to witte, that that power whereby he proueth that he is the ſonne of God, is ſo farre from being tied vnto the preſence of his body, that it ſhall be ſette forth by more and greater experiments, when he is abſent. There followed a wonderfull conuerſion of the worlde immediatelye after Chriſte his aſcention, wherein Chriſt his diuinitie did ſhew it ſelfe more mightely, then when hee was conuerſaunt amongſt men. So that we ſee that the approbatiõ of Chriſt his diuinitie was not included in his perſõ, but that it was ſpread abroad throughout the whole body of the Church. But this dooing, wherof he maketh mention is neither proper to the Apoſtles onelye, nor common to euery one of the godly, but it appertaineth vnto the whol body of the Church.

Becauſe I goe vnto the father. The reaſon why the diſciples ſhal do greatter things then Chriſt himſelf, is, becauſe when he hath taken poſſeſſion of his kingdome, he ſhal ſhew his power from heauen more fully: wherby it appeareth that there is no whytte of hys glorye deminiſhed, becauſe the Apoſtles wrought more excellentlye after his departure, whoe were onely his inſtrumentes. Yea, by this meanes it appeareth that hee ſitteth at the ryght hande of the Father, that euery knee maye bowe before him. And he himſelfe affirmeth ſhortly after that hee will bee the authour of all thoſe miracles, which ſhal be wrought by the hands of the apoſtles.

13. And what ye ſhal aske. But the queſtion is whether he were not the mediatour euen then or no, in whoſe name the father was to be intreated: I anſwere, that he executed the office of a mediatour more euidẽtly, after that he entred into the heauẽly ſanctuary, as we ſhal afterward declare in his place.

That the father may be glorified. This place agreeth with the ſayinge of Paule Paule,that euery tongue may confeſſe that Ieſus is Chriſte, to the glory of God the father,Philip. 2. 11. The end of all thinges,is the ſanctification of the name of God. But the lawfull meanes to ſanctifie it,is expreſſed in this place:to witte,in the ſonne,and through the ſonne.For ſeeing that the maieſtie of God is hidden from vs of it ſelf, it ſhineth in Chriſt: ſeeing that his hand is hidden,we may ſee the ſame in Chriſt.Therefore it is not lawfull for vs to ſeparate the ſonne from the father,in thoſe benefites which the father giueth vs,according to that, He that honoureth not the ſonne,he honoureth not the father.

14. If you ſhall aſke any thing. This repetition is not in vaine. All men ſee & perceiue that they are vnworthy to come vnto God: yet,the greater part breaketh out as being madde, and ſpeaketh vnto God raſhly & proudly.Afterward,when as that vnworthines, whereof I haue ſpoken, commeth into their mindes, euery manne forgeth vnto himſelfe diuerſe meanes.But when God willeth vs to come vnto him,hee ſetteth beefore vs one Mediatour,by whom he will be intreated and be mercifull. And here the frowardnes of mans nature breaketh out againe: beecauſe the greater part ceaſeth not,hauing left the way,to go about through crooked boughtes.This commeth to paſſe therefore, becauſe the power and goodnes of God is laid hold vpon in Chriſt onely ſlenderly and maliciouſly.There is alſo a ſecond errour, that we doe not conſider that we are all excluded from comming to God worthily, vntill we be called by him:and that we are called onely by the ſonne.But and if one teſtimony be not ſufficient for vs,yet let vs know, that ſeeing that Chriſt repeateth this againe,that we muſt pray the father in his name,he dooth as it were lay hand vppon vs,leaſt we ſpend our labour in vaine, in ſeeking other patrons.

15. If yee loue me,keepe my commaundements,

16. And I wil pray my father,and he ſhal giue you another comforter,that hee may continue with you for euer,

17. The ſpirit of trueth,whom the world cannot receiue,becauſe it ſeeth him not,neither knoweth him. But yee know him: beecauſe hee abideth with you,and ſhall bee in you.

18. I wil not leaue you as orphanes:I come vnto you.

15. If you loue me. That was true and ſincere loue,wherewith the diſciples loued Chriſt,yet had it ſome ſuperſtitiō mixed with it,as it befalleth vs oftentimes in like ſort.For that was prepoſterous,in that they deſired to keepe him ſtil in the world.To the end he may reform this fault, he willeth them to bend their loue vnto ſome thing elſe:to wit, that they bend their whole ſtudye to keepe the preceptes which he had giuen. A moſt profitable doctrine,becauſe there be but a few of thoſe that ſeeme to themſelues to loue Chriſt,that worſhip him as they ought:yea,rather when they haue done ſome fooliſhe toy,they thinke all is well. But on the contrary,the true loue of Chriſt is reduced in this place vnto the keeping of his doctrine,as vnto the only rule,wherby it muſt be tried.Moreouer,we are taught how corrupt our other affections are,ſeeing that euē our loue toward Chriſt is not without fault,vnleſſe it bee framed vnto pure obedience.

16. And

16. And I will pray my father. This remedy was prepared to pacifie the ſorrow, which they might conceiue by reaſon of Chriſt his abſence: notwithſtanding Chriſte promiſeth therewithall, that hee will giue them ſtrength to keepe his commaundementes: otherwiſe the exhortatiō had had but ſmall ſtrength. Therefore hee preuenteth it in time, and telleth them, that howſoeuer he be abſent from them in bodye, yet will hee not ſuffer them to be deſtitute of helpe: becauſe hee will be preſent with thē by his ſpirit.

He calleth the ſpirite in this place the gifte of the father, ſuche a gifte as he will obtaine by his praiers: he will promiſe elſe where, that hee giueth it. Both theſe thinges are ſaide truelye and fitly: for inaſmuche as Chriſt is our mediatour and patrone, he obtaineth the grace of the ſpirit, of the father: inaſmuch as he is God, he giueth it of himſelfe. The meaning of this place is, I was giuen vnto you of the father as a comforter, yet onely for a ſeaſon: now ſeeing that I haue fulfilled my courſe, I wyll deſire that there may another be giuen you, which may not be temporal, but that he may continue with you for euer. This name comforter is giuen in this place both to Chriſt, and alſo to the ſpirite, & that by good right: for this office is common to them both, to comfort and exhorte vs, and to defend vs with their ayde and patronage. Chriſte was vnto his a patrone, ſo long as he liued in the world: afterward hee committed them to the tuition and ayde of the ſpirite. If anye manne aske this queſtion, whether we be not vnder the tuition of Chriſte at this daye, or no, wee may readily aunſwere, that Chriſte is our patrone for euer, but not after a viſible ſorte. So long as hee was conuerſant in the worlde, hee ſhewed himſelfe openly to bee their patrone: but hee defendeth vs nowe by his ſpirite.

Hee calleth him another comforter, beecauſe of the difference of good thinges, whiche wee receiue from them both. It was proper to Chriſt, to pacifie the wrath of God, to redeeme men from death, to purchaſe righteouſnes and life, by purging the ſinnes of the world: it is proper to the ſpirite to make vs partakers aſwel of Chriſte himſelfe, as of all his good thinges. Although we may well gather the diſtinction of perſons out of this place: for the ſpirit muſt needes differ from the ſonne in ſome propertie, that he may be another.

17. The ſpirit of trueth. Chriſt adorneth the ſpirit with an other title: to witte, that hee is a teacher of trueth. VVhereuppon it followeth, that vntill ſuch time as we be inwardly taught by him, all our mindes are taken with vanitie and lying. VVhome the world cannot receiue. This oppoſition dooth amplifie the excellencie of the grace, which God dooth vouchſafe to beſtowe vppon thoſe alone that be his. For his meaning is, that it is no ſmall gyft, whereof the world is depriued. In which ſenſe Iſaias ſaieth alſo, 60. 2. Behold darkenes ſhall couer the earth, and a myſte the people: but the Lorde ſhall ariſe vppon thee. For Gods mercy towarde the Church deſerueth ſo much the greater praiſe, whileſt that hee lifteth vppe the ſame aboue the whole world. Notwithſtanding, Chriſte dooth therewithall exhort the diſciples, that they doe not driue away frō them the grace of the ſpirite, beeing puſte vppe with the ſenſe and vnderſtanding of the fleſhe. Earthly menne count all that but a dreame, whatſoeuer the Scripture ſaieth, concerninge the holye Ghoſte, beecauſe whyleſt they they truſt to their owne reaſon,they deſpiſe the heauenly eillumination. Although this pride dooth reigne euery where, which extinguiſheth the light of the holy ſpirite aſmuch as is poſsible: yet let vs, who acknowledge our owne peuertie,knowe,that what ſound vnderſtanding ſoeuer wee haue, it proceedeth from no other fountaine. Neuertheleſſe the woordes of Chriſte doe declare, that nothing canne be perceiued concerninge the holye ſpirite,by humane ſenſe, but that hee is knowne by the experience of fayth alone. The worlde(ſaieth hee) cannot receiue the ſpirit, beecauſe it knoweth him not: but yee knowe him, beecauſe hee abydeth with you. Therefore it is the ſpirite aloane, whiche reuealeth himſelfe vnto vs, by dwellinge in vs, beeing otherwiſe vnknowne and vncomprehenſible.

18. I will not leaue you as Orphanes. This place teacheth what menne are, and what they are able to do,when they are depriued of the ayde of the ſpirit:to witte,they are fatherleſſe children, layd open to all manner deceites and iniuries,vnfitte to gouerne themſelues:finally,vnfitte of themſelues to doe any thing. The onely remedy of ſo great want is,if Chriſte doe gouerne vs by his ſpirit, which thing he promiſeth he wil do. Therefore the Diſciples are firſte admoniſhed of their owne weakenes, to the ende they may diſtruſt themſelues,and depende vppon Chriſte his ayde alone. Secondly,he putteth them in good hope by promiſing a remedie: becauſe he ſaith,that he wil not faile them. VVhen as he ſaith,I wil come vnto you,he declareth how he dwelleth in his,and fulfilleth all thinges: to witte,by the power of his ſpirit. VVhereby it appeareth alſo, that the grace of the ſpirite is an excellent and euident teſtimonie of hys diuinitie.

19. Yet a litle,and the world ſhal ſee me no more,but you ſee me,becauſe I liue, and you ſhal liue.

20. In that day yee ſhall knowe that I am in the Father,and you in mee, and I in you.

19. Yet a litle. He proceedeth in the commendation of the peculiar grace,which ought to haue ſufficed the diſciples to lighten, yea, quite to remoue their ſorrowe. VVhen as (ſaieth hee) I ſhall be remoued out of the ſight of the world,I will neuertheleſſe be preſent with you. And to the ende we may enioy this ſecrete beholding of Chriſte, wee muſt not eſteeme his preſence or abſence by the ſenſe of the fleſh,but we muſt endeuour to behold his power with the eyes of faith. VVhereby it cõmeth to paſſe that the faithful haue Chriſte alwayes preſent with them by his ſpirite,and doe alſo beholde him, how farre ſoeuer they be diſtant from him in body. Becauſe I liue. There may be a double ſenſe and meaning of theſe words:eyther that this ſentence may be a confirmation of the next member,or that it may be read by it ſelfe, that the faithfull ſhall liue for this cauſe,becauſe Chriſt liueth. I do willingly embrace the former ſenſe, out of which notwithſtãding this other doctrine is gathered,that the life of Chriſt is the cauſe of our life. He dooth firſt of al note the cauſe of the difference,why he ſhalbe ſeene of his,& not of the world:becauſe Chriſt cãnot be ſeene,ſaue only according to the ſpiritual life,wherof ỹ world is depriued, The world ſeeth not chriſt,it is no meruell;for death is ỹ cauſe blindneſſe. But ſo ſoone as a man beginneth to liue by the ſpirit, he is alſo endowed with eyes to ſee Chriſt. And this falleth out therefore, becauſe our life is alſo ioyned with Chriſte his life, and floweth thence as from a fountaine. For we are dead in our ſelues, and the life wherin we flatter our ſelues is moſt wicked death. Therefore when wee are occupied about obtaining life, we muſt turne our eies toward Chriſt, & muſt tranſlate his life vnto our ſelues by faith, that our conſciences may be fully aſſured, that we are free from al daunger of death, ſo long as Chriſte liueth: for that is ſure and certeine that his life is no life, when his members are dead.

20. In that day. Many referre it vnto the daye of Pentecoſt: but the continuall tenor as it were of one day is noted rather from the time that Chriſt ſhewed forth the power of his ſpirit, vntill the laſte reſurrection. They beganne to know already, but it was a certeine ſlender rudimente or firſt inſtruction, becauſe the ſpirit had not wrought ſo effectuallye in them as yet. For the wordes tende to this end, that it cannot bee knowne by an idle ſpeculation, what maner ſpiritual and miſtical vnion that is, which is betweene him and vs, and againe betweene him and the father: but that this is the onely way and meanes to know the ſame, when as he powreth out his life into vs by the hidden woorking of the ſpirite, and that is the experiment of faith, whereof I ſpake a litle before. And whereas the Arrians abuſed this teſtimony in times paſt, that they might proue that Chriſt was God onely by participation and grace, their cauill is eaſily aunſwered. For doubtleſſe Chriſt entreateth not ſimply of his eternall eſſence, but he commendeth that diuine power, which was reuealed in himſelfe. For as the father hath giuen vnto the ſonne the fulneſſe of all manner of good thinges, ſo againe the ſonne hath powred out himſelfe into vs. VVee are ſaide to bee in him, beecauſe when as wee are engrafted into his body, we are made partakers of righteouſneſſe, and of all his good things: hee is ſaid to be in vs, becauſe hee dooth plainely declare by the efficacie of his ſpirit, that he is vnto vs the authour and cauſe of life.

21. He that hath my preceptes, and keepeth them, it is he that loueth me: and hee that loueth me, shal be loued of my father, and I will loue him, and will reueale my self vnto him,

22. Iudas ſaith vnto him, not Iudas Iſcariotes, Lord, what is done, that thou wilt shewe thy self vnto vs, and not vnto the world?

23. Ieſus aunſwered and ſaide vnto him, if anye manne loue mee, hee will keepe my woorde, and my father will loue him, and wee will come vnto him, and wil abide with him.

24. He that loueth not me, keepeth not my ſayings: and the word which you haue heard is not mine, but his that ſent me.

22. Hee that hath my preceptes. Hee repeateth the former ſentence agayne, becauſe the true tryall of our loue toward him, conſiſteth therin, if we keepe his commaundementes. VVhereof he putteth the diſciples ſo often in minde, leaſt they miſſe the marke: becauſe we are moſt bent to fall awaye vnto carnall affection, ſo that wee loue ſomething elſe then Chriſt vnder the name of Chriſt, VVherunto appertaineth that of Paul like-likewise, 2. Corin. 5. 16. Although we haue knowne Christe according to the flesh, yet doe we know him so no more. Therfore let vs be a new creature.

To haue the preceptes of Christ, signifieth to be well instructed in them: and to keepe them, is to frame a mans selfe and his life according to their rule. He that loueth me. Christe speaketh as if men did preuent God with their loue, which is an absurde thing: for when as we were enemies, he reconciled vs vnto himselfe, Rom. 5. 10. And the woordes of Iohn, 1. Io. 4. 10. are well knowne, not that we loued him first, but that he loued vs first. But he disputeth not in this place of the cause and the effect. Therfore it is falsely gathered that the loue, wherewith we embrace Christ, goeth before the loue of God towards vs in order. For Christes only meaning is this, that all those shall bee blessed, which shall loue him, beecause they shall be loued of him and his father againe: not that God beginneth to loue thē then first of al, but becausse they haue some testimony of his fatherly loue engrauen in their heartes. To the same end tendeth that mēber, which followeth immediately, I will shew my selfe vnto him. Knowledge goeth before loue I confesse, but Christe meant thus much, that hee will graunt vnto the pure woorshippers and obseruers of his doctrine, that they shall goe forward dayly in fayth: that is, I will make them drawe neerer & more familiarly vnto me. Gather hence that the fruite of godlynes is going forwarde in the knowledge of Christe. For he that hath promised that he will giue vnto him that hath, reiecting hypocrites, hee maketh all those to goe forward in the faith, whoe haue imbraced the doctrine of the Gospel, from their hart, and do frame themselues wholy to obey him.

And heereby it commeth to passe that seeing many goe backward, we can scarse see euery tenth person go forward in the right course: beecause the greater part is vnworthy to haue Christe to reueale himself vnto it. Note here, that greater knowledge of Christ is set before vs, as a singuler reward of our loue toward Christe: wherupon it followeth that it is an vncomparable treasure.

22. Iudas saieth vnto him. It is not without cause that hee asketh whye Christ containeth his light amongst a fewe, who is the sonne of righteousnes, by whom all the whole world ought to be lightened. Therefore it seemeth to be an vnmeete thing, that hee should shew forth his bright beames onely vnto a few, and should not spread abroade his brightnesse euerye where without difference. Christe his aunswere dooth not expounde the whole question: beecause there is no mention made there of the first cause, why Christe dooth keepe himselfe close from the more parte, when as he reuealeth himselfe vnto a fewe. For, to say the trueth, hee founde all menne alike at the beeginning: that is, altogeather strangers from him, wherefore hee canne chuse none that loueth him: but he chuseth of his enemies, that he may bende their heartes to loue him: but hee chuseth of his enemies, that hee maye bende their heartes to loue him. Yet would hee not touch that difference at this present, beecause it serued not for his purpose. His meaning was to exhort his Disciples vnto the earnest study of godlines, that they might goe forward the better in the fayth. Therefore he was contented to distinguisse them by this marke from the worlde, that they keepe the doctrine of the gospel.

And this marke followeth the beginning of fayth, becauſe it is the effect of calling. Chriſt had admoniſhed the diſciples elſe wher of his free calling, and hee putteth them in minde of the ſelfe ſame thing afterwarde: hee dooth now onely bydde them ſtudie to keepe his doctrine, and to lead a godly life.

Furthermore, Chriſt ſheweth in theſe woordes, how we doe rightly obey the Goſpell: to witte, when our dueties and externall actions doe ariſe from the loue of him. For the handes, the feete, and the whole bodie labour in vaine, vnleſſe the loue of God doe reigne in the heart, that it may gouerne the externall members. Now, foraſmuch as it is certeine that we doe keepe Chriſtes commaundementes, inaſmuch as wee loue him: it followeth that the perfect loue of him canne be found no where in the world: becauſe there is no man that canne keepe his commaundements perfectly. Yet God accepteth their obedience, who deſire with a ſincere endeuour to attaine vnto this marke.

23. My father will loue him. VVe haue already declared that the loue of GOD is not placed in the ſeconde order, as if it didde followe our godlyneſſe, as the cauſe of loue: but that the faithfull may be fully perſwaded, that God accepteth that obedience, which they doe to the Goſpel: and they maye euer nowe and then looke for newe encreaſings of giftes.

VVee will come vnto him, whiche loueth mee: that is, hee ſhall perceiue that the grace of GOD abydeth in him, and hee ſhall bee encreaſed daylye more and more with the giftes of GOD. Therefore he ſpeaketh of loue, not of that eternall loue, wherewith hee embraced thoſe that were not yet borne beefore the creation of the worlde: but after that he ſealeth the ſame in our heartes, when as he maketh vs partakers of his adoption. Moreouer hee meaneth not the firſte illumination: but thoſe degrees of fayth, whereby the faythfull muſte goe forwarde continually, according to that of Matthew, 13.12. To him that hath, ſhal be giuen. Therefore the Papiſtes doe fallly gather out of this place the double loue wherewith we loue GOD. They fayne that wee loue GOD naturally before hee dooth regenerate vs by his ſpirit: and that by this preparation wee deſerue the grace of regeneration. As if the ſcripture dooth not teach euerye where, and experience it ſelfe dooth crye, that wee are altogether turned awaye from GOD, and infected and filled with the hatred of him, vntill ſuche time as hee chaung our hearts. Therfore we muſt note that purpoſe of Chriſt, that he & his father will come, that they maye confirme the faithfull in the perpetuall hope of grace.

24. Hee that loueth not mee. Beecauſe the faythfull are mingled amongſte the vnfaythfull, and they muſte needes bee toſſed with diuerſe ſtormes, as in the raginge ſeaes: Chriſte confirmeth them againe with this admonition, that they bee not carried awaye with euil examples: as if hee ſhoulde ſaye, regarde not the worlde, ſo that you depende thereuppon: beecauſe there will alwayes bee ſome, which will deſpyſe mee and my doctrine; but holde faſte that grace euen vntyll the ende, which you haue once embraced. Neuertheleſſe, hee giueth vs alſo to vnderſtande that the worlde is iuſtlye plagued for the vnthankfulnes,

which is in it, when as it periſheth in blindneſſe, when it bewrayeth wicked hatred againſt Chriſte through the contempte of true ryghteouſneſſe.

And the woorde, which yee heare. Leaſte the Diſciples ſhoulde fainte and fayle through the ſtubbornneſſe of the worlde, hee purchaſeth authoritie to his doctrine againe, when as hee teſtifieth that it is of God, and that it is not feigned by manne vppon the earth. And in this conſiſteth the ſtrength of our fayth, if wee knowe that God is our guide, and that wee are grounded no where elſe, ſaue onely in his eternal trueth. Therfore howſoeuer the worlde dooth goe madde with frowardneſſe, yet let vs follwe Chriſte his doctrine, which mounteth aboue the heauen and earth.

VVhen as hee ſaieth, that his woorde is not his, hee applieth himſelfe vnto the Diſciples: as if hee ſhould ſay, that it is not of manne, beecauſe hee delyuereth that faythfully, which is enioyned him of his father. Neuertheleſſe, wee knowe that in aſmuche as hee is the eternall wiſdome of GOD, hee is the onelye fountaine of all doctrine, and that all the Propheres ſpake by hys ſpirite, whiche were from the beegynning.

25. Theſe things haue I ſpoken vnto you whilſt I am with you.

26. But the comforter, the holye ſpirite, whome my Father ſhall ſende in my name, hee ſhall teache you all thinges, and ſhall tell you all thinges, whiche I haue tolde you.

27. Peace I leaue with you, my peace I giue vnto you, not as the worlde giueth, giue I it vnto you. Let not your heart be troubled nor feare.

28. You haue heard what I haue ſaid vnto you, I go, and I come vnto you: if you did loue me, verely you would reioyce, becauſe I haue ſaid, I go vnto the father, becauſe the father is greater then I.

25. Theſe thinges haue I ſpoken. Hee addeth this for this cauſe, that they maye not bee diſcouraged, although they haue not profited in the faith as they oughte. For hee didde then ſpreade abroade the ſeede of doctrine, whiche laye hydde for a tyme in the Diſciples. Therefore he exhorteth them to hope well, vntill that doctrine bring forth fruit, which maye ſeeme to bee vnprofitable nowe. In ſumme, hee teſtifieth that they hadde plentifull matter of comforte, in the doctrine which they had hearde. And if ſo beit, it appeare not vnto them by and by, hee byddeth them bee of good courage, vntyll the ſpirite, which is the inwarde mayſter, doe ſpeake the ſelfe ſame thing in their heartes. This admonition is verye profitable for vs all. Vnleſſe wee doe by and by vnderſtande whatſoeuer Chriſte teacheth, there commeth vppon vs loathſomeneſſe, and it irketh vs to beſtowe labour in vaine, in thinges which are obſcure.

But we muſt bring ready docilytie or eaſines to be taught, wee muſte giue eare, and retaine attentiuenes, if we will profitte as wee oughte in the ſchole of GOD. And aboue all thinges wee haue neede of patience, vntyll the ſpirite doe reueale that, whiche wee ſeemed to haue hearde and reade oftentymes in vaine. VVherefore lette not the deſire to learne quaile in vs, neither fall into diſpaire, when as we doe not by and by vnderſtande Chriſte his meaninge, when he ſpeaketh. Lette vs know that this is ſpoken to vs all, the ſpirite ſhall tell you at length thoſe thinges which I haue ſpoken. Iſaias 29.11. denounceth this puniſhment vnto the vnbeleeuers, that the woord of GOD is vnto them as a cloſed booke: but the Lorde dooth alſo oftentimes humble thoſe that bee his by this meanes. Therefore wee muſt waite paciently and meekely for the time of the reuelation, neither muſt we refuſe the worde therefore. And ſeeing that Chriſt dooth teſtifie that this office is proper to the holy Ghoſt, to teach the Apoſtles that which they had alreadye learned out of his mouth: it followeth that the outward preaching is in vaine and nothing worth, vnleſſe the teaching of the ſpirit be added thereunto. Therefore GOD hath a double manner of teaching: for hee ſoundeth in our eares out of the mouth of manne, and he ſpeaketh vnto vs within by his ſpirite: and he dooth that ſometimes in one moment, ſometimes at diuerſe times, as ſeemeth beſt to him. Marke what thoſe all thinges be, which he promyſeth the ſpirit ſhall teache. Hee ſhall tell you or hee ſhall bring into your memory all thinges, whatſoeuer I haue tolde you. VVhereuppon it followeth that hee ſhall not forge any newe reuelations. VVee may refute with this one woorde what inuentions ſoeuer Sathan hath broughte into the Church from the beeginning, vnder colour of the ſpirite. Mahomet and the Pope haue a common principle of religion, that the perfection of doctrine is not contained in the ſcripture, but that there is a certeine higher thing reuealed by the ſpirit.

Out of the ſame ſinke haue the Anabaptiſtes and Libertines drawne theyr dotinges in our time. But that is a ſeducing ſpirite, not the ſpirite of Chriſte, whiche bryngeth in anye inuention, whiche agreeth not with the Goſpell. For CHRIST promyſeth a ſpyrite, whiche ſhall confirme the doctrine of the Goſpell as a ſubſcriber. I haue declared beefore what it is, to ſende the ſpirite in the fathers name.

27. Peace I leaue with you. By this word peace he meaneth the proſperous ſucceſſe, which menne are woont to wiſh one to another, when as they meete togeather, or one parteth from another. For this word peace importeth thus much in the Hebrew tongue. Therefore he alludeth vnto the cõmon cuſtome of his countrey: as if he ſhuld ſay, I leaue you my farewel. But he addeth immediately after, that this peace is of far more valewe, then it is vſually amongſt menne, who haue peace in their mouth for the moſt parte onely for the cold ceremonies ſake: or if they do wiſh it vnto any manne in good earneſt, yet canne they not giue it in deede. But Chriſt telleth them that this peace is not placed in the bare & vaine wiſh, but is ioyned with the effect. The ſumme is this, that hee departeth in body, but his peace continueth with his diſciples, that is, that they ſhall be alwayes bleſſed through his bleſsing.

Let not your heart be troubled. He correcteth their feare againe, which the diſciples had conceiued by his departure. He ſaieth, that they hadde no cauſe to feare, beecauſe they doe onelye wante his corporall preſence, and doe enioye his true preſence by the ſpirite.

Lette vs alſo learne to be contente with this manner of preſence: ney-

ther let vs pamper the fleſh, which doth alwayes tie God vnto the externall inuentions thereof.

28. If yee did loue me. VVithout doubt the Diſciples loued Chriſt, yet otherwiſe then they ought. For there was ſome carnal thing mixed with it, ſo that they could not ſuffer him to bee taken away from them. But and if they had loued him ſpiritually, there coulde nothing haue pleaſed them better then this, that he ſhould returne vnto the father. Beecauſe the father is greater then I. This place was diuerſly wreſted. The Arrians to the ende they might proue that Chriſt was a ſecondary God, did obiect that he was leſſer then the father, the fathers which held and maintayned the trueth, to the end they might cutte off all occaſion of ſuch a cauill, did ſay that this ought to bee referred vnto his humane nature. But as the Arrians did wickedly abuſe this teſtimonie, ſo the anſwere of the fathers was neither right, neither yet agreeable. For there is no mention made in this place either of the humane nature of Chriſte, ne yet of hys eternall diuinitie, but according to the capacitie of our infirmitie he maketh himſelfe the meane betweene vs and God. And truely becauſe wee are not able to attaine vnto the highnes of GOD, Chriſte came downe vnto vs, to the end he might lift vs vp thither. You were, ſaith hee, to reioyce that I returne vnto my father, becauſe this is the laſt mark, whereat you muſt ayme.

Hee dooth not declare in theſe woordes what hee differeth from the father in himſelf: but to what end he came down vnto vs, that he might vnite vs vnto God, vntill we come thither, wee ſtande as it were in the midle of the race. And wee doe alſo imagine onelye halfe a Chriſte and a rent Chriſt, vnleſſe he bring vs vnto God. That place of Paule is like to this, 1. Cor. 15. 24, where as he ſaide, that Chriſt ſhould delyuer vppe the kingdome to God and the father, that God maye be all in all. Chriſt reigneth not onely in his humane nature, but in aſmuch as hee is God reuealed in the fleſh. How ſhall he then put off the kingdome? To wit, becauſe the diuinity which appeareth now only in the face of chriſt, ſhal thē be reuealed in it ſelf. There is this only difference, becauſe Paul deſcribeth in that place the chiefeſte and laſt perfection of the diuine brightnes, the beames whereof beganne to ſhine after Chriſt his aſcention.

To the ende the matter may appeare more plainelye, wee muſte yet ſpeake ſomewhat more groſly, Chriſt doth not compare his fathers diuinitie with his owne in this place: neither doth he compare his humane nature with the diuine eſſence of the father: but he rather compareth his preſent eſtate with the heauenly glory, whereunto he ſhould be receiued immediately, as if he ſhuld ſay, you deſire to kepe me in the world, but it were better for me to aſcēd into heauē. Therfore let vs learne to behold Chriſt abaſed in the fleſh, ſo that he may leade vs vnto the fountayne of bleſſed immortalitie. For he is not made our guide, that he may only lift vs vp vnto the ſphere of the Sunne or the Moone, but that he may make vs one with God.

29. And now I haue told you beefore it come to paſſe, that when it is come to paſſe, you may beleeue.

30. I do not any more ſpeak many things vnto you: for the prince of this world commeth, and he hath nothing in me.

31. But that the world may know that I loue the father, and as the father hath commanded me, ſo I do: ariſe, let vs go hence.

29. And now I haue told you. It was requiſite that the Diſciples ſhould be ofrentimes admoniſhed of this matter: becauſe it was an hydden myſtery farre exceeding all humane capacitie. Hee ſaieth, that he foretelleth that which ſhould come to paſſe, that they may beeleeue, when it is come to paſſe. For this was a profitable confirmation of their faith, when as they did call to minde Chriſte his propheſies, and ſaw that fulfilled, which hee ſpake beefore. Yet this ſeemeth to be a kynd of graun-tinge: as if Chriſte ſhould ſay, becauſe you are not as yet able to receiue ſuch an hidden myſterie, I pardon you, vntil the thing be come to paſſe, which ſhal be vnto you in ſtede of an interpreter, to expoũd this doctrin. Therefore although he ſeemed for a ſeaſon to ſinge vnto deaffe menne, yet it appeared afterward that his words were not as it were ſpread abroade in the aire, but that the ſeede was ſown vppon the ground. And as Chriſt ſpeaketh in this place of his word, and the euent of thinges: ſo his death and reſurrection and aſcention grow togeather into one with his doctrine, ſo that they ingender faith in vs.

30. I do not any more ſpeake many thinges with you. His meaning was to make the Diſciples giue eare vnto him, by this woorde, and more deeplye to imprinte in their mindes his doctrine. For ynough of a thing cauſeth for the moſte parte loathſomneſſe, and that is more feruentlye deſired, which we haue not at hande, and that is more willingly receiued, which ſhall be by and by taken away. Therefore hee denounceth that hee wyll ſhortly departe, to the ende they may be the more deſirous to heare his doctrine. And although Chriſt doth not ceaſe to teach vs during the whole courſe of our life, yet this ſentence may be alſo applyed vnto our vſe, becauſe for aſmuch as our lyfe is but ſhort, we muſt vſe the opportunitie.

For the prince of this world commeth, and hath nothing in mee. Hee might haue ſayde ſimply and flatly that hee ſhould dye ſhortly, and that the houre of his death is nowe at hande: but hee vſeth ſome circumlocution, to the ende hee may fortifie theyr mindes, leaſt being terrified with ſuche an vnſeemely and horryble kinde of death, they faynte. For, to beleeue in Chriſte crucified is nothing elſe, but to ſeeke lyfe in hell. He ſaieth firſte, that this power is graunted vnto Sathan: then afterwarde hee addeth, that hee will yeelde for this cauſe, not beecauſe hee is enforced with neceſsitie, but that hee may obey the Father. The deuill is called the prince of this worlde, not beecauſe hee hath any kingdome ſeparated frõ God as the Manichees did feigne, but becauſe hee exerciſeth his tyrannye in the worlde through Gods permiſsion. Therefore ſo often as we heare this Epithite giuen vnto Satan, let vs be aſhamed of our miſerable eſtate. For howe proude ſoeuer menne bee, they are the bondſlaues of Sathan, vntyll they be regenerate by the ſpirite of Chriſte. For all mannekinde is comprehended in this place vnder this worde worlde. For there is one delyuerer, which delyuereth vs from this horrible ſlauery. And ſeeinge that this puniſhment was layde vppon the ſinne of the firſt manne, likeas it encreaſeth dayly, and is worſe and worſe, becauſe of new ſinnes, let vs learne to hate both our ſelues and our ſinnes. VVe are ſo holden captiue vnder Sathan his gouernment, that yet notwithſtang this ſeruitude dooth not make vs blameleſſe, ſeeing that it is voluntary. Furthermore, wee muſt note that that is attributed vnto the deuill in this place, whiche is done by wicked men: for ſeeing that they are carryed by the violente motion of Sathan, that is worthily accounted his worke, whatſoeuer they doe.

Hath nothing inme. Becauſe it came to paſſe through the ſinne of Adam, that Sathan hath the rule of death, hee could not haue touched Chriſte, who was free from al ſinne, vnleſſe he had willingly ſubmitted himſelf. Although I ſuppoſe that theſe words reach farther, then they are wonte to be expounded: for the interpreters ſay thus, Sathan findeth nothing in Chriſt, becauſe there is no matter of death in him, foraſmuch as hee is cleane from al ſpots of ſinne. But in my iudgement Chriſt doth not onlye ſpeake of his cleanneſſe in this place, but alſo of his diuine power, which was not ſubiect to death. For it was requiſite that the Diſciples ſhoulde knowe, that he yeelded not through infirmitie: leaſte they ſhuld not thinke ſo honourably of his power as they ought. But that former ſentence is alſo included in this general ſentence, that he is not bound to Sathan in dying the death. VVhence we gather that he tooke our turne, when as he ſubmitted himſelfe vnto death.

31. That the world may know. Some doe read it al in one text, that the world &c. ariſe, let vs goe hence, that the ſentence may bee perfect. Otherſome read theſe woordes aparte, and they thinke that there is ſome thing lacking heere. Becauſe it skilleth not much as concerning the ſenſe, whether you chuſe, I leaue it in the middeſt. VVee muſt chiefly note this, that the decree of God is placed here in the chiefeſt place, leaſt we ſhoulde thinke that Chriſt was ſo carryed away vnto death by the violence of Sathan, that there did any thing befall him beſides the counſell and purpoſe of God. For it is God that hath ordayned his ſonne to be a Mediatour, and who would haue the ſinnes of the world to be purged by his death. To the ende this might come to paſſe, hee ſuffered Sathan to triumph ouer him for a ſeaſon as a conquerour. Therefore Chriſt reſiſteth not Satan, that he may obey his fathers decree, and ſo conſequently that hee maye offer his obedience for the price of our righteouſnes. Ariſe, let vs goe hence. Some doe thinke that Chriſt went into ſome other place, when hee had ſaide thus, and that he ſpake thoſe thinges which follow, whileſt he walked: but foraſmuch as Iohn addeth afterwarde that Chriſte went out, it ſeemeth to be more likely that Chriſt meant to exhort the diſciples to ſhewe the lyke obedience vnto GOD, whereof they ſawe ſuch an excellent patterne in him; and not that he brought them forth in the ſame moment.

Chap. 15.

1. I am the true vine, and my father is an husband man.
2. Hee wil take away euery braunch, which beareth not fruit in mee, and whatsoeuer braunch bringeth fruite, hee will purge it, that it maye bringe foorth more fruite.
3. Now you are cleane, because of my word, which I haue spoken vnto you.
4. Abyde in mee, and I in you, as the braunch cannot beare fruite of it selfe, vnlesse it abide in the vine: so neither you, vnlesse ye shal abide in me.
5. I am the vine, you are the braunches, he that abideth in me, and I in him, this man beareth much fruit: because without me yee can do nothing.
6. If any manne shal not abide in mee, when as he shal be cast out a doores, as a branch, and shall bee withered, they shall gather him, and shall cast him into the fire, and he shall burne.

1. I am the vine. This summe of this similitude is, that wee are barren and dry by nature, saue only in asmuch as being engrafted into christ, we draw new force from him. Following others, I haue translated ampelos a Vine, and clemata braunches. Vitis is properlye the plante it selfe, and not the fielde, which is sette with vines, which they call a vineyarde. Although it be taken somtimes for the Vineyard it self: as when Cicero ioyneth the litle fieldes and the litle vineyardes of poore men togeather. But the branches are the armes, which the vine spreadeth vpon the earth. And forasmuch as clema dooth also signifie amongst the Gretians a Vine, and ampelos a Vineyard, I do rather incline vnto that opinion, that Christ compareth himselfe vnto lande sette with Vines, and vs vnto the plantes themselues: Although I wil contend with no manne about that matter. I do only meane to admonishe the readers, that they followe that which shall seeme to bee more probable out of the text.

Lette vs first of all remember that rule, which we must obserue in all parables, that wee must not discusse all the properties of a vine: but that we must onely see summarily, to what ende Christe applyeth this similitude. There are three principall partes thereof: that wee haue no power to doe good, but from him: that the father dooth trimme vs by purging vs, hauing roote in him: that hee taketh away the vnfruiteful branches, that they may burne, beeing caste into the fire. All menne almoste are ashamed to denie, that they haue all that goodnesse, whiche they haue of GOD: but they doe afterwarde feigne that there is an vniuersall grace giuen them, as if it were naturallye engendred in them. And Christ standeth chiefly vppon this poynte, that the vitall sappe floweth from him alone: whereuppon it followeth that the nature of menne is vnfruitfull and voide of al goodnesse: because none tasteth of the nature of the vine, vntill he be ingrafted into him. But this is giuen onely to the electe by a speciall grace. Therefore the Father is the first authour of all good thinges, who planteth vs with his hande: but the beeginninge of lyfe is in Christ, after that we beeginne to be rooted in him. VVhen as hee calleth himselfe the true Vine, it is as muche as if hee shoulde haue ſaid, I am the vine in deede. Therefore men doe wearie themſelues in vaine in ſeeking ſtrengthels where: becauſe there ſhall come no profitable fruite from any other, ſaue only from the braunches which ſpring from me.

2 Euery braunche. Becauſe ſome men corrupt, otherſome doe maliciouſly ſuppreſſe, otherſome choake with ſlouthfulneſſe the grace of God, he ſtirreth them vp and maketh them carefull by theſe wordes, when as he pronounceth that all vnfruitefull braunches ſhall be remoued out of the vine. But heere may a queſtion be moued, whether hee can be without fruite that is ingrafted into Chriſt or no. I aunſwere that men do thinke that many are in the vine, who haue indeed no roote in the vine. So the Lorde calleth his people Iſrael in the Prophetes his vineyarde, who beare the name of the Churche in externall profeſſion.

And whoſoeuer bringeth fruite. In theſe wordes hee teacheth that the faithfull haue neede continually to be trimmed leaſt they grow out of kinde, and that they can bring foorth no good thing, vnleſſe the Lorde doth oftentimes ſet to his hand to trimme them. Neither ſhall it bee ſufficient that we were once made partakers of adoption, vnleſſe God continue the courſe of his grace in vs. He maketh mention of pruning, becauſe our fleſh aboundeth with ſuperfluous and hurtfull vices, and is too full of them, which grow and ſpring vp without end, vnleſſe wee bee purged by the hand of God. VVhen as hee ſaith that the vines are pruned, that they may bring more plentifull fruite, hee teacheth howe the godly ought to goe forwarde in the courſe of godlineſſe.

3 Now yee are cleane. Hee telleth them that they had alreadie tryed that which he had ſaid, becauſe being planted in him, they were alſo purged. He ſheweth the meanes of this purging, to wit, doctrine. Neither is it to be doubted but that hee ſpeaketh of the externall preaching, whē as he expreſſeth in plaine wordes, the worde which they had heard out of his mouth. Not that mans voyce hath ſo great efficacie in it ſelfe, when it is vttered with the mouth, but in aſmuch as Chriſte worketh in the hearte by the ſpirite: the voice it ſelfe is the inſtrument of purging. Neuertheleſſe Chriſt doth not meane that the Apoſtles are free from all vice: but he ſetteth before them an experiment, whereby they may learne, how neceſſary the continuance of grace is. Furthermore, he commendeth the doctrine of the Goſpell vnto them, for the fruit therof, to the end they may be the more ſharpened continually to meditate thereupon, ſeeing that it is as it were the vine dreſſer his knife, to purge all filthineſſe.

4 Abide in mee. Hee exhorteth them againe to be deſirous & carefull to retaine that grace wherewith they are endowed. For the careleſneſſe of our fleſh can neuer be ſufficiently awaked. And this is Chriſts only drift to keepe vs vnder his wings as an hen keepeth her chickins: leaſt being carried away with our lightneſſe, we flie thence to our owne deſtruction. Therefore to the end hee may proue that hee began not the worke of our ſaluation, that he may leaue it half done halfe vndone he promiſeth that his ſpirite ſhall alwayes be effectuall in vs, if wee our ſelues be not in the fault. Abide in mee, ſaith he: becauſe I am readie to abide in you. Againe he that abideth in me bringeth foorth much fruite.

By which words he declareth that all thoſe are fruitful braunches which haue a liuely roote in him.

5 Without mee yee can doe nothing. This is the concluſion & the application of all the whole parable, ſo long as we are without him we canne bring foorth no good fruite, and ſuche as is acceptable in the ſight of God: becauſe we are vnfit to do well. The Papiſts do not onely extenuate but alſo quite weaken this ſentence: yea they doe altogether mocke it. For although they confeſſe in worde that we are able to do nothing without Chriſt: yet they dreame that we haue ſome power, which is not ſufficient of it ſelfe, yet it worketh together being holpen with the grace of God. For they cannot abide that man ſhould bee ſo debaſed, but that he ſhoulde conferre and bring ſomewhat of himſelfe. But they cannot ſo eaſily mocke ſo manifeſt wordes of Chriſte. This is the gloſe and inuention of the Papiſtes, that we are able to doe nothing without Chriſt: yet being holpen by him we haue ſomewhat of our ſelues beſides his grace. But on the contrary Chriſt affirmeth that we can do nothing of our ſelues. The braunch ſaith he, beareth not fruite of it ſelfe. Therfore he doth not only in this place commend the help of his grace which worketh togeather, but he doth quite depriue vs of all power, vnleſſe it be that, which he himſelfe giueth vs. Therefore this particle (without me) muſt be reſolued thus, not but by me. There foloweth an other cauill: for they pretende that the braunch hath ſomewhat by nature, becauſe if another graft which beareth no fruite bee brought into the vineyard, it will beare nothing. But this may be eaſily anſwered, becauſe Chriſt reaſoneth not what thing the braunch hath by nature before it cleaue to the vine: but he meaneth rather that we begin to bee made braunches then, whileſt that we grow and encreaſe by receiuing nouriſhmeut from him. And certainely the ſcripture ſheweth els where that we are vnprofitable and drie wood vntil ſuch time as we be in him.

6 If any man ſhall not abide in mee. Setting before them the puniſhement of their vnthankfulneſſe againe, hee ſharpeneth and ſtirreth them vp againe vnto perſeuerance. This thing is in deede the gift of God, yet this exhortation vnto feare is not ſuperfluous, leaſt our wanton fleſh doe roote vs out. They are ſaid to wither like drie boughes, which are cut off from Chriſt, becauſe as they haue the beginning of their ſtrength from him, euen ſo haue they the continuall tenour. Not becauſe it faleth out at any time, that any of the elect are cut off, but becauſe many hypocrites doe floriſh for a time to looke to, and are greene, who doe afterward make fruſtrate the hope of the Lord in giuing fruite.

7 If yee ſhall abide in me and my wordes ſhall abide in you, yee ſhall aske what you will, and it ſhall bee done to you.

8 In this is my father glorified, that yee beare much fruite and bee my Diſciples.

9 As the father hath loued mee, I haue alſo loued you: abide in my loue.

10 If yee ſhall keepe my precepts, yee ſhall abide in my loue: as I alſo haue kept the commandements of my father, and abide in his loue.

11 Theſe thinges haue I ſpoken vnto you, that my ioy may abide in you, and your ioy may be fulfilled.

7 If you ſhall abide in me, Becauſe the faithful do oftentimes perceiue that they are hungrie and far from that plentifull fatneſſe which is ſufficient to yeeld plentifull fruit, therfore this is added by name that there is helpe prepared for their pouertie, what things ſoeuer they ſhall need, which are in Chriſt, ſo ſoone as they ſhall beg tnem at Gods hands. This is a very profitable admonition. For God doth oftentimes ſuffer vs to hunger, to the end he may exerciſe vs in the deſire to pray: but if we flie vnto him, he will neuer denie our petitiõs, but will giue of his ſtore that can neuer be ſpent, what thing ſoeuer wee haue need of. 1. Cor. 1. 5. VVhen as he ſaith, If my wordes ſhall abide in you, his meaning is, that wee take roote in him by faith. For ſo ſoone as we are departed from the doctrine of the Goſpell, Chriſt is ſought without himſelfe. VVhen as he promiſeth that that ſhalbe graunted vs, if we will any thing, he doth not graunt vs leaue to aske euery thing, for God ſhould but badly prouide for our health if hee ſhould ſhew himſelfe to be ſo eaſie to be entreated and ſo dutifull. For it is well knowen what diſordered petitions men doe vſe for the moſt part. But he reſtraineth the petitions of his in this place vnto the rule of praying aright, whiche maketh all our affections ſubiect to the will of God: and that doth the circumſtance of ỳ place confirme: for he meaneth that his are not deſirous of riches, or honor, or any ſuch thing, which the fleſh doth fooliſhly deſire, but of the vitall ioyce of the holy ſpirite, whereby they may bring foorth fruite.

8 In this is my father glorified. A confirmation of the ſentence nexte going before. For he ſheweth that we may bee fully aſſured that God heareth the prayers of his, whenas they ſhall deſire to bee made fruitefull: becauſe this ſerueth much to ſet foorth his glory. Notwithſtanding he doth alſo kindle in them the deſire of well doing by this end or effect: becauſe there is nothing whereof we ought to make greater account then of this, ỳ the name of God may be glorified through vs. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth the latter member, And yee may be my Diſciples: becauſe he pronounceth that he hath none in his flocke, ſaue only thoſe which bring foorth fruite to the glory of God.

9 As the father hath loued mee. His meaning was to expreſſe ſome far greater thing then they commonly ſuppoſe. For thoſe which thinke that hee ſpeaketh in this place of the ſecrete loue of God the father which he bare alwayes towarde his ſonne, they miſſe the marke: ſeeing that Chriſt intended rather to lay as it were in our boſome a certaine pledge of Gods loue towarde vs. Therefore that ſubtile ſaying doth nothing appertaine vnto this place, how the father hath alwayes loued himſelfe in the ſonne: but the loue heere mentioned, muſt bee referred vnto vs: becauſe Chriſt doth teſtifie that he is beloued of the father, in aſmuch as he is the head of the Church, likeas it is more then neceſſary for vs. For hee that ſeeketh to know how he is beloued without a mediatour, he intangleth himſelfe in a Labyrinth wherein hee ſhall neyther finde way, nor out going. Therefore wee muſt behold Chriſte, wherein we ſhall finde the pledge of Gods loue laide open. For the loue of God was altogether powred into him, that it might flowe from him into his members.

Hee had this title giuen him, that hee was the welbeloued ſonne

in

in whom the good will of the father reſteth. But wee muſt note the ende, that God may accept vs in him. Therefore we may all beholde the fatherly loue of God toward vs in him as in a glaſſe: becauſe hee is not loued apart or for his owne ſake onely, but that he may ioyne vs vnto the father with himſelfe.

Abide in my loue. Some doe expound it thus, that Chriſte requireth mutuall loue of his Diciples. Otherſome deale better who take the loue of Chriſt actiuely. For he will haue vs to enioy the loue wherewith hee hath once loued vs, for euer: and therefore hee telleth vs that wee muſt take heed that we depriue not our ſelues thereof. For many men refuſe the grace that is offered them: many men throw away that which they had in their hands. Therefore after that wee are once receiued into Chriſtes fauour, we muſt beware that wee fall not thence through our owne faulte. VVhereas ſome doe inferre vpon theſe wordes, that there is no force nor efficacie in the grace of God, vnleſſe it bee holpen with our conſtancie, it is a friuolous thing. Neither doe I graunt, that the ſpirit doth only require at our hãds thoſe things, which are in our power, but that he doth ſhew what is to be done: that if we want ſtrength wee may craue the ſame at the hands of ſom other. Likeas when Chriſt exhorteth vs in this place vnto perſeuerãce, we muſt not truſt to our owne cunning and ſtrength: but we muſt beſeech him that commaundeth to confirme vs in his loue.

10 If yee keepe my commandements. Hee ſheweth the meanes howe to perſeuere: if we follow him thither whither he calleth vs. For as Paule ſaith, Rom. 8. 1. They that be in Chriſte walke not after the fleſhe, but after the ſpirite. For theſe thinges are continually coupled together, faith which layeth hold vpon the free loue of Chriſte and a good conſcience and newneſſe of life. And truly Chriſt doth not reconcile the faithfull vnto the father to this end, that they may play the wantons freely, but that he may keepe them vnder his fathers hand and gouernment, by gouerning them with his ſpirite. VVhereupon it followeth that all thoſe caſt away the loue of Chriſt, which do not proue by true obedience that they are his Diſciples. If any man obiect that the firmeneſſe of our ſaluation doth therefore depend vpon our ſelues: I anſwere that Chriſtes wordes are falſly wreſted to that part: becauſe the obedience which the faithfull vſe toward him, is not ſo much the cauſe that hee continueth his loue toward them, as the effect of loue. For how commeth it to paſſe, that they anſwere to their calling, ſaue onely becauſe they are mooued with the ſpirite of free adoption? But it ſeemeth that there is too harde a condition laid vpon vs, that we keepe Chriſts commandements, wherin is conteined the exact perfection of righteouſnes, which farre paſſeth our meane & meaſure. For it cõmeth to paſſe therby, ꝑ the loue of Chriſt ſhalbe in vaine vnleſſe we be endowed with angelicall puritie. VVe may eaſily anſwere: for when as Chriſte intreateth of the ſtudie and deſire to liue well and aright, hee excludeth not that which is the principall point in his doctrine, to wit concerning the free imputation of righteouſneſſe, whereby it commeth to paſſe, that by graunting of pardon, our good deedes doe pleaſe God, which beeing lame and vnperfect of themſelues did deſerue to be reiected. Therefore the faithfull are iudged to keepe Chriſtes commaundements, when they apply their ſtudies vn-

to this ende, although they miſſe the mark much: becauſe they are looſed from that rigour of the lawe, Deut. 27.26. Accurſed be euery one which ſhall not fulfil all thinges. &c.

Likeas I haue alſo kept. As we are elected in Chriſt, ſo the image of our calling is moſt liuely expreſſed in him. Therefore he doth for good cauſes ſet himſelfe before our eyes as a patterne whome all the godly muſt endeuour to follow. In me, ſaith hee, appeareth the ſimilitude of thoſe thinges which I require at your handes. For you ſee how that I am addicted indeede vnto my father to obey him, and I will proceed in this courſe.

Againe, hee hath loued mee not for a moment or for a ſhort time, but the tenor of his loue toward me is euerlaſting. We muſt alwayes haue this conformitie of the head and the members before our eyes, not only to the end the faithfull may ſtudie to frame themſelues vnto the example of Chriſte: but that they may hope that they ſhall bee dayly reformed and bettered by his ſpirite, that they may walke vntill the end in newneſſe of life.

11 Theſe thinges haue I ſpoken vnto you. Hee addeth that the goodly are not ignorant of his loue, but that it is perceiued by the ſenſe of faith: ſo that the conſciences ſhall enioy bleſſed peace. For the ioy whereof he maketh mention ariſeth from that peace which they haue with god whoſoeuer are iuſtified freely. Therefore ſo often as the fatherly loue of God toward vs is ſpoken of, let vs know that we haue matter of true ioy giuen vs, ſo that our conſciences being quiet we may bee certaine of our ſaluation. Furthermore, this ioy is called Chriſtes and ours in a diuers reſpect. It is Chriſtes becauſe it is giuen vs by him: for he is both the authour and the cauſe. I ſay that hee is the cauſe, becauſe wee were deliuered from guiltineſſe when as the correction of our peace was laide vpon him. I call him the authour alſo becauſe hee aboliſheth feare and carefulneſſe in our heartes: from whence that cleare merines proceedeth. It is called ours in another reſpect, becauſe we enioy it after that it is giuen vs.

Now ſeeing that Chriſt ſaith, that he ſpake theſe things for this cauſe, that the Diſciples may haue ioy, we gather out of theſe wordes, that all thoſe which haue rightly profited in this ſermon, haue whereupon they may ſtay themſelues. By this worde abide he giueth vs to vnderſtande, that it is no fraile or temporall ioy whereof he ſpeaketh: but that it neuer falleth away. Wherefore let vs learne that wee muſt ſeeke the hope of ſaluation in Chriſtes doctrine, which may be of force aſwell in life as in death.

Your ioy may bee fulfilled. He addeth that this ioy ſhall be perfect & full: not becauſe the faithfull are free from all ſorrow, but becauſe the matter of ioy aboundeth, ſo that no feare, no care, no ſorrowe doth at any time ſwallow them vp. For thoſe that haue this grace giuen them to glory in Chriſt, neither life nor death, nor any miſeries can hinder them from triumphing ouer heauineſſe.

12 This is my commaundement, that yee loue one another as I haue loued you.

13 No man hath greater loue then this, that a man ſhould put away his life for his friendes.

14 You are my frendes, if you doe thoſe thinges which I commaund you.

15 After this I wil not cal you ſeruants, becauſe the ſeruant knoweth not what his maſter doth: but I haue called you frendes, becauſe what thinges ſoeuer I haue heard of my father, I haue made them knowen vnto you.

13 This is my commandement. Seeing that it is meete that wee direct our life according to Chriſtes commaundement, we muſt know eſpecially what he willeth and commaundeth. Therefore he repeateth that nowe which hee had ſaide before that this pleaſeth him aboue all other thinges, that the faithful doe loue one another. The loue & reuerẽce of God is former in order indeede: but becauſe the lawfull tryall thereof is loue toward the neighbours, hee maketh mention principally of this. Furthermore, like as of late in the generall reuerencing of doctrine: ſo now he ſetteth before vs after a ſort a patterne which we muſt folow for he loued all his, to the end they may loue one another. VVe haue ſpoken in the chapter next going before why he commandeth nothing in plaine wordes in this place touching the louing of the vnbeleeuers.

13 Greater loue then this. Chriſt ſetteth foorth ſometimes the greatneſſe of his loue toward vs, to the end he may the better eſtabliſhe the hope of our ſaluation: and now he goeth farther, that hee may enflame vs to loue our brethren by his own exãple. Yet he coupleth both things together: for he will haue vs to receiue by faith the infinite ſweetneſſe of his goodnes, and ſecondly he allureth vs by this meanes vnto the ſtudy of loue. So Paule vnto the Epheſians, Ephe. 5. 2. VValk in loue as Chriſt hath loued vs and hath giuen himſelfe for vs an offering and a ſacrifice, of a ſweet ſauour to God, God coulde haue redeemed vs otherwiſe by his worde or his becke vnleſſe he had thought good that it ſhould be otherwiſe for our ſake, that in not ſparing his owne and onely begotten ſonne, he might in his perſon declare how carefull hee was for our ſaluation. And now thoſe hearts muſt needes bee as hard as yron & ſtone which cannot bee ſoftened with ſuch incomparable ſweetnes of Gods loue. Yet a queſtion may be asked in this place how Chriſt died for his friends, ſeeing that we were his enemies before he reconciled vs. For hauing purged our ſinnes by the ſacrifice of his death, hee remoued the enimitie which was betweene God and vs. Let vs ſet the anſwer to this queſtion out of the third chapter, where we haue ſaid that in reſpect of our ſelues there is diſſention betweene God and vs, vntill our ſinnes be aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt: and that euerlaſting loue of God, wherewith he loued euen his enemies was the cauſe of this grace whiche was giuẽ in Chriſt. After this ſort Chriſt gaue his life for ſtrangers, yet ſuch as he loued euen thẽ, otherwiſe he wold not haue died for thẽ.

14 Yee are my friends. He meaneth not that we do attaine vnto ſuch honour by any merit of our owne: but hee doth only tell vs vpon what condition he receiueth vs into fauour, and vouchſafeth to reckon vs amongſt his friends. As he ſaid of late, If yee ſhall keepe my commandements, yee ſhall abide in my loue For the grace of our ſauiour God hath appeared, teaching vs that denying vngodlines & worldly luſtes, we ſhould liue chaſtly, righteouſly, & godlily in this world, Tit. 2. 11. 12. But prophane men who wax wanton againſt Chriſte through the wicked contempt of the goſpel, doe renounce his friendſhip.

15 After this I will not call you ſeruants. He declareth & proueth his loue toward his diſciples by another argument, to wit, that he did altogether reueale himſelf vnto them, like as familiar communication taketh place amongſt friends. I (ſaith he) haue giuen you farre more then mortal man is wont to giue to his ſeruants. therfore let this be vnto you a pledge of my loue towarde you, in that I haue laide open vnto you the hidden myſteries of the heauenly wiſdom, mildlie & frindly, which I had heard of the father. This is an excellent cõmendation of the goſpel, that wee haue Chriſts heart, as it were opened there, ſo that we need not doubt of his loue. There is no cauſe why we ſhould deſire to goe vp into heauen, or downe into the deepe to fet the certaintie of our ſaluation. let this teſtimonie of loue which is contained in the goſpel ſuffice vs: becauſe it ſhall neuer deceiue vs. Moſes ſaid, Deut. 4. 7. vnto the old people, what nation vnder heauen is ſo noble, which hath God comming nigh vnto it, as God doth common with thee this day? But our nobleneſſe doth farre excell that ſince that GOD powred out himſelfe wholy in his ſonne. Wherefore their vnthankfulnes is ſo much the greater, and their frowardneſſe ſo much the more vntollerable, who beeing not content with the wonderfull wiſdome of the Goſpel, do flie ouer vnto new ſpeculations through proud luſt. Whatſoeuer I haue heard. It is certain that the Diſciples knew not all things which Chriſt knew: neither could it bee that they ſhould attaine vnto ſo great highnes: and ſeeing that he is the vncomprehenſible wiſdom of God, he gaue euery man a certain portion, of knowledge, which was ſufficient. Therfore why ſaith he, that hee reuealed all things? I anſwere, that this is reſtrained vnto the perſon & office of the Mediatour. He made himſelf the meane betwene God & vs, who receiued that from the ſecrete ſanctuary of God, which he did giue vnto vs (as they ſay) from hand to hand. Therfore Chriſt omitted none of thoſe things but told them vnto his diſciples which were appertinent to our ſaluation, & which were profitable for vs. So that in as much as he is ordained the maſter & only teacher of the church, he heard nothing of the father, which he taught not his faithfully: only let vs haue an hũble deſire to learn & be readie & apt to bee taught, & we ſhall perceiue that Paul doth not in vain call the goſpel wiſdome which maketh men perfect. Col. 1. 28.

16 Yee haue not choſen mee, but I haue choſen you: and haue appointed you to goe, and bring fruit, and that your fruit may remain: that whatſoeuer ye ſhall aſk of the father in my name, he may giue it you.

17 Theſe things I commaund you, that yee loue one another.

18 If the world hate you, yee knew that it hated me former then you.

19 If ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne: but becauſe yee are not of the world, but I haue choſen you out of the world, therfore the world hateth you.

20 Remember the words which I told you, the ſeruant is not greater then his maſter, if they haue perſecuted me, they wil perſecute you alſo, if they haue kept my worde they will keepe yours alſo.

21 But they will do all theſe things vnto you for my names ſake, becauſe they haue not knowen him that ſent me.

16 You haue not choſen mee. He doth yet more plainly declare that they muſt thanke his grace and not their own deſeruing that they were choſen & extolled vnto ſo great honor. For whenas hee denyeth that they choſe him, theſe wordes import as much as if he ſhould ſay, that whatſoeuer they haue, they haue not gotten it by their owne art & induſtrie. They feigne cõmonly a mutual concourſe of Gods grace & mans will:

But this oppoſition, I haue choſen you, and am not choſen of you, doth attribute all that wholy to Chriſte whiche they are wont to diuide betweene him and man, as if it had beene ſaid, that man is not moued of his owne accord to ſeeke Chriſt, vntill he be ſought. Hee ſpeaketh not in this place of the common election of the godly, whereby they are adopted to be ℣ children of god, but of the particuler election wherby he ordayned the Diſciples to preach the Goſpell. But if the Apoſtles were choſen freely and for no merite of theirs vnto that function, wee muſt needes thinke that the election is farre more free, whereby we are made heires of eternall life, being the children of wrath and an accurſed ſeed. Moreouer, Chriſt doth ſo commend in this place the grace wherby they were choſen to be Apoſtles, that he ioineth ℣ former grace wherby they were ingrafted into the body of the Church with it. Yea, he comprehendeth generally in theſe words what dignitie ſoeuer he had beſtowed vpon them. Neuertheleſſe I graunt that he intreateth manifeſtly of the Apoſtleſhip. For his intent is to pricke forward the diſciples to doe their dutie ſtoutly. He taketh the matter of his exhortation from the free fauour which he vouchſafed to ſhewe vnto them. For the more we are bound to the Lord, the more feruent ought we to be, to doe thoſe duties which he requireth at our handes: otherwiſe we cannot auoide the crime of filthie vnthankfulneſſe. VVhereby it appeareth that there is nothing which ought more to enflame vs to ſtudie to liue well & godlily then when as we confeſſe that we haue receiued all that which wee haue at Gods handes, and that we haue nothing of our owne: that as well the beginning of our ſaluation as all the partes which follow therupon, doe flow from his free mercy. Furthermore it appeareth plainly thereby how true that ſentence is, that Chriſt choſe thoſe to be Apoſtles, which might ſeeme to be moſt vnfit of all men. Although hee would haue a perpetuall monument of his grace to bee extant in their perſon. For (as Paule ſaith, 2. Cor. chap. 2. 16) who is he that ſhall be found meet to goe on this embaſſage, wherein God doth reconcile mankinde vnto himſelfe? Yea, what is mortall man that he ſhould repreſent Gods own perſon? Therefore it is Chriſt alone that maketh vs meete by his election. Therefore Paule fetteth his Apoſtleſhip from grace. Rom. 1, 5. and againe to the Galathians 1. 15. he ſaith that he was ſeparated from his mothers wombe. Yea, foraſmuch as we are all vnprofitable ſeruauntes, euen thoſe that ſeeme to be the moſt excellent of all, ſhall not bee fit for the leaſt calling vntill they be elected. Neuertheleſſe the higher the degree of honour is whereunto euery man is extolled, let him remember that hee is the more bound vnto God.

I haue apointed you. The election is hidden vntill it be reuealed indeed, when as the man is called vnto his office whereunto he was appointed. As Paul in that place which I cited of late, after that he hath ſaid that he was ſeparated from his mothers wombe, he addeth afterward that hee was created an Apoſtle when as God thought good it ſhould be ſo. So the Lord himſelfe doth teſtifie that Ieremie, Ier. 1. 5. was knowen of him before he was in his mothers wombe, whom notwithſtanding hee calleth in his time vnto the office of a Prophet, yet it may be that ſome man may come rightly framed vnto the office of teaching: yea, this is an ordinarie thing in the Church that no manne bee called ſaue he that is furni-furniſhed with neceſſarie giftes. In that Chriſt maketh himſelfe the authour of both, it is no maruell, forasmuchas the father worketh only by him, and he worketh with the father. Therfore aſwel the election as the ordaining is common to them both.

That you may goe. Nowe doth he declare to what end he made mention of his grace, to the ende he might make them goe more merily and willingly about theyr worke. The dignitie of the Apoſtleſhip was not idle, but they were to ſtriue with great ſtraites. Therefore Chriſt pricketh them forwarde, that they may not flie from labours, griefes, & dangers. This argument is taken from the end. Secondly, Chriſt reaſoneth from the effect when as he ſaith, And that yee may bring fruite. For it cannot almoſt bee that any man ſhoulde apply his worke earneſtly and ſtoutly, vnleſſe he hope that his labour will bee fruitfull. Therefore Chriſt ſaith that their endeuours ſhall not bee in vaine, ſo they be readie to obey. Neither doth he only preſcribe vnto the Apoſtles in this place what their calling requireth: but he promiſeth them happie ſucceſſe, leaſt they faint and waxe cold. It can ſcarſe be expreſſed what great force this comfort hath againſt ſo many tentations, whiche doe dayly inuade Chriſtes miniſters. Therefore ſo often as wee thinke that our labour is loſt, let vs remember this, that Chriſte ſhall at length bring to paſſe that that ſhall not bee in vaine which wee goe about. For the promiſe taketh place moſt of all then, when there appeareth no fruite.

At this day craftie mates, and thoſe that ſeeme to the worlde to bee wiſe, doe mocke and ſloute our endeuours as vaine and raſhe, becauſe we endeuour in vaine to ioyne heauen and earth togeather: for in the meane ſeaſon we reape not that fruite which we deſire. But forasmuch as Chriſt hath promiſed on the other ſide that the reward of our labor ſhall follow at length which lyeth hid for a time, let vs labour diligently in the middeſt of the mockage of the world, in doing our dutie. Now here may a queſtion be asked, why Chriſt ſaith that this fruite ſhall bee perpetuall, whenas he ſaith, And that your fruite may remaine: Becauſe the doctrine of the goſpell getteth ſoules vnto Chriſte vnto eternall ſaluation, many do thinke that this is the perpetuitie of the fruite: but I doe extend the ſentence farther, to wit, that the church ſhall ſtand euē vntill the ende of the worlde. For the labour of the Apoſtles yeeldeth fruite, euen at this day, and our preaching is not for one age, but ſhall ſpreade abroad the church, that there may come a new encreaſe after our death. VVhenas he ſaith, your fruite, hee ſpeaketh as if it were gotten through their induſtrie: whereas notwithſtanding Paule teacheth, 1. Cor. 3. 7. that thoſe which water or plant are nothing. And truly the creation of the Church is a more excellent worke of God, then that the glory therof ought to be aſcribed vnto men: but becauſe the Lorde ſheweth his power by the hand of men, leaſt they labour in vaine, he is wont to tranſlate that vnto them which is proper to himſelfe. Neuertheleſſe let vs remember that Chriſt doth adorne his diſciples ſo beningly that he may encourage them and not puff them vp.

That whatſoeuer yee ſhall aske. This member was not added abruptly as many men may thinke. For ſeeing that the function of teaching doth farre ſurpaſſe mans ſtrength, there are moreouer many inuaſions of Satan, which can neuer be endured ſaue only through the power of God. Therefore leaſt the Apoſtles faint, Chriſte helpeth them & preuenteth them with a moſt excellent ayde, as if hee ſhould ſay, if you ſhall haue more to doe, then that you are able to fulfill your function, my father will not faile you. For I haue made you miniſters of the Goſpel vppon this condition, that the father may ſtretch foorth his hande to helpe you ſo often as ye ſhal deſire him in my name to help you. And truly whereas moſt teachers doe eyther faint through ſlouthfulnes, or fall downe flat through deſpayre, it commeth to paſſe by none other meanes ſaue only becauſe they waxe ſlouthfull in praying. Therefore this promiſe of Chriſt ſtirreth vs vp to call vpon God. For whoſoeuer ſhall acknowledge that the ſucceſſe of the worde commeth from God, hee ſhall offer his labour to him with feare and trembling: on the contrarie if any man truſt to his owne induſtrie, and do neglect Gods helpe, or ſhal caſt away both ſpeare and buckler whenas he is come to the matter, he ſhall doe no good after he hath taken great paines.

Furthermore, we muſt take heed of two vices here, of arrogancie & diſtruſt: for as thoſe men doe carelesly paſſe ouer Gods helpe, who thinke that they haue the matter in their hand alreadie, ſo many men do faint through difficultie, becauſe they doe not conſider that they fight through gods power & ayde, vnder whoſe cõduct they go on warfare.

17 Theſe thinges commaund I you. This is alſo added in good time to the ende the Apoſtles might know that mutuall loue amongeſt miniſters is chiefly required, to the end they may edifie the Churche of God with the deſire of concord. For there is no greater impediment, then whenas euery man laboureth apart, and they doe not one helpe another. Therfore vnleſſe the miniſters doe retaine brotherly fellowſhip amongeſt themſelues, it may be that they may erect ſome huge heapes but ſuch as are ſcattered abroad: neuertheleſſe there ſhalbe no building of the Church.

18 If the world hate you. After that Chriſt hath armed the Apoſtles vnto the fight, he doth alſo exhort them vnto pacience. For the Goſpell cannot be preached but the world will goe mad by and by. Wherfore it cannot be that godly teachers ſhall eſcape enuie and the hatred of the worlde. Chriſte foretelleth this in time, leaſt that befall them whiche is wont to befall freſh water ſouldiers, who by reaſon of their vnskilfulnes are bold before they ſee the enemies, when as they come to the fight they are afraide: neither doth he forewarne his Diſciples for this cauſe only, leaſt any newe or vnlooked for thing befall them, but he doth alſo confirme them by his owne example. For it is an vnmeete thing that ſeeing the world did hate him, we who repreſent his perſon, ſhould haue the world (which is alwayes like to it ſelfe) fauourable to vs. I had leuer tranſlate the verbe gineſcete in the indicatiue mode, although if any man had rather haue it the Imparatiue, I doe not gainſay him: becauſe the ſenſe is not altered. There is greater difficultie in the word which followeth next. For ſeeing that he calleth himſelfe former then the Diſciples, this may be referred aſwell vnto the time as vnto the dignitie. The former expoſition is more vſuall, to wit, that Chriſte was hated of the world before his Diſciples. But I doe rather allow the latter, that ſeeing that Chriſte who doeth farre excell was not yet free from the hatred of the world, his miniſters muſt not refuſe the like eſtate. For this ſaying agreeth with that which we had twice in the firſt chapter, 27. & 30. verſes. He that commeth after me, is preferred before me, becauſe he was former then I.

19 If yee were of the world. This is another conſolation that the worlde doth hate them for this cauſe becauſe they are ſeparated from it. And this is their true felicitie & glory: becauſe they are deliuered frō deſtruction by this means. To clenſe doth ſignifie in this place to ſeparate. Nowe if they were choſen out of ꝑ world it foloweth ꝑ they were a part of the world, & that they are ſeparated frō the reſt that periſh, only through gods mercy. In this place Chriſt cōprehēdeth vnder this word worlde, all thoſe which are not regenerate by the ſpirite of god. For he ſetteth the church againſt the world, as we ſhal ſee more fully in the 17. chap. And yet that exhortatiō of Paul is not cōtrary to this doctrin, Ro. 12. 18. Haue peace with al mē ſo much as in you lyeth. For that exception which is added importeth aſmuch as if he ſhold ſay, that we muſt take heed what is lawful for vs to do: leaſt any mā beare too much with the corruptions of the world through the deſire he hath to pleaſe. But there may another queſtiō be obiected as yet. For we ſeethe wicked which are of the world not only cōmōly hated, but alſo accurſed: truly the world doth nothere loue that which is his own. I anſwere, that earthly men who are moued according to the ſenſe of their fleſh do neuer hate ſin indeed: but only ſo far foorth as the care of their own loſſe or gain doth moue thē: althogh Chriſt meant not to deny, but that the world waxeth hot with inwarde diſcord, & rageth within it ſelf: his only meaning was to ſhew, that the world doth only hate that in the faithful which is of God. And it appeareth alſo hereby how fooliſhly the Anabaptiſts do dote, who gather by this one argument only that they are the ſeruants of god, bicauſe they diſpleaſe the more part of mē. For we may redily obiect, that many whiche are of the world: namely, whō the filthy cōfuſiō of all thinges deliteth, do fauour their doctrine: & again, many of the world do hate it, becauſe they are deſirous to haue the politike order remaine.

20 Remēber the word. It may alſo be read in the Indicatiue mode. You remēber: but without any great alteratiō of the ſenſe: yet in my iudgement the Imparatiue mode doth the better agree. And it is a cōfirmatiō of the ſentence next going before where Chriſt ſaid that the world hated him, who did excel his diſciples. For it is not meet that the ſeruant ſhould bee in better eſtate thē his maſter. Furthermore, after that he hath ſpoken of the perſons, he maketh mētiō alſo of the doctrine, for there is nothing that troubeth the godly more, then whē they ſee the doctrine whiche is gods, proudly cōtened of men. For it is an horrible monſter, the beholding wherof may make the ſtrongeſt breaſt & heart quaile. But whileſt that on the other part we remember that the ſonne of God himſelfe did no leſſe trie ſtubbornnes, there is no cauſe why we ſhould maruel, that ꝑ doctrine of god is ſo little reuerēced amōgſt mē. In that he calleth it their & his doctrine, it is referred vnto the miniſterie. There is one onely maſter of the Church: but he would haue his doctrine which he taught firſt to be preached afterward by his Apoſtles.

21 But all theſe things. Becauſe the fury of the worlde is monſtrous, whileſt that it rageth ſo againſt the doctrine of ſaluatiō, Chriſte ſheweth a reaſon thereof, becauſe it is carried headlong into deſtruction through blinde ignoraunce. For no man would warre againſt God openly, therefore it is blindneſſe, and ignoraunce of God, which cauſeth the worlde ſo carelesly to fight againſt Chriſt. Therefore we muſt alwayes haue reſpect to the cauſe, neither can we haue any true conſolation any where els, ſaue only in the teſtimonie of a good conſcience. Hereby muſt our mindes be lifted vp likewiſe vnto thankfulneſſe: that whileſt that the world doth periſh in the blindneſſe thereof, God hath vouchſafed to make vs partakers of his light. Neuertheleſſe we muſt hold that the hatred of Chriſt doth proceede from the dulneſſe of the minde, whenas God is not knowen. For (as I ſay oftentimes) vnbeliefe is blinde: not that the wicked doe vnderſtand and perceiue nothing, but that all their knowledge is confuſed and doth vaniſh away ſtraightway which thing I haue handeled more at large els where.

22 If I had not come and ſpoken vnto them, they ſhould haue no ſinne: but now they haue no excuſe for their ſinne.

23 Hee that hateth me, hateth my father alſo.

24 If I had not done the workes amongeſt them, which no other man hath done, they ſhould haue no ſinne: but now they haue both ſeene, and alſo heard both mee and my father.

25 But that the worde which is written in their law may be fulfilled, they hated me for nothing.

26 And when the comforter ſhall come, whom I will ſende vnto you from my father the ſpirite of truethe, whiche proceedeth from the father, hee ſhall teſtifie of mee.

27 And you doe alſo teſtifie, becauſe you are with mee from the beginning.

22 If I had not come. In that he ſaid that the Iewes hated the goſpel, becauſe they knew not God: leaſt any man ſhould thinke that this ſeruеth to mittigate their offence, hee addeth that they were maliciouſly blinde: as if a man ſhoulde ſhut his eyes leaſt hee bee compelled to behold the light. For otherwiſe it might haue beene obiected againſte Chriſte, if they know not thy father, how is it that thou doeſt not redreſſe their errour? VVhy haſt thou not at leaſt tryed whether they were altogether vnapt to bee taught or no? Hee anſwereth that he hath executed the office of a good and faithfull teacher, but all in vaine: becauſe malice woulde not ſuffer them to returne vnto ſoundeneſſe of minde.

Furthermore, his meaning was to make all men afraide vnder theyr perſon, who doe either refuſe the truth of God when it is offered vnto them, or reſiſt the ſame willingly when they knowe it. And although there remaineth terrible vengeance of God for them, yet Chriſte hath reſpect rather vnto his Diſciples, that hee may encourage them with certaine hope of victorie, leaſt at any time they yeelde vnto the wickednes of the wicked. For whenas we heare that ſuch is their end, wee may triumph now, as it were in the middeſt of the battell.

They ſhoulde haue no ſinne. Chriſt ſeemeth to graunt by theſe wordes, that only vnbeliefe is ſinne: and there be ſome which thinke ſo. Auguſtine ſtine thinketh ſomewhat more ſoberly, yet he commeth vnto the ſame ſenſe. For becauſe faith remitteth and blotteth out all ſinnes, hee ſaith, that it is only the ſumme of vnbeliefe that condemneth. This is truly ſaid, foraſmuch as vnbeliefe doth not only keepe men from beeing deliuered from the giltineſſe of death: but it is the fountaine and cauſe of all euill. But all that diſputation doth nothing appertaine vnto this preſent place. For this word (ſinne) is not taken generally, but according to the circumſtance of the cauſe which is handeled as if Chriſt ſhould ſay, that their ignoraunce is by no meanes excuſable, becauſe they had malitiously refuſed God in his perſon, Likeas if we call him giltleſſe, iuſt, and pure, whom we will acquit of one fault only, wherof he was giltie. Therfore that abſolution of Chriſte is reſtrained vnto one kinde of ſin: becauſe he taketh from the Iewes their cloake of ignorance in the contempt and hatred of the Goſpell. Yet heere ariſeth a newe queſtion as yet, whether vnbeliefe were not ſufficient to condemne men before the comming of Chriſt or noe. And there be frantike fellowes, who gather falſly out of this place, that whoſoeuer died before Chriſts comming without faith, they were in a doubtfull and ſuſpenſed ſtate, vntill Chriſt did ſhew himſelfe vnto them. As if there were not many places of ſcripture extant whiche teſtifie that the onely conſcience was ſufficient to make them guiltie. Death ſaith Paule. Rom. 5. 14. reigned vntill Moſes in the worlde. And in another place in the ſame Epiſtle, 2. 12. he teacheth that they ſhall periſh without lawe which haue ſinned without lawe. Then what is Chriſt his meaning? Truly there is a graunting in theſe wordes, whereby hee glueth vs to vnderſtande that there remaineth nothing for the Iewes, which they can pretend to mitigate their fault, after that they haue reiected life willingly and wittingly when it was offered vnto them. So that the excuſe whiche hee graunteth them doth not quite acquit them, but doeth only extenuate the greeuouſneſſe of the wickednes: according to that, the ſeruaunt which knoweth the will of his maſter, and deſpiceth it, ſhalbe ſorer beat Luke 12. 47. For Chriſt meant not to promiſe pardon vnto others, but to holde his enemies conuicted who had reiected the grace of God ſtubbornly: to the end it might euidently appeare, that they were vnworthy of all pardon and mercie. And we muſt note that he ſpeaketh not of his bare comming, but of that which was ioyned with doctrin. For they had not been giltie of ſo great a fault, becauſe of the preſence of his body only, but the contempt of the doctrine by him deliuered was that which made them vnexcuſable.

23 Hee that hateth mee. An excellent place, whereby we are taught that no man hateth the doctrine of the goſpel, but he bewrayeth his vngodlineſſe againſt God. Many men pretend another thing in words: for whenas they loath the Goſpell, yet will they ſeeme to bee excellent worſhippers of God: but they are but trifles: for the contempt of God lurketh within. So that it commeth to paſſe that Chriſt diſcouereth the hypocriſie of many by the light of his doctrine. Concerning which thing we haue ſpoken more, chap. 3. 20. vpon that place, hee that doeth euill hateth the light. And againe, cha. 5. 23, he that honoureth not the ſonne, honoureth not the father.

24 If I had not done the workes. Hee comprehendeth in my iudgement vnder this worde, workes, all those tokens of his diuine glory whiche hee shewed. For he proued plainely both by myracles, and by the power of the holy Ghoſt, and by other teſtimonies, that he was the ſonne of God: ſo that the Maieſtie of the only begotten ſonne did plainely appeare in him, as we had in the firſt chapter. Concerning the myracles whiche he wrought, it is commonly obiected that he neither wrought more nor greater then Moſes and the Prophetes. The anſwere is knowen that Chriſt excelleth in myracles in this reſpect: becauſe he was not the miniſter only but properly the authour. For hee vſed his owne name, his owne commaundement, his owne power to worke myracles. But (as I haue ſaide) he comprehendeth generally all the teſtimonies of the heauenlye and ſpirituall power, whereby his Diuinitie was reuealed.

They haue ſeene and heard. Hee concludeth that his enemies cannot eſcape by running away, for as much as they deſpiſed the power, whiche was altogether diuine, as might manifeſtly appeare. For God ſhewed foorth his power plainely in the ſonne: wherefore it was in vaine for them to ſay that they had only to deale with a mortall man. This place teacheth vs to be attentiue and readie to weigh the woorkes of God: wherein whileſt that hee ſheweth his power, hee will haue due honour giuen and aſcribed vnto himſelfe. Whereupon it followeth that they are vnthankfull towardes God and malicious, whoſoeuer do darken his giftes or paſſe ouer the ſame contemptuouſly.

25 But that it may bee fulfilled. That which is contrary to nature ſeemeth to be vncredible: but there is nothing more contrary to reaſon then to hate God: therefore Chriſte ſaith that their minds are infected with ſo great wickednes that they hated him for nothing and without a cauſe. Whereby he amplifieth their wickednes. Chriſte citeth a place out of the Pſal. 35. 19. which he ſaith is nowe fulfilled: not becauſe the ſame thing dyd not befall Dauid before: but that hee may touch the obſtinate wickednes of his nation which diſcending by line all diſcent from the great graundfathers vnto the fourth generation did reigne without ende, as if hee ſhould ſay that they were no better then their fathers which hated Dauid without a cauſe. By lawe hee meaneth the Pſalmes: becauſe all the doctrine of the Prophetes was nothing els but an appurtenance of the lawe, & we know that Moſes his miniſterie did endure vntill the time of Chriſt. Furthermore he calleth it their law not for honours ſake, but that they may be ſorer pricked with the familiar title: as if he ſhould ſay, they haue the lawe giuen them by heritable right, wherein they ſee their manners liuely painted out.

26 And when. After that Chriſt hath told his diſciples that the goſpel ought to be neuer a whit the leſſe eſteemed, becauſe it hath many aduerſaries euen in the very Church, he ſetteth the teſtimonie of the ſpirite now againſt their vngodly furie, wherwith their conſciences being vnderpropt, they can neuer fall: as if he ſhould ſay, the worlde ſhall rage againſt you, your doctrine ſhall be mocked of ſome, otherſome ſhall alſo accurſe it: but there ſhalbe no ſuch violent motions, that they ſhall bee able to undermine the firmeneſſe of your faith: after that the holy ghoſt ſhall bee giuen you, that hee may eſtabliſhe you by his teſtimonie. And truly truly this is our only ayde, whenas the world is all on an vprore, that the truth of God being ſealed vp in our harts by the ſpirite, doth deſpice whatſoeuer is in the world. For if it were ſubiect to mens iudgements, it ſhould fall out, that our faith ſhoulde bee ouerwhelmed an hundred times dayly. Therefore we muſt note where we muſt ſtand amongeſt ſo many turmoyles, to wit, becauſe wee haue not receiued the ſpirite of this worlde, but the ſpirite which is of God, that we may know thoſe thinges which are giuen vs of GOD. Hee is the only witneſſe, he doth mightily beate downe, ſcatter abroade, ouerthrowe, what thing ſoeuer this world hath ſet vp on high to darken or ſuppreſſe gods truth. VVhoſoeuer ſhall be endowed with this ſpirit, they are ſo far frō being diſcouraged through the hatred & contempt of the worlde, that euery one of them ſhall ouercome the whole worlde, in the meane ſeaſon wee muſt beware that we depend not vpon the reſpect of men. For ſo long as our faith ſhall wander in ſuch ſort, yea, ſo ſoone as it ſhall goe out of the ſanctuarie of God, it muſt needes wauer miſerably. Therfore it muſt bee called backe vnto the inwarde and ſecrete teſtimonie of the ſpirite, which the faithfull knowe is giuen them from heauen. The ſpirite is ſaid to teſtifie of Chriſt, becaule it retaineth and ſtayeth our faith in him alone: that we may ſeeke no part of ſaluation els where, he calleth him the comforter. Againe, to the end we may not feare ſo long as we truſt to his ayde. For Chriſt meant to fortifie our faith by this title, leaſt it ſhould faint in any temptations. That muſt alſo be applied vnto this preſent circumſtance, in that he calleth him the ſpirit of truth. For we muſt vnderſtande the oppoſition, that men are carried about diuerſly without this witneſſe, neither doe they reſt ſoundly any where, and that when and whereſoeuer he ſpeaketh he deliuereth mens minds from all doubting and from feare of deceit. In that he ſaith, that hee will ſend him from the father, and againe, that hee proceedeth from the father, it ſerueth to augment the weight of his authoritie. For the teſtimonie of the ſpirite ſhould not be ſufficient againſt ſuche ſtrong inuaſions againſt ſo many & ſuch forcible engines, vnleſſe we were perſuaded that he came from God. Therfore it is Chriſt that ſendeth the ſpirite, but out of his heauenly glory: to the end we may know that it is not mans gift, but a ſure pledge of Gods grace. VVhereby appeareth how fryuolous the ſubtiltie of the Grecians was, when as they denyed vnder colour of theſe wordes that the ſpirite proceedeth from the ſonne. For Chriſt nameth the father heere as he is wont, to the end he may make vs behold his diuinitie.

27 And yee beare witneſſe. Chriſte giueth vs to vnderſtande that the teſtimonie of the ſpirite is not ſuch that the Apoſtles haue it for themſelues alone, and enioy it themſelues alone, but that it ſpreadeth it ſelfe farther abroad by them, becauſe they ſhould bee the inſtruments of the ſpirite as he ſpake by their mouth. VVe ſee now how faith commeth by hearing, and yet it hath the certaintie which it hath from the ſeale & earneſte of the ſpirite: Thoſe menne which know not ſufficiently the miſt of mans minde, they thinke that faith is conceiued naturally by preaching only: and on the other ſide many brayneſicke men cannot away with preaching, whileſt þ they breath out ſecrete reuelations and inſpirations. But wee ſee how Chriſte ioyneth theſe thinges togeather.

Therefore although there is no faith vntill the ſpirite of God do lighten our mindes, and ſeale our heartes, yet muſt wee not fet viſions or oracles from the cloudes, but the worde which is nigh vs in our mouth and heart, Deu. 13.14. ought to haue all our ſenſes tyed to it, and ſet faſt vpon it. As Iſayas ſaith moſt excellently. 59.21. This is my couenaunt, ſaith the Lorde, my ſpirite which I haue put vpon thee, and my woordes which I haue put in thy mouth, ſhall not faile, &c. This clauſe, yee haue been with mee from the beginning, is added for this cauſe, that we may know that the Apoſtles deſerue more credite, becauſe they ſaw theſe thinges with their eies which they preach: as ſaith Iohn, that which we haue hard which we haue ſeene, which our hands haue handeled. 1. Iohn 1.1. For the Lorde would that we ſhould be ſo prouided for by all meanes, that there might bee nothing wanting whiche might approoue the Goſpell fully.

Chap. 16.

1 THeſe thinges haue I ſpoken vnto you that yee may not bee offended.

2 They ſhall make you ſtraungers from their Synagogue: but the houre commeth that whoſoeuer ſhall kill you, hee may thinke that hee doth God good ſeruice.

3 And theſe things ſhall they doe vnto you, becauſe they haue not knowen the father nor yet mee.

4 But I haue ſpoken theſe thinges vnto you, that when their houre commeth, you may remember, that I haue tolde you. And I haue not ſpoken theſe thinges vnto you from the beginning, becauſe I was with you.

5 And now I goe to him that ſent me, and none of you asketh mee, whither goeſt thou?

6 But becauſe I haue ſpoken theſe thinges, ſorrow hath filled your heart.

7 But I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I goe, for if I goe not, the comforter will not come vnto you: but and if I ſhall goe, I will ſend him vnto you.

1 Theſe things haue I ſpoken vnto you. He ſaith againe that none of theſe thinges which he hath ſpoken are ſuperfluous: for ſeeing that fights & combates are prepared for them they were to be furniſhed with lawfull weapons before the time. And in the meane ſeaſon, hee giueth them to vnderſtande that if they doe well muſe vppon this doctrine they ſhall be able to reſiſt. Let vs alſo remember that that is ſpoken to vs alſo, whiche was ſpoken then to the Apoſtles: And firſt of all wee muſt note that Chriſt ſendeth not his into the battel vnarmed: and that therefore no man faileth in this warfare, ſaue only through the fault of his owne ſlouthfulneſſe. Neither muſt wee waite and ſtay vntill we come vnto the preſent matter: but we muſt endeuour that being acquainted with theſe ſpeches of Chriſt, we may enter the combate when need requireth. Neither neede wee doubt but that wee ſhall obtaine the victorie ſo long as theſe admonitions of Chriſt remaine deepely imprinted in our mindes. For whenas he ſaith, leaſt yee bee offended, hee giueth vs to vnderſtand, ſtand, that we neede not feare, leaſt we be turned aſide out of the righte courſe with any thing. But it appeareth heereby how fewe doe rightlye learne this doctrine, in that thoſe menne, which ſeeme to remember it, when they are free from daunger, doe quayle and yeelde, when they are to enter the battaile, as if they were rude and ignoraunte. Therefore lette vs ſo buckle theſe weapons vnto vs, that they neuer fall away from vs.

2. Straungers from their Synagogue. This was no light offence to trouble their mindes withall, that they were to be driuen like wicked menne out of the company of the godly, at leaſt of thoſe, which did boaſt that they were the people of God, and made their bragge of the title of the Church. For the faythfull are not onely ſubiect to perſecution, but vnto reproaches and ſlaunder, as Paule ſaieth, 1. Cor. 4. 9. 10. Notwithſtanding Chriſt byddeth them ſtand ſtoutly euen againſt this inuaſion: becauſe although they be thruſt out of the Synagogues, yet neuertheleſſe they remayne in the kyngdome of God. The ſumme is, that wee muſte not be diſcouraged with the peruerſe iudgements of menne, but that we muſt valyauntly endure the reproach of the croſſe of Chriſte: being cõtent with this one thing, that God alloweth our cauſe, which menne do vniuſtly and wickedly condemne. Furthermore, we gather heereby that the miniſters of the Goſpel are not onely euil intreated by the profeſſed enemyes of the Goſpel, but that they are ſlaundered ſometimes euen by thoſe, which ſeeme to be of the houſhold of the Church, yea very pillars. The Scribes, and Phariſees, and Prieſtes, by whom the Apoſtles were cõdemned, did boaſt that they were appointed by God to be iudges of the Church: and indeede the ordinary gouernment of the Churche was in their power, and the function of iudgeing came from God, not frõ men: but they had corrupted al the order, which GOD had appoynted, with theyr tyranny. So that it came to paſſe, that the power which was graũted vnto them to edification, was nothing elſe but a monſtrous oppreſſion of the ſeruauntes of God: excommunication which ought to haue beene a medicine to purge the Church, was turned to baniſh godlyneſſe out of the ſame. Seeing that the Apoſtles tried that in their time, there is no cauſe why the Pope his curſſes ſhuld greatly terrifie vs, wherwith he thundreth againſt vs for the teſtimonie of the Goſpel. For we muſte not feare leaſt they hurt vs any more, then theſe olde ones did the Apoſtles. Yea, we ought to deſire nothing more then that wee may be ſtraungers from that congregation, out of which Chriſt is baniſhed. Neuertheleſſe, let vs note, that the diſcipline which God ordayned in his Church from the beginning, was not abolyſhed by that groſſe abuſe. For ſeeinge that Sathan is wholly occupied about this, that he may corrupt al Gods inſtitutions, we muſt not yeelde vnto him, that that may be quite takẽ away, becauſe of corruptions, which God hath eſtablyſhed for euer. Therefore excommunication is no leſſe to be reclaimed vnto his pure & lawful vſe, then Baptiſme and the Supper of the Lord.

But the boure commeth. Chriſt perſiſteth as yet in that offence, in that the enemies of the Goſpel doe challenge and take to themſelues this authoritie, that they thinke that they offer holy ſacrifices vnto God, whẽ they put the faythful to death. Now it is of it ſelf an hard matter, that the innocent ſhoulde be cruelly vexed: but it is a farre harder and a farre more troubleſome thing, that the iniuries whiche the wicked doe to the children of God, ſhould be accounted iuſte puniſhmentes and due to theyr wickednes. But we muſt place ſo much ayde in a good conſcience, that we may ſuffer our ſelues to bee thus oppreſſed for a time, vntil ſuch time as Chriſte appeare out of heauen, the reuenger of our cauſe and his owne. But it is a wonder, that the enemies of the truth ſeeing their own conſciences doe accuſe them, do not onely deceiue men, but doe alſo challenge to themſelues praiſe for vniuſt crueltie before God. I anſwere, that hipocrites, howſoeuer their own conſcience doth accuſe them, do ſo flatter themſelues, that they deceiue themſelues. They are ambitious, cruell, proud: but they cloake al theſe vices with the colour of zeale, to the ende they may careleſly flatter themſelues. There is added alſo vnto theſe a certeine furious drunkennes, after that their handes haue beene imbrued with the bloud of the Martyrs.

3. And theſe things ſhal they do vnto you. It is not in vaine, that he doth ſo often cal the Apoſtles vnto that conſideration, that this is the only cauſe why the vnbeleeuers doe rage againſt them, becauſe they know not god. And yet notwithſtanding this is not ſpoken to mittigate their offence, but that the Apoſtles may deſpiſe their iury with loftie minds. For it falleth out oftentimes, that the authoritie wherein the wicked excell, and the pompe that appeareth in them, doe ſhake modeſt and godly mindes. On the contrary, Chriſt commaundeth his diſciples to riſe againſt them with holy magnanimitie, that they may contemne the aduerſary, whom onely errour and blindnes doe driue forward. For this is our braſe wall, when we are certeinelye perſwaded that God is on our ſide: and that thoſe which reſiſt vs are deſtitute of reaſon. And in theſe wordes are we taught what a grieuous and great euill the ignoraunce of God is, which cauſeth euen murtherers of their fathers to ſeeke to be praiſed for their wickednes.

4. That when their houre ſhal come yee may remember. Hee repeateth that which he had ſaide already, that this is no ſhadowiſhe philoſophye: but ſuch as muſt be brought to practiſe and vſe: and that he preacheth now concerning theſe matters, that they may indeede declare that they were not taught in vaine. When as he ſaieth, that yee may remember, he commandeth them firſt to lay vp thoſe things in their mindes, which they haue heard: and againe to remember them, when neede ſhal require, at length he giueth them to vnderſtand, that that is of no final importance, in that he prophecieth of things to come. I haue not told you from the beginning. For aſmuch as the Apoſtles were as yet tender and weake, ſo long as Chriſte was conuerſant with them in the fleſhe, hee ſpared them as a good and mercifull maiſter, and ſuffered not more to be laid vpon them, thē they were able to beare. Therfore they had no great neede as then of confirmation, when as they were at reſt from perſecutions: now he telleth thē that their eſtate ſhould be altered, and becauſe there is a new eſtate prepared for them, he dooth alſo exhort them to prepare themſelues vnto the cumbat.

5. Nowe I vnto him. He mittigateth with a moſte excellent conſolation, that ſorow which they might conceiue by his departure: which was very neceſſary. They that had liued hitherto daintily, were called hereafter vnto great and hard fightes. What ſhuld then haue befallen them, vnleſſe vnlesse they shuld haue known that Christ, the gouernour of their saluation was in heauen? For to go vnto the father is nothing elsse but to bee receiued into the heauenly glory, that he may enioy the principal gouerment. Therefore this remedy of sorrow is set before them, that although Christ be absent in body, yet will hee sit at the right hande of the father, that he may defend the faithfull by his power. Hee reprehendeth two faultes in the Apostles in this place, that they were too much addicted to the visible presence of his flesh, and secondly, that so soone as it was taken away, being oppressed with sorow, they lyfted vppe their eyes no higher. The same thing doth commonly befal vs: for we doe alway fasten Christ to our sentses: that done, if he appeare not as we would wish, we feigne to our selues matter of dispayre. This seemeth to be falsly obiected to the Apostles, that they aske not whither their master goeth, seeing that they enquired diligently of that matter: but we may easily answere, that they did so aske, that they lifted not vp their mindes vnto hope, which thing they ought principally to haue done. The sense therfore is this, so sone as you heare of my departure, you are afraid, neither do yee consider whither I go, or to what end.

7. But I tell you the trueth. He testifieth that his absence shall bee profitable, that they may cease to be desirous to haue him present before their eyes: and he vseth a kinde of oath. For because we are carnall, there is nothing harder for vs, then to plucke out of our mindes this preposterous affection, whereby we pul down Christ from heauen vnto vs. And he expresseth this kind of profitablenes, that they could not otherwise be endowed with the holy Ghost, vnlesse he should forsake the world. But the presence of Christ is farre more profitable and more to bee desired, whereby he giueth himselfe vnto vs to be enioyned by the grace & power of his spirite, then if he were present before our eyes. Neither muste we moue a question, whether Christ could not set downe the spirit, whē he was vppon earth. For he taketh that for a thing, which al mē graunt, whatsoeuer his father hath decreed. And certeinly so soone as the Lord hath once declared what he will haue done, it is foolishnes to dispute of the possibilitie.

8. And when he shal come, he shal reproue the world of sinne, and of righteousnes, and of iudgement.

9. Of sinne, because they beleeue not in me.

10. And of righteousnesse, because I goe to my father, and yee shall see mee no more:

11. And of iudgement, because the prince of this world is iudged.

12. I haue yet many thinges to speake vnto you: but you cannot beare them now.

13. And when he shal come, to wit, the spirit of trueth, he shal lead you into al truth. Neither shal he speake of himselfe, but whatsoeuer thinges he shal heare, he shal speak, and he shal tel you those things, which shal come to passe.

14. He shal glorifie me, because he shal take of mine, and shew vnto you.

15. All things which the father hath are mine: therefore said I vnto you, he shal take of mine, and shew vnto you.

8. When yee shall come. Omittinge the diuersitie of expositions, whiche the obscuritye of this place hath broughte forthe, I will onelye affirme that whiche I doe thinke dooth beste of all agree

agree with Christ his meaning. Hee had promiſed the ſpirit to his diſciples, he commendeth the excellency of the gift now by the effect: becauſe his ſpirit ſhal not gouerne, vphold, and defend them alone, but ſhal ſpread abroad his force farther.

He shal repreue the world (ſaith he.) That is, he ſhal not onely abide ſhut vp in you, but ſhall ſpreade abroade himſelfe from you through his power, throughout the whole worlde. Therefore hee promiſeth vnto them the ſpirite, which ſhall be the iudge of the world, and by whome their preaching ſhal be ſo liuely and effectuall, that it ſhal bring thoſe into order, who paſsing their boundes beefore throughe vnbrideled lyberty, were holden with no feare or reuerence. And we muſt note that Chriſt ſpeaketh not in this place of ſecrete reuelations: but of the power of the ſpirite, which appeareth in the externall preaching of the Goſpel, and in the voice of menne. For how commeth it to paſſe, that the voice of manne pearceth the mindes, doth take roote there, and finally e bringeth foorth fruite, making fleſhy heartes of ſtony heartes, and renewinge the menne themſelues, ſaue only becauſe the ſpirit of Chriſt doth quicken it? Otherwiſe it ſhuld be a dead letter and a vaine ſounde: as Paul teacheth excellently, 2. Cor. 3. 6. where he boaſteth that he is a miniſter of the ſpirite, becauſe God wrought mightely in his doctrine. The ſenſe therefore is this, when as the Apoſtles ſhal haue the ſpirite giuen them, they ſhall bee furniſhed with celeſtiall and diuine power, that they maye exerciſe authoritie, and haue iuriſdiction throughout the whole world. This is attributed rather to the ſpirite then to them, becauſe they ſhall haue no power of their owne, ſeeing they ſhalbe onely miniſters and inſtrumentes: and it is the ſpirite alone, which is in them, which ſhall gouerne. I thinke that he comprehendeth vnder this word (world) aſwel thoſe that ſhould be truely conuerted vnto Chriſt, as the reprobate and hypocrites. For the ſpirit reproueth men two manner of wayes in the preaching of the Goſpel: for ſome are touched throughly, ſo that they humble themſelues willingly, they ſubſcribe vnto the iudgemente readily, whereby they are condemned.

Otherſome although they being conuicted, cannot eſcape guiltineſſe, yet doe they not yeelde from their heart neyther doe they ſubmit themſelues vnto the authority and dominion of the ſpirit: but rather beeinge ſubdued, they frette inwardly, and being confounded, they doe not yet ceaſe to nouriſh ſtubbernnes in their hearts. Now do we ſee how the ſpirite ought to reproue the world by the Apoſtles: to witte, becauſe GOD reuealed his iudgement in the Goſpel, wherewith when the conſciences were ſmitten, they beganne to feale their own myſery and the grace of God. For the word Elenchein is taken in this place for to conuicte. That which is contained, 1. Corinth. 24. 34. ſhall bringe no ſmall lighte to the vnderſtanding of this place, where Paul ſaith, if they prophecie all and an vnbeleeuer or an idiote doe come in, he is reproued of all, he is iudged of all, and ſo the ſecretes of his heart are made manifeſt. Paule intreateth in that place properly of one kinde of reprouing: to wit, when the Lord bringeth his elect vnto repentaunce by the Goſpel: yet it appeareth euidently heereby, how the ſpirit of God doth by the ſound of mans voyce compell men vnacquainted before with the yoake, to acknowledge and ſubmit themſelues to his gouernment. Now the queſtion is to what end

Christ said thus. Some doe thinke that he noteth the cause of the hatred, whereof he made mention: as if he should say, that the world doth hate them for this cause: because the spirite shall vrge the world on the other side by them. But I doe rather subscribe vnto those other, who teach that Christe didde intende some other thing, as I haue alreadye touched in the beeginninge. For it was verye requisite that the Apostles shoulde knowe that the gyfte of the spirite, which was promysed them, was no small gyft. Therefore the excellencie thereof is descrybed, that GOD shall by this meanes erecte his iudgemente seate to iudge the whole world.

9. Of sinne. Now it remayneth that we see what it is to reprove of sinne. Christ seemeth to make infidelytie the onely cause of sinne: and that is diuersly wrested by the interpreters. But (as I sayd before) I will not declare what euery one of them teacheth or thinketh. VVe must firste of all note that the iudgement of the spirite beginneth at the declaration of sinne. For this is the beginning of spiritual doctrine, that menne begotten in sinne haue nothing in themselues, but the matter of sinne. Furthermore, Christ maketh mention of infidelitie, to the ende hee mighte shew what the nature of man is in it selfe. For because the bond wherby he vniteth himselfe vnto vs is fayth, vntil we beleeue in him, wee are without him, and deuided from him. Therefore these words importe as much as if he should haue said, when the spirit shall come, he shal declare and proue that sinne reigneth in the world without me. Therfore infidelitie is named in this place, because it separateth vs from Christ, and so bringeth to passe that there is nothing left in vs but sinne. To be shorte, the corruption and frowardnes: of mans nature is condemned in these words, least we should think that there is one drop of righteousnes in vs without Christ.

10. Of righteousnes. VVe must note the course of the degrees, whiche Christ setteth downe. Hee saith now, that the worlde must be reproued of righteousnes. For doubtlesse menne shal not hunger and thirste after righteousnes: yea they shal with loathsomnesse refuse whatsoeuer shall be spoken of it, vnlesse they shal be touched with the feeling of sin. Especially we must thus thinke of the faithfull, that they cannot profitte in the Gospel, vntil they shalbe first humbled: which cannot be vntill they come to the knowledge of their sinnes. It is the proper function of the law to call the consciences vnto Gods iudgement, and to wounde them with feare: but the Gospel cannot be rightly preached, but that it muste bring from sinne vnto righteousnes, and from death to life. Therefore it must needes borrow that first member of the law, wherof Christ spake. And heere vnderstand that righteousnes, which we haue by the grace of Christ. Christ placeth that in his ascention vnto his father: and that not without cause: for like as (as Paule testifieth, Rom. 4. 24) hee rose againe for our iustification: so he sitteth nowe at the right hande of the father, that he may exercise whatsoeuer power is giuen him, and so may fulfill all things. Finally, he filleth the world with the smel of his righteousnes out of his heauenly glory. And the spirite pronounceth by the Gospell that this is the onely meanes whereby we are iudged iuste. Therefore this second degree is fet from the conuiction of sin, that the spirite may conuince the worlde, what is to be accounted true righteousnes: to wit,

Christ

Chriſt hath appointed and ordained the kingdome of life by his aſcending into heauen, and he ſitteth now at the right hand of the father, to the end he may eſtabliſh true righteouſnes.

11. And of iudgement. Thoſe that take this word iudgement for damnation, they want not a reaſon for the ſame: becauſe Chriſt addeth immediately, that the prince of the world is iudged. But as I thinke the other ſenſe dooth better agree: to witte, that ſo ſoone as the light of the Goſpell is once lighted, the ſpirite reuealeth, that the ſtate of the world was rightly and orderly framed by the victory of Chriſt, whereby he threwe down Sathan his empyre, as if hee ſhould ſaye, that this is the true reſtoringe, whereby al things are reformed, when as Chriſt himſelfe poſſeſſeth the kingdome alone, hauing ſubdued and conquered Sathan. Therefore iudgement is ſet againſt confuſed and diſordered things, or (that I maye ſpeake more brieflye) it is contrarye to diſorder, as if a man ſhould call it righteneſſe or ſtraightneſſe: in whiche ſenſe it is oftentimes taken in the ſcripture. The ſenſe therefore is, that ſo long as Sathan ruleth, he mixeth and troubleth all thinges, ſo that there is a filthy and euill fauoured confuſion of the workes of God: but when as he is ſtripped of his tyrannye by Chriſt, then is the world reformed, and there appeareth good order. So that the ſpirite conuinceth the world of iudgment: that is, that Chriſt reſtoreth and bringeth thoſe things in order, which were gone to decay before, hauing ouercome the prince of iniquitie.

12. I haue yet many thinges. Chriſt his ſermon coulde not preuaile ſo much amongſt his diſciples, but that their rudenes did cauſe them doubt as yet in many thinges: yea, they did ſcarſe taſte of thoſe thinges, whiche ought to haue refreſhed them throughlye, vnleſſe the weakenes of the fleſh had hindered them. Therefore it could not be, but that acknowledging their own want, they ſhuld feare and ſtand in doubt. Therefore in that he ſaith, that they are vnable to beare thē, if he ſhall tell them more and higher things, it tendeth to this end, that being incouraged with the hope of better profiting, they bee not diſcouraged. For it was not meete that they ſhuld meaſure the grace wherwith they ſhuld be endowed, according to the preſent feeling, ſeeing they were ſo farre from heauen. In ſumme, he biddeth them be of good courage, how weake ſoeuer they be now. But becauſe they had no vnderpropping whereunto they might leane ſaue onely doctrine, Chriſt telleth them that he had tempered the ſame, ſo that they might receiue it: yet ſo þ they are to hope for an higher and more plentifull ſhortly: as if he ſhuld ſay, if that be not yet ſufficient to eſtabliſh you, which you haue heard of me, ſuffer a litle: for ye ſhal ſhortly be taught by the ſpirit, and then ſhall ye want nothing, hee ſhall reſolue that which is yet rude in you.

Nowe the queſtion is, what thoſe thinges were, whiche the Apoſtles were not fitte to learne as yet. To the end the Papiſts may thruſt in their owne inuentions in ſteede of Gods oracles, they do wickedly abuſe this place. Chriſte promiſed (ſay they) vnto the Apoſtles new reuelations: therefore they muſt not ſtay in the ſcripture, aboue which he calleth his. Firſt of all, if we will ſay, as Auguſtine ſaith, we ſhal anſwere readily. His wordes are theſe, ſeeing that Chriſt held his peace, which of vs can ſaye that they are theſe or theſe thinges? or if hee dare ſaye ſo, how will hee prooue it? who is ſo vaine or raſhe, who although hee ſay thoſe thinges, which are true, canne affirme without any diuine teſtimonie, that thoſe are the thinges, which the Lord would not vtter at that time? But wee haue a ſurer reaſon out of Chriſt his wordes to refute them. The ſpirite is called the perfect maiſter of truth, whom Chriſt promyſed to his Apoſtles. And why was hee promiſed, ſaue only that they might deliuer with their handes the wiſdome, which they receiued from him? The ſpirit was giuen them, who being their guide and directer, they executed the office which was enioyned them. The ſame ſpirit had brought them into all trueth, when as they coprehended in writing the ſum of their doctrine. VVhoſoeuer thinketh that there ought any thing to be added to this doctrine, as if it were lame and but halfe full and perfect, he doth not only accuſe the Diſciples of fraudulent dealing, but he doth alſo blaſpeme the ſpirit. If the doctrine, which they didde write had proceeded from freſh water ſoldiours and nouices, the addition had not beene ſuperfluous: but now ſithence that their writinges are as it were the euerlaſting tables of that reueſation, which was promiſed them and giuen them, there can nothing be added vnto them without doing cruell iniury to the ſpirite. Furthermore the Papiſts are more then ridiculous, when as they are come to the matters themſelues. For they define that thoſe ſecretes, which the Apoſtles were vnable to bere, were childiſh diriges, then which there is nothing more vaine or fooliſh. Forſooth ſpirite muſt needes come downe from heauen, that the Apoſtles might learne how to hallow the chalices with their altars, how to baptiſe Belles, how to bleſſe holy water, and how to celebrate Maſſe. Therfore how doe noddies and children learne theſe thinges, which haue them at their fingers endes? Therefore it is moſt manifeſt, that the Papiſts doe mocke God, ſeeinge that they feigne that thoſe thinges came downe from heauen, which doe no leſſe ſmell of the miſteries of Ceres and Proſerpina, then they are contrary to the ſincere wiſdome of the ſpirite. But let vs, vnleſſe we will be vnthankfull to God, reſte vppon that doctrine, whereof the Apoſtles were the authors, as their writinges declare: ſeeing that the chiefeſt perfection of the heauenly wiſdome is deliuered vnto vs there, which may make the man of GOD perfect, Colloſſ. 1. 28. Let vs not thinke that it is lawefull for vs to goe beyond the ſame. For our height, and breadth, and depth are placed in that, that we knowe the loue of God ſhewed vnto vs in Chriſte, Ephe. 3. 18. This knowledge excelleth all knowledge, as ſaieth Paule. Like as when hee teacheth that all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge are hidden in Chriſt, Colloſſ. 2. 3. hee forgeth not an vnknowne Chriſt, but him whome he had liuely depaynted by his preaching, that he may be ſeene as it were crucified before our eyes: as hee ſaith vnto the Galathians, the third chapter, the firſt verſe. But leaſt there ſhoulde anye doubt remaine, Chriſte declareth afterwarde by his owne wordes, what thoſe thinges be, which the Apoſtles could not beare.

Hee ſhall declare vnto you thoſe thinges which ſhall come (ſaieth he.) Some doe reſtraine this vnto the ſpirite of prophecie, but in my iudgment he meaneth rather the eſtate of his ſpirituall kingdome whiche ſhoulde come, ſuche as the Apoſtles ſaw ſhortely after his reſurrection: but they could in no caſe comprehend it then.

Therfore he doth not promiſe thē prophecies concerning things which ſhuld happen after their death: but he only giueth thē to vnderſtand that the

the nature of his kingdome ſhalbe of an other ſorte, and the glory farre greater then they can nowe conceiue in their mindes. The treaſures of which hidden wiſdome (which the heauenly Aungels doe learne by the Church with admiration) Paule expoundeth and vnfoldeth in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians from the firſt chapter vntil the ende of the fourth. Wherefore there is no cauſe why we ſhuld fette it out of the Popes treſurie or cheſt.

For he shal not speake of himselfe. This is a confirmation of that clauſe, hee shal leade you into all trueth. We know that God is the fountaine of truth, and that there is no certeine or ſound thing without him. Wherefore to the end the Apoſtles may ſafely or aſſuredly beleeue the oracles of the ſpirite, Chriſt affirmeth that they are diuine: as if hee ſhould ſay, that all that ſloweth from God, which the ſpirit ſhal bring. And yet the maieſtie of the ſpirit is no whitte diminiſhed by theſe woordes, as if hee were not God, or were inferiour to the father: but they are referred vnto the capacitie of our minde. For becauſe we doe not ſufficiently comprehende by reaſon of the vale put betweene, with how great reuerence we ought to receiue thoſe thinges, which the ſpirite reuealeth vnto vs: therefore there is expreſſe mention made of his diuinitie: like as hee is called els where the earneſt, wherby God doth confirme vnto vs our ſaluatiõ, and the ſeale wherby he ſealeth vnto vs the certeintie thereof. In ſum Chriſt meant to teach that the doctrine of the ſpirit is not of this worlde: as if it were bred in the ayre, but that it ſhal come out of the ſecrete places of the heauenly ſanctuary, Ephe. 1. 3.

14. Hee shall glorifie me. Now Chriſt telleth them that the ſpirite ſhall not come, that he may erect ſome new kingdome, but rather that he may eſtabliſh the glory giuen him of the father. For many men dreame that Chriſt taught, onely that he might deliuer the firſt rudimentes, and that he might ſend the diſciples afterwarde into an higher ſchoole. By this meanes they make no more account of the goſpel then of the law, which is ſaid, Galath. 3. 24. to haue beene a ſchoole maiſter to the olde people. There is an other errour, which is no more to be borne with then this which followeth is, that Chriſt hauing taken his leaue, as if he had made an end of ruling, were nothing now. They thruſt the ſpirit into his place. From this fountaine did flow the ſacrileges of the Pope and Mahomet. For although theſe Antichriſtes doe much differ one from another, yet they haue both one principle: to witte, that we are entred into the right faith by the goſpel, but yet we muſt fette the perfection of doctrine ſomwhere elſe, which may throughly pulliſh vs. If the ſcripture be obiected to the Pope, he ſaith, that we ought not to ſtay there, becauſe the ſpirite which came vpon, afterward hath lifted vs vppe aboue it by many additions.

Mahomet ſaith, that without his Alcharan men do alwayes continue children: therefore the world was falſly bewitched vnder colour of the ſpirit, to depart from the plaine trueth of Chriſt. For ſo ſoone as the ſpirite is pluckte away from the word of Chriſt, the gate is ſet open vnto all manner of dotinges and ſeducinges. The like way of deceiuing hath beene aſſayed in our time by many frantik fellowes. The doctrine which is written ſeemed to them to be litterall: therefore it pleaſed thẽ to coine a new kinde of diuinitie, which ſhould conſiſt vpon reuelations.

Now

Now we ſee how litle ſuperfluitie there was in Chriſt his admonition that he ſhuld be glorified by the ſpirit, which he would ſend: to the end we might know that this is the office of the ſpirit, to eſtabliſh Chriſte his kingdom, and to defend and confirme for euer whatſoeuer the Father hath giuen him. Then to what end ſerueth the doctrine of the ſpirit? not that it may lead vs away from the ſchoole of Chriſt, but rather that that voice may be eſtabliſhed, whereby we are commanded to heare him. Otherwiſe he ſhould take ſomewhat from Chriſt his glory. The reaſon is added, He ſhall take of mine ſaith Chriſt, in which woordes he giueth vs to vnderſtand that we receiue the ſpirit to this end, that we may enioy his benefites. For what dooth he giue vs? That wee may be waſhed by the bloud of Chriſte, that ſinne may be aboliſhed in vs through his death, that our old man may be crucified, that his reſurrection may be able to reforme vs vnto newnes of life, finally, that we may be partakers of his good thinges. Therfore the ſpirit giueth vs nothing aparte from Chriſt, but taketh that from Chriſt, which he powreth ouer into vs. The ſame muſt we thinke of doctrine. For he doth not illuminate vs, that he may lead vs away euen a litle from Chriſt, but that he may fulfil that which Paul ſaith, 1. Cor. That Chriſt is made vnto vs wiſdom, and againe he openeth thoſe treaſures which are hidden in Chriſt. In ſum, he enricheth vs with no other, but with the riches of Chriſte, that he may ſhew forth his glory in al things.

15. VVhat things ſoeuer the father hath, they are mine. Becauſe Chriſt might ſeeme to take from his father that which he chalengeth to himſelf, he confeſſeth that he hath that from the father, which he imparteth vnto vs by the ſpirit. And, when as he ſaith, that al things which the father hath are his, he ſpeaketh in the perſon of a mediatour: becauſe we muſt draw out of his fulnes. He hath alwaies reſpect vnto vs, as hath bin ſaid: but we ſee how the more part of men deceiue thēſelues, which paſsing ouer Chriſt, ſeeke God here and there. Other ſome expound it, that that is common to the ſonne, whatſoeuer the father hath, inaſmuch as the ſame is God. But hee intreateth not ſo much in this place of the hidden & inward (that I may ſo call it) power, as of his office, which was enioyned him towarde vs. Finally, he commendeth his riches, that he may inuite vs to enioy thē, and he reckoneth the ſpirit amongſt the gifts, which we receiue of the father by his hand.

16. A litle while, and you ſee me not: and againe a litle while, and yee ſee me, becauſe I goe to my father.

17. Therfore certeine of his diſciples ſaid amongſt themſelues, what is this that hee ſaith vnto vs, A litle while, and ye ſee me not: and againe, a litle while, and yee ſhall ſee me, And that I goe to the father?

18. Therefore they ſaide, what is this that he ſaieth, A litle while? we wote not what he ſaith.

19. Therefore Ieſus knew that they would aske him, and he ſaid vnto them, you enquire of this amongſt your ſelues, which I ſaid, A litle while, and ye ſee me not: and againe a litle while, and ye ſhal ſee me.

20. Verely, verely, I ſay vnto you, that ye ſhal weepe and mourne, but the world ſhal reioyce: and ye ſhal be ſorowful, but your ſorow ſhalbe turned into ioy.

16. A litle while, and ye ſee me not. Chriſt foretold the diſciples oftētimes of his departure, partely that they might endure the ſame with a more valiant courage, partely that they might more earneſtly deſire the grace of the ſpirite, whereof they were not very much deſirous, ſo long as they had Chriſt preſent with them in body. Let vs take heede therefore that we read not that lothſomly, which Chriſt beateth in not in vaine. Firſt of al he telleth them, that he ſhalbe taken from them ſhortly, to the ende that being depriued of the ſight of him, wherein they onely reſted, they may not yet ceaſe to be of a good courage. Secondly, he promiſeth them the ayde of his abſence: yea, he promiſeth that he ſhalbe reſtored agayne ſhortly, after that he ſhalbe taken away: but after an other ſort, to witte, by the preſence of the holy Ghoſt. Although otherſome do expound this ſecond member otherwiſe: yee ſhall ſee me, when I ſhal riſe againe from death: but only for a ſhort time: becauſe I ſhalbe receiued into heauen by and by. But as it ſeemeth to mee, the woordes will not beare that ſenſe. A litle, and ye ſhal ſee me. Yea rather he doth lighten and mittigate the ſorrow of his abſence with this conſolation, that it ſhal not be long: and ſo he commendeth the grace of the ſpirite, whereby he wil be preſent with them continually: as if he ſhuld promiſe that he wil returne ſhortly after, and that they ſhall not be depriued of the ſighte of him any long tyme. Neyther ought that to be accounted an abſurd thing, in that he ſaith, he is ſeene whileſt he dwelleth in the diſciples by the ſpirit: for although he be not ſeene with the bodily eyes, yet his preſence is known by the certeine experiment of faith. That is true, which Paule ſaieth, 2. Cor. 5. 6. that the faythfull are abſent from God, ſo long as they are conuerſante vppon earth: becauſe they walke by faith, and not by ſight: but it is as true, that they may worthily boaſt in the meane ſeaſon, that they haue Chriſt abyding in them by fayth, that they cleaue vnto him as the members to the head, that they poſſeſſe heauen with him by hope. Therefore the grace of the ſpirite is a glaſſe, wherein Chriſt wyl be beholden, according to that of Paule in the ſame place, 16. Althoughe wee haue knowne Chriſt according to the fleſh, yet doe we know him no more. If any manne be in Chriſt, let him be a new creature.

Becauſe I goe to the father. Some doe expound it, that the diſciples ſhuld ſee Chriſt no more, becauſe he ſhuld bee in heauen, and they vpon earth. I doe rather referre it vnto the ſecond member: yee ſhall ſee me ſhortlye: becauſe my death is not deſtruction, which may ſeparate mee from you, but a paſſage into heauenly glory, whence my diuine power ſhall come euen vnto you. Therefore hee meant in my iudgement, to teach, in what eſtate hee ſhould ſtand after death, that they might be contente with his ſpirituall preſence, and that they might not thinke that they were anye whitte the worſe for this, that he liued no longer with them as a mortall man.

19. Ieſus knew. Although the Lord doth ſeeme ſometimes to ſpeak to deaffe men, yet doth he at length ſo prouide for the rudenes of his, that his doctrine is not vnprofitable. And it ſtandeth vs vpon to doe our endeuour, that neither pride, nor ſlouthfulnes may be added vnto ſlowenes, but let vs rather ſhew our ſelues to be humble & deſirous to learne.

20. Yee ſhal weepe and mourne. Hee ſheweth for what cauſe he foretolde that his departure was at hand, and did alſo adde a promiſe concerning his ſpeedy returne; to witte, that they might the better know how neceſ-

ſary the ayde of the ſpirit was. There is prepared for you, ſaieth hee, an hard and ſore temptation: for ſo ſoone as I ſhalbe taken away by death, the world ſhal triumph. You ſhall be in great heauines, the worlde ſhall account it ſelfe bleſſed, and you miſerable. Therefore I thought good to furniſh you with neceſſary weapons vnto this fight. And he ſpeaketh of the time which ſhould be betweene his death and the ſending of the ſpirite, becauſe their faith laid then as it were oppreſſed and hidden.

Your ſorrow ſhalbe turned into ioy. Hee meaneth that ioy, wherewith they were endued, when they hadde receiued the holy Ghoſte: not that they were free afterward from ſorrow, but becauſe al their ſorrow and heauines, which they ſhould ſuffer, was ſwallowed vp with the ſpiritual ioy. VVe know that the Apoſtles were enuied, were ſlaundered, had manye cauſes of mourning, ſo long as they liued: but when as they were renued by the ſpirite, they put off the feeling of the former infirmitie, that they might with herokcall loftines eaſily treade vnder foote, what euilles ſoeuer were brought vppon them. Therefore the preſente infirmitie is conferred in this place with the power of the ſpirite, wherewith they ſhould be endowed ſhortly. For being almoſt ouerwhelmed for a time, they did afterward not only fight ioyfully, but they did alſo triumphe glorioufly in the middeſt of the battels. Althogh we muſt alſo note that he doth not only meane the meane ſeaſon betweene Chriſt his reſurrection and the death of the Apoſtles, but that which followed afterward alſo: as if Chriſt ſhould ſay, ye ſhal lye as it were proſtrate for a time: but when as the ſpirite ſhal ſet you vppe, there ſhall new ioy begin, which ſhalbe augmented cõtinually, vntil ye reioyce perfectly, being receiued into the heauenly glory.

21. A woman when ſhe bringeth forth hath ſorow, becauſe her houre is come: but whẽ ſhe hath brought forth a ſonne, ſhe remembreth the afflictions no more, for ioy that a man is borne into the world.

22. And ye haue ſorow therfore: but I wil ſee you againe, and your heart ſhal reioice, and no man ſhal take your ioy from you.

23. And in that houre ye ſhal not aſke me any thing: verely, verely, I ſay vnto you, that whatſoeuer ye ſhal aſke the father in my name, he ſhall giue it you:

24. Hitherto haue ye aſked nothing in my name: aſke, and yee ſhal receiue, that your ioy may be full:

21. A woman when ſhe bringeth forth. Hee confirmeth the ſentence next going before with a ſimilitude: yea, he expreſſeth his meaning more plainlye: to witte, that their heauy hearts ſhal not only be changed into ioye, but that it doth alſo conteine in it ſelf matter of ioy. It falleth out oftentimes, that when as proſperitie followeth aduerſitie, menne hauing forgotten their former ſorrow, do wholly giue ouer themſelues vnto ioye: & yet the ſorow which went before is not the cauſe of ioy. But Chriſt giueth vs to vnderſtand that the ſorrow of his, which they ſhal ſuffer for the Goſpels ſake, ſhalbe fruitfull. And certeinly the ende of all ſorrowes muſt nedes be vnhappy, vnleſſe they be bleſſed in Chriſt. But becauſe the croſſe of Chriſt hath victory included in it ſelf alwaies, Chriſte doth for good cauſes cõpare the ſorow which is conceiued thence, vnto the ſorow of a womã in trauaile, which is recompenced with the rewarde thereof, whileſt that the child being brought into the light, doth make the womã that was in trauaile ioyful.

This ſimilitude ſhuld not agree, vnleſſe ſorrow ſhould cauſe ioy in the members of Chriſt,whileſt that they are made partakers of his paſsions: likeas traueiling in childe byrth,in the womanne is the cauſe of the birth of the child. VVe muſt alſo apply the ſimilitude vnto this,that when the ſorow & paine of the womā is the ſharpeſt,thē doth it the ſooneſt vaniſh away. This was no ſmall lightening to the diſciples, when as they heard that their ſorrow ſhould not endure long. Now muſt we apply the vſe of this doctrine vnto our ſelues. After that wee are regenerate with the ſpirite of Chriſt,there ſhould be in vs ſuch ioy , that it ſhould wipe away all feeling of myſeries: we ſhould , I ſaye, be like to women traueiling in childe byrth,which are ſo moued with the onely ſight of their childe, that their ſorrow remayneth no longer . But becauſe we haue receiued the firſt fruites onely,and that thoſe which are but ſlender,which ſcarſe feele any ſmal drops of the ſpirituall ioy,which being ſprinckeled vpon our ſorrow,may mittigate the bytternes thereof. And yet that ſmal portion doth ſhew that they are ſo far from being ouerwhelmed with heauines,which behold Chriſt by faith,that they doe neuertheleſſe triumph euen in extreame myſeries. Neuertheleſſe,becauſe this is the eſtate of all creatures,that they trauaile in byrth euen vntill the laſt day of redemptiō,let vs know that we muſt alſo grone,vntil we be deliuered out of the continual miſeries of this life,& do ſee manifeſtly the fruit of our faith, In ſum,the faithful are like to womē lying in childbed: inaſmuch as they are borne againe in Chriſt,and are now entred into the celeſtiall kingdome of God,and the bleſſed life : they are like to womenne great with childe,and thoſe that trauaile in childebirth: in aſmuch as beeing yet captiues in that priſon of the fleſh, they deſire to attaine vnto that happie eſtate,which lieth hid vnder hope.

22. No man shal take away your ioy. The continuance of the ioy doth not a litle encreaſe the price thereof. For it followeth heeruppon that thoſe griefes be light, and that they are to be ſuffered paciently, which continue but for a ſhort time. Furthermore, Chriſt telleth vs in theſe woordes what is the true ioy. The world muſt needes bee depriued of the ioyes, which it hath,which it ſeeketh onely in tranſitory things. Therefore we muſt come vnto Chriſt his reſurrectiō,wherin there is euerlaſting ſtabilytie, he meaneth that he wil ſee the diſciples,when as he ſhal viſit them againe with the grace of his ſpirit, that they may continually enioye the ſight of him.

23. Ye shal not aske me any thing After that Chriſt hath promiſed ioye to the diſciples by their inuincible ſtrength add conſtancy,he ſetteth foorth now the other grace of the ſpirit,wherwith they ſhould be endowed: to wit,ſo great light of vnderſtanding,that it ſhal lift them vppe euen vnto the hidden miſteries,which are heauenly. There was ſo great ſlacknes in thē at that time,that they did doubt and ſtick in euery ſmal point. For as children which read engliſh cānot go throgh with one line,without many ſtops,ſo there was ſome offēce almoſt in euery word of chriſt,which hindered their profiting. But being ſhortly after illuminated by the holy ſpirit,they were not any longer ſo ſtaied and hindered, but the wiſdome of God was familiar and wel known to thē,ſo that they went forward in the miſteries of God without ſtop or ſtay.

The Apoſtles ceaſed not euen when they were extolled vnto the higheſt degree of wiſdō,to aske the mouth of Chriſt: but he doth onely make a compariſon of a double eſtate in this place; as if chriſt ſhuld ſay,that their rudenes rudenesse shall be corrected, so that they which doe now stop and staye in euery smal trifle, should easily pearce euen vnto the highest misteryes. There is such a place in Ieremy, 31.34. Euery manne shall not teach his neighbour, saying, know the Lord: because they shall al know me from the least to the most, saieth the Lord. The Prophet doth not take away the doctrine, neither abolysh it, which ought most of al to flourish in the kingdome of Christ: but so soone as they shal be taught of God, he saith there shalbe no place left for grosse ignoraunce, whiche possesseth the mindes of men, vntil the sunne of righteousnes giue lighte vnto them by the beames of his spirit. Furthermore, seeing that the Apostls did differ nothing from children: yea, they were more like blockes then men, it is well knowne what manner persons they were of a suddeine, when they were taught by the spirit.

Whatsoeuer yee shal aske of my father. He declareth whence they shal haue this new store: to witte, because it shal be lawful for the with ful mouth to draw vp so much as they shall neede, out of God, the fountaine of wisdome as if he should say, you neede not feare least you be destitute of the gifte of vnderstãding: because the father shalbe ready to enrich you with al aboundance of al good things. And he teacheth in these woordes, that the spirit is not promised therfore, that they to whō he is promised, maye waite for him, being themselues slouthfull and sluggish: but rather that they may be earnestly bent to desire that grace which is offered. In sum, he promiseth that he wil so execute the office of a mediator, that he may liberally and more then they could desire obteine for them of the father, whatsoeuer they shal aske. But here ariseth an hard question, whether they began to call vpon God in Christes name then first of al, who could neuer otherwise be merciful vnto men, saue only for the mediator his sake. Christ speaketh of the time to come, when the heauenly father wil giue the disciples whatsoeuer they shal aske in Christes name. If this be a new and vnwonted grace, it seemeth that wee maye gather, that so long as he was conuersant vpon earth, he did not as yet play the part of an aduocate, that the praiers of the faithfull might be accepted through him: which thing he expresseth also more plainely by and by: Hitherto (saith he) ye haue asked nothing in my name. But it is likely that the Apostles obserued the forme of praier, which was appointed in the lawe. And wee know that the fathers were not wont to pray without a mediator, seeing that God did by so many exercises acquaint them with such a fourme of praier. They saw the high Priest enter into the sanctuary in the name of al the people: they saw the sacrifices offered daily, that the praiers of the Church might be established before God. Therefore this was one of the grounds & principles of faith, that men cal vpon God in vaine without a mediatour. And Christ had testified sufficiently to the disciples, that he was the same mediatour: but this their knowledge was so obscure, that they could not as yet rightly frame their praiers vnto his name. Neither is there any absurditie in that, that they praied vnto God vnder the hope of a mediatour, according to the prescript of the law, and yet notwithstanding they did not wel vnderstand what this meant. The veile of the temple was as yet extended, the maiesty of God was as yet hidde vnder the shadow of the Cherubim, the true priest was not yet entred into the sanctuary of heauen, that he might make intercession for his, he had not as yet cõsecrated the way by his bloud. It was no meruail thẽ if he were not as yet known to be any mediatour: as he is now, since that he appeareth in heauen before his father for vs, reconciling him vnto vs by his sacrifice, so that we miserable men maye with boldnes come thither with hope. For surely so soone as Christ hadde made an ende of purging our sinnes, he was receiued into heauen, he shewed himselfe manifestly to be a mediatour. And we must note the so often repetitiõ of this clause, that we must pray in Christes name: to the end we may know that it is wicked profaning of the name of God, when as any man dare present himself before his iudgement seate paising ouer him. And if this perswasion shalbe surely fixed in our minds, that God wil giue vs willingly & freely whatsoeuer we shal aske in his sonnes name, wee shall not call vnto our selues diuerse patrones from this place and that to ayde vs, but we shall be content with him alone, who doth so often and so gently offer vs his aide and helpe. Furthermore, we are said to pray in Christes name, whẽ as we make him our aduocate, to purchase fauour for vs at his Fathers handes, although we do not in plaine wordes expresse his name.

24 Aske. This is referred vnto the time of the manifestation which should follow shortly after. VVherefore they are the more inexcusable at this day, who darken this parte of doctrine with the feigned patronages of Saintes. It was requisite that the old people should turne theyr eyes vnto their shadowish Priest, and the sacrifices of beastes, so often as they were disposed to pray. Therfore we are more then vnthankful, vnlesse we fasten al our senses vppon the true Priest, who is giuen to vs to be our mediatour, by whom we haue an ealie and ready entraunce vnto the throne of the glory of god. He addeth last of al, that your ioy may be full: whereby he giueth vs to vnderstand, that wee shall want nothing vnto perfect plentie of al good things, nothing vnto the sum of our requestes and petitions, nothing vnto quiet sufficiencie, if so be it wee aske of God in his name whatsoeuer we shal neede.

25. These things haue I spoken vnto you in prouerbes: but the houre commeth, when I wil no longer speake in prouerbs with you, but wil tel you openly of my father.

26. In that houre ye shal aske in my name, and I say not that I wil aske the father for you:

27. For the father himself loueth you, because you haue loued mee, and haue beleeued that I came out from God.

28. I came out from the father, and I came into the world: againe, I leaue the world, and go to the father.

25. These things haue I spoken in prouerbes. Christ his intent and purpose is to encourage the disciples, that hoping wel that they shal profit better, they may not think that that doctrine, which they heare is vnprofitable, although they do not learne much thereby. For that suspition might haue come into their mindes, that Christ would not be vnderstood, and that he made them doubt of set purpose. Therfore he telleth them that it shal come to passe shortly, that they shal feele & perceiue the fruit of the doctrine, which might procure loathsomnes in their minds, by reasõ of the darknes therof. Mshl doth somtims signifie amongst the Hebritiãs a prouerb: and because prouerbs haue in them for the moste part figures and tropes, it cõmeth to passe therby that the Hebritianse do cal Mshlis darke speaches, or notable sentences, which the Gretians cal apothegmata, which haue haue for the moſt part ſome doubtful or obſcure thing in them. Therefore the ſenſe is this, I ſeeme to ſpeak vnto you now figuratiuely, & not in plaine & manifeſt ſpeaches: but I will ſpeake vnto you ſhortly more familiarly, that there may be nothing doubtful or hard in my doctrine. VVe ſee that now, which I haue alreadye touched, that the diſciples are encouraged with the hope of better profiting, leaſte they reiect the doctrine, becauſe they doe not as yet well vnderſtande what it meaneth. For vnleſſe the hope of profiting do enflame vs, the deſire to learne muſt needes waxe cold. And the matter doth manifeſtly declare, that Chriſte ſpake not darkly, but that he vſed an eaſie and a groſſe kind of ſpeach, when he ſpake to his diſciples: but their rudenes was ſo great, that being amaſed, they did depend vpon his mouth. VVherefore this darknes was not ſo much in the doctrine, as in their minds. And truly the ſame thing befalleth vs at this day: for the word of God hath this title giuen it not in vaine, that it is our light: but our darknes doth ſo darken the brightnes thereof, that we thinke that we heare meere allegories. For, as hee threatneth by the Prophet Eſa. 28. 11. that he wil be barbarous vnto the vnbeleeuers and reprobate, as if he ſtammered: & Paul, 2. Cor. 4. 3. ſaith that the goſpel is hidden from ſuch, becauſe Sathan hath blinded their mindes: ſo there reſoundeth ſome confuſed thing for the moſte parte to the weak and rude, that it cannot be vnderſtoode. For although theyr mindes be not altogether dark, as are the minds of the vnbeleeuers: yet they are as it were, couered with cloudes. And the Lorde ſuffereth vs to be thus dull for a ſeaſon, that he may humble vs with the feeling of our own pouertie: yet he maketh thoſe whom he doth illuminate with hys ſpirit to profit in ſuch ſort, that that word is well known and familyar to them. And to this end tendeth the latter member, the hour commeth, (that is, ſhal come immediately) when I wil not ſpeake with you any more figuratiuely. Truely the ſpirit taught the Apoſtles nothing elſe, ſaue thoſe thinges which they had heard from Chriſt his own mouth: but whē as he ſhed forth his bright beames vpon their hearts, hee did ſo driue away their darknes, that hearing Chriſt ſpeake as it were after a new faſhion, they did eaſily vnderſtand what he meant. VVhen as he ſaith, that he wil tel them of the father, he teacheth that this is the drifte of his doctrine, that he may bring vs vnto God, in whom is placed perfect felicitie. But there remaineth one queſtion, how he ſaith in an other place that it is graunted to the diſciples to know the miſteries of þ kingdō of god, vnto whō he cōfeſſeth he ſpak darkly & in prouerbs: for there (that is, Mat. 13. 11) he putteth a difference betweene them and the reſt of the common people, that he ſpeaketh vnto the common people in parables. I aunſwere, there was not ſo great ignoraunce in the diſciples, but that they did lightlye taſte what their Maiſter meant: So that he ſeparateth them frō the flock of the blind not without cauſe. He ſaieth now, that his word hath bene hitherto allegoricall vnto them, in reſpecte of that manifeſt light of vnderſtanding, which he would giue them ſhortly by the grace of his ſpirite. Therefore both theſe thinges are true, that they did far paſſe thoſe vnto whom the woord of the Goſpel was vnfauerie: and that they were but young beginners in reſpect of the new wiſdome, which the ſpirite brought them.

26. In that houre. He repeateth the cauſe againe, why the celeſtial treaſures ſures ſhall be opened then ſo liberally: to witte, becauſe they ſhall aske in the name of Chriſt whatſoeuer they ſhall haue neede of: and GOD will deny nothing, which ſhal be asked in his ſons name. But there ſeemeth to be ſome diſagreement in the words. For Chriſt addeth immediately after, that it ſhalbe ſuperfluous that he ſhould aske the father. But to what end ſerueth it to pray in his name, vnleſſe he take vpon him the office of a patrone? And 1. Ion. 2. 1. he calleth him our Aduocate. Furthermore, Paule doth teſtifie, Rom. 8. 32. that he maketh interceſsion for vs now. The authour of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes confirmeth the ſelf ſame thing, 7. 25. I aunſwere that Chriſt dooth not ſimply deny in this place that he is an interceſſour: but his onely meaning is this, that the father ſhalbe ſo inclined towarde the diſciples, that he ſhall willingly & readily giue them whatſoeuer they ſhall pray for. The father ſaieth he, ſhall meete you, and for his infinite loue towarde you, ſhall preuente your patrone, whoe ſhoulde otherwiſe ſpeake for you. And when as Chriſt is ſaid to make interceſsion for vs vnto the father, let vs imagine no carnall thing of him, as if falling down at the fathers knees, hee didde humbly pray for vs: but the power of his ſacrifice, whereby hee once reconciled God vnto vs, being alway greene and effectual, the bloud wherewith he purged our ſins, the obedience which he perfourmed, are a continual interceſsion made for vs. This is a notable place, whereby wee are taught that we haue the heart of God ſo ſoone as we haue ſet the name of his ſonne againſt him.

27. Becauſe you haue loued me VVe are taught by theſe words, that this is the onely band of our coniunction with GOD, if we be ioyned vnto Chriſt. And we are ioyned by a faith, not feigned, but ſuch as proceedeth from a ſincere affection, which he ſignifieth by this woord loue. For there is no man that beleeueth in Chriſt purely, ſaue he that loueth & imbraceth him with his whole heart. VVherefore he did well expreſſe the force and nature of faith by this word. But if ſobeit God beginne to loue vs then, after that we haue loued Chriſt, it followeth that the beeginning of our ſaluation is of our ſelues: becauſe we preuent the grace of God. But very many teſtimonies of the ſcripture are againſt this opinio and ſentence. The promiſe of God is, I wil make them loue me. And 1. Ioh. 4. 10. he ſaith, not that we loued him firſt. It were ſuperfluous to gather any more places: becauſe there is nothing more certeine thē this doctrine, that the Lord calleth thoſe thinges which are not, that he rayſeth vp the dead, that he adioyneth himſelf vnto ſtrangers, that he maketh fleſhy harts of ſtony harts, that he appeareth vnto thoſe that ſeeke him not. I anſwere, that men, if they be of the number of the elect, are beloued of god before their calling after an hiddē maner, who loueth al his before they are created. but becauſe they are not as yet reconciled, they are worthily coūted Gods enemies, as Paul ſaith, Ro. 5, 10. After this ſort we are ſaid in this place to be loued of god, when as we loue Chriſt: becauſe we haue a pledge of his fatherly loue, of whom we were afraid before, as of a ſeuere iudge, which hated vs.

28. I came out from the father. This ſpeach ſetteth forth vnto vs Chriſt his diuine power: for our faith ſhuld not be firmly fixed in him, vnleſſe it did lay hold vpon his diuine power. For his death & reſurrection, which are two pillers of faith ſhould helpe vs litle or nothing, vnleſſe his heauenly power were annexed thereunto.

Now

Now we vnderſtand how we ought to imbrace Chriſt: to witte, that our faith doe weigh and conſider the purpoſe and power of God by whoſe hand he is offered vnto vs. Neither muſt we take this coldly that he came out from God: but we muſt know alſo to what end, and wherefore he came out, to wit that he might be vnto vs wiſdome, ſanctification, righteouſneſſe and redemption. In the ſecond member whiche he added by & by is noted the perpetuitie or continuance of his power. For the Diſciples might think that that was a temporall benefite, that their maſter was ſent to be the redeemer of the worlde. Therfore he ſaid that he returned vnto the father to the ende they may bee fully perſuaded that none of thoſe good thinges doe fall away by his departure which he hath brought: becauſe he powreth out the force and effect of his reſurrection out of his heauenly glory. Therefore he left the world, when as he was receiued into heauen putting off our infirmities: yet neuertheleſſe his grace is forcible toward vs: becauſe he ſitteth at the right hand of the father that he may enioy the gouernment of al the whole world.

29 The Diſciples ſay vnto him, behold now ſpeakeſt thou plainely, and ſpeakeſt no Prouerbe.

30 Now we know, that thou knoweſt all thinges, and haſt no need that any man ſhould aske thee any queſtion: in this we beleeue that thou cameſt out from God.

31 Ieſus anſwered them: Doe yee now beleeue? 32 Behold the houre ſhall come, & commeth nowe, wherein you ſhall bee ſcattered euery man to his owne: and yee ſhal leaue me alone, although I am not alone: becauſe the father is with me.

33 Theſe things haue I ſpoken, that yee may haue peace in me: ye haue tribulation in the worlde: but be of good courage I haue ouercome the world.

29 The Diſciples ſay vnto him. Hereby it appeareth how effectuall that conſolation was, becauſe it lifted vp vnto great ioyfulneſſe thoſe mindes which were before caſt downe and diſcouraged: and yet notwithſtanding it is certaine that the Diſciples knew not as yet what Chriſte his ſpeech did import. But although they comprehended it not as yet, yet the only ſmel did refreſh thē. In that they cry out that their maſter ſpeaketh plainely and without any figure, they paſſe meaſure in that: yet according to their meaning they teſtifie the truth. VVhich thing we doe alſo trie at this day: for he that hath taſted but a little only of the doctrine of the Goſpell, he is more enflamed and fealeth more force in a ſmall quantitie and portion of faith, then if he had knowen all Plato. Yea, the ſighes and ſobs which the ſpirite of God ſtirreth vp in the heartes of the godly, doe ſufficiently teſtifie that God worketh by ſome ſecrete meanes aboue their capacitie. For otherwiſe Paule woulde not call them vnexpreſſeable. Ro. 8. 26. VVe muſt thus thinke that the Apoſtles felt ſome profiting, ſo that they might truly teſtifie that Chriſte his wordes were not now altogether darke vnto them: but they were deceiued in that they ſeemed to themſelues to be wiſer then they were. And the errour proceeded thence, becauſe they knew not of what ſort the gifte of the ſpirite ſhould be. Therefore they reioyce before the time, as if a man ſhould thinke that he were rich, when he hath but one crowne of gold. They gather by certaine ſignes, that Chriſt came foorth from God, they boaſt as if they wanted nothing els. But they were farre from that knowledge as yet, ſo long as they vnderſtood not what Chriſt ſhould be afterward.

31 Now yee beleeue. Becauſe the diſciples had too great a good liking of themſelues, Chriſt telleth them, that remembring their infirmitie they muſt rather keepe themſelues within their compaſſe. VVee doe neuer know ſufficiently what we lacke, and how farre wee are off from the fulneſſe of faith, vntill we be come vnto ſome ſerious experiment and tryall. For the thing it ſelfe doth now declare how weake the faith was, which we thoght was perfect. Chriſt calleth back his diſciples vnto this, and he pronounceth that it ſhal come to paſſe ſhortly that they ſhal leaue him. For perſecution is like a touchſtone to trie faith, whiche whenas it appeareth to be but ſmall, thoſe men begin to tremble and ſhrinke together who were puffed vp before. Therefore Chriſte his interrogation is ironicall and made ieſtingly: as if he ſhould haue ſaide, doe ye boaſt therefore as if you were filled with faith? But there is a triall at hand which ſhall bewray your emptineſſe. Our ſecuritie muſt be brideled thus whileſt that it paſſeth meaſure too much. But it might ſeeme that there was either no faith ar all in the diſciples, or that it was extinguiſhed then, when hauing forſaken Chriſt they ran vp & down. I anſwere, that howſoeuer their faith was caſt, downe and did faint and fayle, yet there remained ſomething whence newe ſlippes myghte ſpring.

32 I am not alone. This correction was added to the ende we may know that Chriſt is no whit impayred when he is forſaken of men. For ſeeing that his trueth and glory is grounded in himſelfe, and that he doth not depende vpon the faith of the worlde, if he chaunce to bee forſaken of the whole world, yet neuertheleſſe hee remaineth perfect: becauſe he is God and needeth not the help of an other. In that he ſaith that his father will bee with him, it is as much as if he ſhould ſay that god is on his ſide, ſo that he hath no neede to borrow any thing of menne. VVhoſoeuer ſhall ponder theſe thinges, he ſhall ſtand ſtedfaſt when all the whole world is like to fall, neither ſhal the falling of all other ouerthrowe his faith. For we doe not giue God his due honour, vnleſſe hee alone be ſufficient for vs.

33 Theſe thinges haue I ſpoken vnto you. Hee repeateth againe how neceſſary thoſe comfortes were which he vſed to giue them. And hee proueth by this reaſon, that much ſorow and tribulations are prepared for them. Therefore we muſt firſt of all note this admonition, that all the godly may bee perſuaded that their life is ſubiect to great miſerye, that they may prepare themſelues to ſuffer and indure them. Therefore ſeeing that the worlde is vnto vs like the ſurging Sea, wee ſhall not find true peace any where els ſaue only in Chriſt.

Nowe we muſt note the meanes and way to enioy the ſame. He ſaith that they ſhall haue peace if they goe forwarde in this doctrine. VVill we then haue our mindes quiet and free in the middeſt of afflictions? Let vs take good heede vnto this ſermon of Chriſt, which ſhall giue vs peace in him.

Bee of good cheere. As our ſluggiſhneſſe ought to be corrected with diuers afflictions, and wee muſt bee awaked to ſeeke remedie for our miſeries: ſo the Lord wil not haue vs to be diſcouraged, but rather to fight

ioy-

ioyfully: whiche cannot be vnleſſe we be certaine to haue ſucceſſe. For if we fight not knowing whether we ſhall haue the victorie or no, all our deſire and endeuour ſhall fall to the ground by and by. Therefore when Chriſt calleth vs to fight, hee furniſheth vs with ſure hope of victorie: although we muſt neuertheleſſe take ſome paine. Furthermore, becauſe there is alwayes in vs great matter of trembling, hee telleth vs that we muſt hope for this cauſe, becauſe hee hath ouercome the worlde not for himſelfe alone but for our ſakes. So it ſhall come to paſſe, that when we be almoſt oppreſſed in our ſelues, wee may be able ſafely to contemne what miſerie ſoeuer lyeth vpon vs, when we beholde that great glory, whereunto our head hath attained. VVherefore if wee deſire to be Chriſtians, we muſt not ſeeke to bee free from the croſſe, but let vs be content with this one thing, that ſo long as we fight vnder Chriſtes banner, wee are notwithſtanding out of daunger euen in the very conflict. Chriſt comprehendeth in this place vnder this woorde worlde, whatſoeuer is contrary to the ſaluation of the godly: and eſpecially all the corruptions which Satan abuſeth, that hee may deceiue vs.

Chap. 17.

1 THeſe thinges ſpake Ieſus and hee lifted vp his eyes towarde heauen, and ſaid, Father the houre is come, glorifie thy ſonne, that thy ſonne may alſo glorifie thee.

2 As thou haſt giuen him power of all flesh: that he may giue life to all thoſe whom thou haſt giuen him.

3 And this is eternall life, that they may knowe thee the only true God, and Ieſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent.

4 I haue glorified thee vpon earth, I haue finished the woorke which thou hadſt giuen mee to doe.

5 And now glorifie thou mee father, with thy ſelfe with the glory which I had with thee before the worlde was.

1 Theſe thinges ſpake Ieſus. After that the Lorde had made an ende of preaching vnto his Diſciples concerning the bearing of the croſſe, he ſet before them comfortes, whereunto they might leane and ſo perſiſt. VVhen hee promiſed them the comming of the ſpirite, hee put them in better hope, and hee intreated of the glory & excellencie of his kingdome.

Nowe he turneth himſelfe vnto prayer and that for good cauſes: for doctrine waxeth colde vnleſſe it be made effectuall by God. Therefore he giueth an example to all teachers, that they doe not onely take paine in ſowing the ſeed of the woorde, but that they intermingle prayers that they craue Gods helpe, that his bleſſing may make their labour fruitefull. In ſumme, this prayer of Chriſte was as it were a ſealing vp of the former doctrine: both that it might bee ſure in it ſelfe, and alſo that the Diſciples might the more ſtedfaſtly beleeue it.

In

In that Iohn ſaith that Chriſt prayed lifting vp his eyes toward heauen that was no ſmall ſigne of zeale and feruentneſſe. For Chriſte teſtified in deede by this geſture, that he was rather in heauen by the affection of his minde, then in earth, that he might talke familiarly with God. He looked vp toward heauen, not becauſe God is ſhut vp there, who doeth alſo fill the earth: but becauſe his maieſtie appeareth there chiefly, and ſecondly, becauſe the beholding of heauen doth admoniſh vs, that the power of God doth farre ſurpaſſe all creatures. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth the lifting vp of his handes when as he prayed: for ſeeing that men are ſlacke and ſlowe by nature, and their earthly nature doth bend them downewarde, they haue neede to be ſtirred vp thus, yea they haue neede of chariots to carry them vp vnto God. But and if we couet to imitate Chriſt truly, we muſt take heed that our ceremonies, expreſſe no more then is in the minde: but let the inward affection mooue both handes, feete, tongue, and whatſoeuer we haue. VVheras the Publicane Luke 18.13. did rightly pray vnto God caſting down his eyes, it is not contrary to this ſentence. For although beeing confounded with his ſinnes, he did caſt downe himſelfe, yet did not that humilitie hinder him but that he craued pardon with boldneſſe. It was meete for Chriſte to pray after another ſort, who had nothing whereof he needed to bee aſhamed. Againe it is certaine that Dauid himſelfe prayed ſometimes after one ſort, ſometimes after another as the matter required.

Father the houre is come. Chriſt deſireth to haue his kindome made famous that he may on the otherſide ſet foorth the glorye of his father. Hee ſaith that the houre is come, becauſe although hee was declared by myracles and all kinde of power to be the ſonne of God, yet his ſpirituall kingdome was yet obſcure, which ſhined out ſhortly after. If any man obiect, that there was nothing leſſe glorious then Chriſt his death which wat then at hand: I anſwere, that there appeareth vnto vs great renowne in that death, which is hid from the wicked: becauſe we know that the world was reconciled vnto God there, when our ſinnes were purged, that the curſe was taken away, that Satan was ouercome. And to this end tendeth Chriſt his petition, that his death may bring foorth fruite by the power of the heauenly ſpirite, ſuch as was decreed by the eternall counſell of God. For he ſaith that the houre is come, not that which is appointed by mans will, but which God had ordeined. And yet this prayer is not ſuperfluous, becauſe Chriſt doth ſo depende vpon the will of God, that yet notwithſtanding he knew that hee ought to deſire that, which he promiſed ſhould ſurely come to paſſe. God will do whatſoeuer he hath determined, not only when the whole world ſleepeth, but alſo when it gainſtandeth him: yet neuertheleſſe it is our dutie to aſk of him whatſoeuer he hath promiſed: becauſe this is the vſe of promiſes, that they ſtirre vs vp to pray.

That thy ſonne may be glorified. He giueth vs to vnderſtand that there is a mutuall illuſtration of his glory and his fathers: for to what end doth Chriſt appeare, ſaue only that he may leade vs vnto the father? VVherupon it followeth that what honour ſoeuer is giuen vnto Chriſte, it is ſo farre from diminiſhing the fathers honour, that it doth more eſtabliſh it. VVe muſt alwayes remember what perſon Chriſte beareth in this place: for we muſt conſider his diuinitie alone: becauſe he ſpeaketh in as much as he was God reuealed in the flesh, and according to the office of a mediatour.

2 As thou hast giuen him. Hee proueth againe, that he asked nothing saue that which was agreeable to the will of the father: likeas this is a perpetuall rule of prayer to aske no more, then that which God woulde giue of his owne accord, because there is nothing more prepostrous then to vtter before him whatsoeuer we list.

Power of all flesshe. He meaneth the rule & gouernment which was giuen Christ, when the father made him king and head, but we must note the ende, to wit, that he may giue life to all his. Therefore Christe tooke vpon him the rule and gouernment, not so much for his owne sake as for our saluations sake. Therefore it is meete that we submit our selues vnto Christ willingly, not only that wee may obey God, but because there is nothing more amiable then this subiection, seeing that it is vnto vs the cause of eternal life. Christ saith not that he is made the gouernour of all the whole world, to the end he may giue life vnto all men in generall: but he restraineth this grace vnto those who are giuen him. And how are they giuen him? For the father hath also put the reprobates vnder him. I answere, that the elect only are of his peculiar flock, which he hath taken to keepe as a shepheard. Therefore the kingdome of Christ is extended indeed vnto all men, but it is wholesome onely to the elect, who with willing obedience doe followe the voyce of their Pastour. For hee compelleth the other to obey him whether they wil or no, vntill he doe at length breake them all to peeces with his yron sceptre.

3 And this is eternall life, that they may knowe. Now doth he define the manner of giuing life, to wit, when he illuminateth the elect, that they may know God aright. For he doth not intreate in this place of the fruition of the life which we hope for, but only how men come vnto life. And to the ende we may well and throughly vnderstand this sentence, we must first of all knowe that we are al in death, vntill God shine vnto vs, who is life alone: and so soone as he hath appeared vnto vs, because we possesse him by faith, wee doe also enter into the possession of life. Hereby it commeth to passe that the knowledge of him is truly and worthily said to be wholesome to saue vs.

Furthermore, almost euery word hath his weight: for he meaneth not in this place all manner of knowledge of God, but that which transformeth into the image of God, from faith to faith: yea it is all one with the faith whereby we are ingrafted into the body of Christe, and are made partakers of the adoption of God, and heires of the kindome of heauen. And because God is knowen in the face of Christ alone, who is his liuely and expresse image, therefore is it said, that they may know thee and Christ whom thou hast sent. For in that the father is placed first, that is not referred vnto the order of faith, as if our minde did afterward discend vnto Christe, when we know God, but the sense is that God is knowen at length when the mediatour is put betweene. There are two Epithites added, true and only, because it is necessary first that faith doe distinguish god from al the vain inuentions of men, & that hauing embraced him with firme certaintie, it be bended no whither, ne yet faint and wauer: and secondly, that being persuaded that there is no

imfect thing in God, it be content with him alone: whereas ſome doe reſolue it thus, that they may knowe thee, who art God alone, it is cold. Therfore this is the ſenſe, that they may acknowlege thee to be the true God. But Chriſt ſeemeth by this meanes to diſpoyle himſelfe of the right & name of the diuinitie. If any man anſwere that this word God is to be applyed vnto Chriſt as well as to the father, the ſame queſtion ſhalbe moued concerning the holy Ghoſt, For if the father only & the ſonne be one God, the ſpirite is driuen from this degree, which is abſurd.

VVe may eaſily anſwere if any man take heede vnto the manner of ſpeech, which Chriſt vſeth euery where in the Goſpell of Iohn, whereof I haue ſo often tolde the Readers alreadie that they ought to bee acquainted therewith. Chriſt appearing in the ſhape of man, ſignifieth vnder the perſon of the father, the might, eſſence, and maieſtie of God. Therefore the father of Chriſte is the only true God, that is that God which had promiſed þ world a redeemer long ago, is one. But the vnitie and veritie of the Godhead ſhalbe found in Chriſt: becauſe Chriſt was humbled for this cauſe, that he myght lift vs vp on high. VVhenas we are come thither then his diuine maieſtie doth ſhewe foorth it ſelf: then he is knowen wholy in the father, and the father is knowen wholy in him.

In ſumme, hee that ſeparateth Chriſt from the diuinitie of the father, he doth not know him as yet, who is the only true God: but hee doth rather forge to himſelfe a ſtraunge God. Therefore we are commaunded to know God, and Chriſt whom he hath ſent, by whom as by his out ſtretched hand he inuiteth vs vnto himſelfe. VVhereas ſome doe thinke that this is an vniuſt thing, if men doe periſh for the ignoraunce of God alone, it commeth to paſſe thereby, becauſe they do not conſider that the fountaine of life is in the power of God alone, and that all thoſe which are ſtraungers from him, are depriued of life.

Now if we come vnto God only by faith, infidelitie doth hold vs neceſſarily in death. If any man obiect that the iuſt and innocent haue iniurie done them otherwiſe, if they bee condemned, wee may eaſily anſwere that there is no right or ſincere thing in men ſo long as they continue in their owne nature. And we are renued as Paule teſtifieth into the image of God by knowledge. Now is it worthie the labour to gather three pointes togeather, that the kingdome of Chriſte bringeth life and ſaluation, Coloſſ. 3. 10. Secondly, that all men doe not receiue life thence, and that it is not Chriſt his office to giue life vnto all men, but only to the elect whom the father hath committed to his tuition. Thirdly, that this life is placed in faith, and Chriſte beſtoweth it vppon thoſe whome hee illuminateth into the faith of the Goſpell, whereby we gather that the gifte of the heauenly wiſedome and of illumination is not common to all men, but proper to the elect. It is true that the Goſpell is offered vnto all men, but Chriſte ſetteth foorth in this place the hidden and effectuall manner of teaching, whereby the children of God alone are drawen vnto faith.

4 I haue glorified thee. Hee ſaith thus for this cauſe, becauſe God was made knowen vnto the worlde both in his doctrine and alſo in his myracles. And this is the glory of God if wee knowe what he is. VVhenas he addeth that hee hath finiſhed the worke which was inioyned him, hee meaneth that he hath fulfilled the whole courſe of his calling for that was the due and appointed time, wherin he was to be receiued into the heauenly glory. And hee doth not onely ſpeake of his office of teaching: but he doth alſo cõprehẽd the other parts of his miniſtery. For although the principal part remained as yet, to wit, the ſacrifice of his death, wherwith he ſhould purge the ſinnes of al men: yet becauſe the houre of his death was now preſent, he ſpeaketh as if he had ſuffered death alreadie.

This is therefore the ſumme, that hee may be ſent of his father into the poſſeſſion of his kingdome: for aſmuch as hauing ended his courſe, there remained nothing els for him to doe, ſaue only that hee might bring foorth the fruite and effect of all thinges by the power of the ſpirite, which he had done vpon earth according to the commaundement of his father, according to that of Paule. Philippians the ſecond Chapter and ſeuenth verſe. Hee abaſed himſelfe, taking to himſelfe the ſhape of a ſeruant, therfore hath the father exalted him, and hath giuen him a name, &c.

5 VVith the glory which I had with thee. He deſireth to be glorified with the father, not that he would haue the father glorifie him inwardlye without any witneſſe, but that beeing receiued into heauen, hee may glorioufly ſhew foorth there his greatneſſe and power, that euery knee may bowe vnto him, &c. In the ſame place 10. Therefore this clauſe with the father, is ſet againſt earthly and tranſitorie glory in the former member: like as Paule, Rom. the ſixth chapter and the tenth verſe, when as he ſaith, that he dyed to ſinne once, and that he liueth now vnto God, he expreſſeth the bleſſed immortalitie. Afterwarde he declareth that he deſireth nothing which he himſelfe had not before: but onely that he may appeare to be ſuch in the fleſh, as he was before the creation of the worlde: or (if you will that I ſpeake more plainely) that the diuine maieſtie, which he had alwayes, may now ſhine in the perſon of the mediatour, and in mans fleſh which hee had put on. An excellent place whereby wee are taught that Chriſte is no fleſhe or temporall GOD. For if his glorye was eternall hee him ſelfe was alſo alwayes.

Moreouer, there is a manifeſt diſtinction made heere betweene his perſon and the perſon of the father: VVhence wee gather that God is not only eternall but that the worde of God is alſo eternall, which was begotten of the father before the beginning of the worlde.

6 I haue declared thy name to the menne whiche thou gaueſt mee out of the worlde, thine they were and thou gaueſt them mee, and they haue kepte thy woorde.

7 Nowe haue they knowne that all thinges whiche thou haſt giuen mee, are of thee.

8 Becauſe I haue giuen them the wordes which thou gaueſt mee, and they haue receiued them: and they haue knowen indeede that I came foorth from thee, and they haue beleeued that thou haſt ſent mee.

9 I pray

9 I pray for them: I pray not for the worlde, but for them whom thou haſt giuen me becauſe they are thine.

10 And all mine are thine: and thyne are mine, and I am glorified in them.

11 And I am no longer in the worlde: and they are in the worlde, and I come vnto thee. O holy father, keepe them in thy name, whom thou haſt giuen mee, that they may be one as we are one.

6 I haue declared thy name. Chriſt beginneth here to pray vnto the father for his Diſciples. And he commendeth their ſafetie now, with the like affection of loue, wherewith he was about to ſuffer death for them ſtraightway. And the firſt reaſon of this his commendation is, becauſe they haue embraced the doctrine whiche maketh men the children of God truly and indeede. There was no faithfulneſſe and diligence wanting in Chriſt to call al men vnto God: but his labour was effectual & profitable only in the elect, his preaching was commō to all men, which did declare and make manifeſt the name of God: neither ceaſed hee to auouch his glory amongeſt the obſtinate. VVhy ſaith he then that hee declared it only vnto a fewe, ſaue only becauſe the elect alone doe profite, being taught inwardly by the ſpirite? Gather therefore that all men before whom doctrine is ſet, are not taught truly and effectually: but thoſe only whoſe minds are illuminated. Chriſt aſſigneth the cauſe vnto Gods election: becauſe he putteth no other difference why, paſſing ouer ſome he declared the name of the father vnto other ſome, ſaue only becauſe they were giuen him. VVhereupon it followeth that faith floweth from the ſecrete predeſtination of God, and that therefore it is not giuen vnto all men in generall: becauſe all men doe not appertaine vnto Chriſt. VVhen he addeth, Thine they were, and thou gaueſt them me, the eternitie of election is firſt of all noted: and ſecondly how we muſt conſider it. Chriſt declareth that the elect were alwayes Gods. Therefore God diſtinguiſheth them from the reprobate, not by faith or any merite, but by meere grace: becauſe whileſt that they are the fartheſt & moſt eſtraunged from him, yet he accounteth them his owne in his hidden counſell. The certaintie conſiſteth in that, that he giueth all thoſe to his ſonne to keepe, whom he hath choſen, leaſt they periſhe. And wee muſt turne our eyes vnto this, that we may knowe aſſuredly that we are of the order of the children of GOD. For Gods predeſtination is hidden in it ſelfe: and it is reuealed vnto vs in Chriſte alone.

They haue kept thy worde. This is the third degree. For the firſt is free election: the ſecond that giuing, whereby we paſſe ouer into Chriſtes tuitiō. Being receiued by Chriſt we are gathered by faith into his ſheepfolde. The worde of God is ſoone forgotten amongeſt the reprobate, but it taketh roote in the elect: whereby they are ſaid to keepe it.

7 Now they haue knowen. That which is the chiefeſt thing in faith is expreſſed here, whileſt that wee beleeue in Chriſt in ſuch ſort, that faith ſtayeth not in the beholding of the fleſhe, but conceiueth his diuine power. For when he ſaith, They know that all thoſe things are of thee which thou haſt giuen mee: he meaneth that the faithfull doe perceiue that all that whiche they haue is celeſtiall and diuine. And truly vnleſſe we lay holde vppon

God in Chriſt, we muſt needes ſtagger continually.

8. And they haue receiued them. Hee expreſſeth the manner of thys knowledge: becauſe they haue receiued the doctrine which he taught. And leaſt any manne ſhoulde thinke that his doctrine was of manne, or that it ſprange vppe in the earth, he profeſſeth that GOD is the authour thereof, when hee ſayeth, The woordes which thou haſte giuen mee, haue I giuen vnto them. Hee ſpeaketh according to his cuſtome, in the perſon of a mediatour or miniſter, when hee ſayeth that he hath taught that onely, which hee receiued of the father. For in as muche as his eſtate in the fleſhe, was yet baſe, and his diuine Maieſtie lay hidde vnder the ſhape of a ſeruaunt, he doeth rather ſignifie God vnder the perſon of the father. Neuertheleſſe, we muſt remember that which Iohn teſtified in the beginning, that in as muche as Chriſte was the eternall woorde of God, he was alwayes one God wyth the father. The ſenſe therefore is thys, that Chriſte was a faithfull witneſſe of GOD amongeſt the Diſciples, that their faith might be grounded in the onely trueth of God, ſeeinge that the Father himſelfe ſpake in the Sonne. But the receiuinge whereof he ſpeaketh, commeth thence, becauſe he declared the Fathers name vnto them effectually.

And they haue knowen in deede. Hee repeateth the ſelfe ſame thinge in other woordes, which he hadde touched before. For, that Chriſte came foorth from the Father, and that he was ſent of the Father, are as muche as that which went before, that al thoſe things are of the Father, which he hath. The ſumme is, that faith muſt ſtraight way beholde Chriſte: yet ſo, that it conceiue no earthly and contemptible thing of hym, but that it be caryed vpwarde vnto his diuine power, that it maye be fullye perſwaded that it hath God, and what ſoeuer is Gods perfectly in him. VVe muſt alſo note, that he vſeth this worde knowen in the former member: and afterward this woord (beleeued,) for by this meanes he teacheth vs, that there can be nothing rightly knowen concerning God, ſaue onely by faith: and that there is ſo great certaintie in faith, that it may worthely be called knowledge.

9. I pray for them. Chriſt hath hitherto rehearſed that, whiche might purchaſe fauour for the Diſciples with the father: nowe hee frameth the prayer it ſelfe, wherein hee declareth that hee asketh nothynge but that whiche is agreeable to the will of the father, becauſe hee doeth onelye commende thoſe vnto the father, whome hee loueth of hys owne accorde. For hee ſayeth flatly, that hee prayeth not for the world, becauſe he is carefull for none, but for his owne flocke, whiche he hath receiued from the fathers hande. Yet this may ſeeme to be an abſurde thynge, for there canne no better rule of prayer be inuented, then if wee followe Chriſte our guide and maiſter. But we are commaunded to praye for all menne: and againe, Chriſte himſelfe prayed afterward indifferently for all menne, Father pardon them, for they knowe not what they doe. I anſweare that the prayers which we make, are yet notwithſtanding reſtrained vnto the Elect. VVee muſt deſire that this manne, and that, and euery manne may be ſaued, and ſo comprehende al mankinde, becauſe we cannot as yet diſtinguiſh the elect from the reprobate: yet neuertheleſſe, when we pray that the kingdome of God maye come, we doe alſo pray, that he will deſtroy his ennemies.

There is thys onely difference, that wee pray for the ſaluation of all menne, who wee knowe are created after the image of GOD, and whiche haue the ſame nature whiche wee haue: wee leaue their deſtruction to Goddes iudgement, whome hee knoweth to be reprobates. But there was another ſpeciall reaſon of the prayer, which is recited heere, whiche ought not to bee followed as an example. For Chriſte prayeth not accordinge to the bare feelinge of faith and loue: but beinge entred into the ſecreat places of heauen, hee ſetteth before his eyes the ſecreat iudgements of the Father, which are hidden from vs, ſo longe as wee walke by faith. Furthermore, wee gather out of theſe wordes, that GOD chuſeth whome hee thinketh good vnto him ſelfe out of the worlde, that they may bee heyres of life: and that this difference commeth not from mennes merites, but that it dependeth vppon hys meere good will. For thoſe menne whiche place the cauſe of election in man, they muſt beginne wyth faith. And Chriſte ſayeth flatly, that they were the fathers whiche are giuen hym. And it is certaine that they are giuen for this cauſe that they may beleeue, and that faith floweth from thys giuinge. If this giuinge bee the beginninge of faith, and if election doe goe before it in order and time, what remaineth, but that wee confeſſe that they are choſen freely, whome GOD will haue ſaued, out of the worlde. Nowe, ſeeinge that Chriſte prayeth for the electe alone, wee muſt needes haue the faith of election, if wee will haue our ſaluation commended to the father by him. Therefore they doe great iniurie to the faithfull, whiche goe about to blotte out the knowledge of election out of their mindes, becauſe they depriue them of Chriſte his voyce and conſent. Furthermore, the peruerſe dulneſſe of theſe menne, is refuted in theſe woordes, who vnder the colour of election, doe giue themſelues vnto ſlouthfulneſſe, whereas it ought rather to ſharpen and prouoke in vs the deſire to praye, as Chriſte teacheth by hys owne example.

10. And all mine are thine. Heereunto belongeth the former member, that hee ſhall ſurely be heard of the father. I commende none other, ſayeth he, vnto thee, ſaue thoſe whome thou acknowledgeſt to be thine owne: becauſe I haue nothinge that is ſeparated from thee: therefore I ſhall not take the repulſe. In the ſeconde member hee ſheweth that hee hathe iuſt cauſe to care for the elect: becauſe they are his owne, after that they are the fathers. All theſe thinges are ſpoken to the confirmation of our faith. VVee muſt not ſeeke for ſaluation anye where elſe, ſaue onely in Chriſte. VVee will not bee content with Chriſte, vnleſſe wee knowe that wee poſſeſſe GOD in hym. Therefore wee muſt knowe and holde that vnitie whyche is betweene the Father and the Sonne, whyche cauſeth that there is no diuiſion betweene them. That agreeth with the ſeconde member which hee addeth afterwarde, that hee was glorified in the diſciples. For it followeth that it is meete that hee further their ſaluation on the other ſide. And this is a good ſigne and token to confirme our faith, that Chriſt will neuer neglect our ſaluation, if he ſhall be glorified in vs.

11. I am not nowe in the worlde. Hee ſheweth an other cauſe whye hee prayeth ſo earneſtlye for his Diſciples: to witte, becauſe they ſhall ſhortly ſhortly be depriued of his corporal preſence, vnder which they reſted hytherto. So long as hee was conuerſant with them, hee browded them vnder his winges as a henne doth her chickins: now when hee departeth he prayeth his father to couer them with his ſauegard: and this doth he in reſpect of them. For he prouideth a remedie for their feare that they may reſt vpon God himſelf, vnto whom hee deliuereth them now as it were from hand to hande. And we gather no ſmall comforte hence when we heare that the ſonne of God is ſo much the more carefull for the ſafetie of his, whenas he leaueth them according to the body. For we muſt gather thereby that he reſpecteth vs at this day alſo, whileſt we are in the world, that he may prouide for our miſeries from his heauenly glory.

Holy father. The whole prayer tendeth to this ende that the diſciples may not be diſcouraged, as if their eſtate ſhould bee woorſe, becauſe of the corporall abſence of their maſter. For ſeeing that Chriſt was gyuen them for a ſeaſon to be their keeper, he reſtoreth them now againe into his fathers hande, as hauing fulfilled his function, that heereafter they may be preſerued through his protection and power. The ſumme is this, whenas the Diſciples are depriued of the beholding of the fleſhe of Chriſt, they ſuffer no loſſe becauſe God receiueth them into his tuition, whoſe power is euerlaſting.

Hee preſcribeth the manner of preſeruing them, that they may bee one. For looke whom the father hath determined to ſaue, he gathereth thoſe into the holy vnitie of faith and the ſpirite. But becauſe it is not ſufficient, if men conſpire together any manner of way, this clauſe is added euen as wee. For our vnitie ſhall be happy then, if it repreſent the image of God the father and of Chriſt, as the waxe doth receiue a forme from the ring wherewith it is ſealed. But I will expounde ſhortly after howe the father and Chriſt are one.

12 VVhileſt I was with them in the world, I haue kept them in thy name. Thoſe whom thou haſt giuen mee haue I kept: and none of them hath perished, but the ſonne of perdition, that the ſcripture might be fulfilled.

13 And now I come vnto thee, and theſe thinges ſpeake I in the worlde, that they may haue my ioy fulfilled in themſelues.

12 VVhileſt I was in the worlde. Chriſt ſaith that he hath kept them in his fathers name, becauſe he maketh himſelf a miniſter only, which hath done nothing ſaue only through the power of God, and his ayd. Therfore he giueth vs to vnderſtand that it is vnlikely that they ſhould periſhe now, as if the power of God were extinguiſhed by his departure. But this ſeemeth to be a very abſurd thing, that Chriſt reſigneth this dutie to keepe them, vnto God: as if he did ceaſe to be the keeper of his, hauing finiſhed the courſe of his life. VVe may readily anſwere that he ſpeaketh in this place only of the viſible keeping, which had an ende in the death of Chriſte.

For truly ſo long as he was vpon earth, he had no neede to borrowe power of any other, whereby he might keepe the Diſciples: but this is wholy referred vnto the perſon of ỹ mediator, who appeared for a time vnder the perſon of a ſeruaunt. And now hee commaundeth his Diſciples to lift vp their ſenſes ſtraightway into heauen, whenas they ſhall begin to lacke externall ayde. VVhereby we gather that Chriſt doth no leſſe keepe the faithfull at this day, then in times paſt: but after another ſort: becauſe his diuine maieſtie appeareth manifeſtly in them.

VVhom thou haſt giuen mee. He vſeth the ſame argument againe, that it is an vnmeete thing that the father ſhould caſt away thoſe, whome his ſonne kept at his commaundement euen vntil the end of his miniſterie: as if he ſhould ſay, I haue faithfully executed & perfourmed that which was enioyned mee by thee, leaſt any thing ſhould periſh in my hande: nowe ſeeing that thou takeſt that againe which thou hadſt giuen me to keepe, it is thy part and duetie to prouide that it may remaine ſafe. VVhereas he accepteth Iudas, he doth it not without reaſon. For although he was not of the elect and of the true and natuall flocke of God, yet the dignitie of his office did beare that ſhew. Neither would any man haue thought otherwiſe of him, ſo long as he ſtood in ſuch an excellent order. It is therefore concerning the Grammer an vnproper exception, but if we weigh the matter, it was requiſite that Chriſte ſhoulde ſpeake thus according to the common meaning of men. And leaſt any man ſhould thinke that the eternall election of God was any whit weakened in the deſtruction and ruine of Iudas, hee added alſo that he was the ſonne of perdition. By whiche wordes he giueth vs to vnderſtand, that God knew long agoe his fall, which happened ſodainly in the ſight of men. For the Hebrewes doe call him the ſonne of perdition, which is a loſt man or giuen ouer to deſtruction.

That the Scripture might bee fulfilled. This is referred vnto the next ſentence, Iudas fell away that the ſcripture might be fulfilled. But a man ſhall falſly gather thence, that the falling away of Iudas is rather to bee imputed to God then to himſelfe, becauſe he was neceſſarily enforced to doe it by reaſon of the propheſie. For the euent of thyngs muſt not bee aſcribed vnto the propheſies therefore, becauſe it was foretolde therein. For doubtleſſe the Propheres denounce nothing els but that which ſhould come to paſſe though they held their peace. Therfore we muſt not fet the cauſe of thinges thence. I confeſſe that there is nothing which commeth to paſſe, but it is ordeined of God: but the queſtion is now only concerning the ſcripture, whether the foretelling and propheſies doe lay any neceſſitie vpon men or no: which I haue already ſhewed to be falſe. For Chriſte intendeth not to lay the cauſe of Iudas his deſtruction vpon the ſcripture: but he meant only to take away the matter of offence, which might haue ſhaken, many weake ſoules: and the meanes whereby he taketh it away is, becauſe the ſpirite of GOD hath teſtified in times paſt that it ſhould ſo come to paſſe. For we are almoſt afraid when we ſee and heare new thinges which come ſodainly. This is a verie profitable admonition and ſuch as reacheth farre. For how commeth it to paſſe at this day that moſt men do faint by reaſon of offences, ſaue onely becauſe they remember not the teſtimonies of the ſcripture, wherewith God hath well armed his, whileſt that he hath in time foretold what euils ſoeuer they ſhould ſee.

13 Theſe things ſpeake I in the worlde. Chriſt ſheweth here that he praied not for the Diſciples ſo earneſtly as if he did doubt of, or were careful & ſory for their ſtate to come, but rather that he might remedie their carefulneſſe and heauineſſe. VVe knowe howe greatly our mindes are bent vnto externall helpes: if wee can eſpie any offer themſelues, wee catch them greedily, and doe not ſuffer our ſelues to bee pluckt away from them eaſilie. Therefore Chriſte prayeth vnto his father in preſence of the Diſciples: not that he needeth to ſay any thing, but that he may take from them doubting. I ſpeake, ſaith hee, in the worlde, that is, when they heare mee, that their heartes may be quiet. For their ſafetie was alreadie in ſafegarde, ſeeing that Chriſt had put it into the hand of God. He calleth that his ioy which the Diſciples ſhould conceiue from him: or if you will haue it more briefly, whereof he is the authour, cauſe, and pledge. For there is nothing but feare and vnquietneſſe in vs: and we haue peace and quietneſſe in Chriſt alone.

14 I haue giuen them thy worde, and the world hath hated them: becauſe they are not of the worlde, as I am not of the world.

15 I doe not aske that thou ſhouldeſt take them out of the worlde, but that thou ſhouldeſt keepe them from euill.

16 They are not of the world, as I am not of the world.

17 Sanctifie them in thy truth: thy worde is the truth.

18 As thou haſt ſente mee into the worlde, I haue alſo ſent them into the worlde.

19 And I ſanctifie my ſelfe for them, that they alſo may bee ſanctified in the truth.

14 I haue giuen them thy worde. Hee commendeth the diſciples to the father for another cauſe, becauſe they haue neede of his helpe, becauſe the worlde hateth them. Hee doth alſo ſet downe the cauſe of the hatred, becauſe they haue embraced the worde of God which the worlde cannot away with: as if hee ſhoulde ſay. It is thy part to defend them who are hated of the world for thy wordes ſake. VVe muſt now remember that we harde lately, that the ende of this prayer is, that Chriſt his ioy may be fulfilled in vs. Therefore ſo often as the furie of the worlde is kindled againſt vs in ſuch ſort that we ſeeme not to bee farre from deſtruction, let vs ſtraightway learne to hold vp this buckler, that God will neuer forſake thoſe, who labour for the Goſpell. Hee ſaith that the Diſciples are not of the worlde, becauſe they are ſeparated from the worlde, whomſoeuer he regenerateth by his ſpirite. Therefore God wil not ſuffer his ſheepe to wander amongſt wolues, but he ſheweth himſelfe to be their paſtour.

15 I doe not aske that thou ſhouldeſt take them out of the worlde. He teacheth wherein the ſafetie of the godly conſiſteth: not that beeing exempted from all trouble they ſhoulde liue at eaſe and daintily, but that they may remayne ſafe in the middeſt of daungers through Gods helpe. Neither doth he tell his father what is expedient, but hee doth rather prouide for the infirmitie of thoſe that be his, that they may temper their petitiõs (which for the moſt part paſſe their boundes) by this way and meanes which he preſcribeth. In ſumme, he doth not promiſe the diſciples his fathers grace, þ it may ſet thē free from all care & labour: but he promiſeth them ſuch grace as may miniſter vnto them inuincible ſtrength againſt their enemies, & may not ſuffer thēto be ouerwhelmed with the huge heape of combates, which they ſhall ſuffer. Therefore if wee couet to be preſerued according to the rule whiche Chriſte hath deliuered, wee muſt not wiſhe to be free from euilles neither muſt we pray God to tranſlate vs by and by into bleſſed reſt: but let vs bee content with the certaine and ſure hope of victorie, and let vs in the meane ſeaſon reſiſt all euilles valiauntly, from whiche that wee may eſcape, Chriſt hath prayed vnto the father. In ſumme Chriſt taketh not his out of the wold, becauſe he will not haue them to be ſoft an ſlouthfull: yet notwithſtanding he deliuereth them from euill, that they may not be ouerwhelmed, For he will haue them to ſtriue, but hee will not ſuffer them to be wounded to death.

16 They are not of the worlde, likeas. Hee repeateth againe, that all the whole worlde hateth them, to the end that his heauenly father may the more beningly help them: & he doth alſo declare that this hatred proceedeth not from their offence, or fault but becauſe the world hateth God and Chriſt.

17 Sanctifie them in thy truth. This ſanctification comprehendeth the kingdome of God and the righteouſneſſe thereof, to wit, when God doth renue vs by his ſpirite, and confirmeth and proſecuteth vnto the ende the grace of renouation. Therefore he requeſteth firſt that the father would ſanctifie his diſciples, that is, that he would addict them wholy vnto himſelfe, and challenge them as an holy flocke. Secondly, hee aſſigneth the meanes and manner of ſanctification: and that not without cauſe. For brainſick men doe babble many things fooliſhly concerning ſanctification, yet they paſſe ouer gods truth, wherby he conſecrateth vs vnto himſelfe.

Again, becauſe other mē being ful out as fooliſh, do triſle cōcerning the truth, and doe in the meane ſeaſon neglect the woorde, Chriſte ſaith plainely, that the truth is no where els ſaue only in the worde, by which truth God doth ſanctifie his children. For the woorde is taken for the goſpell. whiche the Apoſtles had alreadie hearde proceede from the mouth of their maſter, and which they ſhould ſhortly preach vnto others. In this ſenſe Paule teacheth, Ephe. 5, 2. 6. that the Churche is made cleane in the fountaine of water in the worde of life. It is god alone that ſanctifieth: but becauſe the Goſpell is his power vnto ſaluation to euery one that beleeueth, Rom. 1. 16. whoſoeuer hee bee that departeth from the meane, hee muſt needes waxe more and more vile. Truth is taken in this place by the excellencie for the light of the heauenly wiſedome wherein God reuealeth himſelfe vnto vs, that hee may conforme vs and make vs like to his owne image. The externall preaching of the worde doth not this of it ſelfe, which the reprobate do wickedly profane, but let vs remember that Chriſte ſpeaketh of the elect, whome the ſpirite doth regenerate effectually by the woorde. And ſeeing that the Apoſtles were not altogether voide of this grace, wee muſt gather out of Chriſt his wordes that this ſanctification is not finiſhed nished in vs the first day, but that wee goe forwarde in the same during our whole life, vntill God doe fulfill vs with his righteousnesse, when we haue put off the flesh.

18 As thou hast sent mee. He confirmeth his prayer with another argument, to wit, because he and the Apostles haue both one calling. I, saith he, doe put vppon them the same person which at thy commandement I haue borne hytherto. Therefore they must needes bee furnished with thy spirite, that they may bee able to beare so great a burthen.

19 And for their sakes doe I sanctifie my selfe. He doth more plainely declare by these wordes, out of what fountaine that sanctification doeth flowe, which is wrought in vs by the doctrine of the Gospell: to wit, because hee hath consecrated and dedicated himselfe vnto the father, that his holinesse might come vnto vs. For the blessing is spread abroad from the first fruites vnto al the other fruite, so the spirit of God sprinkleth vs with Christe his holinesse, and maketh vs partakers thereof, and that not by imputation only (for by this meanes he is said to bee made vnto vs righteousnesse 1. Cor. 1. 13.) but he is also saide to bee made vnto vs sanctification, because he hath offered vs vnto his father after a sort in his owne person, that wee may bee renued by his spirite, into true holinesse,

Furthermore, although this sanctification doe appertaine vnto the whole life of Christ, yet it is made most apparant in the sacrifice of his death: because hee appeared then to be ꝑ true Priest which should consecrate the temple, the altar, all the vessels and the people, by the power of his spirite.

20 And I pray not for them only but for those which shall beleeue in mee by theyr worde.

21 That they may be all one: as thou, O father in me, and I in thee, that they may be one also in vs: that the worlde may beleeue that thou hast sent me.

22 And I haue giuen thē the glery which thou gauest me: that they may be one as we are one.

23 I in them, and thou in mee: that they may be made one, and that the world may knowe, that thou hast sent mee, and hast loued them as thou hast loued mee.

20 And I pray not for the onely. Hee extendeth that prayer farther nowe, wherein he comprehendeth the Disciples only hytherto, to wit, vnto all the Disciples of the Gospell, which should be vnto the ende of the worlde. This is certainely notable matter of hope: for if wee beleeue in Christ through the doctrine of the Gospell, wee neede not to doubt, but that wee are alreadie gathered with the Apostles into the faithfull custodie least any of vs doe perish. This prayer of Christ is a quiet hauen, wherein whosoeuer arriueth, he is free from all danger of shipwracke. For it is as muche as if Christ had sworne by solemne wordes that he careth greatly for our safetie. And he beginneth with his Apostles that their safetie wherof we are certaine, might make vs also more certain that we our selues shalbe safe.

Therefore so often as Satan assaulteth vs, let vs learne to holde vp this buckler, that wee are not in vaine ioyned vnto the Apostles by the holy mouth of the ſonne of God: that the ſafetie of vs all might be included as it were in the ſame bundle.

Therefore there is nothing which ought more vehemently to pricke vs forwarde to embrace the Goſpell. For as it is an vncomparable good thing, for vs to be offered to God by the hand of Chriſt, that we may bee preſerued from deſtruction: ſo we ought worthily to preferre the loue and care thereof before all other thinges. The ſlouthfulneſſe of the worlde in this point is wonderfull. All men are deſirous to bee ſafe: Chriſt deliuereth the ſure and certaine way and meanes to obtayne the ſame, from whiche if any man turne aſide, there remaineth no good hope for him: yet there is ſcarſe one amongſt an hundreth which doth vouchſafe to receiue that which was offered him ſo gently. VVee muſt note the manner of ſpeech. Chriſt prayeth for all thoſe which ſhoulde beleeue in him, in which wordes, he teacheth that which wee haue ſometimes ſaid, that our faith muſt looke vnto him. The member whiche foloweth next, by their worde, doth very well expreſſe the force and nature of faith, and doth alſo confirme vs familiarly who know that our faith is grounded in the Goſpel deliuered by the Apoſtles. Therfore howſoeuer the worlde do condemne vs a thouſand times, let this one thing ſuffice vs: that Chriſt acknowledgeth vs to be his owne, and commendeth vs vnto the father. And woe be to the Papiſts whoſe faith wandereth ſo farre from this rule, that they are not aſhamed to ſpue out execrable blaſphemie, that there is nothing conteined in the ſcripture but that whiche is doubtfull and which may bee wreſted hither and thyther: therefore the only tradition of the Church teacheth them to beleeue. But let vs remember, that the ſonne of God who is the only iudge doth allow that faith alone which is conceiued out of the doctrine of the Apoſtles.

Furthermore, the ſure teſtimonie thereof ſhalbe founde no where els ſaue only in their writings. VVe muſt alſo note the phraſe, which ſhal beleeue by their worde, which ſignifieth that faith commeth by hearing: becauſe the inſtrument wherewith God draweth vs vnto faith, is the externall preaching of men, VVherefore God is properly the authour of faith: and men themſelues are the miniſters by whom wee beleeue as Paule alſo teacheth, Cor. 3. 5.

21 That they may be all one, &c. He placeth the ende and drift of our felicity againe in vnitie, & that for good cauſes. For this is the deſtructiō of mankinde that being eſtraunged from God, it is alſo lame and ſcattered abroad in it ſelfe. Therfore the contrary reſtoring therof is, if it grow together into one body aright, likeas Paule placeth the perfection of the Church in that Ephe. 4. 3. if the faithfull agree together amongſt themſelues by one ſpirit: and he ſaith that the Apoſtles and Propheres, Euangeliſts and Paſtours were giuen for that cauſe, in the ſame place, 11. 12. that they might perfiſt in edifiyng the body of Chriſt, vntill we be come vnto the vnitie of faith. And therefore hee exhorteth the faithfull to grow vp into Chriſt, who is the head by whom all the body being coupled and knit togeather by euery ioynt of ſubminiſtration, according to the effectuall woorking, in the meaſure of euery member encreaſeth it ſelfe vnto edifiyng. Therfore ſo often as Chriſte ſpeaketh of vnitie, let vs remember, that horrible and filthie ſcattering abroad

And secondly let vs know that this is the beginning of blessed life, if we be al gouerned, and liue by the spirit of Christ alone. And we must vnderstand that so often as Christ saith in this chap. that he and the father are one, he speaketh not simply of his diuine essence, but that he is called one in the person of the mediatour, and inasmuch as he is our head. Many of the fathers did interprete it thus precisely, that Christ is one with the father, because he is eternal God: but the contention which they had with the Arrians enforced them to this, to wresse shorte sentenses into a straung sense. But Christ intended a far other thing, then to carry vs vp vnto the bare beholding of his hidden diuinitie: for he reasoneth from the end, that we ought therfore to be one, because otherwise the vnitie which he hath with the father, should be vaine and vnfruitful. Therfore to the end you may rightly comprehend what is the intente or effecte of that, that Christ and the father are one: take heede, that you stripe not Christ out of the person of the Mediatour: but consider him rather as he is the head of the Church, and ioyne him with his members: so the texte shall stand best: least the vnitie of the sonne with the father be vaine and vnprofitable, his power must be spread abroad throughout the whol body of the godly. Vvhence we do also gather, that we are one with christ: not because he powreth his substaunce into vs, but because hee maketh vs partakers by the power of his spirit of his life, & of whatsoeuer good things he hath receiued of the father.

That the world may beleeue. Some doe interprete this word world for the elect, who were as then dispearsed: but because world is taken throughout this whole chapter for the reprobate, I am rather of the contrary opinio. Moreouer, immediately after he separateth the same word wherof he maketh mention now, from al his. The Euangelist did put in the word beleeue vnproperly, for know or acknowledge: to wit, whilest that the vnfaithfull beeing conuinced by experience it selfe, doe perceiue the heauenly and diuine glory of Christ: whereby it commeth to passe, that in beleeuing, they beleeue not, because this feeling pearceth not vnto the inward affection of the minde. And this is the iust iudgement of God, that the brightnes of the glory of God doth blind the eies of the reprobate, because they are not worthy to see him sincerely and clearely. Hee vseth the word knew afterward in the same sense.

22. And I haue giuen them the glory which thou hast giuen me. Note that the patterne of perfect blessednes was expressed in Christ in such sorte, that he had nothing of his own, or for himself alone: but he was rather rich, that he might enrich his faithfull. This is our blessednes, that the image of God may be repayred and formed againe, which was blotted out through sinne. Christ is not onely the image of God, inasmuch as he is his eternal word: but the image of the fathers glory was also engrauen in his humane nature, wherof he is made partaker with vs, that he may transfigure his members into the same. Paul also teacheth the selfe same thing, 2. Cor. 3. 18, that we are transformed into the same image, as it were from glory to glory, by beholding the glory of GOD as it were with open face. Vvheruppon it followeth that no man is to be accounted Christes disciples, saue onely hee in whom the glory of God is seene imprinted by the image of Christ, as by a signet. The words which follow shortly after tend to the same end.

23. I in them, and thou in me. For his meaning is to teach that the fulnes of all good thinges is in him, and that that appeareth now plainely in him, which was hidden in God, that hee may powre it out into his by making them partakers thereof: as water flowinge from a fountaine hyther and thyther by conduytes, dooth water the fieldes euery where.

And hast loued them. He giueth vs to vnderstande that that is the most manifeste token and pledge of Gods loue towarde the godly, which euē the world whither it will or no, is enforced to feale and perceiue, whileste that the spirit which dwelleth in them, sendeth forth the beames of heauenly righteousnes and holynes. God dooth make it knowne vnto vs daily by infinite meanes besides this, how fatherly hee loueth vs: but the marke of adoption farre exceedeth the rest by good right. He addeth furthermore, And thou hast loued them, as thou hast loued me, in which woordes he meant to note the cause and the beginning of loue. For the aduerbe of likenes must be resolued into the coniunction causal: as if he shoulde haue saide, because thou hast loued me. For Christ alone is he, vnto whō the title of beloued belongeth. And again, the heauenly father loueth al the members also with the same loue, wherwith he hath loued the head of the Church: so that he loueth none but in Christ. Although here aryseth some shew of contrarietie: for Christe saieth, (as we haue seene elsewhere) that the infinite loue of God toward the worlde, was the cause that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, before 3.16. If the cause must go before his effect, we gather that menne were beloued of God the Father without Christ: that is, before he was ordained to be a redeemer. I answere, that the mercy wherewith God was moued toward the vnworthy, yea his very enemies, before he reconciled thē vnto himself, is called there, and in such places Loue. Truly the goodnes of God is woonderfull, and vnable to be comprehended by mans wit, in that bearing good wil, and being fauourable vnto men, whom he could not hate, hee tooke away the cause of hatred, leaste any thing should hinder his loue. Paule teacheth that we were double loued in Christe: first, because the father chose vs in him before the creation of the world, Eph. 1.4. and secondly, because he hath reconciled vs vnto himselfe in the same, Ro. 5.10. & hath had mercy vpon vs. Behold how we are both his enemies & his friends, vntill we be returned into fauour with God, our sinnes being purged: therefore, when as we are iustified by fayth properly by God, wee begin to be beloued at length as children of their father. And that loue, wherby it came to passe that Christ was ordained, in whom wee shoulde bee chosen freely, being yet vnborne, and being notwithstanding already lost in Adam, being hidden in Gods breast, doth far exceede the capacity of mans minde.

No man shal euer finde God fauourable, saue he which shall lay hold vppon him, being pacified in Christ. But like as when Christe is taken away, al taste of Gods loue dooth vanish away: so wee may fully assure our selues, that so soone as we are engrafted into his bodye, wee neede not feare leaste we should fall from Gods loue. For doubtlesse this foundation cannot be ouerthrown, that we are loued, because the father hath loued him.

24. Father, I will that thoſe whom thou haſt giuen to me, be with me: that they may ſee my glory, which thou haſt giuen me before the creation of the world.

25. Iuſt father, and the worlde hath not knowen thee: and I haue knowen thee: and theſe haue knowen that thou haſt ſent me.

26. And I haue declared thy name vnto them, and will declare it: that the loue wherewith thou haſt loued me, may be in them, and I in them.

¶ 24. I will that thoſe. VVill is put in ſteade of deſire: for this ſpeache is not the ſpeache of one that commaundeth but deſireth. Yet it may haue a dowble meaning, either that he would haue his diſciples to enioy hys externall preſence: or that GOD would bring them at length into the kingdome of heauen whether he goeth before them. So ſome expound theſe woordes, ſee my glorye, for to enioye and be made partakers of the glory which Chriſt hath: other ſome, for to perceiue by the experiment of faith, what Chriſt is, and howe great his maieſtie is. For mine owne part hauing well weighed all thinges, I thinke that Chriſte ſpeaketh of the perfecte bleſſednes of the godly: as if hee ſhoulde ſaye, that hys requeſt ſhould not be ſatiſfied, before they be receiued into heauen. To the ſame effecte doe I referre the ſeeing of his glory. They ſawe the glory of Chriſte then, as a ſmall glimmering of light doeth come thoroughe chinkes vnto a man that is ſhut vppe in darkeneſſe: nowe, Chriſte deſireth that they may goe ſo farre forwarde, that they maye enioy the perfecte brightneſſe openly in heauen. In ſumme, he deſireth that the father woulde leade them foorth by continuall proceedings, vnto the perfecte beholding of his glory.

Becauſe thou haſt loued me. This dooth alſo farre better agree with the perſon of the mediatour, then with the bare diuinitie of Chriſt. It is an hard thing, that God loued his wiſdome: but the text leadeth vs vnto an other thing, howſoeuer we receiue that. It is not to be doubted, but that when Chriſt deſired before, that his diſciples might be ioined with him, and that they might ſee the glory of his kingdome, he ſpake as hee was the head of the Church. Now he ſaieth, that the loue of the father was the cauſe. VVherfore it followeth that he was loued, inaſmuch as he was ordained to be the redeemer of the world. VVith this loue did the father loue him before the creation of the world, that he might haue, wherein he might loue his elect.

25 Iuſt father. He compareth his diſciples with the world, that hee may thereby amplifie their commendation and fauour with the father. For they muſt by good right be excellent, who onely know God, whom the whole world reiecteth. Chriſt commendeth them by good right with a ſingular affection, whom the vnbeliefe of the worlde hindered not frō knowing God. In calling his father iuſt, that he derideth the worlde and the wickednes thereof: as if he ſhuld ſay, howſoeuer the world doth proudly contemne God, or refuſe him, yet can there nothing be taken frō him, or done vnto him, but that the honour of his iuſtice ſhal continue whole and ſound to himſelfe. By which words he teacheth vs, that the fayth of the godly muſt be ſo grounded in God, that it doe neuer faint, although the whole world do fall. Like as at this day we muſt condemne Papiſtry of iniuſtice, that we may defend Gods praiſe, and preſerue it to himſelfe.

Chriſts

Christ saith not absolutely that the disciples knewe GOD, but he putteth two degrees: that he himselfe knew the father, and that the disciples knew that he was sent of the father. But because he addeth immediately after that he had declared vnto them his fathers name, he commendeth them (as I haue said) for the knowledge of God, which separateth them from the rest of the world. In the meane season wee must note the order of faith, which is described in this place. The son which came out of the bosome of the father doth onelye know him properlye. Therefore those, which desire to come vnto God, must needes receiue Christ comming to meete them, and addict themselues vnto him. Hee shall at length lift vp his disciples vnto God the father after that hee is known himselfe.

26. I haue declared, and wil declare. Christ did indeede execute the office of a teacher: yet he vsed the hidden reuelation of the spirit, and not onely the sound of the voice to make his father manyfest. His meaninge is therefore, that he taught the Apostles effectually: but because their fayth was as yet weake, he promyseth vnto them greater proceedinges, and that they should profit better in time to come: and so he prepareth them to hope for greater grace of the spirit. And although he speaketh of the Apostles, we may gather a common exhortation thence, that wee study to go forward dayly, and that we do not think that wee haue runne so wel, but that we haue yet far to go, so long as we are compassed aboute with the flesh.

That the loue, &c. That is, that thou maist loue them in me: or that the loue wherewith thou hast loued me may spread it selfe abroade euen vnto them. For the loue wherewith God loueth vs, to speake properlye is no other loue, saue that wherewith he hath loued his sonne from the beeginning, that he might make vs also acceptable & amiable vnto himself in him. And certeinly (as I haue sayd a litle before) we are hated of God, as touching our selues, without Christ, and he beginneth to loue vs thē, when as we grow into the body of his well beloued sonne.

This is an vnestimable priueledge of fayth, in that we know that the father loued Christ for our sakes, that we might be & may be partakers of the same loue continuallye. But we must note this particle I in them, whereby wee are taught that we are no otherwise comprehend in that loue whereof he speaketh, vnlesse Christ dwel in vs. For as the father cannot behold the sonne, but that he hath all his body before him together: so if wee wyll haue him to beeholde vs, we must be his members indeede.

Chap. 18.

1. WHen Iesus had spoken these thinges, he went out with his disciples, euer the brook Cedron, where was a garden, whereinto he entred & his disciples.
2. And Iudas knew the place also, which betrayed him, because Iesus came thither often with his disciples.

3. Therefore

3. Therefore when Iudas had receiued a band, and miniſters of the Prieſts and Phariſes, he came thither with lanternes, and lightes, and weapons.

4. And ſeeing that Ieſus knew what thinges ſoeuer ſhould come vpon him, hee went out, and ſaid vnto them, whom ſeeke yee?

5. They anſwered him, Ieſus of Nazareth. Ieſus ſaid vnto them, I am he. And Iudas which betrayed him ſtoode with them.

6. Therefore ſo ſoone as he ſayde vnto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

1 When Ieſus had ſpoken theſe thinges. In this hyſtory Iohn omitteth many thinges, which are read in the other three Euangeliſtes: and this doth he with good aduiſement: like as he determined to gather many thinges worthy to be remembred, which they conceale. Therefore let the readers borrow theſe thinges of the other Euangeliſtes, which are wantinge heere.

Ouer the brooke Cedron. In the Greeke the article is added, as if the brook had his name of Cedars: but it is like that it crept in through errour. For there is mention made oftentimes of the valleye or brooke Kidron in the ſcripture. The place was ſo called, by reaſon of the darknes, becauſe the valley was hollow, and therefore darke. Although I doe not contend about that matter: I bring that onely, whiche is more like to be true: wee muſt eſpecially note the Euangeliſts purpoſe in ſhewing the place: for he meant to ſhew that Chriſt went forth willingly vnto death. Hee cometh into the place, which he knew Iudas knew familiarly. Why ſo? ſaue only that he may willingly offer himſelf vnto the traitor & his enemies. Neither did vnadui ſedneſſe or raſhneſſe deceiue him, ſeeing that he knew al things before, which were at hand. Iohn addeth afterward that he went to mete them. Therefore he died not being conſtrained, but of his owne accord, that he might be a volũtary ſacrifice: for without obedience our ſinnes had not ben purged. Furthermore, he entreth into the garden, not that he may hide himſelfe there, but that he might haue freer and more ſpace to pray. And in that he deſired thrice to be deliuered from death, it is not contrary to that willing obedience whereof we haue ſpoken. For it was meete that he ſhould wraſtle with difficulties and daungers, that he might at length get the victorie: now hauing ſubdued the horrour of death, he maketh haſte vnto death freely and ioyfully.

3. Therefore Iudas. In that Iudas commeth furniſhed with ſouldiours and ſo great a garde, it is a ſigne of an euill conſcience, which feareth alwayes for no cauſe. It is certaine that he receiued the band of menne at the Preſidents pleaſure, who ſent alſo a Tribune, who was a captaine of a thouſand footemen. For there was a garriſon of ſoldiours alwaies in the citie, for feare of ſodaine tumultes: and the Preſident himſelfe did alwayes carie with him a companie of ſoldiours which wayted vppon him whether ſoeuer he went: the reſt were the ſeruaunts of the prieſtes. But Iohn nameth the Phariſies apart, whoſe madneſſe was moſt hotte, as if they cared more for religion.

4. And ſeeing Ieſus knewe. The Euangeliſt ſetteth downe more plainely how willingly Chriſt went vnto death: and yet he doth alſo ſhew what great power he breathed out in one voyce and woorde: to the ende we may knowe that the wicked could doe no more to him, then he ſuffered them, them. Hee anſweareth courteouſly, that he is the ſame man whome they ſeeke, and yet he throweth them downe to the ground, as if it had been with a violent whirlewinde, yea with a thunderbolte. Therefore hee wanted no power to ſtay and reſtraine their hands, if he had thought it good: but he woulde obey his father, by whoſe decree he knewe he was called to die. Hence we gather how horrible and fearful Chriſt his voice ſhalbe to the wicked, when as he ſhal ſitte vppon his iudgement ſeate to iudge the world. He ſtode then as a lambe ready to be offred vp in ſacrifice: he was depriued of his maieſtie, then to loke to: he throweth down his enemies at a ſodaine with one word, which were armed & fre from feare, and with this word he did not accuſe them, but doth only anſwer, I am hee. VVhat ſhall befall them then, when hee ſhall come not to bee iudged of men, but to be the iudge of quicke and dead: not in that baſe and ſimple apparell, but in his heauenly glory with his Angelles? But he meant to ſhew ſome token of that force and efficacy which Iſaias, 11.4. giueth to his voyce. The Prophet reckeneth this amongſt other powers & vertues of Chriſt, that he ſhall ſtrike the earth with the rodde of hys mouth, and he ſhal ſlea the wicked with the breath of his lips. Paul ſuſpenderh and deferreth the fulfilling of this propheſie vntill the ende, 2. Theſ. 2.8. Yet we ſee the wicked fall daily with their fury and pride, at the voyce of Chriſt. Seeing that thoſe fell to the ground which came to binde Chriſte, there was a viſible token and ſigne ſhewed of that feare which all the wicked doe feele inwardly whether they wil or no, when Chriſt ſpeaketh by his miniſters. But ſeeing that this thing was accidentall to the voyce of Chriſt, whoſe propertie is to lift vppe miſerable men which laide in death it ſhall doubtleſſe ſhew foorth that force towarde vs that it may lift vs vp euen vnto Heauen.

7. Therefore he asketh them againe, whome seeke yee? they saide, Iesus of Nazareth.

8. Iesus answered and said: I sayd vnto you, that I am he. If therefore ye seeke me, let these depart.

9. That the word might be fulfilled, which he had spoken: of those, which thou hast giuen me, haue I not lost any.

7. Therefore he asked them againe. Heereby appeareth what force that blindnes hath, wherewith God ſtriketh the mindes of the wicked, and how horrible their amaſednes is, after that Sathan hath bewitched them by the iuſt iudgement of God. If Oxen and Aſſes doe fall, they are touched with ſome feeling: theſe menne hauing tried the diuine power of Chriſt, manifeſtly doe goe forward no leſſe careleſly, then if they hadde not ſeene ſo much as the ſhadowe of a man in him: yea Iudas himſelfe is not yet moued. Therefore let vs learne to feare Gods iudgement: wherby the reprobate being deliuered into the handes of Sathan, are made more aſtonied then bruite beaſtes. And doubtleſſe it was Sathan, which caſt them headlong with ſuch furious force vnto ſuch careleſſe boldnes. For there is no phrenſines that canne throwe downe a man headlong ſo violently, as ſuch blindnes. For the wicked run headlong againſt God, after that they are caſt into a reprobate ſenſe, as if they had to deale onely with a flye.

They

They ſeele his power indeede, but not that they may be bended: For they wil be ſooner broken an hundred times, then they wil yeelde. Finallye, their wickednes is vnto them a vaile, which hindereth them from beholding and looking vnto the light of God: obſtinacy doth make them harder then ſtones, leaſt they ſhuld at any time ſuffer themſelues to bee tamed.

8. I told you that I am. Here we ſee that the ſonne of God doth not only die willingly, that he may blot out our tranſgreſsions by his obedience: but alſo that he fulfilleth the office of a good ſhepheard toward his flocke in defending the ſame. Hee ſeeth the inuaſion of the wolues, hee waiteth not ne ſtaieth vntil they come to the ſheepe, whoſe keeper hee was made, but he ſetteth himſelf againſt them in time. Wherfore let vs not doubt but that ſo often as either wicked men or the deuils doe inuade them: we ſhal haue the ſame aide preſent with vs.

In the meane ſeaſon Chriſte preſcribed a rule to all Paſtours by his owne example, which they muſt follow, if they wil fulfill their office aright.

9. I haue not loſt any. This ſentence ſeemeth to be brought out of ſeaſon, which appertaineth rather vnto the ſoules, then vnto the bodies: for Chriſt did not preſerue and keepe his Apoſtles ſafe and ſound euen vntill the laſt end: but this he did, that their eternal ſaluation might alwaies be in ſafetie amongſt continual daungers, and in the middeſt of death. I aunſwere, that the Euangeliſte ſpeaketh not ſimplye of their corporall death, but that this is rather his meaning, that Chriſt in ſparing them for a time, did prouide for their eternal ſaluation. Let vs conſider how weak they were as yet: what do we think they would haue done, if they had beene examined and tried to the quick? Therefore foraſmuch as Chriſte would not haue them tempted and tried aboue the ſtrength whiche hee had giuen them, he deliuered them from eternal deſtruction. And hence may we gather a general doctrine: although he tried our faith with many temptations, yet ſhal we neuer come into extreame daunger, but hee wil giue vs ſtrength alſo to ouercome. And truely we ſee how hee beareth with our infirmitie oftentimes, when as he beateth backe, and drieueth away ſo many endeuours and practiſes of the wicked by encountering with thē himſelf, becauſe he ſeeth that we are feeble and not ripe enough as yet. Finally he neuer bringeth forth his vnto the battel, vntyll they be well furniſhed and appoynted, that euen in periſhing they may not periſh: becauſe there is gaine prepared for them aſwell in death as lyfe.

10. Then Simon Peter hauing a ſword, drew it, and ſmote the hie prieſts ſeruaunt, and cut off his right eare. And his name was Malchus.

11. Therfore Ieſus ſaith vnto Peter, put vp thy ſword into the sheath: wilt thou not that I drinke the cup, which my father hath giuen me?

12. Then the band, and the Captaine, and the miniſters of the Iewes tooke Ieſus, and bound him,

13. And led him away vnto Annas firſt: for he was father in law to Caiphas, which was high prieſt that yeere.

14. And it was Caiphas which had giuen counſell to the Iewes, that it was expedient that one man ſhould die for the people.

10. Therefore Simon Peter. The Euangeliſt deſcribeth Peter his fooliſh zeale now, who went about to defend his maiſter otherwiſe then it was lawful for him to doe. He taketh vpon him and ventureth into great daunger for Chriſtes ſake, couragiouſly and valiauntly: but becauſe hee reſpecteth not what his calling requireth, and what God ſuffereth, his fact deſerueth ſo ſmall praiſe, that Chriſte reprehendeth him ſharplye. And let vs know that all that is condemned in the perſō of Peter, which men dare aſſay of their owne head. VVhich doctrine is eſpecially to bee noted. For there is nothing more common, then vnder colour of zeale to defend whatſoeuer we doe. As if it skilled not whether God doe allow that or no, which men think is right, whoſe whole wiſdom is meere vanitie. If we did ſee no corruption in Peters zeal, yet we ought to be cōteted with this one thing only, that Chriſt pronouced that it doth not pleaſe him. But wee ſee that there wanted no good will in him to haue Chriſt called backe from death, and that he ſhould haue ſuffered eternal ſhame and reproach. For in that he layeth violent handes vpon the captaine and ſoldiours, he rageth in that reſpect like a robber or murtherer: becauſe he reſiſteth the power ordayned of God. Seeing that Chriſt was ouermuch hated of the world, this one facte might haue beene a colour for all ſlanders, & falſe reports, wherewith the enemies burthened him falſely. Secondly, this is too prepoſterous, that he wil proue and declare his faith by the ſword, and cannot do it with his tongue. VVhen as he is called to confeſſe, he denieth: but now without his maiſters commaundement, he rageth and maketh much a do. VVherefore ſeeing that wee are admoniſhed with ſo notable an example, let vs learne to moderate our zeale. And becauſe the wantonnes of our fleſh itcheth alwayes, and is bold to do more then God commaundeth, let vs knowe that our zeale ſhal haue but bad ſucceſſe, ſo long as wee dare go beyond the woorde of God. It may be ſometimes, that we may like the beginninges well: but we ſhal be puniſhed at length for our raſhnes. Therefore let obedience be the foundation of all things, which we take in hand. VVe are taught furthermore, that thoſe which determine to defende Chriſtes cauſe, doe not alwayes walke ſo vprightly, but that there is in them ſome vice, wherefore we muſte ſo much the more diligently praye vnto the Lord, that hee will gouerne vs in all our actions with the ſpirite of wyſdome.

11. Put vp thy ſword. By this commaundement Chriſt diſaloweth Peter his fact. And we muſt note the reaſon, becauſe it was not lawfull for a priuate man to reſiſt them, who were furniſhed with publike authoritie. For we may gather that out of the other three, who ſet down Chriſtes generall ſentence. He that ſhal ſmite with the ſword, ſhal periſh, with the ſword. Therefore we muſt beware that we go not aboute with violence and weapons to reſiſt our enemies, yea thoſe which prouok vs vniuſtly, ſaue only ſo far forth as the lawes and publike autority doe permit vs. For whoſoeuer doth paſſe the bounds of his calling, although the whole world do commend him: yet ſhal his facte neuer be approoued of God.

The cup which he hath giuen. This ſeemeeth to be a ſpecial reaſon: becauſe it was mete that Chriſt ſhuld be dumb, that he might be led like a lambe to be ſlaine. Yet it is to be taken for an example: becauſe the ſame patience is required at al our hands. The

The ſcripture compareth afflictions vnto Potions: For as the good man of the houſe doeth diſtribute and deuide meat and drinke amongſt his children and houſeholde, ſo God hath this power ouer vs, to handle euery man as ſeemeth beſt to him. And whether he make vs mery with proſperity, or humble vs with aduerſity, he is ſayde to giue vs ſweete or bitter drinke to drinke. This Potion was ordained for Chriſte, that hee ſhoulde ſuffer death vppon the croſſe, for the reconciliation of the world. Therefore he ſayeth that he muſt drinke of the cuppe which the father hath meaſured and reached to him: In like ſort muſt we be prepared to ſuffer. And yet theſe brainſicke men are not to be hearde, who deny that we ought to ſeeke remedy for diſeaſes and other euils whatſoeuer, leaſt we refuſe that cuppe which God reacheth vnto vs. Becauſe we know that we muſt once die, it is meete that we be ready to die: and becauſe we know not the time of our death, the Lord ſuffreth vs to preſerue our life with thoſe helpes which he hath ordained. VVe muſt ſuffer diſeaſes and ſickneſſe patiently, howe grieuous ſoeuer they be to our fleſh: yet ſo long as it is not euident that they are deadly, we may ſeeke ſome eaſe & remedy, only we muſt beware that we aſſay nothing, ſaue that which is lawful by the woord of God. Finally, ſo that that doe alwaies remaine ſurely fixed in our hearts, that the will of the Lord may be done, we ceaſe not to drinke the cuppe which he giueth, in ſeeking to be deliuered from thoſe euilles and miſeries wherewith we are preſſed downe.

12. Then the bande and the captaine. It may ſeeme to be an abſurde thing that Chriſt, who threwe the ſoldiours downe to the grounde wyth his voyce, doeth nowe ſuffer himſelfe to be taken: for if he meant to ſubmit himſelfe vnto his enemies at length, what neede had he to woorke ſuch a myracle? But the ſhewing of his diuine power had in it a double commodity. For it ſerueth to remooue a ſtumbling blocke, leaſt we thinke that Chriſt did yeelde being ouercome through infirmitie: ſecondly, it proueth how willing he was to ſuffer death. Therefore he defended hys power againſt his aduerſaries, ſo farre foorth as it was profitable: but when he was to obey his father, he refrained himſelfe, that he might be a ſacrifice. But let vs remember that the body of the ſonne of God was bounde, that our ſoules might be looſed from the ſnares of Sathan and ſinne.

13. And they brought him vnto Annas. The other Euangeliſts paſſe ouer this, becauſe it doeth not much belong vnto the ſumme of the hyſtorie: for there was nothing woorthy to be remembered done there. Peraduenture the commodiouſneſſe of the place mooued them to put Chriſt in Annas his houſe, vntill the chiefe Prieſt could call a councell. The high prieſt of that yeare. He meaneth not that the high prieſthoode was a yearely office, (which many haue thought falſly) but that Caiphas was high prieſt at that time: whiche appeareth plainely out of Ioſephus. It was a continuall honour according to the preſcript of the lawe, neither was it ended, ſaue onely by death: but ambition and ciuill diſcorde cauſed the preſidets of Rome, hauing put down one prieſt, to chuſe another at their pleaſure, which did excell in mony or fauour. So Vitellius threw downe Caiphas, whom Ionathas the ſonne of Annas ſucceeded.

14. VVhich had giuen counſel. The Euangeliſt repeateth Caiphas his ſentence which we had before, 11.50. that God vſed the vncleane mouthe of the vnfaithfull and wicked high prieſt, to publiſh a propheſie, like as hee directed the tongue of Balaam contrary to his deſire, ſo that hee was compelled to bleſſe the people, whom he deſired to curſſe, for king Balacke his ſake, Num. 24.5.

15. And Simon Peter, and the other diſciple followed Ieſus. And the high prieſte knewe that diſciple: Therefore he entred into the high prieſts hall with Ieſus.

16. And Peter ſtoode without at the doore. Therefore the other diſciple went forth, whome the high prieſt knewe, and ſpake to the porter, and brought in Peter.

17. Therefore the damſell that kept the doore, ſayde: Art thou alſo one of this mans diſciples? He ſayeth I am not.

18. And the miniſters and ſeruaunts ſtoode there, who had made a fire of coales, becauſe it was colde, and they warmed themſelues.

19. And Simon Peter ſtoode alſo among them, and warmed himſelfe.

15. The other diſciple. Some were deceiued wyth a light coniecture, ſo that they thought that this diſciple was Iohn: to witte, becauſe hee vſeth to conceale hys owne name, when he ſpeaketh of himſelf. But how came Iohn, who was a ſimple fiſher manne, to be acquainted familiarly wyth the proude high prieſt? And howe coulde it bee that hee ſhoulde frequent the houſe of the highe prieſte, ſeeinge that hee did alwayes accompanye Chriſte? It is more likely that this was none of the twelue, but that hee is called a diſciple, becauſe hee had embraced the doctrine of the Sonne of God. But Iohn is not curious in diſpoſinge the hyſtorye, becauſe hee thinketh it ſufficient for him to gather a briefe ſumme. For after that hee hathe ſhewed that Peter hadde denied Chriſte once, hee intermingleth certaine other thinges, and then afterwarde hee retourneth vnto the other two denials.

Heereby it came to paſſe that readers which were leſſe attentiue, did gather that the firſt deniall was in the houſe of Annas: but the wordes doe ſignifie no ſuche thyng, but doe rather clearely expreſſe, that it was the highe prieſtes maide, which enforced Peter to deny Chriſte. Therefore we muſt vnderſtande, that when Chriſte was broughte vnto the high prieſt, all thoſe that came were not lette in, but the diſciple whyche was knowen, did gette Peter lette in for hys ſake. Nowe we neede not doubte, but that bothe of them followed Ieſus, beinge mooued wyth a godlye zeale, but ſeeinge that Chriſte hymſelfe hadde teſtified that hee ſpared Peter and the other, it hadde beene farre better for him to haue mourned and prayed in ſome bye corner, then to come abroade into the ſight of men, ſeeing that he was ſo weake. He doeth nowe greedily vſurpe that duety which Ieſus hadde remitted vnto him: but hee faintheth in the confeſsion of faith wherein hee oughte to haue ſtoode euen vntill the ende. Therefore we muſt alwayes marke, what the Lorde requireth at our handes, leaſt thoſe which are weake, take vppon them to doe things that are not neceſſary.

17. Therefore the mayde ſayde. Peter was brought into the high prieſtes hall:

hall: but hee payed too deare for hys comming in, becauſe hee is enforced to denye Chriſte in the very entraunce. Seeing that hee ſtumbleth ſo filthily at the firſte, the vanitie of his boaſtinge is diſcouered. Hee hadde made his boaſte that hee woulde bee an inuincible champion, and able to ouercome deathe: but beinge nowe throwen downe with the voyce of one ſeelye maide, and that no threatninge voyce, hee throweth away hys weapons, and yeeldeth. Beholde a token and patterne of mannes ſtrength. VVhat ſtrength ſoeuer appeareth in menne, it is but a ſmoake whiche is driuen away with one blaſt. VVithout the battaile wee are more couragious then becommeth vs: but experience ſheweth howe foolihly wee are proude of nothinge. Yea, when Sathan vſeth no engines, wee our ſelues faine to our ſelues vaine terrours, whiche trouble vs before the time. Peter was afraide at the voyce of a ſeely woman: what are wee? Are wee not oftentimes terrified with the noyſe of a leafe that falleth from a tree? The vaine ſhewe of daunger, did ſtrike Peter a farre off: are not wee ledde away from Chriſte daily with childiſh toyes?

Finallye, ſuche is our ſtrengthe, that it falleth downe flatte wythout any ennemie: GOD doeth ſo puniſhe mannes arrogancie, whiles that hee bringeth downe the loftie courages of menne. Manne beinge filled, not wyth power, but with winde onely, doeth promiſe vnto him ſelfe that hee ſhall eaſily conquer the whole worlde: And yet, when he ſeeth but the ſhadowe of a Thiſtle, hee is afraide: Therefore lette vs learne to be ſtronge no where elſe, but in the Lorde.

I am not. Thys ſeemeth to bee no flatte deniall of Chriſte, yet when Peter is afraide to confeſſe that hee is one of hys Diſciples, it is as much as if hee ſhoulde deny that he hadde any thing to doe with him. VVhich we muſt note, leaſt any manne ſhoulde thinke that he did ſlide away by dealing Sophiſtically, whereas hee doeth depart onely away from the confeſſion of faith.

18. Simon Peter ſtanding with them. In that the Euangeliſte ſayeth, that Peter ſtoode wyth the miniſters and ſeruaunts at the fire, that ſerueth to make the hyſtorie hange togither, as wee ſhall ſee afterward. But heereby it appeareth howe great the amaſednеſſe of Peter was, who did careleſly warme himſelfe amongeſt the wicked menne, ſeeing that he hadde denied his maiſter. Althoughe it may be, that hee was kept backe wyth feare, leaſt as he went out of the high prieſtes houſe, he ſhoulde encurre the like daunger againe.

19. Therefore the high prieſt asked Ieſus of his diſciples and his doctrine.

20. Ieſus anſweared him, I haue ſpoken openly in the worlde, I haue alwayes taught in the ſynagogue and in the temple, whither all the Iewes come togither, and in ſecreat haue I ſayd nothing:

21. VVhy doeſt thou aske mee? aske theſe that haue hearde what I haue ſpoken vnto them: beholde theſe men knowe what things I haue ſpoken.

22. VVhen he had ſpoken theſe things, one of the miniſters which ſtoode by, gaue hym a blowe on the cheeke, ſaying: anſweareſt thou the high prieſt ſo?

23. Ieſus ſayeth vnto him: If I haue euill ſpoken, beare witneſſe of the euill: but if well, why ſmiteſt thou me?

24. And Annas had ſent him bound vnto Caiphas the hie prieſt.

19. He asked Ieſus. The hie Prieſt asketh Chriſte as if he had beene ſome ſeditious fellowe that had deuided the Churche by gatheringe to himſelfe diſciples. Hee asketh him as a falſe Prophet that had gone about to corrupte the puritie of faith with newe and peruerſe opinions. Chriſte hauing executed the office of a teacher, taketh in hande no new defence: yet, leaſt he ſhould forſake the defending of the truth, he ſheweth that he is ready to defende all things which he had taught. Neuertheleſſe, he reproueth the impudencie of the high prieſt, who enquireth of a matter that was moſte manifeſtly knowen, as if it had beene doutfull. It is not inoughe for them to deny the redeemer that was offered vnto them togither with the promiſed ſaluation, vnleſſe they doe alſo condemne the whole expoſition of the lawe.

20. I haue ſpoken openly. It is a childiſh errour of ſome men, who thinke that thoſe men are condemned by this anſweare of Chriſt, who handle the woord of God priuily and in chambers, when they may not doe it openly by reaſon of the tyrannie of the wicked. For Chriſte diſputeth not, what is lawfull or vnlawful: but his intent and purpoſe is to refute the impudent wickednеſſe of Caiphas. Notwithſtanding, this place ſeemeth to be contrary to the other ſentence of Chriſte, where he biddeth the apoſtles preach that vpon the houſes, which he had told them in the eare, Mat. 10. 27. And againe, when he pronounceth that it is not granted to all men to heare the myſteries of the kingdome of God, Mat. 13. 11. and that he did therefore vouchſafe to make the twelue only partakers of this grace: I anſweare, that when he ſayeth that he had not ſpoken any thing in ſecreate, it is referred vnto the very ſubſtance, whiche was alwaies one, althoughe he vſed a diuers forme of teaching. For hee did neither ſpeake otherwiſe amongſt the diſciples, that he might teache ſome other thinge: neither did he this craftily, as if he woulde of ſette purpoſe conceale thoſe things from the people, which he ſpake priuately to a fewe. Wherfore he might with a good conſcience, teſtifie that hee had freely profeſſed, and ſincerely publiſhed the ſumme of hys doctrine.

22. When he had ſpoken theſe things. This is added for this cauſe, firſt that we may know how great the furie, and how tyrannicall the Empire of Chriſtes enemies were: and ſecondly, what diſcipline there was vſed amongſt thoſe prieſts. They ſitte like iudges: neuertheleſſe, they rage like cruell beaſtes. There was a councell gathered togither, wherein there ought to haue beene great gratitie vſed: one officer taketh to himſelfe ſo muche libertie, that when the matter was handled, in the preſence of the iudges, he ſmiteth the partie arraigned, who was found guilty in nothing. Wherfore it is no maruell, if Chriſtes doctrine be condemned in ſuch a barbarous ſeſsions, out of which not onely all equitie is baniſhed, but alſo all humanitie and ſhame.

23. If I haue euill ſpoken. That is, if I haue offended, accuſe me, that when I haue anſweared for my ſelfe, I may be puniſhed according to my offence. For this is no lawfull kinde of dealing: but it is meete that there be a farre other order and other maner of modestie vsed in iudgements. Therefore Christe complaineth that hee had great iniurie done him if hee haue not offended: & if so be it that he hath offended, yet was he to deale lawfully, and not violently. But Christe seemeth in this place not to obserue that which he commaunded his to doe else where, Mathewe 5.39. For he turned not the right checke vnto him, that hadde smitten him vppon the left. I answer that it is not alwayes required in Christian patience, that hee that is beaten shoulde putte vppe iniurie wythout making any more a doe: but first, that he suffer the same with a contented minde: and secondly, that not thinking of any reuenge, he endeuour rather to ouercome euill wyth good. The spirite of Sathan enforceth the wicked already to doe more harme then is meete, although no man prouoke them. Therefore they expounde the wordes of Christ absurdly, who wrest them vnto that parte, as if hee commanded to pricke forward those men with newe prickes, who are too desirous to doe harme. For his onely meaninge is this, that euery one of vs ought rather to be ready to suffer the seconde iniurie, then to recompence and repaye the first. VVherefore there is no cause why a Christian man being vniustly hurt may not complaine, yet so, that his minde be free from wrathe, and his handes cleane from reuenge.

24. And Annas had sent. This sentence is to be red by a perynthesis, For because hee hadde sayde that Christe was brought vnto Annas hys house, and so hadde prosecuted his narration, as if the councell & meeting of the priestes had beene holden there: he sayeth nowe that he was caryed vnto the high priestes house. And because the tence of the verbe deceiued many, I had rather put it in the preterpluperfectence, had sent.

25. And Simon Peter stoode and warmed himselfe, therefore they sayde vnto him: Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied and sayd, I am not.

26. One of the seruaunts of the high priest, who was cosen to him, whose eare Peter cut off, sayeth; Did not I see thee in the garden with him?

27. Therefore Peter denied againe, and immediatly the cocke crewe.

25. Hee denied. Thys is horrible blockishnesse of Peter, who is not only not touched wyth repentaunce, when hee hathe denied hys maister once, but hee hardneth hymselfe wyth very libertie to sin. If euery man hadde asked him one after another, hee woulde not haue beene afrayed to denie him a thousande times. Behold whether Sathan throweth miserable men headlonge, after that hee hath throwen them downe from their constancie of minde. VVee must also note the circumstance, which the other Euangelistes doe expresse, to witte, that vsing cursing, hee did testifie that hee knewe not Christe. So doeth it befal many daily: at the first their fall shall not be greate: afterwarde they shall accustome themselues to offende after that the conscience shall be brought on sleepe: at length he that hath accustomed himselfe to contemne God, shall thinke that nothinge is vnlawfull for him, but hee shall venture euen vppon the very vtmost thinges. VVherefore, there is nothinge better for a man then to take heede to himselfe in time, that hee which is tempted of Sathan doe not beare with himselfe euen in the very least poynte, whileste hee is founde as yet.

27. Immediately the cocke crewe. The Euangeliſte maketh mention of the crowing of the cocke, to the ende we may knowe that Peter was admoniſhed by God at the very inſtant. Therefore the other Euangeliſtes ſay that he remembred the Lordes wordes. Although Luke doeth declare that he was not mooued with the crowing of the cocke, onely, vntill Chriſte behelde him. So who ſoeuer is once begun to fal through the motion and perſwaſion of Sathan, he ſhalbe reclaimed by no voyce, no ſigne, no admonition, vntil the Lord himſelfe doe beholde him.

28. Therefore they bringe Ieſus from Caiphas into the common hall: and they them ſelues entered not into the common hal, that they might not be defiled, but that they might eate the Paſſeouer.

29. Therefore Pilate went out vnto them, and ſayde: VVhat accuſation doe yee bringe againſt this man?

30. They anſweared and ſayde vnto him. If he were not an euill doer, wee woulde not haue deliuered him vnto thee.

31. Therefore Pilate ſayde vnto them: Take yee him and iudge him accordinge to your owne lawe. Therefore the Iewes ſayde vnto him: It is not lawfull for vs to put any manne to death.

32. That the woorde of Ieſus might be fulfilled, which he had ſpoken, ſignifying what death he ſhould die.

28. Therefore they brought Ieſus. This examination whereof the Euangeliſt ſpeaketh, was had before day. Neuertheleſſe, it is not to be doubted but that they had their fannes euery where in the Citie, wherwith they did ſette the people on fire. So that the furie of the people was enflamed of ſuche a ſodaine, as they did all with one conſent deſire to haue Chriſt put to death. The prieſtes did examine him, not becauſe they had power to giue iudgement: but that they might deliuer him to the iudge being oppreſſed with their preiudice, as if they had already knowen inough of him. The Romanes did call as well the Preſidents houſe as the iudgement ſeate where iudgement was giuen, Pretorium, or the common hall. That they might not be defiled. Their religion is to be approoued in this, that they abſtaine from all pollution, that being pure accordinge to the preſcript of the lawe, they may eate the Lordes Paſſeouer: but there are two faults, and that both of them too groſſe. Firſt, in that they do not thinke that they had more pollution wythin, then they coulde catche by goinge into any place, howe prophane ſoeuer it was: and ſecondly, in that being ouer preciſe in ſmall matters, they neglecte that which is the chiefeſt. To thoſe whiche are polluted and vncleane, ſayeth Paule in the Epiſtle to Titus, the firſt chapter and the fifteene verſe: nothinge is cleane, becauſe their mindes are vncleane. But theſe hypocrites, who beinge full of malice, ambition, deceite, crueltie, couetouſneſſe, did almoſte infecte bothe heauen and earth wyth their ſtinke, are onely afrayde of externall pollutions.

Therefore this mockage is vntollerable, in that they goe aboute to pleaſe GOD, ſo they bee not polluted wyth touchinge anye vncleane thyng, forgetting the true puritie. There is an other vice in hypocriſie, that omitteth careleſſy the chiefeſt thinges, whileſt that it obſerueth the ceremoceremonies carefully. For GOD did not commaunde the Iewes to obſerue theſe rites whyche are contained in the lawe to any other end, ſaue onely that they mighte accuſtome themſelues to loue and deſire true holineſſe.

Moreouer, they were neuer forbidden any where in the lawe, to enter into a mannes houſe that was a Gentile: but it was a Cauеat giuen by the Fathers, leaſt any manne ſhoulde take or drawe any contagion or infection from an vncleane houſe vnwares. But theſe good interpreaters of the Lawe, whiche were very circumſpecte in ſtraininge out a gnatte, doe ſtoutly deuoure a Camell. And this is an ordinary thinge amongeſt Hypocrites, that they thinke it greater wickednеſſe to kill a flye then a manne. VVhereunto that other vice is allyed to preferre mennes traditions before the commaundementes of GOD. Therefore they will keepe themſelues cleane, that they may rightly eate the Paſſeouer. But they include vncleanneſſe wythin the walles of the common hall: neuertheleſſe, they are not afrayed to deſire and craue to haue an innocent putte to death, in the preſence of heauen and earthe. Furthermore, they keepe the Paſſeouer wyth a fained and falſe reuerence: but they doe not onely violate the true Paſſeouer with ſacrilegious handes: but they endeuour alſo to ouerwhelme and couer it with eternall deſtruction, ſo much as in them lieth.

28. Therefore Pilate went out vnto them. Thys prophane man doeth beare willinglye wyth the ſuperſtition whyche hee derideth and contemneth. But hee doeth the duetye of a good iudge, euen in the verye iſſue of the matter, when as hee biddeth them vtter it if they haue any accuſation. But the prieſtes, as if they hadde hadde authoritye enoughe to condemne him whome they accuſe, make no other anſweare but that hee muſt ſtande to their preiudice. For they complaine of Pilate by the waye, becauſe he truſteth not their honeſtie. VVhy (ſay they) art thou not perſwaded of thine owne accorde, that hee is woorthy of death, whome wee perſecute?

Beholde, howe the wicked, whome GOD hathe lifted vppe vnto great honour, beinge as it were blinded wyth their owne glorye and renowme, doe graunt themſelues libertie to doe what ſoeuer they will. Beholde likewiſe howe drunken and madde pride is. They will haue Chriſte to bee accounted an euill doer, becauſe they doe accuſe hym. But if they come to the matter, what euill dedes of hys ſhall they finde, ſaue onely that hee healed ſicke folkes of all ſortes, hee draue the Deuilles out of menne, hee ſette on foote agayne thoſe that hadde the Palſie, and were lame, hee reſtored ſighte to the blinde, hearinge to the deafe, life to the deade? The matter went thus, this was the truthe, and they themſelues were too euidentlye conuicted. But as I ſayde euen nowe, it is the hardeſt matter that canne bee for menne whyche are drunken wyth pride, to be awaked, that they may iudge with a ſounde and ſetteled minde.

31. Accordinge to your lawe. VVee may ſurelye thinke that Pilate being offended wyth their rudeneſſe and violence, vpbraideth vnto them, that that forme of condemning which they vrged, was contrary to the common lawe of all the Gentiles, and to mannes reaſon.

Neuertheleſſe, hee toucheth them alſo, in that they boaſted that they hadde a lawe giuen them by God. Hee ſayeth tauntingly, Take hym you: neyther woulde he haue ſuffered them to haue condemned him to die, but it is as muche as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayde: If you hadde the power and authoritie in your handes, hee ſhoulde quickely bee puniſhed and putte to death before hys cauſe were knowen. Is thys then the equitie of your lawe, to condemne a manne for no faulte or offence? So that whileſt the wicked doe falſely pretende the name of God, they cauſe his holy doctrine to be ſlandered by the enemies, and the world doth greedily catch at an occaſion to ſpeake euill.

It is not lawfull for vs. They are deceiued who thinke that the Iewes doe refuſe Pilate his offer: but rather when they knewe that hee ſpake thus vnto them in mockage, Take him you, they obiecte, thou wouldeſt not permit this: therefore ſithens that thou art a iudge, doe thy duetie.

32. That the woorde of Ieſus, &c. The Euangeliſte addeth at length, that it was conuenient it ſhoulde be ſo, that that might bee fulfilled whiche Chriſte hadde foretolde. The ſonne of manne ſhall bee deliuered into the handes of the Gentiles, Mathewe the twentieth chapiter, and the nineteenth verſe. And truely thys is the principall poynte, if wee couette to reade the hyſtorie of the deathe of Chriſte to profite thereby, that wee looke vnto the eternall councell of God. The ſonne of God is arraigned and brought before the throne and iudgement ſeat of a mortall manne. If wee thinke that this is done at mannes will and pleaſure, and doe not lifte vppe our eyes vnto GOD, our faith muſt needes bee made aſhamed and confounded: but when as wee know that our guyltineſſe was aboliſhed before God by that guiltineſſe of Chriſte, becauſe it pleaſed our heauenly father thus to reconcile mankinde vnto himſelfe, being lifted vppe on high by this cogitation onely, we boaſt and triumphe without feare and ſhame in Chriſtes his ignominie and reproche. Therfore let vs learne in euery part of this hyſtorie, to turne our eyes toward God the authour of our redemption.

33. Therefore Pilate entred againe into the iudgement hall, and called Ieſus, and ſayd vnto him: Art thou the king of the Iewes?

34. Ieſus anſweared him: Sayeſt thou this of thy ſelfe, or haue others tolde thee it of mee?

35. Pilate anſweared him, Am I a Iewe? thine owne nation and the high prieſtes haue deliuered thee to me: what haſt thou done?

36. Ieſus anſweared, My kingdome is not of this worlde? If my kingdome were of this worlde, verely my miniſters woulde ſtriue, that I might not be deliuered to the Iewes, but nowe my kingdome is not hence.

33. Therefore hee entred in. It is to bee thoughte that there paſſed manye ſpeaches betweene them, whiche the Euangeliſte concealeth: whiche wee may alſo eaſily gather out of the reſt. But this Euangeliſt of oures, ſtandeth principallye vppon this one poynte, that Pilate enquired diligentlye whether CHRISTE were broughte before the iudgement ſeat iuſtlye or vniuſtly. There coulde nothinge bee done in preſence of the people wythoute great a doe: therefore hee went into the the iudgement hall: and truely his intent is to acquite Christ: but Christ himselfe offereth himselfe to be condemned, that hee maye obey his father. And this is the cause that hee maketh so litle aunswere, seeing that he had both a fauourable iudge, and one that woulde haue giuen eare vnto him willingly, it was no harde matter for him to pleade his owne cause: but he remembreth to what end he came into the world, and whither he is now called of his father: therfore he holdeth his peace willingly, that he may not escape death.

Art thou the king of the Iewes? Pilat would neuer haue moued the question concerning the kingdome, vnlesse the Iewes had burdened Christ with this crime. And Pilate taketh that which was of all other most odious, to the end that hauing ended, that hee maye acquite the partie accused. The aunswere which Christe maketh, tendeth to this ende, that there is no colour in that accusation. So that it containeth a refutation made by the way: as if hee should say, there is a crime laid to my charge ridiculously: whereof there cannot be the very least suspition in me. Pilate seemeth to haue taken it grieuously, that Christe had demaunded why he suspected him. Therefore hee vpbraydeth vnto him disdainfully, that what euill soeuer is, it commeth of his owne nation. I (saieth he) sit as a iudge, they be no straungers, but thine owne countreymenne, which accuse thee: therefore there is no cause why thou shouldest inwrappe me in your discorde: Ye might liue quietly for me and the Romanes: but yee your selues are vnto your selues a cause of trouble, part wherof I am enforced to suffer against my will.

36. My kingdome. He confesseth in these wordes that he is a king: yet he putteth away and purgeth the slanderous reporte, so muche as was sufficient to proue his innocencie. For he denieth that there is any disagreement betweene his kingdome and the politike order: as if he should say, I am falsely accused, as if I had assayed to trouble or alter somewhat in the publike estate, I haue preached concerning the kingdome of God: but that is spirituall. Therefore there is no cause why ye shoulde suspecte me for an vsurper, or one that desireth to attaine to a kingdome by ambition or vnlawfull meanes. Christe vsed this defence being arreigned before Pilate: but the same doctrine is profitable for all the godly, vntill the ende of the worlde. For if Christe his kingdome were earthlye, it should be vnstable and subiect to falling, because the fashion of this world passeth.

Nowe beecause it is called heauenly, he dooth also defend and auouch the perpetuitie and continuaunce thereof. So that if it so fall out, that the whole compasse of the earth be weakened, and subuerted, our consciences, shal cõtinue nenertheless stable, if so be it they take heede vnto christ his kingdome not onely amongst mouinges and shakinges, but also amidst horrible ruines and destructions. If we bee tyrannously vexed by the wicked, yet our saluation and safetie persisteth whole and sound vnto vs in the kingdome of Christ: which is not subiect to the wil of men. Finally, sithence þ the world rageth cõtinually with continuall stormes, the kingdome of Christ is separated thence, wherein we must seeke for quietnes and peace.

Furthermore, we are taught of what sorte the nature of this kingdome is. For if it didde make vs happy according to the flesshe, and did bring vs ritches, pleaſures, and whatſoeuer is to be wiſhed, for the vſes of this preſent life, it ſhould ſmel of the earth and the world: but now how miſerable ſoeuer our eſtate be to looke to, yet perfect felicitie remayneth ſafe for vs. VVe doe alſo learne heere, who thoſe be, which appertaine vnto this kingdome: namely, thoſe who being renewed by the ſpirite of God, doe meditate vppon the heauenlye life, in holyneſſe and righteouſneſſe. Although we muſt alſo note that it is not denied, but that the kingdome of Chriſt is in this worlde. For we know that it hath a place in our mindes, as Chriſt ſaieth alſo in another place, the kingdome of God is within you, Luke, 17.21. But to ſpeake properlye, the kingdome of God, which dwelleth in vs, is as it were a ſtranger in the world, becauſe the eſtate therof is altogeather vnlike.

My ſeruaunts would ſurely fight. He proueth that he had not ambitiouſlye aſpired vnto a kingdome, becauſe no man ſtirreth, no man taketh weapon in hande. For if any priuate man doe vſurpe vnto himſelfe a kingdome, it muſt needes be that he is ayded by ſeditious perſons. There appeareth no ſuch thing in Chriſte: therefore it followeth that hee is no earthly king. But heere may a queſtion be moued, whether it be lawfull to defend the kingdom of Chriſt with weapons or no. For, when as the Princes are commaunded to kiſſe the ſonne, Pſal. 2.11. they are not onely commaunded to ſubmit themſelues priuately vnto his gouernmente, but alſo that they employ al their power, which they haue to defend the Church, and maintaine godlines. Firſt of all I aunſwere, that they deale diſorderly and ignorauntly, who deduct this conſequence, that the pure worſhippe of God, and the doctrine of the Goſpell ought not to bee defended with weapons, becauſe Chriſt is not then defended in his owne perſon. For Chriſt doth onely reaſon according to this preſent fact, how friuolous that is, which the Iewes had ſlaunderouſly layd to his charge. And ſecondly, although godlye kinges doe defende Chriſtes kingdome with the ſword, yet this is done ſome other way then earthly kingdoms are woont to be defended. For as the kingdome of Chriſt is ſpirituall, ſo it muſt be grounded in doctrine and the power of the ſpirit. In like ſorte is the edifying thereof finiſhed. For neither the lawes and edicts of men, neither yet their penalties doe come vnto the conſciences: yet this letteth not, but that princes may defende the kingdome of Chriſt accidentally, partly, whileſt that they ordaine externall diſcipline, partly whileſt that they ayde the Church againſte the wicked. But it commeth to paſſe through the frowardneſſe of the worlde, that the kyngdome of Chriſt is rather eſtabliſhed by the bloud of Martyrres, then by the helpe and ayde of weapons.

37. Therfore Pilat ſaid vnto him, art thou then a king? Ieſus anſwered him, thou ſaieſt that I am a king. To this end was I borne, and to this end came I into the world, that I may beare witneſſe of the trueth, whoſoeuer is of the trueth, he heareth my voice.

38 Pilate ſaith vnto him, what is trueth? And when he had ſaid thus, he went out againe vnto the Iewes, and ſaid vnto them, I find no fault in him.

39. But ye haue a cuſtome, that I ſhould let one looſe vnto you at Eaſter: will yee then that I let loſe vnto you the king of the Iewes?

40. Therfore they cried al againe, ſaying, not him, but Barabbas, and Barabbas was a murtherer.

37. Thou ſaiſt that I am. Although Pilat vnderſtoode already by the former anſwer, that chriſt did chalēg to himſelf ſome kingdom, yet chriſt affirmeth this ſelf ſãe thing more plainly: & being not cõtẽt therwith, he addeth an other ſentẽce, which is as it were, a certain ſealing of that ſaying. Whẽce we gather that the doctrine of the kingdome of Chriſte is no common doctrine, ſeeing that he thought it worthie of ſo great aſſeueration or auouching. This is a general ſentence, I was borne for this cauſe, that I may beare witneſſe of the truth: yet it is eſpecially to be applyed vnto the circumſtance of this place. But the wordes ſignifie thus much, that this is a naturall thing for Chriſte to ſpeake the truth: and ſecondly, that he was ſent of the father to this end: and that therfore this is his proper office. Wherfore we neede not feare leaſt we bee deceiued in beleeuing him: foraſmuch as it is vnpoſſible for him to teach any thing but that which is true, who hath this office giuen him by God, and this deſire naturally bred in him, to defend the truth.

Whoſoeuer is of the truth. Chriſte addeth this, not ſo muche for this cauſe that he might exhort Pilate (which he knewe ſhould be in vaine) as alſo that hee might ſet his doctrine free from the vniuſt reproches whereunto it was ſubiect, as if he ſhoulde haue ſaid, this is laid to my charge as a crime, that I haue profeſſed my ſelfe to be a king: but this is an vndoubted truth, which all thoſe receiue reuerently, and without doubting, whoſoeuer are endowed with right iudgement and ſound vnderſtanding. Although he ſaith not that thoſe are of the truth which ſee the truth naturally, but only in aſmuch as they are gouerned by the ſpirite of God.

38 What is truth? Some doe thinke that Pilate enquireth curiouſly, as profane men are ſometimes wont greedily to deſire the knowledge of an vnknowen thing, not knowing in the meane ſeaſon why they deſire this: for this is their only intent and purpoſe to feede their eares. But I doe rather take it that he vttered in theſe words ſome lothſomneſſe. For Pilate thought that he had no ſmall iniurie done him, in that Chriſt depriueth him of all knowledge of the truth. Now we ſee in Pilate the common diſeaſe of all men. Although euery mans conſcience doth beare him witneſſe that he is ignorant, yet there are but a few that can abide to confeſſe it: whereby it commeth to paſſe that moſte men doe refuſe true doctrine. Afterward the Lorde, who is a teacher of the humble, doth puniſh the proude, as they haue deſerued by ſtriking them with blindneſſe. From the ſame pride ſpringeth that loathſomeneſſe, that they doe not vouchſafe to ſubmit themſelues to learne: becauſe all men doe challendge to themſelues readineſſe and quickneſſe of wit. The truth is thought to be a common thing: but on the other ſide God doth teſtifie that it far exceedeth the capacitie of mans minde. The ſame thing falleth out in other thinges likewiſe. The principall points of diuinitie are concerning the curſe of mankind, corrupt nature, mortification of the fleſhe, newneſſe of life, free reconciliation by that only ſacrifice, imputation of righteouſneſſe, whereby a ſinner is accepted before god, the illumination of the ſpirit. Becauſe theſe things are Paradoxes, the commõ ſenſe of men, doth contemptiblie refuſe them. Therfore there are but a few which profite rightly in Gods ſchoole, becauſe there is ſcarce one amongſt ten, that taketh any heed to the firſt rudiments and principles. And why ſo, ſaue only becauſe they meaſure the hidden wiſedome of God according to their owne ſenſe.

Is.

It appeareth hereby that Pilate ſpake ſcornefully, in ſ he goth out by & by. In ſumme, he is angrie with Chriſt, becauſe hee boaſteth that hee bringeth the truth to light which lay hid before. Yet this his indignation declareth that the wicked doe neuer ſo ſhouliſhly reiect the doctrine of the Goſpell, but that they are touched with ſome efficacie therof. For although Pilate went not ſo farre that he yeeldeth and ſubmitteth himſelfe to bee taught, yet is he enforced to feele ſome pricking inwardly.

39 But yee haue a cuſtome. Pilate did alwayes toſſe this in his minde how he might deliuer Chriſt from death: and ſeeing that the furie of the people was ſo great, he kept a meane way, whereby he might pacifie their mindes which were angrie, For he thought that this woulde bee ſufficient if Chriſt being let looſe as an euill doer, ſhould ſuffer reproch alwayes afterward. And therefore he choſeth Barabbas, that by comparing him with Chriſte hee may mittigate the hatred which they had conceiued againſt Chriſt. For this Barabbas was hated of all men for the crueltie of his offences. For what is more deteſtable then a murtherer? And Luke ſaith, that he was alſo guiltie of other crimes. In that the Iewes preferre him before Chriſt, it commeth to paſſe through the ſinguler prouidence of God. For it was not meete that the ſonne of God ſhould be deliuered from death with ſo ſhamefull a price. Neuertheleſſe he was caſt downe into extreame ignominie in his death, in that he was crucified betweene two theeues, when Barabbas was let looſe: becauſe he had taken the ſinnes and offences of all men vpon him, which could not otherwiſe bee purged. And the glory of his reſurrection which followed immediately, cauſed the death of it ſelfe to be a moſt valiant triumph.

Furthermore, there was a filthie and groſſe vice in that cuſtome, that the preſident of Rome did deliuer ſome one wicked perſon at Easter. This was doone to celebrate the holineſſe of the day, but in very deed it was nothing els but a filthie profaning of the ſame. For the ſcripture doth teſtifie that he is an abhomination before God which acquitteth the guiltie and wicked perſon. Therefore it is farre off that ſuch prepoſterous pardon ſhould pleaſe him. Therfore let vs learne by this example, that there is nothing more prepoſterous then to bee deſirous to worſhip God with our own inuentions. For ſo ſoone as men ſhall begin to followe their owne imaginations, they neuer make an end, vntill being fallen into the moſt extreame dotings, they doe manifeſtly mocke God. Therefore the lawe and rule of Gods worſhip muſt bee fet from his preſcript alone,

1 THen Pilate tooke Ieſus and ſcourged him.
2 And the ſouldiers platted a crowne of thorne, and put it vppon his head: and they put vppon him a purple garment,

3 And ſaid, haile king of the Iewes: and they ſmote him with their fiſts.

4. Therfore Pilat went out againe, and ſaid vnto them, behold I bring him forthe vnto you, that yee may know that I find no fault in him.

5. Therefore Ieſus went forth, bearing a crowne of thornes, and a purple garment. Then ſaid he vnto them, behold the man.

6. Therefore when the chiefe Prieſtes and officers ſaw him: they cried, ſaying, crucifie him, crucifie him.

7. Pilate ſaith vnto them, Take yee him, and crucifie him: for I finde no fault in him.

Pilat tooke Ieſus. Pilate perſiſteth in his purpoſe, yet he addeth another reproach to the former: becauſe he hopeth that the Iewes will bee content with this meane chaſtiſement, when Chriſt ſhall be ſcourged wyth whippes. And in that he laboureth ſo earneſtly, and profiteth nothinge, we muſt conſider therein the heauenly decree, whereby Chriſt was appoynted vnto death. Neuertheleſſe his innocencie is oftentimes defended & auouched by the teſtimony of the Iudg, to the end we may know that he which was free from all faulte himſelfe, is made guiltye in our ſteede, and that he ſuffereth the puniſhment, which is due to other mens ſinnes.

In Pylate we haue a notable example of a fearefull conſcience, he acquiteth Chriſt by his own mouth, and he cõfeſſeth that there is no fault in him: yet he puniſheth him as if he were guiltie: So thoſe menne muſte needes be carried hither and thither, and drawn into contrarye and diuerſe opinions, who haue not ſo much courage as to defende that with inflexible conſtancy, which is true and right. All of vs condemne Pylate: neuertheleſſe, it is a ſhame to ſay how many the worlde hath, whoe are like to Pilate, who do not only whip Chriſt in his members, but alſo in his doctrine. Many, to the end they may deliuer thoſe from death, which labour for the Goſpel, do cauſe them wickedly to denye Chriſt: what other thing is this, then to ſet Chriſte to be mocked that hee may lead an infamous life? Otherſome, whiles they gather a fewe thinges out of the Goſpell, which they can like of, doe pull in peeces al the whole Goſpell. They thinke there is ſome great acte done: if a few groſſe abuſes be amẽded: but it were better that doctrine ſhuld be buried for a ſeaſon, thẽ that it ſhuld be thus ſcourged. For it ſhal ſpring againe in deſpite of the deuil and al tirantes: but it is of al other the hardeſt matter to haue it reſtored to the puritie thereof, when it hath beene once corrupted.

2. The ſoldiours platting. Queſtionleſſe this was done at the commandement of Pylate, to the end hee might put the ſonne of God to rebuke and ſhame: becauſe he had made himſelfe a king: and that to fulfill the madneſſe of the Iewes: as if he had beene perſwaded, that they did lawfully accuſe Chriſt. Yet the wickednes and wantonnes of the ſoldiours dooth goe beyond the commaundement of the iudge: like as the wicked ſo ſoone as they haue any opportunitie offered them to doe euill, doe catch the ſame greedily.

The crueltie of this nation was woonderfull, whoſe mindes ſo dolefull a ſpectacle did not moue with pittie: but God is the gouernour of al this, that he may reconcile the worlde vnto himſelfe by the death of his ſonne.

4. Take

6 Take ye him. He would not deliuer Christ into their handes, neyther yet suffer them to doe vnto him what they thought best. He doth onely deny that he was their hangmanne: which appeareth by the reason that is added immediately: where he saith, that he findeth no fault in him: as if he should say, that he will neuer be perswaded to shed innocent bloud for their sakes.

VVhereas the Priestes and officers alone desire to haue him crucified, it appeareth thereby that there was not suche furye in the people, saue onely inasmuch as it was afterward enflamed with these fannes.

7. The Iewes answered him, we haue a law, and according to our law he ought to die: because he hath made himself the sonne of God.

8. Therfore when Pilat heard this word, he was the more afraid,

9. And he entred againe into the common hall, and said vnto Iesus, whence art thou? but Iesus gaue him no answere.

10 Then Pylat said, speakest thou not to me? knowest thou not that I haue power to crucifie thee, and power to loose thee?

11. Iesus answered, Thou shouldest haue no power against mee, vnlesse it were giuen thee from aboue. Therefore hee that hath deliuered mee vnto thee, hath the more sinne.

7. VVee haue a law. Their meaning is, that they persecute Christe by lawe, and not for their pleasure or hatred. For they perceiued that Pilate had touched them ouertwhartly. They spake as vnto a manne that was ignoraunt of the law: as if he should say, we are permitted to lyue after our owne manner and custome: but our relygion dooth not suffer anye man to vaunt and bragge, that he is the sonne of God. Furthermore, this accusation was not altogether without some cloake and colour: yet they erred greatly in the supposition. The generall doctrine was true, that it is not lawfull for men to take to themselues any parte of that honour, which is due to God, and that they are worthy of death, whosoeuer should take it to themselues, which is proper to God alone: but the cause of the errour was in the person of Christe, because they did not indeede consider, what titles the scripture giueth the Messias: because they might easily thereby gather, that he was the son of God: neither did they also vouchsafe to enquire whether Iesus were that Messias, which was promised of God in times past or no. Therfore we see howe they fet a false consequence from a true principle, because they mistake it. By which example we are taught diligently to distinguish betwene general doctrines and suppositions. For many vnskilful and light men, if they haue beene once deceiued with the colour of the trueth, they doe also reiect the very principles of the scripture, which liberty reigneth too much at this daye in the world.

Therefore lette vs remember that wee muste so beeware of deceites and fallacies, that the principles which are true, may remaine perfect, and that the credit of the scripture may not be impayred. Againe, wee maye easily refute the wicked by this meanes, which cloak euil causes with the testimonie of the scripture, and with the principles, whiche they take thence,

Like

Like as when the Papiſtes doe at this day highly extoll the authoritie of the Church, they bring nothing wherein all the children of God doe not agree together. They affirme that the Churche is the mother of the faithfull, that ſhee is the piller of truth, that ſhee is to bee heard, that ſhe is gouerned by the ſpirite of God. We muſt deme none of all theſe thinges: but when as they will pull to themſelues what authority ſoeuer is due to the Church they doe wickedly and with ſacrilegious boldnes to ſnatch that which is not their owne. For we muſt conſider vpon the queſtion, whether they deſerue the title of the Church or no. And heere they vttely fayle. In like ſort when they rage furiouſly againſt all the godly, they excuſe themſelues with this cloake and colour, that they are ordeined to defende the faith and peace of the Churche: but when as we looke throughly into the matter, wee ſee plainely that they meane nothing leſſe, then to defend true doctrine that they are touched with no care leſſe then with the care of peace and concord, but that they fight only to defend their owne tyrany. Thoſe me which are cõtent with generall principles, and marke not the circumſtances, do thinke that the Papiſtes haue good cauſe to withſtand vs: but the knowledge of the cauſe doth eaſily driue away thoſe ſmoakes wherewith they deceiue men.

8 Hee was the more afraide. There may be a double meaning gathered out of this place, the firſt is, that Pilate was afraid leaſt hee ſhoulde beare the blame if any tumult ſhuld haue riſen, becauſe he had not condemned Chriſte: the other, that his minde was touched with ſome religion ſo ſoone as he had heard the ſonne of God named. That whiche followeth in the text confirmeth this ſecond ſenſe, to wit, that he goeth againe into the common hall, and asketh Chriſt, whence hee is. For it appeareth thereby that he ſtood in doubt and was afraide: becauſe hee feared the puniſhment of ſacrilege if he ſhoulde lay hand on the ſonne of God.

We muſt note, that when hee asketh whence Chriſt is, hee requireth not of his countrie: but that this is as much as if he ſhoulde haue ſaide: Art thou a man borne in the earth, or ſome God? Therefore I expounde this place thus, that Pilate being ſmitten with the feare of the power and maieſtie of God, is brought into a quandarie. For he ſaw on the one ſide the tumult waxe whote, on the other ſide hee was faſt bounde with religion, leaſt he ſhould diſpleaſe God whileſt that he endeuoured to eſcape daunger. This example is chiefly to bee noted, Although Chriſt was ſo diſfigured and ill fauoured to beholde: yet ſo ſoone as Pilate doth once heare the name of God, he is afraide, leaſt he violate the diuine power in a man which was moſt baſe and contemptible. If the reuerence of God had ſuch force in a profane man, muſt not thoſe be thrice reprobates who iudge at this day merily, ieſtingly, & carelelly without any feare, of diuine matters? For certainely wee are taught by Pilate, that there is a feeling of religion naturally bredde in men, which doeth not ſuffer them to runne headlong boldly whyther ſoeuer they will, when they haue diuine matters in hand.

Therefore haue I ſaide that they are caſt into a reprobate ſenſe, who who are no more moued with the maieſtie of God when they handle the doctrine of the ſcripture: then if they did diſpute about the ſhadow of an Aſſe. Yet ſhall they at length perceiue to their deſtruction, howe reuerent the name of God is, which they mock at this day ſo contemptuouſly, yea ſo reprochfully. It is an horrible thing to vtter how proudly and cruelly the Papiſtes do condemne the plaine and euident truth of God, and how they ſhed innocent blood. VVhence I pray you commeth ſuch drunken dulneſſe, ſaue only becauſe they doe not remember that they haue any thing to doe with God.

9 But Ieſus gaue him no anſwere. In that Chriſt anſwereth not, it ought not to ſeeme to be any abſurd thing, if ſobeit we remember that whiche I ſaid before, that he ſtood not before Pilate to pleade his cauſe (as perſons arreigned are wont to doe, who are deſiroure to be acquitted) but rather to ſuffer iudgement. For it was meete that he ſhould be condémned, ſeeing that he had taken our perſon vpon him, This is the reaſon why he abſtained from defending himſelfe: And yet Chriſtes ſilence diſagreeth not with the ſaying of Paule. 1. Tim. 6. 13. VVhere hee ſaith, remember that Chriſt vnder Pontius Pilate witneſſed a good confeſſion. For he had defended the credite of the Goſpel ſo much as was ſufficient, neither was his death any thing els but a ſealing of ỳ doctrin which he had taught. Therefore Chriſt did not faile to make a lawefull confeſsion, but he held his peace when he was to craue that he might be acquitted. Moreouer, it was to bee feared leaſt Pilate ſhoulde acquit Ieſus as one of the feigned Gods: likeas Tiberius would haue reckoned him amongeſt the Romane Gods. Therefore Chriſte doth for good cauſes refuſe this fooliſh ſuperſtition by holding his peace.

10 Knoweſt thou not that I haue power? Heereby it appeareth that that feare wherewith Pilate was moued of a ſodaine did ſoone vaniſh away and that it had no liuely rootes. For hauing now forgotten his feare he breaketh out into proude and fierce contempt of God. For he threateneth Chriſt as if there were no iudge in heauen. But this muſt needes befall profane men alwayes, that ſhaking off all feare of God they doe by and by returne vnto their olde nature againe. VVhence we gather that the heart of man is not without cauſe called deceitfull, Iere. 17. 9. For although there bee ſome feare of God reſident there, yet there breaketh out alſo more vngodlyneſſe: Therefore whoſoeuer is not regenerate with the ſpirite of God, although he make ſome ſhewe that he reuerenceth and feareth his power and maieſtie for a ſeaſon, hee ſhall ſhortly declare by his contrarie deedes that this was but a feigned feare.

Nowe we ſee in Pilate an image of a proude man, whom his owne ambition maketh mad. For whileſt ỳ he will extoll his power, he depriueth himſelfe of the prayſe and fame of iuſtice. Hee confeſſeth that Chriſt is innocent: therefore he maketh himſelfe like to a murtherer whileſt that he braggeth that he hath power to put him to death. VVicked conſciences muſt needs rage after this ſort, where faith and the true knowledge of God doe not raigne, and diuers affections of the fleſh muſt needes ſtriue amongeſt themſelues there. God doeth notably auenge him ſelfe by this meanes of mans pride when they paſſe their boundes, that they may vſurpe to themſelues infinite power: condemning themſelues of their owne accorde of vnrighteouſnes,they ſlaunder and put themſelues to great rebuke. VVherefore no blindnes is comparable to the blindnes of pride,and it is no meruaile,ſeeing that it ſealeth the reuenging hand of God,againſt which it runneth headlong. VVherefore let vs remẽber that we muſt not raſhly triumph in vaine boaſtings, leaſt we be ridiculous: eſpecially let thoſe who are placed in high degree moderate themſelues:neither let them be aſhamed to ſubmit themſelues vnto God,and to be ſubiect to his lawes.

11. Thou ſhouldeſt haue no power. Some doe expound it generallye,that there is nothing done in the world without Gods permiſsiõ: as if chriſt ſhould ſay,that Pilate,who thinketh that he canne doe all thinges, ſhall notwithſtanding doe no more, then God will permit. This is a true opinion,that this world is gouerned by the will of God:and that howſoeuer the wicked goe about all thinges, yet can they not moue one finger without the moderation of the ſecrete power of God: but thoſe menne thinke better (in my iudgement) who reſtraine this place vnto the office of the magiſtrate. For Chriſt correcteth in theſe words the fooliſh arrogancie of Pilate,becauſe he extolleth himſelfe, as if his power were not of God:as if he ſhould haue ſaide: Thou takeſt all thinges to thy ſelfe,as if thou ſhouldeſt not once giue an account to GOD, but thou art not made a iudge without his prouidence:thinke therefore that his heauenly ſeate and throane is higher then thine. There can no fitter admonition be inuented to beate downe their outrage,who gouerne other men,leaſt they abuſe their authoritie. The father thinketh that he may doe to his children whatſoeuer he will,the husbande to the wife, the maiſter to the ſeruauntes,the prince to the people: vntill they haue reſpecte vnto God, who would haue them gouerned with a certeine law.

Therefore hee that hath deliuered. They thinke that the Iewes are made guiltie of a greater fault thẽ Pilate:becauſe they rage againſt a iuſt man with wicked hatred and vnfaithfull wickednes,and that they being but priuate men,and thoſe which haue no lawfull gouernment. But I thinke otherwiſe,that their crime is made more grieuous, and leſſe excuſable by this circumſtaunce:becauſe they enforce the gouernment ordained by God to ſerue for their pleaſure. For it is great ſacriledge to abuſe the holy ordinaunce of God vnto all manner of wickednes. That murther is iuſtly to be deteſted, who ſleaeth the miſerable traueller with his owne hand:but he that putteth the innocent to death vnder colour of iudgement,he is more wicked. But he dooth not amplifie their fault, that hee may mittigate Pilates:neither doth he compare him with them, but hee doth rather make them all guiltie of one crime,becauſe they doe al pollute the holy power. There is this difference onelye, that hee hitteth the Iewes directly:but he toucheth Pilate by the way, becauſe he is obedient vnto their wil and pleaſure.

12. After that,Pilate ſought to looſe him. But the Iewes cried, ſaying:if thou let this man looſe,thou art not Cæſars friend,whoſoeuer maketh himſelf a king, he ſpeaketh againſt Cæſar.

13. Therefore,when Pilate heard this woorde,hee brought Ieſus forth, and ſate downe in the iudgement ſeate,in a place which is called the pauement, and in Hebrewe Gabbatha.

14. And it was the preparation of the Paſſeouer about the ſixt houre: and he ſaid vnto the Iewes, behold your king.

15 But they cryed, awaye with him, away with him, crucifie him. Pilate ſaieth vnto them, ſhall I crucifie your kinge? The Prieſtes aunſwered, wee haue no kinge but Cæſar.

16 Then deliuered he him vnto them, that he might be crucified. And they tooke Ieſus, and lead him away.

12 Pilate demaunded of him. Although Pilate dooth not behaue himſelfe couragiouſly, and is ruled rather with ambition, then with deſire of iuſtice, and therefore wauereth miſerably: yet his modeſtie is to be commẽded, in that being ſharpely reprehended by Chriſte, hee is not angry: yea he is more enclined to deliuer him. He is a iudge, and yet he ſuffereth the partie arreigned to be his iudge. There ſhal ſcarſe one be found amongſt an hundreth, that can ſo paciently ſuffer himſelf to be rated and chidden by his equal.

Thou art not Cæſars friend. They wreſt out of Pilate by threatninges, to haue him to condemne Chriſte, for they coulde obiecte vnto hym no more odious thing, neither coulde they make him more afraide by anye meanes, then when they cauſe him to bee ſuſpected of vnfaithfull dealing with Cæſar. Thou (ſaye they) declareſt that thou careſt not for Cæſars Empire and gouernment, if thou looſe him who hath endeuoured to trouble all things. This wickednes did at length diſcourage Pilate, who was onely ſhaken before with violent cryings. And it is not wythout good cauſe that the Euangeliſt procedeth ſo diligently in theſe circumſtances: becauſe it is very conuenient for vs to know that Chriſt was not condemned by Pilate before he was thriſe or foure times acquited by his mouth: that we may thereby gather that he was not condemned for his owne cauſe, but for our ſinnes. VVe may alſo gather thence howe willing hee was to ſuffer death, who did not paſſe for vſinge that prone affection of the iudge towarde him. And truely thys obedience cauſed his death to be a ſacrifice of a ſweete ſauour to purge all ſinnes.

13. Hee ſate downe in the iudgement ſeate. Heere we ſee howe diuerſly Pilate was drawen, as if one ſtage player ſhould play two partes. Hee aſcendeth into the iudgement ſeate, that hee may adiudge Chriſte to bee puniſhed after a ſolemne manner. Neuertheleſſe, hee ſheweth manifeſtly that hee doeth this againſt his will and conſcience. He calleth Chriſte a king tauntingly, ſignifying that that was but a friuolous ſlaunder wherwith the Iewes burdened him, or to the ende he may ſtay their furie, hee telleth them that this would tourne to the reproche of all the whole nation, if this rumour ſhall be ſpred abrode, that they had condemned any man for deſiring the kingdome ambitiouſly. VVhen as the Euangeliſt ſaieth, that the place was called in Hebrewe Gabbatha, hee meaneth the Chaldean or the Aſſyrian tongue, which was then commonly vſed. Therefore it was meete that Chriſt ſhould haue beene condemned out of an high place, that he himſelfe being the higheſt iudge, maye acquite vs when he commeth from heauen at the laſt day.

14. About the ſixt houre. The Euangeliſtes ſeeme to be diuerſe, and not to agree in noting the time. The other three ſay, that it was darke from the ſixt houre, when as Chriſt did hang vppon the Croſſe. Marke dooth also plainely expresse that it was the third houre, when iudgement was giuen vpon him. Yet we may easily aunswere. It appeareth sufficiently by other places, that the day was then deuided into foure partes: as the night had also foure watches. Hereby it came to passe that the Euangelistes doe sometimes assigne vnto euery day onely foure houres, and doe extend euery houre into three: in the meane season they adioyne the space of one houre, which draweth toward the ende, vnto the nexte. According to this account Iohn saith that Christ was condemned about the sixt houre: because the time of the day drewe towarde the sixt houre or the second part of the day. Hence do we gather, that Christ was crucified at the sixt houre, or thereabout: for the place was nigh to the Citie, as he wil declare shortly after. Betweene the sixt houre and the ninth beganne the darkenesse, which continued vntill the ninth, when Christe died.

15. VVe haue no king. In this place horrible fury sheweth it selfe, in that the Priestes, who ought to haue beene exercised in the lawe, doe reiecte the Messias, in whome the whole saluation of the people was included, vpon whom al the promises did depend, in whom al religion was groũded. Certeinly, they dispoile themselues of the grace of God, and of all good thinges, by reiecting Christ. Therefore we see with what great madnes they were taken. Let vs feigne that Christ was not Christ: yet haue they no excuse, because they acknowledge no king saue Cæsar. For first of all, they fall away from the spirituall kingdome of God. Secondly, they preferre the tiranny of the Romaine Empire, which they didde moste of all deteste, before a iust gouernment, which God had promised. So the wicked, to the end they may flye from Christ, doe not onelye depriue themselues of eternal life, but do bring vpon themselues al manner of miseries: and on the contrary, it is the onely felicitie of the godlye to be vnder Christ his kingdome, whether they be subiect to a iust & lawfull gouernment, according to the flesh, or they be oppressed of tyrants.

16. He deliuered him vnto them. Their importunitie enforced Pilate to deliuer Christ: and this was not done as in a tumult, but he was solemnly condemned: because there were two theeues condemned to be crucified with him, when their cause was knowne. But Iohn vseth this word to the end he may the better proue that Christ was giuen vnto the crueltie of the people, which could not be pacified, who was conuicted and found guilty of no offence.

17. And bearing his Crosse hee went out into the place whiche is called of a Skull, and in Hebrue Golgotha,

18. VVhere they crucified him, and two other with him, the one on the one side, and the other on the other, and Iesus in the midde.

19. And Pilate wrote also a Title, and putte it vpon the Crosse, and the writinge was IESVS OF NAZARETH KINGE OF THE IEVVES.

20. Therfore many of the Iewes reade this Title: because the place was nigh to the Citie, where Iesus was crucified. And it was written in Hebrue, Greeke and Latin.

21. Therefore the Priestes of the Iewes saide vnto Pilate, write not Kinge of the Iewes: but that he saide, I am Kinge of the Iewes.

22. Pilate answered, That which I haue written I haue written.

17. Hee went out into a place. The circumſtaunces whiche are noted in this place, are of great force, not onely for the certaintie of the hyſtorie, but alſo to edifie our faith. VVee muſt ſeeke righteouſneſſe in the ſatiſfaction made by Chriſte. Therefore, to the ende he might prooue that he was a ſatisfaction and ſacrifice for our ſinnes, he woulde both be caried out of the citie, and alſo hanged vppon the tree. For the ſacrifices, whoſe bloude was ſhedde for ſinnes, were woonte to be caried without the tentes, accordinge to the commaundement of the lawe, Exodus 29. 14. Leuiticus 4. 11. and the ſame law pronounceth him accurſſed, whoſoeuer han geth vppon the tree, Deuteronomie 21. 23. Both things were fulfilled in Chriſte, ſo that we may be fully aſſured, that our ſinnes are purged by the ſacrifice of his death: that hee was ſubiecte to the curſſe, that he might redeeme vs from the curſſe of the lawe, Galathians 3. 13. that he was made ſinne, that wee maye be in him the righteouſneſſe of God, 2. Corrinthians 5. 21. that he was brought without the Citie, that he might take away our filthineſſe which was laid vpon him, Hebrewes 13. 12. To the ſame ende tendeth that whiche followeth concerninge the theeues. For as if the crueltie of the puniſhment were not ſufficient of it ſelfe, he is hanged betwene two theeues, as if he were not ſome one of the number of other menne, but of all other the moſt wicked and deteſtable. For we muſt alwayes remember that the wicked hangmenne which crucified Chriſte, did nothing but that which was decreed by the hand and councell of God. For God did not lay open his ſonne to their will and pleaſure: but he would haue him offered vppe like a ſacrifice to himſelfe, according to his owne wil and minde. And if ſo be it the counſell of God wanted not good reaſon in al thoſe things, which he would haue his ſonne ſuffer, we muſt well ponder both the greatnes and grieuouſnes of his wrath conceiued againſt ſinne, and alſo the infinite greatnes of his goodnes toward vs. The guiltines of vs all could by no other meanes be purged, vnleſſe the ſonne of God ſhoulde be made a ſacrifice for vs.

VVee ſee how he was driuen into an execrable place, being polluted as it were with an huge heape of ſinnes, that hee may appeare accurſed there before God and menne. VVee are too dull certeinely, vnleſſe we ſee clearely in this glaſſe, how greatly GOD abhorreth ſinnes: and wee are more then ſtonie, vnleſſe we tremble and quake at ſuch a iudgement of his. And whileſt that on the other ſide GOD dooth teſtifie that our ſaluation was ſo deare vnto himſelfe, that hee ſpared not his onely begotten ſonne, what aboundaunt greatneſſe of his goodneſſe and grace doe we ſee there? Therefore whoſoeuer ſhall well weigh the cauſe of Chriſtes death, togeather with the fruite which wee reape thereby; the doctrine of the croſſe ſhal not be vnto them either fooliſhnes, as to the Gretians, or a ſtone of ſtumbling, as to the Iewes, 1. Cor. 1. 23. but rather an vneſtimable token and pledge both of Gods power & wiſdom, & righteouſnes and goodnes. VVhen Iohn ſaith that the place was called Golgotha, he taketh it either from the Chaldean or els from the Aſſyrian tong. The name is deriued of Galgal, that is, of rowling: beecauſe the ſcull is round like a ball or bowle.

19. And he wrote a title. The Euangeliſt maketh mention of a facte of Pilate, worthye to bee ſpoken of, after that hee hadde giuen ſentence.

It

It was peraduenture an vſuall thing to ſet vppe titles when euill doers were punniſhed, that the cauſe of their punniſhment might be knowen, for an example vnto all men: but this is an extraordinarie thinge in Chriſte, that the title is ſet ouer his head without reproche. For it was Pilates intent, to the ende hee might bee auenged of the Iewes by the way, who with their frowardneſſe had cauſed him vniuſtly to puniſh an innocent man, to condemne the whole nation in the perſon of Chriſte. Hee is ſo farre from defaming Chriſt for any fault of his owne. But the prouidence of God had reſpecte vnto a farre higher thing, which directed Pilate his ſtile. It came not into Pilates minde to praiſe Chriſt, as the authour of ſaluation, and a Nazaren of God, and the king of the elect people: yet God did indite this praiſe of the Goſpell vnto him, not knowing what he ſhoulde wryte. By the ſame ſecreate motion of the ſpirite came it to paſſe, that he ſhoulde publiſh the title in three languages. For it is not to be thought that this was a common vſe: but the Lorde declared by this preparatiue that the time was now at hand, when his ſonnes name ſhould be knowen euery where.

21. Therefore the prieſtes ſayde vnto Pilate. They perceiue that they were ſpitefully touched: and therefore they deſired to haue the title changed, that it might onely burden Chriſt, without defaming the nation. But in the meane ſeaſon they doe not diſſemble, with how great hatred of the truthe they were infected, ſeeing they cannot abide the leaſt title therof. Sathan doeth alwayes ſo pricke forwarde his miniſters, that they maye endeuour either to extinguiſh, or at leaſt with their darkneſſe to choake the light of God, ſo ſoone as it appeareth but a little. The conſtancie of Pilate is to be attributed to Gods prouidence. For it is to be doubted, but that they aſſayed and tempted his minde diuerſe wayes. Therefore wee may know that it was holden by God, that it might remaine conſtant. Pilate yeelded not vnto the praiers of the prieſtes, neither didde he ſuffer himſelf to be corrupted by them: but God did teſtifie by his mouth, how ſtable his ſonnes kingdome is. But and if there was greater ſtrength and firmneſſe of the kingdome of Chriſt ſhewed in Pilates writing, thē that it could be ſhaken with the endeuours of the enemies, what muſte wee thinke of the teſtimonies of the prophetes, whoſe handes and mouthes God hath ſanctified to himſelfe? And alſo Pilate his example putteth vs in minde of our duetie, that we be conſtant in defending the truethe. The prophane manne dooth not call backe that which he wrote truely concerning Chriſt, though vnadui ſedly: therefore what a ſhame is it, if wee being terrified either with threatninges or daungers, we depart from the profeſsion of that doctrine, which God hath ſealed in our heartes by his ſpirit?

Furthermore, we muſt note how deteſtable the papiſticall tiranny is, which drieueth away the common people from reading the Goſpell and all the whole ſcriptures. Pilat being a reprobate, and otherwiſe an inſtrument of Satan, was yet by ſecrete inſpiration appoynted to bee a preacher of the Goſpell, that he might publiſh a briefe ſumme thereof in three lāguages. Therfore what account ought we to make of thoſe men, who ſtudy ſo much as in them lyeth to ſuppreſſe the knowledge thereof, whē they proue themſelues to be worſe thē Pilat.

23. Therefore when the ſoldiours had crucified Chriſt, they tooke his garments, and made foure partes, (to euery ſoldiour a part) and his coate. The coate was without ſeame, wouen from the toppe throughout.

24. Therefore they ſaid amongeſt themſelues, let vs not cut it, but let vs caſt lots for it, whoſe ſhal haue it: that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, ſaying: they parted my garmentes to themſelues, and on my coate did they caſte lottes. And theſe thinges diddle the ſouldiours.

23. Therefore the ſoldiours. There is mention made likewiſe in the other Euangeliſtes of the deuiding of Chriſtes garmentes amongſte the ſoldiours. There were foure ſoldiours, which parted the reſidue of his raiment amongſt them. The coate which was without ſeame remained, which ſithence it could not be deuided, they did caſt lots vpon the ſame. To the end the Euangeliſtes may retaine our mindes in conſidering the intent and purpoſe of God, they teach that the ſcripture was alſo fulfilled seuen in this poynte. Notwithſtandinge it ſeemeth that the place which they bring out of the Pſa. 22. 19. is applied vnto this preſent matter out of ſeaſon. For ſeeing that Dauid complaineth in that place, that he was a pray vnto his enemies, he comprehendeth metaphorically vnder the word Garmentes, all that he had: as if hee ſhoulde briefly ſay that he was ſpoyled & robbed by the wicked, which figure whileſt the Euangeliſts doe neglect, they depart from the naturall ſenſe. But we muſt firſt of all vnderſtand, that the Pſalme muſt not be reſtrained vnto Dauid, as it appeareth by many ſentences, and eſpecially by that clauſe, where it is ſaide. I will praiſe thy name amongſt the Gentiles: which muſte needes be expounded of Chriſt. And now it is no merualle, if that were more darkly ſhadowed in Dauid, which appeareth more plainely in Chriſt: to witte, how much more excellent the trueth ought to be, then the figure therof. Furthermore, let vs know that Chriſt was ſtript out of his clothes, that he might cloath vs with his righteouſnes: that his naked bodye was laid open to the reproches of men, that we may appeare with glory before Gods iudgement ſeate. Whereas ſome do wreſt this place allegorically vnto the ſcripture, which the heretiks pull in peeces, it is too much racked. I doe not miſlike the compariſon: that like as the prophane ſouldiours did once deuide Chriſt his garments, ſo at this day peruerſe men doe pull in peeces with ſtraunge inuentions the ſcripture, wherewith Chriſt is cloathed, that we may ſee him. But wee muſt in no caſe ſuffer the wickednes of the Papiſts, which is ioyned with the horrible blaſphemye of God. They ſay that the Heretikes doe pull the ſcripture in peeces: but the coate, that is, the Church remaineth whole and ſound: to the end they may proue (reiecting the autoritie of the ſcripture) that the vnitie of ſ faith conſiſteth in the only title of the Church. As if thevnitie of the Church were grounded any where els, ſaue onely in the faith of the ſcripture. Therefore when as they pull faith from the ſcripture, that it may be ſubiect to the Church alone, they do not now diſpoile Chriſt by ſuch a diuorcement, but they pull in peeces his body by cruell ſacriledge. Although we graunt vnto them, that the coat which was without ſeame was a ſigne & figure of the Church, yet ſhal they not obteine that, which they hunt after: becauſe it ſhall remaine that they proue that the Church is with them, whereof they ſhew no token at all.

25. And 25 And there stoode beside the crosse of Iesus, his mother, and his mothers sister, Mary the daughter of Cleopas, and Mary Magdalen.

26 Therfore when Iesus had seene his mother, and the disciple standing by whome he loued, he said vnto his mother, woman, behold thy sonne.

27 Then said he to the disciple, behold thy mother. And from that houre, the disciple tooke her home vnto him.

25. And there stoode. The Euangelist telleth here by the way that Christ did so obey God the father, that he did not neglect the duetie of humane godlynes toward his mother. Hee forgate himselfe and all thinges, so farre forth as it was necessary for him to obey his father: but when hee had done thus, he would not omit the dutie which he did owe vnto his mother. And hereby we learne how we must obey God and men. It falleth oftentimes that when God calleth vs any whither, our parents, wife, or children, do call vs vnto the contrary: so that we cannot satisfie them altogether. If we make men equall with God, we deale wickedlye. Therefore we must preferre Gods commaundement, wee must preferre his honour and worshipp: afterward we must giue men their right so far forth as it shalbe lawfull for vs. Neither doe the commaundementes of the firste and seconde Table of the lawe euer disagree, as it appeareth at the firste sighte: but wee muste beeginne with Gods woorshyppe, afterwarde wee muste giue menne the lower place. To whiche ende these sentences tende: he that shall not hate father and mother for me, he is not woorthy of me, Math. 10. 37. Luke 14. 26. Therefore we must so obey men, that they doe not hinder vs and keepe vs backe from woorshipping and obeying God. When we haue obeyed GOD, then shall we thinke rightly and orderly vppon our parents, wife, and children. As Christe taketh care for his mother, but being vppon the crosse, whereunto he was called by the decree of his father. But if wee weighe the circumstaunce of the place and time, the godlinesse whiche Christe shewed towardes his mother, was woonderful. I omit the extreeme tormentes of his body, I omitte his rebukes: but althoughe horrible blasphemies against God did make him woonderfull sorrowfull, and hee dyd suffer an horrible conflicte with eternall death and the deuill, yet none of all these things doeth hinder him from being carefull for his mother. We may likewise gather out of this place what honour that is whiche God commaundeth vs to giue to our parentes in the lawe. When as Christe committeth the charge of his mother to the disciple, hee deliuereth her vnto him to be nourished and cared for. Therefore it followeth that honour due to parents, consisteth not in the ceremonie, but in all necessary dueties. Nowe we must on the other side consider the faith of the women. This was no small affection of loue, that they followed Christe euen vnto the crosse: but vnlesse they had beene furnished with faith, they coulde neuer haue beene present at suche a spectacle. As touching Iohn himselfe, we gather that his faith was so choked for a shorte time, that yet notwithstanding it was not altogither choked. Now lette vs be ashamed if the horrour of the crosse doe keepe vs backe from following Christ, seeing that the glory of the resurrection is beefore our eies wheras the women saw nothing but ignomony and a curse.

He calleth her Mary, either ỹ wife or daughter of Cleopas. I like this latter better. He saieth that she was sister to the mother of Iesus, according to the Hebrew phrase, which conteineth all kinsfolkes vnder the worde Brethré. VVe see that Mary Magdalen was not in vaine deliuered from the seauen deuils, which shewed her self such a faithful disciple of Christ euen vntil the end.

26. VVoman, behold thy sonne. As if he should say, I cannot hereafter be conuersant vppon earth, that I maye doe to thee the duetie of a Sonne. Therefore I put this man in my place, that he may take vpon him mine office. Hee meaneth the selfe same thing, when he saieth vnto Iohn, Behold thy mother. For hee commaundeth him to take her for his mother, and that he should be as carefull for her, as for his owne mother. In that he saith, woman, and not mother, some thinke that he did it for this cause, leaste he should wound her minde more deepely with sorrow, which I do not reiect.

But an other cõiecture is no lesse probable, that Christ meant to shew that so soone as he had finished the course of his humane life, hee put off that condition, vnder which hee had liued, and that hee entreth into the heauenly kingdome, where hee may commaund men and Aungels. For wee knowe that Christe was alwayes woont to call backe the faithfull from beholding the flesh: and he ought especially to haue doone this in his death.

27. The disciple tooke her. It is a signe of the obedience of the disciple toward his maister, in that Iohn obeieth Christes commaundement. It doth also appeare heereby that the Apostles had their families: beecause Iohn could not lodge Christes mother, neither haue her in house with him, vnlesse he had had an house and some trade and manner of liuing. VVherefore they dote, which thinke that the Apostles came naked and emptie vnto Christ, hauing left their substance. And they dote too too foolishly, who thinke that perfection consisteth in begging.

28 After this, when Iesus knew that al things were fulfilled, that the scripture might be fulfilled, he saieth, I am a thirst.

29. Furthermore, there stoode there a vessel full of vineger. And they compassed a spong, being ful of vineger with Isope, and they put it to his mouth.

30. Therfore when Iesus had taken the vineger, he said, it is finished. And bowing his head, he gaue vp the Ghost.

28. VVhen Iesus knewe. Iohn omitteth many thinges purposely, which the other three sette down: he describeth now the last acte, wherin there was a great weight. VVhen as hee saieth, that there stoode a vessel there, he speaketh as of an vsuall thing: and I thinke that it was a kind of potion made to hasten death, when as miserable men hadde beene tormẽted longe enough. Christe dooth not call for drinke, vntill all thinges were fulfilled, whereby he declared his infinite loue toward vs, and his vnestimable desire of our saluation. It cannot bee sufficiently in woordes expressed, what bitter paines he suffered: yet did he not desire to deliuer himselfe vntill Gods iudgement was satisfied, and the purginge of our sinnes was perfect.

But how ſaith he, that all thinges were fulfilled, ſeeing that the principall point was as yet wanting, to wit, death it ſelfe? And againe, doeth not his reſurrection make to the fulfilling of our ſaluatiō? I anſwer that Iohn doth comprehended thoſe thinges which ſhould follow immediately. Chriſt was not as yet dead, he was not yet riſen againe: but he ſawe nothing which coulde hinder him from dying and riſing againe. And ſo hee inſtructeth vs by his example vnto perfect obedience: that it may not be greeuous or troubleſome to vs to liue at his pleaſure, although wee muſte languiſhe in the middeſt of great ſorrowes and paines.

That the ſcripture might be fulfilled. VVe may eaſily gather out of the other Euangeliſtes, that the place is cited out of Pſal. 69. 22, They gaue me gall to eate, and in my thirſt they gaue me vineger to drinke. This ſpeech is metaphorical wherby Dauid ſignifieth that they did not only deny to helpe him at his neede, but alſo that his miſeries were cruelly doubled. But there is no abſurditie in this, if that were more plainely reuealed in Chriſt, which was ſleightly ſhadowed in Dauid. For we do hereby plainely ſee what difference there is betweene the truth and the figures, whenas thoſe thinges appeare plainely, and as it were perfectly in Chriſt, which Dauid ſuffered only figuratiuely. Therefore to the end Chriſt might declare that it was he whoſe perſon Dauid did repreſent, he would drinke vineger, and that for the confirmation of our faith. They which forge an allegoricall ſenſe in this word thirſt, deſire rather to ſhew ſome ſubtiltie then truly to edifie. And the Euangeliſt doth plainely refute thoſe, who ſaith that Chriſt called for vineger, ſeeing that he made haſt to die, VVhen as he ſaith that the ſpounge was compaſſed about with Iſop, vnderſtand that it was faſtened vpon a bat that it might be put to Chriſtes mouth.

30 It is finiſhed. Hee repeateth the ſame woorde whiche hee vſed of late. But this ſaying of Chriſt is eſpecially to be remembred: becauſe he teacheth that the whole accompliſhing of our ſaluation and all the partes thereof are contained in his death. VVe haue alreadie ſaide that the reſurrection is not ſeparated from his death: it is only Chriſte his intent to retaine our faith in himſelfe alone, leaſt it wander and turne hyther and thyther. Therefore this is the ſenſe, that whatſoeuer maketh vnto the ſaluation of men, it conſiſteth in Chriſt, and is no where els to be ſought: or that (which is all one) that the perfection of ſaluation is included in him. And there is comprehended vnder this a ſecrete oppoſition: becauſe Chriſte ſetteth his death againſt all the olde ſacrifices and figures, as if he ſhould ſay, whatſoeuer was vſed vnder the law, it was nothing worth of it ſelfe, to pacifie Gods wrath, to purchaſe righteouſneſſe or purge ſinnes.

Now at length there is true ſaluation giuen to the worlde: vnto this doctrine is annexed the abrogation of all the rites of the lawe. For it were an vnmeete thing to follow the ſhadowes ſithence that wee haue the body of Chriſte. And if ſobeit we ſtay our ſelues vpon this voyce of Chriſt, we muſt be contented with his death alone vnto ſaluation, neyther is it lawful for vs to ſet any helpes frō any other. But ꝑ whole religion of Papiſtrie tendeth to this ende that men may inuent to thēſelues innumerable meanes to purchaſe ſaluation. VVhence we gather that it ouerouerfloweth with abominable ſacrileges. The abhomination of the Maſſe is principally condemned by this voyce of Chriſt. It was meete that the ſacrifices of the law ſhould ceaſe, when as the ſaluation of men was finiſhed by the onely ſacrifice of the death of Chriſt. therefore what authoritie will the Papiſtes ſay they had to erect a new ſacrifice, whiche might reconcile God vnto men? They obiect that it is no new ſacrifice, but that ſelfe ſame which Chriſt offered. But we may eaſily refute them, that they haue no commandement to offer: and ſecondly, that when Chriſt had ended one oblation, he pronounceth from off the croſſe, that the whole is finiſhed. Therefore they are more then forgers and falſifiers, which corrupt and violate traiterouſly the Teſtament ſealed with the holy blood of the ſonne God.

He gaue vp the ghoſt. All the Euangeliſtes doe diligently expreſſe the death of Chriſt: and that not without cauſe. For we haue hope of life hence: hence haue we alſo ſafe boaſting againſt death, in that the ſonne of God ſuffered the ſame in our ſteed, and by ſtriuing with the ſame did get the victorie. And we muſt note the phraſe which Iohn vſeth: wherby we are taught, that all the godly which die with Chriſt do commit their ſoules to God to keepe, who is faithfull and will not ſuffer that to periſh which he hath taken to keepe. There is this difference betweene the death of the children of God and the reprobate, that the wicked do raſhly breath out their ſoules: but the children of God doe committe them to Gods tuition as ſome precious thing, which he will keep faithfully vntill the day of the reſurrection. This woorde Ghoſte is taken in this place for the immortall ſoule as it appeareth ſufficiently.

31 The Iewes then (becauſe it was the preparation, that the bodyes ſheulde not remaine vpon the croſſe on the Sabboth day, and it was a great day of that Sabboth) beſought Pilate that their legges might be broken, and that they might be taken down.

32 Therefore the ſouldiers came, and they brake the legs of the firſt and of the other which was crucified with him.

33 And when they came vnto Ieſus, after that they ſaw that he was alredie dead, they brake not his legs.

34 But one of the ſouldiers opened his ſide with a ſpeare, and ſtraightway there came out blood and water.

35 And he that ſaw it bare witneſſe, and his witneſſe is true, and he knoweth that he ſpeaketh the truth that ye may beleeue.

36 And theſe thinges were done, that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, yee ſhall not breake a bone of him.

37 And againe another ſcripture ſaith, they ſhall ſee him whome they haue thruſte through.

31 Becauſe it was the preparation. This narration is alſo of force to edifie faith. Firſt, becauſe it ſheweth that that was fulfilled in Chriſtes perſon which was foretolde in the ſcriptures: and ſecondly, becauſe it conteineth a miſterie of great importance. The Euangeliſt ſaith, that the Iewes requeſted to haue the bodies taken downe from the croſſe. That was commaunded in the lawe of God: but the Iewes (as hypocrites are wont to doe) taking heede only to ſmall thinges, paſſe ouer

moſt great and horrible ſinnes without any ſtop or ſtay. For to the ende they may keepe their Sabboth religiouſly, they are carefull for the externall pollution onely: in the meane while they doe not conſider what an haynous offence it was to put an innocent to death. So we ſaw a little before that they entred not into the common hall, leaſt they ſhould pollute thēſelues, whereas their vngodlines did pollute the whole countrie. Neuertheleſſe the Lord bringeth that to paſſe by them, which was very profitable for our ſaluation, that the body of Chriſte remaineth marueilouſly vntouched, and that blood and water doe ſpring out of his ſide.

It was a great day of that Sabboth. The more common reading is: That day was a great day: yet this whiche I haue put in, is vſed in many olde and allowed copies: Let the Readers chooſe which they will. If you reade it ἐκείνου in the Genetiue caſe, you muſt take the Sabboth for the week it ſelf, as if the Euangeliſt had ſaid, that the holy day of that week was moſt famous in reſpect of the paſſeouer. And the Euangeliſt ſpeaketh of the next day, which began at the Sunne ſetting: wherfore it was a greater matter of conſcience to let the bodies hang. But if we had rather reade it in the nominatiue caſe, that was a great day, the ſenſe ſhall come all to one ende, as touching the ſumme of the matter: the variety ſhalbe onely in the wordes, to wit, that the Eaſter made that Sabboth more holy.

33 And when they were come vnto Ieſus. In that hauing broken the legs of the two theeues they finde Ieſus dead, and therefore they touched not his body, there appeareth an extraordinarie worke of Gods prouidence therein. Some profane mē will ſay that it commeth to paſſe naturally þ one man dyeth ſooner then another: but he that ſhal weigh the whole courſe of the hiſtorie, he ſhalbe enforced to aſcribe it vnto the hidden counſell of God, that death which came ſooner then all men wold haue thought, did exempt Chriſte from hauing his legs broke.

34 But one of the ſouldiers with a ſpeare. In that his ſide was thruſte through with a ſpeare, it was done to proue his death: but God reſpected a farre higher thing, as we ſhall ſee by and by. That is but a childiſh ſurmiſe and inuention of the Papiſtes, who make this ſouldier that had the ſpeare Longes, feigning that it was the proper name of a man: and to the end they might make vp the lye they ſay that the ſouldier was blinde before, and that ſo ſoone as he had receiued his ſight he beleeued: therefore they did canonize him amongeſt the ſaints. Seeing that their prayers doe leane vnto ſuch patrones, ſo often as they call vppon God, I pray you what can they euer obteine? But whoſoeuer they be which deſpice Chriſte and ſeeke ſuccour at the handes of Saintes, they are worthie to bee carryed away by the Diuel vnto night ſpirites and hobgoblins.

There came out blood and water. Some men were deceiued in feigning a myracle here. For it is a naturall thing: for when blood is congealed it is made like vnto water hauing loſt his readneſſe. It is alſo a thing well knowen that there is water within a thinne skin which is nigh to the midriffe. And they were deceiued becauſe the Euangeliſt vrgeth this ſo diligently that there came out water & blood, as if hee did ſhewe ſome ſtrange thing and ſomething which is contrary to the order of nature.

But

But he intended another thing, to wit, that he might applie his narration to the teſtimonyes of ſcripture, which he addeth by and by: & chiefly that the faithfull might thence gather that which he teacheth els where, to wit, that Chriſt came with water and blood: by which woordes he ſignifieth, that he brought him the true purgation of ſinnes, and the true waſhing. For the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and righteouſneſſe and purity of the ſoule were figured in the law by theſe two ſignes, ſacrifices and waſhings. In ſacrifices blood did purge ſinnes, and was the price to pacifie Gods wrath withall: waſhings were teſtimonies of true puritie, and remedies to purge vncleanneſſe and to waſh away the filthineſſe of the fleſh. Leaſt faith ſhould abide any longer in theſe elements, Iohn teſtifieth in the fifth chapter of his Epiſtle, that the fulfilling of both theſe graces is in Chriſte: and heere he bringeth foorth a viſible ſigne of that thing. To the ſame end ſerue the ſacraments which Chriſte hath left vnto his Church. For the purging & puritie of the ſoule which conſiſteth in newneſſe of life, is ſhewed vnto vs in baptiſme: and the ſupper is as a pledge of the purging which is finiſhed. But they differ much from the figures of the old lawe: becauſe they offer Chriſt as being preſent, whom the figures of the lawe did ſhew to be farre off as yet. Wherefore I doe not miſlike that which Auguſtine writeth, that our ſacramẽts ſlowed out of Chriſtes ſide: for we are then waſhed from our filthines indeed, and we are renued into an holie life, then doe wee liue before God being redeemed from death, and deliuered from giltineſſe, when as Baptiſme and the holie Supper doe bring vs vnto Chriſtes ſide, that wee may draw thence by faith as out of a fountaine, that which they repreſent.

36 Yee ſhall not breake a bone. This teſtimonie is fet out of the twelfth of Exodus. 46. and Num. 9. 12. where Moſes intreateth of the paſchall lambe. And Iohn taketh that for a thing which all men do graunt, that that lambe is a ſigne of that true and onely ſacrifice, whereby the church was to be redeemed. Neither doth that any whit hinder that it was offered in the remembrance of the redemption which was alreadie paſt. For God woulde haue that benefite ſo remembred, that it might promiſe the ſpirituall deliuerance of the Church in time to come. Wherefore 1. Cor. 5. 7. Paule doth alſo applie vnto Chriſt without doubting that forme of eating the lambe which Moſes preſcribeth. And by this proportion and ſimilitude doth our faith gather no ſmall fruite: becauſe it beholdeth in the ceremonies of ỹ law, the ſaluatiõ exhibited in Chriſt. And to this end tendeth Iohn his drift, ỹ Chriſt was not only the true pledge, but alſo the price of our redemption: becauſe wee ſee that fulfilled in him which was ſhewed in times paſt to the olde people vnder the figure of the paſſeouer. Wherby the Iewes are alſo taught that they muſt ſeeke the ſubſtance of all thinges in Chriſt, which the lawe prefigured but performed not in deed.

37 They ſhall ſee him whom they haue thruſt through. They wreſte this place too violently, who goe about to expound it of Chriſt according to the letter. Neither doth the Euangeliſt cite it to this ende: but rather that he may ſhewe that Chriſte is that God who complained in times paſt by Zacharie. 12. 10. that the Iewes did thruſt through his breſt.

And

And God ſpeaketh in that place after the maner of men, ſignifying that hee is wounded with the wickedneſſe of the people, and eſpecially wyth the obſtinate contempt of his woorde, as it is a deadly wounde in man whoſe heart is thruſte throughe. As he ſayeth in another place, that his ſpirite is heauy, Mat. 26. 38. Now, becauſe Chriſt is God, reuealed in the fleſh, Iohn ſayeth that that was fulfilled openly in his viſible fleſh, which his diuine maieſtie ſuffered of the Iewes, in ſuch ſort as it coulde ſuffer. Not that God is ſubiect to the iniuries of men, or that the external blaſphemies and reproches vttered againſt him, doe come vnto him: but becauſe he meant to expreſſe of howe great ſacriledge the vngodlineſſe of men is guiltie, whileſt that it lifteth vppe it ſelfe vnto heauen ſtubbernly. And Iohn doeth for good cauſes aſcribe that vnto the Iewes, which was done by the hande of a ſouldiour of Rome: like as they are ſayd in an other place to haue crucified the ſonne of GOD, although they touched not his body with one finger. Nowe the queſtion is, whether God promiſeth repentance vnto the Iewes vnto ſaluation, or he threatneth that he will come as a reuenger? VVhileſt that I weigh the place diligently, I thinke that it comprehendeth both: to witte, that God ſhall at lengthe gather vnto ſaluation the reliques of the loſt and deſperate nation. and he ſhall ſhew vnto the contēners by his horrible vengeance, with whom they had to deale. For we knowe that they were woont no leſſe boldlye to mocke the Prophets, then if they had babbled without any commandement of God. God ſayeth that they ſhall not eſcape vnpunyſhed for this: becauſe he will at length defend his owne cauſe.

38. And after theſe things Ioſeph of Aramathia (who was Ieſus his diſciple, but ſecreatly for feare of the Iewes) beſought Pilate that he might take downe the body of Ieſus, and Pilate ſuffered him. Therefore he came and tooke downe the body of Ieſus.

39. And Nicodemus came alſo (who came vnto Ieſus firſt by night) bringing a mixture of Myrrhe and Aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

40. Therefore they tooke the body of Ieſus, and they wound it in linnen clothes wyth the odours, as the maner of the Iewes is to burie.

41. And there was in the place where he was crucified, a garden: and in the garden a newe tombe, wherein was neuer man laied.

42. There then layed they Ieſus, becauſe of the preparation of the Iewes, for the ſepulchre was nigh at hande.

38. Ioſeph beſought Pilate. Iohn ſetteth downe now by whom, in what place, howe honourably Chriſt was buried. Iohn nameth two, whiche buried Chriſt, Ioſeph and Nichodemus: the former whereof deſired Pilate to giue him the body of the dead, which ſhould otherwiſe haue ben left to the pleaſure of the ſouldiours. Mathewe affirmeth that he was riche, and Luke ſayeth that he was a counſellour, that is of the order of the Senatours. And we ſawe that Nichodemus was had in great reputation amongeſt his: and we may alſo eaſily gather that he was riche, by the great coſt which hee beſtowed in bringing the mixture. Therefore their richeſſe hindered them hitherto from giuing their name to Chriſt, and they might no leſſe haue hindered them hereafter from takinge vppon them ſo odious and infamous a profeſsion. The Euangeliſt ſayeth expreſſly, that Ioſeph was kept backe by feare, from profeſsinge that he hee was a diſciple of Chriſte. But hee repeateth that concerninge Nichodemus, whych wee hadde before, that hee came vnto Ieſus ſecreatlye and by nighte. Therefore whence hadde they ſuche Heroicall fortitude of a ſodaine, that they come abroade in extreeme diſpaire? I omitte the manifeſt daunger which they muſt of neceſsitie haue incurred. But thys is a great matter, that they were not afrayed to take vppon them continuall warre wyth their nation.

Therefore it is certaine that it came to paſſe throughe the heauenlye motion, that they who gaue not due honour vnto Chriſte ſo longe as hee liued, doe runne vnto his carcaſſe being dead. They brynge their odours to enbalme Chriſtes bodye: but they woulde neuer haue done this, vnleſſe they hadde fealt the ſauour of his death. VVhereby it appeareth howe truely Chriſte ſayde: That onleſſe a wheat corne die, it remaineth alone, but afte- that it is deade it bringeth foorth frute aboundantly, before 12.24. for wee haue a moſte manifeſt teſtimonie in thys place, that his death was more liuely then his life. And the ſweeteneſſe of the ſmell whyche the death of Chriſte breathed oute into the mindes of theſe two menne, was of ſo great force, that it did eaſilye extinguiſhe all the affections of the fleſhe. So longe as the loue of richeſſe and ambition raigned in them, the grace of Chriſte was vnto them vnſauerie: but nowe all the whole worlde beginneth to be vnto them vnſauerie. But lette vs knowe that there is preſcribed vnto vs in the example of them, what wee owe vnto Chriſte. Theſe two, to the ende they might ſhewe ſome token of their faith, caried the body of Chriſte conſtantly, thoughe not without great daunger, vnto the graue. Therefore it is ſhamefull and filthye ſluggiſhneſſe, if wee defraude him of the confeſsion of faith, when as hee raigneth in the heauenly glorye. VVherefore their vngodlineſſe is ſo muche the more vnexcuſable, who ſeeinge they doe at this daye denye Chriſte with faithleſſe diſſimulation, doe yet notwythſtanding pretende the example of Nicodemus. And I confeſſe they are like him in one poynte, they endeuour by all meanes poſſible to haue Chriſte buried: but nowe it was no time to burye hym, ſithens that hee is aſcended vnto the right hande of the father, that hee maye bee aboue menne and Aungels, and that euery tongue maye confeſſe his high gouernment, Philippians 2.9.10.11.

Secreatlye for feare of the Iewes. Becauſe feare is in this place ſet againſt the holye conſtancie whyche the ſpirite of the Lorde wroughte in the heart of Ioſephe, it is likelye that hee was not voyde of all vice: Not that all feare whereby the faithfull take heede to themſelues, and auoyde tyrauntes and the ennemies of the Goſpell, is corrupte and vitious: but becauſe the weakeneſſe of faith bewrayeth it ſelfe ſo often, as the confeſsion of faith is ſuppreſſed by feare. VVee muſt alway marke what the Lorde commaundeth vs to doe, and howe farre hee biddeth vs goe.

Hee that ſtayeth in the midſt of the courſe, ſheweth that he beleeueth not in God, and hee hath no excuſe, who ſetteth more by his owne life, then by the commandement of God. In that the Euangeliſt vouchſafeth to beſtow vpon Ioſeph, the title & name of a diſciple, at ſuch time as he was too fearfull, and durſt not profeſſe his faith before the worlde: we know by this howe gently the Lorde dealeth with thoſe that be his, and how fatherly he pardoneth their faultes. Neither is there any cauſe why the falſe Nicodemites ſhould flatter themſelues who doe not only hide faith within, but whileſt that they feigne a conſent with wicked ſuperſtitions, ſo much as in them lyeth they deny that they were Chriſtes diſciples.

40 As the Iewes are wont. After that Chriſt had ſuffered extreame ignominie vpon the croſſe, God woulde haue his buriall to be honourable that it might be an entrance into the glory of the reſurrection. Ioſeph and Nicodemus beſtow no ſmall coſt, ſo that it might ſeeme to bee ſuperfluous: but we muſt looke vnto the purpoſe of God, who did alſo enforce them by his ſpirite to doe his ſonne this honour, that he might take from vs the horrour of the croſſe with the ſmell of the ſepulchre. But thoſe things which are extraordinarie ought not to be taken for an example.

And againe, the Euangeliſt ſaith plainely that hee was buried after the manner of the Iewes by which woordes hee ſignifieth that this was one of the ceremonies of the lawe. For it was requiſite that the olde people, vnto whom the reſurrection was not ſo well made knowen and which had no token and pledge thereof in Chriſt, ſhould bee vnderpropt with ſuch helps, ſ they might loke for the cõming of ſ mediatour with a conſtant faith. Wherefore we muſt note the difference that is betweene vs vnto whom the brightneſſe of the Goſpell hath ſhined, and the fathers vnto whome figures did ſupplie Chriſte his abſence. This is the reaſon why greater pompe of rites was tollerable then, whiche ſhoulde not be without fault at this day. For thoſe whiche bury the dead ſo ſumptuouſly at this day, doe not onely bury dead men, but alſo Chriſt himſelfe (ſo much as in them lyeth) who is the king of life, hauing pulled him out of heauen: becauſe his reſurrection hath abrogated theſe old ceremonies. There was alſo great care and religion amongeſt the Gentiles in burying, which tooke his beginning of the fathers, as ſacrifices. But ſeeing they had no hope of the reſurrection, they were not followers of the fathers but their Apes. For the promiſe & the word of God, is as it were the ſoule which quickeneth the ceremonies: ſo ſoone as the woorde is taken away, what rites ſoeuer men do vſe, although they agree in externall ſhew with the obſeruing of holy thinges: yet they are nothing els but rotten and fooliſh ſuperſtition. But wee muſt (as I haue ſaide before) at this day vſe ſobrietie and ſparing in this point: becauſe immoderate coſt doth take away the ſmell of Chriſt his reſurrection.

41 And there was in the place. This is the thirde point which I ſaide was to be noted in the hiſtorie of the buriall. The Euangeliſt expreſſeth the place for many cauſes: firſt of all, it came to paſſe not raſhly, or without the certaine prouidence of God that the body of Chriſt was laide in a newe ſepulchre. For although he died the death which all other men die, yet becauſe he ſhould be the firſt begotten of the dead, and the firſt fruites of thoſe which ryſe againe from the dead, he had a newe ſepulchre giuen him. Ioſeph and Nicodemus had another thing in their heads.

For becauſe it was but a ſhorte time to the ſettyng of the Sunne, (which which was the beginning of ỹ Sabboth) they ſought the cõmodiouſnes of the place. In the meane while God did choſe contrary to their mind, a ſepulchree wherein neuer man had laid, for his ſonne. Therefore the holy men doe like the nighneſſe of the place onely for this cauſe, that the Sabboth might not be broken. But God offereth vnto thẽ that thing which they ſought not, that hee might diſcerne and diſtinguiſh the buriall of his ſonne from the common order by ſome token. The circumſtance of the place did alſo ſerue to this end, that the reſurrection might be more famous: and that it might giue no ſmall light to the hiſtorie which followeth in the next Chapter.

Chap. 20.

1 AND the firſt day of the Sabbothes, came Mary Magdalene earely in the morning, whenas it was yet darke, vnto the ſepulchre, and ſawe the ſtone taken away from the ſepulchre.

2 Then shee runneth and commeth to Simon Peter, and vnto the other diſciple, whõ Ieſus loued, and ſaith vnto them, They haue taken the Lorde out of the ſepulchre, and we know not where they haue laide him.

3 Therefore Peter and the other Diſciple went forth and came to the ſepulchre.

4 And they two ranne together, but the other diſciple out ran Peter, and came firſt to the ſepulchre.

5 And when he ſtouped downe, he ſaw the linnen cloathes lying, yet hee entred not in.

6 Then Simon Peter came following him, & entred in into the ſepulchre, and ſaw the linnen cloathes lying.

7 And the kerchiffe that was vpon his head not lying with the linnen cloathes, but wrapped together by it ſelfe in a place.

8 Then entred in the other diſciple alſo, which came firſt vnto the ſepulchre, and ſaw, and beleeued.

9 For they knew not the Scripture as yet, that hee muſt ryſe againe from the dead.

1 And the firſt day of the Sabboth. Becauſe Chriſt his reſurrection is the principall point of our faith and without which there is no hope of eternall life. Therefore the Euangeliſtes doe ſtand the longer about the prouing of the ſame: like as this Euangeliſt of ours gathereth many teſtimonies, wherby we may be fully certified that Chriſt is riſen from the dead. Yet it may ſeeme an abſurde thing that hee bringeth foorth no more ſubſtanciall witneſſes. For he beginneth with a woman: but by this meanes was that fulfilled, 1. Cor. 1, 27. That God choſeth that which is weake in the worlde, that he may confound the wiſdome, and power, and glory of the fleſh. There was no more earthly dignitie in the diſciples, then in the woman which followed Chriſte: but becauſe it pleaſed Chriſt to haue them to be the firſt witneſſes of his reſurrection, they are authenticall and of ſufficient authoritie, and without all exception. There was nothing els that letted the Prieſtes and Scribes and all the people and Pilate, to know certainely that Chriſt was riſen againe, but groſſe and voluntarie blindeneſſe. Therefore they were all woorthy in ſeeinge not to ſee: Neuertheleſſe, Chriſte reuealed hymſelfe to a ſmall company. But before we goe any farther, it is good to ſhewe how the Euangeliſtes agree togither, in whoſe woordes there appeareth ſome diſagreement at the firſt ſight.

Iohn nameth Magdalene alone, Mathewe two, Marke three, Luke ſetteth downe no certaine number: but ſayeth onely that the women which followed Chriſte from Galilee came. But wee maye eaſily looſe this knotte thus, that like as Mathewe putteth the names of two women, whiche were better knowen and more famous amongeſt the diſciples, ſo Iohn is contented with the name of Magdalene alone: Neuertheleſſe hee excludeth not the other: yea, wee may eaſily gather out of his woordes, that ſhee was not alone. For Marye ſayeth ſhortly after in the plurall number, wee knowe not where they haue layed hym. Therefore, althoughe Iohn make no mention of her fellowes, yet hee telleth nothinge that is contrary to the other, who ſay that there were more. VVe may eaſily aunſweare concerninge the varietie of the time.

VVhen Iohn ſayeth that ſhee came before it was day, vnderſtande that they tooke their iourney when it was yet darke, and before they came to the Sepulchre, it was light day. And at nighte, after the Sunne was ſette, when as the Sabboth was ended, they hadde bought the odours. And hither oughte the narration to bee referred. Otherwiſe there ſeemeth to be ſome ſhewe of contrarietie, in that Iohn ſayeth that Marye ſpake vnto him and Peter onelye: but Luke ſayeth that ſhee came vnto the eleuen Apoſtles, and that her ſpeache ſeemed vnto them a fained thing. But wee may eaſily aunſweare, becauſe Iohn did omitte his other companions of ſette purpoſe: for he and Peter came vnto the Sepulchre onely. In that Luke maketh mention of Peter alone, it is like to that which we ſpake of late, concerning Marye Magdalene and the other women. Furthermore, it is to be thought, that the other nine diſciples were kepte backe with feare, leaſt if they had come abroade in companies, they had beene ſeene too openly. Neither doeth that any whitte hinder, whyche Luke ſeemeth to graunt, that the other did deſpiſe the wordes of Mary, becauſe hee addeth immediately after, that Peter ranne. VVherefore hee meaneth ſimplie, that they were as it were aſtonied at the firſt hearing: but at length when they were come to themſelues againe, Peter followed her, that he might ſee.

And whereas Luke ſayeth that Chriſte appeared vnto Marye before ſhee hadde tolde the Diſciples that the ſepulchre was emptie, the courſe of the narration is tourned backewarde, whyche appeareth plainely by the texte. For hee addeth that, which Iohn teſtifieth came to paſſe before ſhee ſawe Ieſus. Neither is there any abſurditie in this, ſeeinge that it is a common thing amongeſt the Hebritians to ſette downe that firſt, which is later, in order of time.

The firſt day of the Sabaothe. The Euangeliſtes doe not ſhewe when and after what ſort Chriſte did riſe againe, becauſe it was ſufficient for them to expounde, when and to whom his reſurrection was made knowen. Therefore he ſayeth that Mary came the firſt day of the Sabaothe. It is woorde for woorde (one) but it is a common thing amongeſt the Hebritians, to put one in ſteade of firſt: becauſe numbers begin with one.

And for as muche as euery ſeuenth day was ordained to reſt in: they called all the whole weeke the Sabaoth: giuing this honour to the holineſſe of the daye, that they called the reſt of the time by that name. Therefore the women came vnto the ſepulchre on the morrowe after the Sabaoth, for as much as they had bought odours the ſame day, (yet after the Sun was ſette): and ſecondly, ſeeing that they were gone out of the Citie, when as it was yet darke (as it falleth out in fearful matters.) It was the firſt day of the Sabaoths in reſpecte of the next Sabaoth: becauſe it was the beginning of the weeke, the ende whereof the Sabaoth was.

Therefore Simon Peter went foorth. It is a marueile, that ſeeinge there was ſuche a weake, and almoſt no faith, as well in the diſciples as in the woman, there was ſo great zeale in them. And ſurely it cannot be, but that godlines enforced them to ſeke Chriſt. Therfore there remayned ſome ſeed of faith in their harts, but yet it was choked for a time, ſo that they knewe not that they had that which they hadde. So the ſpirite of God doth oftentimes worke in the elect after an hidden manner. In ſumme, we muſt holde that there was ſome hidden roote, from whiche we ſee fruit proceede. And although this feeling of godlineſſe which they had, was confuſed and intangled in muche ſuperſtition, yet doe I giue it the name of faith vnproperly, becauſe it was conceiued only of the doctrine of the Goſpel, and tended to no other end, ſaue only vnto Chriſt. Out of this ſeede came at length true and ſincere faith, which hauing lefte the ſepulchre, did aſcend vnto the heauenly glory of Chriſte. When as the Scripture ſpeaketh of the rudiments, and firſt of faith: it ſayeth that Chriſte is engendered in vs, and we againe in him. But the diſciples are to bee accounted more then infants almoſt, whileſt that they are ignoraunt of Chriſte his reſurrection. Yet the Lorde nouriſheth them as vnborne children in the wombe. They were before like children, and they were gone a little forward: but the death of Chriſt brought vpon them ſuch weakeneſſe, that they were to be begotten and faſhioned againe, as Paule ſpeaketh of the Galathians, fourth chapter, and ninthe verſe. In that Peter who made leſſe haſte, goeth firſt into the ſepulchre, lette vs learne that there is more giuen vnto many in the hinder ende, then appeareth in the forefront or beginning. And vndoubtedly we ſee many, who were very feruent and hotte in the beginning, faint and faile when they are come to the conflict: and others which were thought to be ſluggiſh, to take to themſelues freſh courages.

5. Hee ſawe the linnen cloathes lying. The linnen cloathes, were as it were things putte off, to make the reſurrection of Chriſte more credible. For it was not to be thought that his body was ſtripped, that it might be caried vnto ſome other place. Neither friende nor foe woulde haue done this. Whereas he ſayeth that his head was wrapped in a kerchiefe, thereby is refuted the vanitie of the Papiſtes, who faine that the whole body was ſewed vppe in one ſheete, whiche they cauſe the miſerable common people to woorſhippe. I omitte their ignorance in the Latine tongue, whereby it came to paſſe, that they called the cloath which couered the whole bodye, a napkin wherewith menne wipe ſweat from their faces. I omit their impudencie, that they boaſt that they haue the ſame hande kerchiefe in fiue or ſixe diuers places.

But this so grosse a lie is vntollerable, which is quite contrary to the historie of the Gospell. Heereunto is added that feigned myracle, whiche they feigned of the image & picture of Christs body painted vpon the linnen cloath. I pray you if there had beene any such myracle wrought woulde the Euangelist haue passed ouer the same without making any mention therof, who reckoneth vp thinges which were of lesse importance so diligently? Therefore let that simplicitie be sufficient for vs, that Christe hauing cast away the tokens of death, meant to testifie that hee put vpon him the blessed and immortall life.

8 Hee saw and beleeued. That is a colde exposition, which some men bring, that Iohn beleeued that which he had heard of Mary, to wit, that the body of Christ was taken away. For you shall neuer find the word beleeue in this sense, especially whereas it is put simplie and without any thing added vnto it. Neither is that any let that Peter and Iohn returne home againe doubting: for Iohn vsed this speech in some places before when he would note the going forward of faith.

And nowe Luke saith, 24.12. that Peter marueiled when hee sawe the sepulchre lye in such sort. VVhereby he signifieth that there came some greater and higher matter into his mind, then that whiche Marie had told him. They had oftentimes heard that of Christs mouth, which they sawe then with their eyes: but they had forgotten this: but beeing now admonished with the beholding of some new thing, they begin to think diuinely of Christ: although they be yet far from the pure and euident knowledge of faith. Therefore Iohn accuseth himselfe whylest that hee confesseth that this was vnto hym the beginning of beleeuing, when as hee sawe the signes of the resurrection of Christ.

Moreouer, hee amplifieth his owne and his brethrens fault: in that they had not onely forgotten Christe his wordes, but they knewe not the scriptures. For he ascribeth the want of faith vnto this ignorance, whence we may also gather a profitable admonition, that it is to be imputed vnto our owne sluggishnesse when wee know not those thinges, which we shoulde haue knowen concerning Christe: because we haue not profited so much in the Scriptures as became vs, whiche reueale the power of Christe to the full. That we may not fet an example any farther, the resurrection of Christe is shewed there obscurely, and darkely: but there are many feste testimonies extant to attentiue Readers.

Paule proueth, Act. 13.34. that Christe ought to haue risen agayne, because God saith by Iesaias 55.3. that the mercy promised to Dauid shall be stable vnder his kingdome. Some vnskilfull man would thinke, that that is nothing appertinent vnto the matter, which Paule bringeth: but whosoeuer doe holde the principles of faith, and are rightly exercised in the Scripture, doe easily knowe howe fitlie he reasoneth. For to the ende Christe may continually establishe vnto vs the grace of God, hee must needes liue continually. There bee many such like places, whiche I need not to gather nowe. Therefore let vs be content with three, Psalm. 16.10. we reade, thou shalt not suffer thine holy one to see corruption.

Peter and Paule expounde this prophesie of Christe: and that for good cauſes, ſithence there is no one of the children of Adam whiche is not ſubiect to corruption of himſelfe. Therefore Chriſte his immortalitie is auouched there. And it is not to bee doubted but that that ſentence doth belong vnto Chriſt: The Lorde ſaid vnto my Lord, ſitte at my right hande vntill I make thy foes thy foote ſtoole. Pſalm. 110.1. And death ſhall not be deſtroyed vntill the laſt day. Therefore the kingdome is giuen vnto Chriſte vntill the ende of the worlde, which cannot ſtand withou this life. And Ieſaias ſpeaketh the plaineſt of all other 53.8. VVho after that he hath fortolde the death of Chriſt, addeth immediately after, that this age ſhall be vndeclarable. In ſumme we muſt hold that the doctrine of the ſcripture is ſo full and perfect in all pointes, that whatſoeuer is wanting in our faith ought iuſtly to be accounted the ignorance thereof.

10 Therefore the Diſciples went againe vnto their owne home.

11 But Mary ſtood without weeping at the ſepulchre, furthermore, when ſhee wepte ſhe bowed her ſelfe downe into the ſepulchre.

12 And ſhee ſaw two angels ſitting in white garments, one at the head and another at the feete, where the body of Ieſus was laide.

13 And they ſay vnto her, woman, why weepeſt thou? Shee ſaith vnto them, becauſe they haue taken away my Lord, and I know not where they haue laid him.

14 VVhen ſhe had ſaide thus, ſhe turned backe and ſaw Ieſus ſtanding, and ſhe knew not that it was Ieſus.

15 Ieſus ſaith vnto her, woman, why weepeſt thou? whom ſeekeſt thou? ſhe thinking that it was the gardiner, ſaith vnto him, Sir, if thou haſt taken him away, tell mee where thou haſt laid him, and I will take him away.

10 Therfore they went. VVe may thinke that they went home as yet with doubting mindes. For although Iohn ſaith that hee beleeued yet that was no firme faith, but a confuſed feeling and perceiuing of the myracle, like to a dampe or traunce, vntill they were better confirmed. And truly ſounde faith could not be conceiued by beholding only. Moreouer, Chriſt did not reueale himſelfe vnto them, vntill they were better awaked out of their carnall dulneſſe. They ſhewed a laudable token of their zeale in making haſt vnto the ſepulchre: yet Chriſte was hidden from them, becauſe they ſought him too ſuperſtitiouſly.

11 And Mary ſtoode. The Euangeliſt beginneth now to ſhew how Chriſt appeared both to the women and alſo to the Diſciples, to make knowen his reſurruction. And although there be but one Mary mentioned in this place, yet it ſeemeth to me a thing like to bee true that the other women were with her alſo. For whereas ſome thinke that they were ſlid away for feare, it ſtãdeth not with reaſon. They wil flie & eſchewe contrarietie, which is none, as I ſaid before. Now whereas the women ſtay ſtill at the ſepulchre after that the Diſciples were returned into the citie, they are not greatly to bee prayſed more then the other. For the Diſciples carry with themſelues conſolation & ioy: but the women occupie themſelues in ſuperfluous and vaine weeping. Finally, only ſuperſtition togeather with carnall affection maketh them ſtay at the ſepulchre.

12 She ſaw two angels. This is wonderfull mercy of the Lord, who forgiueth gueth Mary and her fellowes ſo many aſſaultes: for he doth vouchſafe them no ſmall honour, in ſending his Angels, and in manifeſting himſelfe at length: which the Diſciples had not. And although the Apoſtles and women were ſick both of one diſeaſe, yet their dulneſſe was leſſe excuſeable who hauing been ſo well and throughly taught, had profited ſo little. Certainely Chriſt did chooſe the women vnto whom he would reueale himſelfe firſt, not without the Apoſtles ſhame. Furthermore, it is vncertaine whether Mary knewe the Angelles, or ſhee thought they were men. We know that white garments were a ſigne of the heauenly glory: So Chriſte had on white cloathing, when his maieſtie did appeare vnto the three Diſciples in the mountaine. Math. 17.7. Luke ſheweth the ſame thing of the Angell that appeared to Cornelius. Act. 10.30. Neyther do I denie but that the men of the Eaſt countrie did vſe linnen garments. But God ſhewed ſome ſinguler and vnwonted thing in the apparrell of the Angels, and gaue them markes whereby they might be diſcerned from men. Moreouer, Matthewe 28.3. compareth the countenaunce of the Angell vnto lightning, which ſpake vnto the women. Yet it may be that he made them afraide onely by reaſon of the admiration: for it appeareth that they ſtood ſtill being aſtonied. But ſo often as we reade that Angels haue appeared in the viſible ſhape of men, and hauing on cloathes, this was graunted vnto the rudeneſſe of men. Yea, I doe not doubt but that they had very bodies indeede ſometimes. But becauſe it were ſuperfluous to enquire whether theſe two angels had onely ſhapes of bodies or no, I will leaue it indifferent. It is ſufficient for mee that they had mans ſhape giuen thē of the Lorde, that the women might ſee and heare them: and that they had on glorious and ſtraunge apparrell, whiche diſtinguiſhing them from the order of men, did ſhewe ſome diuine and heauenlye thing.

One at the head and another at the feete. VVhereas Matthew maketh mētion but of one Angell, it differeth not from Iohn his narration. For they ſpake not both together to Marie, but the one of them vnto whom the embaſſage was committed. Auguſtine his Allegorie is not firme enough, that that placing of the Angels did ſhew that the goſpel ſhuld be preached from the riſing of the Sunne vnto the going downe thereof. This is therefore to bee noted that Chriſt began the glory of his kingdome with ſuch maieſtie. For in that the Angels do honor his ſepulchre, the ignominie of the Creſſe is not only thereby aboliſhed, but the heauenly maieſtie of Chriſt doth ſhine and appeare.

13 VVoman why weepeſt thou? VVee may eaſily gather out of the other Euangeliſtes, that the Angell ſpake more then thus: but Iohn gathereth the ſumme briefly, becauſe this was ſufficient to teſtifie and declare that Chriſt was riſen. This ſentence is mixed with a chiding and a comfort. The Angell chideth Mary for her vnportunate weeping, yet he doth therewithall mixe ioy, whileſt that hee ſaith that ſhee had no cauſe to weepe, becauſe Chriſte is riſen.

14 Shee ſaw Ieſus ſtanding. A queſtion may bee moued heere, how this thing came to paſſe that Mary knoweth not Ieſus, whom ſhe ought to haue knowen moſt familiarly. Some doe thinke that hee appeared in a ſtraunge fourme. But I doe thinke that the faulte was rather in the womans eyes: as it is in Luke concerning the two Disciples. 24. 16. Therefore we will not say that Christe did chaunge himselfe into diuers shapes like Proteus. But that it is in the will of GOD, who gaue eyes vnto men, to blinde and dull the sight thereof, (so often as hee will) that in seeing they may not see: yea we haue in Marie a common patterne of the errours of mans minde. For although Christe came into our sight, yet wee feigne that he hath diuers shapes, so that our sense and vnderstanding conceiueth euery thing sooner then true Christe. For seeing that the light of our minde is of it selfe deceitfull, it is also bewitched by Satan and the worlde, least it discerne any true thing.

15 Syr if thou hast taken him away. Shee calleth him Syr, according to the common custome of her nation. For the Hebrewes salute husbandmen and other of base estate by this name, Syr. And we see that Mary smelleth as yet of nothing but of that which is earthly. Shee desireth onely to haue Christe his body that shee may keepe it buried: but she omitteth the chiefest thing, to aspire vnto the diuine power of his resurrection: wherefore it is no maruell if such a grosse affection do bring a veile ouer her eyes.

16 Iesus saith vnto her, Mary. Shee turned back and saith vnto him, Rabboni, which is to say, Master.

17 Iesus saith vnto her, touch me not: for I am not yet ascended vnto my father: but go vnto my brethren and tell them, I ascend vnto my father, and your father, and my God & your God.

18 Mary Magdalene came and tolde his Disciples, that shee had seene the Lord, & that he had spoken these thinges vnto her.

16 Mary. In that Christ suffered Mary to erre for a short time, it was profitable for vs vnto the certaintie of faith: and now hee reclaymeth her from her errour with one worde. Hee had spoken vnto her before: but that was as it were the speech of an vnknowen man: hauing nowe taken to himselfe the person of a master, hee calleth his Disciple by name: as we had before, in the tenth Chapter, and nienth verse, that a good sheepehearde calleth vnto himself e all the sheepe of his flocke by name. Therefore this voyce of the Pastour entreth into the minde of Marie, it openeth her eyes, it stirreth vp all her senses, and so moueth them that shee submitteth her selfe by and by vnto Christe, so that we haue an image of our calling depainted in Mary. For this is the true entrance into the knowledge of Christ, if he knowe vs first: and secondly, if he inuite vs vnto himselfe familiarly, not with that common voyce whiche soundeth confusedly in all mens eares, but by that voyce wherewith he calleth the sheepe peculiarly which are giuen him of his father. Therefore Paule saith, Galathians 4. 9. After that yee knewe God, yee were knowen of him.

Furthermore, the efficacie of this worde appeareth thereby, in that Marie giueth due honor vnto Christ without delay. For þ word Rabboni, is not only honourable, but it containeth also a profession of obedience. Therefore Marie testifieth that she is Christes Disciple, and she submitteth teth and addicteth her selfe vnto him as vnto a master. This is a maruelous & a secret conuersion of mans minde, when as God maketh the same quicke of sight sodainely, which was before dull and altogether blinde. Furthermore, the example of Mary ought to serue for an exhortation that how many soeuer Christe doth inuite vnto himselfe, they may answere him by and by. This worde Rabboni is a Chaldean worde, although they pronounce it Ribboni: but it is a common thing for words to bee changed, when as they are turned into another and a straunge tongue. And it is asmuch as, my Lorde, or Master. But their manner of speaking was such in Christes time, that the tooke Rabbi and Rabboni for master.

17 Touch me not. This seemeth to disagree with Matthew his narration. For he writeth plainely that the woman embraced Christs feet. Now seeing that he would haue the Disciples to grope and feale him, what was the cause that he forbad Mary to touch him? We may easily answere, if (as we know & holde that the woman were not driuen back frō touching Christe before that they were too busie in touching him. For in asmuch as it was necessary to take away all doubting, hee did forbid them to touch him: but when he saw them embrace his feete too busily, he did moderate and correct that rash zeale. For they did sticke in his corporal presence, neither did they know any other way & meanes to enioy him, then if he should liue togeather with them vppon earth. Therefore we must perswade our selues that they were not forbidden to touch him, vntill such time as Christ had seeme ȳ he was retained and kept in the worlde with their foolish and vnseasonable desire. We must also note the reason which he addeth, because I am not yet ascended vnto the father. For he commandeth the women in these words, to suspend their desire vntill such time as he was receiued into heauenly glory.

Finally, he sheweth the end of his resurrection, not suche an ende as they feigned & immagined with themselues, that being restored to life againe, he might triumph in the world: but rather that hee might take possession of the kingdome promised him by ascending into heauen, & that he might gouerne the Church out of the fathers hande by the power of his spirite. Therefore this is the meaning of the wordes, that the estate of his resurrection should not be full and in all pointes perfect, vntill he shoulde sit in heauen at his fathers right hande: and that therfore the womē did not wel, in that being cōtent with the one half of the resurrection, they desired to haue him to be present in the world. The profite of this doctrine is double: the first, that those must lift vp their mindes who will not erre in seeking Christ: the second, that they must shake off the earthly desires of the flesh, whosoeuer wil go toward him: as Paul teacheth, Col. 3. 1. 2.

Goe vnto my brethren. Some doe restraine this woorde brethren vnto the kinsfolks of Christ, but not well in my iudgement. For why should he rather haue sent them vnto them then vnto the Disciples? They answer, because Iohn testifieth in another place that they beleeued not. But I doe not thinke that Christ vouchsafed to bestow so great honour vpō those of whom mention is made there.

And now they muste needes graunt that Mary did that obediently which ſhe was commanded to do by Chriſt. But it followeth immediately that ſhee came to the Diſciples: whereby wee gather that Chriſte ſpake of them. Moreouer, Chriſte knewe that the Diſciples were gathered togeather in one place, whom theſe men doe ſeparate in their opinion. And it were an abſurd thing that the Diſciples ſhoulde bee neglected, whyleſt that certaine odde fellowes were regarded, who being gathered into one place, dyd ſtande betweene hope and feare.

Furthermore, Chriſt ſeemeth to haue borrowed this ſpeeche out of the two and twentieth Pſalme 23. where it is written, I will declare thy name vnto my brethren. For it is queſtionleſſe that the fulfilling of that Propheſie is rehearſed in this place. Therefore I thinke that Marie was ſent vnto all the Diſciples: and I thinke that that was done to vpbraide them, becauſe they had been ſo ſlowe to beleeue. And truly they were not only worthie to haue women to bee their teachers, but euen Oxen and Aſſes, who had profited ſo little and almoſt nothing vnder the ſonne of God, who vſed ſuch diligence in teaching and inſtructing them continually. Yet this is a milde and gentle chaſticement, whyleſt that Chriſt ſendeth his Diſciples thus vnto the womens ſchoole, that he may reclaime them vnto himſelfe by them.

His ineſtimable goodneſſe appeareth alſo in this that hee appointeth the women to bee witneſſes vnto the Apoſtles, of his reſurrection. For the embaſſage whiche is giuen them in charge, is the onely grounde-worke of our ſaluation, and it conteineth the principall point of heauenly wiſedome. Although we muſt alſo note that this was an extraordinarie and as it were an accidentall thing. They are commaunded to tell the Apoſtles that which they preached vnto all the whole world afterward, according to the function which was enioyned them: but the wome do not this as Apoſtles. Therfore they do falſely gather a law out of this place who permit women to baptize. Let this bee ſufficient for vs that Chriſt did ſhewe and vnfolde in them the infinite treaſures of his grace, whileſt that hee did once make them teach the Apoſtles: yet ſo that he woulde not haue that taken for an example, whiche was done by a ſinguler priuiledge, wee may ſee that chiefly in Mary Magdalene, whiche was captiue to ſeuen Diuels before: for this was as much as if Chriſt ſhould lift her vp aboue the heauens being brought out of hell.

If any man obiect that there was no cauſe why Chriſt ſhoulde preferre the women before his Apoſtles which were no leſſe carnall and dull: I anſwere, that the difference betweene the Apoſtles and the women, is put and placed not in our will, but in the wyll of the iudge. Againe, I ſay that they were more ſharply to be chidden, who were not onely more taught then any other, but who being alſo appointed to be teachers of all the whole worlde, and being called the light of men, and the ſalt of the earth, Matthew the 5. chapter, 13. & 14. verſes, had ſo filthily fallen. In the meane ſeaſon it pleaſed the Lorde to ſhewe ſome token of his power in theſe weake and contemptible inſtruments.

I aſcende vnto my father. By this word aſcend he confirmeth that doctrine which I expoũded of late; to wit, ꝙ he roſe againe for this cauſe not that he

he might linger & ſtay vpon earth, but that hauing entred into the heauenly life, he might drawe the faithfull with him thither. In ſumme, he forbiddeth the Apoſtles by this woorde, to ſtay in the bare reſurrection onely, and he willeth them to goe forewarde, vntill they come vnto the ſpirituall kingdome, the heauenly glory, vnto God himſelfe. Therefore there is great force in this word, I aſcende. becauſe Chriſte reacheth forth his hande vnto thoſe that be his, that they maye not ſeeke felicitie anye where elſe, ſaue onely in heauen. For where our treaſure is, there muſt our heart be alſo, Math. 6. 21. Chriſte ſayeth that he aſcendeth vpward, therefore we muſt aſcende, vnleſſe we will be ſeparated from him. And when he addeth that he aſcendeth vnto God, he doeth eaſily driue away what ſoeuer ſorrowe and care the Apoſtles might conceiue, becauſe of his departure: for he ſignifieth that he will alwayes be preſent with his, by his diuine power. By aſcending, is noted the diſtance of place: but although Chriſt be abſent in body, yet becauſe he is with God, his power which is ſpred abrode euery where, doeth manifeſtly declare and ſhewe his ſpirituall preſence. For to what ende did he aſcende vnto God, ſaue onely, that ſittinge at his righte hande, hee might raigne in heauen and earth?

Finally, he meant by this ſpeache to commende the diuine power of his kingdome, leaſt the diſciples ſhoulde take the abſence of hys fleſhe heauily. And nowe the fruite and effecte of that brotherly coniunction mentioned of late, is expreſſed, whileſt that Chriſte maketh God and the father common as well to vs as to himſelfe. I (ſayeth hee) doe aſcend vnto the father, who is alſo your father. VVe heare in an other place, that we are made partakers of all the good thinges of Chriſt: but this is the foundation, that hee imparteth and maketh common vnto vs the fountaine it ſelfe of good thinges. This is queſtionleſſe an vneſtimable good thing, that the faithfull may ſafely and ſurely perſwade themſelues, that he is their God, who is Chriſtes God, that he is their father, who is Chriſtes father. And they neede not to feare, leaſt this hope and confidence be reproued for raſhnes, when as it is grounded in Chriſt: or leaſt it be a proud bragge, whiche Chriſte himſelfe hath indited vnto vs with his owne mouth.

Furthermore, Chriſte calleth him his God. in aſmuch as hauing taken vppon him the ſhape of a ſeruaunt, he abaſed himſelfe. Therefore this is proper to his humane nature: yet it is applyed to the whole perſon, in reſpecte of the vnitie: becauſe the ſame Chriſt is God and man. As touching the ſecond member, we do alſo differ from him: for he is the ſonne of God by nature, and we by adoption onely: but ſuch is the ſtabilitie of the grace which we haue by him, that it cannot be ſhaken with anye engines of Satan, but that we may alwaies cal him our father, who hath adopted vs in his ſonne.

19. The ſame daye at night, which was the firſt of the Sabaoth, and the dores were ſhut where the Diſciples were gathered together for feare of the Iewes, came Ieſus and ſtoode in the middeſt, and ſaide vnto them, Peace bee vnto you.

20. And when hee had ſaide thus, hee ſhewed them his handes and his ſide. Therefore the Diſciples reioyced when they had ſeene the Lorde.

21 Therfore Iesus saith vnto them againe, Peace be vnto you: as the father hath sente me, I do also send you.

22 And when he had said that, he breathed vpon them, and saith vnto them, Receiue the holy Ghost.

23 Whose sinnes yee shal remit, they shal be remitted vnto them, and whose sinnes ye shal retaine, they shal be retained.

19 The same day at night. The Euangeliste declareth now that Christes resurrection was proued vnto the Disciples by the beholdinge and seeing of him. It happened not without the prouidence of GOD, that they were all gathered togeather in one place, that the matter myght be the more surelye and certeinelye beleeued. VVee muste note howe courteouslye and gentlye Christe dealte with them, who did only suffer them to doubt vntil night.

Moreouer, hee gaue them light, bringing vnto them a pledge of a newlyfe, when as the world was darke. In that they were come togeather, it was a signe of fayth, or of a godly affection: in that they kepte themselues close, the doores being shutte, in this we acknowledge some infirmitie. For although the moste stronge, valyaunt, and constant menne are someties afrayde, yet wee may eaſilye gather that the Apostles were so afraide then, that they bewrayed their want of fayth. An example worth the marking. For although they doe not behaue themselues valiauntly, as they ought, yet they doe not flatter themselues in their infirmitie.

They seeke a secrete place, that they may escape daunger: yet they encourage themselues so, that they continue together: otherwise they should haue beene scattered abroad, and one should not haue beene so bolde, as to looke vppon another. Thus must we striue with the infirmitie of our flesshe, neyther must wee giue place vnto feare, whiche prouoketh vs to faynte and fall. Christ blesseth their zeale, when as hee appeareth vnto them being thus gathered togecher: and Thomas is iustlye depriued of the common grace of his brethren, beecause hee was departed from the banner of vnitie, like a wandring soldiour. Therefore let them, who are too fearefull, learn to sharpen and exhort themselues to correct the feare of their flesh. And we must especially beware, that feare doe not scatter vs abroad.

And the doores were shut. This circumstaunce was added, because, it conteineth a token of Christes diuine power. For, whereas some think that some manne hadde vnlocked the doores for him, and that hee entred in after the manner of menne, it is altogeather contrary to the Euangelists minde. Therefore wee muste thus thinke, that Christ entred in miraculously, that hee might shewe some token of his diuinitie, that hee might make his disciples more attentiue. Neuertheleſſe, I do in no case graunt, that that is true, which the Papists affirm, that the body of Christ came through the doores, when they were shutte. They holde this for this cause, that they may not onelye make his glorious bodye like to a spirite, but that that they may proue that it is vnmeasurable, and contained in no place.

But the woordes import no such thing: because the Euangelist saieth not that he entered in by the doores when they were shutte, but that he stood stoode in the middest of his disciples, when as notwithstandinge, the doores were shutte, and he had no entraunce and way made him by the hand of man. VVe know that Peter came out of the prison when it was fast lockte: shall we therefore say that he came through the middest of the yron and plankes? Therefore away with these childishe subtelties, who haue in them no soundnesse, and bring with them many toyes and dotings. Let this be sufficient for vs, that Christ meant to establishe the credite of his resurrection, amongst his disciples by an excellēt myracle.

Peace be vnto you. This is a common forme of salutation vsed amongst the Hebrewes, who vnder this woorde Peace, doe comprehende all prosperitie and good thinges whiche are woont to be desired vnto blessed life. Therefore this saying importeth as much as if you shoulde say: Be it wel and happily vnto you. VVhich I speake for this cause, because some menne dispute Philosophically concerning peace and concorde in thys place: seeing that the onely intent and purpose of Christ is, to wish wel to his disciples.

20. He shewed them his handes. It was meete that this confirmation should be added, that it might be made knowen vnto them by all meanes, that Christe was risen againe. If any man thinke that it is vnmeete and contrary to Christes glory, that he beareth his woundes as yet after his resurrection: Lette him first of all consider that he rose againe not for hys owne, but for our sake: and secondly, that what soeuer maketh for our saluation, it is vnto him glorious. For in that he humbled himselfe for a season, his maiestie was no whit abated by that: Nowe seeing that these woundes, which are spoken of heere, doe serue to set forth the credite of the resurrection, they doe diminish no whitte of his glorye. And if anye manne shal gather heereby, that Christ hath as yet his side thrust throgh, and his handes pearced, he shalbe ridiculous: for asmuche as it is certeine that the vse of his woundes was but temporall, vntill the Apostles were fully perswaded that he was risen from death. VVhen Iohn saieth, that the Apostles reioyced, when they sawe the Lord, hee giueth vs to vnderstande, that al that sorow, which the death of Christ had brought to the Apostles, was driuen away by his new life. Hee saith againe, peace be vnto you, This second salutatiō seemeth to tend to none other end, saue only that the Lord may be so heard, as the greatnes and weightines of the things, wherof he was about to intreate, did deserue.

21. As my father hath sent me. By these wordes Christ doth as it were cōsecrate his Apostles into the office, whereunto hee had ordained and appointed them before. They were sent before through out Iudea, but only like cryers, which commaunded the people to heare the chiefe teacher, and not as Apostles, which did take vppon them the continuall office of teaching. But now the Lord maketh them his embassadors, that they may erect his kingdom in the world. Therefore let this continue sure & certeine, that the Apostles are now first of all appointed to be ordinary ministers of the gospel. His words import asmuch as if he should say, that he hath executed the office of a teacher hitherto: and that therfore sithence that he hath fulfilled his course, he doth now cōmit the same charg vnto thē. For he meaneth that his father had made him a teacher of þ Church on this cōdition, that he might go before the rest for a time, and that he might then chuse into this place those, which might supply his place whē he was absent.

In

In which reſpecte, Paule, Ephe. 4. 11. ſaith, that hee made ſome Apoſtles, ſome Euangeliſtes, ſome Paſtors, to gouerne the Church vntill the ende of the world.

Therefore Chriſte dooth teſtifie of all, that although his office of teaching was but temporall, yet the preaching of the Goſpell laſteth no ſmall time, but ſhall be eternall. And ſecondlye, to the end the doctrine, which proceedeth from the mouth of the Apoſtles maye haue neuer a whitte the leſſe authoritie, he commaundeth them to enter into the ſame function, which hee had of his father: hee giueth them the ſame perſon, and aſsigneth vnto them the ſame authoritie. It was meete that their miniſterie ſhould be eſtabliſhed thus: for they were obſcure men, and of the common ſorte. Againe, admitte they were of great renoume and dignitie, yet we know that whatſoeuer men haue, it is farre inferiour to fayth.

VVherefore it is not without cauſe that Chriſt imparteth vnto his Apoſtles the authoritie, which he hath receiued of the father, that he may by this meanes declare, that the preaching of the Goſpel is enioined thē, not by man, but by the commaundement of God. But hee did not ſo put other in his place, that he doth leaue the principal maiſterſhyppe, becauſe the father would haue that to remaine in his power alone. Therfore he continueth and will continue for euer the onely teacher of the Church: but there is this onely difference, that he ſpake with his owne mouth ſo long as he was conuerſant vpon earth, he ſpeaketh now by his Apoſtles: Therefore this ſucceſsion is ſuch, that Chriſte looſeth nothing thereby, but his right remaineth vntouched, and his honour perfect. For that decree cannot be broken, whereby we are commaunded to heare him, and no other.

In ſumme, Chriſt meant not in this place to adorne menne, but the doctrine of the Goſpell. Furthermore, wee muſt note that he intreateth of the preaching of the Goſpell onely. For Chriſt ſendeth not his Apoſtles to make ſatiſfaction for the ſinnes of the worlde, to purchaſe righteouſnes, as hee himſelfe was ſent of the father. Therefore he toucheth not in this place any peculier thing that he had, but he doth only appoint miniſters and paſtours to gouerne the Church, and that vppon this condition, that he may retaine the principall power: and that theſe menne may challenge to themſelues nothing els but the ſeruice.

22. He breathed vppon them. Beecauſe no mortall manne is fitte for ſo harde and weightie a function, therefore Chriſt furniſheth his Apoſtles with the grace of his ſpirite. And truely it is a thing which paſſeth mans habilitie far, to gouerne Gods Church, to bringe the meſſage of eternall ſaluation, to erect the kingdome of God vppon earth, and to lifte vppe menne vnto the heauens. VVherefore it is no meruelle that there is no meete manne founde, vn'eſſe he be inſpired with the holy Ghoſt. For no manne can ſpeake any word concerning Chriſt, vnleſſe the ſpirit directe his tongue: ſo farre off is it, that any manne is ſufficient to fulfill faythfully and hartily all the partes of ſuch an excellent office. And this glorye belongeth to Chriſt alone, to faſhion and forme thoſe, whome hee appointeth to be teachers of his Church. For the fulneſſe of the ſpirite is powred out vppon him for this cauſe, that hee may giue it to euerye one

by

by meaſure. Againe, ſeeing that he remaineth the onely paſtour of the Church, he muſt needes ſhewe forth the power of his ſpirite in his Miniſters, whoſe diligence he vſeth. VVhich thing he did alſo teſtifie by the externall ſigne, when hee breathed vppon his Apoſtles. For this ſhuld not agree, vnleſſe the ſpirite didde proceede from him. VVherefore the ſacriledge of the Papiſts is ſo muche the more deteſtable, who take to themſelues the honour, whiche is proper to the Sonne of GOD. For theyr horned Byſhoppes doe boaſte that they breathe out the ſpirite by belchinge, when they make their Maſſe Prieſtes. But the thinge it ſelfe ſheweth plainelye enough, how much their ſtincking breath dooth differ from the breathing of Chriſte: becauſe they make nothinge elſe but Aſſes of horſes.

Moreouer, Chriſte dooth not onelye imparte vnto his diſciples the ſpirite whiche hee receiued, but hee giueth it as it is his owne, ſeeing that it is common to his Father and him. Therfore they vſurpe to themſelues the glorye of the diuinitie, whoſoeuer do profeſſe that they giue the ſpirit by breathing.

And nowe wee muſte note that CHRISTE furniſheth thoſe with neceſſarye gyftes, whome hee calleth vnto the paſtorall office, that they may be able to diſcharge their duetie and function, or at leaſt that they may not come emptie and naked. VVhich thing, if it be true, the fooliſhe bragging of the Papyſtes is eaſilye refuted, who whyleſt they doe highlye extoll theyr hierarchie or holye gouernaunce, cannot ſhewe euen the verye leaſte ſparke of the holye Ghoſte in their Biſhops. They will haue vs beleeue that thoſe are lawfull paſtours of the church, and ſo conſequentlye Apoſtles and Chriſtes vicares, who are as it appeareth, emptie of all the graces of the holy Ghoſt. But there is a certain rule preſcribed vnto vs in this place to eſteeme their callinge by, and to iudge thereof, who gouerne the Churche of God, if we ſee them endued with the holy Ghoſt.

Notwythſtanding, Chriſte meant chiefly to auouche and defend the dignitye of the Apoſtolicall order. For it was meete that their authoritie ſhoulde be ſingular, who were choſen to bee the firſte and chiefe to preache the Goſpell. But and if Chriſte gaue them his ſpirite then by breathinge vppon them, the ſendinge of the holy Ghoſt which followed afterwarde, ſeemeth to be ſuperfluous. I aunſweare that the ſpirite was giuen the Apoſtles in this place in ſuche ſorte, that they were onely ſprinkeled with this grace, and were not endowed wyth the perfecte power thereof. For when the holy Ghoſte appeared in fiery tongues vppon them, they were throughly renewed. And truely he doeth not ſo appoynte them nowe to preache his Goſpell, that hee ſendeth them ſtraightway vnto the woorke: but rather (as it is elſe where, Actes 1.4.) he commaunded them to reſt. And if we weigh all things wel, he doeth not ſo much furniſhe them with neceſſary giftes at this preſent time, as appoynt and make them inſtruments of his ſpirite againſte the tyme to come. VVherfore this breathing ought to be referred and exrended for the moſte parte vnto that great and honourable ſendinge of the ſpirite, which he had promiſed ſo often. Furthermore, Chriſt coulde haue giuen his grace vnto his apoſtles by ſecreat inſpiration, yet would he adde

the viſible breathing to confirme them the better. Chriſt tooke this ſigne from the common cuſtome of the ſcripture, which doth commonly cõpare the ſpirit vnto winde. The reaſon of which ſimilitude is briefly expounded before in the third chapter. But let the readers marke that the word is alſo ioyned with the externall and viſible ſigne. For euen hence doe the ſacraments borrow their force. Not becauſe the force of the ſpirit is included in the voice which ſoundeth in the eares: but becauſe the effect of al thoſe things, which the faithful haue, and gather, by, & of the ſacramentes, dependeth vpon the teſtimonie of the word. Chriſt breatheth vpon the Apoſtles, they doe not only receiue the blaſt, but the ſpirite alſo. And why? ſaue onely becauſe Chriſt promiſeth them the holye Ghoſt.

In like ſort we put on Chriſte in Baptiſme, we are waſhed with his bloud our old man is crucified, that the righteouſnes of God may reigne in vs. VVe are fed ſpiritually in the holy ſupper with the fleſh and bloud of Chriſt. VVhence commeth ſuch force, ſaue onely from the promiſe of Chriſt, who bringeth to paſſe and perfourmeth that by his ſpirit, which he promiſeth in word? Therefore let vs knowe that whatſoeuer ſacramentes men haue inuented, they are nothing elſe but meere toyes, or friuolous paſtimes: becauſe the ſignes can haue no trueth, ſaue onely when the word of God is preſent. And becauſe they do neuer mocke thus in holy things, without wicked blaſpheming of God, and the deſtructiõ of their ſoules, they muſt take good heede of ſuch iuglings of Satan. If any man obiect that that is not to be found fault with, which the popiſh biſhops do, when they conſecrate their Maſſe prieſts with breathing, becauſe the word of Chriſt is there annexed to the ſigne: we may readilye anſwere, that Chriſt ſpak not to his Apoſtles, that hee might inſtitute a continual ſacrament in the Church: but that he would once declare and teſtifie that which we ſaid of late, that the ſpirite commeth from him alone: and againe, that he neuer enioyneth any office, but that he doth alſo miniſter power vnto his miniſters, and furniſheth them with hability. I omit that the Maſſe prieſts are made in popery to a far other, or rather a contrary end: to wit, to ſlea Chriſte daily: whereas the Apoſtles were created to offer vp men in ſacrifice with the ſword of the goſpel. Neuertheleſſe we muſt alſo hold that, that Chriſte alone dooth giue all thoſe good things, which he figureth and promiſeth. For hee doth not bid the Apoſtles receiue the ſpirit from the external breathing, but frõ himſelfe.

23. VVhoſe ſinnes ye ſhal remit. It is not to be douted but that Chriſte doth briefly comprehend in this place the ſum of the goſpel. For we muſt not ſeparate this power, to forgiue ſinnes, from the office of teaching, wherevnto it is annexed in one text. Chriſt had ſaid a litle before, as the liuing father hath ſent me, ſo do I ſend you alſo: now dooth he declare to what end that embaſſage tendeth, and what it meaneth. Hee doth only put in that which was neceſſary, that he giueth them the holy Ghoſt, leaſt they ſhuld do any thing of theſelues. Therfore this is the principal end of the preaching of the Goſpel, that men may be reconciled vnto God, whiche commeth to paſſe by the free forgiuenes of ſinnes, as Paul alſo teacheth, 2. Cor. 5. 18. VVhere he calleth the Goſpell in this reſpect the miniſtery of reconciliation. The Goſpel containeth many other things, but GOD doth this principally there, that he may receiue men into fauour, by not impuimputing vnto them their ſinnes. VVherefore if we wil ſhew our ſelues faithful miniſters of the Goſpel, we muſt endeuour this with al diligẽce. For the Goſpell differeth from prophane philotophy moſte of all in this poynt: becauſe it placeth mans ſaluation in the free forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. For the other benefites of God doe ſlowe hence, that God dooth illuminate vs, and regenerate vs by his ſpirit, that he reformeth and faſhioneth vs after his owne image that hee armeth vs with inuincible ſtrength againſt the world and Sathan. Therefore all the whole doctrine of godlines, and the ſpirituall blinding of the Church ſtayeth vppon this foundation, that God doth adopt vs vnto himſelfe freely, being purged from all our ſinnes.

And Chriſt doth ſo enioyne vnto his Apoſtles the commaundement to forgiue ſinnes, that hee dooth not tranſlate and giue vnto them that which is his own. It is proper to him to forgiue ſinnes. Hee doth not reſigne vp this honour vnto the Apoſtles, inaſmuch as it belongeth to him: But he biddeth them teſtifie the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes in his name, that he may reconcile menne vnto God by them.

Finally, he alone (to ſpeake properly) doeth forgiue ſinnes by hys Apoſtles. Yet the queſtion may be, ſeeing that he doeth only make them witneſſes or preachers of this benefite, and not authours, why he doeth ſo highly extoll their power? I anſweare that this was graunted for the eſtabliſhing of our faith. There is nothinge more for our profite, then that we may ſafely perſwade our ſelues, that our ſinnes are not remembred before God. Zacharias calleth this the knowledge of ſaluation, in his ſonge, Luke 1.77. Seeing that God doeth vſe the teſtimonie of men to prooue the ſame, our conſciences ſhall neuer be quiet, vnleſſe they acknowledge that God himſelfe doeth ſpeake in their perſon. Therefore Paule ſayeth, 2. Corint. 5. 20. we exhort you that ye be reconciled vnto God, as if Chriſt did beſeeche you by vs. Nowe doe we ſee why Chriſte doeth ſet foorth and adorne the miniſterie which he enioyneth hys Apoſtles with ſuch an excellent title: to witte, that the faithful may be fully perſwaded that that is ſure and certain, which they heare concerning the remiſſion of ſinnes: and that they may make no leſſe account of that reconciliation which is offred by the voice of men, then if God himſelfe ſhould reach foorth his hand out of heauen. The church reapeth moſte plentifull frute of this doctrine daily, whileſt that it vnderſtandeth that her paſtours are made the promiſers of eternall ſaluation: and that ſhee needeth not to ſeeke for the remiſſion of ſinnes whiche is committed vnto them. Neither ought we therefore to make ſmall accounte of thys incomparable treaſure, becauſe it is put in earthen veſſels. But we are to thanke God, who hath vouchſafed to beſtowe ſo great honour vppon men, that they repreſent his perſon and the perſon of his ſonne, in teſtifying the forgiuenes of ſins. And let vs know, that whileſt braine ſicke men do deſpiſe this embaſſage, they tread vnder foot the bloud of chriſt. Againe the Papiſts are more then doltiſh, who wreſt this place vnto their magicall abſolutions. Vnleſſe a man confeſſe his ſins in the Prieſts eare, we muſt hope for no remiſſion, as they ſay. For Chriſt would haue the Apoſtles to forgiue ſinnes: but they cannot abſolue, vnleſſe they knowe the matter: Therefore menne muſt needes confeſſe theyr ſinnes. But their errour is ridiculous, whileſt that they paſſe ouer the principall iſſue of the matter; to witte, that this authorityе is graunted the Apoſtles;

to

to auouch and defend the authoritie of the Goſpel, the preaching wher-of was committed vnto them. For Chriſte dooth not appoynte in this place confeſsionaries, that they may ſifte and know euery ſinne by ſecret whiſperinges: but lowd preachers of the Goſpel, that they may ſeale the grace of the purging gotten by Chriſte, in the heartes of the faythfull. VVherefore we muſt note the manner of forgiuing ſinnes, that we may know what power this is, which is giuen the Apoſtles.

VVhoſe ſinnes ye shal retaine. Chriſt addeth this ſecond member, to terrifie the contemners of his Goſpel, that they may know that they ſhal not eſcape ſcotte free for this their pryde: Therefore, as the embaſſage of eternal ſaluation and of lyfe was enioyned the Apoſtls, ſo were they armed with vengeaunce againſt al the wicked, who refuſe the ſaluation which is offered them, as Paule teacheth, 2. Cor. 10. 6. But it is the latter in order: becauſe the true and natural end of preaching the Goſpell oughte to haue beene ſhewed firſt. In that we are reconciled vnto God, this is proper to the Goſpell: and it is an accidentall thing, that the vnbeleeuers are adiudged vnto eternall death. In like ſorte Paule, after that hee denounceth that vengeaunce vnto the vnbeleeuers, whereof I haue ſpoken of late, hee addeth immediately, after that your obedience ſhall be fulfilled. For he giueth vs to vnderſtand that it is proper to the Goſpel, to intuite al menne vnto ſaluation: and it is an accidentall thing, that it bryngeth deſtruction vnto ſome. Notwithſtanding we muſt note, that whoſoeuer heareth the voice of the Goſpel, vnleſſe hee embrace remiſsion of ſinnes promiſed vnto him therein, he is wrapt in guiltines, and tied with eternall damnation. For as it is a liuely ſauor vnto the children of God ſo it is the ſauor of death vnto death, vnto thoſe that periſh. Not that the preaching of the Goſpel is neceſſary to condemne the reprobate, ſeeinge that we are all loſt by nature, and euery man bringeth & getteth to him ſelf new cauſes of death beſides the heritable curſe: but becauſe their ſtubbernnes deſerueth a far greater puniſhment, who deſpiſe the ſon of God willingly and wittingly.

24. And Thomas, one of the twelue, which was called Dydimus, was not with them when Ieſus came.

25. Therfore the other diſciples ſaid vnto him, we haue ſeene the Lord. But hee ſayde vnto them, vnleſſe I ſhal ſee the print of the nailes in his hands, and ſhall thruſte my finger into the prynte of the nayles, and ſhall thruſt my hande into his ſide, I wil not beeleeue.

26. And eight dayes after his diſciples were within againe, and Thomas was with them. Therfore Ieſus came, when the doores were ſhut, and ſtoode in the midſt, and ſaid vnto them, Peace be vnto you.

27. Then ſaieth hee to Thomas, bringe thy finger hyther, and ſee my handes: and bryng in thy hande, and thruſte it into my ſide, and bee not vnfaythfull, but faithfull.

28. Thomas aunſwered and ſaid vnto him, My Lord and my God.

29 Ieſus ſaith vnto him, Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeene me, thou haſt beleeued. Bleſſed are thoſe, which haue not ſeene, and yet haue beleeued.

24. And Thomas. The vnbeliefe of Thomas is rehearſed in this place, that the faith of the godly may be the better confirmed thereby. He was not onely only slow and hard to beleeue, but also stubberne. His hardnesse caused Christ to offer himself to be seene, & also felt in the same shape againe. By this meanes, not only he, but we, had a new help to testify Christ his resurrection. But the stubbernes of Thomas is vnto vs an example, that this frowardnesse is ingendered almost in all men, that they doe hinder themselues of their owne accord, when as the entrance vnto faith is set open. 25. Vnlesse I shall see. The fountain of the vice is noted in this place, because euery mā wil be wise according to his own sense, & doth beare too much with himselfe. These words do nothing agree with faith: but it is a sensual iudgement (that I may so cal it). Therfore this befalleth all mē, who are addicted to thēselues, that they leaue no place for the word of God. It skilleth not whether you read it: the place, or figure, or print of the nailes. For it may be that the scriueners haue tourned vpon. into repon. or on the cōtrary, yet the sense is not altered therfore. Therfore let the readers chuse whether they had lieuer. 26. Bring in thy finger. We haue already spoken once of Christ his entrance, and his forme of salutation which he vsed. Furthermore, in that Christ doth so readily graunt Tho. that which he asked so wickedly, & so consequently doeth bid him feele his hands, & handle the wound of his side, we gather hereby how diligently he prouided both for his & our faith. For he had not respect vnto Tho. only, but vnto vs also: least any thing should be wanting to the establishing of our faith. The dulnes of Tho. is wonderful & monstrous: being not content when he saw Christ, he wold also haue his hands to be witnesses of his resurrection. So that he was not only stubberne, but also proud & reprochful against Christ. He ought at least to haue been confounded with shame, & to haue ben afraid, so sone as he saw Christ. But he thrusteth in his hand boldly and without feare, as if he were not guilty of any fault. For we may easily gather out of the words of the Euangelist, that he came not to himselfe again before such time, as he was conuicted by the touching it self. So whileſt that we giue lesse honor to the word of the Lord then is meete, there cōmeth vpon vs by litle & litle vnawares a worse stubbernes, which bringeth with it, cōtempt of it: yea it taketh from vs all reuerence of him. Wherefore we must take so much the more paines to bridle the wantonnes of our wit, and nature, least whileſt that euery man doth giue himselfe greater liberty to resist, then is lawful, he shut the gate of faith against himself, after that all feeling of godlines is as it were, extinguished. 28. My Lord and my God. Thomas is awaked at length out of his dreame: and he crieth out throughe admiration, as men are wont to do, who returne vnto themselues after that they haue beene beside themselues, My Lord and my God. For the abrupt sentence hath greater force: and it is not to be doubted but that he brake out into these words, being enforced with shame, that he might therby condemn his sluggishnes. Furthermore, this so sodaine an outcry doth shew that faith was not quite extinguished in him, although it was choked. For he handleth not Christ his diuinity in his side or hands: but he gathereth much more by, & out of these signs, then they shew. Whēce commeth this, saue only because he returneth to himself sodainly out of forgetfulnes & drousines? Therfore it appeareth that that is true which I said euen now, that the faith which semed to be abolished, did lie hid in his hart, as if it had been couered. The same thing doth also befal many sometimes: for they are wanton for a time, as if they had cast away the feare of God, ſo that there appeareth in them no faith: but ſo ſone as they are chaſtned with ſome light chaſtiſement of God, they come to thẽſelues againe, when the fiercenesſe of the fleſh is brought vnder. Certainly a diſeaſe ſhould not be ſufficient of it ſelfe to teach godlineſſe, whence we gather, that ſo ſoone as the impediments are purged, the good ſeede which lay hid, beginneth to appeare. VVhereof there was an excellent example in Dauid: for we ſee howe carelesly he triumpheth after that he hath obtained his luſt: all men would haue thought that faith had been quite aboliſhed out of his minde at that time. But he is ſo ſodainly called into the way by ſuche a ſhort admonition of the Prophet, that we may readily gather ſome ſmall fire, although it were couered, yet was in his minde, which did without delay break forth into a flame. As touching men they are guilty euen as if they had diſpoiled themſelues of faith & of all the graces of the holy Ghoſt. But it cõmeth to paſſe through the vnmeaſureable goodnes of god, that the elect do not ſo run hedlõg into alienatiõ. Wherfore we muſt take good heed that we fall not away frõ the faith. Yet we muſt perſwade our ſelues that god doth kepe back his elect wyth an hidden bridle, that they fal not deadlily, & that he doth myraculouſly nouriſh alwaies in their harts, ſome ſparcles of faith, which he ſetteth on fire afterward with a new blaſt of his ſpirit in due time. But this cõfeſſion hath 2. members. Tho. confeſſeth that chriſt is his lord: then he climeth higher, & calleth him his god alſo. We know in what ſenſe ỳ ſcripture calleth chriſt Lord: to wit, becauſe he is made by his father the chief moderater and gouernor, who hath al things vnder his gouernment, before whõ euery knee muſt bow. And finally, becauſe he is his fathers vicegerent in gouerning ỳ world. So that this name lord, belõgeth properly vnto him, in as much as he is the mediator reuealed in the fleſh, and the head of the church. But ſo ſone as Th. knew the lord, he is by & by caried vp vnto his eternal diuinity, & that for good cauſes: for Chriſt came down vnto vs for this cauſe, & was firſt of al abaſed, then afterward he was placed at the right hãd of the father, he obtained the gouernment & lordſhip of heauen and earth, that he might lift vs vp vnto his diuine glory & the glory of his father. Wherfore to the end our faith may come vnto the eternall diuinity of Chriſt, it muſt begin at that knowledge, which is nigher & more eaſie. So ỳ it was truly ſaid of ſome mã, that we are brought & led from chriſt, as he is mã, vnto chriſt, as he is god: becauſe our faith goeth forward in ſuch ſort by degrees, that laying hold vpõ chriſt in earth, as he was born in the ſtable, hãged vpõ the croſſe, it may paſſe vnto the glory of his reſurrection: and frõ thẽce at lẽgth vnto his eternal life & power, wherin his diuine maieſty ſhineth. Neuertheles we muſt know this, ỳ we cãnot rightly know that chriſt is the lord, but that the knowledge of his diuinity ſuccedeth immediately, Neither is it to be douted but that this ought to be the common cõfeſsion of al the godly, which we ſee Chriſt alloweth. Doutles, he wold not haue ſuffred the honor to be giuẽ raſhly and falſly vnto himſelf, being taken frõ his father: yet he doth flatly allow that which Th. ſaid: wherfore this one place is ſufficiẽt to refute the madnes of Arrius ſufficiently. For it is altogither vnlawfull to imagine two Gods. Moreouer the vnitie of perſon in Chriſt, is expreſſed in this place, whẽ as the ſame Chriſt is called god and lord. He calleth him his twiſe with great force, that he may declare that he ſpeaketh according to a liuely & earneſt feeling of faith. 29. Thomas becauſe. Chriſt reprehẽdeth nothing in Tho, ſaue only that he was ſo ſlow to beleue, so that he had need to be drawn vnto the faith violētly by the experiences of his senses, which is quite contrary to the nature of faith. If any man obiect, that there is nothing more vnconuenict, then that faith shuld be called a persuasion conceiued by touching & seeing: we may easily answer out of ꝑ which I haue already said. For Th. was not simply brought by touching or seeing to beleue that christ was his god: but being awaked, he remēbred the doctrine which he had almost forgottē before. For doutles faith cannot flow frō the bare experiments of things, but she must haue her beginning frō the word of god. Therfore christ chideth Tho. for this cause, because he did not giue such honour vnto his worde as he ought, & that he tied faith which cōmeth by hearing, and ought earnestly to be set vpon the worde, vnto the other senses.

Blessed are thos that haue not seene, and haue beleeued. Christ commendeth faith in this place for this cause, because resting vpon the woord alone, it doeth not depend vpon the sense & reason of the flesh. Therfore he doth briefly define the force & nature of faith: to wit, that it staieth not in the present sight, but pierceth vnto the heauēs, that it may beleeue those things which are hiddē from the sense & perceiuing of mā. And truly, we must giue god this honor, that his truth be vnto vs of sufficient credit of it self. Faith hath in deed her sight, yet such as doth not abide below in ꝑ world & in earthly obiects, in which respecte it is called the euidence of inuisible things, or of things which appeare not, Heb. 11.1. And Paule, 2. Cor. 15.7. setting it against sight, doeth signify that it sticketh not in considering the estate of things present, neither doth it looke hither and thither vnto those things which appear in the world, but it dependeth vpon the mouth of god, and that trusting to the word of God, it ouercōmeth the whole world, that she may fasten her anker in heauen.

The summe is, that there is no true faith but that which beinge grounded in the woord of God, doeth rise vnto the inuisible kingdom of God, that it may surpasse all humane apprehension. If any man obiect that this saying of Christ disagreeth with that other, Math. 13.16. where he pronounceth that the eyes are blessed, whiche see him present: I answeare that Christ doeth not speake in that place of the corporall beholding and sight only, as in that place: but of the reuelation which is cōmon to all the godly, sithēs that he appeared vnto the world to be the redemer therof. He cōpareth the apostles with the holy kings and prophets, who were holden vnder the dark shadowes of the law of Moses. But now he sayth that the condition of the faithful is better, because there shineth vnto them a more perfect light: yea, because the substance & truth of the figures is giuen thē. Many wicked men saw christ then with the eies of the flesh, who were neuer a whit the happier therefore: but we who neuer saw Christ with our eyes, do enioy that blessednesse which Christ commendeth. Whereupon it followeth that the eyes are called blessed, who consider spiritually that heauenly and diuine thing, which is in him. For we do at this day behold Christ in the Gospel, as if he were present before vs. In which sense Paul sayth vnto the Galathians 3.1. that he is crucified before our eies. Wherfore, if we couette to see that in Christe, which may make vs happye and blessed, let vs learne to beleeue when we see not. That which is wrytten, 1. Pet. 1.8. agreeth with these woordes of Christe, where the faithfull are commended, which loue Christe whome they haue not seene, and reioyce with an vnſpeakeable ioy, although they beholde him not. And whereas the Papiſts doe wreſt theſe woordes to approoue their tranſubſtantiation, it is more then friuolous. They bidde vs beleeue that Chriſte is in the ſhape and likeneſſe of breade, that we may be bleſſed. But we knowe that Chriſte did intende nothinge leſſe, then to make faith ſubiecte to the inuentions of menne: which if it goe but a little beyond the boundes of the woorde, it is no more faith. If wee muſt beleeue all things which wee ſee not, then ſhall our faith be tied to all monſters which it pleaſeth menne to inuent, to all fables which they luſt to blunder out. Therfore, to the end this ſaying of chriſt may take place, that muſt firſt be proued out of the woord of God, which is called in queſtion. They alleage the woord in deede for their tranſubſtantion, yet if it be wel expounded, it maketh nothing for their doting and folly.

30. Many other myracles wroght Ieſus before his diſciples, which are not writtē in this boke.
31. But theſe thinges are wrytten, that yee may beleeue, that Ieſus is Chriſte the Sonne of God: and that beleeuing, yee may haue life in his name.

30. Many other. Vnleſſe this preuention had been added, the readers might haue thought that Iohn had omitted none of the myracles why ch Ieſus did, & that he hath the perfect & ful hyſtory of al things here. Therfore Iohn doth teſtify firſt, that he did only wryte certain things of many: not becauſe the other were vnworthy to be recited, but becauſe theſe were ſufficient to edify faith. And yet it doth not follow thereupon, that they were wrought in vaine, becauſe they were profitable for that age. Secondly, although we doe not knowe at this day what they were, yet we muſt not ſet light by them, becauſe we vnderſtand that the Goſpell was ſealed with great aboundance of myracles. 31. And theſe things. By theſe wordes he ſignifieth vnto vs, that he wrote ſo much, as ought to ſatisfie vs: becauſe it is abundantly ſufficient to confirm our faith. For he meant to preuent the vaine curioſity of men, which cannot be ſatisfied, & beareth too much with it ſelf. Furthermore, Iohn knew wel what the other Euangeliſts had wrytten. And ſeeing that he intēded nothing leſſe then to aboliſh their wrytings, without doubt he doth not ſeparate their narration from his. Yet it ſeemeth to be an abſurd thing, that faith is foūded and grounded in myracles, which ought wholely to leane vnto the promiſes of God & his word. I anſwear that myracles haue none other vſe giuē them in this place, ſaue only that they may be helps & ſtoares vnto faith. For they ſerue to prepare the minds of men, that they may ſ more reuerently heare & receiue the word of god. For we know how cold & ſlowe our attentiueneſſe is, vnleſſe it be pricked forward by ſome other thing. And again, there is no ſmal authority added vnto the doctrine receiued, then, when the Lord reacheth out his mighty hād out of heauen to vnderprop the ſame, as Marke ſayeth, 16.20. that the apoſtles taught the Lord working togither, & confirming the word with ſignes following. Therfore although faith doth leane properly vnto the word of god, and doth looke vnto the word, as vnto the only marke: yet myracles are not in vaine, ſo that they be referred vnto the word alſo, and directe our faith thither. We haue ſayd elſe where, why myracles are called ſignes: to witte, becauſe the Lord ſtirreth vs vp by them to conſider hys power, whileſt that hee ſheweth ſome newe and ſtraunge thinge.

That Ieſus is Chriſte. He vnderſtandeth Chriſte, as he was promiſed in the lawe and the Prophets; to witte, the mediatour betweene GOD and men, men, the chiefe Embaſſadour of the father, the onely reſtorer of the worlde, and the authour of perfecte felicitie. For Iohn did not take the bare title, that he might therewithall adorne the ſonne of God: but hee comprehended vnder the name of Chriſte all thoſe offices whiche the Prophets doe aſsigne vnto him. Therefore we muſt conſider him as hee is deſcribed vnto vs in that place. VVhereby that doeth more plainly appeare which we ſayde of late, that faith doeth not ſticke in myracles, but is brought ſtraightway vnto the worlde. For it is all one as if Iohn ſhould haue ſayd that that was proued by myracles, which the Prophets taught ſometimes by woord of mouth. And we ſee that the Euangeliſts themſelues doe not ſtande ſimply in reckening vp myracles, but are rather occupied in doctrine, becauſe myracles ſhoulde of themſelues procure nothing but a confuſed woondering. VVherefore this is the meaning of the wordes, that theſe things are wrytten that we may beleeue, in as much as faith may be holpen by myracles. He addeth the ſonne of God, becauſe no fitte man coulde haue beene founde amongeſt the common ſort of men, to doe ſo great things: to witte, to reconcile the father vnto vs, to purge the ſinnes of the worlde, to aboliſh death, to pull downe the kingdome of Sathan, to bring vnto vs true righteouſneſſe, and ſaluation. But ſeeing that this woorde (Sonne,) belongeth vnto Chriſt only, it followeth that hee is not the ſonne of G O D by adoption, but by nature: wherefore the eternall diuinitie of Chriſte is contained in this woorde. And certainly, he that knoweth not Chriſt to be God by ſuche manifeſt teſtimonies which are extant in the Goſpell, becauſe he is blinde in perfecte light, he is not woorthy to ſee the ſunne and the earth.

That beleeuing, yee may haue eternall life. This effecte of faith is added alſo to bridle mennes luſt, and deſire, that they maye not couette to knowe more thinges then are ſufficient to obtaine life. For what wickednеſſe were this, not to be content with eternal ſaluation, and to deſire to paſſe the bounds of the kingdom of heauen. And in this place Iohn repeateth the principal poynt of his doctrine, that we obtaine eternal life by faith: becauſe being dead without Chriſte, we are reſtored to life by his grace alone. Concerning which thing we haue ſpoken inough before in the third and fift chapters. In that he ſayde rather the name of Chriſt, then Chriſt, we haue ſhewed the reaſon of this ſpeach before in the firſt chapter 12. Let the reader repaire thither, if he thinke good, leaſt I become tedious by repeating the ſame things oftentimes.

Chap. 21.

1. AFterwarde Ieſus shewed himſelfe againe to his diſciples at the ſea of Tyberias, and he shewed himſelfe thus.

2. Symon Peter, and Thomas which is called Didimus, were gathered togither, and Nathaniel which was of Cana of Galilee, and the ſonnes of Zebedeus, and two other of his diſciples.

3. Symon Peter ſayeth vnto them, I goe to fiſhe, they ſaye vnto him, and wee come alſo with thee: They went out and entred ſtraightway into a ſhippe, and that night they caught nothing.

4. But when the morning was nowe come, Ieſus ſtoode vppon the sheare: neuerthelesſe, the disciples knewe not that it was Iesus.

5. Iesus sayeth vnto them: Children haue ye any meat? They answeared him no.

6. But hee sayde vnto them: Cast out the nette on the right side of the shippe, and yee shall finde. So they cast it out, and nowe they were not able to drawe it for the multitude of fishes.

7. Therefore that disciple whome Iesus loued, sayde vnto Peter: It is the Lorde. VVhen Simon Peter hearde that it was the Lorde, he girded his coate to him, (for he was naked) and did cast himselfe into the sea.

8. But the other disciples came by shippe (for they were not farre from lande, but about two hundreth cubites,) they drew the nette of fishes.

9. Therefore so soone as they came on lande, they sawe coales layed there, and fishe layed vppon them, and breade.

10. Iesus sayeth vnto them: Bring of the fishes which yee caught nowe.

11. Simon Peter went vppe, and drewe the nette vnto the lande, full of great fishes, an hundreth and three and fiftie, and although they were so many, the net was not broken.

12. Iesus sayeth vnto them, come, dine. And none of the disciples durst aske him, who art thou? Seeing they knewe that it was the Lorde.

13. Therefore Iesus came, and tooke bread, and giueth them, and fishe likewise.

14. This is nowe the thirde time that Iesus shewed himselfe to his disciples, after that he was risen from the deade.

1. Afterwarde he shewed himselfe. The Euangelist standeth yet vppon the prooving of the resurrection of Christe, and he telleth that he appeared vnto seuen disciples: amongst whom he reckeneth Thomas, not to much for honours sake, as that his testimonie is so muche the sooner to be beleeued, the more obstinate his vnbeliefe was. The Euangelist is long inough, because he gathereth all the circumstances whiche make to the certainty of the hystorie. VVe haue sayd elsewhere that the lake of Tiberias, is called the see after the maner of the Hebrewes.

3. I goe to fishe. VVhereas Peter giueth himselfe to fishinge, it ought not to be thought to be contrary to his office. He was ordained an Apostle by breathing, as we sayd of late: but he stayed vntill such time as he was indued with newe power. For he was not yet commaunded to exercise the office of teaching, but he was onely admonished of the calling to come, that he and the rest might vnderstand that they were not chosen in vaine from the beginninge. In the meane while they doe as they were woont, and as became priuate men, Paule did get his liuing wyth his handes, in the middest of the course of his preaching: but that was in another maner of respecte. For the time was so deuided, that his manuall labour coulde not drawe him away from teaching: but Peter and his companions, doe giue themselues wholelye to fishing, because they were free from all maner of publike function.

They tooke nothing that night. Christe suffered them to take paynes in vaine all night, to make knowen and to sette foorth the credite of the myracle. For if they had caught any thing, Christes power shoulde not haue beene so manifestly knowen in the continuall succesſe: but whileſt that labouring in vain all night, they do sodainly enioy a great draught, they haue iuſt occasion giuen them to acknowledge the grace of the Lorde. God doeth also oftentimes exercise the faithfull in lyke sorte, that that he may commende vnto them his blessing. If we shoulde alwayes haue good successe, so often as we set our hād to worke, no man almost would thanke the blessing of God for this, that hee hath some rewarde and recompence of his worke: all men would make boast of their owne industrie, and kisse their owne handes: but whereas they wearye themselues sometime in vaine, when they reape better frute afterwarde, they are enforced to acknowledge some extraordinarie thing. So it commeth to passe that they begin to giue the praise of the prosperous successe vnto the grace of God.

6. Cast out the net on the right side. Christ doth not commaund them according to the right and authority of a Lord and maister: but he counselleth them as some one of the cōmon people. And ỹ disciples hauing nede of counsel, do readily obey him, though they know him not. If they had heard any such thing before the first casting, they woulde not haue obeyed so readily: whiche I speake for this cause, least any man shoulde maruel that they were so ductisful, seeing they were already tamed with long and vaine wearisomnesse. Although this was no small testimony of patiēce, that they labour after the day was light, though they had had bad successe all the night. And surely, we must constantly waite for the blessing of God, that we may giue place to the same. For nothinge is more prepostерous, then to pluck back the hand frō the worke straightway, vnlesse it appeare to be frutefull. Peter his nakednesse doth testifie that they laboured seriously. But they refuse not to make triall of a new castinge, least they neglecte anye opportunitie. And in that they obey Christe his commandement, it cannot be ascribed vnto faithe, for they heare him as a manne whome they knowe not. Nowe, if our calling be vnto vs troublesome, because our labour which we take, seemeth to vs to be barren: yet when the Lorde exhorteth vs to goe forwarde constantly, we must be of good courage, we shall haue at length happy successe, yet in due time.

7. Therefore that disciple. The Euangelist teacheth by his owne example, that so often as thinges fall out better then we looked for, we must lift vp our mindes vnto God, because we must straightway remember that this benefite came from his grace, who is the authour of all goodnesse. This godly acknowledging of Gods grace, which was engrafted in the minde of Iohn, brought him vnto the knowledge of Christ also. For he knoweth not Christe by sight: but because he is perswaded that the abundance of fish was offered them by God, he gathereth that it is Christ by whome their hands were directed. But like as faith is first in Iohn, so by and by Peter passeth him in zeale, when as he throweth himselfe into the lake, setting a part all respecte of daunger, the rest doe followe him by shippe. They come all vnto Christe at length: but Peter is caryed with singuler zeale aboue all the rest. But it is to be douted whether he came to the banke walking or swimming. Lette it bee sufficient for vs to knowe this, that in that he tooke his iourney, hauinge left the shippe, it was no headlong force of rashnesse: but he went before the rest according to the measure of his zeale. They were not able to drawe it. Firste of all, Christe shewed one token of hys power in suche a plentifull draught of fish: and he shewed another, in ỹ he kept the net whole by his hidden power, which muſt needes haue burſt otherwiſe. Now heereunto are added other circumſtaunces, that the diſciples finde hotte coales vpon the banke, that there are fiſhes, that there is alſo breade laied ready there. As touching the number of the fiſhes, we muſt not ſeeke any high myſterie, in that Auguſtine doth ſubtilly make and forge the law and the Goſpel of the numbers recited: but if a manne doe well and throughly examine it, he ſhall finde that it is but a childiſh toye.

10. Bring of the fiſhes. Although the net was filled in a moment, without any great labour of theirs, yet Chriſte aſsigneth the draughte vnto them. So we call bread ours, yet whileſt we craue to haue it giuen vs, we confeſſe that it proceedeth from Gods bleſsing.

12. None of the diſciples durſt. The queſtion may be, what letted them, whether ſhame proceeding from reuerence, or ſome other thing. But & if Chriſt ſawe them doubt, he ought to haue preuented their doubting, as he doeth oftentimes elſe where. I anſwear that there was none other cauſe of ſhame, ſaue onely becauſe it was euident inoughe that it was Chriſt. For we are woont to aske concerning doubtful and darke matters. Therefore the Euangeliſt giueth vs to vnderſtande, that they aske not Chriſt, becauſe they were afraide to doe him iniurie, he had ſo manifeſtly reuealed himſelfe.

14. This is nowe the thirde time. The number of three is referred vnto the diſtance of time. Chriſte hadde already appeared more then ſeuen times: but what ſoeuer was done in one day, it is comprehended vnder one manifeſtation. Therefore he ſignifieth that Chriſte appeared vnto the diſciples at diuers times, that he might make his reſurrection to be beleeued.

15. Therefore when dinner was done, Ieſus ſayeth vnto Simon Peter: Simon the ſonne of Iohn, loueſt thou me more then theſe? He ſayeth vnto him: yea Lord, thou knoweſt that I loue thee. He ſayeth vnto him: Feede my lambes.

16. He ſayeth vnto him againe the ſeconde time: Simon the ſonne of Iohn, loueſt thou me? He ſayeth vnto him, yea Lord: Thou knoweſt that I loue thee. He ſayeth vnto him: Feede my sheepe.

17. He ſayeth vnto him the thirde time, Simon the ſonne of Iohn, loueſt thou mee? Peter was ſorye becauſe he ſayde to him the thirde time, loueſt thou me? and he ſayd vnto him, Lorde thou knoweſt all things: Thou knoweſt that I loue thee. Ieſus ſayeth vnto him: Feede my sheepe.

18. Verely, verely, I ſay vnto thee: When thou waſt yonger, thou girdeſt thy ſelfe, and walkedſt whether thou wouldeſt: but when thou ſhalt waxe olde, thou ſhalt ſtretche out thine hande, and an other ſhall girde thee, and ſhall leade thee whither thou wilt not.

19. And this ſayd he: ſignifying with what death he ſhould glorifie God. And when he had thus ſpoken, he ſayeth vnto him: Followe me.

15. Therefore when they had dined. The Euangeliſt declareth nowe how Peter was reſtored vnto that degree of honour from whiche hee fell. That vnfaithfull deniall whereof we haue hearde, had made hym vnwoorthy of the Apoſtleſhippe. For howe coulde he be a fitte teacher of faith, who had fallen away from the ſame filthily? Hee was made an apoſtle: to witte, with Iudas.

But ſo ſone as he forſoke his place, he was alſo depriued of the honor of the Apostleship. Therefore the libertie of teaching, and his autoritie also are restored vnto him now, both which he had lost throgh his own fault. And least the infamy of his fal should any whit hinder him, Christe wipeth away and blotteth out the remembrance thereof. Such a kind of restoring againe was necessary both for Peter, and also for his hearers: for him, to the end he might the more stoutly do his dutie, being certein of the calling, which was enioyned him againe: for thē, least the blot sticking in his name, might be an occasion of despising the Gospell. It is also very profitable for vs at this day, that Peter should come forth vnto vs, as a newe man, whose shame was abolished, which might hinder his dignitie..

Simon, the sonne of Iohn, louest thou me? Christ signifieth by these words, that no man can serue the Church faithfully, and take paines in feedinge the flocke, vnlesse he looke higher then vnto men. For first the office of feeding is of it selfe painefull and troublesome, seeing that there is nothing more hard, then to keepe menne vnder Gods yoake, whereof many are weake, many light and froward, some slow & sluggish, some hard, churlish & vnapt to be taught. Now Satan layeth in their way all the stumbling blocks he can, that he may thereby discourag a good pastor. Hereunto is added the vnthankfulnes of many: and other causes of wearisōnes. Therfore no man shal euer go forward constantly in this office, saue he, in whose heart the loue of Christ shal so reigne, that forgetting himself. and addicting himself wholy vnto him, he may ouercome al impediments. Paul declareth that he was so affected, 2. Cor. 5. 14. whē he saith, the loue of Christ bindeth vs, considering this, that if one died for al, thē were al dead. And although he meaneth that loue, wherewith Christ loued vs, and wherof he shewed a token in his death: yet he adioineth the mutual affection, which ariseth by the feeling of so great a benefit. And againe, he marketh the wicked & false teachers, which trouble þ church with this mark, that they loue not the Lord Iesus, 1. Cor. 16. 22. Therefore let those which are called to gouerne the Church remember, that if they couet to execute their office wel and rightly, they must begin at the loue of Christ. In the meane season Christ doth testifie plentifully what account he maketh of our saluation, whilst that he cōmendeth the same vnto the pastors so singularly: and hee affirmeth that this is vnto him a token and testimonie, how dearly they loue him, as if they care for the same carefully. There could no more effectual thing be spoken, to encourage the ministers of the Gospel, thē when they heare þ no office is more acceptable to Christ, then that which is emploied in feeding his flock. Al the godly may draw no small comforte thence, when they heare that they are so deare and precious to the sonne of God, that he putteth them as it were in his roume. And the same doctrine ought to make the false teachers not a litle afraid, who ouerturne the gouernment of the church: becaus they shall suffer no small punishment at Christes handes, whoe pronounceth that he is violated by them.

Feede my Lambes. The scripture applyeth this word feede vnto al manner of gouernment, metaphorically: but because the spiritual gouernment of the Church is handeled in this place, it is profitable to note, vppon what partes the office of a pastour consisteth. For doubtlesse there is not anye idle dignitie depaynted out vnto vs in this place: neither dooth Christe giue vnto mortall man anye gouernment, which hee may exercise at his pleasure confusedly. VVe haue seene before, chap. 10, that Christ is properly, the only pastor of the church. VVe haue also seene, why he taketh this name to himselfe: to wit, because he gouerneth his sheep with the doctrine of saluatiō, and so consequently doth feede them, because that it is the true foode of the soule. And now, because he vseth the help of men to preach his doctrine, he doth also giue them his name, or at least make them partakers of the same. Therfore those are accoūted lawful pastors before God, who gouerne the Church vnder Christe their head, by the ministerie of the word: whēce we may easily gather, what burde Christ layeth vpon Peters shoulders, and vpon what condition hee setteth him ouer his flock. VVherby the wickednes of the Romanistes is sufficiently and plainely refuted, who wrest this place to establish the tyrannye of their popedom. It was said (say they) vnto Peter before al other, feede my sheepe. VVe haue already declared, why it was rather spoken to him, thē to the rest: to wit, that being free from al sinister note & mark, he might be free to preach the gospel: and therfore Christ maketh him a pastour thrise: that the three denials, wherby Peter had purchased to himselfe eternal infamy being abolished, they may no whit hinder his Apostleship: as Augustine Chriso. Ciril, & many other do prudently note. But there is nothing giuen Peter in these words, which is not in like sort common to al the ministers of the gospel. Therefore the Papistes doe in vaine hold that he is the chief for this cause, because he alone is called especially. But admit we graunt that he had some honour giuen him priuately, I pray you how wil they proue that he was placed in the primacy? Admitte he were the chief amongst the Apostles, shal it therfore follow streightway there vpon, that he was the vniuersal byshoppe of al the whole worlde? Moreouer, whatsoeuer Peter receiued, it dooth no more apperteine vnto the Pope, then vnto Mahomet. For by what right doth he boast & brag that hee is Peters heire? Againe, what manne of sound iudgement wyll graunt vnto him, that there is any heritable right giuen or set downe by Christ in this place? Yet wil he be accounted his successour, would to God he were. None of vs is contrary to him, but that he may both loue Christe, and haue a great care to feede his flocke: but when the loue of Christ is neglected, & the office of feeding is reiected, it is too vnmeete and too foolish a thing to boast of succession. And like as when Christe commaunded Peter to feede, he meant not to erect a throane for an idol or for an hangman of soules, out of which he might miserablye torment the Church: so hee did briefly e teach what manner gouernment of his Church he allowed. So that the visor is plucked from the faces of al the horned Byshoppes, who being onely contente with stagelye pomp, and the vaine title, doe challenge to themselues byshoplyke right and autoritie.

16 Feede my sheepe. Christ doth not commit al generally aswel to Peter as to others to be fed: but only his lambs or sheepe. And he defineth in an other place, who those be, which he accounteth to be of his flock. My sheepe, saith he, heare my voce, and follow mee, the voice of a straunger do they not hear. Good teachers must do their diligēce to gather al vnto Christ: and because they cannot discerne betweene the sheepe and wild beasts beaſts,we muſt all of vs trie,whether they can be tamed who are more like wolues then ſheep,or no.Yet when they haue don al they can, theyr labour ſhall profite none but the elect ſheepe. For eaſines to bee taught, and faith,proceede thence,becauſe the heauenly father deliuereth thoſe to his ſonne to obey him,whom he hath choſen before the creation of the worlde. But this place teacheth that none can bee led to ſaluation with the doctrine of the Goſpel,ſaue thoſe which are meek and apt to be taught,for Chriſt doth not in vaine compare his diſciples vnto lambs and ſheepe.But we muſt alſo note that they are tamed by the ſpirite of God,who were Beares and Lions by nature.

17 Peter was ſory. VVithout doubt Peter did not perceiue Chriſtes drift in asking him ſo often.Therfore he thinketh that he is accuſed by the way,as if he anſwered not from his hearte.But we haue alreadie ſhewed that it was no ſuperfluous repetition. Againe Peter had not yet tryed ſufficiently,how deeply the loue of Chriſt muſt be rooted in their mindes,who muſt ouercome innumerable ſtraites:he learned afterward by long vſe that it was not in vaine that he was ſo throughly examined. Furthermore,thoſe are taught in his perſon who are about to take vpon them the charge and gouerning of the Church,not to liſt themſelues lightly,but that they muſt examine themſelues throughly with what zeale they are endowed,leaſt they recoyle or faint in the middeſt of the courſe.We are al likewiſe taught that we muſt take it pacietly,if at any time the Lorde doe examine vs more roughly : becauſe hee hath iuſt cauſes to doe the ſame which we know not.

18 Verily,verily I ſay vnto thee. After that Chriſte hath exhorted Peter to feede his ſheep,he doth alſo arme him,to enter that warfare whiche was at hand. So that he doth not only require faith & diligence at his handes,but an inuincible minde and courage in dangers,and conſtancie in bearing the croſſe : finally,he commaundeth him to be readie to ſuffer death when need ſhall require. And although the condition of all paſtours be not alike,yet this admonition agreeth & belongeth vnto thē all in ſome reſpect. The Lord ſpareth many, and abſtaineth from theyr blood,being content with this one thing,that whileſt they liue they cōſecrate thēſelues faithfully & wholy to him.But becauſe Satā doth euer now & thē ſtir vp new & manifold cōbates, they muſt needs be prepared to die,whoſoeuer doe take vpon them the office of feeding : for as much as they haue to deale not onely with ſheepe but alſo with wolues. As concerning Peter Chriſt would haue him foretold of his end,that he might alwayes thinke vpon this,that hee ſhould eſtabliſh that doctrine with his blood,whereof he was made a miniſter. Although Chriſt ſeemeth in this place not only to haue reſpected him,but alſo that he adorned him with the title of a Martyr,in preſence of the other Diſciples, as if he ſhould haue ſaid,that he ſhould be another manner of champion, then he had ſhewed himſelfe.

VVhen thou waſt younger. Age ſeemeth to be appointed to reſt & be idle: wherfore old men are ſet free frō publike burdens,& they are made diſcharged ſouldiers.Therfore Peter might haue promiſed himſelf a quiet eſtate of life in that age:but on the contrary Chriſt ſaith, that the order of nature ſhal bee changed, ſo that hee who liued after his owne will whē he was young,ſhall e gouerned by another mans wil whē he is old and that he ſhall ſuffer violent gouernment. But we haue in Peter an excellent glaſſe of our common eſtate. Many men liue pleaſantly and commodiouſly before they be called by Chriſt: ſo ſoone as they haue giuen him their name and are receiued to bee his Diſciples, or at leaſt ſhortly after are drawen vnto great and greeuous combats, vnto a troubleſome life, vnto great perils, and ſometimes vnto death it ſelfe. Although this be an hard eſtate, yet muſt we painfully ſuffer the ſame. Neuertheleſſe ✠ Lord doth ſo temper the croſſe wherwith he will haue his ſeruants tryed, that hee beareth with them ſo long vntill their power waxe rype, for he doth well know their infirmitie, beyonde the meane and meaſure whereof he vrgeth them not. So did hee pardon Peter, ſo long as he ſawe that he was tender & weake. Therfore let vs learne to offer our ſelues vnto him euen vntill the laſt breath, ſo that hee giue vs ſtrength: wherein the filthy vnthankfulnes of many appeareth. For the more meekely the Lorde dealeth with vs, ſo much the more doe we accuſtome our ſelues to liue delicately. So that there is ſcarce one founde amongſt an hundred, which doth not murmur and repine, if he be handeled more roughly after that he hath been long borne with. But wee ought rather to haue conſidered the gentleneſſe of God in that hee ſpareth vs for a time. So Chriſt ſaith that ſo long as he was conuerſant vpon earth, his Diſciples liued merily, as if they had been preſent at a mariage, for whom faſtinges and teares were afterwarde prepared. Math. 9.15.

Another ſhall girde thee. Many do thinke that the manner of his death is ſignified hereby, becauſe he was hanged with his armes ſpread abroad but I doe thinke that vnder this woorde girde all externall actions are ſimply comprehended, wherewith a man ordereth himſelfe and his life. Thou gyrdeſt thy ſelfe, that is, thou clothedſt thy ſelfe as it pleaſed thee, but this libertie of faſhioning and framing thy apparrell ſhall be taken from thee. Furthermore, it is better not to know what maner of death Peter ſuffered, then to beleeue doubtfull fables.

Shall leade thee whither thou wilt not. The ſenſe is, that Peter ſhoulde not die in his bed, but by violence and the ſwoord. But this ſeemeth to be an abſurd thing that Chriſt ſaith, that his death ſhall not be voluntarie. For as there is no conſtancie in that Martyr, whiche is carryed to death againſt his will, ſo is he worthie of no prayſe. But this ought to be referred vnto the diſagreement that is betweene the fleſh and the ſpirite. For we doe neuer obey God with ſo free an affection, but that the world & fleſh doe drawe vs as it were with cordes vnto the contrary: wherefore Paule complaineth thus, Rom. 7.19. That good which I woulde, I doe not. Againe, we muſt note that the feare of death is naturally engrafted in all men: becauſe it is contrarie to nature to be willing to bee diſſolued. And therefore although Chriſte himſelfe was framed wholy to obey God with his whole heart, yet he craueth to be pardoned that hee myght not die. Furthermore, Peter feared the torments which ſhoulde proceede from the crueltie of men: therefore it is no maruell if he were ſomewhat afraide of death. But he did more plainely declare thereby, the obedience which he had perfourmed to god, in that he ſuffered death willingly, which he would gladly haue eſcaped of himſelfe: becauſe he knew that he pleaſed God by this meanes. Neither ſhould there haue beene any pacience without the suffering of the mind. And this doctrine is very profitable to be knowne: for it styrreth vs vp to pray; because we coulde neuer ouercome the feare of death without the singuler ayde of God. And therefore there remaineth nothing, but that we humbly offer our selues to be gouerned by him. Again, it serueth to stay vp our minds, least they fall and fainte quite, if at any time it so fal out, that we quake and tremble in persecutions. Those which feigne that the Martyrs were touched with no feare, they take to themselues matter of dispaire by their owne feare. But there is no cause why our infirmitie should terrifie vs from following their example, the like wherof they haue tried, so that they could not triumph ouer the enemies of the trueth, without fighting with themselues.

19. Signifying with what death. This Periphrasis is of great weight. For although al the godly ought to ayme at this marke, that they may glorifie God aswell in their life, as in their death, yet Iohn meant to adorne their death with a peculier title, who seale the Gospel of Christe with their bloud, and glorifie his name: as Paule teacheth, Philip. 1. 20. Now it is our duetie to gather what fruit the death of Peter brought forth. For it is to be imputed to our sluggishnes, if our faith be not confirmed therby, and vnlesse we go towarde the same marke, that God may be glorified by vs. If the Papistes hadde considered this end in the death of the Martyres, that sacrilegious and detestable inuention shoulde neuer haue come into their minde, that it serueth to pacifie Gods wrath, and that it must be paied price for sinnes.

And when he had said. In this place Christ expoundeth to what end that foretelling of his violent death did tend: to witte, that Peter might prepare himselfe vnto patience. When, saith he, thou must suffer death as I did, follow thy captaine. And to the ende Peter may the more wyllingly obey God, when he calleth him vnto the crosse, Christ setteth him selfe before him as his captaine. Neyther is it a generall exhortation, wherewith he inuiteth and biddeth Peter follow him, but he doth only intreate of the maner of his death. And this one thing doth mittigate all the bitternes that is in death, when as the sonne of God setteth himselfe before our eyes with his blessed resurrection, which is our triumphe against death.

20. And as Peter looked backe, he sawe the disciple, whom Iesus loued, following, who leaned also at supper vpon his breast, and said, Lorde, who is he that betrayeth thee?

21. Therefore, when Peter hadde seene him, hee saide vnto Iesus, Lord, what shal he doe?

22. Iesus saith vnto him, If I will that he stay till I come, what is that to thee?

23. Now this word went abroade among the brethren, that that disciple shoulde not die: and Iesus said not vnto him, that he should not die: but if I wil that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?

24 This is that disciple that beareth witnesse of these things, and wrote these things: and we know that this testimony is true.

25. There are also many other thinges, which Iesus did, which if they shoulde bee all written, I think that the world should not bee able to conteine the bookes that shoulde bee written.

20. Peter turned backe. VVee haue in Peter an example not onelye of our ſuperfluous, but alſo of our hurtful curioſitie, that we are drawne away from our own duetie with beholding of other men. For this is almoſt a thing bred in vs, that by requiring an account rather of an other mans life, then of our owne, we doe thereby get vaine ſtarting hoales. For we do of our own accord deceiue our ſelues with this colour of excuſe, that others are not better: as if their ſluggiſhnes did diſcharge vs. And there is ſcarſe one amongſte an hundreth, that dooth conſider of what force that ſaying of Paule is, Galat. 6. 5. Let euery man beare his owne burden. VVherefore there is a common reprehenſion of all men in the perſon of one man, who looke hither and thither, how menne behaue themſelues: but they regard not what is inioyned them by GOD. Therein are they chiefly deceiued, whileſt that they careleſly paſſe ouer this, what the priuate and perticuler calling of euery man doth require. God will chuſe one of tenne, whom hee may either exerciſe with great troubles or with huge labors: he wil ſuffer the other nine to be quiet, or at leaſt he wil exerciſe them but lightly. Againe, he handleth not all men after one ſorte, but he trieth euery one, as ſeemeth beſt to himſelfe. Therfore ſeeing there be diuerſe ſortes of chriſtian warfare, let euery manne learne to keepe his owne order, neither let vs aske after this or that, like idle perſons, when as the heauenlye captaine calleth euery one of vs: whoſe commaundement we muſt ſo obey, that we muſt forget all other thinges.

VVhom Ieſus loued. This Periphraſis was put in for this cauſe, that we maye know for what cauſe Peter was enforced to moue the queſtion, which is here recited. For he thought that it was an abſurd thing, that he alone is called, Iohn being omitted, whom Ieſus had loued ſo intirelye. Therefore this queſtion of Peter wanted not ſome colour, whye there was no mention made of Iohn, as if Chriſtes minde toward him hadde beene chaunged. Yet Chriſte cutteth off the cauſe of his curioſitie, when he anſwereth that it is nothing to him what other ſhall do, whileſt that he muſt obey the calling of God.

22 If I will haue him to tarry. VVhere as this ſentence was commonly cut off, and they read the former member affirmatiuely, I will haue him to tarry ſo till I come: it came to paſſe through the faulte of the Scriueners and not through the errour of the interpreter. For doubtleſſe hee could not bee deceiued in the Greeke word: but one letter might eaſily creepe in amongſt the Latiniſtes, which might alter the whole ſenſe. Therefore the whole ſentence is an interrogation, and ought to be read in one text. For Chriſt meant to lay hold vpon the Apoſtle, that he might keepe him within the boundes of his calling. It is nothing to thee, neither oughteſt thou to enquire concerning thy fellow in office, what ſhall beecome of him: let me alone with that: aske onely of thy ſelfe, and make thy ſelfe ready to follow whither thou art called: Not that all care for our brethren is ſuperfluous: but that it ought to haue a meaſure, that it bee care, and not curioſitie, which hindereth vs. Therefore let euery manne haue reſpect vnto his neighbours, if by any meanes he bee able to draw them vnto Chriſt with him, and not that hee maye bee ſtayed with theyr ſtumblyng blockes.

23. There

23 Therefore this worde went abroad. The Euangeliſt ſheweth that there did ſpring an errour amongeſt the Diſciples from the wordes of chriſt being euill vnderſtoode, that Iohn ſhould neuer die. Furthermore, hee meaneth thoſe that were preſent when the woordes were ſpoken, that is, the Apoſtles: not that this worde brethren appertaineth vnto them alone, but becauſe they were as it were the firſt fruites of the holy vnitie. And it may bee he ſpeaketh of other beſide the eleuen who were then with them.

By this woorde went out, hee ſignifieth that the errour was ſpread heere and there: which notwithſtanding as it ſeemeth, continued not long amongeſt them: but did remaine only vntill ſuch time as beeing illuminated with the ſpirite they did thinke more rightly and purely of the kingdome of Chriſt, all groſſe ſurmiſes beeing abolished. But that happeneth dayly which Iohn reporteth of the Apoſtles: neither is it any marueile: for if the inward and houſhold Diſciples of Chriſte were ſo deceiued, how much more ſhall they bee readie to fall, who were not ſo familiarly taught in Chriſtes ſchoole? But let vs alſo note whence this vice proceedeth. Chriſt teacheth vs profitablie to edifiyng, and that plainely, but we turne light into darkenes by our wicked inuentions, which we fet from our owne reaſon. Chriſt would affirme no certaine thing of Iohn, but doth onely challendge to himſelfe full power ouer him, of life and deathe. So that the doctrine was of it ſelfe plaine and profitable, but the Diſciples doe forge and imagine more then was ſpoken.

VVherefore to the end we may bee free from the like daunger, let vs learne to be wiſe ſoberly. But ſuch is the wantonneſſe of mans nature, that it runneth headlong into vanitie with mayne force. VVhereby it came to paſſe, that euen this errour whereof the Euangeliſt warned in plaine wordes to beware, did neuertheleſſe reigne in the world. For they babled that when he had commaunded them to dig him a ſepulchre, and had gone into the ſame, it was founde emptie the next day. Wherfore we ſee that there is none end of erring vnleſſe we do ſimple imbrace that which the Lord taught, & refuſe all other ſtrange inuentions.

24 This is that diſciple. Becauſe Iohn had hytherto ſpoken of himſelfe in the third perſon, he expreſſeth now that he was the partie: to the end that a witneſſe which ſawe it with his eyes may haue greater weight and who did well know all thoſe thinges whereof he ſpeaketh. But leaſt any man ſhoulde ſuſpect his ſpeech, as if it were framed fauourably becauſe he was beloued of Chriſt, he preuenteth this obiection, ſaying, that he had paſſed ouer moe thinges then were written: and yet hee ſpeaketh not of all manner actions of Chriſte, but only of ſuch as appertained vnto his publike office. Neither ought this hyperbole to ſeeme abſurd: ſeeing thoſe are borne with, which are commonly vſed in profane writers, we muſt not onely conſider the number of the works of Chriſt, but alſo the weight and greatneſſe thereof is to bee weighed. The diuine maieſtie of Chriſt, which ſwalloweth vp not onely the ſenſes of men with the infirmities thereof, but alſo the heauen and earth, that I may ſo ſpeake, did ſhewe foorth his brightneſſe wonderfully there.

If the Euangeliſt beholding the ſame doe crie out beeing aſtonied, that the whole world cannot comprehend the iuſt narration, who can marueile? Againe, hee is not to be reprehended if he vſe a common olde figure to ſet foorth the excellencie of Chriſtes works. For we know how God applieth himſelfe vnto the common maner of ſpeech for our ignorances ſake, yea how he doth ſomtimes as it were, ſtammer. In the mean while wee muſt remember that which we had before, that the ſumme which the Euangeliſtes haue ſet downe in writing is ſufficient both to the inſtitution of faith, and alſo to giue ſaluation. Therefore he ſhall be wiſe enough whoſoeuer ſhall righly profite vnder theſe maſters. And ſurely foraſmuch as they were ordained by God to be vnto vs witneſſes, as they did their duties faithfully, ſo it is our part to depend wholy vpon their teſtimonies on the other ſide: and to deſire no more then they haue ſet downe. Eſpecially for aſmuch as their pennes were guided by the certaine and ſure prouidence of God, leaſt they ſhoulde leade vs with an huge heape of thinges, and yet that making choyſe, they mighte deliuer ſo much as he knewe was expedient, who is God, only wiſe, and the only fountaine of wiſedome, to whome bee prayſe and glory for euer and euer. Amen.
